A young child ten years of age, named Fults, while visiting near Charleston, had her ears pierced. They became inflamed and finally rotted off. Blood poisoning set in and caused the child's death.

The Kansas farmers in convention at Topeka refused to put a plank in their platform endorsing Prohibition. They are taking their politics straight.

Mr. Porter sticks stubbornly to his estimate of 64,000,000 as the present population of the United States, in spite of all protests. The father of the census law, the Hon. S. S. Cox, thought the total would be from 62,000,000 to 64,000,000; Edward Atkinson estimated it at 64,500,000, and Mr. Henry Elliott, Actuary of the Treasury, also suggested 64,000,000 as about the outcome of the census.

Last Saturday morning a B. & O. train passed through Grafton which carried $13,000,000 worth of silver. The train was composed of four express cars and one passenger coach. The coach contained no one but armed officers. The precious metal was being shipped from the Treasury at Washington to the sub-Treasury at New Orleans.—Grafton Eagle.

WHERE NOT TO BE DURING AN ELECTRIC STORM.—At a window, at an open window especially, in a severe electrical storm, you can get a reserved seat for danger, or for fatal shock, usually. If you want a safe place in a severe thunderstorm, shut the window down and then keep away from it. When you can count ten between the flash and the roll it is somewhat safer to look out through the glass at the superb spectacle. An electric storm is a fine show when you can enjoy it with safety, but when it is crackling directly overhead neither a tree nor an open window are good places for the sight.

Killed in Bed by a Snake.

Jasper Keith, a farmer, living in Winston county, Ala., awoke and found his wife and 8 months old babe dead in bed by his side. Their bodies were badly swollen, and coiled in one corner of the bed was a moccasin snake, whose bite is as fatal as that of the rattlesnake. During the night the snake had crawled into the bed and had bitten Mrs. Keith and the child. Keith was so overcome with grief and horror that he fell prostrate across the dead bodies of his wife and babe.

This aroused the snake and it struck at Keith, but its fangs caught in the sleeves of his nightshirt and he escaped the fatal sting. Realizing his peril, Keith caught the snake in his hand and hurled it to the floor before it could strike again.

THE ANNUAL BABY CROP.—"It has been computed," says the St. Louis Republican, "that between [illegible] and [illegible] babies are born each year. The rate of production is, therefore, about [illegible] per minute—more than one for every beat of the clock. With the one-a-minute calculation every newspaper reader is familiar, but it is not every one who stops to calculate what this means when it comes to a year's supply. It will, therefore, probably startle a good many persons to find on the authority of a well-known hospital writer that, could the infants of a year be ranged in a line in cradles, the cradles would be overflowing and at the same time extend around the globe. The same writer looks at the matter in a still more picturesque light. He imagines the babies being carried past a given point in their mothers' arms, one by one, and the procession being kept up night and day until the last corner in the twelfth month had passed by. A sufficiently liberal rate is allowed, but even in going past at the rate of twenty a minute, the reviewer at his post would only have seen the sixth part of this infantile host after they had been passing him at the rate of 1,200 an hour during the entire year. In other words, the babe that had to be carried when the tramp began would be able to walk when but a mere fraction of its comrades had reached the reviewer's post, and when the year's supply of babies was drawing to a close there would be a rear guard, not of infants, but of romping six-year-old boys and girls."

COWBOYS AND THEIR BRIDES.

Unusual Scenes at a Double Wedding in the Wild West.

PHOENIX, A. T., August 14.—Charley Meadows, Jack Brown and George Nelton, three representative cowboys of the Tonto cattle range, have arrived from Payson.

They give details of a unique double wedding that occurred in Payson last Friday, between Thomas Beach and Maggie Meadows and Charles Cole and Julia Hale.

About noon on Friday 250 guests assembled on the main street of Payson. All were mounted, and when everything was ready the two couples rode up on spirited bronchos to the center of the gathering. The brides wore riding habits and the grooms were in regular cowboy regalia. Justice of the Peace Birch was awaiting them, and with the briefest of legal ceremonies tied the knot as fast as the law allowed.

After congratulations had been extended to the happy couples, presents were announced. The present from Charlie Meadows was as many head of his cattle as the married pairs could find and brand between then and sundown. The chase was at once begun, the young women, who are expert riders, carrying branding irons and assisting in tying down the cattle. Each married pair secured 18 head.

A Judge With a Body-Guard.

Judge Lilly, surrounded by two companies of militia, while a third patrolled the streets, opened the Pineville, Ky., court, last week, and with some difficulty impaneled a grand jury. The court is being held in a hut, and 400 armed outlaws, representing the French-Eversole faction, are camped about the place, and a battle is iminent at any time. In his charge to the jury the Judge declared the condition of affairs in Perry county a disgrace to Christendom. In the entire history of the county but one man had ever been convicted of murder, and his punishment was a brief term in prison, and yet over 500 murders had been committed in the county, over 300 in the past twenty years, and only nine arrests, all told, had been made. Besides this, scores of dwellings had been robbed and burned. Even the court house had with valuable records, been destroyed, and not an arrest made. No taxes had been collected for two years.

The outlaws are entrenching themselves about the place, and little is needed to precipitate a mountain war. There is not a church or school in the county, and not a religious service has been held for two years. Judge Lilly sleeps with soldiers in his room and on guard. He has made his will and admits that he hardly expects to get out alive. All food is tested before being eaten, and no man is allowed to enter the town until he is searched. A single spark will kindle a war that will speedily engage a thousand men and cost scores of lives.

WASHINGTON LETTER.

(From our regular correspondent.)

WASHINGTON, D. C., Aug. 15.—Senator Gorman has proven that the democrats made no mistake in putting him in charge of party interests during the tariff debate. By his adroitness, with the able assistance of his democratic colleagues, in showing up the absurdities and general injustice of the tariff bill towards the masses, particularly the tillers of the soil, he has driven the republicans into such a state of consternation that their leader, Senator Quay, has offered a resolution which postpones the Federal Election bill until next winter in order to try and stop the damaging debate on the tariff bill. The resolution provides for a vote to be taken on the tariff bill on the 30 inst. Its introduction has set the republicans in Congress nearer wild than they were before, if that could be possible; but Mr Quay had no choice; he was compelled by the Manufacturers who furnished him the money to win with in 1888 and upon whom he relies for the money for the '92 campaign to do it; they fear the effect of the exposure of the whole sale robbery of the people of this country for their benefit which is daily going on in the Senate chamber, (Mr. Vance has just shown that it is proposed to rob the people, through a tax on their tin cups, pans, and pails, of $75,000,000 for the sole benefit of the newly formed Pittsburgh tin plate trust) and the attempt is made to secure democratic votes for the resolution to vote on the tariff bill by making the same resolution postpone the Federal Election bill, and it is even stated in some quarters that the resolution is the result of a bargain made by Mr. Quay with Senator Gorman.

No such bargain has been made, although it is an open secret that it might have been made long ago, and whether the resolution, if it is reported by the committee on Rules to which it was referred, will receive the support of the democrats will depend entirely upon circumstances. The democrats have their eyes wide open and are greatly enjoying the republican ro[w] now going on and may be depended upon to do their part in keeping it a going, and to take advantage of anything that turns up. The republicans are to hold a caucus to-night, and a regular circus is expected.

Speaker Reed has been the maddest man in town ever since Mr. Quay offered his resolution, and he swears that the Senate shall act upon the Federal Election bill at this session or he will not allow the House to act upon the Senate amendments to the tariff bill. Mr. Reed charges it all to Secretary Blaine, who has been from the start open and active in his opposition to the Federal Election bill.

Secretary Blaine's policy towards the Central American Nations, if persisted in, will undoubtedly prove a very bad one for this country. In setting himself up as the mediator—he wants to be dictator—in the constantly occurring quarrels between the petty so called republics of that country he is going against all the precedents of the State department, except the action which he himself took while Garfield was lying on his death bed and which Mr. Arthur's Secretary of State repudiated as soon as he succeeded Mr. Blaine. This country has no business meddling with the internal affairs of other countries; but then Mr. Blaine like Mr. Quay, is probably controlled in this matter by capitalists with whom his relations have been too close for him to refuse their requests.

The anti-lottery bill will come up in the House Saturday if a quorum can be kept together. The same bill has been favorably reported to the Senate.

Speaker Reed has been unable even to count a quorum except at rare intervals during this week. The G. A. R. encampment at Boston was the magnet which drew the members off. "Corporal" Tanner was there in the interest of his pension business and Mr. Harrison was there hoping to gain some friends for '92, but these two eminent republicans did not go together, nor did they meet while there.

The House committee on Territories has made a favorable report on the bill appropriating for the use of needy settlers in Oklahoma the unexpended balance of the money appropriated for the Mississippi flood sufferers—about $45,000.

Senator Carlisle for the first time took part in the tariff debate this week; he did not make a set speech—he will do this later on—but merely stated some facts showing that certain figure's relating to the tin plate industry, which had been several times referred to by republican speakers, were misleading and not to be relied upon.

At the request of several of the democratic members of the House committee on Territories further consideration of the bill to admit New Mexico has been postponed until after the new Constitutional convention is held.

HILLSBORO TRAINING SCHOOL.

The next session of the Hillsboro Training School will begin the first Wednesday in September, 1890.

MISS G. M. SHEARER,
Principal.

NOTICE.

A. J. Shinabery, is a personal enemy of mine, and is circulating through the County, to injure me that I stole a suit of clothes from his store, while he kept at Edray, which is a base falsehood.

L. M. WAUGH.

ADMINISTRATOR'S SALE.

Notice is hereby given that, pursuant to the will of Sallie Gum, dec'd, I will proceed to sell at public auction to the highest bidder, on the premises of the said Sallie Gum, dec'd on the following personal and real estate, viz:

SATURDAY, SEPTEMBER 17th, 1890,

1 Horse, 1 Cow, 2 Stacks of Hay, about 50 Bushels Buckwheat and a small quantity of oats.

Also all the lands of which the said Sallie Gum died seized and possessed with, all the opportenances thereto belonging.

TERMS OF SALE:

All purchases of personal property will be required to pay cash all sums of $5.00 or less; and for amounts above $5.00 will be allowed six months time purchaser giving bond with approved personal security, with interest from date. The purchaser of the real estate will be required to pay $50 cash and for the residue will be allowed 6, 12 and 18 months credit, upon executing bonds with approved personal security, with interest from date. A lien will also be retained on the land as ultimate security.

M. J. McNEEL, Adm'r c. t. a.

ANNOUNCEMENTS.

I hereby announce myself as a candidate for re-election at the next election as Clerk of the Circuit and County Courts of Pocahontas county.

Feeling very grateful for past favors, and soliciting your support at the next election, I am,

Most respectfully
JOHN J. [illegible]

To the voters of Pocahontas County.

I hereby announce myself a candidate for Clerk of the County Court of Pocahontas County at the election to be held on the 4th day of November next, and, if elected, I pledge myself to discharge the duties of said office to the best of my ability.

Your support is solicited.

Respectfully,
S. L. [illegible]

To the voters of Pocahontas County.

I hereby announce myself a candidate for the office of Clerk of the County Court of Pocahontas County subject to the action of the Democratic Primary election. Your patronage is kindly solicited.

Very truly yours,
E. H. [illegible]

To the Voters of Pocahontas County.

I hereby announce myself a candidate for the office of Sheriff. Election Nov. 4th, 1890.

Respectfully,
J. C. ARBOGAST.

To the Voters of Pocahontas County.

I hereby announce myself a candidate, to represent the 4th Delegate Dist., composed of the Counties' Pocahontas and Webster, in the next Legislature of W. Va., subject to the future action of the Democratic party. If elected I pledge myself to faithfully discharge the duties of the trust to the best of my ability. Election N. 4th 1890.

Respectfully
W. C. [illegible]

To the Voters of Pocahontas County.

I hereby announce myself as a candidate to represent the Delegate District composed of the Counties of Pocahontas and Webster in the next House of Delegate's; subject to any action taken by the Democratic party to select a candidate.

Respectfully,
L. B. [illegible]

To the voters of the 8th Senorial District.

I hereby announce myself a candidate to represent this District in the next State Senate, subject to the action of the Democratic Convention to be held at Hinton on the 27th day August, 1890.

Respectfully
J. P. MAY.

To The Voters of Pocahontas County.

I hereby announce myself a candidate for the office of Clerk of Circuit Court of Pocahontas Co., at the election to be held Nover 4th next, and if elected I promise discharge the duties thereof to the best of my ability.

Very Respectfully
J. H. PATTON.

To the Voters of Pocahontas County

Gentlemen and fellow-citizens to the voters of Pocahontas and sister counties: at the request of my friends in this county I hereby announce myself a Candidate for the House of Delegates for Pocahontas and Webster counties, and should I get the nomination and be elected I shall work better the condition of our people the counties, and asking your support, I am

Truly Thine,
C. B. [illegible]

To the Voters of Pocahontas County.

I hereby announce myself candidate for Commissioner of County Court, subject to Primary action. Your support is kindly solicited.

Yours Respectfully
GEO. H. MCGLAUGHLIN.

To the Voters of Pocahontas County.

I hereby announce myself candidate for the office of Sheriff [illegible]. Wm. H. Cackley will be my deputy.

Respectfully
R. V. HILL.

NOTICE TO CREDITORS.

[illegible]

SEED WHEAT.

[illegible]

HOME NEWS.

—L. W. Herold, Esq., of Frost, was in to see us Monday.

—D. G. Ruckman, Esq., of Mill Gap, Va., was in town Monday.

—Mr. C. W. McCormick, of Buckhannon was in the city Monday.

—Mr. J. T. Hogsett, of Mill Point, was in town Tuesday.

—Everybody send us 15cts, and take THE TIMES from now until after the election.

—Mr. Henry White, of Douthard's Creek has been on the sick list for some time.

—Mr. Andrew Campbell, father of Hon. A. N. Campbell, Judge of our circuit Court, died at his home near Pickaway, Monroe County on the 12th inst.

—We are requested to say that Rev. W. T. Price will preach the funeral sermon of Newton Barkley on next Sunday evening, 26th, at 8 o'clock, p. m.

—John Wanamaker is daily expected at Huntersville to look after the Post Office. There is some difficulty in keeping the Office supplied with deputies.

—Quite an enjoyable Sunday School picnic was held near the Sulphur Spring on Beaver Creek last Saturday, under the control of the Protestant Methodist Church.

—Mr. Henry Breinfoerder and wife and Miss Ada, of Cincinnati, were in town over Sunday. They were going to Traveler's Repose, where they spend several weeks every summer.

—Mr. Geo. H. McGlaughlin's announcement, appears this week for Commissioner of the County Court. Mr. McGlaughlin is a whole soul man and believes in expending money where it is most needed and in an economical way.

—In this issue will be found the announcement of Mr. R. V. Hill, of Academy, for Sheriff, and if elected, Mr. W. H. Cackley, of Dunmore will be his deputy. These gentlemen are well known in our County and it is scarcely necessary for us to say they are very popular and will doubtless poll a strong vote.

—We are informed by one of our cattle men of Knapp's Creek that the Texas cattle fly, known as the "horn fly" has made its appearance there. It is a small black fly, a little smaller than the ordinary house fly, with long sharp wings and is very annoying to cattle. We would be glad if anyone acquainted with the habits of these insects would communicate with us, for the benefit of our cattle men.

—When we were furnished the names and grades of the teachers who attended the examination at this place a few weeks ago, by mistake a few names were left out,—though not by any fault of ours, which we give below: Miss Allie Clark, grade No. 1, average per cent 90; Delia Payne No. 2, 85; Mr. John Sydenstricker No. 1, 88.

—On Wednesday before the County Conventions, which were held on July 26th, we received a communication from Dr. J. A. Larue, of Academy, announcing Capt. W. L. McNeel, a candidate for State Senate which, (as Wednesday is the day we go to press) came too late for publication, and before the next weeks issue we were ordered to leave it out altogether. What we want to say, is, that it was for no motive whatever of ours that it was left out that week. Capt. McNeel as well as Dr. Larue, we believed then, as we do yet, are as good friends as we have in the County, both being patrons of THE TIMES, and we would not, knowingly do anything against the nomination or elections of Capt. McNeel for State Senate, as seems to be the impression some of his friends have.

—A new Post-Office has been established at the Lockridge ford, called "Driscol," with D. B. McElwee, Esq., P. M.

—Dr. S. P. Patterson was called to Mountain Grove this week to see Wm. McCormick, Esq., who is quite sick.

—Candidates will please send in their orders for tickets for the primary election. We can print them cheaper than anybody else in the County or out of it.

—Attorney Geo. W. McClintic, of Charleston is visiting his brother L. M. McClintic, Esq., at this place.

—The American Eagle must be a gay old bird—he is bald. If you don't want to be bald, use Hall's Hair Renewer, and you won't be. Try it.

—Ayer's Sarsaparilla, by purifying and enriching the blood, improves the appetite, aids the assimilative process, strengthens the nerves, and invigorates the system. It is, therefore, the best and most thoroughly reliable alterative that can be found for old and young.

—License to marry were issued last Saturday to Mr. Morgan Collins and Miss L. M. Grogg, near Green Bank, and Mr. Wm. Baxter and Miss Wilson, of near Edray.

—Ayer's Hair Vigor restores color and vitality to weak and gray hair. Through its healing and cleansing qualities, it prevent the accumulation of dandruff and cures all scalp diseases. The best hair-dressing ever made, and by far the most economical.

—The tale will soon be told. Next week the Convention to nominate a Congressman and State Senator will be held in Hinton; the primary for this County comes the 9th of September, and on September the 10th a candidate for the Legislature will be put in the field.

—The new road across the bottom at the lower end of Mr. Curry's place is nearing completion; but is useless until the bridge is built, unless some one establishes a ferry across the creek. This makes the second road built for the special benefit of the bridge, but still no bridge.

—From the present appearance it looks as though we wouldn't have any bridge across Knapp's creek at this place for some time to come. Mr. Dassonville, the abutment contractor, came on last week with a force of hands, and spent a day or two looking for stone. He found some, but, concluded they were a little farther to haul than he expected, and if the Court didn't allow him extra pay, he would "throw up" the job, and sent his men home. He is now working on the foundation of Attorney L. M. McClintic's house, where he will be pleased to meet the Court should it wish to come to his terms. Otherwise ta. ta. We would suggest, that, should the Court wish to re-let the contract, that bond be required when bid was received.

Transfers of Real Estate.

The following is a list of transfers of real estate for the month of July:

A deed from S. B. Moore and wife to Chas. Cook for land near Edray.

From Chas. Cook and wife to Wm. M. Sharp, for land near Edray.

From Otho W. Ruckman, Jr., W. W. Ruckman and Mattie E. Ruckman to M. F. Ruckman for their interests in 133 acres known as the Jos. W. Ruckman estate.

From Alvin Clarke and wife and others to B. F. McClure for land on Droop Mountain.

From L. W. Hickman, and wife to H. A. Yeager for House and lot in Green Bank.

From J. W. Marshall, of Randolph Co., to Wm. A. Schwecker for a certain parcel of land on the waters of Dry Branch.

Edray Items.

The Farmers Alliance is in a flourishing condition, having now 145 members.

W. C. Hall & Son, are running their store in the interest of the Alliance.

Blackberries are plentiful and the gatherers, are numerous.

The whistle of the steam thresher which is being run by Wash Beverage and Son, is heard in this vicinity. Crops are making a fair yied.

Mrs. Geo. H. McGlaughlin showed us a fine redish, which measured 16 inches in circumferance and weighed 6¼ lbs.

Miss Kittie Lakin is visiting friends in our town at present.

Our farmers are about done making hay. The hay crop is very good.

Lots of drummers have been in our town the past few days.

Madame rumor reports a wedding in our neighborhood in the near future.

Success to THE TIMES.

LOOKOUT.

Hillsboro Happenings.

The picnic, given a few days ago by the Sons of Temperance and the Band of Hope and which was also joined by the Methodist Sunday School, was a success. At ten o'clock the Band of Hope marched to the grove with bright banners waving in the air. They presented a pleasant sight to those already assembled in the grove. The organ at the Methodist church was taken out to the picnic grounds and the songs and recitations By the Band of Hope were very good indeed. At one o'clock the well filled baskets were opened, and a good dinner was enjoyed by all. In the afternoon Rev. C. Sydenstricker's speech on Temperance was excellent.

Mr. and Mrs. R. H. Moffett, who have been visiting relatives and friends here, will leave for their home in Nebraska, Thursday.

Mrs. J. C. Thrasher and children, who have been been visiting relatives here, will leave for their home, Tuesday.

Messrs. S. J. Payne, J. H. Clarke and Lacy Sydenstricker, were off to Cranberry a day or two fishing. Mr. Alvin Barr joined them at Cranberry, and the party caught over four hundred trout. It is worth a trip to Cranberry to catch those delicious speckled beauties.

The question of the day, is, who will get the most blackberries. Wagons go out to Cranberry, every day and there is a demand in town for berries which can be supplied. Come on with your berries.

CECIL.

Marlinton Movements.

The recent rains have greatly improved the prospects of corn, buckwheat and fall pasture.

Quite a number of parties have been to Laurel Run and Elk in quest of blackberries. Knapps creek and the Little Levels, sent representatives. Some would gather others would fill the "air tights." On their return with their ruddy toothsome freight, there would be songs and jokes, notwithstanding torn clothes, scratched fingers and backaches.

From the last announcement of the Fishburne Military school at Waynesboro, the writer learns that Mr. George A. Warwick, was one of the distinguished cadets. He received a certificate of distinction in commercial law, and was an officer in the cadet corps, so there is another Pocahontas student to be proud of.

Mr. Fred Wallace, of Mill Point, visited Marlinton this week. He won enviable distinction year before last at Hampden Sydney, by bearing away one of the medals. He has taken a high stand in his studies in that famous college.

Mr. Howard Arbuckle, near Lewisburg and his friend Robbins, of Texas, fellow students of Henry McGlaughlin, paid him a visit the same time. Mr. Arbuckle, has made a fine record in his college course, and will teach in Mississippi, the coming year.

It is reported that the vacant home of Richard Knapp, was burned a few weeks since, thus the mystery deepens around the question "what has become of Knapp?"

Numbers of very fine fish, suckers, bass and catfish, have been noticed floating down stream, either dead or dying. Have they had too much dynamite in theirs!

J. K. S.

[...]mes.
[...]BELL,
Poc[...]PRIETOR.

[...]ost office at Hunters[...] second class matter.

[ADVER]TISING RATES.

	1 m.	3 m.	6 m.	1 yr.
[...]	$1.00	$2.00	$3.00	$5.00
[...]in.	2.00	4.00	6.00	10.00
[...]olumn	3.00	6.00	10.00	17.00
[...]lf col'n	6.00	12.00	20.00	30.00
[O]ne col'n	10.00	20.00	30.00	50.00

Reading notices, not exceeding five lines, twenty-five cents for each insertion, and five cents a line for each additional line.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION.

One copy, 1 yr., $1.00 in advance; after 6 months, $1.25; after 12 months, $1.50. These terms will be strictly complied with.

Huntersville, W. Va.
August 21, 1890.

Tastes of Clerks.

She was tall, tough, sharp-edged, hollow-cheeked, sunken-chested and saucer-eyed, with shoulder blades that projected like rudders. She hadn't teeth enough to go around and her hair matched a reddish complexion that was more suggestive of sand paper than water. Her nose was long and sagacious and gilded hoops tested the elasticity of her ears. Her vowels escaped through her nose and her diphthongs were brought out with feline intensity.

She was at the silk counter, and had selected for a dress pattern seventeen yards of dark blue India silk, well flowered with ripe cherries.

"What name, please?" asked the urbane sales man, dating a check.

"Baker."

"Initials, please?"

"M. A. Baker."

"Address?"

"No. 2[...]1 West ——— street."

"Thank you," said the clerk, carefully tearing the leaf from the stub and placing it between the folds of the goods.

"Now, Mrs. Baker, isn't there something else this morning?"

A radiant smile flashed across the long, red face, the high shoulders squared themselves, and there was a perceptible straightening of her whole being as she said:

"I guess not."

The shrewd clerk took his cue, talked bargains, waning season and good service, brought specials from remote shelves and remnants from under the counter, and in less than five minutes the bony spinster was in a bewilderment of short lengths. The man seized every opportunity to call her "Mrs," and when she left he had sold a blue check of ten yards for a house dress, three two yard lengths for sofa cushions, and two and three-eighths yards of plain black gros grain for waist trimming.

"How did I know she was married? I was dead certain that she wasn't. That's why I called her 'Mrs.' It takes a very small amount of diligence to master a woman. If she is not married it pleases her immensely to be taken for a wife—that is, after she is past the [...] period. If she is married it flatters her to be taken for a girl.

"I rarely make a mistake. There is a prim coquetry and a disappointed look about the unwooed woman that is as self evident as her features. A married woman gives herself away by her apathy. If she is tired she looks it and if she is discontented she shows that.

"The staid, stately customer I never meddle with. She always knows what she wants. Argument is useless, but if it becomes necessary to use an address, madame is the word.

"The epithet I generally use most with 'Lady.' If a woman comes to the counter and shows a hand with big rings and neglected nails all I have to do is to spread out my goods, lower my voice to a confidential point, ring in the 'Lady' and if she has the money she will buy."

He—"Smart as you think me, here I am literally and metaphorically at your feet."

She (longing for an osculatory evidence of affection)—"Yes but you ought to be smart enough to go up head."

Young Doctor to Old Doctor—Doctor, I have told you how I'm treating that patient. Do you think I should change the course of treatment any?

"Has he got any money?"

"No, but his life is insured."

"Well, just continue your present treatment."

Teacher—John, of what are your boots made?

Boy—Of leather, sir.

Teacher—Where does leather come from?

Boy—From the hide of the ox.

Teacher—What animal, therefore, supplies you with boots and shoes and gives you meat to eat?

Boy—My father.

She—Well, you men have a grand advantage over women, for if nature gives you a mean or ugly mouth, she also gives you a mustache to cover it, while we go through life with mouth uncovered.

He—But the old law of compensation steps right in and evens things up; if a fellow's got bow legs, now—

She—Mr. Slapjacks!

Wife (from the window)—Well, I declare! John, I wouldn't spend time sprinkling the dust in our neighbors' back yard—especially when they are people who talk about us the way they do.

Husband—That's all right, my dear; their pet poodle was washed this morning—now he's out here rolling in the mud. Trust your husband, my sweet, for thoughtfulness.

Mr. Crampus (in Redhot, Arizona)—It's rum, sir, that causes all the crime in this town.

Colonel Winchester—Mebbe you're right. Only last Sunday Poker Bill shot at Swede Pete——'

Mr. Crampus—There it is! If he hadn't been drunk he wouldn't have shot at him.

Colonel Winchester—And if he hadn't been drunk he wouldn't have missed him.

That country editors are sometimes very busy men is evidenced by the following editorial paragraph from a recent issue of the Waitsburg (Wash.) Times: "When we returned from dinner on Tuesday we found a piece of paper sticking into the keyhole of our office door, on which was written these words: 'Been here twice to subscribe for the Times, but failed to find you in. Send it to me and I will hand you $2 the next time I am in town.' We very much regret being absent when the writer called, but Great Scott we can't take money all the time. We've got to take time to eat."

During one of the fairs in Paris some years ago Baron James de Rothschild was a patron. Chancing to pass a stand where some pretty young ladies were installed he asked, says the London Tid-Bits, in a bantering tone:

"Well, my dears, what can I do for you?"

"Ah, Baron," said one, "you can give us your autograph."

"With pleasure," responded the gallant old Baron, "if you will preface it with an agreeable sentiment."

So the young lady, without much ado, wrote on a dainty slip of paper: "I hereby give to ——— charity ten thousand francs," and the Baron immediately signed his name in full and smilingly paid the amount (£2000) to the enterprising Parisian.

POCAHONTAS TIMES.

Vol. VIII. [illegible] Huntersville, West Virginia, Thursday, ~~August 28~~ Sept 4 1890. [illegible] No. 5

Official Directory of Pocahontas County.

[illegible]

THE COURTS.

Circuit Court convenes on the first Monday in April, 3rd Monday in June and [illegible] Monday in October. County Court convenes on the 1st Tuesday in January, March, October and second Tuesday in July. July is levy term.

HER CAT AND HIS CHICKENS.

BY MARGARET [illegible].

I dare say 'twould have come around, any'how in the course of time, but law sakes alive! her cat and his chickens did hurry matters up the liveliest and quickest I ever seen in the bad of my born days. You see, we'd lived in Owltown nigh on to sixteen years. There wasn't another house in sight when we built our little cottage there. Jennie Wren (we named her Jennie first and tacked on the Wren after, 'cause she proved to be the cheeriest, chirpiest little blessing that ever brightened the airth) was 2 years old when we moved into it, and her 18th birthday was due the 30th of that June.

She'd been away since the foregoin' September, a-stayin' with her Aunt Janet in Boston and a-finishin' off at a good school there, and I tell you every month she was gone 'peared like a year to her father and me. But we knowed from her letters, that come reg'lar twice a week, that our darlin', our only darlin', for we'd never had another child, hadn't changed a bit.

We'd been a leetle, just a leetle, feared at the goin' off that city air and 'influences 'might change her some 'but we'd got over that fear altogether and was awaitin' to welcome her home with the lovingest of hearts when the trouble began at the cottage next door. It had been nigh on to a year empty when, the very day after Jennie started for her aunt's, the Rosemarys moved in. There was only three of 'em —the Widow Rosemary, her father and her son. The son was a good, good lookin' young fellow of about five and twenty. He'd come to Owltown to be overseer in the big carpet factory, and when he wasn't in the factory he was a-putterin' around his garden, and he hadn't been here more'n a week when he put up a hen house in the back part of it plumb agin our fence.

Well, things went on agreeably 'tween the two families, though we never become what you might call really acquainted with each other, the widow bein' in deep mournin' and 'seemin' to want to live very much to herself until this June. Then one mornin' I heard angry voices in the next garden and, steppin' to my kitchen winder, I ketched the words: "Two more chickens gone, and it's that cat takes 'em—I'll swear to it."

"Yes, no doubt of it," says old Mr. Rosemary. "I've chased him away myself several times. He ort to be pisoned—that's what he ort to be."

Sorry me! my heart stood still, 'cause there wasn't no cat but our Frisky in the neighborhood, and he was Jennie Wren's cat, and she thought the world of him. His birthday and her's come on the same day of the same month, though his'n was ten years later, and she never writ a letter to us that she didn't send her love to him.

I never knowed him to trouble our chickens and I didn't believe that he'd took their'n. So I throwed on my sun-bonnet and marched out into the back yard and mounted on the [illegible] that stood there, and [illegible] my head over the fence, I [illegible]:

"If you['re] talkin' about our cat, Mr. Rosemary, I'll make bold to say you're mistaken."

With that the old man speaks [up] and says: "Well, I've seen him prowlin' 'round here and drove him away several times."

"And did he have a chicken with [any] of them times?" says I.

"Well, no ma'am; I can't say he did," says he. "But they've disappearin' day after day, and where can they go?"

"Rats," says I, gettin' down from the chair; and I can't imagine, though I've tried and tried, what made young Mr. Rosemary be'st out a-laughin'.

But that very afternoon, as I was a-settin' on the back porch a-sewin', over the fence come Frisky with a chicken a-hangin' in his mouth.

Lands! I was taken aback. I dropped my work and flew down the steep 'bout as fast as he'd come over the fence, and I ketched him and made him let go the chicken, and then I slipped off my slipper and giv' him a good whippin', which bein' his first so frightened and astonished him that he howled perfectly awful. Then shut him up in the cellar and left him there, supplyin' him with food and drink, of course, for two days and nights. Well, the 30th June come at last and with it our precious Jennie Wren, and after she'd hugged and kissed her father and me 'until we was all[most] out of breath, she sat down in her favorite rockin'-chair and asked, "Where's Frisky?" I went and opened the cellar door and called him; but it was some time 'fore he'd come, and when he did come he didn't do credit to his name, for he just crept along and looked as though he expected to see that slipper a-hoverin' over him in the air.

"Why, what's the matter with him?" says Jennie. So I told her all about it. And, if you'll believe me, that girl took Frisky's part right straight through. "Of course he don't know strange chickens," says she. "The folks that used to live [here] didn't keep any, and there isn't another house nearer than a block. He thought they was birds, and he's never been whipped for catchin' birds. And I'd just like to see Mr. Jack Rosemary pison him. Poor old Frisky!"

But Frisky hid under the sofa and refused to come out and be comforted, and pretty soon what with Jennie Wren a-tellin' and us a-listenin' to lots of city news, we entirely forgot him. That is, we forgot him till tea time, and then, father and me and Jennie was a-drinkin' our tea, we heard quite a commotion in the next garden. "Dear me," says I, almost droppin' my cup, which I wouldn't a-done for a good deal, it being one of my blue chiney set, "Frisky's out and at it agin." And sure enough. I'd no sooner got the words out of my mouth than over the fence flew Frisky with another chicken, and Jack Rosemary calls out as mad as can be:

"I'll git my pistol and shoot him. I ain't a-goin' to stand this no longer."

"Oh! dear," says I, and I jumps up and was a-goin' out, when Jennie says: "Let me go, mother," and in a minute she was on the old chair, and the young man, leaving her, began:— "There, ma'am, I hope you'll acknowledge it now that I've seen it with my eyes, and unless that———." But just as he gits so far as this Jennie's pretty fluffy, golden head pops up above the fence, and she says in a voice as sweet as honey: "I beg your pardon, sir, but was you a-speakin' to me?"

"Oh! no, certainly not," says he, a-[illegible] at a great rate. "I thought you was your mother—I mean—I was simply sayin'—That is, I hope my chickens are not annoyin' your cat in any way."

I don't know how Jennie Wren ever kept her face, but she did, long enough, anyhow, to say slowly and gravely: "But they do annoy him sir. They disagree with him very much indeed." Then she slid from the chair on to the grass and laughed and laughed till I thought she never would stop. The very next day the widow called on us a-sayin': "She'd been very remiss in not being more friendly, but she hoped we'd overlook it, and she'd try to be a better neighbor in future."

Then we returned her call, and then the old man and Jack paid us a visit, and it wasn't long before the young fellow was in here on some excuse or other every day. And I declare to man three weeks hadn't gone by since the day he threatened to shoot Frisky when I overheard Jennie Wren a-sayin': "Really and truly my cat never did molest our chickens," and that Jack makes answer. "Well, I'm perfectly willin', just to protect the poor things, to have my chickens become our chickens as soon as possible. It only remains for you to consent."

"Why, what do you mean, Jack Rosemary?" says Jennie.

"Can't you guess, Jennie Wren?" says Jack, and he takes her in his arms and kisses her.

And I vow that cat never did touch one of them chickens after they was married.

Presidential Tips.

The biggest railway official in the country that I know of told me the other night that "the porters of special cars pick up big money. Whenever a special car is used the best porter who is handy is assigned to it. This man expects and usually receives a handsome gratuity. Those who travel in special cars can afford to be liberal to the one who, for the time being, becomes a valet, or personal servant, and generally are. When Gen. Grant went anywhere the porter of the special car always got $50. He never gave less, whether the time was a day or a week, and never gave more. It was invariably a fifty dollar bill. President Arthur always gave the porter two twenty dollar notes or two twenty dollar gold pieces. He was also liberal to other minor railway officials. President Hayes used a special car pretty often. He tipped the porter $5. When Garfield traveled special the porter got only $2, and considered himself lucky to get that. Garfield was always very close about money matters. He saved money while in congress on a salary that few others were barely able to live upon."

Customer—How much is this wine?

Clerk—That wine, mum, is a prime article, and I know you'll like it; everybody does. Is that your little boy? Fine looking little lad; anybody could see that he was your son. Here, Charley, don't you want a cookey? This wine, mum, is worth $150 a gross. Have it sent, of course?

Customer—Oh, I only wanted a quarter of a pint.

Clerk—Quarter of a pint? You'll find the homeopathic dispensary on the next street. Will you pay for that cookey, or will you have it charged?

Wife—"Why, husband, I thought you had more sense than to buy a monkey. You know the fellow next door worries so nearly to death with his."

Husband—"Calm yourself, my dear. That's the one I bought."

"Call no man happy," says Solon, "till he is dead." "Call no man unhappy," Socrates added, "till he is married."

If your religion were destroyed by reason it would be restored by emotion.

We more frequently think people beautiful because we love them than love them because we think them beautiful. The heart is not critical.

We can sometimes forget without forgiving, and owe a grudge though we cannot remember why.

It is foolish to give our affections to children, for others may forsake us, but they must.

When woman according to M. Paul Bourget, has lost every rag of character, she still clings fondly to an unfinished [illegible].

"Is this a healthy locality?"

"Healthy! Do you see that woman in the doorway of the house opposite?"

"Yes."

"Well, when she came here six months ago she was so weak she could not stand alone. Last Monday she had a little disagreement with her husband, and the doctor says the old man will be laid up for six weeks."

A young couple on their honeymoon are dallying languidly with the grapes at dessert.

She (archly)—And you don't find it tiresome all alone with me? You are quite sure you don't want to go back to your bachelor life again?

He (earnestly)—Quite, my darling. Do you know if you were to die to-night I'd get married again to-morrow morning!

They were talking of the vanity of women and one of the few ladies present undertook a defense.

"Of course," she continued, "I admit that all women are vain. The men are not. But, by the way," she suddenly broke off, "the necktie of the handsomest man in this room is up under his ear."

She has worked it. Every man present put up his hand to his neck.

Wagg.—Hello, Wallace, you're quite a stranger. Been away on a long trip West, I understand?

Wallace.—Yes, my boy, I've had quite a journey. I've been out to Seattle.

Wagg.—You don't say so. And was Allie glad to see you, old man?

Hirsh[illegible]—I'd vat may be the price of this watch?

Jeweler—Ten dollars.

Hirsh[illegible] (aside, [illegible])—He asks ten; he means eight; he'll take six; it's worth four; I'll offer two.

Mrs. Cumso—Why did you discharge all your white servants and employ negroes, Mrs. Fangle?

Mrs. Fangle—My husband's sister died last week and I'm in mourning now.

Wee Wife—Love you? Of course I do. You dear, blessed old peach crop.

Big Husband (letting her look here)—Great Scott! Why [illegible] now title?

W. W.—Because you are such a perpetual failure.

Wife—Henry, how does this card happen to be in your drawer?

Husband (sharply)—I was merely making arrangements to get you a new seal skin sacque, my dear.

Charles—What have you laid up for a rainy day?

Fred—A mackintosh, an [illegible]

Pocahontas Times.

JOHN E. CAMPBELL,
EDITOR AND PROPRIETOR.

Entered at the Post-office at Huntersville, W. Va., as second class matter.

Huntersville, W. Va.

September 4, 1890.

THE PRIMARY ELECTION.

The democratic Primary Election or Pocahontas County will be held on Tuesday, September 9th. On that day the polls will be open at the regular places of voting and at the regular hours from sun-rise till sun set. We would like to impress on the people the importance of coming out and casting their votes. The object of the primary is to get the sense of the people, which cannot be had fully unless their wishes are expressed at the poles. Some persons are in the habit of remaining away from all conventions and primary elections and then complain of what is done.

If you are interested in the result it is your privilege and your duty to have a voice in the decision. Come out, one and all, and let this primary be an expression of the will of the people.

Mr. Alderson, the Nominee.

The Democratic Congressional Convention, for this District, met at Hinton on Tuesday, the 26th August, and was largely attended. Col. W. A. McCorkle, of Charleston, presided. There was no contest before the Convention, and everything passed off quitely and in perfect order. When the counties were being called for nominations and Kanawha county reached, Hon. Henry S. Walker arose and, in a neat and very appropriate speech, which was loudly applauded, withdrew the name of Gov. Wilson, and then a motion was made to nominate Mr. Alderson by acclamation, which was carried unanimously and the chairman declared him the nominee of the Convention.

Mr. Alderson and Gov. Wilson were called for and both responded in brief, but excellent speeches. Speeches were also made by Col. St. Clair, W. R. Thompson and others, after which the Convention adjourned.

Mr. Alderson having thus been fairly nominated, has a right to expect and should, of course, receive the hearty support of every Democrat in the District. This is no time for lukewarmness or indifference. The District is close, and to secure success it is necessary that we stand up bravely for our nominee and use our utmost efforts to secure his election. Let us remember that his fight is our fight and that if he be defeated it will be the defeat of the party in this District.

When we consider the record made by the Republican party in the present Congress; its forcible ejectment of Democrats from seats to which the people had elected them; its arbitrary change of the rules of the House purely for partisan purposes; its waste of the public revenues in pension, subsidies, &c., and its increase rather than decrease of tariff taxes, we are at a loss to see how any one, even a Republican, can hesitate when asked to cast his vote against this party.

Let us, then, rally, with one accord, to the support of the candidate our party has given us, and let it not be said that there was one Democrat, in the entire District, who refused to vote for and to work for our nominee.—Independent.

Senator St. Clair.

The Democratic Senatorial Convention for this, the 8th district met at Hinton 27 August. There were two candidates from this county—Capt. Wm. L. McNeel and Dr. J. F. Mooman. Prior to the assembling of the Convention, delegates from other counties requested the Pocahontas delegation to name its man and they would nominate him; but the Pocahontas delegation, it seems, could not agree. The friends of McNeel and Mooman were not willing that either should be withdrawn, so when the Convention met, Col. J. W. St. Clair of Fayette was put forward by W. R. Thompson, Esq., of Summers, and was unanimously nominated by acclamation.

The nomination is a strong one and will doubtless be heartily ratified by the party. Col. St. Clair deserves well of his party, for no man has worked harder for its success. He will make an active, vigorous canvass, and will be a power of strength to the party in the campaign this fall.

Nearly all Provided For.

It was thought that all the members of the Harrison tribe and their personal retainers were given good places at the public trough, but it seems that one has been overlooked for a long time. He is Mr. Curtus Miller, of Deansville, Oneida county New York, the President's partner's brother. However, he was provided for the other day. He was appointed deputy collector of Internal Revenue at Utica, and his appointment was due principally to the fact that Mr. Curtis Miller is the brother of the President's law partner, William Henry Harrison Miller, whom the President appointed Attorney General.

The list of the Harrison family now drawing pay from the United States Treasury, by virtue of Benjamin Harrison's appointment, may thus be extended as follows:

1. The President's brother.
2. The President's brother-in-law.
3. The President's sister-in-law
4. The President's father-in-law.
5. The President's son's father-in law.
6. The President's wife's cousin.
7. The President's son's wife's cousin.
8. The President's nephew.
9. The President's daughter's brother in-law.
10. The President's brother's son-in-law.
11. The President's wife's niece's husband.
12. The President's son's father in law's niece's husband.
13. The President's brother in-law, number two.
14. The President's secretary's brother in-law.
15. The Prisident's partner's brother.

It is a pity that so imposing a family group must be preserved for posterity only in the inexpressive and hard lines of type. Such a gathering has never before been witnessed in our history and probably never will be again. The resources of the "art preservative" are unequal to this occasion, and the man with the camera should be called in. The family should be assembled at the Cape May gift cottage and photograped and the picture labelled "Public Office is a Family Trust."—Register.

WASHINGTON LETTER.

[From our regular correspondent.]

WASHINGTON, D. C., Aug. 29.—Blackguardism and pugilism were the twinisms put upon exhibition in the House this week by the republicans. More disgraceful scenes were never witnessed, and the active participants were all members of the republican party, which claims to represent all that is good and moral in the politics of the country—claims, mind you.

Representative Cannon, one of Speaker Reeds most submissive lieutenants, began the trouble by assuming the authority to publicly reprimand in a resolution forty four members of the House by name, because they did not meekly sit in their seats in order to be counted to make up a quorum. Ten of the gentlemen named were republicans. The subject before the House was the compound lard bill which Mr. Cannon is anxious to have passed, and to which there is bitter opposition in both parties. The gentlemen whom Mr. Cannon wanted to reprimand, very naturally protested against any such proceeding. Mr. Vaux, the venerable successor to Mr. Randall, his gray locks fairly bristling with indignation, said: "Have you a right to impute motives? That is not the preliamentary power of the majority in this House until the empire comes." This was greeted with applause from the democrats.

There was more of the same sort, and it so angered Mr. Cannon that he completely lost his head and made use of language which no respectable newspaper can print. That fired up Mr. Mason, a republican opponent of the bill whose family were in the gallery, and going over to where Mr. Cannon was he roundly abused him in the choicest Chicago billingsgate; but he had the good taste to do it in a tone too low to be heard by the ladies in the galleries. Meanwhile the House was in a terrible up-roar.

The lie was passed between Representatives Mason, of Illinois, and Walker of Massachusetts, both republicans, and had it not been for the interference of members they would have engaged in fisticuffs.

It would seem that nothing more disgraceful could occur; but the end was not yet. Representatives Wilson, of Washington, and Beckwith, of New Jersey, two more republicans, got into an altercation over the Cannon resolution, and Mr. Wilson called Mr. Beckwith a blankety blank liar, whereupon the Jersyman disgraced himself and his constituents by applying the most disgraceful epithet in the English language to the Representative of the State which bears the honored name of the father of his country. The result was an immediate slugging match which required the combined efforts of the Sergeant-at Arms and a number of members to stop. These be the men who are asking the voters of the country to continue them in power.

The agreement to begin voting upon the tariff bill September 8th. has been unanimously ratified by the Senate. Senator Gorman says the bill will be sufficiently exposed by that time to show the people of the country what an outrage the republicans are foisting upon them. The sugar lobby is again gathering here in force in order to get in their work when the sugar clause of the bill is reached, which will probably be next week.

Senator Gorman is chuckling over a joke which he very innocently played upon the representatives of several enterprising news papers several days ago. He entertained at his house a number of his Maryland friends and by the merest accident one of the correspondents saw the party enter the house. The result was that full particulars were sent off by telegraph of a caucus of democratic Senators. Mr. Gorman laughs heartily every time any one says anything about it. There has been no caucus of democratic Senators, nor is there any probability that there will be one. They are acting as a unit and there is no occasion to caucus.

By accident I have stumbled upon the republican programme by which the leaders of that party expect to hoodwink the voters once more. There is to be no further appropriation of money at this session than is absolutely necessary to keep the wheels of government moving. They will then go before the country posing as economists and ask the suffrages of the voters. If they can persuade Mr. Harrison to call an extra session to meet not later than November 10, or 15, it will be done; if not at the regular session which meets in December the mask is to be dropped and the spoliation of the Treasury is to begin in earnest. Campaign contributions are being solicited from all parties interested in any of the hundreds of measures carrying liberal appropriations, now pending, and they are all promised that the bills shall be pushed through at the next session, and the statement is made that forty-three republican Senators have agreed to adopt a gag rule for the Senate in order to push these bills through the faster. By this means the leaders of the party hope to raise a corruption fund large enough to buy up the doubtful districts and retain control of the next house.

A desperate affray occurred at Cross Keys, Southampton county, Va., John Doyle and John Scott became involved in a quarrel, and the former grew so enraged that he procured a shotgun and discharged both barrels into the body of Scott, killing him almost instantly. Doyle was arrested and taken to the jail at Courtland. A woman was at the bottom of the quarrel.

Mr. John F. Allen, of the firm of Allen & Ginter, cigarette manufacturers, Richmond, died in that city on the 23d inst., in the 75th year of his age. He was a prominent, wealthy and useful citizen, and universally esteemed for his kindness, business integrity and broad views of public duty.

The body of a young woman, who is supposed to have been murdered, was found under a high cliff of perpendicular rocks on East river, Mercer county, a few days since, by a party of loggers. A black valise, well worn, filled with clothing and other articles and $1.76 in cash was found with the body.

The most valuable metal in the world is said to be gallium, which is worth $3,250 an ounce. Calcium brings $1,800 a pound and cerium $1,920 per pound. Gold is worth $240 a pound.

There is to be a Confederate reunion at Franklin, Pendleton county, Sept. 5, Senator Faulkner, Congressman W. L. Wilson and ex-Senator Camden are expected to be present and make addresses.

HILLSBORO TRAINING SCHOOL.

The next session of the Hillsboro Training School will begin the first Wednesday in September, 1890.

MISS G. M. SHEARER, Principal.

COMMISSIONER'S SALE

Of Valuable Lands.

Pursuant to, and by virtue of a decree of the Circuit Court of Pocahontas County, W. Va., rendered at its June term, 1890, in the cause of

J. H. Arbogast, Adm'r.

vs.

J. H. Arbogast's Heirs &c.,

I will sell at public auction to the highest bidder on the premises near Traveler's Repose, Pocahontas County, W. Va., on SATURDAY, 27TH DAY OF SEPTEMBER, 1890.

all the lands yet belonging to the Estate of Jacob H. Arbogast, dec'd, composed of a tract of 45 acres; part of a tract 122 acres part of a tract of 309 acres, all adjoining each other and containing in the aggregate about 377 acres, lying in the forks of Greenbrier River on the S. & P. Turnpike. About 65 acres of these lands are in cultivation, with a good dwelling and other buildings and orchard &c. The ballance affords a good outlet for young stock, especially sheep, and has some good Hemlock, Spruce, and Oak timber upon it.

TERMS OF SALE:

10 per cent. of the purchase money cash in hand, the balance in equal payments, falling due in 9, 18 and 27 months from day of sale, with interest from that day. The purchaser to execute bonds with good security for the deferred payments, a lein will be retained until a future order of the Court.

The aforesaid land will be started at the upset bid of J. L. Arbogast for $1,40[illegible].

B. M. YEAGER, Sec'l Com'r.

Sept 4-4t. Printer's fee $10.96.

ADMINISTRATOR'S SALE.

Notice is hereby given that, pursuant to the will of Sallie Gum, dec'd, I will proceed to sell at public auction to the highest bidder, on the premises of the said Sallie Gum, dec'd on the following personal and real estate, viz:

SATURDAY, SEPTEMBER 27th, 1890,

1 Horse, 1 Cow, 3 Stacks of Hay, about 50 Bushels Buckwheat and a small quantity of oats.

Also all the lands of which the said Sallie Gum died seized and possessed with, all the appurtenances thereto belonging.

TERMS OF SALE:

All purchases of personal property will be required to pay cash all sums of $5.00 or less; and for amounts above $5.00 will be allowed six months time purchaser giving bond with approved personal security, with interest from date. The purchaser of the real estate will be required to pay $50 cash and for the residue will be allowed 6, 12 and 18 months credit, upon executing bonds with approved personal security, with interest from date. A lien will also be retained on the land as ultimate security.

M. J. McNEEL, Adm'r c. t. a.

ANNOUNCEMENTS.

I hereby announce myself as a candidate for re-election [illegible] Clerk of the [illegible] and County Courts of Pocahontas County.

Feeling very grateful for past favors, and soliciting your support at the next election, I am [illegible] respectfully,

John J. Beard.

To the voters of Pocahontas County.

I hereby announce myself a candidate for Clerk of the County Court of Pocahontas County at the election to be held on the 4th day of November next, and, if elected, I pledge myself to discharge the duties of said office to the best of my ability.

Your support is solicited.

Respectfully,

S. L. Brown.

To the voters of Pocahontas County.

I hereby announce myself a candidate for the office of Clerk of the County Court of Pocahontas county, subject to the action of the Democratic Primary election. Your patronage is kindly solicited.

Very truly yours,

E. H. Moore.

To the Voters of Pocahontas County.

I hereby announce myself a candidate for the office of Sheriff, subject to the action of the Primary election to be held Sept. 9th, 1890. If elected Geo. W. Callison will be my Deputy.

Respectfully,

J. C. Arbogast.

To the Voters of Pocahontas County.

I hereby announce myself a candidate to represent the 4th Delegate Dist. composed of the Counties of Pocahontas and Webster, in the next Legislature of W. Va., subject to the future action of the Democratic party. If elected I pledge myself to faithfully discharge the duties of the trust to the best of my ability. Election Nov. 4th 1890.

Respectfully,

W. [illegible] Mann.

To the Voters of Pocahontas County.

I hereby announce myself as a candidate to represent the Delegate District composed of the Counties of Pocahontas and Webster in the next House of Delegates, subject to any action taken by the Democratic party to select a candidate.

Respectfully,

L. M. Moore.

To the voters of the 8th Senatorial District.

I hereby announce myself as a candidate to represent this District in the next State Senate, subject to the action of the Democratic Convention to be held at Hinton on the 27th day of August, 1890. Respectfully,

J. P. Moomau.

To The Voters of Pocahontas County.

I hereby announce myself a candidate for the office of Clerk of the Circuit Court of Pocahontas County, at the election to be held November 4th next, and if elected I promise to discharge the duties thereof to the best of my ability.

Very Respectfully,

J. H. Patterson.

To the Voters of Pocahontas County

[illegible] fellow citizens and to the voters of Pocahontas and Webster [illegible] at the request of many friends in the county I hereby announce myself a candidate for the House of Delegates for Pocahontas and Webster counties, and should I get the nomination and be elected I shall work to better the condition of our people and the Counties, and asking your support, [illegible] Truly Thine,

C. B. Swecker.

To the Voters of Pocahontas County.

I hereby announce myself a candidate for Commissioner of the County Court, subject to Primary election. Your support is kindly solicited.

Yours Respectfully,

Geo. H. [illegible]

To the Voters of Pocahontas County.

I hereby announce myself a candidate for the office of Sheriff, subject to the action of the Democratic Primary election. If elected Wm. H. Oakley will be my Deputy.

Respectfully,

R. W. Hill.

To the Voters of Pocahontas County.

As Huntersville district is entitled to the next Commissioner of the County Court, I have consented to become a candidate for that office, subject to the action of the Democratic Primary election, and if elected I pledge myself to use my best endeavors to promote the general good to the greatest number of the citizens of Pocahontas county.

Respectfully,

M. A. [illegible]

To The Voters of Pocahontas County.

I hereby announce myself a candidate for Commissioner of the County Court, subject to the Primary election.

Respectfully,

Jas. W. Warwick.

To The Voters of Pocahontas County.

We are authorized to announce Geo. F. Moore for re-election for Commissioner of the County Court, subject to Primary election.

To The Voters of Pocahontas County.

We are authorized to announce G. M. Kee, of Marlinton as a candidate for Commissioner of the County Court subject to the Primary. Mr. Kee is well known to have faithfully discharged any public services that has been his duty to perform and after much solicitation has agreed to accept the office should he be elected to it.

HOME NEWS

—We failed to change the date this week on the first side from August 28th, to Sept 4th, which mistake our readers will please look over this time.

—Mr. Geo. S. McNeel, of Academy was in town Monday.

—Mr. C. E. Beard, of Mill Point, was in the city Monday.

—Several persons in town Monday attending a justice's trial.

—Mr. L. W. Herold, and wife of Frost, were in town Tuesday.

—Mr. J. R. S. Sterrett, of Austin, Texas, was in town Tuesday.

—Daniel Brown, of Brownburg, Va., was in the city Tuesday.

—R. W. Hill, Esq., of Academy made us a pleasant call Tuesday.

—Mr. G. C. Cooper, of Green Bank was in town Tuesday.

—The new dwelling of Attorney McClintic's is going up rapidly.

—Old Huntersville is improving slowly, but surely.

—Everybody come out at the Primary Election next Tuesday.

—When you come to the Primary election next Tuesday call and see us.

—Mr. Clarence Moore, of Charleston has been in our town for several days.

—Attorney L. M. McClintic returned Sunday from the Conventions at Hinton.

—Rev. Q. M. Campbell, of the Episcopalian church of St. Albans, preached an interesting sermon in the Methodist church at this place last Sunday night. He called to see us Monday.

—Cattle and sheep have been passing through for eastern markets lately. Mr. Withrow McClintic took a fine lot of sheep to Philadelphia, and Giles Sharp, Esq., cattle.

—The announcement of Mr. Geo M. Kee, for Commissioner of the County Court, appears in this issue. Mr. Kee if elected will no doubt make an able and efficient Court.

—The Brushy Ridge Camp-meeting closed last Friday morning. This meeting was a success. There were about 20 conversions. The Association voted unanimously for another Camp-meeting next August.

—Read the announcement of Mr. Jas. W. Warwick elsewhere in The Times this week for Commissioner of the County Court. Mr. Warwick is well known in the County and it is scarcely necessary for us to say he is very popular, and if elected would no doubt make an excellent Commissioner.

—Mr. Jas. Barker, insurance agent, of Wheeling is spending a few days in our city, and is doing a nice little business. Everybody should have their property insured, as we know not when it may be our misfortunes to have our houses go down in ashes and without the wherewith to replace them, would be in a "bad fix."

—This week we announce Mr. Geo. F. Moore for re-election for Commissioner of the County Court. Mr. Moore has held this office to the universal satisfaction of the public generally, and discharged the duties of said office as well, no doubt, as any man in the County could have done.

—I will hold my second teachers' examination at Academy, Sept. 12th and 13th, beginning at 8 o'clock, a. m.

M. G. Mathews, Co. Supt.

—Geo. M. Kee, Esq., of Marlinton, called to see us Tuesday.

Died—At St. Albans, W. Va., Aug. 20th 1890, Georgia, beloved wife of Mr. Newton Beard, aged 28 years. After a few months only of wedded life, she was called by the Master to her heavenly home, and died with her trust fixed firmly on Him. "Blessed are the dead who die in the Lord."

C.

Dunmore Doing.

Fine weather.

Frost done some damage to corn and tobacco, though the corn will be very good.

Our farmers are done threshing. Wheat and oats fell short of an average crop.

Miss Alice McGlaughlin of Bath Co., has been visiting here, also Mr. Henry McGlaughlin, of Marlinton gave us a call.

Mr. E. H. Jackson and Mrs. O. M. Noel are on a visit to Rockingham Co., Va.

Mrs. C. F. and C. R. Swecker and Miss Pinkney and Rev. J. H. Rexroad, all of Highland Co., Va., paid us a visit. Rev. Rexroad preached some very excellent sermons for us.

Rev. J. A. Taylor will preach at Glade Hill on Sunday 7th.

Miss Mollie Smith is home again from a visit to Knapp's creek.

Capt. Smith is at home.

Mess. B. F. McElwee and H. A. Yeager have returned from Hinton.

Hurrah for Alderson and St. Clair. They will get there eli this time.

Huntersville is sure of a R. R. if the bridge is completed across Knapp's creek so it can be hauled over.

If we had good roads our County would be more prosperous.

Our Farmers Alliance will meet at Dunmore Saturday the 6th inst. Important business is to be transacted, and a full attendance is desired.

Singing at X roads on Sunday the 14th.

There is talk of a Sunday school picnic near Dunmore.

Let every body turn out at the Primary and select your man. We have good men in the field, and some one ought to be elected.

Miss Kittie Lakin spent Sunday at home and returned to Edray.

Traveler.

Extention of Time.

The time for receiving bids on the school houses heretofore advertised in The Times to be located, one near the Lockridge ford and the other near Frost, has been extended until Sept 10th.

By order of Board

Jas. W. Warwick, Jr., Sec.

Two Deaths in a Duel.

A desperate duel to the death took place at Rowland, Ky., the junction of the Louisville and Nashville Railroad with the Kentucky Central, at nine o'clock the other morning.

Robert Ferguson, a fireman on the Louisville and Nashville road was recently married to a pretty young woman, and "Boss" Hamilton, another fireman, was reported to have told tales about her.

The trains of the two men met at Rowland. Ferguson walked up to Hamilton and in an excited manner exclaimed:—"You have been talking about my wife, so I understand."

"No I haven't," says Hamilton, "and the man who says so tells a lie."

"I say so," replied Ferguson, and at the same instant both men drew pistols.

They fired almost simultaneously, and in less than fifteen seconds each man had fired four times. Then both reeled and fell, their heads almost touching as they dropped. The train men rushed to them, only to find both dead. Each had three bullet holes in his body.

An eye witness said it was the gamest fight he ever saw. Neither man flinched nor uttered a sound after the shooting commenced.

Actors Attacked by a Mob.

There was a very serious riot on the floating theatre at Ceredo, Wayne county. The audience drove the performers from the stage into the river, and there stoned them in a most inhuman manner. Several of the troupe as well as the citizens and police who went to the rescue were badly wounded. The "Sunny South," variety troupe were at the theatre, which had all along been disorderly, made an open attack on one of the performers. Two members of the company went to his aid, but were overpowered and terribly beaten. The whole troup then went to the rescue, while the two police of the town deputized half a dozen citizens, and tried to quell the riot. The lights were put out, and police, citizens, performers, and audience became mixed up in a confused mass.

The audience drove the police and performers back through the stage and all were crowded into the river, while crowds on the bank began to stone the half drowned and helpless wretches. Finally the police got ashore and began shooting into the crowd. Jim Fry was badly wounded. While this was going on the company got ashore, when they were again attacked, and four or five were knocked senseless with clubs or stones. Finally all were rescued by citizens but the company is badly used up.

$100 REWARD $100.

The readers of The Times will be pleased to learn that there is at least one dreadful disease that science has been able to cure in all its stages, and that is Catarrh. Hall's Catarrh Cure is the only positive cure now known to the medical fraternity. Catarrh being a constitutional disease, requires a constitutional treatment. Halls Catarrh Cure is taken internally, acting directly upon the blood and mucous surfaces of the system, thereby destroying the foundation of the disease, and giving the patient strength by building up the constitution and assisting nature in doing its work. The proprietors have so much faith in its curative powers that they offer One Hundred Dollars for any case that it fails to cure. Send for list of testimonials.

Address, F. J. CHENEY & CO., Toledo O.

☞ Sold by Druggists, 75c.

A large boiler and machine works giving employment to eight hundred men is to be removed from Columbus, Ohio, to Buena Vista, Va., the contract having been signed.

ORDER OF PUBLICATION.

At rules held for the Circuit Court of Pocahontas County, in the State of West Virginia, at the Clerks office of said Court on the First Monday in September, 1890.

James L. Sheets,

vs.

Wm. N. Moore.

The object of this suit is to enforce a vendor's lien retained in a certain deed executed by Andrew C. Wooddell and others to Wm. N. Moore, and to subject the land therein conveyed to the payment of the unpaid purchase money due on said land. And it appearing, by affidavit, that diligence has been used on behalf of the plaintiff to ascertain in what County the defendant, Wm. N. Moore is, without effect, it is ordered that he appear here within one month from the date of the first publication hereof and do what is necessary to protect his interests in said suit.

Teste:

John J. Beard, Clerk.

C. F. Moore, sol.

Sept. 4-4t. Printer's fee $6.50

COMMISSIONER'S SALE OF LAND.

In pursuance of a decree of the Circuit Court of Pocahontas County rendered on the 18th day of June, 1890, in the chancery cause of Mary E. Pi[illegible], plaintiff, against George C. McGlaughlin, defendant, the undersigned special commissioner in said suit will proceed on MONDAY, OCTOBER 2nd, 1890,

to sell to the highest bidder at public auction in front of the Court House of said County a tract of about south of and near the village of Green Bank, adjoining lands of Geo. Kerr and others and the same land conveyed to George C. McGlaughlin by deed from J. C. Arbogast and wife recorded at page 3 of Deed Book No. 14 in the Clerk's office of the County Court of said County.

175 ACRES OF LAND

TERMS: Cash in hand sufficient to pay costs of suit and expenses of sale, and the residue of the purchase money to be paid in two equal installments at 6 and 12 months respectively from day of sale with interest thereon from said day, the purchaser to execute bonds with good personal security for deferred payments and the title to be retained as ultimate security for said payments.

H. S. Rucker, Sec'l Com'r.

Bond and security has been given by the above named commissioner as required by law.

John J. Beard, Cl'k Cir. Ct.

Sept. 4-4t. Printer's fee $9.50

Pocahontas Times.

JOHN E. CAMPBELL,

EDITOR AND PROPRIETOR.

Entered at the Post-office at Huntersville, W. Va., as second class matter.

ADVERTISING RATES.

	1 m.	3 m.	6 m.	1 yr.
One inch	$ 1 00	$ 2 00	$ 3 00	$ 5 00
Three in.	2 00	4 00	6 00	10 00
Qr. column	5 00	6 00	10 00	17 00
Half col'n	6 00	12 00	20 00	30 00
One col'n	10 00	20 00	30 00	50 00

Reading notices, not exceeding five lines, twenty-five cents for each insertion, and five cents a line for each additional line.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION.

One copy, 1 yr., $1.00 in advance; after 6 months, $1.25; after 12 months, $1.50. These terms will be strictly complied with.

Huntersville, W. Va.

August 28, 1890.

DROP A NICKLE IN THE SLOT.

BY LILLIAN T. ROBERTS.

Clark Hall was a clever city boy and, being a minister's son, had always received the best of home training. As he grew into his teens his mother often felt anxious lest he yield to the many temptations which city life afforded. So far he seemed to be a manly, wide-awake boy, fond of out-of door sports, but choosing only such associates as his mother approved.

New devices are constantly springing up to beguile pennies from the passers by, and the beautiful city in which Clark lived was not in this respect behind any of her sisters. It seemed as though at every street corner there were machines doing wonderful things for a small sum. If one was thirsty, he had only to slip a cent into a slot, and forth would come a glass of cool water: or his handkerchief would be perfumed for a penny, or, for a small sum he could learn his exact weight; or have his life insured for the day; or listen to a musical engine; or be the happy possessor of chewing gum or candy—indeed it would take a whole page to tell the marvellous performances of these money catching machines. Clark had tested the merits of many of these, but, like most boys, he had a sweet tooth, and the chocolate machine made his money fly. He had only to drop a ten-cent piece into the slot, and two packages—supposedly of Huyler's best—would come sliding out, one of solid chocolate, the other with a delicious creamy interior.

One day, as he was passing the corner where the chocolate machine was dealing out its tempting contents to a crowd of boys, he felt in his pockets for the dime, but on taking it out it proved to be a three cent piece. It was exactly the size of the dime. Quick as a flash the thought popped into his head: "Why wouldn't three cents do? I wonder if the man would notice it? Wouldn't it be a joke to fool him?"

"Wouldn't it be cheating?" whispered a small voice.

Clark looked around. Nobody was speaking.

"What nonsense!" he said to himself. "It is only for a joke, and, if the man isn't sharp enough to find out, it isn't my affair; so here goes!"

As the little coin chinked into its place, Clark wondered if the machine would work, but out slid the packages as usual. Clark seized them and hurried off, laughing at the thought of outwitting the man, but somehow the chocolate had a bitter taste.

The next day he tried it again. If his conscience pricked him, it was only a pin-prick, and how good the chocolate did taste! As he argued the matter to himself, it was foolish to spend ten cents when three cents would do and no one would be the wiser. If discovered he had only to say that it was a mistake. So he treated himself to chocolate once, and sometimes twice, a day, providing himself with three penny pieces for that purpose.

But one day as he dropped in the coin, a rough hand seized his collar.

"I have caught you at it, young thief!" shouted a harsh voice, with good sprinkling of oaths. "Getting ten cents' worth of chocolate for three cents!"

It takes only a little to draw a crowd in a city, and soon a throng had gathered at the corner.

"What's the matter?" they asked.

"Oh, this young chap has been passing off three cent pieces for a dime. He didn't think I'd find him out, but I've been suspecting him for several days, and now I've caught him. I reckon he'll have to pay for it!" emphasizing this announcement with a volley of oaths and an angry shake

How Clark felt! His cheeks were on fire, and he held his head down low lest somebody should recognize him.

"Why, how is this, Clark?" asked a familiar voice.

The boy looked up to see his father before him. The man explained how he had caught him.

"Is this true, Clark?" said Mr. Hall.

"Oh, father!" Clark sobbed—breaking quite down, and unable to go on.

"Will five dollars make the matter right?" asked Mr. Hall, turning to the man, whose wrath at the sight of the money cooled down amazingly, and who now burst into a torrent of excuse for the boy, to none of which Mr. Hall listened, but walked off with his son toward home. It was a silent walk. Clark stole a glance at his father's face. What a sorrowful look it had, as though it had received a great blow!

Mr. Hall opened the front door, and led the way to his study.

"Now, by boy," he said gently, though from the shake of his voice it was evident that he was laboring under some strong emotion, "tell me about it from the very beginning."

And, amid sobs, Clark told the whole story.

"O father, I am truly sorry! I will never, never cheat again! Do forgive me."

For a reply his father opened his arms and drew his boy to him.

"Clark," he said earnestly, "stealing is stealing. A man ought to be as honest in little things as in great ones. It seemed a cute thing to pass off three cents for ten, but you were as dishonest as though you had each time pilfered seven cents from a drawer. There are more ways than one of committing a theft. There are plenty of men who ride twice on a railroad ticket, and think they are really doing something praiseworthy if they cheat a rich corporation. I have heard people, when shopping chuckle over the fact that they had received more change than was their due; and there are many who slip a three cent piece into the church box, hoping to cheat their neighbors, and perhaps the Lord, into the belief that it was a dime. I would far rather, my son, that you would be an honest poor man than a dishonest rich man; but I know it is possible to be both rich and honest."

It was no unusual thing for Mr. Hall to pray with his son; so now they knelt while the father, in solemn, tender words, besought the Father of all to make his boy honest in thought as well as deed, truthful in spirit as well as in speech. It was a lesson in honesty which Clark never forgot. For a long time he avoided passing that dreaded corner where the chocolate machine still plied its lucrative trade, and not until the five dollars were repaid did he drop another nickle in the slot.

SUBSCRIBE

FOR THE

POCAHONTAS TIMES,

Every man in the County should take it, and patronize home industry. It sustains your rights, and works for the advancement of your county, which no city paper will do. It gives you the news from all parts of the county, which you could not get otherwise. It furnishes matters of interst to the Merchant, Farmer and Mechanic. It keeps you posted and gives you information, on all general news, and its sections and Miscellany are fit for all ages.

TERM OF SUBSCRIPTION,

One year in advance	$1.00
If not paid within 6 months	1.25
And at the end of the year	1.50

AND IF YOU NEED

Letter Heads, Note Heads, Bill Heads, Envelopes, Drug Envelopes, Tags, Business Cards, Official Blanks, Blank Bonds, Posters, Briefs for the Court of Appeals etc.

GET THEM AT "THE TIMES,"

JOB OFFICE,

POCAHONTAS TIMES.

Vol. VIII. JOHN E. CAMPBELL, EDITOR AND PROPRIETOR. Huntersville, West Virginia, Thursday, September 18, 1890. Terms of Subscription, $1.00 PER YEAR. IN ADVANCE. No. 8.

Official Directory of Pocahontas County.

Judge of Circuit Court, A. N. Campbell.
Prosecuting Attorney, L. M. McClintic.
Sheriff, M. J. McNeel.
Deputy Sheriff, L. W. Herold
Cl'k of Cir. & Co. Courts, J. J. Beard.
Assessor, C. O. Arbogast.
Com'rs Co. Ct. C E. Beard. S B. Hannah. G. P. Moore.
Co. Surveyor, Geo. Baxter

THE COURTS.

Circuit Court convenes on the first Monday in April, 3rd Monday in June and 3rd Monday in October.
County Court convenes on the 1st Tuesday in January, March, October and second Tuesday in July. July is levy term.

Leaves From the Note Book OF AN OLD DETECTIVE.

Murder will out," said Mr. Price Brindle as he lit a cigar and puffed at it vigorously, at the same time gazing keenly at me through the cloud of smoke he had raised.

"Do you think so?" I queried.

"I know so," was his emphatic rejoinder. "There's no such thing as a man having committed a crime, escaping entirely. He may run scot free for a month or a year, but sooner or later he is bound to be found out. Now, in the case of old Mr. Jordan. One would hardly think to look for his murderer in his son in law, who seemed to love the old man as his own father."

"There seems to be no doubt of the young man's guilt?"

"Not the least. An incautious word gave him away, and he is now in prison waiting trial. I am sorry for his poor wife; but what could she expect marrying such a man as Jack Ferguson?"

"Such a man as Jack Ferguson!"

"Yes. He was a reformed gambler if the truth has been told, and Madeline Jordan took her ducks to a poor market when she became the wife of Ferguson. I came over at her request, however, to see you Mr. Deering. The poor young thing seems all broken up over the affair, and I don't wonder."

"You think it necessary for a detective to look into this affair, Mr. Brindle?"

I regarded the junior partner of the firm of Jordan & Brindle questioningly.

"No, I don't think there's the least use," returned he. "I am of the opinion that Ferguson will confess, or at any rate can be made to do so, if the case is worked up properly. That may be worth your time, captain."

"I will come over," said I. "The inquest has not been held, I understand?"

"No. At my request it has been stayed till you looked into the affair. I saw that the murderer was put in a safe place, however, pending an examination."

Price Brindle rose to his feet and bowed himself out, leaving me to my reflections. He was a man of influence in the little city of Dorington, a member of a lumber-dealing firm, that was supposed to be wealthy.

The sudden death of the senior member of the firm had startled the community, and when it was found that a murder had been committed, the wrath of Dorington was deep indeed.

I had not been long located in the place, and was somewhat surprised at recieving a call from Mr. Brindle on the afternoon of the day of the murder. He explained that his partner had been found dead on the floor of his office adjoining his dwelling, with a knife in his heart. The old man's son-in law had quarrelled with Jordan on the previous day, and had been heard to utter threats. Moreover, the knife, a clasp affair, with a long, wicked blade, belonged to young Ferguson and this fact, coupled with one that Ferguson had admitted quarrelling with Jordan, led to his being arrested for murder.

Soon after the departure of Price Brindle, I repaired to the scene of the crime. I was admitted by Mrs. Ferguson, a bright, pretty woman of less than twenty, whose face was pallid and stained with tears.

"Oh sir; Jack never did it, and you must safe 'him'!" cried the young wife, a look of earnest entreaty in her brown eyes. I was touched at her grief, and promised to do what I could.

I entered the office, a small room, adjoining the one in which the real-estate dealer slept, he being a widower, his daughter acting as housekeeper. The body of the dead lay on a bed in a room off from the office.

Madeline did not accompany me to the place, but Mr. Brindle did.

"He was found right here," explained brindle. pointing to the floor near a table, "where he had fallen out of his chair when the assassin plunged a knife to his heart."

I glanced keenly about, at the floor, the chair, and the immediate surroundings. Under the table was a cuspidore in which lay the stump of a half burned cigar, and on the table sat a bottle of wine.

The land dealer had evidently been enjoying himself at the time he met his fate at the hand of an assassin.

From the office I passed into the bedroom and examined the dead. The knife wound was plain to be seen. I soon made an important discovery.

There was no blood on the clothing of the murdered man, and I had noticed none in the office. Surely this was a little singular.

As I passed back into the front room, I saw Price Brindle just removing the cuspidore from under the table.

"Leave that where it is," I said sharply.

"Eh! What sir!"

The gentleman seemed astonished.

"Leave that cuspidore where it is, Mr. Brindle," I said, "nothing must be disturbed till the inquest. You ought to know the custom in cases of this kind. Nothing must be disturbed in this room for the present."

"I beg pardon," said Mr. Brindle appologetically. "I have assumed charge since my partner's death, and supposed it would be all right to clean up the room a little, but I realize that you are right, Mr. Deering. I see that you understand your business, and Madeline did right in suggesting you as the proper person to look into this affair."

We left the room in company. I interviewed the officer in charge, and then went to Mrs. Freguson.

"Have you made any discoveries?" she questioned at once.

"I think so," said I.

"Tell me—"

"Not yet. You must tell me all you know about this sad affair. Mrs. Farguson.

I then began questioning the young wife closely. She admitted that her father and her husband had quarreled. Mr. Jordan was a man of violent temper, and often had hot words with those of his employ.

On the previous evening the two, Jordan and Ferguson, had still a late hour, smoking and chatting in the office.

"Had they quarreled last night?"

"None that I am aware of; in fact, I am sure the meeting was a pleasant one," assured the woman. "When Jack was leaving, a stranger called at the office and my husband left the two together."

"Indeed! Did you see the stranger?"

"Yes, I saw him go down the walk in the moonlight. I had a bad toothache, and could not sleep, and was up tending to it. Jack was snoring then, and I know he did not leave our room till morning."

"Who discovered the tragedy?"

"One of the servants?"

"And then your husband was arrested?"

"Yes he was arrested. I think Mr. Brindle pointed him out to the officers.,

"What sort of a man is this Brindle?',

"A gentleman, sir; but he is mistaken when he accuses Jack."

"Perhaps. Did the stranger, whom you saw leave the office at a late hour last night, resemble Mr. Brindle?"

"Not in the least. Jack says he had a heavy beard. Oh, no, sir, Mr. Brindle is a gentleman, and would not wrong anybody intentionally."

"Perhaps not."

I questioned her minutely about her father's relations with different men. She could give no information about her fathers visitor; but requested me to see Jack, who had seen him in the full glare of the office lamp.

Once more I returned to the office and made it a point to secure two things, the cuspidore and the bottle of wine. I had a theory which I was determined to carry out immediately.

The bottle of wine and cuspidore I secreted in a paper, and carried them both to a chemist who was a personal friend. Leaving those with him, I turned my steps toward the city prison.

I found Jack Ferguson a young man of good address, and frank face, yet deeply distressed over his unfortunate position. He had little to offer save that he was innocent. The knife found in his employer's heart was his, but it had been stolen from him a long time before the tragic night. As to the stranger, he had never seen him before, and even Mr. Jordan seemed not to know him.

"He was very chatty, however, and offered cigars to both Mr. Jordan and myself."

"Did you accept one?"

"Yes."

"And smoked it?"

"No; I was just going out, and put the cigar in my pocket."

"Where is it now?"

"In my coat at home."

"Very g od."

A little later I left him and repaired to the chemist.

"What luck, Will?"

"The wine is all right."

"And the cuspidore?"

"I'll tell you," and my friend bent forward and whispered a word in my ear.

"I thought so," I said with a start.

The chemist was curious, and I had to enlighten him as to my latest case. I had everything in readiness for the inquest, which was held the next morning. I made myself solid with the coroner at the outset, and had learned from Mrs Ferguson her whole family history, and such other things as I deemed necessary.

The first witness called was young Ferguson, who gave an account of that last evening with his employer. Since the young man was under arrest, his testimony was taken with a degree of allowance on the part of the jury. He told of the coming of the stranger a man with an immense beard who professed to know Mr. Jordan, and who seemed a good-natured fellow indeed, since he offered cigars at once. Next on the stand was Madeline. She corroborated that part of the story her husband told relating to the stranger, and I could see that this had an influence on the jury.

I took it upon myself to ask a good many questions. The most important witness was yet to come, however, in the person of the murdered man's partner.

He was cool and collected enough when he took the witness stand. After the coroner had brought out the fact that it was Ferguson's knife found in the heart of the murdered man I took the witness.

"How long have you been in partnership with Mr. Jordan?"

My first question was one easily answered, which led to others of a preliminary nature.

"Now, Mr. Brindle, is it your opinion that your partner came to his death from the knife wound?"

"Of course. How else could it be?" said he quickly.

We will get at that soon," I said. "Now, sir, if the knife caused Jordon's death, what became of the blood? I found none on the floor, nor any in or about the murdered man's clothing."

I regarded the witness keenly.

"He must have bled internally," was Brindles reply.

"Would it be possible to stab a man to the heart and not draw a drop of blood to the outside?"

"I do not know, sir."

"But I know. It would be impossible," I said sharply.

"Well it may be. I cannot judge," returned the witness. "I am sure the knife was found in Mr. Jordan's heart, and, as it belongs to Jack Ferguson that is evidence to me that he is the murderer."

"Now don't jump at conclusions, Mr. Brindle. We do not care for your opinion in the case just now. You will simply answer questions put to you," I said curtly.

"I am ready to answer, sir."

"Very well, sir. An expert surgeon has held a post-mortem on the remains, and he asserts that Mr. Jordan was stabbed after life was extinct!"

I bent and regarded Brindle keenly. I saw his face blanch, and believed he trembled.

"What is this to me?" he said finally.

"You will soon discover."

"I did not come here to be insulted."

The man was getting on his dignity, and it pleased me.

"You shall not be insulted," I said. "We only seek the truth, and so are sifting matters. Now, Mr. Brindle, tell the jury who the strange man was who visited Mr. Jordan on the night of the murder."

"I know nothing about him."

"Are you sure?"

"I am not in the habit of being doubted, Mr. Deering," snapped the witness angrily.

The man was losing his temper, a fact that pleased me not a little. I would soon have him at a good advantage.

"I suppose not," I returned, "but I beg to differ with you as regards this stranger. However, let him drop now. Do you recognize this?"

I suddenly presented a morroco cigar case to the gaze of the witness. He glared a moment and then put out his hand.

"It is mine," he said.

"Exactly."

I now turned to the jury, and said,—

"Gentlemen, this cigar case was found in Price Brindle's pocket, the pocket of a coat worn on the night of the murder. It has been ascertained that Mr. Jordan died before

(Continued on [illegible] page.)

Pocahontas Times.

JOHN E. CAMPBELL,
EDITOR AND PROPRIETOR.

Entered at the Post-office at Huntersville, W. Va., as second class matter.

ADVERTISING RATES.

	1 m.	3 m.	6 m.	1 yr.
One inch	$ 1 00	$ 2 00	$ 3 00	$ 5 00
Three in.	2 00	4 00	6 00	10 00
Qr. column	3 00	6 00	10 00	17 00
Half col'n	6 00	12 00	20 00	30 00
One col'n	10 00	20 00	30 00	50 00

Reading notices, not exceeding five lines, twenty-five cents for each insertion, and five cents a line for each additional line.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION.

One copy, 1 yr., $1.00 in advance; after 6 months, $1.25; after 12 months, $1.50

These terms will be strictly complied with.

Huntersville, W. Va.

September 18, 1890.

Democratic Ticket.

For Congress—Third District,
JOHN D. ALDERSON,
Of Nicholas County.

For State Senator—8th Senatorial District,
J. W. ST. CLAIR,
Of Fayette County.

For Judge Supreme Court,
DAN'L B. LUCAS,
Of Jefferson County.

For House of Delegates,
I. B. MOORE.

For County Commissioner,
G. M. KEE.

For Clerk Circuit Court,
J. H. PATTERSON.

For Clerk County Court,
S. L. BROWN.

For Sheriff
J. C. ARBOGAST.

The assessed valuation of all the railroads in West Virginia is $17,293,768.

The earth is nearest the sun on the second day of each year, on which day she is only 90,822,000 miles from his solar majesty.

"Should every dog of every breed in America be killed to-morrow," says a St. Louis statistician, "the real loss to the country would not be $100 On the contrary, the gain would be at least $30,000,000 per year. Nations famed for their thrift and economy do not take to dogs."

Mr. Johnson Declines.

The card of Mr. J. M. Johnson, Sr., declining the Republican nomination for the State Senate in this District, appears in today's paper, and makes a definite settlement of the matter. Mr. Johnson is not the sort of a man to allow himself to be made a tool of by the Force bill politicians.

It now looks as if Col. St. Clair will have a walk-over, without republican opposition.—Monroe Watchman.

How They Equalize.

The title of the Tariff bill now under discussion in the Senate is "to reduce the revenue and equalize duties on imports and for other purposes." How it equalizes duties a few citations will show.

On the ordinary cotton or flax laces used by the trim millions of our pretty girls who have more good looks than money the duty is increased from 30 to 40 per cent., whereas silk laces, which only Miss Flora McFlimsey can afford, are raised but 10 per cent.

The $300 shotgun with which Miss Flora's brother bowls over a woodcock pays from 30 to 45 per cent. duty, while the cheap German gun, "sold to farmer boys who cannot afford to buy a high-priced gun," pays from 78 to 100 per cent.

An ordinary dress goods for women and children, as, say, a black brilliantine, pays 92½ per cent., while silks and satins are put at 68. The Sultan of Turkey makes his subjects pay only 18 per cent. on the brilliantine, but our Republican Congress charges 97½ and then wants to gag the Democratic Senators who expose and inveigh against the wrong.

In linins, the belle's gassamer handkerchief remains at 35 per cent., but the farmer's brown drill, used for summer clothing, is screwed up from 35 to 63, and his crash towel from 35 to 70. Our friends will not even let him wipe the sweat from his brow short of 100 per cent. Is it strange that there is a Republican revolt at the West against this form of "equalization ?"

Hon. John E. Kenna delivered a strong speech in the U. S. Senate on Monday August 31st, upon the McKinley tariff bill. Mr. Kenna's speech is pronounced one of the ablest that has been delivered on the tariff, and was listened to with marked attention. In closing he used the following:

"The laborer, forming the great mass of consumers, has been the first to tax and last to relieve. The tax on lawyers and doctors and merchants and bankers was repealed! But the tax on pilots and engineers was retained for years. The tax on deeds and bank checks was repealed! But the tax on hats and boots was retained at war rates. The tax on incomes was wiped from the face of the earth! But the coat and the shirt, the breeches and the blanket, the dress and the cloak and the shawl, the plow and the spade, the pick and the shovel the chisel and the plane, the plate that holds the hard earned meal and the fork that carries it to the hungry lip, the blanket that shields the wasting form and the sheet that shrouds it cold in death—go on—like Tennyson's brook—go on forever—levying silent tribute from the weary and heavy laden that colossal fortunes may tower to the skies while "Man's inhumanity to man makes countless thousands mourn."

WASHINGTON LETTER.

[From our regular correspondent.]

WASHINGTON, D. C., Sept. 11.—To see the jollification in which the republicans are indulging over having re elected Speaker Reed from a district where there was no organized democratic opposition, one would suppose that they had elected a majority of the next House and secured a mortgage on the Presidential chair for four years from March 4th, 1893. Let them remember that "he who laughs last laughs best."

The adulation which Mr. Reed is now receiving here from members of his party is absolutely sickening. He is naturally vain and self conceited, but since his return he is worse than ever: he struts around with his head thrown back and his chest expanded looking exactly like a barn yard turkey gobbler among a lot of hen turkeys: He regards his re-election as not only an endorsement of his unspeakable record as Speaker, but, also as an endorsement of his presidential aspirations, and the turning down of a certain gentleman who has for many years been supposed to carry the vote of the State of Maine around in his vest pocket—James G. Blaine. By the way, it is noticeable that among all the telegrams of congratulation received by Mr. Reed there was not a word from Mr. Blaine.

Representative Cooper proved that Lemon, the pension attorney, who endorsed Commissioner Raum's notes for $12,000 the day after Raum made a ruling that put more than $200,000 in Lemon's pocket, had committed a forgery more than twenty years ago in this city and had been therefor disbarred from practice before a Government department, and that the patent upon which the Refrigerator company of which Raum is president and Representative Snyser, to whom has been delegated the task of electing Representative McKinley, is a large stock holder, was a worthless fraud before the republicans of the whitewashing committee got their heads together and decided not to investigate the private business affairs of Raum. The majority of the committee may whitewash until doom-day, but it will not change the verdict of "guilty as indicted," which the unprejudiced public has found against the Commissioner of Pensions, and Mr. Harrison will retain him in office at the peril of his party. It is stated quietly by republicans that Mr. Harrison would have demanded the resignation of Raum before this if the Congressional elections were not so near, and that after Raum gets his coat of whitewash and the elections are over he will be compelled to resign.

Has Mr. Harrison the backbone to carry out the threat he made of vetoing the River and Harbor bill if the $5,000,000 of Senate amendments were agreed to? We shall soon know, the Senate amendments were agreed to, and the bill is now in his hands.

The democratic Senators like most members of the party believe in the principle of reciprocity and would be glad to see it extended to every country which buys our products or sells us theirs, but they want none of the so called reciprocity which is contained in the Aldrich amendment to the tariff bill which puts it in the power of the President to close our ports against friendly nations whenever it may be his pleasure so to do, and that makes it possible for combinations of unscrupulous speculators to manipulate our tariff for their own benefit at the expense of the consumers.

That isn't the democratic idea of reciprocity, therefore it was not surprising that the solid democratic vote was cast against it. Two republicans—Messrs Evarts and Edmunds—also voted against it, and another republican—Senator Hoar—had the astonishing effrontery to state in substance in his closing speech that he only supported it because he regarded it as make believe reciprocity. He told the truth; the object of the republicans in adopting the so called reciprocity amendment is to catch votes for the party. They recognized the popularity of the idea and have attempted to take advantage of it.

The democrats of the House have this week been engaged in justifiable filibustering to prevent the seating of two negro contestants whom the majority of the committee on Elections have unjustly decided were entitled to seats held by democrats. If the republicans will persist in their dirty political work let them keep a quorum of their own members present to do it.

Senator Gibson says the sugar schedule of the new tariff bill will rob the sugar planters of Louisiana of more than a million dollars a year, which will go into the pockets of the members of the sugar trust.

If the conference committee to which the tariff bill has now gone allows October 1, to remain as the date for the new tariff bill to go into effect, and it throws the country into a financial panic, as the bankers of New York say it will, owing to the unusual demand on the part of importers for money to get their imported goods out of the bonded ware houses before that date, the responsibility will be with the republican party. They have been warned, and if trouble ensues the people of the country will know where to place the blame for it.

The population of West Virginia is now about 775,000. In 1880 the population was 618,450, an increase during the decade of 156,550.

Rev. Sam. Jones commenced a series of sermons at Lynchburg, Va., last Saturday.

COMMISSIONERS SALE OF LAND.

Pursuant to a decree of the Circuit Court of Pocahontas County, rendered at the June term 1890 in the cause of Samuel Jody vs. Henry C. Massey I will on Monday the 20th day of October 1890, offer for sale by public auction in front of the Court House door of Pocahontas County, that certain tract of land containing 34 acres and 70 poles of land the property of the defendant Henry C. Massey, situate on the waters of Knapp's creek adjoining the lands of W. A. Friel and others. This is a valuable tract of land and has tract of land and has on it considerable improvements, including dwelling house.

TERMS OF SALE.

Sufficient cash in hand to pay the costs of this suit and expenses of sale, and the residue in six months from the day of sale, bearing interest from that day, the purchaser to execute bond with good personal security for the deferred payment, and the title to be retained as ultimate security.

L. M. McCLINTIC, Com'r

I, John J. Beard, Clerk of the Circuit Court of Pocahontas County do certify that the Commissioner above has given bond as required by law.

JOHN J. BEARD, Cl'k.

Sept. 18-4t. Printer's fee $8.83

COMMISSIONER S SALE OF LAND.

Pursuant to a decree of the Circuit Court of Pocahontas County, rendered at the June Term 189 in the cause of William Gibbs vs. C. A. Yeager and others, I will on, Monday the 20th day of October, 1890, offer for sale at public auction to the highest bidder, in front of the Court House door of Pocahontas County that Certain tract of land containing 150 acres the property of the defendant C. A. Yeager lying on the East branch of Greenbrier River adjoining the lands of P. D. Yeager M. Yeager, and others, said land is fertile, well improved and has a comfortable dwelling house and out building upon it.

TERMS OF SALE:

Enough cash in hand to pay the costs of this suit and expenses of sale and the residue in Six Twelve and Eighteen months from the day of sale, in Equal payments bearing interest from that day the purchaser executing bond with good personal security for the deferred payments and the title being retained as ultimate security.

L. M. McCLINTIC, Com'r

I, John J. Beard, Clerk of the Circuit Court of Pocahontas County, do certify that the Commissioner above has given bond as required by law.

JOHN J. BEARD, Cl'k.

Sept. 18 4t. Printer's fee $8.75

COMMISSIONER'S SALE OF

Valuable Land in Pocahontas County.

Pursuant to a decree of the Circuit Court of Pocahontas County rendered at the June term, 1890, in the chancery cause of Geo. A. Rivercomb, Special Receiver &c. vs. A. G. Bonner. We the undersigned Commissioners, will offer for sale at public auction to the highest bidder at the front door of the Court house of Pocahontas County on the 20th day of October 1890. A tract of one hundred acres of land belonging to A. G. Bonner, situated on the South East side of Middle Mountain in Pocahontas County, W. Va., near the Big Spring. This one of the most valuable tracts of land in the County and is in a high state of cultivation.

TERMS OF SALE:

Sufficient cash in hand to pay cost of suit and expense of sale and the residue in three equal payments, payable in six, twelve and eighteen months respectively the purchaser to execute bond with approved security for the defered payments, bearing interest from day of sale, and the title to the land as ultimate security.

GEO. A. REVERCOMB, }
C. P. JONES, } Com'rs.

I, John J. Beard, Clerk of the Circuit Court of Pocahontas County do certify that the bond required by the decree in said cause has been duly executed.

JOHN J. BEARD, Cl'k.

Sept. 18-4t Printer's fee $9.98

COMMISSIONER'S SALE.

Of Valuable Lands.

Pursuant to, and by virtue of a decree of the Circuit Court of Pocahontas County, W. Va., rendered at its June term, 1889, in the cause of

J. H. Arbogast, Adm'r,
vs.
J. H. Arbogast's Heirs &c.,

I will sell at public auction to the highest bidder on the premises near Traveler's Repose, Pocahontas County, W. Va., on SATURDAY, 27TH DAY OF SEPTEMBER, 1890.

all the lands yet belonging to the Estate of Jacob H. Arbogast, dec'd, composed of a tract of 45 acres: part of a tract 123 acres part of a tract of 509 acres, all adjoining each other and containing in the aggregate about 577 acres, lying in the forks of Greenbrier River on the S. & P. Turnpike: About 45 acres of these lands are in cultivation, with a good dwelling and other buildings and orchard &c. The ballance affords a good outlet for young stock, especially sheep, and has some good Hemlock, Spruce, and Oak timber upon it.

TERMS OF SALE:

10 per cent of the purchase money cash in hand, the balance in equal payments, falling due in 9,18 and 27 months from day of sale, with interest from that day. The purchaser to execute bonds with good security for the deferred payments, a lein will be retained until a future order of the Court.

The aforesaid land will be started at the upset bid of J. L. Arbogast for $1,400.

B. M. YEAGER, Sp'l Com'r.

Sept 4-4t. Printer's fee $10.96.

ANNOUNCEMENTS.

To the Voters of Pocahontas County.

I announce myself an Independent candidate for House of Delegates. If it should be your pleasure on the 4th day of November next, to elect me to represent you in the next Legislature, I pledge myself to use my utmost efforts to secure such legislation as will be favorable especially to the farming and laboring class, and to represent my constituents without partisan bias.

Respectfully,
H. B. SHARP.

HOME NEWS

—At last—a new fence is being built around the court house square.

—For all kinds of job printing, call at THE TIMES office.

—Mr. R. H. Moore, of Academy, was in town the first of this week.

—Jno. W. Warwick, Esq., of near Edray, called to see us Monday.

—For beautiful wedding invitations THE TIMES job office is head quarters.

—Several wagons from around this place were at Millboro Depot last week.

—Attorney Shelton Reger and wife, of Philippi are guest, at Huntersville Hotel.

—Jacob Boner, Esq., left last Friday morning for Baltimore to buy his fall and winter goods.

—Mr. Robt. Skeen and daughter Miss Kate of Covington, Va., are the guests of Mr. Wm. Curry's of this place.

—Attorney Geo. W. Revercomb of Warm Springs, Va., was in town the first of the week and called to see us.

—The Alderson Fair Co., will accept our thanks for complimentary ticket. We are sorry we cannot attend.

—Mrs. C. A. Dameron and family, of Alleghany Station, Va., are visiting her parents Mr. J. C. Loury's at this place.

—Mr. J. C. Loury, Jr., who has been traveling for a few weeks in the interest of his parcel handler, has returned home, and reports success.

—J. F. Hull, Esq., of the firm of W. C. Hull & Son, of Edray, called to see us Tuesday. He was on his way to attend the Healing Springs for his health.

—In this issue will be found the announcement of H. B. Sharp, Esq., of Split Rock, as an Independent Candidate for House of Delegates.

—Attorney H. S. Rucker and family, who have been away on a six week's vacation visiting relatives at Lewisburg, Lynchburg and other places have returned home.

—We have just received a large supply of all kinds of stationary [illegible] the latest [illegible] and will [illegible] as can be bought in any city.

—[illegible] by [illegible] the Democratic [illegible] of Mr. J. C. Arbogast [illegible] and our readers will kindly accept.

—We are requested by Mr. S. B. Moore, of Edray, to suggest through THE TIMES where the most suitable place would be to hold a singing convention this fall. We would suggest [illegible] a good place.

—We are requested to announce that the Rev. S. L. Wilson, [illegible], of Greenbrier Presbytery, will hold a meeting at [illegible] commencing Friday night the [illegible] and continuing over Sunday.

—There will be a [illegible] meeting at Mt. Vernon the [illegible] of the month. Preaching at [illegible]. Preaching at Mt. Vernon Sabbath morning 11 a. m. and at night. There will be no [illegible] on the grounds as heretofore.

—The quarterly meeting for Lewisburg district, M. E. Church South, will meet at this place Oct. 11, 12; Green Bank 18, 19.

—Greenbrier Presbytery at Alderson, Sept. 10, Rev. R. A. Pendleton, Moderator, and Revs. D. M. Layton and R. L. Telford, clerks. Revs. D. S. Sydenstricker and W. T. Price and elder A. M. McGlaughlin of this County were present at the opening.

—Notice of the sale of the late Mrs. Susan Burr, is sticking in manuscript on the store door of Mr. A. Barlow, and as nobody reads the numerous notices that are stuck around in manuscript, we are requested to say by an interested party that the sale will take place next Tuesday the 23rd.

—Mrs. S. A. Campbell, and family who have been visiting her parents, Mr. J. C. Loury's at this place for some time, except their daughter Miss Gracie, who will attend school at this place this winter, left for their home at Belington, Monday.

—Andrew Hughs, Esq., mail carrier from this place to Dunmore, rides 30 miles a day six times a week, and receives as compensation, for same $4.00 per month and says he has been trying to get $1.50 but so far has failed. We would like to ask the contractor, who is a high tariff man if this is the high wages promised by his party before the last election.

Hillsboro Happenings.

Plenty of rain.

Mr. M. G. Mathews our worthy Supt., was in town holding the examination Friday and Saturday.

Miss Bertha Sharp is visiting at her sisters Mrs. Henry Overholt.

Mr. W. H. Overholt, is putting up a fine Office and ware-house which will add much to the beauty of our town.

Misses Lillie Hull, and Laura Sharp of Edray, have enrolled as pupils of the S. & F. Academy.

Mr. Tom Edgar, of Renicks Valley spent a few days last week with his brother Capt. Edgar.

Miss Lou McNeel has returned home from Lewisburg, accompanied by her niece Miss Mary McNeel.

Mr. Wm. Cackley, passed through town Saturday.

Mrs. Watts and Son and Mrs. Belinea Williams of the Highlands were visiting at Mr. R. W. Hills last week.

Rev. D. S. Sydenstricker and son John have returned home from attending Presbytery at Alderson.

"PUNCH & JUDY."

The "Sinks" Locals.

As this is a portion of our county seldom heard of I will send you a few items.

—As fine a lot of fat cattle are now grazing on Rich Mountain as can be found in any Co. in the State. This is given us to be the finest grass portion of the Co., and your correspondent has seen haystacks cut and put up right out of the pasture where over a hundred fat cattle were running.

Mr. J. E. Brock, of New Market, Va., who spent three weeks at the home of Mr. Waybright for his health has returned home.

Messrs David Gragg and Lee Simmons of Highland Co., Va., are visiting at this place.

A couple of things badly needed in Rich Mtn are a new school house and a preacher.

Mrs. Anne Turner of Green Co. is visiting her brother Mr. Benj. F. Turner.

A. M. Hedrick of Washington City was around in the Mtns about Franklin looking after the interest of the [illegible] and [illegible] to this Mtn last week [illegible] no trace of them here.

It certainly makes the hunters [illegible] to see the deer [illegible] over these hills and [illegible] sounds.

ed.

The far famed Sinks are just four miles below here in the edge of Randolph Co., Gander Creek sinks beneath the Mt'ns and runs under it for ¾ of a mile cutting numerous beautiful chambers, figures almost equalling as I am told, the Luray caverns of Va., your correspondent has visited the lower mouth and hopes to go through them soon.

Rich Mtn., can boast of a girl 13 years old Miss Ina Waybright who is six feet tall.

County Court Proceedings.

The following are the proceedings of a special term of the County Court held Sept. 10th:

J. C. Price, S. B. Hannah, and A. K. Dysard are appointed commissioners to let to contract the unfinished part of the Stony Bottom and Dillington's creek road, known as the Snake Dam road.

The contract for building the abutments and wing walls for the bridge across Knapp's creek near Huntersville was awarded to John Gragg at $0.25 per cubic yard according to specifications heretofore published, except that each end of the abutments are to be connected by dowell pins 4 in long; and the wing walls at $6.00 per cubic yard according to said specifications. All work to be done under the supervision of Geo. P. Moore, Amos Barlow and H. S. Rucker, and to be paid for as the work progresses at the rate of 50 per ct. of its value and the Court approves the bond of the said Gragg given for the faithful performance of his contract. The work to be completed on or before the 20th day of December 1890.

Ordered that upon request in writing of H. S. Rucker Com'r on the newly established road through the lands of Wm. Curry and others the Clerk issued a draft on the Sheriff in favor of Frank Thompson for $200 being part of contract price for making said road as contractor.

$100 REWARD $100.

The readers of THE TIMES will be pleased to learn that there is at least one dreaded disease that science has been able to cure in all its stages, and that is catarrh. Hall's Catarrh Cure is the only positive cure now known to the medical fraternity. Catarrh being a constitutional disease, requires a constitutional treatment. Halls Catarrh Cure is taken internally, acting directly upon the blood and mucous surfaces of the system, thereby destroying the foundation of the disease, and giving the patient strength by building up the constitution and assisting nature in doing its work. The proprietors have so much faith in its curative powers that they offer One Hundred Dollars for any case that it fails to cure. Send for list of testimonials.

Address, F. J. CHENEY & CO., Toledo O.

Sold by Druggists, 75c.

—The Baldwins District Fair, to be held in Staunton on September 30th and October 1st 2d and 3d, will be one of the finest exhibitions ever held [illegible]. The premium list is a very liberal one. The amusements will be of a rare order, and the aquatic exhibitions on the lake under the direction of the incomparable Paul Boynton, the famous swimmer, are expected to draw an immense concourse of witnesses.

Farmer: "How much be them pants anyway?" Clerk: "Three seventy five." "Yes, same old price. Taters worth half what they useter be, corn 'way down to nothing, oats down, butter down, eggs down—I'd like to know, by gol! what keeps pants way up, hah." "Suspenders, perhaps."

If Mr. Farmer will write down to [illegible] at Washington, D. C., perhaps they can tell him of other things besides suspenders that keeps pants up.—Kanawha Democrat.

A fire in [illegible] Sunday morning [illegible] Fredericksburg [illegible] store and the postoffice, causing a total loss of about $[illegible]. The fire was caused by the explosion of a lamp in [illegible].

A Lumber Camp.

Though lumbering has been the chief industry of our county for a number of years, it was our privilege for the first time last Sunday to visit one of their camps, which was one of the camps of the St. Lawrence Co., situate about two miles from this place.

Even now as we sit in our office, we can hear the sound of the woodman's axe and the roar of falling pine trees on the distant hills.

We were entertained and shown around by the young chief foreman J. C. Kinports, Esq., who is a son of Mr. Porter Kinports of Grant, Pa., a member of the Company. Clide, as he is called by his intimate friends is a young man of rare business qualities and who thoroughly understands his business, and one among many who would resume the responsibilities of as large a business as this.

First, we were shown the stables which would make the average farmer of the age envy, and their horses though handled roughly are well taken care of are the finest.

After being shown around for some time, and admiring the wonderful conveniences and luxuries of the woodsmen, the dinner bell rang, and we were ushered into a large dining room, where everything is as bright as a new pin, and partook of a dinner, served by Mr. O. Guay, the French cook, only equaled by an occasion of the "stepping off" of the daughter of our farmers who are far famed for having good things to eat, and as we sat there filling our lank inner man, with the good things that surrounded us, and which was for the first time in a good while, as being an editor, we were so pleased that we almost forgot the light table and dull monotony that awaited us at home, but it was wasn't long before the terrible truth dawned upon which can only be felt by one of the profession. How grand it would be to bid adieu to shears, paste pot and pencil and take up our abode in the lumber woods, but for the wo-work.

After dinner we talked awhile with Mr. Wm. McDowe, who a short time ago had the misfortune of getting his leg broken, and then with no little reluctance, at, not leaving the camp, specially, but but the the good things to eat.

WEST VIRGINIA UNIVERSITY.

The Fall term will begin on the second Wednesday (10th) of September. New students will report for examination on Tuesday the 9th. Courses of study are offered in the Arts, Sciences, Engineering and Law. Also preparatory department. For information and catalogues apply to E. M. Turner, Morgantown, W. Va.

SALE OF SCHOOL LANDS.

Pursuant to a decree of the Circuit Court of Pocahontas County, rendered at the June term for 1890, the undersigned Commissioner of School Lands, will sell at public auction, in front of the Court House Door of said County, on the 20th day of October, 1890 for cash, the following tracts of land to-wit:

1st. 1056 acres, part of an undivided tract of 2112 acres lying on the head waters of Thorney Creek, forfeited in the name of Reuben Buzzard.

2nd. 432 acres, part of said undivided tract of 2112 acres, forfeited in the name of James Waudless.

3rd. 10[illegible] acres, part of said undivided tract of 2112 acres, forfeited in the name of Wm. B. Grimes.

4. A tract of 99 acres lying on the waters of Stillingtons Creek, adjoining the lands of Harvey Nottingham and others forfeited in the name of Rachel C. McNeel.

5th. A tract of 21 acres of waste and unappropriated land lying on the Lime Stone Run, adjoining the lands of A. J. Sharp and others.

6th. A tract of 3 acres of waste and unappropriated land lying on the waters of Knapp's creek, adjoining the lands of F. H. Loury and others.

The 99 acre tract and the 3 acre tract have on them fine banks of Iron Ore.

JOHN W. WARWICK,
Com'r of School Lands.

Sept 19-4t. Printer's fee [illegible]

ORDER OF PUBLICATION.

At rules held for the Circuit Court of Pocahontas County, in the State of West Virginia, at the Clerks office of said Court on the First Monday in September, 1890,

James L. Sheets,

vs.

Wm. N. Moore.

The object of this suit is to enforce a vendor's lien retained in a certain deed executed by Andrew C. Wooddell and others to Wm. N. Moore, and to subject the land therein conveyed to the payment of the unpaid purchase money due on said land. And it appearing, by affidavit, that diligence has been used on behalf of the plaintiff to ascertain in what County the defendant, Wm. N. Moore is, without effect, it is ordered that he appear here within one month from the date of the first publication hereof and do what is necessary to protect his interests in said suit.

Teste:
JOHN J. BEARD, Clerk.

C. F. MOORE, sol.
Sept. 4 4t. Printer's fee $7.[illegible]

COMMISSIONER'S SALE OF LAND.

In pursuance of a decree of the Circuit Court of Pocahontas County rendered on the 16th day of June, 1890, in the chancery cause of Mary E. Piles, plaintiff, against George C. McGlaughlin, defendant, the undersigned special commissioner in said suit will proceed on MONDAY, OCTOBER 20th, 1890.

to sell to the highest bidder at public auction in front of the Court House of said County a tract of about south of and near the village of Green Bank, adjoining lands of Geo. Kerr and others and the same land conveyed to George C. McGlaughlin by deed from J. C. Arbogast and wife recorded at page 5 of deed Book, No. 14 in the Clerk's office of the County County Court of said County.

175 ACRES OF LAND

TERMS: Cash in hand sufficient to pay costs of suit and expenses of sale, and the residue of the purchase money to be paid in two equal installments at 6 and 12 months respectively from day of sale with interest thereon from said day, the purchaser to execute bonds with good personal security for deferred payments and the title to be retained as ultimate security for said payments.

H. S. RUCKER, Sp'l Com'r.

Bond and security has been given by the above named commissioner as required by law.

JOHN J. BEARD, Cl'k Cir. Ct.

Sept. 4-4t. Printer's fee $9.20

ADMINISTRATOR'S SALE.

Notice is hereby given that, pursuant to the will of Sallie Gum, dec'd, I will proceed to sell at public auction to the highest bidder, on the premises of the said Sallie Gum, dec'd on the following personal and real estate, viz:

SATURDAY, SEPTEMBER 27th, 1890,

1 Horse, 1 Cow, 3 Stacks of Hay, about [illegible] Bushels Buckwheat and a small quantity of oats.

Also all the lands of which the said Sallie Gum died seized and possessed with, all the appurtenances thereto belonging.

TERMS OF SALE:

All purchases of personal property will be required to pay cash all sums of $5.00 or less; and for amounts above $5.00 will be allowed six months time purchaser giving bond with approved personal security, with interest from date. The purchaser of the real estate will be required to pay 1/3 cash and for the residue will be allowed 6, 12 and 18 months credit, upon executing bonds with approved personal security, with interest from date. A lien will also be retained on the land as ultimate security.

M. J. McNeel, Adm'r [illegible]

Pocahontas Times.

JOHN E. CAMPBELL,
EDITOR AND PROPRIETOR.

Entered at the Post-office at Huntersville, W. Va., as second class matter.

Huntersville, W. Va.

September 18, 1890.

Continued from 1st page.

he was stabbed, and the stub of a cigar found in the cuspador in Jordan's office being analized, is found to contain a most subtle poison.

"The stranger who visited Jordan on that fatal night passed cigars, and one of them Jack Ferguson took, but did not smoke. That, too, has been analized. It contained the same subtle drug. It is evident that a double murder was contemplated."

Profound silence reigned while I made this announcement.

The face of Mr. Price Brindle was very white. At lenghth he said,—

"What is this to me? I can't see that this helps Jack Ferguson."

"I'll tell you," I cried, turning upon him with a piercing look. "The plot to remove both Mr. Jordan and Jack Ferguson has failed. The poisoned cigar that the former smoked came out of this morocco case. The cigars remaining here contain the same deadly drug, and you acknowledge the case and cigars to be yours, Price Brindle!"

White as a ghost, the witness gasped,—

"The case is mine, but not the cigars. It is a plot to ruin me."

"Oh, no, it is not," I said, suddenly producing a huge false beard. "This you wore on the night of the murder, Mr. Brindle. The evidence is complete. You are the murderer!"

His white lips parted, but no sound came forth. With a gasp he slipped from his chair in a dead faint.

Price Brindle confessed the crime soon after. His motive was twofold. His partner's daughter had refused him, and married Jack Ferguson, and he (Brindle) was an embezzler, having robbed the firm for some time, and fearing detection, he planned the murder. Failing to kill Ferguson, an afterthought caused him to attempt fixing the crime on the young man. Brindle died in prison soon after the confession.

Grandma's Schoolmistress.

"No, grandma," said Jennie, decidedly, "you are quite wrong. 'Uncle Tom's Cabin' was not published first in book form; it appeared as a serial."

"Well, well," said grandma, with a sigh, "perhaps you are right. I make a good many blunders now-a-days."

In half an hour, however, she had recovered her spirits, and began to tell a visitor how she saw General Washington in Portsmouth after the revolutionary war.

"Why, grandma," interrupted Jennie. "It wasn't Washington. It was Lafayette. You always told me so."

"Perhaps it was," said grandma, "perhaps it was. My memory is going fast. I begin to notice it as I never did before."

Then mamma, who had all the [illegible] been [illegible] Jennie [illegible] signals with eyes and brows, asked her to go to her room for a moment. There she followed her, and gave her, as Jennie afterward said, "such a talking to," as she had never received in her life, not even when she painted a monogram on the baby's arm.

"You seem to have taken upon yourself the office of grandma's schoolmistress," she concluded. "You have been both impertinent and cruel."

"Perhaps I ought to have said, 'I beg your pardon,' when I corrected her," said Jennie, between her sobs, "but I was in a hurry to speak."

"You should not have spoken at all. You are very kind to grandma. You pick up her stitches, thread her needle, and do her errands patiently, but still it is through you that she is every day reminded of her age and weakness. You correct her when she makes a mistake, you express your surprise when she forgets."

"But I can't bear to have her make mistakes before people!" cried poor Jennie.

"The record of a long and honorable life is not to be injured by a few lapses of memory at its close," said her mother, still indignantly. "Little daughter, learn to be humble as well as kindly in your treatment of the old."

Jennie dearly loved her grandmother, and she was broken hearted at the thought of having failed in tenderness towards her. The lesson did not need to be repeated and one day grandma said to her lovingly, "My little girl, you grow pleasanter to live with every day. You are like the little girls I used to know when I was a child, loving yet respectful and childlike."

He sat and looked at the busy editor for about 15 minutes steadily. Fnally he yawned sleepily and remarked:

"There are some things in this world that go without saying."

"I know it," snapped the editor, "but there are too darned many things that say a good deal without going."

I beg pardon for intruding upon your time," said the polite, smiling man with the small valise in his hand. "A pedlar is a nuisance. I know it as well as anybody. But there are various kinds of pedlars, and all of us must live. It isn't our fault that we are here. Those of us that earn our living honestly have to share the odium that belongs to the calling. I'm not complaining of this, gentlemen. It is a part of the curse' that came in the original package to Adam. If there is any one of you that has a spot of grease on his coat, vest or pants—trousers he added, opening his valise and taking out a small cake of soap and a sponge' "I shall be happy to remove it without charging a cent and without asking anybody to buy my soap. It's my way of advertising. My dear sir, allow me. There is a little spot on your vest."

He rubbed the spot with a piece of soap, deftly applied the sponge, made a few passes over the cloth with a piece of cotton and said:

"There sir, that spot is gone. You will never see it again. And probably you will never see me again, either, as I travel but once through a community. My goods will be found at the stores. I take it for granted that nobody wishes to buy a cake of my soap. I wish you good morning, gentlemen."

After the polite, smiling visitor had gone away the gentleman whose garment had been operated upon upon had occasion to consult his watch.

I wasn't there.

It had disappeared with the spot

Strike with a hand of fire, oh wierd musician, thy harp strung with Apollo's golden hair! Fill the vast cathedral aisles with symphonies sweet and dim, deft touches of the organ's keys! Blow, bugle blow, until thy silvery notes do touch and kiss the moonlit waves that charm the lovers wandering over hills vine clad! Yet know ye that your music is all discord compared to the laugh of a child—that laugh that marks the boundary line between beasts and men, and every wave of which doth drown some fretful fiend of care. O, Laughter, rose-lipped daughter of joy, there are enough dimples in thy cheeks to catch and hold and glorify all the tears of grief.

SUBSCRIBE

FOR THE

POCAHONTAS TIMES,

Every man in the County should take it, and patronize home industry. It sustains your rights, and works for the advancement of your county, which no city paper will do. It gives you the news from all parts of the county, which you could not get otherwise. It furnishes matters of interest to the Merchant, Farmer and Mechanic. It keeps you posted and gives you information, on all general news, and its sections and Miscellany are fit for all ages.

TERM OF SUBSCRITIO N,

One year in advance	$1.00
If not paid within 6 months	1.25
And at the end of the year	1.50

AND IF YOU NEED

Letter Heads, Note Heads, Bill Heads, Envelopes, Drug Envelopes, Tags, Business Cards, Official Blanks, Blank Bonds, Posters, Briefs for the Court of Appeals etc.

GET THEM AT "THE TIMES."

JOB OFFICE,

POCAHONTAS TIMES.

JOHN E. CAMPBELL, Editor and Proprietor. | TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION: $1.00 Per Year, in Advance.

VOL. VIII. | HUNTERSVILLE, W. VA., THURSDAY, OCTOBER 2, 1890. | NO. 10.

The Cincinnati Commercial Gazette has come to the conclusion that hypnotism is nothing more or less than the old mesmeric craze revived.

The Drovers' Journal figures that the daily mileage made in cities of the United States by cars supplied with electric motors is now more than one hundred thousand miles and is growing rapidly.

Professor Simonson says that there are now from 1,000,000 to 5,000,000 students of Volapuk in the world, of whom 1,000,000 are competent to use it; 1200 business houses where it is employed, and 1200 Volapuk text and reading books, as well as thirty well regulated Volapuk journals.

The Chicago Herald says that "Florida and California are each making a strong bid for winter visitors by sending out cars filled with tropical and semi-tropical fruits attractively displayed. There is a car of this kind known as 'Florida on Wheels,' which made the tour of the Eastern resorts and did good missionary work during the summer months. A train of cars known as 'California on Wheels' and containing a superb exhibit of fruits, is now en route for the East for the purpose of booming Southern California as a winter resort, and will undoubtedly influence many people to cross the continent the coming winter."

One of the curious facts which workingmen and mechanics detailed to undertake work in different towns notice, remarks the Chicago News, is that the small country places are frequently ahead of the metropolitan cities in the way of scientific improvements. Many a rural village of 5000 or 10,000 inhabitants quickly avails itself of the opportunities which the city inventors and scientists have been discovering for years. Thus it happens that little towns of a few thousand population which have grown up within the last four or five years have electric lights, electric railways, cable lines, and water works more perfect than the big cities have.

Several California papers recently contained a matrimonial appeal, signed by "a young and beautiful Hungarian maiden, an orphan without means, but well educated and with domestic tendencies, who seeks a companion for life." The answers were to be directed to Paris, where the young lady was employed as a nurse. Incredible as it may appear a dozen offers from marriageable young 'Friscoians came over the sea. A lively correspondence ensued, and finally each of the wooers received an exquisite photograph and an affirmative answer from the beautiful Hungarian maiden, with a request that the lover should send the necessary cash for a transatlantic ticket. The swindler or the syndicate of swindlers netted 6000 marks in all by the trick. And now the prospective bridegrooms, among whom are some well-known names, dare not whisper their misery.

The experiments in the cultivation of plants under the electrical light, recently made by the botanical department of the Cornell University, at Ithaca, N. Y., have given some curious and interesting results, and results which are in some respects confirmatory of somewhat similar experiments not long ago reported from Russia. The first and most noticeable effect of the treatment is an enormously increased rate of growth. The plants which are lighted seem to work day and night and to "run very much to leaf." Vegetables shoot up very quickly, and peas in a few weeks are two or three times as tall as those planted at the same time in daylight. In the case of seeds and fruit of any kind, however, the results are entirely different, and the plants which had grown slowly and by daylight were ahead. It was observed that in every instance the reproductive powers of the plant were strongly affected, being sacrificed to mere foliage and rapidity of increase in general size.

TO A LITTLE BROOK.

You're not so big as you were then,
  O little brook!
I mean those hazy summers when
We boys roamed, full of awe, beside
Your noisy, foaming, tumbling tide,
And wondered if it could be true
That there were bigger brooks than you,
  O mighty brook, O peerless brook!

All up and down this reedy place
  Where lives the brook,
We angled for the furtive dace;
The redwing-blackbird did his best
To make us think he'd built his nest
Hard by the stream, when like as not,
He'd hung it in a secret spot
  Far from the brook, the telltale brook!

And often, when the noontime heat
  Parboiled the brook,
We'd draw our boots and swing our feet
Upon the waves that, in their play,
Would tag us last and scoot away;
And mother never seemed to know
What burnt our legs and chapped them so—
  But father guessed it was the brook!

And Fido—how he loved to swim
  The cooling brook,
Whenever we'd throw sticks for him;
And how we boys did wish that we Could only swim as good as he—
Why, Daniel Webster never was Recipient of such great applause
  As Fido, battling with the brook!

But once—O most unhappy day
  For you, my brook—
Come Cousin Sam along that way;
And, having lived a spell out west,
Where creeks aren't counted much at best,
He neither waded, swam, nor leap,
But, with superb indifference, stept
  Across that brook—our mighty brook!

Why do you scamper on your way,
  You little brook,
When I come back to you to-day?
Is it because you flee the grass
That lunges at you as you pass,
As if, in playful mood, it would
Tickle the truant if it could,
  You chuckling brook—you saucy brook!

Or is it you no longer know—
  You fickle brook—
The honest friend of long ago?
The years that kept us twain apart
Have changed my face but not my heart—
Many and sore those years, and yet
I fancied you could not forget
  That happy time, my playmate brook!

Oh, sing again in artless glee,
  My little brook,
The song you used to sing for me—
The song that's lingered in my ears
So soothingly these many years;
My grief shall be forgotten when
I hear your tranquil voice again
  And that sweet song, dear little brook!

—Eugene Field, in Chicago News.

A LAST CHORD.

Madame Langelot, a comely, smiling woman of thirty-six, was humming merrily as she went to and fro in her dining-room, and giving the last glance, the careful housewife's glance, to the family table. Whatever the season might be, there was always a bunch of flowers to enliven the board and testify to the delicate touch of woman.

Suddenly Madame Langelot stopped, as she recognized her husband's step, and he had hardly entered the room when she exclaimed;

"What is the matter! You look upset."

"I have reason to be, darling," he replied, "when a man hears at the same moment of the failure and the death of his only brother——"

"You brother, oh, my poor dear!" cried Madame.

"His marriage, as you know, was an unfortunate one," continued the husband, "he was an artist in heart and soul, and forgot everything in his love for an Italian lady, who had a madonna-like face and wonderful musical talent. Her dark eyes bewitched him, and in spite of my entreaties, and our father's opposition, he married her. He was utterly incapable of managing his business, and was made reckless by the death of his adored wife. Yesterday, in despair, he took his own life, and on me devolves the task of settling his affairs in an honorable manner. I must do this dear, for he was a Langelot."

"Of course," was the reply, "it is your duty."

"There is something else," said Monsieur Langelot slowly, and his wife, startled by his hesitation, exclaimed anxiously:

"What do you mean?"

"My brother has left a son. he is twelve years old, but delicate and deformed, and will never be able to provide for himself."

"And you think it is our duty to adopt him?"

"My dear——"

"You are perfectly right," cried the young woman, kissing her husband fondly, "how good you are, dear! Bring the poor boy home, and he shall be our Clairette's elder brother."

And thus the orphan's fate was settled by these two simple loving souls.

Monsieur and Madame Langelot, who had been married twelve years, idolized their only child. Clairette was three years old, a frail, delicate little creature, highly nervous, treated like a queen, and somewhat despotic, as spoiled children usually are.

In a few days Lucien Langelot arrived at his uncle's home. He was painfully deformed, pale and delicate, and of his mother's radiant beauty had inherited nothing except the large dark eyes, which illumined his thin face with their brilliant flashes. Close against his breast he pressed a violin, his dearest treasure.

At sight of this stranger the little Clairette began to cry and sob convulsively. Her cousin looked timidly at the fair-haired and gaily dressed little creature for a minute, then raising his instrument, said softly,

"Listen, the violin will sing to you—do not cry."

And beneath his young fingers the artist's bow moved wondrously, the sound of a gay yet tender air burst forth, and the improvisation like a caress suddenly soothed the child's fears, and she was silent.

"More, more! Sing again, pretty music!" cried Clairette when the player stopped, and she clapped her little hands in glee.

So the wonderful violin played on, seeming to speak words of enchantment, and showing plainly what the poor hunchback had received as his maternal inheritance. From that day a tender affection united the two children, and the years passed on.

Lucien has become a man, and is associated with his uncle in business. He is a most valuable assistant, being gifted with extraordinary intelligence. He has not neglected his musical talent, and has had the best instruction.

"Do you know, my boy," said his uncle, "that you will some day be a great composer, our pride and glory?"

"My only glory," replied Lucien, softly, "is in knowing that Clairette is pleased with me."

He speaks the truth, poor fellow; his whole happiness in life depends upon his cousin's smile.

She too, the petted sensitive child, is now grown up, and has become a lovely woman. She loves her cousin with frank sincere affection, and prefers to all other music the air he played for her when first they met, so that in the family the melody is always called "Clairette's Song." It is a composition worthy of a master-musician, and since drying the child's tears, has become the souvenir of her earliest joys.

What happened next was inevitable. One day Lucien acknowledged to himself that he loved Clairette, and called himself a fool for daring to raise his eyes to the daughter of his benefactor. True, she was his cousin, but how could he, the poor hunch-back, hope to marry the beautiful blooming girl? He concealed his grief within his heart, and the violin, his only confidant, wept and sobbed for his hopeless love.

Claire Langelot, a gentle, affectionate girl, treated Lucien as her dearest friend and counselor, confiding to him her inmost thoughts. One day she artlessly told him of her love for Raoul Darbos, and then in a sudden burst of happiness, exclaimed:

"Here, Lucien, take your violin and play Clairette's Song for me!"

Ah, what bitter irony that was! The instrument was forced to sing her happy love, under his martyred fingers!

A little later, Raoul and Claire were married. Lucien played the wedding march. It was his own composition, and all through the music a mystic strain was interwoven by the master's skill, and filled the vaulted edifice with its tender melody.

The bride started when she recognized her favorite air.

"Poor dear cousin," she thought, "it is all for me that he is playing."

At the wedding breakfast they awaited the musician, impatient to congratulate him on his new composition, but he did not appear.

"An artist's caprice," said Uncle Langelot. "I'll wager that he is busy writing out his latest improvisation."

Claire was grieved at Lucien's absence, but that evening she and her husband set out for Fontainebleau, which was the first stopping place of their wedding tour.

On arriving at the hotel near the grand old forest, the young bride sat looking out of the window to enjoy the view and the sound of the [illegible] trees.

Night fell, calm and quiet, the trees were rustled by the caresses of the breeze, a sweet perfume came from the forest, and the only sound was a soft indefinable murmur that seemed like the breathing of nature.

Claire turned to Raoul, saying:

"Do you know, I am anxious about Lucien. He may be ill. I did not see him, even to say good-bye."

Raoul clasped her in his arms as he replied with love's jealousy:

"Forget him and every one, my wife, all your thoughts now belong to me," and beneath the blue sky where the golden stars were sparkling, she forgot all else in the embrace of him to whom she had given her heart.

Suddenly there arose on the still night air a soft strain of music that sounded like a sigh, a lamentation, and Claire, roused from her ecstacy of love exclaimed:

"Hark! That is Clairette's Song. Dear Lucien! I know that he has come to celebrate my happiness, to play for me on my wedding-night. But, ah, how sad the music sounds."

"You are dreaming my love," said Raoul, as he closed the window, "I did not hear any music."

She listened again, but the silence was unbroken and once more she forgot everything but her love.

At dawn the next day, in a pathway near the hotel there was found lying across his broken violin, the dead body of Lucien Langelot. The brief lament of unspoken hopeless love had floated up for a moment to the young bride's ear, but the last chord from Lucien's violin had awakened only the birds of the forest.—The Epoch.

Why the Dayaks Hunt Heads.

Many Dayak tribes of Australia are still addicted to head-hunting, a practice which has made their name notorious, and which but lately threatened the destruction of the whole race. It is essentially a religious practice—so much so that no important act in their lives seems sanctioned unless accompanied by the offering of one or more heads. The child is born under adverse influences unless the father has presented a head or two to the mother before its birth. The young man can not become a man and arm himself with the mandau, or war-club, until he has beheaded at least one victim. The wooer is rejected by the maiden of his choice unless he can produce one head to adorn their new house. The chief fails to secure recognition until he can exhibit to his subjects a head secured by his own hand. No dying person can enter the kingdom beyond the grave with honor unless he is accompanied by one or more headless companions. Every rajah owes to his rank a tribute of a numerous escort after death. —Popular Science Monthly.

An Electrical Riding School.

It is said that an electrical riding school is shortly to be equipped in Paris. This intention is doubtless attributable to the success which attended the opening of the electrical riding school in Nice last year. Here, it will be remembered, wooden horses were used, and propelled round the ring by the power of electric motors. There was a series of rings, on which an equal start was made, but the relative speed of the horses depended on the radii of the respective rings, those inside, of smaller circumference, being patronized by the steady-going and older individuals, while the delights of rapid locomotion were secured to the riders on the outer circles. At the same time the rider could reduce the speed or stop instantly by means of a controling arrangement. This refinement of the primitive merry-go-round created quite a furore in Nice, and it seems not improbable that before long it will find its way to this country.—Times-Democrat.

The Broom-Corn District.

Coles and Douglas Counties, in Illinois, produce half of the broom-corn grown in the United States. The soil of these counties, which is strong, quick, and rich, is well adapted for the culture of the brush. Fifty years ago the territory embraced by the two counties was a great swamp, full of large ponds and was called "sockum" land. Just what "sockum" means in this connection nobody seems to know. In later years the swamps and ponds were drained by means of large open ditches and miles of drain tile. This drainage left an almost inexhaustible soil. Broom-corn is supposed to exhaust soil more than any vegetable that grows in that climate, but there is a field near Rushton, in Coles County, owned by I. W. Sain, that this season produced its forty-sixth consecutive crop of broom-corn.—Chicago News.

"KNEE DEEP! KNEE DEEP!"

"Knee deep! knee deep!" I am a child again!
I hear the cowbells tinkling down the lane,
  The plaintive whippoorwills, the distant call
  Of quails beyond the hill where nighthawks fall
From lambent skies to fields of golden grain.
I hear the milkmaid's song, the clanking chain
Of plowman homeward bound, the lumbering wain,
And, down the darkling vale 'mid rushes tall,
  "Knee deep! knee deep!"

We're all at home—John, Wesley, little Jane—
Dead long ago!—and the boy-soldiers twain
  That sleep by purling stream or old stone wall
  In some far-off and unknown grave—we're all
At home with mother!—heartache gone and pain!
  "Knee deep! knee deep!"

—Henry J. Stockard, in the Cosmopolitan.

HUMOR OF THE DAY.

Goes into tea without being asked—Milk.

Society leaders are in the swim everywhere but at the seaside.—Puck.

Arbitration gives two parties the halves of a pretty stale and bitter loaf.—Puck.

Ladies' change—that found in the pockets of husbands at night.—Boston Courier.

It may be said of a man who invests in a quarry that his lot is a hard one.—Yonkers Gazette.

Some men stand on principles, others trample on them. The latter, naturally, make the most noise.

Silver is sold in France by the "kilo." In this country it comes in quartz.—Commercial Advertiser.

A man must necessarily have a sharp eye in order to cast a piercing glance.—Binghamton Republican.

"A good lathering is the first requisite of a good shave." "It is also the best thing for a bad shaver."—New York Herald.

"Do you dictate to your typewriter?" "I used to do so, but I married her and now she dictates to me."—Boston Courier.

There is reason in all things. Few never call their wives "old hens" until they became broilers.—Commercial Advertiser.

Dedhed—"Say, doctor, what kind of medicine will cure my cold?" Doctor Smart—"The kind I prescribe."—Yankee Blade.

An uptown man recently left his family and has not since been found, although his nose turned up.—Philadelphia Times.

If money could be borrowed as easily as trouble, the world would be full of round-shouldered people.—Indianapolis Ram's Horn.

Waggin' Their Tongues.—"Did you ever know that a wagon spoke?" "Yes, I heard one complain about being tired." The Bostonian.

"You'll be a President, perhaps,
  If well you run life's race."
"I'd rather be," the boy replied,
  "The man who plays first base."
—Washington Post.

"The new assessor is a very honest man." "You don't say so! What has he been doing?" "Why, he told me he often taxed his own memory."—West Shore.

"Judge," said the prisoner, who had robbed an art store, in a pleading tone, "there ain't any law to prevent a man's taking photographs, is there?"—Chicago Tribune.

Brown—"Hello, Smith, have you change for a V?" Smith—"Yes; here you are." Brown—"Thanks. I'll bring the five-dollar bill next week."—Detroit Free Press.

Groom—"A ring around the moon is the sign of rain." Bride (sweetly)—"And a ring around a woman's finger is the sign of——" Groom (sadly)—"Reign."—Jewelers' Weekly.

Miss Amy—"Now I'll sing you 'Only a Lock of Her Hair.'" Young Dolley (after she has made several false starts)—"You don't seem to have the right key for that lock."—Lippincott's.

Susan (reciting)—"Half a league, half a league, half a league onward—" Father—"There, Susan, that'll do. We don't want any of that baseball nonsense in this house."—Boston Transcript.

If progress, now so fresh and fleet,
  Keeps on, it's just as like as not
We'll take our baths, and shave, and eat
  By putting nickles in the slot.
—Washington Post.

Pocahontas Times.

JOHN E. CAMPBELL,
EDITOR AND PROPRIETOR.

Entered at the Post-office at Huntersville, W. Va., as second class matter.

ADVERTISING RATES.

	1 m.	3 m.	6 m.	1 yr.
One inch	$1 00	$2 00	$3 00	$5 00
Three in.	2 00	4 00	6 00	10 00
Qr. column	3 00	6 00	10 00	17 00
Half col'n	6 00	12 00	20 00	30 00
One col'n	10 00	20 00	36 00	50 00

Reading notices, not exceeding five lines, twenty-five cents for each insertion, and five cents a line for each additional line.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION.

One copy, 1 yr., $1.00 in advance; after 6 months, $1.25; after 12 months, $1.50. These terms will be strictly complied with.

Huntersville, W. Va.

October 2, 1890.

Democratic Ticket.

For Congress—Third District,
JOHN D. ALDERSON,
Of Nicholas County.

For State Senator—8th Senatorial District,
J. W. ST. CLAIR,
Of Fayette County.

For Judge Supreme Court,
DAN'L B. LUCAS,
Of Jefferson County.

For House of Delegates,
I. B. MOORE.

For County Commissioner,
G. M. KEE.

For Clerk Circuit Court,
J. H. PATTERSON.

For Clerk County Court,
S. L. BROWN.

For Sheriff
J. C. ARBOGAST.

PUBLIC SPEAKING.

Senator Chas. J. Faulkner will address the citizens of Pocahontas County on the political issues of the day at Huntersville, on Saturday Oct. 11, 1890, at 2 o'clock p. m. Let everybody come out to hear him.

The democratic party of South Carolina is splitting apart on the line of intelligence. One wing has glued the seat of its pants down to dead issues that fatten only usurpers, speculators and office holders, while the other is moving on toward schoolhouses, daylight and the encouragement of industry by caring for the industrious, including the farmers. One portion of the party is anxious only for party supremacy, while the other is seeking general prosperity.

Never let rubbish accumulate in or about a house. That for which there seems no particular use in a family should be given away if it will be of any use to others, or destroyed. Many good people refrain from offering to others things they have no further use for, not from stinginess, but from fear of wounding sensitiveness, or pride of another; thus many a generous thought is strangled at its birth. This is because that it is not generally known that the thought behind the act is what others feel, and influences the manner in which a gift is received.

Be generous in thought. Cease to pity the unfortunate, and extend the hand to help them cheerily, as, where two who are friends are walking along the same road, one stumbles and the other helps to raise him. Help is better than pity. This spirit governing the act allows benefits to be received without any sense of mortal pride having play, and without that excessive gratitude which betrays loss of self respect. Who knows, in the ups and downs of life, how soon the one receiving favors may be the one returning them!

NOTICE OF DISSOLUTION.

The partnership heretofore existing under the name of Lam & O'Farrell is desolved by mutual consent to take effect October 31st, 1890. We earnestly request all persons indebted to us to come forward and settle their accounts as we want to close our books by that time. The business heretofore conducted by Lam & O'Farrell will be carried on at the same place. The party taking charge will make his announcement through THE TIMES in due time.

Respectfully,
LAM & O'FARRELL.

WASHINGTON LETTER.

[From our regular correspondent.]

WASHINGTON, D. C., Sept. 26.—"Might makes right" has always been the motto of the republican party. But it has never so openly lived up to the brigandish theory as during this session of Congress and the action of the majority of the House this week has been more revolutionary than ever before. When, after a three weeks struggle the republicans succeeded in mustering a quorum of their own, it was of course expected that they would seat the negro contestant Langston, whose case had been pending for more than two weeks; but that they would attempt to seat negro number two, without having given any previous notice of any intention to call up the case, and without allowing one word of argument, no one outside of those in the plot had the remotest idea. Well, that is exactly what was done. The Speaker ordered the South Carolina contested case of Miller vs Elliott to be called up, and in exactly thirteen minutes the House had unseated Col. Elliott and given his seat to the negro Miller. Several republicans, notably Representative Kerr, of Iowa, tried to persuade the Speaker to allow both sides to be heard before taking a vote, but the republicans hooted them down and proceeded to consummate the legislative disgrace. Privately, republicans apologizing for their unseemly haste, say that they feared they would not hold the quorum for any length of time.

The tariff bill has been reported from conference and while in some respects it is better than it was as passed by the Senate it is on the whole, the most atrocious piece of tariff legislation ever conceived by the republican party, and that is saying a great deal. It was only by the use of the party whip that an agreement was reached in conference, and about one fourth of the republicans privately curse the bill, which they say robs their constituents, but when a vote is taken every one of these men will be found smilingly voting for the bill as reported from the conference. There has been considerable talk about the democrats in the Senate taking advantage of the rules of that body to debate the report on the tariff bill until the first week in November in order to prevent the calling of an extra session for the purpose of passing the Force bill, but no such programme has yet been agreed upon, although in certain contingencies it may be done. Anything would be excusable and allowable to beat the Force bill.

Mr. Morton, the gentleman who presides over the Senate when he has nothing more pressing to do, seems to be a little slow in keeping up with the news procession. In spite of the fact that nine-tenths of the papers in the United States, aside from the cringing republican organs, last winter printed something about the bar-room in Mr. Mortons new hotel here, then just opened, and that the W. C. T. U. in national convention assembled passed a resolution censuring him for selling liquor by the drink he this week naively announced that he had just discovered that drinks were sold in his hotel, and at the same time he announced that he had at once ordered the sale stopped. If it were not for the honorable position he holds I should be inclined to call Mr. Morton a hypocrite.

The Senate has amended and passed the bill intended to make the United States Courts a part of the machinery of the republican party, although ostensibly its object is to define and regulate the jurisdiction of the United States Courts.

There are now three negroes sitting as members of the House of Representatives, two of them in stolen seats.

The season for booming summer resorts being about over, and that for winter resorts being not yet open, Mr. Harrison and his family returned to Washington.

It has been decided by the House committee on the Judiciary to make a favorable report on the bill, which has already passed the Senate, forfeiting the property of the Mormon church.

There is a screw loose in the Raum vindication, and one of the republican members of the committee is said to be opposed to the proposed white-washing. He is being "argued" with; hence the delay in making the report.

The House has voted without a division to expunge the speech wherein Mr. Kennedy called Senator Quay a modern Judas Iscariot and a felon, from the Record, and Mr. Kennedy made another speech stating that he was glad he made the first one, and that he still stood by his original language. Mr. Quay has been so busy trying to save his nominee for the governship of Pennsylvania from defeat that he hasn't had time to give the public his opinion.

Representative Flower doesn't seem to be worrying over the adverse criticisms of his management of the democratic Congressional campaign. He says wait until the returns are in and see the results of the committee's work.

WRIT OF ELECTION.

EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENT,
CHARLESTON, W. VA.
September 24, 1890.

THE STATE OF WEST VIRGINIA:

To the Commissioners of Election in the several Counties of the State:

A VACANCY having occurred in the office of Judge of the Supreme Court of Appeals of this State, caused by the death of Hon. T. C. Green, of Jefferson county, one of the judges of said court, who was elected for the term beginning on the first day of January, 1881, and ending on the 31st day of December, 1892, you are hereby commanded, in the name of the State of West Virvinia, to cause a poll to be opened and an election to be held at the several places of voting in your respective counties, at the next general election to be held on Tuesday, the 4th day of November, 1890, for the purpose of electing a Judge of the Supreme Court of Appeals to fill the the vacancy in said office for said unexpired term.

In Witness Whereof, I, A. B. Fleming, Governor of said State have hereunto set my hand and caused the Great Seal of the said State to be affixed, at the Capitol, in the city of Charleston, this 24th day of September, in the year 1890, and of the State the twenty-eighth.

[L. S.]

By the Governor: A. B. FLEMING.
WM. A. OHLEY,
Secretary of State.

COMMISSIONER'S SALE OF LAND.

Pursuant to a decree of the Circuit Court of Pocahontas County, rendered at the June term 1890 in the cause of Samuel Judy vs. Henry C. Massey I will on Monday the 27th day of October 1890, offer for sale by public auction in front of the Court House door of Pocahontas County, that certain tract of land containing 85 acres and 70 poles of land the property of the defendant Henry C. Massey, situate on the waters of Knapp's creek adjoining the lands of M. A. Friel and others. This is a valuable tract of land and has tract of land and has on it considerable improvements, including dwelling house.

TERMS OF SALE.

Sufficient cash in hand to pay the costs of this suit and expenses of sale, and the residue in six months from the day of sale, bearing interest from that day, the purchaser to execute bond with good personal security for the deferred payment, and the title to be retained as ultimate security.

L. M. McCLINTIC, Com'r

I, John J. Beard, Clerk of the Circuit Court of Pocahontas County do certify that the Commissioner above has given bond as required by law.

JOHN J. BEARD, Cl'k.

Sept. 18-4t. Printer's fee $8.88

COMMISSIONER'S SALE OF LAND.

Pursuant to a decree of the Circuit Court of Pocahontas County, rendered at the June Term 1890 in the cause of William Gibbs vs. C. A. Yeager and others, I will on, Monday the 20th day of October, 1890, offer for sale at public auction to the highest bidder, in front of the Court House door of Pocahontas County that Certain tract of land containing 150 acres the property of the defendant C. A. Yeager lying on the East branch of Greenbrier River adjoining the lands of P. D. Yeager M. Yeager, and others, said land is fertile, well improved and has a comfortable dwelling house and outbuilding upon it.

TERMS OF SALE:

Enough cash in hand to pay the costs of this suit and expenses of sale and the residue in Six Twelve and Eighteen months from the day of sale, in Equal payments bearing interest from that day the purchaser executing bond with good personal security for the deferred payments and the title being retained as ultimate security.

L. M. McCLINTIC, Com'r

I, John J. Beard, Clerk of the Circuit Court of Pocahontas County, do certify that the Commissioner above has given bond as required by law.

JOHN J. BEARD, Cl'k.

Sept. 18-4t. Printer's fee $8.75

COMMISSIONER'S SALE OF Valuable Land in Pocahontas County.

Pursuant to a decree of the Circuit Court of Pocahontas County rendered at the June term, 1890, in the chancery cause of Geo. A. Revercomb, Special Receiver &c. vs. A. O. Bonner. We the undersigned Commissioners, will offer for sale at public auction to the highest bidder at the front door of the Court house of Pocahontas County on the 20th day of October 1890. A tract of one hundred acres of land belonging to A. O. Bonner, situated on the South East side of Middle Mountain in Pocahontas County, W. Va., near the Big Spring. This one of the most valuable tracts of land in the County and is in a high state of cultivation.

TERMS OF SALE:

Sufficient cash in hand to pay cost of suit and expense of sale and the residue in three equal payments, payable in six, twelve and eighteen months respectively the purchaser to execute bond with approved security for the deferred payments, bearing interest from day of sale, and the title to the land as ultimate security.

GEO. A. REVERCOMB,
C. P. JONES. Com'rs.

I, John J. Beard, Clerk of the Circuit Court of Pocahontas County do certify that the bond required by the decree in said cause has been duly executed.

JOHN J. BEARD, Cl'k.

Sept. 18-4 Printer's fee $9.95

COMMISSIONER'S SALE OF Valuable Hotel Property.

Pursuant to decrees of the Circuit Court of Pocahontas County entered at the October term 1889 and the June term, 1890 in the Chancery Cause of Peter Beverage and others vs. J. R. Apperson and others, and R. S. Turk, Trustee vs. Jennie B. Skiles and others, I will, as Special commissioner, appointed for the purpose sell at public auction to the highest bidder, in front of the Court House door of Pocahontas County, W. Va., on

MONDAY, OCT 20th 1890

A certain tract of land containing one acre, on which is a large and commodious dwelling house and suitable out building's: situate at Varlinton, in Pocahontas county, being the same property formerly occupied by T. M. Skiles. This is a most desirable property suitable for hotel purposes or summer resort and located in a good neighborhood convenient to churches and schools.

TERMS OF SALE.

Sufficient cash in hand to pay the costs of suit and expenses of sale: the balance in two equal installments, falling due in 9 and 18 monts from day of sale. The purchaser to execute bonds with approved personal security bearing interests from date for the deferred payments; a lien will be retained on said property as ultimate security.

L. M. McCLINTIC,
Special Com'r.

I, John J. Beard, clerk of the circuit court of Pocahontas county, certify that the above commissioner has given bond as required by law.

JOHN J. BEARD, cl'k cir. ct.

September 25-4w. Printer's fee $10.28.

Official Directory of Pocahontas County.

Judge of Circuit Court, A. N. Campbell.
Prosecuting Attorney, L. M. McClintic.
Sheriff, M. J. McNeel.
Deputy Sheriff, L. W. Herold.
Clk of Cir. & Co. Courts, J. J. Beard.
Assessor, C. O. Arbogast.
Com'rs Co. Ct. { C E. Beard. S B. Hannah. G. P. Moore.
Co. Surveyor, Geo. Baxter

THE COURTS.

Circuit Court convenes on the first Monday in April, 3rd Monday in June and 3rd Monday in October.
County Court convenes on the 1st Tuesday in January, March, October and second Tuesday in July. July is levy term.

ANNOUNCEMENTS.

To the Voters of Pocahontas County.

I announce myself an Independent candidate for House of Delegates. If it should be your pleasure on the 4th day of November next, to elect me to represent you in the next Legislature, I pledge myself to use my utmost efforts to secure such legislation as will be favorable especially to the farming and laboring class, and to represent my constituents without partisan bias.

Respectfully,
H. B. SHARP.

HOME NEWS

—The contractors for removing the bridge at this place are in town.

—Deputy sheriff L. W. Herold, of Frost, called to see us Tuesday.

—J. F. Hull, Esq., of the firm of W. C. Hull & Son, of Edray, was in the city Tuesday and colled to see us.

—The workmen on the abutments for the bridge at this place are progressing finely.

—Mr. Price McComb, and son Beckly, Esq., of this place and several parties of this vicinity are attending the Staunton fair this week.

—Mr. M. W. Beard, of Beaver creek and Miss Arnett, of Monroe County, were married a few days ago. THE TIMES extends congratulations.

—Miss Fannie Wakeman, a charming young belle, of Dunmore, has been the guest of Miss Minnie McElwee, on Knapp's creek for a few days past.

—Witherow McClintic, Esq., passed through town Tuesday with a fine lot of sheep and cattle for eastern market.

—Any person desiring to obtain wintering for cattle on first-class hay will do well to apply to Harry M. Moore, of Dunmore, who has a considerable quantity of choice feed to dispose of.

—Attorney C. F. Moore in the interest of the Adm'r, attended the sale of the real ond personal estate of Sally Gum, dec'd, which took place near Green Bank, last Saturday. E. O. Moore purchased the land at $165.00.

—The marriage license business is quite brisk at this time. That's right young men marry while you're young, for when you get old it's not always you can.

—We received a communication from Geo. S. Moore, saying it is reported that the reasion he and his wife parted was because he abused her, which he wishes to say is false.

—Wesley Brown, (col.) passed through town to day with a carload of fine three year-old cattle belonging to C. B. Moore, Esq., of this place. We understand they were on their way to Philedelphia.

—The County Alliance, will convene here at 10 o'clock on Friday, Oct. 3rd. Change of hour by order of the President.

C. B. MOORE, Sec'y.

—Evangelist S. L. Wilson of the Greenbrier Presbytery, traveling in the interest of the Home Missions, preached last evening in the Presbyterian Church the final of a series of most excellent sermons. He is a fine preacher, clear expounder and undoubtedly the right man in the right place.

—We received an invitation to attend the marriage of Miss Maggie Plunkett and Mr. J. W. Higginbotham, in Staunton, Va., Oct. 1st, which occasion we very much regret are unable to attend. We extend our congratulations to this happy couple and best wishes for their future happiness and prosperity.

—Misses Isa McCutchen, Nelia Pritchard and Mary Cackley, of Dunmore accompanied by C. A. Pritchard, Esq., passed through town Tuesday on their way to attend a select school of young ladies at Mr. John Warwick's, near Edray, taught by his daughter Miss Emma, who is a very accomplished teacher.

—THE TIMES job office is over run with job printing at this time, but hope to get caught up in a few days.

—The time has come when forberance has ceased to be a vistue, and the good citizens of Huntersville will have to take prompt and vigorous action to put a stop to the disgraceful conduct of a few boys on our streets and at our Churches. When people lose all respect for themselves and others, and misbehave at Church and on the public streets as some have been doing the last few nights, it is high time for law abiding citizens to take the matter in hand. The law affords protection and could be vigorously applied.

—Miss Mary V. Beard and Mr. Sam'l E. McNeel both of near Academy, were married in the church at that place, Tuesday. The bride is a beautiful and an accomplished lady, while the groom is one among the most worthy young men of our County. Also license were issued Tuesday to Mr. J. T. Auldridge and Miss Lena McCoy, of near same place, and M. O. W. Ruchman and Miss Ollie Sutton, of near Green Bank, were married to-day (Wednesday. We extend to these happy young couples our congratulations and best wishes for long, happy and prosperous lives.

Gillispie Budget.

We can boast of fine fall pasture fat sheep, fat cattle and plenty of rain.

Capt. George Steel and C. O. Arbogast, Esq., have their hay bailer at Mr. Charles Burner's bailing hay. Mr. Arbogast has the contract for furnishing hay and beef to the Winchester lumber camp and he is delivering 40 ton of hay, and butchers two beeves a week for the camp.

Mr. B. B. Kerr, has sold and delivered 50,000 feet of plank during the last month. Robert is a hustler.

Mr. Adam Hevener died on the 18th of Sept aged 75 yr., 2 mo. and 26 days. Mr. Hevener was a good citizen; a consistent member of the Dunkard church, and acknowledged by all to be a christian. He leaves a widow, three sons and a daughter to mourn his loss. They have our sympathy.

Jacob Sheets has finished his job of logging here, and has undertaken to log a million feet at A. J. Moore's for Samuel Cooper of Green Bank.

The Jacob H. Arbogast farm was sold last Saturday by Com'r B. M. Yeager to J. L. Arbogast for $1755.

Mr. G. B. Slaven has just completed a very snug dwelling house, which adds very much to the beauty of our village.

POCAHONTAS.

Edray Items.

John Gay, Esq., of Marlinton is now very ill, he is not expected to live, he had been apparently improving in health for a few days, but last night (the 28th) he had another stroke of parlysis and seems to be nearing the "swellings of Jordan."

Wm. Gibson and wife, and son James and grand-daughter Levie Gibson, started on a visit to Indiana, a few days ago.

Corn crop is fine in this section, all well matured. Buckwheat failed to turn out well. Fall pastures are fine.

Mr. J. C. Gay, of Elk, has received by telegraph the sad news of the death of his son Charles L. at Spokane Falls, Washington. No particulars have been received yet.

Xx.

Farmers as a class have more need for legislation, more reason to ask it, more cause to demand it than any other one class. They have been robbed, ridiculed and ignored without mercy, and that, too, by the very men and their agents whom their votes have placed in office. They have kept on voting for just what they have received.

VILLAGE CAMP.

The Village Camp and Dedication of the Southern Methodist Church at Huntersville, commencing next Wednesday evening 7 o'clock in the M. E. Church South, this place, will be conducted services called a "Village Camp."

It is really no camp but custom has so designated it; there is no camping except in regular dwelling houses; and the services will be in the church and regulated to suit the occasion. There will be preaching at least every morning and evening so long as the meeting shall last.

According to present expectations Rev C. Sydenstricker, of Hillsboro will open the services by preaching Wednesday evening 7 o'clock, followed by Rev. W. H. Ballengee Thursday morning 11 o'clock.

This meeting is for the benefit of all who can attend; and all are invited.

DEDICATION.

On Sunday morning 11 o'clock, Oct. 12th, the dedicatory sermon setting apart the new church for the worship of God will be preached by Presiding Elder S. G. Ferguson.

The men who fail to protect their own rights have no good reason to expect others to protect them in their stead. Why farmers and laboring men come to the front as men of brains, organized and united, and demand their rights, they will receive them. Unorganized, no matter how large their numbers, they are weak and futile. Organized for political action, their strength is invulnerable.

Dunmore Doings.

Nice rains and big meetings.

Mis Cora Jones, the famous organist, has arrived at Dunmore and will teach in Capt. Smith's family. She was accompanied by her brother Arby.

B. L. Nottingham, Esq., and wife are attending the Staunton fair this week.

Auctioneer Swecker, will start next week to Beverly to commence large sale of stock and real estate and from there to Pendleton Co.

Mrs. Betsy Yeager died at the home of her son at Traveler's Repose, on the 29th Sept., aged about 80 years.

Mrs. Hulda Conrad is not expected to live at this writing.

TRAVELER.

SALE OF SCHOOL LANDS.

Pursuant to a decree of the Circuit Court of Pocahontas County, rendered at the June term for 1890, the undersigned Commissioner of School Lands, will sell at public auction, in front of the Court House Door of said County, on the 20th day of October, 1890 for cash, the following tracts of land to-wit:

1st. 1656 acres, part of an undivided tract of 2112 acres lying on the head waters of Thorney Creek, forfeited in the name of Reuben Buzzard.

2nd. 428 acres, part of said undevided tract of 2112 acres, forfeited in the name of James Wanless.

3rd. 100 acres, part of said undivided tract of 2112 acres, forfeited in the name of Wm. S. Grimes.

4. A tract of 89 acres lying on the waters of Sulingtons Creek, adjoining the lands of Harvey Nottingham and others forfeited in the name of Rachel C. McNeel.

5th. A tract of 21 acres of waste and unappropriated land lying on the Lime-Stone Run, adjoining the lands of A. S. Sharp and others.

6th. A tract of 2 acres of waste and unappropriated land lying on the waters of Knapp's creek, adjoining the lands of P. H. Leury and others.

The 89 acre tract and the 2 acre tract have on them fine banks of Iron Ore.

JOHN W. WARWICK,
Com'r of School Lands.

Sept 18-4t. Printer's fee $9.74

COMMISSIONER'S SALE OF

Real Estate in Pocahontas County.

By virtue of a decree of the Circuit Court of Pendleton County, rendered on the 14th day of June, 1890, in the chancery cause therein, pending, in which John McCoy Adm'r of the estate of Pendleton McCoy dec'd is plaintiff and Pendleton McCoy's heirs et al, are defendants, I will as special Commissioner at the Court House of Pendleton County, on Thursday October 16th, 1890, proceed to sell the interest of Pendleton McCoy (being the undivided one half thereof) in a tract of land containing about 1629 acres more or less, situate in the county of Pocahontas and State of West Va., on the Rich Mountain and both sides of Greenbrier River about 8 miles north of Traveler's Repose.

This tract of land contains a large quanity of valuable timber, most of which is accessible to the Greenbrier River, the land is valuable for grazing purposes, a portion of it is improved, and has on it a comfortable dwelling house and some outbuildings.

Terms—Ten per cent of the purchase money cash in hand on day of sale, and the residue in three equal annual payments from day of sale, with interest from day of sale, the purchaser or purchasers to give bond with good personal security for the deferred payments and the title to the land sold to be retained until the further order of the Court.

M. K. BOGGS,
Spec'l Commissioner.

The Commissioner in the above named cause of P. McCoy's Adm'r vs Pendleton McCoy's heirs et al. has given bond with security as required, which has been approved by me.

J. F. BOGGS,
Clerk Circuit Court Pendleton County.

Sept 25-4t. Printer's fee $[illegible]

WEST VIRGINIA UNIVERSITY.

The Fall term will begin on the second Wednesday (10th) of September. New students will report for examination on Tuesday the 9th. Courses of study are offered in the Arts, Sciences, Engineering and Law. Also preparatory department. For information and catalogues apply to E. M. Turner, Morgantown, W. Va.

THE JOKER'S BUDGET.

JESTS AND YARNS BY FUNNY MEN OF THE PRESS.

Dubious Forebodings—She Saw too Much—The Trouble—A Brutal Retort, Etc., Etc.

ONE SIDE OF SCHOOL LIFE.

"What do you like best about school, George?"

"Not gettin' caught whisperin'."

LOST TRACK OF THE PRICE.

New Boarder—What is the price of good, fresh butter?

Landlady—Really, I couldn't tell. It's been so long since I made any inquiries about it.

A CONDENSED QUART.

"What's this?"

"That's your condensed milk."

"But I ordered a quart—that's no quart."

"Yes, it is. It's a condensed quart."—[Bazar.

THE NEXT THING.

Mrs. Larkin (reading)—Mrs. McGill of Salt Lake City found a $5 gold piece in a crop of a chicken she was dressing for dinner.

Larkin—Now look out for an English syndicate to buy up all the chickens in the country.—[New York Sun.

A BRUTAL RETORT.

"A Portuguese proverb asserts that a contented ass enjoys long life."

"You ought to be able to get good insurance rates on that principle."—[Epoch.

SHREWD FLATTERY.

Agent—That child is very much like you, Madam.

"It is not my child, Sir."

"One would know that, Madam, for it is a very homely little thing."

A SUGGESTION.

"I don't know whether to make the incision from the left hankipanki over to the booriaboolaga, three inches, or to achieve the same results by cutting from the parallax straight through to the rutabaga," said the surgeon to his assistant.

"Take the short cut and you'll get there quicker, doctor," suggested the patient.—[New York Sun.

AN INTELLIGENT ANIMAL.

Cautious Dame—Are you sure this horse is suitable for a lady to drive?

Livery Man—Yes'm. He's a very intelligent hoss, mum, and won't let you run him into anything.

A SHOCK TO HIS FAITH.

"Now, Tommy," said that young man's mother, after a heated encounter in which he had come out second best, "say your prayers right away and get into bed."

"I already said 'em, maw," answered Tommy, "as soon as I found out you meant to gimme a lickin', but it didn't work."—[Terre Haute Express.

THE STOVE WENT OUT.

Mistress (during a heated term)—Get dinner to-day on the gasoline stove, Bridget.

Bridget—Plase, mum, I did thry, but th' stove wint out.

Mistress—Try again, then.

Bridget—Yis, mum, but it's not come back yit. It wint out t'rough th' roof.—[New York Weekly.

LOVE'S TIE DOESN'T BIND THE DOG.

Oh, love's a chain of wondrous might,
We find it so on we jog;
'Twill tie up hearts exceeding tight—
But will not tie the dog.
—[Washington Post.

STRUCK BY A TRAMP.

"What do you mean?" said a gentleman, jumping aside as a tramp drew back his hand as if to strike him.

"Nothing at all, sir," replied the tramp meekly. "I wouldn't strike you for $50, sir. No, sir," he continued hurriedly; "no, sir, I wouldn't. But if you will permit me I'd like to strike you for a quarter."

NOTHIN'.

"My dorg kin lick your dorg, Tommy Botkins."

"He can't do no such thing, Patsey McIntyre; I 'ain't got no dorg."

"Well, my pa kin lick yours."

"Can't neither; 'aint got no pa."

"Well, my ma kin lick yours."

"Bet she can't; ain't got no ma."

"What hev yer got, anyhow?"

"Nothin'."

"Well, jes yer come over here, an' I'll take that out o' yer."—[Harper's Bazar.

CHARGES SUSTAINED.

Immigrant Inspector—We have information that you came over here on contract... [illegible]

A TECHNICALITY.

Susie—Papa, isn't it murder to kill a hog?

Papa (who is a lawyer)—Not exactly. Murder is assaulting with intent to kill, the other is killing with intent to salt.—[Harper's Bazar.

EASILY SPOTTED.

Whene'er you meet a man whose face
Is very sadly patched,
As though he'd fallen through a hedge
And had it fiercely scratched,
Oh, do not dare to ask of him
The source of all his woe.
He's one of those who thinks that he Can shave himself, you know.
—[Chicago Evening Post.

DUBIOUS FOREBODINGS.

Miss Columbia—Are you sure you really love me and are not marrying me on account of my wealth?

Lord Anglo—And are you sure you love me and are not marrying me on account of my title?—[San Francisco Wasp.

SHE SAW TOO MUCH.

She (after marriage)—You told me that I was your first love, but I have found a whole trunkful of letters from all sorts of girls, just bursting with tenderness.

He—I—I said you were the first I ever loved. I didn't say you were the only one who ever loved me. See!—[New York Weekly.

UNDECEIVED AT LAST.

Barber—Your head is full of dandruff, sir.

Customer—I'm glad you told me. I was under the impression that it was brains.—[Life.

THE TROUBLE.

"They say the sun never sets on the British Empire."

"Too many bayonets, I suppose."

A FAMILIAR CUSTOMER.

New Boy (at news stand)—That man has been standing there an hour reading all the latest weeklies and magazines.

News Man—Have patience. He'll buy a penny paper when he gets through.—[Good News.

VOICES OF THE NIGHT.

When night has let her curtains down,
with low and plaintive hum
Mosquitoes thirsting for our blood around our pillows come.

We watch, we wait with bated breath
while strikes the midnight chime,
And hit our cheeks a stinging slap and miss 'em every time.
—[Boston Courier.

THE MERCENARY GIRL.

Miss Gotham—What kind of scent do you prefer?

Miss Bullion—Cent per cent.—[New York Herald.

DIDN'T WANT ANY CONSCIENCE IN HIS.

"Can you recommend me to an artist who can make a picture of my hotel?"

"Yes. Try Smithkins. He's a straightforward, conscientious fellow."

"Then he won't do. The hotel is on a side street. I want a picture of it facing the square, with four-horse omnibuses and barouches passing up and down."—[New York Sun.

IMPRACTICABLE ADVICE.

Husband—Dr. Knowall says people should change their clothing with the weather.

Wife—Huh! And I haven't but ten dresses to my name, and only one waiting-maid.

PARTICULARS NEEDED.

Easterner (in far Western store)—Got any neckties?

Proprietor (mystified)—Um—er—what sort—silk, calico or hemp?—[Good News.

A POSER.

"They have one law for the poor and one for the rich."

"Oh, come! That's all cant."

"All cant, is it? Show me the time when Cornelius Vanderbilt or Mr. Astor has been sent up for vagrancy."

THE TRUE PHILOSOPHY.

"Lives of rich men all remind us
We can make our own sublime,"
And by liberal advertising
To the highest summit climb.
—[Drug, Oil and Paint Reporter.

SLEEP IN THE WOODS.

They say that pines conduce to somnolence,
And leave the weary man both spa[n]
and spick.
To put a tramp to sleep, who gives offence,
There's nothing like a solid chestnut stick.
—[Epoch.

HE LOVED PRECISION IN SPEECH.

A citizen who was stopped by a tramp on Michigan avenue the other day replied to his request by saying:

"No, sir—no, sir—not a penny! Yes..." [illegible]

IF YOU SWEAR

You May Be Interested to Know What Your Cuss Words Mean.

"You need not have looked severe because I said that I didn't care a dam," said a gruff old Senator. "That is not swearing. The expression has a very different meaning from what is popularly supposed, and was originated by the Duke of Wellington. A dam in India is the smallest piece of money known, and not to care that much means simply that one is very indifferent. That was all the phrase was intended to signify. The word 'damn' from the Latin verb meaning 'to condemn,' is a very different thing. Curiously enough it seems almost invariably to be the first word in our language acquired by foreigners, and it has always been such a favorite with the English that in the last century the French always referred to them as the 'Goddams.' A distinguished Gallic writer of that epoch said that English was a beautiful tongue and that 'Goddam' was the basis of it. 'People of that nation,' he remarked, 'have a few other words which they use in conversation, but the principal one is Goddam. You can go anywhere in England if you know that.'

"A funny misapprehension also exists as to the expression 'Go to the deuce.' People generally suppose that 'deuce' means 'devil,' whereas, as a matter of fact, it is derived directly from the Latin 'Deus'—'God.' So, when any one is telling you to go to the deuce he is unconsciously uttering the best of good wishes for your welfare.

"Speaking of Latin reminds me that among the ancient Romans it was considered the thing for each man to have some particular god to habitually swear by. Some swore by Jupiter, others by Mars, others still by Minerva, and so on. The demi-gods, like Hercules, Castor and Pollux, were also made use of in the way of oaths. Castor and Pollux were usually appealed to as the 'Twins'—'By Gemini!'—the phrase whence we get our exclamation 'By Jiminy.' It was not thought very proper for Roman ladies to swear by the male gods, but they were permitted to take the names of the Twins in vain, and also especially that of Venus. In moments of great aggravation they might go so far as to cry 'Mecastor!'—'By Castor!' The Greeks swore by the cabbage, which was the most prized of vegetables, and even to this day the same oath is often heard in Italy, while in France a lover is being intensely affectionate when he calls the lady of his heart 'petit chou,' or 'little cabbage.' 'By Jingo' is from 'Jincoa,' the Basque name for God. Barbarous tribes have been accustomed to swear by the head of their ruler. Queen Elizabeth was said to have been a very hard swearer, as ladies were very apt to be in her day. Louis IX of France forbade the use by his courtiers of such oaths as 'Pardieu,' 'Cordieu,' 'Tete-dieu,' and so on. There chanced to belong to one of the ladies of the court a small pet dog named 'Bleu.' The courtiers made up their minds to swear by the dog instead of the deity, and hence came the parbleus and corbleus of later times. Pythagorus had a favorite oath, which most people would consider not sufficiently forcible to be satisfactory. He swore by the number four, which the Greeks regarded as symbolizing perfection."

LIFE, says a Southern poet, is a battle. This fact may account for the innumerable majors and colonels in that delightful portion of our great and glorious land.

THE real giant is the man who overcomes himself.

If brevity is the sole of wit, levity is the upper.

"Miss Passéthal goes around a good deal." "Yes. She's a regular spinster."

Fly-time—When a mad dog is after you.

A great composer—Morphine.

Ice is very high in Switzerland. Some of it on Mount Blanc is over 16,000 feet above the sea level.

"Look out!" cried the pebble to the clam shell; "there's a cold wave coming."

People who say sharp things often get the reputation of being blunt.

That man is lucky who can partake of meals that his cook also relishes.

Fenderson always speaks of his son's allowance as the fresh heir fund.

The hen is not a cheerful fowl. She broods a great deal.

A title will often sell a book and always buy an American girl.

B N U 38

POCAHONTAS TIMES.

JOHN E. CAMPBELL, Editor and Proprietor. | TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION: $1.00 Per Year, in Advance.

VOL. VIII. | HUNTERSVILLE, W. VA., THURSDAY, OCTOBER 9, 1890. | NO. 11.

TO THE "OPTIMISTS."

A white-winged bark went slowly
Away o'er the sunny sea;
Within a sweet child caroled
At the wave's low melody.
'Twas but a fair-day shallop,
With pinions all fine and light;
And soon the crested billows
Awoke in their reckless might.

* * * * *

In vain the anxious gazing
From the silent, weed-flecked strand;
The hat with ribbons briny,
On the foam-decked, glistening sand,
Is all that tells the story
Why the land-clasped bay is now
Empty, where in the morning
Lay rocking the milk-white prow.

How often men, like children,
Sail over life's sunny waves,
Recking nought of the dangers
That have made a thousand graves,
Seeing only the sunshine
On the sapphire sea asleep,
Until their gilded shallops
Are gulfed in the angry deep.

Better the watchful scanning
Of an ever-changing sky;
Better the careful furling
Of sails when the storm is nigh.
—Clara J. Denton, in the Household.

ONE GOWN FOR TWO.

Mrs. Hawes had returned to her work of looking over old coats and trousers with a view to making them into rugs. She remarked to herself, and to the cat, that it "wa'n't no manner of use to waste her breath callin' when folks didn't want to hear."

She stood tearing off a strip from an old-time Sunday coat belonging to her husband, when the door opened quickly, and a girl about sixteen years old walked in with an air as if she had been running.

"Here I am, mother!" she said. "What is it you want?"

Mrs. Hawes glanced up. "'Twas Marthy Jane I was callin'," she said.

"I'm Marthy Jane. O mother, when will you know me?"

The girl threw her head back and laughed. Mrs. Hawes dropped the coat-skirt, gazed a moment, and then laughed, too, but with a vexed air.

"That comes of havin' twins to contend with," she remarked. "I thought by the way you broke into the room 'twas Jane Marthy. She's liable to come through a door 's if she had ben shot out of a gun. Where've you both ben?"

"Down t' the brook. The wind blew so 't we didn't hear you when you first called. Did you want anything particular?"

The girl tried to speak patiently, though she was longing to go back and resume making a swing between the two cider apple-trees.

"Miss Lawler's just ben here," Mrs. Hawes announced.

"Oh, has she?"

Martha Jane clasped her hands as she put this question. Her face flushed and her eyes sparkled with interest. Her mother partially ripped a sleeve before she spoke again. Then she continued:

"She's decided to have that music party—musikarl, she calls it—next Wednesday evenin'. That German, Herr Rickerstruther or somethin' can come then—sooner'n she expected. She invited both you girls. She said it would be finer'n than anything you'd ever heard. Miss Dalrymple from Boston's goin' to sing. I thought you'd like to know right off. That's why I called, though I knew you was havin' a good time at the brook."

Martha Jane turned and walked to the window. From there she asked, "You said we were both invited?"

"To be sure. I'm afraid you'll have a hard time decidin'," the mother answered, anxiously.

"There's nothing to decide," said Martha Jane. "It's Jenny's turn. I went to the church fair last month, you know."

She came from the window and stood before her mother. She flung out her hands with a quick gesture as she exclaimed, passionately, "I do wish we had more than one dress! It does seem sometimes as if I couldn't bear it!"

"You don't wish so any more'n I do," said Mrs. Hawes. "You know just how 'tis. We keep havin' doctor's bills to pay for any sick spells, 'n' now it don't look 's if we could ever afford for you each to have a new gown. I s'pose we ought to be thankful you 's 'n have one, 'n' so swap 'round 'bout goin' to places, bein' just of a size 'n' like 's two peas, anyway. I wish 'twa'n't so, but I can't help it."

She sighed as she ran her knife across the stitches.

Martha Jane was moving restlessly about the room.

"P'raps Jane Marthy'd let you have her chance," suggested Mrs. Hawes, more to see what this daughter would say than for any other reason.

"I shouldn't wonder," was the response. "She's twice as good as I am, but she wants to hear that music as much as I do. She loves it just as well. No, it's her turn. She must go, and I must stay at home and envy her. It's horrid, horrid, to be so poor!"

The girl tried to keep the tears that rushed to her eyes from falling on her cheek. She saw her mother's lips tremble.

"I'll be good about it after a little," Martha Jane said, in an unsteady voice. "Only give me time to think it over and get the upper hand of myself."

She hurried out of the room, and up the steep stairs to the chamber under the roof which she shared with her sister. She sat down on the bed, crying out in a whisper, "I'd rather hear Miss Dalrymple sing than anything else in the world!"

Then justice compelled her to add, "So would Jenny, and it's her turn."

In ten minutes she came down the stairs. She opened the door and tried to speak with brave cheerfulness:

"All right, mother! I don't mean to be a mean wretch this time."

She ran at the top of her speed down to the brook, where her sister was now trying the new swing, dreamily "letting the old cat die" in the soft, sweet air.

Mrs. Hawes left her work and watched the young figure as it bounded along. "They couldn't either of 'em be mean wretches to save their lives," she said aloud, with a kind of sorrowful pride.

But Martha Jane had not yet fully got "the upper hand of herself." When she told Jane Martha of the invitation and said, "It's your turn, you know," she felt rather bitter. It seemed to her that her sister's turn always came to the best things.

There was silence for a moment. Then Jenny said, as if speaking to herself, "Only to think of hearing Miss Dalrymple sing!"

These twin girls were gifted not only with the musical temperament, but with rarely sweet singing voices. Not to be able to improve these gifts under competent instruction had been one of the great trials of their poverty.

Martha did not speak. She felt very hard and disagreeable. She recalled the resolves just made in the little chamber, but the recollection did not do her much good. She knew she was yielding to evil. She felt her eyes burn and snap.

The two girls sat in the broad seat of the swing, which barely moved. A red-shouldered blackbird came into one of the apple-trees over them, and sang out his delicious melody. At the first note Jenny turned toward her sister. She knew instantly all that Martha was feeling. She had a moment's fight with herself; then she said:

"You shall take my turn, and I'll have the next two turns at our gown. That'll be fair, won't it?"

Martha had spoken truth when she said that Jenny was better than she was. She knew in her heart that she had often taken advantage of that self-sacrificing spirit, and she had many a "crying fit" of remorse because she had done so. Now she was tempted again, and almost ready to yield.

She shrugged up her shoulders violently. "No," she said, with emphasis, "it wouldn't be fair. You know as well as I do that this chance is worth all we may have in a year." She made a great effort, and added: "And I won't take your turn, so there!"

She kept bravely to her resolve all through the three days which followed. It was Jenny, the lucky one, who went about her work in a perturbed state of mind. She kept looking forlornly at her sister.

It was only on the morning of the Wednesday that she appeared to cheer up somewhat. She had a private consultation with her mother, who constantly interrupted her with the exclamation: "The land's sake! It'll never do! It's just a crazy idea!" but she laughed as she uttered these interjections, and finally said: "Well, p'raps there's no harm in it, but don't ask me to help you, 'n' if you get into any trouble, don't blame nobody but yourselves."

"There's no trouble to get into," responded Jane Martha, confidently. "Nobody'll ever know anything about it, anyway. I'll go up to the village now and call at Mrs. Hardy's. I know she'll be willing."

It was not half an hour later when Mrs. Hardy, who lived just across the street from the tall, verandahed house which was Miss Lawler's home, opened her front door to find one of the Hawes twins waiting.

"Come in," she said, cordially. "Of course I don't know which 'tis, but you're welcome all the same."

"It's Jane Martha," replied the girl, stepping into the cool hall.

When she was seated by the kitchen table, whereon Mrs. Hardy was rolling pie-crust, she hesitated and blushed a good deal before she really announced her errand. When she had done so, however, she went on easily enough, and laughed with the good-natured lady who listened to her.

"Mother finally told me I might," she said, "if you were entirely willing."

"Just as willing 's I can be," was the answer. "There'll be a great time at the Lawlers' to-night. Very select, too. Only musical people going. I suppose Miss Lawler thought you and Martha Jane are musical, and so you are."

When, at a quarter before eight that evening, Jane Martha timidly went up the path leading to the great Lawler house, she saw through the windows how brilliant the rooms looked, and how lovely were the flowers in them. She felt very small, but still very eager.

Miss Lawler herself, a tall lady in thin, shimmering silk, was coming through the hall when the servant let in the twin. She smiled on the shrinking child, and Jane Martha collected her wits.

The first thing the lady said was what everybody said when Martha or Jane was met alone. "Which is it?" and when the girl had told her, "I'm sorry you could not both come. I'll put you in a good place where you can see and hear."

Jane, in the pretty light-colored cashmere which belonged to her and her sister, was placed in a chair near the door where she could see the piano and every one who played or sang. She looked at the open door and breathed a sigh of relief. Then she gave herself up to enjoyment.

The German Herr, as she called him, played. She had not known that a piano could sound like that, but still she waited for the singer. She knew that the slender girl in white, who had at her throat a cluster of carnation pinks, must be the one.

Yes, it was she; and at last she sang. It was only in dreams that Jane had ever heard such tones, but she had dreamed of them often, and now it had all come true. The notes penetrated and thrilled Jane's heart until she could bear no more. She had unconsciously pressed her hands to her bosom, and as the last high notes soared in pure sweetness, Jane, still not knowing what she did, rose from her seat and leaned forward.

Miss Dalrymple, turning when her song was done, saw the figure and met the vivid glance of the eyes.

Hardly noticing the applause, she turned to her hostess and said, "That child can sing?"

Miss Lawler looked at Jane, who was now shrinking back.

"Indeed, she can. You shall hear her. She loves music so well, I think she will not even be afraid to sing now."

"Let me ask her."

The next moment Jane Martha felt a hand on her shoulder. She looked up adoringly into Miss Dalrymple's face, and that lady felt that she had never given more pleasure.

"Will you sing for me?" she asked.

"Now?" whispered Jane.

"Presently. You shall stand close by me, and I will play for you. You shall sing what you please. Are you willing?"

"Oh, yes; for you!" answered the girl.

Miss Dalrymple smiled down upon her and took a small, cold hand in both her own.

So it happened that Jane's fresh, unsullied soprano voice, full of suggestions of power, was heard at Miss Lawler's musicale.

Miss Dalrymple listened in admiration. She rose from the piano and said, so that every one could hear, "I could not do nearly as well as that when I was of the age of this child. It would be a shame if such a talent should be lost."

Then there was the bustle of movement and compliment, and "the Herr" was going to play again.

Jane went back to her seat quite dazed by what she had done, and by what Miss Dalrymple had said. No one noticed her now, and she could listen undisturbed.

It was not until nearly an hour later, after cake and coffee and ices had been handed among the guests, that Miss Dalrymple again remembered the girl. There she was in her corner. She was eating an ice. The lady walked toward her.

"I want you to sing once more," she said. "I have a plan in my mind. Perhaps I can give you a couple of hours a week for the next few months. I shall live here with my friend until the winter."

The girl clasped her hands and began to tremble. She seemed bewildered.

"What, you are not afraid this time, are you? It was really a treat to hear you before, or I would not ask you when so many are present."

"Yes, I am afraid," said the girl, "but since you want me to try, I must."

Miss Dalrymple was sorry for the child when she had placed her by the piano again. The small face was white and the lips almost stiff.

"Take heart," whispered the lady. "You did so well before. What shall it be?"

When, at last, the song was selected, Miss Dalrymple looked at her companion in surprise.

"Do you know in what key that is written?" she asked.

"Yes."

"But can you sing as low as that?"

"Oh, yes."

The other stood in amazement, with the sheet of music in her hand.

"I don't understand it," she said.

The girl gazed pleadingly at her, but was silent.

In a blind way the accompaniment was begun; but when an untutored but rich contralto voice commenced the song, there was a sudden discord among the keys of the piano, and Miss Dalrymple wheeled round and stared at the girl beside her, who trembled so that she could hardly stand.

There was entire silence among the people present.

"What does it mean?" cried Miss Dalrympe, looking about her in wonderment. "It cannot be possible that this child has two distinct singing voices, one very high and the other very low. She is a phenomenon."

Judge Lawlor, in the door-way, began to chuckle audibly. He had seen a slight figure steal out and soon return, and now he thought he understood.

The girl, at whom everybody was looking, tried twice to speak before she could say a word. Then she burst out shrilly:

"Oh, if you please I am the other twin!"

"That explains," cried the Judge, and he began to roar with laughter. All the company joined in, and the "other twin" stood in the midst, blushing, and finally laughing, too.

"You are not the one who sang first?" she was asked.

"No, ma'am. That was my sister Jenny. It was my turn with the dress——"

Martha Jane stammered, then was silent, growing more painfully red than ever.

She had waited across the way at Mrs. Hardy's for her sister to leave the party. Then the two had changed frocks so that both should have a share of the music. This had been Jenny's little plot. In the hurry of changing she had not told that she had been obliged to sing.

"No matter about the dress now," said Miss Dalrymple, with ready tact. "Let us finish the song."

The distressed young face appealed to her deeply.

Afterward, sitting by the child, she heard why the twins were obliged to "take turns at everything nice," as Martha Jane expressed it. "But," said the girl, "it did seem as if we could not both give up hearing you. It was Jenny who thought up the plan."

The next morning Miss Dalrymple returned to Boston. As she left the phaeton in which Miss Lawlor had driven her to the station, she saw two girls in plain gingham gowns and broad hats hurrying down the road. They were the twins, and they brought two lavish bunches of roses, which they shyly offered.

It was Martha Jane who spoke for both. But all she was able to say was, "Miss Dalrymple, we could not help coming to see you off—and to thank you."

The singer kissed each young face as she took the flowers. She thought she had never received homage so sweet as that she saw in their eyes.

The train was coming. "I shall remember the lessons I am to give you," she said.—Youth's Companion.

London Purple.

The powder known as London purple is called a by-product, obtained in the manufacture of aniline dyes. The crude coal oil is first distilled to produce benzole, which is then mixed with nitric acid, and forms nitro-benzole. Iron filings are then used to produce nascent hydrogen, with an excess of nitric acid in the benzole. When distilled, aniline results; to this are added arsenic acid, to give an atom of oxygen, which produces rose aniline, and quicklime, to absorb the arsenic. The residuum, obtained by filtration, is known as London purple, after having been dried, pulverized, and passed through fine sieves or bolting cloth. It is composed of lime, carbonaceous matter, and arsenic acid, the latter being the active poisonous principle, as in Paris green.—New York Sun.

London swells are gradually going back to the close cut, tight trousers.

SMITHY SONG.

When I am half a-dreaming
And only half asleep,
When daylight's grayest gleaming
Glints through the blinds to peep,
Oh, then I hear the dinging
Of the smithy hammers ringing,
Ching ching, ching ching,
Ching ching, ching ching.

At eve when I'm returning
From labors of the day,
Their forges yet are burning,
And still their hammers play,
And oft the smiths are singing
To that measured, merry ringing,
Ching ching, ching ching,
Ching ching, ching ching.

Often with rhythmic bending
Of bodies to and fro,
They toil in couples, sending
The sparks out, blow on blow.
One hammer always swinging
The while the other's ringing,
Ching ching, ching ching,
Ching ching, ching ching.

Oh merry anvils sounding
All day till set of sun!
It is by steady pounding
That noblest tasks are done.
By sturdy blows and swinging,
That keep the world a-ringing,
Ching ching, ching ching,
Ching ching, ching ching.
—George Horton, in Chicago Herald.

PITH AND POINT.

The man who dies without glory will never have his ghost shiver at the sight of its statue adorned with a Roman toga and an eighteenth-century wig.—Puck.

Maddox—"Look here, Simeral, don't you know it is dangerous to go into the water after a hearty meal?" Simeral—"I'm not going in after a meal. It's a bath I'm after."—Bucket.

Dumley—"My doeskin trousers are very much like the bills my tailor has sent in for them." Chumley—"In what regard?" Dumley—"Both need reseating."—Clothier and Furnisher.

Man, irreverent, trifling man, should abstain from sneers at womankind till he has learned to hold a plate of ice cream on his lap without tocing in.—Elmira Gazette.

Dr. Brown-Sequard has a paper in the August Forum entitled, "Have We Two Brains or One?" Some months ago the public was curious to know if the good doctor had one brain or none.—Fort Worth Gazette.

An Economical Wife.—"I want an egg plant," said a young married woman to the grocer. "I'm sorry, but I haven't one in the store just now." "Well, I must get one somewhere and raise my own eggs, for I'm resolved not to pay such high prices for them."—New York Sun.

Poet—"I don't see how you have the cheek to charge $75 for that suit." Tailor—"My name is worth something, sir." Poet (drawing his check)—"Well, I'll take it." Tailor—"But this check is for $40 only." Poet—"I know it—but my name is worth something."—New York Sun.

"It was a brave act, young man," said the grateful father with deep feeling. "At the peril of your life you rushed into the burning building and saved my daughter. How can I ever repay you?" "Would a couple of dollars be too much?" suggested the brave rescuer.—Chicago Tribune.

The sun has settled 'neath the hill,
The dew has settled on the grass,
The birds that circle o'er the mill
All pause and settle ere they pass.
The miser's settled at his till,
The moth has settled in the flame,
And I alone, with that small bill,
Am ever constant—still the same.
—Washington Post.

Kangaroos for America.

We are assured on what seems good authority that the project of importing kangaroos into this country is seriously entertained by several enthusiastic and wealthy sportsmen of the west. The animals have been successfully acclimated in England and France, and we are assured that there is no reason why they should not thrive here. The practical extinction of the buffalo has left the plains without any big game of importance, and experienced sportsmen declare that hunting the kangaroo, as practiced in Australia, is second in excitement and in interest only to killing the buffalo. The scheme is not without commercial importance. Kangaroo leather is a very valuable product, and the animals breed rapidly. The promoters hope to be privileged to introduce the new game at the beginning of the warm season in the Yellowstone Park, and to insure them for a few years Government protection and immunity from [illegible] sportsmen.—Helena (Montana) Independent.

Pocahontas Times.

JOHN E. CAMPBELL,
EDITOR AND PROPRIETOR.

Entered at the Post-office at Huntersville, W. Va., as second class matter.

ADVERTISING RATES.

	1 m.	3 m.	6 m.	1 yr.
One inch	$ 1 00	$ 2 00	$ 3 00	$ 5 00
Three in.	2 00	4 00	6 00	10 00
Qr. column	3 00	6 00	10 00	17 00
Half col'n	6 00	12 00	20 00	30 00
One col'n	10 00	20 00	30 00	50 00

Reading notices, not exceeding five lines, twenty-five cents for each insertion, and five cents a line for each additional line.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION.

One copy, 1 yr., $1.00 in advance; after 6 months, $1.25; after 12 months, $1.50

These terms will be strictly complied with.

Huntersville, W. Va.

October 9, 1890.

Democratic Ticket.

For Congress—Third District,
JOHN D. ALDERSON,
Of Nicholas County.

For State Senator—8th Senatorial District,
J. W. ST. CLAIR,
Of Fayette County.

For Judge Supreme Court,
DAN'L B. LUCAS,
Of Jefferson County.

For House of Delegates,
L. B. MOORE.

For County Commissioner,
G. M. KEE.

For Clerk Circuit Court,
J. H. PATTERSON.

For Clerk County Court.
S. L. BROWN.

For Sheriff
J. C. ARBOGAST.

The democrats ask nothing better to go before the people with than the record of the majority of the Fifty first Congress. If the people can endure that record there is small hope for a continuation of the republic.

Shall the House of Representatives be a legislative body, as it will be if controlled by democrats, or shall it be the tool of one man and its duties be simply to record his will, as it is under Speaker Reed, and as it will continue to be as long as controlled by the republicans? These are questions for every intelligent voter to consider.

Andrew Carnegie, the Pennsylvania iron baron, is so happy over the passage of the tariff bill, which he knows will put millions in his pockets at the expense of the "dear people," that he had to unburden his mind to a New York republican paper of some of its superfluous elation. It would have been in much better taste had he unburdened his pockets, by raising the wages of his workmen, of some of the consumers cash which the new law presents him with.

"The art of being happy lies in the power of extracting happiness from very common things. If we pitch our expectations high, if we are arrogant in our pretensions, if will not be happy except when our self-love is gratified, our pride stimulated, our vanity fed, or a fierce excitement kindled, then we shall have but little satisfaction out of this life.

The republican Senate so loved the workingmen of the county that it refused to pass the bills endorsed by organized Labor. Speaker Reed probably knew that such would be the case when he allowed the bills to go through the House. In fact there is reason to believe that a bargain was made by which the republicans of the House could ask for the votes of the working men on the ground of having passed their bills, knowing the republicans of the Senate would prevent the bills ever becoming laws.

A bad wreck occurred early Sunday morning Sept. 28th, on the Baltimore and Ohio railroad near Zanesville, Ohio, in which eight Railroad employees were killed and $100,000 worth of property was damaged. Two freight trains collided.

A beet sugar factory in Nebraska has started with good prospects of success, and if they prove to be what they seem, the new industry will open a new field for the farmers of that State. They need not then raise corn and use it as fuel, because the cost of shipping it to market is as much as it will bring.

Three thousand new enterprises have been established in the South during the last year.

The New Sugar Trust.

Thrifty housewives will thank Congress for free brown sugar and a lower duty on refined sugar, and will hope for a continuance of that boon. It is a good thing too that the policy of encouraging home production by bounties instead of by tariff protection has been inaugurated. Under that system the tax payer will see just how much he is paying and to whom he is paying it.

It is pleasant to know that the Treasury printing presses at Washington have been set running on an order for $9,000,000 in $10 notes —something badly needed now in current business through-out the country. It will, of course, take some time to complete these, but they will be set afloat at once as soon as ready, and batches of $5s and $20s will then be printed. Meantime the big fellows—the $1,000s, and $5,000s and 10,000s— will continue to be of some use in paying Clearing House balances, if not otherwise.

A short wheat crop having raised the price of that cereal the republicans straightway claimed that the increase in price was due to republican legislation. This is the sort of argument the republicans are using to catch votes with. Somebody seems to have forgotten the universal laugh which greeted a statement made on the stump some years ago by that shining light of the republican party, John Sherman, of Ohio to the effect that the unusually good crops of that year were the results of a republican administration.

Representative McAdoo, of New Jersey, who has been defeated for a renomination, in answering some injudicious friends who tendered him a nomination as an independent candidate, used words which are commended to every democrat disposed, for any reason, to be dissatisfied. He said "I cannot entertain this proposition. I am a democrat and I can not afford to compromise my position on the great questions which divide the two political parties. I shall remain true to the principles of the democratic party." Remember that you cannot support an independent candidate and still truthfully claim to be true to the principles of the democratic party.

NOTICE OF DISSOLUTION.

The partnership heretofore existing under the name of Lam & O'Farrell is desolved by mutual consent to take effect October 31st, 1890. We earnestly request all persons indebted to us to come forward and settle their accounts as we want to close our books by that time. The business heretofore conducted by Lam & O'Farrell will be carried on at the same place. The party taking charge will make his announcement through THE TIMES in due time.

Respectfully,
LAM & O'FARRELL.

WRIT OF ELECTION.

EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENT,
CHARLESTON, W. VA.
September 24, 1890.

THE STATE OF WEST VIRGINIA:

To the Commissioners of Election in the several Counties of the State:

A VACANCY having occurred in the office of Judge of the Supreme Court of Appeals of this State, caused by the death of Hon. T. C. Green, of Jefferson county, one of the judges of said court, who was elected for the term beginning on the first day of January, 1881, and ending on the first day of December, 1892, you are hereby commanded, in the name of the State of West Virginia, to cause a poll to be opened and an election to be held at the several places of voting in your respective counties, at the next general election to be held on Tuesday, the 4th day of November, 1890, for the purpose of electing a Judge of the Supreme Court of Appeals to fill the the vacancy in saip office for said unexpired term.

In Witness Whereof, I, A. B. Fleming, Governor of said State have hereunto set my hand and caused the Great Seal of the said [G. S.] State to be affixed, at the Capitol, in the city of Charleston, this 24th day of September, in the year 1890, and of the State the twenty-eighth.

By the Governor: A. B. FLEMING.
WM. A. OHLEY,
Secretary of State.

NOTICE.

Pursuant to an order of the County Court J. C. Price, Asbarry Dysard and S. B. Hannah, are appointed Commissioners to let to contract that part of Dunmore and Stony Bottom road known as the Snake Dam on Greenbaier river, on Oct. 18th at 10 a. m. Contractor to give bond and security. Specifications made known on day of letting. Com'rs reserving the privilege of rejecting any or all bids.

COMMISSIONERS SALE OF LAND.

Pursuant to a decree of the Circuit Court of Pocahontas County, rendered at the June term 1890 in the cause of Jamuel Judy vs. Henry C. Massey I will on Monday the 27th day of October 1890, offer for sale by public auction in front of the Court House door of Pocahontas County, that certain tract of land containing 55 acres and 70 poles of land the property of the defendant Henry C. Massey, situate on the waters of Knapp's creek adjoining the lands of M. A. Friel and others. This is a valuable tract of land and has tract of land and has on it considrable impravements, including dwelling house.

TERMS OF SALE.

Sufficient cash in hand to pay the costs of this suit and expenses of sale, and the residue in six months from the day of sale, bearing interest from that day, the purchaser to execute bond with good personal security for the deferred payment, and the title to be retained as ultimate security.

L. M. MCCLINTIC, Com'r

I, John J. Beard, Clerk of the Circuit Court of Pocahontas County do certify that the Commissioner above has given bond as required by law.
JOHN J. BEARD, Cl'k.

Sept. 18-4t. Printer's fee $8.88

COMMISSIONER'S SALE OF LAND.

Pursuant to a decree of the Circuit Court of Pocahontas County, rendered at the June Term 1890 in the cause of William Gibbs vs. C. A. Yeager and others, I will on, Monday the 20th day of October, 1890, offer for sale at public auction to the highest bidder, in front of the Court House door of Pocahontas County that Certain tract of land containing 120 acres the property of the defendant C. A. Yeager lying on the East branch of Greenbrier River adjoining the lands of P. D. Yeager M. Yeager, and others, said land is fertile, well improved and has a comfortable dwelling house and outbuilding upon it.

TERMS OF SALE:

Enough cash in hand to pay the costs of this suit and expenses of sale and the residue in Six Twelve and Eighteen months from the day of sale, in Equal payments bearing interest from that day the purchaser executing bond with good personal security for the deferred payments and the title being retained as ultimate security.

L. M. MCCLINTIC, Com'r

I, John J. Beard, Clerk of the Circuit Court of Pocahontas County, do certify that the Commissioner above has given bond as required by law.
JOHN J. BEARD, Cl'k.

Sept. 18-4t. Printer's fee $8.75

COMMISSIONER'S SALE OF

Valuable Land in Pocahontas County.

Pursuant to a decree of the Circuit Court of Pocahontas County rendered at the June term, 1890, in the chancery cause of Geo. A. Rivercomb, Special Receiver &c. vs. A. G. Bonner. We the undersigned Commissioners, will offer for sale at public auction to the highest bidder at the front door of the Court house of Pocahontas County on the 30th day of October 1890. A tract of one hundred acres of land belonging to A. G. Bonner, situated on the South East side of Middle Mountain in Pocahontas County, W. Va., near the Big Spring. This one of the most valuable tracts of land in the County and is in a high state of cultivation.

TERMS OF SALE:

Sufficient cash in hand to pay cost of suit and expense of sale and the residue in three equal payments, payable in six, twelve and eighteen months respectively the purchaser to execute bond with approved security for the defered payments, bearing interest from day of sale, and the title to the land as ultimate security.

GEO. A. REVERCOMB,
C. P. JONES, } Com'rs.

I, John J. Beard, Clerk of the Circuit Court of Pocahontas County do certify that the bond required by the decree in said cause has been duly executed.

JOHN J. BEARD, Cl'k.

Sept. 18-4 Printer's fee $9.95

COMMISSIONER'S SALE OF

Valuable Hotel Property.

Pursuant to decrees of the Circuit Court of Pocahontas County entered at the October term 1889 and the June term, 1890 in the Chancery Cause of Peter Beverage and others vs. J. R. Apperson and others, and R. S. Turk, Trustee vs. Jennie B. Skiles and others, I will, as Special Commissioner, appointed for the purpose, sel at public auction to the highest bidder, in front of the Court House door of Pocahontas County, W. Va., on

MONDAY, OCT 30th 1890

A certain tract of land containing one acre, on which is a large and commodious dwelling house and suitable out building's; situate at Marlinton, in Pocahontas county, being the same property formerly occupied by T. H. Skiles. This is a most desirable property suitable for hotel purposes or summer resort and located in a good neighborhood convenient to churches and schools.

TERMS OF SALE.

Sufficient cash in hand to pay the costs of suit and expenses of sale; the balance in two equal installments, falling due in 9 and 18 months from day of sale. The purchaser to execute bonds with approved personal security bearing interests from date for the deferred payments; a lien will be retained on said property as ultimate security.

L. M. MCCLINTIC,
Special Com'r.

I, John J. Beard, clerk of the circuit court of Pocahontas county, certify that the above Commissioner has given bond as required by law.

JOHN J. BEARD, cl'k cir, ct.

September 25-4w. Printer's fee $10.38.

Official Directory of Pocahontas County.

Judge of Circuit Court, A. N. Campbell.
Prosecuting Attorney, L. M. McClintic.
Sheriff, M. J. McNeel.
Deputy Sheriff, L. W. Herold
Cl'k of Cir. & Co. Courts, J. J. Beard.
Assessor, C. O. Arbogast.
Com'rs Co. Ct. { C. E. Beard, S. B. Hannah, G. P. Moore.
Co. Surveyor, Geo. Baxter

THE COURTS.

Circuit Court convenes on the first Monday in April, 3rd Monday in June and 3rd Monday in October.

County Court convenes on the 1st Tuesday in January, March, October and second Tuesday in July. July is levy term.

C. F. MOORE,
Attorney-at-Law,
Huntersville, W. Va.
Will practice in the courts of Pocahontas and adjoining counties, and in he Supreme court of Appeals.

L. M. McCLINTIC,
Attorney-at-Law,
Huntersville, W. Va.
Will practice in the courts of Pocahontas and adjoining counties and in the Supreme court of Appeals.

D. A. STOFER,
Attorney-at-Law,
Huntersville, W. Va.
Will practice in the courts of Pocahontas and Webster counties.

H. S. RUCKER,
Atty.-at-Law & Notary Public,
Huntersville, W. Va.
Will practice in the courts of Pocahontas county and in the Supreme court of Appeals.

J. W. ARBUCKLE,
Attorney-at-Law,
Lewisburg, W. Va.
Will practice in the courts of Greenbrier and Pacahontas counties.
Prompt attention given to claims for collection in Pocahontas county.

W. L. KEE,
Atty.-at-Law,
Beverly, W. Va.
Will Practice in the Circuit Court o Pocahontas county.

DR. J. H. WEYMOUTH,
RESIDENT DENTIST,
Beverly, W. Va.
Will visit Pocahontas County every Spring and Fall. The exact date of each visit will appear in THE TIMES.

Hotel by G. W. Wagner,
HUNTERSVILLE, W. VA.
Our Hotel is new, large and comfortable, and no paines will be spared to keep a first-class house in every respect.
Horses well provided for.
Chagges reasonable.
G. W. WAGNER, Proprietor.

ANNOUNCEMENTS.

To the Voters of Pocahontas County.

I announce myself an Independent candidate for House of Delegates. If it should be your pleasure on the 4th day of November next, to elect me to represent you in the next Legislature, I pledge myself to use my utmost efforts to secure such legislation as will be favorable especially to the farming and laboring class, and to represent my constituents without partisan bias.

Respectfully,
H. B. SHARP.

HOME NEWS

—County Court Tuesday.

—Several persons attended Court Tuesday.

—Capt. C. B. Swecker, was in to see us last Friday.

—The farmer's alliance met here last Friday.

—Hon. Chas. J. Faulkner will speak in Huntersville Saturday.

—Attorney C. F. Moore started Monday morning to the various booming towns of Va.

—Don't forget to come to town Saturday and hear Senator Faulkner speak.

—The new expanded iron fence is finished around the Methodist Church lot.

—Mr. John G. Beard, of Academy, called to see us last Friday, while in the city.

—Mess. B. E. Fleisher and R. B. Campbell, of Monterey, Va., were in town on the 2nd.

—Dedication of the Methodist church South next Sunday 11 o'clock a. m.

—Mrs. Maomie Dilley near Dilley's Mill has been quite ill for some time.

—The new expanded iron fence around the Court House square is completed and adds greatly to its appearance.

—The new dwelling house of Attorney L. M. McClintic under the supervision of contractor Albert Sharp is rapidly nearing completion.

—The bridge which now spans Knapp's creek below the jail is being taken down to be removed to the new abutments a few hundred yards up the creek.

—In a case of a Webster county justice one of the lawyers made fun of the other's grammar. The court at once arose and said: "Mr. P. ff you air one of them what thinks grammar runs this court you're barking up the wrong tree. If I hear any more sich remarks I 'fine you $10."

—Mess. G. R. Curry, and Wm. M. Burns, of Academy, C. B. Swecker, B. F. McElwee and Harry Moore of Dunmore; D. B. McElwee, and H. Lee White of Drisol, E. L. Beard, of Locust and M. J. McNeel, of Mill Point, were in the city last Friday.

—The following gentlemen were in attendance at County Court Tuesday: Messrs. A. M. Barlow and Geo. P. Moore, of Edray; J. C. Price, of Clover Lick; Mathew Wallace, C. E. Beard, M. J. McNeel, of Mill Point; Jno. A. McNeel, of Sunset; C. L. Austin and S. B. Hannah, of Green Bank; A. K. Dysard, and Jno. A. Geiger, of Driftwood; A. M. McGlaughlin, of Marlinton and H. H. McClintic of Buckeye.

—Matrimony is getting to be quite popular now among the colored people here. Last evening when Titis Carter witnessed the secure hitching together of Rachael Dickason and his son Bill, he said to the preacher "If I'd a know'd you was heah boss I'd a brung down "Jim Jerd" and my darter "Lize," they's gwine ter get married too boss."

—The 3rd Quarterly meeting for Huntersville Circuit M. E. C. S. will be held at Bethel next Sunday and Monday 12 and 13 after preaching Sunday afternoon 3 o'clock the Presiding Elder will administer the sacrament of the Lords Supper. Preaching Monday morning 11 o'clock after which the Quarterly Conference will be held.

—The village camp will commence at this place in the Methodist church to-night. Preaching to-night by Rev. C. Sydenstricker of Academy and to-morrow at 11 o'clock, A. M. by Rev. W. H. Ballengee, of Green Bank.

—Some employments may be better than others; but there is no employment so bad as the having none at all. The mind will contract a rust and an unfitness for everything, and a man must either fill up his time with good or at least innocent business, or it will run to the worst sort of waste—to sin and vice.

—The celebrated Parisian chemist, Mark Avalon carried the science of chemistry to such an extent, that enveloped in a cloud of fumigations rising from chemics mixed by his own hand, is said to have transformed from the polished gentleman that he was into a snaggle fanged, blear eyed, bloody knif red bloused demon. It was his art. This does not explain how the proprietor of the C. F. Moore law office, full bearded and waxing as he appeared to be somewhat into middle life, shut himself up and again appeared ten or twenty years younger—a strange youth almost unknown. Did he unsleep as long as Rip Van Winkle slept? Did he dip in the fountain of perpetual youth? No, it was a razor.

Big Springs Items.

The lumbermen parade which left Big Spring and Mingo on the 17th Sept. consisted of thirty-three teams which hauled 38,000 feet of fine cherry lumber. F. W. Brown offered a prize of $5.00 to the four horse team that hauled the largest load and $3.00 to the two horse team. He also gave a free dinner. The largest load hauled by the four horse team weighed 8,800 pounds, 21,000 feet. The two horse load weighed 5,100 lbs. Mr. Brown has been shipping about 30,000 feet every week for several weeks.

One immense cherry log cut on Col. Gatewood's place furteen feet long contained 1,400 feet of lumber.

Mr. Uriah Bird hauled 50,000 feet of merchantable lumber from this place last week, all cherry.

Col. Gatewood and wife are visiting Mrs. Gatewood's father, Judge J. W. Warwick, of Warm Springs, Va.

A fatal accident happened to Mr. Henry Thomas near here Friday evening, Sept. 26th while out logging. Just as they were quitting work, that evening there was one log off that Mr. Thomas thought he would put into the shoot. He stuck his cant hook into the log and started it down, he running with it, the log was going very fast and struck a small stump with great force, throwing him violently against the handle of the cant hook which struck him in the stomach. He was carried to the house, and all that medical aid could do was done but without avail. He died at 12 o'clock Saturday night.

WILSON.

Sad Result of a Fist-Fight.

On Thursday evening last, W. T. Taliaferro, a student at the Virginia Military Institute, at Lexington, from Gloucester county, Va., aged about sixteen years, and Frank W. McConnico, of Texas, aged about twenty, concluded to settle a difference between them about drill duty by a regular fist-fight. Each choose his friends and they repaired to a room on the premises to determine the difficulty by an old fashioned set-to. They fought fifteen rounds and both were severely punished—yound Taliaferro the most. He was taken to his room, and after being washed and put to bed, went to sleep, from which he never awoke. McConnico was prostrated from the effects of the blows received in the fight, and was overcome with grief when he learned of the death of his antagonist.

Transfers of Real Estate.

The following is a list of the transfers of real estate for the month of September:

A deed from Jno. T. Wooddell Alice Wooddell, Andrew C. Wooddell and Francis Wooddell to H. A. Yeager for land on west side of the Alleghany mountain.

From Andrew O'Bryan and wife to Alfred Rheinstrom, of Charleston 140 acres of land on Monday Lick run on Buckley Mt.

From H. F. Clark and wife and John Kellison and wife to Alfred Rheinstrom, for 685 acres, on east side of Greenbrier river.

From Jos. Cline and wife to Alfred Rheinstrom for land on Beaver Lick creek.

From J. B. Piles and wife and others to Alfred Rheinstrom for land on Beaver Lick creek.

From B. H. Waugh and wife to M. M. J. Childers and heirs for land in Little Levels.

From Geo. A. McNeel and wife and others to Alfred Rheinstrom for land in Buckley mountain.

From Andrew McGlaughlin and wife to Alfred Rheinstrom for land on Buckley mountain.

From Wm. L. McNeel and wife and others to Alfred Rheinstrom for land on Buckley mountain.

From Alfred Rheinstrom to W. H. McClintic for land on Buckley mountain.

From Alfred Rheinstrom to A. F. Rice, of Wheeling for land on Buckley mountain.

From G. C. McGlaughlin to H. A. Yeager for land near Green Bank.

From Jas. Cooper and wife of Baltimore to Sam'l Cooper for a one half interest in land on west side of Greenbrier river adjoining the lands of Uriah Hevener and others.

From Sam'l Cooper and wife to the St. Lawrence Boom & Mf'g Co., for land on Greenbrier river.

From Otho Gum and wife to Mary A. Wade for land on Anthony's creek.

From Mary A. Wade and husband to Margaret Ann Wade for land on Anthony's creek.

A bold and successful train robbery occurred, on the Cincinnati Sandusky and Cleveland railroad, on the 2nd inst. The robbers secured about $1,000.

SALE OF SCOOL LANDS.

Pursuant to decree of the Circuit Court of Pocahontas County, rendered at the June term 1890, the undersigned Commissioner of School Lands, will sell at public auction, in front of the Court House door of said County, on the 20th day October, 1890 for cash, the following tracts of land to-wit:

1st. 1656 acre part of an undivided tract of 2112 ac lying on the head waters of Thorn Creek, forfeited in the name of Ben Buzzard.

2nd. 428 acre part of said undevided tract of 2112 acres, forfeited in the name of James unless.

3rd. 107 acre part of said undivided tract of 2112 ac forfeited in the name of Wm. S. Grim

4. A tract of acres lying on the waters of Sitlingss Creek, adjoining the lands of Henry Nottingham and others forfeited the name of Rachel C. McNeel.

5th. A tract of acres of waste and unappropriated ld lying on the Lime Stone Run, adjoing the lands of A. B. Sharp and others.

6th. A tract of acres of waste and unappropriated ld lying on the waters of Knapp creek, adjoining the lands of P. H. Ley and others.

The 89 acre tract and the 2 acre tract have on them Streaks of Iron Ore.

JOHN . WARWICK,
Com of School lands.

Sept 18 4t. Printer's fee $9.34

COMMISSIONER'S SALE OF

Real Estate in Pocahontas County.

By virtue of a decree of the Circuit Court of Pendleton County, rendered on the 14th day of June, 1890, in the chancery cause therein, pending, in which John McCoy Adm'r of the estate of Pendleton McCoy dec'd is plaintiff and Pendleton McCoy's heirs et al, are defendants, I will as special Commissioner at the Courthouse of Pendleton County, on Thursday October 16th, 1890 proceed to sell the interest of Pendleton McCoy (being the undivided one half thereof) in a tract of land containing about 1629 acres more or less, situate in the county of Pocahontas and State of West Va., on the Rich Mountain and both sides of Greenbrier River about 8 miles north of Traveler's Repose.

This tract of land contains a large quanity of valuable timber, most of which is accessible to the Greenbrier River, the land is valuable for grazing purposes, a portion of it is improved and has on it a comfortable dwelling house and some outbuildings.

Terms—Ten per cent of the purchase money cash in hand on day of sale, the residue in three equal annual payments from day of sale, with interest from day of sale, the purchaser or purchasers to give bond with good personal security for the deferred payments and the title to the land to be retained until the further order of the Court.

M. K. Be...
Spec'l Com...

The Commissioner in the ... ed cause of P. McCoy's Adm ... dleton McCoy's heirs et al. ... bond with security as requ... has been approved by me.

J. ...

Clerk Circuit Court ...
Sept 25-4t

WEST VIRG...

The Fa... second ... tember ... for ... 9th. ... in th... and ... pa...

A TERRIBLE PRISON.

THE LOATHSOME TORTURE HOUSE OF MACEDONIA.

Pitiable Aspect of the Unfortunate Captives—Chained to Pillar and Tortured by Bugs and Ants—A Charnel House.

[illegible]

Hands and feet are bound together and the man is placed at a pillar to which his head is fastened. The victim is thus absolutely unable to move. The preparations completed, the torture begins. There is always a stock of large ants kept ready in little boxes, and of these about fifty are placed upon the body of the poor wretch. The tortures he endures from the bites of these insects seldom fail to make him confess, no matter whether guilty or innocent. Upon others the same effect is produced by chaining them to the pavement of the courtyard and exposing them for a whole day to the scorching rays of the sun without the power of moving a limb. Never in my life had I so fully appreciated the privilege of breathing fresh air as when I turned my back upon the prisons of Uskub, which, moreover, are but a specimen of what may be seen in every city of Macedonia."

A SHAVED COUNTRY.

Curious Appearance Old Mexico Takes on During the Dry Season.

The City of Mexico is 7,500 feet above sea level. During the day the temperature fluctuates between 70 and 90 degrees, but at night it never gets above the sixties, so the year around you cannot sleep without a cover. The rainy season lasts about three months during the summer. Then the country is verdant, the pampas grass flourishes on the great ranges and rich foliage covers mountain and valley along the rivers with mantles of green.

The dry season lasts about nine months, and before it ends things are pretty well burned up. But bounteous crops are harvested during the summer months and garnered for the dry season. After the rainy season the grass on the ranges is cured on the ground by the sun, the same as hay is cured by being mowed, and thus it furnishes food for the cattle. Before the dry season is ended, however, the grass is nibbled close to the sod, and then the whole face of the country looks as though it had been shaved. In some places the forests are heavy, but in others not a tree can be seen.

Mahogany, rosewood and pine flourish in abundance along the Monterey & Gulf Railroad, and for miles the trees are of mahogany. The gold and silver mines are but indifferently developed. Surface mining is about the only kind done. Prospectors expect to find coined dollars on the ground, and when they are disappointed they leave in disgust. Last year enough wheat was raised in Sonora to supply five other States. The people did not know what to do with it.

With their old-fashioned habits they did not know how to take advantage of their prosperity, and so lost much, but a great deal of it was shipped to New York and Europe. Every year the Mexican merchants visit Germany, France and England, and purchase a season's stock of merchandise, which is shipped to them in clipper ships by way of Cape Horn. This they do because the tariff of the United States prevents Mexico from making cheap purchases in the States.

Cheap Labor in Mexico.

The erect, military figure of D. W. Grubb, ex-Mayor of Indianapolis, was a prominent feature of the Palmer House rotunda in Chicago the other day. Mr. Grubb has been in Mexico for seven years, having conducted a bank in the mining district of Paral, Chihuahua, during that time. He had something interesting to say about immigration. "Mexico has always encouraged immigration," remarked Colonel Grubb, "but in the case of the proposed negro exodus from the United States the Mexican press has opposed it at every point. The country has enough cheap labor, it contends, and does not want any more. Capital will be welcome, but of negroes the country has enough.

"You see, even colored men and women from the South cannot compete with peon labor. If I had my papers here I could show you a letter from a representative Mexican, in which he contends that peons are paid enough when they get eighteen cents a day. The writer observes that all they want is six cents for beans, three cents for corn, three cents for candles and six cents for clothing and the support of their families. This letter was written by the owner of one of the largest haciendas, or plantations, and was intended in good faith."—[San Francisco Chronicle.

Queer Place for a Tree.

"One of the most unique things I have ever seen on my travels," said Arthur Thomas, of New York, "is the old Court-House in Greencastle, Ind. I was in the town the other day, and my attention was called to a full-grown tree. Now, the curious thing about this tree was that it didn't grow on terra firma but on the tower of the Court-House. The tree sprouted years ago from a crevice in the bricks of the tower, and it developed year after year until now it is a foot or more in circumference at the trunk. It is one of the most curious tree growths I have seen anywhere. It will have to go soon, however, for the county is going to construct a new Court-House. It seems a pity that it cannot be preserved, for it is a fine specimen of erratic tree growth."—[Cincinnati Commercial Gazette.

IN ANOTHER LIGHT.

Fond Young Mother—What a pity that babies can't talk!

Husband—I think it's a great blessing.

"Why, Harry, how can you talk so?"

"Well, if babies could talk I think they'd do a lot of swearing when half a dozen women got at them and teased them for hours at a time."—[Lewiston American.

Bashful Jerry.

"O, mother," cried little Jerry, running into the house one June day, "Sarah Munn says that Nan Scott is a-going to have a party next Friday! It's her birthday, and she's a-going to ask all the little girls and boys on this street."

"Then I suppose you'll be invited, Jerry," said his mother with a smile.

"Do you really s'pose I shall?" asked Jerry, earnestly. "Oh! oh! I never went to a party in all my life!"

This was Tuesday, and every day until Friday Jerry heard something more from Sarah Munn about that wonderful party. Jerry was the most bashful little boy in all the world, but Sarah was willing to do all the talking, so she would tell him all the new things she saw and heard connected with the party, and Jerry would scamper home and repeat it to his mother.

"Nan's having a new white dress made on very purpose for the party, Sarah says, with pink sash and pink bows on the sleeves, and she's a-going to wear pink ribbons on her hair and pink strings in her slippers. Don't you think pink shoe-strings would look well for me," asked Jerry, looking down at his old shoes, "to wear with my white stockings and checkered trousers, you know?"

His mother smiled. "You're not invited yet, Jerry, and if you are, I think black shoe-strings look better than pink on a big boy."

Jerry liked to be called big, if he wasn't but 6 years old.

Another day Sarah described the cakes. "Such lots and lots of sugar cookies in hearts and rounds, and frosted cup-cakes, and two great sheets of sponge-cake, and the beautifullest birthday-cake you ever did see, with six tiny bit dollies stuck up in the frosting, looking just as if they were wading in snow."

"Oh," said Jerry, "don't you think I shall be invited, mother?"

His mother wasn't sure, but on Friday morning the invitation came. "Come at three o'clock," it said.

"What shall I wear?" asked Jerry, and long before noon he had all of his meeting clothes laid on the bed ready to put on, and all the while he talked about the supper and the plays.

By three o'clock he was washed and brushed and dressed ready to go. "Slick as a trout," grandma said. And then he began to dread going.

"Go with Sarah Munn," said his mother.

"Oh, no," cried Jerry, "I'd rather not."

"Then go with Ernie Jones or Don Powers or Harry Hart."

But Jerry still made excuses. For two hours that bashful boy hung around, while his mother urged him to go. Finally he poked out on to the sidewalk, and there he could see the children at play in Nan's yard.

"I guess I'll go now, if you will just go with me," he said to his mother at the open window.

So she put down her sewing, put on her hat, and went out. As soon as they started Jerry began to hang back again.

"I shall come home just as soon as I eat my supper," he said.

"You may if you want to," replied his mother.

"Well, I can't bear to go anyhow," said Jerry, stopping short.

"Come back home, then," said his mother, so back home they went. And that was the end of Jerry's first party.—Youth's Companion.

"With all her faults I love her still," said the man who paid court to the widow with large possessions in whisky interests.

If brevity is the sole of wit, levity is the upper.

"Miss Passeful goes around a good deal." "Yes. She's a regular spinster."

Fly-time—When a mad dog is after you.

A great composer—Morphine.

Ice is very high in Switzerland. Some of it on Mount Blanc is over 15,000 feet above the sea level.

"Look out!" cried the pebble to the clam shell; "there's a cold wave coming."

People who say sharp things often get the reputation of being blunt.

That man is lucky who can partake of meals that his cook also relishes.

Fenderson always speaks of his son's allowance as the fresh heir fund.

The hen is not a cheerful fowl. She broods a great deal.

A title will often sell a book and always buy an American girl.

POCAHONTAS TIMES.

JOHN E. CAMPBELL, Editor and Proprietor. TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION: $1.00 Per Year, in Advance.

VOL. VIII. HUNTERSVILLE, W. VA., THURSDAY, OCTOBER 23, 1890. NO. 13.

Forgotten Friends.

Forgotten friends, you who have flown;
Though unremembered, not unknown—
Like cherished blossoms, faded, dead,
Which still the sweetest perfume spread;
Or faintest echoes softly blown—

You have not left me quite alone,
Though we have very strangely grown,
Yet memory holds a golden thread
Forgotten friends.

Within my breast I still enthrone
The light that from your presence shone.
Your sun is set, but from the red
Of mem'ry's sky a glow is shed;
Names, faces, gone; yet all my own
Forgotten friends.
—[Chicago Post.

A WILD RIDE.

BY MARY C. PRESTON.

In the low little cabin Mattie Dallas stood alone, her face set and white, her brown hands clenched together.

She could hear the unsteady footfalls that grew more and more distant with each moment, and knew that her father was gone back to report what had passed between them to Gil Jones, the brutal, black-browed liquor-seller of the settlement.

What had passed between father and daughter had stirred up all the evil in the man's nature, all the force in the girl's; and as she faced him, defiant, fearless, white of face and steady of eye, Jason Dallas had lifted his rough right hand and struck her brutally.

"You will say yes, now, curse you," he had shouted.

But she, faint, reeling from the blow, still met his blazing eyes as before.

"I will never marry Gil Jones," she told him, in a low, hoarse, determined voice. "He may do what he will with you; if you owe him money you shall pay it in some other way—not with my young life! He is a brute and a coward, a gambler and a drunkard. I know what my mother bore; I will not follow in her footsteps. Strike me again if you will—you struck her the day before she died—but I tell you I will not marry Gil Jones—no, not to save you from the gallows."

Curses deep and deadly had bubbled over the bearded lips of the half-intoxicated man; but something—was it mention of the dead mother?—made him hold his hand.

"And I say you shall!" he cried. "We've sent to Dent's Peak for the justice, and he'll be here by daylight. Willing or unwilling, you'll be Gil Jones' wife before the sun is three hours high. Do you hear, you wildcat? He's a fool to want you, but he shall have you!"

Finishing with a terrible oath, he had staggered out of the cabin, and left Mattie alone to face the future as she should.

"I will die first—I will die any death first!" she said, through her pretty teeth, knotting the brown hands that writhed on her bosom, with a touch of madness in the gesture. I will try to escape, but if I cannot, I will die! Oh, Jack, Jack, if I can but reach you!"

On the walls of the cabin hung a rifle, revolver and a great wide-bladed knife. The miners hunted often, and their wives and daughters knew how to use firearms as well as the men.

Mattie took down the revolver and the knife. One she had loaded that morning, the other ground to razor-like keenness. She fastened a broad leather belt about her waist, and thrust both into it; then, with a step as light as a panther's she glided out from the cabin, leaving the candle alight within.

There was starlight in the world outside. Later the moon would rise, but as the girl darted out she breathed a thanksgiving for the imperfect light.

In the settlement she knew that there was one who would befriend her. Jake Gaines, the old hunter, whom she nursed once through severe illness, lived alone in his hut—not exactly alone, either, for in one corner of it, with but a low, rough partition between them, he kept his black horse, Eagle, dear to him as the apple of his eye, fleet as a bird, gentle as a tamed fawn.

Mattie was tapping at Jake's door in a few moments. He called gruffly for her to enter, and she burst in impetuously.

"You have said I saved your life!" she cried, ringingly. "If I did, save you mine tonight! I am in danger!"

The strong old weather-beaten man sprang up and caught his rifle.

"What's the danger?" he asked, quickly. "I'll defend ye, child, from anything."

"Give me Eagle," she panted. "Don't ask why. I will be missed, and then it will be too late. My father and Gil Jones would sacrifice me. Jack Valroy—my Jack!—is in Hunter's Point, twenty miles away. I must reach him, or—or I am lost! Give me Eagle, and if I live, he shall be sent back to you!"

Jack lost no time. He seemed fully to understand her need, and silently and swiftly flung his rude saddle across Eagle's back, buckled the girth rapidly, drew the bridle over the dark head of the horse, and led him out of the hut.

"Let me lift ye," he said to Mattie, softly. "My brave little girl! may God see ye safe at Hunter's Point before they miss ye! Don't spare Eagle; he can fly like a bird, and is as sure-footed as a cat. Heaven bless ye, child!"

He lifted her to Eagle's back, and as he did so, she leaned forward and touched her lips to his cheek; then with a sob she shook out the rein, and felt the black horse bound forward.

On like the wind! She was too young to be prudent, and the galloping horse thundered through the settlement, bringing many to their doors; bringing Gil Jones to his just as, in the light that streamed out, she flashed by.

With a cry of rage he dashed back to where his own horse stood hitched to a neighboring fence.

With an oath he sprang to its back, and in a moment was following the girl.

Such a chase has rarely been as that which took place there in the wild mining country that spring night.

She heard the hoofs behind and set her teeth hard as Eagle leaped lightly and easily onward.

"I can shoot back," she thought, fiercely—for the lawlessness of the settlement had been about her from early infancy, and to protect life or property by a bullet sent straight to the heart of the would-be robber was a right with the miners—"but it may be my father who is following me," she cried aloud. "He shall not take me back—he shall not."

She leaned forward and struck with her bare hand on the black neck of Eagle.

And with a snort, Eagle increased his speed.

The moon rose slowly, sailed up, up, higher and higher. Pursued and pursuer were dashing through a wild, broken track, and Gil Jones' horse was not allowing Eagle to gain on him.

A deep, dark canyon was before them. Ere the black horse reached it Gil Jones raised himself in his saddle and took aim.

"Halt, or I'll shoot!" he shouted.

The threat reached Mattie, but she only urged Eagle on.

Three miles ahead now, and she would see the lights of Hunter's Point—four, and she would be in safety, in the strong arms of her lover, Jack Valroy!

A rifle ball whizzed past, but, thank God, neither she nor Eagle was grazed by it!

The next instant she was flying through the darkness of the canyon.

"My poor Eagle—I cannot kill you!" she faltered, drawing him in a little.

But when the hoof-beats following echoed hollowly and thunderously from the canyon's sides, she urged him on again.

He was flecked with foam, and his nostrils were distended, red as blood. His breath came laboriously, and he was quivering through all his lithe, great body. But Eagle never slackened speed, until, as she left the canyon and rode out into the open country once more, she heard no following hoof-beats.

Then she drew rein and allowed the gallant, jaded animal to go forward at a walk.

It was midnight when she reached Hunter's Point, and just as she drew Eagle in at the small cottage Jack Valroy had built for his mother, Jack, who had been unable to rest, he knew not why, emerged from it.

In the clear light he recognized his pretty, sun-browned love, and gave a cry of surprise.

"Mattie, what brings you here at such an hour alone?"

"Oh, Jack!" was all she could say.

For she was growing blind and sick, and falling—falling.

He caught her in his arms, and carried her into the cottage, where his mother soon revived her; and then she told her story.

Jack, when she had finished, bent over her very tenderly, and drew her brown head to his heart.

"We have a clergyman in Hunter's Point, my dearest," he said, softly. "I will call him up, and he shall make you my wife at once. Then we can defy your father, should he come for you."

So it was done, and Mattie's ride was followed by a bridal.

Her father, however, never troubled the young couple.

Gil Jones was found in the canyon, crushed under his horse, which lay prone and dead, having stumbled and pitched forward in such a way as to break its neck.

Gil was not dead, but injured so much that he would never again ride after a bride, willing or unwilling.

Eagle was sent back to his master, none the worse for his flight with Mattie; and Jake returned him, as a wedding gift, to her. — [Saturday Night.

A Peculiar Business.

As an illustration of a peculiar business activity I have obtained the following facts: Last Friday an aged lady died in Harlem, a notice of her death appearing in but one morning paper of the following day. The funeral took place on Sunday, and yet before breakfast on Monday the postman brought a letter containing a heavy black card about three by six inches. This card bore on its embroidered face her full name, age and date of her demise in gilt letters. At its top was a couplet from one of Watts' hymns, while at its bottom was a verse of doggerel that, it is said, rather distressed than cheered the afflicted family. Gummed to the back of the card was a printed slip (giving a price list per dozen or gross), asking its return if not needed, and showing the address of the parties mailing it.

The brief time between the appearance in the one daily newspaper Saturday and the receipt of the card by the first delivery Monday morning, would seem to indicate that these cardmakers carried on their business in this city. But such is not the case. Their address was that graveyard of a city, Philadelphia, whose citizens seem to revel in mortuary notices, good, bad and indifferent.—[New York Star.

Sleeveless jackets grow in favor.

The Famous Taylor Madstone.

The famous Taylor madstone, which for almost fifty years has been in the possession of Mrs. Mary J. Taylor of Terre Haute, Ind., has passed to another generation. The stone has been applied to many hundreds of persons who were suffering from the bites of rabid animals, and has relieved the minds of many anxious persons. It has been in Mrs. Taylor's family for many generations, and is now in the care of Mrs. William Peiper, a married daughter of Mrs. Taylor. The latter, who is now visiting her son in Chicago, was so affected by handling the stone that her health was impaired and she was forced to turn over the stone to her daughter. For the past few years a record of the patients treated has been kept, and in all the number not one failure to effect a cure has been reported. Patients have come from all parts of the country to test the merits of the bit of curious stone.

The stone is about two inches in circumference and a quarter of an inch thick. It is porous and when viewed through a strong glass the formation has the appearance of petrified vegetation. The Evening Post correspondent witn[illegible] an application of the stone. [illegible] subject was a little girl broug[illegible] from Edgar County, Illinois. The skin was scraped by a knife until the blood came and the stone was then bound on the spot. If there is a particle of poison in the system the stone adheres until the venom becomes absorbed, when the stone is removed and soaked in sweet milk until clean, when it is again applied. This is continued until the stone refuses to adhere of its own accord.—[Chicago Post.

Tallest Man in the World.

J. W. Patterson, the tallest man known in the world excepting the Chinese giant Chang, will make Oklahoma City his home. Mr. Patterson stands seven feet seven inches in his stocking feet and is twenty-seven years old. He has traveled with a number of the best shows in the country for the past eight or ten years and is well fixed in this world's goods. About a year ago he married and has decided to settle down and take life easy. He owns considerable property in this city and as soon as he returns from the East will begin the erection of a fine residence. A couple of months ago his wife presented him with a pair of strapping boys, of which Mr. Patterson is immensely boastful. Mrs. Hatterson is larger than the average woman, being nearly six feet high and weighing over two hundred pounds.—[Oklahoma City Chief.

Under Water Forty Years.

Some Hungarian prisoners of war were thrown in 1849 into a deep pool near Hermannstadt, from which the bodies, after an immersion of forty-one years were lately brought up. Their physiological condition has been made the subject of a careful investigation by Dr. Konig. The bodies were perfectly preserved, and their organs remained unchanged in shape and mostly unaltered in color and consistence. The most remarkable feature was the presence of crystals of common salt, clearly showing that, in the water, particles held in solution may pass through the skin and muscles and find their way into the most deeply-seated organs. This is considered confirmatory proof that mineral baths exert in this way their specific action on the internal economy of bathers.

Popular, but "No Go."

Daughter—Mamma, what is a fad?

Mother—Something that is extremely popular; something that is all the go.

Daughter—Then Charley Sanders isn't a fad when he calls on sister Edith, is he?

Diamond Cutting.

The cutting of diamonds is done principally at Antwerp and Amsterdam. One cause of the low esteem in which the ancients held the diamond, as compared with other stones, was due to their inability to cut and polish it, an operation that has always increased thd value of the stone. The East Indians are said to have understood the art, and it was known in Europe at an early day. Formerly the English monopolized the trade, but subsequently it went to Holland. It is generally done there by hand, partly by rubbing one stone against another, and partly by a wheel and diamond powder. Where flaws cause large pieces to be removed, they are cut by iron wires armed with diamond powder, or are split with hammer and chisel in the direction of the cleavage. The latter process is liable, however, to ruin the stone.

Great skill, time and labor are necessary for the work. It formerly required seven months to cut a stone of twenty-four to thirty carats, and the cutting of the celebrated "Pitt" diamond required two years. Modern machinery has shortened the time, but it is still a delicate and difficult task, which reduces the stone more than half, yet increases its value one-third. About four-fifths of the diamonds mined are defective, and four styles of cutting have been adopted: the brilliant, which gives the best effect and reduces the stone less; the rose, used on stones not deep enough for brilliants, and in which the whole upper curved surface is covered with equilateral triangles; the table, used for broad stones of small depth, and the star, which causes less loss of weight.

A Story of Josh Billings.

A few years ago, riding up town in a Madison avenue car, I was seated opposite the gentleman who is best remembered as Josh Billings. The rear platform was somewhat crowded, and in the course of our ride one of the passengers stepped off and on several times, in order to assist the lady passengers. Finally, when the car was just comfortably filled, and the courteous gentleman had taken his seat inside, Josh Billings, seeing an opportunity for a joke, beckoned to the conductor, and pointing to the stranger, said,

"Don't you charge for every ride on this car?"

"Yes, sir," answered he.

"Well, I've seen that fellow get on this car six times, and you have collected only one fare from him."—[Harper's Magazine.

A Tree Growing in Mid-Air.

There is to be seen a few miles from the outskirts of Richmond, Texas, a natural curiosity, the like of which is perhaps to be found nowhere else in the world. It is an enormous oak tree literally suspended in the air. It stands in the midst of a dense grove known as Bentley's Wood, and is made quite a show of. The mystery of its suspension is that numerous hunting parties having camped beneath it during a period of many years, their fires have gradually burned the trunk entirely away for a distance of six feet, but its large and spreading branches are so closely entwined in those of the trees growing closely about it, that it is supported by them. Just how its huge bulk is nourished is a mystery, but that it is well nourished is evident, for it is green and flourishing.

He Was an Exception.

"The youthful King of Spain one day recently was served for lunch with the breast of a chicken cut in small pieces. He at once began to help himself without the aid of either spoon or fork. "Sire," said his attendant gravely, "kings never eat with their fingers."

"This King does," responded His Majesty, continuing his meal.

Official Directory of Pocahontas County.

Judge of Circuit Court, A. S. Campbell.
Prosecuting Attorney, L. M. McClintic.
Sheriff, M. J. Mcneel.
Deputy Sheriff, L. W. [illegible]
Clk of Cir. & Co. Courts, J. J. Beard.
Assessor, C. O. Arbogast.
Com'rs Co. Ct. C. L. Beard, S. B. Hannah, G. P. Moore.
Co. Surveyor, Geo. Baxter

THE COURTS.

Circuit Court convenes on the first Monday in April, 3rd Monday in June and 3rd Monday in October.

County Court convenes on the 1st Tuesday in January, March, October and second Tuesday in July. July is levy term.

ANNOUNCEMENTS.

To the Voters of Pocahontas County.

I announce myself an Independent candidate for House of Delegates. If it should be your pleasure on the 4th day of November next, to elect me to represent you in the next Legislature, I pledge myself to use my utmost efforts to secure such legislation as will be favorable especially to the farming and laboring class, and to represent my constituents without partisan bias.

Respectfully,
G. B. [illegible]

HOME NEWS.

—A big crowd attended Court Monday.

—Thanks to those who paid us cash this week.

—Only two or three fights on the first day of Court.

—A little magic lantern show at the Court house Tuesday night.

—At a recent term of the Circuit Court of Randolph Co., the grand jury found 11 indictments.

—Maj. Gaines, the republican nominee for Congress was billed to speak at this place Monday, but failed to show up.

—Died, on Monday 20th inst, Mr. John Gay, of Marlinton departed this life aged 85 years. We will give a more extended notice next week.

—Rev. L. F. Sneppy, will commence a short series of special services at Sunset school house on Knapp's creek next Sunday evening 7 o'clock Oct. 26.

—The following were the attorneys attending Court at this place from a distance: H. S. Turk, of Staunton; J. W. Arbuckle of Lewisburg; Wm. B. McAllister, Geo. W. Revercomb and J. W. Stephenson, of Warm Springs, Va.; L. H. Stephenson and C. P. Jones, of Monterey and Wm. Skeen, of Covington, Va.

—Col. J. W. St. Clair, democratic nominee for State Senate, of Fayetteville, addressed the people of this County in the Court House Monday. He discussed the topics of the day fluently and grandly, showing up in their true light the outrages being perpetrated upon the American people by the present administration. He dwelt a considerable time on the McKinley tariff bill, which doubtless made a deep impression on the minds of the working men of our county.

ABOUT COURT PROCEEDINGS

The following is a list of the proceedings of the Circuit Court, commenced Oct. 20th and adjourned 21st, Judge A. S. Campbell presiding:

STATE CASES.

State of W. Va. vs. R. A. Herold, unlawful sale of spirituous liquors No. 1 and 2. On motion these two cases were continued.

Same vs. Ardell Pritt, felony, sentenced to one year in the penitentiary.

Same vs. John Wade, for carrying deadly weapons endorsed a true bill.

Same vs. F. J. Snyder, misdemeanor, true bill.

Same vs. Enos Sharp, misdemeanor, true bill.

Same vs. Henry Ray, two cases, true bill.

Same vs. Jas. Galford, misdemeanor, true bill.

Same vs. Lusty McCarty, misdemeanor, true bill.

Same vs. J. L. Slaven, true bill.
Same vs. Grats Slaven, true bill.
Same vs. Robt. Doyle, true bill.
Same vs. Jas. Webb, true bill.
Same vs. Jacob Robinson, true bill.
Same vs. Chas. Slaven, true bill.
Same vs. Samuel Bright, true bill.
Same vs. Wm. Bright, true bill.
Same vs. Rebecca Miller, true bill.
Same vs. David Bright true bill.
Same vs. J. B. Apperson true bill.
Same vs. Geo. Wagoner, true bill.
Same vs. Jno. E. [illegible] No. 1, 2 and 3 true bill.

Same vs. Thomas Scott, true bill. This case came up and the attorney for the State in consent of the Court saith, he will not further prosecute and the defendant is allowed to go hence.

Nathan Bober a native of Russia became a citizen of U. S.

Allen C. Rucker vs. [illegible], former decision reversed and ordered that the defendant recover his costs in this Court as well as his costs before the Justice.

[illegible]

RUBE BURROWS, THE NOTED TRAIN ROBBER, SHOT AND KILLED.

BIRMINGHAM, ALA., October 8. —Rube Burrows, the outlaw and train robber, was shot and killed at Linden this morning by J. Carter, one of his captors. Carter received a bullet in the breast from the outlaw's pistol and is dangerously wounded.

Couriers from Linden who have just arrived give a graphic story of the killing. After Burrows was fired, through a pretence of getting something to eat, he grasped a pistol from his saddle bags and disarmed his two jailors. Then he ordered the negro to show him to the hotel where Carter was sleeping, Carter having got his money. He then went to Carter's room and getting the drop on him demanded his money. Carter sprang to one side and drawing a pistol fired at Burrows. The outlaw fired at the same instant, but Carter's sudden movement probably saved his life. He received the outlaw's bullet in his shoulder. The bullet from Carter's pistol struck Burrows in the middle of the abdomen, passing through the body, and he fell dead. Carter is badly wounded, but will recover.

Burrows was one of the most noted of American outlaws and there was a reward of $1,500 offered for his arrest when he was caught. His career has been a varied one. He held up the Illinois Central train at Duck Hill, Miss., December 15, 1888. In July of that same year he killed Postmaster Gardner, of Lamar, Jewell county, for recognizing him. The robbery of the express car on the Mobile and Ohio, at Buckatunna, Miss., followed, for participation in which his pal, Rube Smith, was sentenced to twenty years, the job being done on September 18, 1889. The holding up of the Louisville and Nashville train at Flomaton, Ala., was his last raid, and occurred September 1, at 11 o'clock at night, this year.

Will Mr. Harrison take care of his old law partner and present Attorney General by appointing him to the vacancy caused by the death of Justice Samuel F. Miller on the bench of the Supreme Court? He will if he has his own way, but the Attorney General is not popular with the republican bosses because, as U. S. Treasurer Huston says, he takes no interest in "practical politics," and it is not probable that Mr. Harrison will be allowed to have his own way.

According to the New York Press good republican authority, the workingmen of this country must not expect to be benefitted by the new tariff law for a long time to come, and it ingeniously advises them to be patient under their increased living expenses. This advice might be more generally taken by the workingmen if they did not fully realize that the same law which is making them poorer every day is piling up unearned wealth for the favored manufacturer.

There is a great excitement at Albany, Wis., over the discovery of pearls in the Sugar River. The gems have also been discovered in Manitowoc, the Kilbaska and Mud Creek.

[illegible]

[illegible]

To the Commissioners of Election in [illegible]

A VACANCY having occurred in the office of Judge of the Supreme Court of Appeals of this State, caused by the death of Hon. [illegible], of Jefferson county, one of the judges of said court, who was elected for the term beginning on the first day of January, 1877, and ending on the 31st day of December, 1888, you are hereby commanded, in the name of the State of West Virginia, to cause a poll to be opened and an election to be held at the several places of voting in your respective counties, at the next general election to be held on Tuesday, the 4th day of November, 1890, for the purpose of electing a Judge of the Supreme Court of Appeals to fill the above vacancy in said office for the unexpired term.

In witness whereof, I, A. B. Fleming, Governor of said State have hereunto set my hand and caused the Great Seal of the said [L. S.] State to be affixed, at the Capitol, in the city of Charleston this 10th day of September, in the year 1890, and of the State the twenty-eighth.

By the Governor: A. B. FLEMING.
Wm. [illegible],
Secretary of State.

...es.

...AL,

...ETOR.

...at Hunters... ...class matter.

...G RATES.

		3 m.	6 m.	1 yr.
[illegible]	1 00	$ 2 00	$ 3 00	$ 5 00
[illegible]	2 00	4 00	6 00	10 00
...s	3 00	6 00	10 00	17 00
...'n	6 00	12 00	20 00	30 00
...ol'n	10 00	22 00	30 00	50 00

Reading notices, not exceeding five lines, twenty-five cents for each insertion, and five cents a line for each additional line.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION.

One copy, 1 yr., $1.00 in advance; after 6 months, $1.25; after 12 months, $1.50

These terms will be strictly complied with.

Huntersville, W. Va.

October 23, 1890.

Demo cratic Ticket.

For Congress—Third District,
JOHN D. ALDERSON,
Of Nicholas County.

For State Senator—8th Senatorial District,
J. W. ST. CLAIR,
Of Fayette County.

For Judge Supreme Court,
DAN'L B. LUCAS,
Of Jefferson County.

For House of Delegates,
L. B. MOORE.

For County Commissioner,
G. M. KEE.

For Clerk Circuit Court,
J. H. PATTERSON

For Clerk County Court,
S. L. BROWN.

For Sheriff
J. C. ARBOGAST.

Speaking of the contest for the next republican Presidential nomination, Mr. Benjamin Harrison seems to have an idea that he is "in it." The idea is not, however, shared by the "bosses" of his party.

If the ladies who intend buying or have already bought the material for their winter dresses could vote at the Congressional elections republicans would be mighty scarce in the next House of Representatives. Dress goods have been largely increased in price on account of the higher duties imposed by the new republican tariff law.

The Democratic Congressional Campaign Committee has at last succeeded in getting its text book into print. It will doubtless prove very valuable and interesting to the hangers on around the committee rooms at Washington, and, owing to the nearness of election day it will not circulate much further, more's the pity.

The republican party has done a great many things that would not stand close inspection by honest eyes, but we find it hard to believe that its leaders would countenance a scheme to deliberately falsify the Census returns for the purpose of retaining control of the House of Representatives and of gaining votes in the electoral college. That they will manipulate the census returns for such a purpose we believe, but for the sake of American honor we trust that there is no truth in the falsification scheme as published in the New York World.

At Weston, a young man named Charles Williams, who was to have been married in a few days, committed suicide by taking an over dose of laudanum. He had been acting strangely for about a week, and it is believed that his mind was affected. He had made all arrangements for his marriage to Miss Annie Welsh and had his house furnished, and everything was in readiness for the coming event.

And now it seems that the World's Fair is to be classed with the numerous things injured by the new tariff law. The latest European advices say that the majority of manufacturers refuse to send any exhibits to Chicago, taking the ground that it would be a useless expenditure of money for them to do so as the duties imposed by the new tariff law are so high as to practically shut their goods out of the American markets. Without foreign exhibits the World's Fair will be but a travesty upon its name.

Mr. Harrison may or may not ask for the resignation of his Commissioner of Pensions, but among honest men, no matter what their political opinions may be, there is no difference of opinion as to what he ought to do. Commissioner Raum, according to his own statements unfit to be at the head of a Government bureau through which two fifths of the nation's enormous revenues are disbursed, and if Mr. Harrison condones the Commissioner's offenses by keeping him in office he will become personally responsible for them.

The farmer or other head of a family who pays anywhere from ten to fifty dollars more, according to the quantity purchased, for the winter clothing of himself and family than the same would have cost him last year, has a practical illustration of the meaning of the "protection" extended to him by the new tariff law enacted by the republican majority in Congress for the special purpose of enriching the already wealthy manufacturers who furnish the republican party with its campaign corruption funds. It is for him to decide by his vote whether he endorses the robbery or not.

WASHINGTON LETTER.

From our regular correspondent.

WASHINGTON, D. C., Oct. 17.—There's a limit to all things, even to republican audacity. Mr. Harrison, after a rather stormy discussion in which his cabinet was nearly equally divided, has reached the conclusion that it would be certain defeat to his party at the Congressional elections for him to issue a proclamation convening Congress in extra session for the sole purpose of passing the Force bill and the Congressional apportionment bill, two measures intended to perpetuate the power of the republican party. This conclusion is another victory for Mr. Blaine over the Reed wing of his party—Mr. Blaine has never wavered in his opposition to the Force bill.

"Mr. Flower and the Democratic Congressional Campaign committee," said a member of that committe to me, "are all right, and the democrat who abuses Mr. Flower for his management of the campaign does not know what he is talking about. From the day on which he was elected chairman of the committee to the present time, he has not made the slightest move without first consulting Senator-elect Brice, chairman of the National committee, and Senator Gorman, and nothing has been done without their approval. Now if those two gentlemen do not know how to conduct a campaign no one in the democratic party does. Of course Mr. Flower has been to a certain extent hampered by the lack of money, but that is nothing new to democratic campaign managers. The democratic party has never had a large corruption campaign fund, and I hope it never will. If we cannot win without purchasing votes I prefer to lose. But unless all of my information is at fault we shall carry the House in spite of the "protected manufacturers' money, with which the republicans are so plentifully supplied."

Ex Senator Kellogg, once the republican Moses in Louisiana, sees no prospect of his party carrying the House. He says: "Business men and politicians with whom I have conversed—all republicans—declare that the new tariff law will operate to the disadvantage of the party and will lose us the House in the coming elections. It will have a tendency to drive away the farmer vote when that class ascertains that the cost of many articles of prime necessity is directly increased by reason of the McKinley bill. A rise in prices all along the line seems to be expected, and as that means additional burdens for the consumer, great complaint is inevitable. It seems quite reasonable therefore to expect that the democrats will carry the House. In Louisiana I don't think the republicans will win a single Congressional District."

Strange things happen here. Yesterday W. W. Belknap, who resigned as Secretary of War in Grant's cabinet, in order to keep from being impeached in connection with the selling of Indian Posttraderships by his wife, was buried with military honors in Arlington cemetery, the War department was closed in his honor and the building heavily draped with mourning. This thing of closing a Government department on account of the death of some man who years before was at its head is a senseless custom at best, and what a mockery in this case.

The funeral services of the late Justice Miller were held in the Supreme Court room yesterday afternoon, and last night the remains, accompanied by a distinguished escort left on a special train for Keokuk, Iowa, where the interment is to take place. The scramble for the place he left vacant is already quite lively among the republicans. Attorney General Miller on account of his personal relations with Mr. Harrison, has the inside track, but it is by no means certain that he will get the prize. Secretary Noble would gladly take it, but "Corporal" Tanner says he will not, if his soldier influence can prevent it. Senator Edmunds would not object, although he would only have about eight years to serve before he became eligible for retirement, but they say the East isn't in it. Senator Spooner and several other gentlemen have friends here working in their behalf, and the Indiana folks who are opposed to Attorney General Miller are trying to do something for Judge Gresham. Before Congress reassembles the number of candidates will be largely increased.

Representative Kerr, who is chairman of the Democratic State committee of Pennsylvania, was here this week. He says that Quayism is doomed in that state, and that if the election was held now Delemater would be defeated by from 30,000 to 40,000 majority.

Mr. Harrison did not express any regrets because the Count of Paris did not remain in Washington long enough to call on the President, in fact there is reason to believe that certain members of the administration were instrumental in hurrying the Count off to prevent that call

One of the worst storms of the season passed over Bellaire, Ohio, on the 17th. Houses were flooded and cattle, sheep and horses were washed away.

COMMISSIONER'S SALE OF LAND.

Pursuant to a decree of the Circuit Court of Pocahontas county, rendered at the June term 1890 in the cause of [illegible] I will on Monday the [illegible] day of [illegible] 1890, offer for sale at public auction in front of the Court House door of Pocahontas County, that certain tract of land containing [illegible] acres and [illegible] poles of land, the property of the defendant Henry C. Hosey, situate on the waters of Knapp's creek adjoining the lands of F. A. Pifer and others. This is a valuable tract of land and has [illegible] and has on it considerable improvements, including dwelling house.

TERMS OF SALE.

Sufficient cash in hand to pay the costs of this suit and expenses of sale, and the residue in six months from the day of sale, bearing interest from that day, the purchaser to execute bond with good personal security for the deferred payment, and the title to be retained as ultimate security.

L. M. MCCLINTIC, Com'r.

I, John J. Beard, Clerk of the Circuit Court of Pocahontas County do certify that the Commissioner above has given bond as required by law.

JOHN J. BEARD, C'lk.

Sept. 18-4t. Printer's fee [illegible]

COMMISSIONER'S SALE OF LAND.

Pursuant to a decree of the Circuit Court of Pocahontas County, rendered at the June Term 1890 in the cause of William Gibson vs. C. A. Yeager and others, I will on Monday the 27th day of October, 1890, offer for sale at public auction to the highest bidder, in front of the Court-House door of Pocahontas County that Certain tract of land containing 120 acres the property of the defendant C. A. Yeager lying on the East branch of Greenbrier River adjoining the lands of P. D. Yeager [illegible] Yeager, and others, said land is fertile, well improved and has a comfortable dwelling house and out-building upon it.

TERMS OF SALE:

Enough cash in hand to pay the costs of this suit and expenses of sale and the residue in six Twelve and Eighteen months from the day of sale, in Equal payments bearing interest from that day the purchaser executing bond with good personal security for the deferred payments and the title being retained as ultimate security.

L. M. MCCLINTIC, Com'r.

I, John J. Beard, Clerk of the Circuit Court of Pocahontas County, do certify that the Commissioner above has given bond as required by law.

JOHN J. BEARD, C'lk.

Sept. 18-4t. Printer's fee $3.75

COMMISSIONER'S SALE OF LAND.

Valuable Land in Pocahontas County.

Pursuant to a decree of the Circuit Court of Pocahontas County rendered at the June term, 1890, in the chancery cause of Geo. A. Revercomb, Special Receiver &c. vs. A. G. Beazer, We the undersigned Commissioners, will offer for sale at public auction to the highest bidder at the front door of the Court house of Pocahontas County on the [illegible] day of October 1890, A tract of one hundred acres of land belonging to A. G. Beazer, situated on the South East side of Middle Mountain in Pocahontas County, W. Va., near the Big Spring. This one of the most valuable tracts of land in the County and is in a high state of cultivation.

TERMS OF SALE:

Sufficient cash in hand to pay cost of suit and expense of sale and the residue in three equal payments, payable in six, twelve and eighteen months respectively the purchaser to execute bond with approved security for the deferred payments, bearing interest from day of sale, and the title to the land as ultimate security.

GEO. A. REVERCOMB,
C. F. [illegible], Com'rs.

I, John J. Beard, Clerk of the Circuit Court of Pocahontas County do certify that the bond required by the decree in said cause has been duly executed.

JOHN J. BEARD, C'lk.

Sept. 18-4 Printer's fee $3.9[illegible]

COMMISSIONER'S SALE OF

Valuable Hotel Property.

Pursuant to Decrees of the Circuit Court of Pocahontas County entered at the October term 1889 and the June term, 1890 in the Chancery cause of Peter Beverage and others vs. J. R. Apperson and others, and R. S. Turk, Trustee vs. Jennie B. Skiles and others, I will, as Special Commissioner, appointed for the purpose, sell at public auction to the highest bidder, in front of the Court House door of Pocahontas County, W. Va. on

MONDAY, OCT 27th 1890

A certain tract of land containing one acre, on which is a large and commodious dwelling house and suitable out building situated at [illegible], in Pocahontas county, being the same property formerly occupied by T. B. Skiles. This is a most desirable property suitable for hotel purposes or summer resort and located in a good neighborhood convenient to churches and schools.

TERMS OF SALE.

Sufficient cash in hand to pay the costs of suit and expenses of sale; the balance in two equal installments, falling due in 9 and 18 months from day of sale. The purchaser to execute bonds with approved personal security bearing interest from date for the deferred payments; a lien will be retained on said property as ultimate security.

L. [illegible],
Special Com'r.

I, John J. Beard, clerk of the circuit court of Pocahontas county, certify that the above commissioner has given bond as required by law.

JOHN J. BEARD, Clerk cir. ct.

September 25-4t. Printer's fee $13.[illegible]

TAMING A FLOCK OF QUAILS.

Buckwheat and Gradual Advances Overcome the Wild Birds.

Several weeks ago Mrs. D. N. Snyder, of Jefferson township, Penn., saw a lot of quails dusting themselves under some currant bushes in the back end of her garden. The birds looked so happy and contented that she thought it would be too bad to disturb them, so she returned home without pulling the weeds out of a patch of onions that she had gone there for the purpose of doing. In an hour or so the quails had disappeared in the tall timothy of the adjoining meadow, and Mrs. Snyder scattered some buckwheat around where they had been wallowing. On the following day the birds came there again, gobbled up the buckwheat and had a good time. Every day for a week or so Mrs. Snyder scattered grain among the bushes for the quails to feed on, and the birds soon got so that they looked for food in the garden as regularly as they did for a resting place at night out in the woods, back of the big meadow lot.

One morning the kind-hearted woman forgot to throw the buckwheat, but the quails reminded her of her negligence by appearing at the usual hour and making a great fuss and noise because there wasn't any grain in the garden for them to pick up. Mrs. Snyder let the birds hunt for other kind of food that day, and for several mornings after that she didn't fail to give them a good feed of buckwheat. Then she missed a morning on purpose to see how the quails would act when they didn't find any grain near the currant bushes, watching from a second-story window for them to make their appearance.

Promptly on time the whole flock crept under the garden fence from the meadow, ran among the bushes, and began to dodge and flutter about where they had been in the habit of finding the buckwheat. When they searched long enough to learn that no grain had been put there for them, the birds piped in low tones, fluttered uneasily, scattered into the vegetable beds, and appeared to be very much disappointed. In a little while the quails gave up the search, assembled under the currant bushes, and went to dusting themselves in the soil. Mrs. Snyder counted fourteen in the flock, and then she went down stairs, got a handful of buckwheat, and tiptoed her way into the garden. When she had got as near to the quails as she could get without scaring them, Mrs. Snyder flung a handful of buckwheat toward the quiet little flock. It fell among them and they all scampered under the fence and went out of sight in a hurry. Then she threw some more of the grain on the ground where they had been, and secreted herself behind a row of pea vines. Presently one of the birds ventured to crawl under the fence into the garden. It soon found the buckwheat and set to filling its crop, and at this the other birds took courage, filed from their hiding places, and went to picking up the grain as though each was determined to get its share.

From her place of concealment Mrs. Snyder flung a handful of buckwheat into the air, so that it fell into the midst of the flock. It scared the birds a little, but they quickly resumed their feeding, and Mrs. Snyder began to whistle to them, flinging more grain into the air as she whistled. That excited their curiosity just enough to make them look up for a moment, and Mrs. Snyder emptied the basin and stole away, without letting the birds see her. She fed the quails in this way for a few days, gradually got them used to her whistle and voice, and let them get sight of her by degrees. Inside of a month from the time she first saw the birds in the garden she had them so well tamed that they fluttered out of the meadow whenever she called them, ate in her presence, and did not seem to fear her at all. Since then Mrs. Snyder has taken a good deal of comfort with her strange little flock, and she said the other day that the confidence the birds have in her pays her many times over for all the trouble she has made herself in getting the wild little creatures to be as tame as they are.

Preservation of Harness.

The best preservative of harness is occasional washing with warm water and saturation with some oily substance, by which the leather is preserved from the alternating damp and dryness and from the destructive effects of the prevalent impure air of the stables. The harness should be taken apart and wiped with a sponge moistened with warm water and castile soap. While damp it is then thoroughly dressed with a mixture of two parts of tallow and one part of castor oil, mixed when melted; to this is added sufficient lamp-black to restore the color to the leather. This is thoroughly rubbed into the harness with a bunch of oakum or a brush. The surplus is then removed by means of rubbing with a cloth. Finally castor oil with a small quantity of carbolic acid, to give it a perceptible odor, is rubbed into the leather as long as it will be absorbed. This preserves the harness from rats and mice, which are apt to gnaw it where it has been moistened by the perspiration of the horse. It is a wise thing to have a close [illegible] in some convenient place to hang [illegible] in.—[New York Times.

[illegible]ity of Consumption.

[illegible] of experiments, Dr. [illegible] certain bodies, such as [illegible] certain metallic salts, [illegible] and preparations [illegible] small doses (1 to [illegible]) destroy the [illegible] a very short [illegible] that is [illegible] will be [illegible] disease by [illegible] injury to [illegible]

WILD BILL'S WAY.

How One of the Desperado's Many Victims Met His End.

"It has been a good many years since I was in Denver," remarked William P. Jameson at the Albany recently, as he prepared to look over a paper from San Francisco, his present place of residence. "The last time I was in this city," continued he, "I made the acquaintance of Wild Bill, whose sudden taking off at Deadwood is still mentioned in the papers. A few months after leaving Denver I again met Wild Bill in Salt Lake City. It was rather an exciting time, for Bill had just killed a man in the streets. The circumstances of the killing were about as follows:

"The night before the affray Bill sat down to a game of cards with an old frontiersman named Jack Williams. Both the men were good card players, but luck went against Bill, and about three o'clock in the morning he staked his last cent and lost it. With some hesitation he drew out his watch, which was a fine gold repeater and was the present of a friend of former days, and put the watch up against $200. At the end of ten minutes the watch was gone.

"'Williams,' said Bill as he arose from his seat,' put the watch in the hands of the bar-keeper and I will redeem it in the morning.'

"'Oh, I guess not,' was the reply. 'The watch is mine and I'll wear it down town in the morning.'

"A wicked gleam appeared in Bill's eyes. He again asked that the watch be left at the saloon.

"'I'll wear it,' was the reply.

"'If you wear that watch you'll die,' said Bill, with a firm tone. 'What time will you be on the street?'

"'Ten o'clock,' was the laughing reply. The men parted.

"True to his word Williams sauntered down the street at ten o'clock the next morning. Bill met him at the principal street corner.

"'Have you got that watch on?' asked Bill.

"'I have,' was the prompt reply.

"Both reached for their revolvers, but Bill was too quick for his opponent. Two shots rang out and Williams dropped dead. Bill was unhurt.

"Looking scornfully at his fallen victim, Bill hissed between his teeth, 'I like a game man, but that's what a fool gets.' Bill was never tried for killing Williams and it is safe to say that he recovered his watch. I have been told," continued the speaker, "that after Wild Bill's death it was found that in the palm of each of his hands there was a round, calloused spot caused by dropping his hands on the handles of his revolvers."—[Denver News.

An Imprisoned Fish.

The following was related in the Chattanooga (Tenn.) News by one of its correspondents residing near that city:

"My cousin owns a watermill, and in removing some obstructions found an immense log imbedded in the stream which must have been submerged for a number of years. The log had to be cut in two to remove it, and much to our surprise we found it hollow, although it had every appearance of being solid. One of the negroes while examining the log looked into the hollow and thought he saw something moving. He began using his axe, and soon had the log cut into in another place.

"Imagine our amazement when we discovered a live catfish which had grown to an enormous size and length, and was so completely wedged in the hollow as to be unable to move except to open its mouth and wiggle its tail. The fish was very lively and apparently in the enjoyment of excellent health.

"The question is how did the fish get into the log, as the only means of ingress or egress we could discover was a small round hole not more than two inches in diameter. We surmised that he must have entered the little opening when no larger than a minnow, and grown great in his solitary confinement."

Statistics of Tornadoes.

The tornado, with hardly an exception, occurs in the afternoon, just after the hottest part of the day. The time of greatest frequency is from 3.30 to 5 o'clock. The tornado season includes March, April, May, June, July, August and September, but storms of this nature may occur in any part of the year. The months of greatest frequency, as determined from a record of 208 years, are April, May, June and July. The single month of greatest frequency is May, April following next in order. The State in which the greatest number of tornadoes has occurred is Missouri, followed next in order by Kansas and Georgia. A record of more than 500 tornadoes and "windfalls" (i. e., paths of tornadoes through forests) in Wisconsin considerably exceeds the number from any other State, but little weight can be given this comparison owing to the want of thorough investigation of the subject of windfalls in other States. From a careful investigation of the origin of tornadoes and their geographical distribution, there is every reason to believe that these storms were as frequent and violent 200 years ago as now. Moreover, there appears to be no cause for any unusual change in the annual frequency of tornadoes for a like period to come.—[The Forum.

AN EVENTFUL DEAL.

"Speaking of poker hands," said young Pecos, of Texas, "I once played in a three-cornered game in which one man held five aces and the other man a six-shooter—."

"And you?"

"And I held an inquest."—[St. Joseph News.

THE HOURS.

When a man is apparently idle, it may be that his time is most profitably employed. "This were sometime a paradox," but he who reflects upon it will see its meaning. All hard workers learn, sooner or later, the truth that recreation is an absolute necessity for tired bodies and tired minds.

The idle time of Bacon, Pope, Cowper, and many another famous writer, has been spent in gardening. It is said that market gardening is the one passion of Blackmore, the English novelist, and that he spends the money earned by his pen in carrying out this dearly beloved hobby. And who could wish it otherwise? Doubtless the poetical spirit which pervades his work is that caught from long days spent in homely tasks in the garden and the field. "Some men dig up worms from the earth," says an old proverb, "others uncover truth."

"No one," declares Cicero, "seems to me free who does not sometimes do nothing." Then he goes on to tell how certain noble Romans amused themselves in the country, by indulging, boy-like, in all sorts of frolics. Evidently they jumped and ran themselves into physical well-being, and ability to take up the severer duties of life again.

"Who is your doctor?" said some one to Carlyle.

"My best doctor," replied he, "is a horse."

Sometimes apparent idleness is only a change of work. George Lewes was one day dredging a road-side pond, putting all the living treasures he found into a glass jar.

"What are you doing?" inquired a sneering by-stander. "Fishing for salmon?"

But when he saw what strange beings were discovered in that unpromising pool, his interest was excited and he asked Mr. Lewes many curious questions, all of which were patiently answered.

"Ah," said the scoffer, respectfully, at the end of the interview, "it's a fine thing to be able to name all God's creatures!"

Acquaintance with nature draws the mind out of the rut wherein it daily runs, and freshens it for the doing of new tasks. Rest often consists in change of work, the relaxation of one set of brain cells in favor of others. One may certainly consider it occupation to collect specimens like Lewes, ride horseback like Carlisle, or chop wood with Gladstone, but it is occupation which invigorates and does not tire.

The periods of indolence in the life of a student or creator, are merely those "grand receptive pauses," when he drinks in nourishment from nature herself, to sustain his vitality. When the giant Antæus was thrown, and touched the earth, he rose more vigorous than before.—Youth's Companion.

A Cairo bachelor, who, the advertiser said, was "eighty-seven years old, but rich," has received 250 applications from ladies willing to be his wife—and risk his dying pretty soon.

"Which is the best way to get fat, doctor?" "Order from your butcher a piece of lean beef."

The tea-kettle sings because it is always able to keep itself outside of hot water.

When one lays hold of a severed bell-rope he fails to touch a responsive cord.

The average burglar, though he may be regarded as a crook, is true as steel.

An optimist is a man who has enjoyed "bully" good luck up to date.

There is nothing square about gossip. It is always "going round."

It is unreasonable to expect a man to be collected if his bills are not.

In regattas cat boats ought to be the first to come to the scratch.

Railroad engineers should be experts in keeping track of things.

A house divided against itself cannot stand the rent.

Always struck on the head—Matches.

Always worn out—Rubber overshoes.

A crying need—A handkerchief.

A joint concern—A skeleton.

Copyright, 1890.

B N U 10

POCAHONTAS TIMES.

JOHN E. CAMPBELL, Editor and Proprietor.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION: $1.00 Per Year, in Advance.

VOL. VIII. HUNTERSVILLE, W. VA., THURSDAY, OCTOBER 30, 1890. NO. 14.

WHERE SHE COMES.

With heavy elders overhung,
 Half hid in clover masses,
An old fence rambles on, among
 The tangled meadow-grasses.
It makes a shade for lady-fern
 Which nestles close beside it;
While clematis, at every turn,
 And roses almost hide it.

In shade of overhanging sprays
 And down a sunny hollow,
By hazel-copse, and woodland ways,
 The winding fence I follow;
By rose, and thorn, and fragrant dew,
 In search of something sweeter—
The orchard-gap, where she comes through,
 And I go down to meet her!

The sunlight slants across the fence,
 Where lichens gray it over,
And stirs a hundred dreamy scents
 From fern, and mint, and clover;
But though the air is sweet to-day,
 I know of something sweeter:
That she can only come this way,
 And I am sure to meet her!

And so, while chipmunks run a match
 To tell the wrens who's coming,
And all across the brier patch
 There sounds a drowsy humming—
The hum of honey-seeking bees—
 I seek for something sweeter:
A gap, amongst the apple-trees,
 Where I am going to meet her!

—Charles B. Going, in Scribner.

A NATURAL TRAP.

BY FRANK GILLETTE.

I had been riding several hours through the hot dust of a Southern Arizona plain on the trip from Antelope to the home ranch. I had not seen a living thing except the scurrying lizards, when I noticed ahead a man on horseback, riding rapidly toward me.

At that point the trail led across a great cactus plain known as Lonesome Valley. It was not a valley at all in the usual sense of the word, but a broad, level sweep of sandy desert stretching between two abrupt ranges of mountains. There was not a tree on it more than ten feet high, but I will venture to say that there were more varieties of cactus, and more of those villainous plants to the square yard, than could be found in any other spot on the globe. Southern Arizona is the garden of the cactus, and this desert must have been its own particular hot-bed. I had been in the country scarcely six months, but I had already acquired a horror of cactus thorns, and guided my horse along the trail with a care which did not admit of great speed.

The rider whom I saw approaching me in Lonesome Valley evidently had no such fear. His animal, which he was urging forward at a rapid lope, swerved easily to the right and left, threading the mazes of the cactus growth with the trained sense of a Mexican pony.

As they approached I made out that the rider was a Mexican. At a still closer view I saw that he was a rather good-looking Mexican, but poorly dressed, and that evidently he was on a journey. He had with him a canteen, a pair of worn, greasy blankets, and a lightly packed gunny sack. His horse was a homely, sharp boned animal, built for speed and endurance, forced marches, and long stages without water; but at present he was certainly tired. I will not say "tired out," for these ponies are never tired out until they are dead.

The man checked his rapid pace as we neared each other, and I thought, was about to pass with the customary buenos dias, when he cast a quick glance at my horse, and reined in his own. I halted also.

"You haf verra fine hoss there, senor," he said, in a tone of the utmost politeness.

My horse, which I called Montezuma, was, in fact, a larger and better shaped animal than is often seen in that country. I had picked him out for that reason on my first visit to Antelope, and at the time prided myself not a little on my choice. He was, indeed, a horse of excellent appearance and action, but he had some defects. His very build showed that he was a Northern or an Eastern horse, and not native born, and I found that he was by no means equal to the native breed in endurance or wiry strength. He could not travel so far nor go so long without water, nor was he as sure footed. However, he made an imposing appearance, and served me very well in my rides, which were chiefly for pleasure.

He [illegible] up his ears, and the polite Mexican [illegible] again. "You haf verra fine hoss, senor."

[illegible], he's a very good horse," I replied, not very cordially, but still with courtesy, for it seemed to me polite to be courteous to a man who was probably the only human being within ten miles.

"He no born in thees countree? I see no hoss lika heem in Arizona, nevare. But, senor," with a glance at his own sharp-boned, panting beast, "there is one verra eggscellanta Mexicana hoss. I rida heem now one, two, three day. I rida heem verra hard, and see!"

He touched the animal lightly with his spurs, lifted the hand with which he held the reins, and leaned forward. The horse sprang instantly into a furious lope, as if he had but just been saddled for the first time. The Mexican wheeled him gracefully in a long circle through the cactus plants, and drew him in again on his haunches by my side.

"Ah, senor, he is the one hoss of one meellion! He go and go and go, and nevare stop. He drink only the one time a day, and he eat, ah, so leetle! In one year he no eat so mucha as a burro. But perhaps the senor," and here his face wore a most persuasive smile, "will lika to eggschange! The senor will gif to to me hees hoss, and I will gif to heem my magnifico Chihuahua."

"No; I do not wish to trade horses at all," I said, with less cordiality than before, as I began to feel decidedly uneasy in the presence of this smiling foreigner.

"No!" he said, in a tone of regret. Then, after a moment, his face lighting up, he added: "Ah, but the senor has nevare tried heem! He does not know Chihuahua. If he try heem only the once, he see that I tella heem the truth."

He threw himself to the ground and came toward me, smiling. I now saw his plan. He was a desperate man, probably flying to Mexico to escape the consequences of some crime. My horse had attracted him at first sight. Either he needed it to help him on his journey, or thought he might sell it for a good sum across the border.

It seemed to me an excellent plan to go at once without losing any more time in useless conversation. I turned quickly in the saddle, murmured a somewhat unnecessary "Good-by," and spurred Montezuma toward home.

The horse was fresh, and started away in good shape; but in an instant the Mexican had sprung into his saddle, and was after me. There was now no doubt as to his intentions. As I looked back I saw that his face had lost its smile, and taken on a cruel, sullen look. He dug his spurs into his horse, and the animal sprang into the same furious gallop that I had seen before.

My heart sank as I realized that it was perhaps a race of life and death. The defects of my horse came to my mind with startling distinctness. How gladly would I have exchanged him for the homeliest cow pony in the country! The Mexican's horse was not gaining on us now, for Montezuma was fresh; but could he outrun that relentless pursuer on a five mile stretch?

Then what if Montezuma should stumble and throw me to the ground head foremost! At the thought of this I turned again to the front. I could not afford to watch my pursuer. I must keep a clear lookout ahead. If I could only guide my horse safely around every hole and stone and across every wash, perhaps we could yet pull away from the scoundrel behind me.

At this moment something struck me a terrific blow in the back of the head. I thought I had been shot, and turned slowly to look at my murderer. The end of a heavy, worn lasso was just slipping off the saddle behind me, and the Mexican, with an exclamation, was reeling it in, evidently making ready to throw again. He had seen that my horse was gaining, and accordingly had recourse to that most effective long-range weapon, the lariat. His first throw had missed me by an inch, and he was cursing himself for his clumsiness.

I was not a thrower of the "lass," myself, but I was familiar with its powers. One of the rough sports of cowboys, after work, is to "rope" one another. In a wild race in and out of the corral one of them tries to throw his rope so as to encircle the man ahead without catching the horse at the same time. If successful he drags him to the ground, more or less roughly. But is only play, rough as it is. It would be no play to be caught by the cruel rope which the wretch was coiling on his left arm.

I watched him as if fascinated. He reached for the loop, opened it wide, turned sidewise in the saddle and swung it round his head. If it caught me I should be dragged headlong to the ground. If I leaned close to the horse it would close over us both, and we would go down together. In either case certain injury or death threatened me. In utter despair I pulled up my horse and stopped.

The Mexican rode swiftly up, coiling his lasso as he came. The hard look gave way to the same smile that he had worn before, but I thought I detected something grim in it at this time. Again, with that horrible politeness, he said:

"Ah, the senor is too queek—he no wait to say adios! But the hoss, he is as I say, he is verra fast. Will the senor no try my hoss now! Si, si, I think he will lika try Chihuahua now. He's hoss is mucha tired, he lika little rest!"

In the same graceful way as before he threw himself to the ground, and instantly caught Montezuma by the bridle. I was entirely unarmed. I had no doubt that the Mexican was well armed and quite ready to kill me if I attacked him. I dismounted slowly, with bad grace. To my surprise, the Mexican handed me the bridle of his horse with a bow.

"Now, you shall try my Chihuahua! There is no more bettare in thees countree. You will so say, eef you will try heem only."

But I had no heart to mount. I had little doubt that the beast which was now leering at me with a vicious eye would back me off at the first jump. The Mexican waited a moment out of sheer courtesy, then mounted Montezuma and started gracefully off. He did not push him to his utmost at first, but went down the road carefully, as if trying him. Then he turned and came back at a somewhat better pace.

I stood like a dummy, holding the bridle of his horse, and watching him. His riding was a magnificent exhibition, but I was not in a condition to admire it.

As if satisfied with the powers of Montezuma, he turned again and came down past me at full speed. As he passed, he shouted a few words in Spanish to his horse. The beast jerked back from me, struck at me with his forefeet, and was after his master in an instant.

The Mexican had turned in the saddle and was watching us with interest. As his horse broke away from me, a smile spread over the man's face which was more than a smile of politeness, and he raised his hat in a sweeping bow of derision.

I stood there as if paralyzed, on Lonesome Valley Desert, fifteen miles from home, and watched the villain ride my horse toward Mexico.

But the Mexican cared too much for theatrical display. His people are the most perfect riders in the world, and my enemy was no exception to the rule. But he made a mistake in assuming that all horses are as sure-footed as he was secure in his seat. This is true of Mexican ponies, the only ones he had ever ridden, but it was not true of Montezuma.

As the Mexican spurred him deep, still looking back over his shoulder at me, Montezuma came to a gully or wash. There are thousands of them across every road and trail in the Southwest. This one was not more than three feet deep and five feet across. A native horse would have jumped it or leaped into it safely, even if it were six feet deep. But Montezuma, as he came to the wash, made no effort to jump over, but plunged in with his forefeet set together.

As he struck the bottom, which was of rock loosely covered with sand, his knees doubled under him like straws. The best rider in the world would not have kept his seat. The Mexican, still glancing back at his own horse, went off as if hurled from a catapult.

Montezuma jumped up, shook himself and limped slowly away. I involuntarily ran forward. The Mexican did not rise, and I guess he was dead or stunned. As I drew nearer, however, I could see that he was not dead, but very much alive. He lay on his back with his right arm stretched out over his head, and was writhing to and fro, as if in great pain.

The man certainly was in a serious predicament. When Montezuma stumbled, he had been thrown straight upon a large fish-hook cactus—a low cylindrical variety, completely covered with long recurving overlapping horny spines, of needle sharpness and most tenacious strength. They resemble enormous bone fish-hooks in everything but the barb.

If the Mexican had struck this cactus head foremost, he would have been killed outright. As it was, his right arm had been thrust deep into the long curving thorns, and they had closed into his arm and hand, holding them in a grip of steel.

As he lay there writhing on the ground, his arm transfixed in a dozen places with these inflexible hooks, I saw my enemy delivered into my power. It only remained to take advantage of the fortunate accident which had humbled him. I first searched him and took possession of his knife and revolver. Then, very slowly, I freed his arm, cutting away the softer parts of the plant rather than trying the almost impossible task of cutting through the thorns.

As the Mexican rose, I mounted to Montezuma's back, and covered the man with the revolver. My precautions were useless. His arm was sprained as well as gashed in a dozen places by the cruel hooks. He painfully removed these, and bound his arm in a bandana that he took from his pocket.

I motioned to him to walk ahead of me, toward the ranch. We made a slow and sorry procession; the furious Mexican in front, Montezuma limping painfully, and myself behind, the other horse following at some distance. But a sense of triumph sustained me through the long journey.

At the ranch we dressed the villain's arm, set a guard over him and sent for the Sheriff. He came, identified him as a daring horse-thief, wanted for several offences in the northern part of the territory, and relieved us of his company.

—Youth's Companion.

Congressmen Joke With a Guide.

There are not many Irishmen in this Congress. Three of the best known sons of Erin are Lawler, McAdoo and Quinn. This trio walked to the capitol at Washington together the other morning, and at the door of the rotunda were met by a new guide who wanted to show them the sights of the building. The three consented, and were taken to statuary hall to hear the echoes. "Now you stand right here," said the guide, placing the trio on the well-known stones. "I will move back fifty-five feet and whisper to you, and you will hear my voice as if I were by your side. All this was done, and the guide whispered, then spoke, and finally shouted, but not a word did either of the trio hear. Thinking that possibly he had made a mistake and put his victims on the wrong stones, he moved them over against the wall and said to them: "This is the whispering gallery. You stand here and I will go across the room and whisper against the wall. You will hear me as if I were at your ear." Again the guide whispered, but met with no response. Then he gradually raised his voice to a shout, but the trio of Congressmen kept their ears against the wall and made no sign. Rejoining his customers, the guide explained that for some reason, probably on account of the humidity of the atmosphere, the echoes were not working well to-day, and invited his guests to take a look at the House of Representatives. Arriving at the main entrance the Congressmen started to walk in, when the guide seized their arms and told them they couldn't go in there—that was only for members. "O, yes, but we can," said Mr. Lawler, and flipping the astonished guide $1 the joking trio disappeared within.—Chicago Herald.

An Odd Bird That Likes Fishing.

Away up on the mountain side, where the numerous streams find their way through deep, dark canyons down to the pulse-beat of old ocean, is the natural summer home of the water ousel, the strangest of all strange birds. You seldom see more than one of them at a time. They are of a dark blue color, and are easily recognized by a peculiar quick jerking motion, which they never seem to tire of. And as they flit from rock to rock they are continually bobbing up and down, performing such a polite little courtesy as would cause you to smile to see it. Owing to their peculiar habits and the isolated spots they select to build their nests, no one but the most ardent sportsmen and naturalists succeeds in finding them. Hence a water ousel's nest with two or three eggs in it has a commercial value among nest collectors of $25. They always build their nests just back of some waterfall or under some overhanging bank, where they have to go through or under the water to get to it. Another strange habit of this bird is the deliberate manner in which they appear to commit suicide. They will start slowly, very slowly, to wade right down into the water until they disappear from view, but if the water is clear and you have a sharp eye you can still see their little dark forms clinging to the bottom in search of their morning repast, which consists of periwinkles.—Tacoma (Washington) Ledger.

Hot Water for a Sore Throat.

"Let me say, for the benefit of your readers who are addicted to using a gargle of salt water every time their throat feels sore, that it is the very worst thing they could possibly do," said Dr. Hope, of the Metropolitan Throat Hospital. "Salt irritates the membrane and injures them, and some of the most aggravated cases of throat trouble that have come under my observation were made chronic by the use of salt. The very best remedy for a sore throat that results from a simple cold or a fatigued voice is a gargle of hot water, just as hot as it can be borne. This gargle is soothing and stimulating and need only be tried once or twice to test the efficacy."—New York World.

A LYRIC FROM THE JAPANESE.

The maple lifts her head,
Crowned with autumnal red,
While I, who love the girl,
Plunge for the biggest pearl,
 Under the waves,
 And up to the caves,
Where stormy billows curl,
And the angry waters whirl!

"Wert thou a pearl," she cried,
As I hurried to her side,
"I would clasp thee on my arm,
For a magical charm,
That like the glowing sun
When the summer day is done,
And rises the cold white moon,
We might part—but not too soon!

"For like a stream that finds
 The way it must retrace;
Or like the pathless winds
 That have no abiding place,
Upon my lonely bed,
With the bride-wreath on my head,
 I wait thy first embrace!

—R. H. Stoddard, in N. Y. Independent.

PITH AND POINT.

No news is bad news—to editors.

The English race—After American girls.

Every dog has his day and the cats seem to be quarreling over the nights.—Life.

The bears are probably responsible for the squeezes on the Stock Exchange.—Puck.

The man who marries a widow knows he isn't marrying amiss.—Detroit Free Press.

Strange as it may seem, it is the man who has lost his voice that makes the loudest and most disagreeable noise in the choir.—Detroit Free Press.

"There is an art in putting on gloves," says a fashion paper. Come to think of it you have to get your hand in before you can master the art.—Boston Courier.

Some men have a fiction
That it is their born right
To imitate their kitchen fire
And go out every night.
—Dansville Breeze.

Art must always get its inspirations from nature. The zebra gave us our first idea of striped clothing, and the elephant was the inventor of loose trousers.—Puck.

"I am in charge of the whole department. As the [illegible] says, I am the eye of the house." "Well, as I have a grudge against the house I think I shall take this opportunity to give it a black eye."—Bazar.

Lawyer—"Well, sir, we won the case, but it was a pretty narrow victory." Client—"Yes, I thought the other side had us, until you showed that their principal witness was a fisherman."—Munsey's Weekly.

Boarding-house Mistress—"How do you like that water, Mr. York?" Mr. York—"It has a milky taste to me." Boarding-house Mistress—"Excuse me, Mr. York, that is the milk you are tasting. Try the glass to the left."—Yonkers Statesman.

Never waste time telling people what a lot of good things you have done. In the first place they won't believe you, and in the second place they are waiting for a chance to tell you what a lot of good things they have done themselves.—Somerville Journal.

I love you well, my sweetheart shy;
 I'm true.
The maiden blushing answered, I
 Love you.
Why do you love me, my adored?—
 A pause.
And then she answered with a word,
 "Because."
—Boston Courier.

Witness—"He looked me straight in the eye and——" Lawyer—"There, sir, you've flatly contradicted your 'former statement.'" Witness—"How so?" Lawyer—"You said before that he bent his gaze on you, and now you'll please explain how he could look you straight in the eye with a bent gaze." (Witness faints.)—The Jester.

An Ancient Watch.

A watch nearly two centuries [illegible] come to the notice of the Jewel[illegible] The movement is inscribed [illegible] L. Hecke, Friedberg," in [illegible] and the dial is ornamented [illegible] ures of a man and wo[illegible] German costume, and [illegible] "Andreas Schuster" in [illegible] text. The watch is [illegible] geniously arranged [illegible] the hours by a sing[illegible] ter hours by a do[illegible] altered key. It [illegible] at any time [illegible] may wish to [illegible] vided for the [illegible] hours in the [illegible] easily to [illegible] keeps [illegible]

Pocahontas Times.

JOHN E. CAMPBELL,
EDITOR AND PROPRIETOR.

Entered at the Post-office at Huntersville, W. Va., as second class matter.

ADVERTISING RATES.

	1 m.	3 m.	6 m.	1 yr.
One inch	1 00	$2 00	$3 00	$5 00
Three in.	2 00	4 00	8 00	10 00
Qr. column	3 00	6 00	10 00	17 00
Half col'n	6 00	12 00	20 00	30 00
One col'n	10 00	20 00	30 00	50 00

Reading notices, not exceeding five lines, twenty-five cents for each insertion, and five cents a line for each additional line.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION.

One copy, 1 yr., $1.00 in advance; after 6 months, $1.25; after 12 months, $1.50. These terms will be strictly complied with.

Huntersville, W. Va.

O tober 30, 1890.

Deme cratic Ticket.

For Congress—Third District,
JOHN D. ALDERSON,
Of Nicholas County.

For State Senator—8th Senatorial District,
J. W. ST. CLAIR,
Of Fayette County.

For Judge Supreme Court,
DAN'L B. LUCAS,
Of Jefferson County.

For House of Delegates,
I. B. MOORE.

For County Commissioner,
G. M. KEE.

For Clerk Circuit Court,
J. H. PATTERSON

For Clerk County Court.
S. L. BROWN.

For Sheriff
J. C. ARBOGAST.

Poems follow the seasons as faithfully as buckwheat cakes and pumkin pies. Every mood and feature of the year is regularly and duly celebrated; but the autumn of 1890 has not fared very well. There hasn't been much of it such as it should have been. Its colors haven't been so bright as usual, and their reflection from the poetic fancy has been dull in consequence. Regular autumn foliage hasn't been painted red enough to rouse the bulliest bull in the fields. The golden rod almost monopolized the fall's rhymes, with the result, of course, of lowering their average.

Our poets are not all golden-rod poets. It is with pleasure, therefore, that we hail the first hymn to the last of autumn's glories, the chrysanthemum, which we find in our esteemed contemporary the Christian Advocate:

"When days are short and sombre,
And nights are long and chill,
And sense of loss and longing
Our being seems to fill,
Then come the brave, bright blossoms,
Last of the floral train,
And looking at their beauty
We gather heart again."

We do, and we gather courage to last us over until spring, when the roses bloom again.

To Whom it may Concern.

Believing that in the late Primary Election unfair means were resorted to in order to defeat the present Clerk, John J. Beard, and knowing, as we do, his peculiar fitness for the position, it has been determined by a large portion of the representative people of the County, regardless of politics to run Mr. Beard for Clerk of the County Court of Pocahontas County. We, therefore urge upon all to come out on the 4th of Nov., 1890, and give him their votes, and thus bestow an office on a worthy man, and at the same time condemn unfair practices.

INDEPENDENT VOTERS.

A CARD.

EDITOR TIMES: Having learned that a written appeal to the voters of Pocahontas county has been posted in various parts of the County signed "Independent Voters" the intent of which is to run Mr. John J. Beard for County Clerk, notwithstanding he was fairly defeated in the Primary Election to which both of us submitted. I deem it my duty to say: First, I did not originate the Primary, but submitted to it as a party measure simply; and I supposed Mr. Beard was in favor of the "Primary Election" as the measure originated with, and was pushed through by his son-in-law, Mr. C. F. Moore. Had the County committee (of which C. F. Moore is chairman,) not called for a primary, I should have been content to submit my claims to the people of this county regardless of party, but I appeal to the people to know if I could act otherwise, when it was forced upon me. I appeal to the Democrats of Pocahontas to say if their nominee shall be defeated by a Democrat who has once submitted his claims and been defeated?

In conclusion, I denounce as false any charge which intimates that I either used, or countenanced in my friends, any unfair means in the Primary Election against Mr. Beard or to obtain votes for myself. Having a clear conscience, I submit my claim to the people of this County, only asking that they and the claims of all opponents be truthfully represented, and, that my friends be not maligned.

Respectfully,
S. L. BROWN.

Huntersville, W. Va., Oct. 29th, 1890.

—The above communications must speak for themselves. Our columns are the peoples columns and must assume neutral ground when brother grapples with brother. Both these gentlemen are good citizens would make good officers and are intimately known to the county public.—[ED.]

WASHINGTON LETTER.

[From our regular correspondent.]

WASHINGTON, D. C., Oct. 24—The republicans in their desperation to save themselves from the defeat which seems to be awaiting them have thrown discretion to the winds, and the scenes around the departments remind one of the times when Jay Hubbell, Dorsey of Star route fame, and others of the same stripe, were compelling the clerks in the Government service to give up a regular percentage of their salaries to the corruption fund of the "G. O. P." Money is being openly demanded of the clerks and in plain language they are told that if they fail to chip in they will lose their places. The Ohioans and Indianians have taken the lead in the bull-dozing of the helpless employes. Mr. Harrison is fully aware of what is going on, and he says not a word to stop this shameful and outrageous violation of law; the members of the Civil Service Commission know all about it, and do nothing, except to draw their salaries. It is apparent that if enough votes can be purchased the republicans will retain their grip on the House of Representatives, but it is the first time that any political party has been so open in showing its intention to rely upon the purchase of votes.

The advices received by the Democratic Congressional committee from all sections show that it is their unlimited supply of money upon which the republicans depend to carry the doubtful districts, but the democrats still hope that the honor of the American voters will be proof against the bribery that will be proffered by the republicans on election day.

The Secretary of the Interior, who is accused of being the author of the insulting letter sent to Mayor Grant, in answer to his request for a recount of the population of New York City, by the chief clerk of the Census Bureau, has refused a second request made by Mayor Grant for a recount, all of which makes it plain that it was the intention of the republicans from the start to steal at least one Congressman from the democrats of New York City. The same policy has been pursued in the South where every state is given a smaller population than it should have, in order to keep down its Congressional representation and its representation in the electoral college. The republicans are playing a bold game, but they may carry it too far. The facts will be fully exposed by the democrats when the apportionment bill comes up in Congress this winter.

The patronage of the Internal Revenue bureau is being used in an unscrupulous manner to defeat the election of the democratic Congressional nominees in West Virginia. Representative Wilson, who has rapidly come to the front on the democratic side of the House by his pluck and ability, passed through Washington this week. He said: "The Internal Revenue gang are hot after me, and the struggle as a result is close in my district. Men are drawing salaries from the Government whose sole duties are to work against me. I have the facts in my possession, subscribed and sworn to in some cases, and they cannot be controverted, and in other districts in the state it is equally as bad." It will not be surprising if Mr. Wilson makes an exposure of this whole business when Congress meets, whatever the result in his district may be. It will be a national loss to the democratic party if Mr. Wilson is defeated.

It looks as though Mr. Harrison's nerve had failed him and that the idea of calling an extra session of Congress for the purpose of passing the Force bill and the apportionment bill had been abandoned. It is still possible that he may issue the proclamation calling it after the election, and very probable should the democrats carry the House, as they will if there is an honest vote cast, and their voters go to the polls.

There are no new developments in the scramble for the place of the late Justice Miller on the bench of the Supreme Court. Attorney General Miller has returned from his visit to Indiana, but it has not transpired whether he succeeded in his effort to make a bargain that would result in the withdrawal of the opposition of the republican leaders of that State to his nomination to the vacancy. That opposition was strong enough last year to defeat his aspirations and if it should be exerted it will do it again but if a deal has been or can be made the Attorney General will get the prize.

The republican District Attorney here has decided that the crime of the recent republican Postmaster of the House, Wheat, in taking bribes, is not punishable under the law, because the law does not recognize the status of Congressional employes. Queer isn't it?

Some surprise is expressed by the thoughtless because the Hon. William Mahone is still wearing a straw hat. Mr. Mahone is so busy making things warm for the Administration in Virginia that his straw hat is none too cool for him.

Copy

This is to certify that I was present and heard Mr. Theopolis Gaines present Candidate for Congress say in a public speech in Alderson the reason he was a republican, was that party favored mixed schools and that he would advise the white people to send their children to them and give them an education if mixed schools were put on them.

L. H. VANCE.

STATE OF WEST VA.,
County of Monroe, to wit;

L. H. Vance on his oath says that the above statement is true and correct to the best of his knowledge and belief.

Taken subscribed and sworn to before me this 24th day of October, 1890.

GEO. C. POLLOCK, [SEAL.]
Notary Public.

[Dir]ectory of Pocahontas County.

Judge of Circuit Court, A. N. Campbell.
Prosecuting Attorney, L. M. McClintic.
Sheriff, M. J. McNeel.
Deputy Sheriff, L. W. Herold.
Cl'k of Cir. & Co. Courts, J. J. Beard.
Assessor, C. O. Arbogast.
Com'rs Co. Ct. { C E. Beard. S B. Hannah. G. P. Moore.
Co. Surveyor, Geo. Baxter

THE COURTS.

Circuit Court convenes on the first Monday in April, 3rd Monday in June and 3rd Monday in October.

County Court convenes on the 1st Tuesday in January, March, October and second Tuesday in July. July is levy term.

C. F. MOORE,
Attorney-at-Law,
Huntersville, W. Va.
Will practice in the courts of Pocahontas and adjoining counties, and in he Supreme court of Appeals.

L. M. McCLINTIC,
Attorney-at-Law,
Huntersville, W. Va.
Will practice in the courts of Pocahontas and adjoining counties and in the Supreme court of Appeals.

D. A. STOFER,
Attorney-at-Law,
Huntersville, W. Va.
Will practice in the courts of Pocahontas and Webster counties.

H. S. RUCKER,
Atty.-at-Law & Notary Public,
Huntersville, W. Va.
Will practice in the courts of Pocahontas county and in the Supreme court of Appeals.

J. W. ARBUCKLE,
Attorney-at-Law,
Lewisburg, W. Va.
Will practice in the courts of Greenbrier and Pocahontas counties.
Prompt attention given to claims for collection in Pocahontas county.

W. L. KEE,
Atty.-at-Law,
Beverly, W. Va.
Will Practice in the Circuit Court o Pocahontas county.

Dr. J. H. WEYMOUTH,
RESIDENT DENTIST,
Beverly, W. Va.
Will visit Pocahontas County every Spring and Fall. The exact date of each visit will appear in THE TIMES.

Hotel by G. W. Wagner,
HUNTERSVILLE, W. VA.
Our Hotel is new, large and comfortable, and no paines will be spared to keep a first-class house in every respect.
Horses well provided for.
Charges reasonable.
G. W. WAGNER, Proprietor.

ANNOUNCEMENTS.

To the Voters of Pocahontas County.

I announce myself an Independent candidate for House of Delegates. If it should be your pleasure on the 4th day of November next, to elect me to represent you in the next Legislature, I pledge myself to use my utmost efforts to secure such legislation as will be favorable especially to the farming and laboring class, and to represent my constituents without partisan bias.

Respectfully,
H. B. SHARP.

To The Voters of Pocahontas County.

I hereby announce myself an Independent candidate for Clerk, of the County Court of Pocahontas County.

If it should be your desire, on the 4th day of Nov. 1890 to elect me, I will pledge myself to perform the duties of said office to the best of my ability and also to be courteous and accommodating to the people.

Respectfully,
EDWARD C BARKLEY.

HOME NEWS

—Election next Tuesday.

—Everybody go to the election next Tuesday.

—The carpenter work on Attorney L. M. McClintic's new house is about completed.

—Attorney C. F. Moore, is visiting the booming towns of Va., this week.

—Geo. Bambric, Esq., and family, have moved to the city and taken charge of the Post office.

—A new side walk on Hill St., adds greatly to the appearance of that part of the city.

—We are authorized to announce Mr. Geo. P. Moore as an Independent candidate for Commissioner of County Court of Pocahontas County.

—Mr. P. M. Harper, of Knapp's creek, has been confined to his house for a couple of weeks by something like a neuralgic or rheumatic trouble, which was incipient in a straining of the spine.

—In this issue will be found the announcement of Mr. E. C. Barkley for clerk of the County Court. He is a worthy young man, and no doubt if elected would make an accommodating clerk.

—Mr. Geo. P. Moore in this issue announces himself a candidate for re-election as Commissioner of the County Court. It is generally conceded that Mr. Mooore has made and efficient officer during his term, and we simply make this statement in justice to him.

—Attorney C. F. Moore of this place and Attorney Edmiston, of Va., son of Judge Edmiston, have formed a law firm in Clifton Forge, for the special purpose of making abstracts of deeds for the towns of Clifton Forge and Iron Gate. This will necessitate Mr. Moore's being absent a great deal from Pocahontas.

—A new hotel in Staunton, Va., would be a great convenience to the traveling public. We happened to stop over there the other night and went to every so-called hotel in the place, and were unable to get accomodations for the night, consequently had to sit up.

Marlinton Matters.

The population of Pocahontas is reported by the late enumerators, 6,740, an increase of 1,149 over 1880. There is room for fifty thousand people in the limits of this county, if populated as densely as Rockingham county.

There has been quite a tide in the river, the result of the recent rains.

Six large rafts, have gone out under the supervision of Commodore Peters and Captains, Gay, Lakin, Callison, and McCollum, and about thirty others. Nearly a quarter million of lumber, represented in the aggregate.

Squire Warwick, is visiting friends in this county. He is a gentleman of the old Virginia type, of whom so few are now remaining. Times change, and the people change with them.

There has been a most pleasant fall season with us. It reminds the writer of the delightful autumns, of Richmond city, and the vicinity of Hampden Sydney.

Yours as ever,
H. K. S.

Gillespie Budget.

D. C. Van Buskirk, of Elkins, was here last week buying cherry lumber.

Capt. J. S. Wamsley, of Randolph county, drove a lot of very fine yearling cattle through our burg last week. The Capt. says they are the best yearling cattle he has heretofore handled.

Some fiend in the shape of human shot a mare belonging to G. H. Sheets through the neck the first of last week.

Mr. Wm. F. Arbogast, of Winchester spent last Sunday at Green Bank.

Messrs. Gladwell and Arbogast of Green Bank have had several wagons over the road to Elkins for goods, they report the road from Beverly to Elkins nearly impassible.

Jacob Sheets has gone to Staunton for supplies for his lumber camp.

Capt. Steele is pushing the lumber business at Winchester with a vim.

John C. and J. Howard Arbogast of Huttonsville were over to Green Bank last Sunday attending their mothers funeral, which was preached there by the Rev. Ballengee.

POCAHONTAS.

Traveler's Repose Locals.

EDITOR TIMES: Having seen nothing from this part for some time, I will endeavor to give you a few items.

Our protracted meeting at this place, which was conducted by Rev. Balengee has closed.

Messrs. J. L. Arbogast and G. A. Keller, have returned from Monterey, Va., and other parts where they have been looking up mineral lands.

Miss Liza Arbogast, of this place, accompanied by her niece Pearlie Yeager, are visiting relatives at Green Bank, and attending the protracted meeting conducted by Rev. Ballengee.

J. D. Houchin caught a large Bear in his trap a few days since. We advise him to set his trap again.

Mrs. Isabel Slaven, who has been quite ill for some time past, we are glad to learn, is improving.

Mrs. P. D. Yeager, has returned from Dunmore, where she had been visiting her daughter Mrs. C. E. Pritchard.

TRAVELER.

Split Rock Splinters.

Mr. Wm. Vandervort and his grand-daughter Miss Annie King, have returned from a visit to relatives at Fairmont. Mr. Vandervort is a member of the Board of Directors of the penitentiary at Moundsville. He attended a meeting of the board at Moundsville while he was gone.

Judge J. W. Warwick, of Warm Springs, Va., is spending a few days with his daughter Mrs. A. C. L. Gatewood at this place.

The select school at this place will close Nov. 1st to open again, with the bright days of spring. The school has been in a decided success.

The free school at this place came to an abrupt close on the 14th inst. Mr. J. W. Price taught two months then his brother Andrew came to finish the term, he taught two or three weeks and decided that some other teacher might finish it. Mr. Price left for his home at Marlinton on the 15th. It will require three teachers to finish the free school.

Two gentlemen, of Ohio were here looking at the fine grazing farm owned by the Adams brothers, of Rockbridge. They were much pleased and it is thought will purchase it.

Mr. F. W. Brown is sending his lumber in different directions. They will haul to Clovis Creek and to Greenbrier Bridge from this county and it will be rafted to Ronceverte, that in Randolph he will ship from Elkins.

X. Y.

Dilley's Mill Items.

As this is a portion of our county seldom heard from we will send you a few items.

Plenty of rain.

Mr. Ed. Kincade, of Highland is visiting relatives and friends here.

Mr. Anderson Dilley has returned from Randolph, where he has been taking pictures.

The school at this place is progressing finely under the management of Miss Allice C. Clark.

Miss Mantie Bambric moved to Huntersville last week where she expects to make her future home her many friends were sorry to see her leave

Mr. Luther Sharp accompanied by his daughter, Miss Nelia, of Highland paid his friend a flying visit, his daughter expects to attend school at Frost.

SUNSHINE & SHADOW.

Commissioner's of Election.

The following are Commissioners appointed by the County Court to conduct the election to be held Nov. 4th, 1890:

Hillsboro District—W. W. Beard, R. W. Hill and J. B. Kennison.

Edray District—Wm. M. Sharp, G. K. Gay and Geo. Baxter.

Split Rock District—S. S. Varner, Silas Sharp and A. C. L. Gatewood.

Green Bank District—Geo. W. Siple, Josiah Beard and Adam Arbogast.

Dunmore District—E. N. Moore, B. L. McElwee and Geo. Arbogast.

Traveler's Repose District.—P. D. Yeager, Lafayette Barner and A. M. V. Arbogast.

Huntersville District—M. D. McGlaughlin, Sheldon Moore and C. F Moore.

Frost District—Wm. A. Sharp, Zane Moore and Henry Rider.

Preaching Notice.

Sacramental services at Liberty church the 1st Sabbath of November. Preparatory services on Saturday night before. Preaching Sabbath morning at the usual hour.

A Card.

I hereby give notice that I have severed my connection with the firm of Lam & O'Farrell. M. O'Farrell having purchased my interest will continue to carry on the business at the same place I bespeak for him the good will and patronage of the public.

Thanking our patrons for their custom and kindness extended. I am,

Very Respectfully,
C. D. LAM.

Having purchased the entire business of the firm of Lam & O'Farrell to take effect Nov. 1st, 1890. I will hereafter conduct the same at the old stand, and endeavor to give entire satisfaction in every respect and assume all liabilities.

Thanking our customers for their liberal patronage heretofore and sincerely wishing to merit a continuance of the same. I am,

Very Respect,
M. O'FARRELL.

FOR RENT.

A good log house three rooms. Forty acres of land to work.
Apply to LANIER DUNN,
Warm Springs, Bath Co, Va.

At a County Court held for the County of Pocahontas at the Court-house thereof on the 7th day of October 1890.

On the coming in of petition signed by H. B. McClintic and more than ten other free holders of the Edray District (District No. 2) of this County, it is ordered, that the provisions of section 2nd of Chapter 62 of the code of 1887, apply to all the lands within said District and the Clerk of this Court, is ordered to publish this order for once a week for four successive weeks in the POCAHONTAS TIMES, a newspaper published in the said County of Pocahontas, which publication shall be paid for by the said petitioners and said clerk shall also post a copy of this order for some length of time on the front door of Court House of this County.

A copy teste,
JOHN J. BEARD,
Clerk.

WEST VIRGINIA UNIVERSITY.

The Fall term will begin on the second Wednesday (10th) of September. New students will report for examination on Tuesday the 9th. Courses of study are offered in the Arts, Sciences, Engineering and Law. Also preparatory department. For information and catalogues apply to E. M. Turner, Morgantown, W. Va.

WRIT OF ELECTION.

EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENT,
CHARLESTON, W. VA.
September 24, 1890.

THE STATE OF WEST VIRGINIA:
To the Commissioners of Election in the several Counties of the State:

A VACANCY having occurred in the office of Judge of the Supreme Court of Appeals of this State, caused by the death of Hon. T. C. Green, of Jefferson county, one of the judges of said court, who was elected for the term beginning on the first day of January, 1881, and ending on the 31st day of December, 1892, you are hereby commanded, in the name of the State of West Virginia, to cause a poll to be opened and an election to be held at the several places of voting in your respective counties, at the next general election to be held on Tuesday, the 4th day of November, 1890, for the purpose of electing a Judge of the Supreme Court of Appeals to fill the the vacancy in said office for said unexpired term.

In Witness Whereof, I, A. B. Fleming, Governor of said State have hereunto set my hand and caused the Great Seal of the said [L. S.] State to be affixed, at the Capitol, in the city of Charleston, this 24th day of September, in the year 1890, and of the State the twenty eighth.

By the Governor: A. B. FLEMING.
WM. A. OHLEY,
Secretary of State.

MOON MOUNTAINS.

HOW STANLEY FOUND THE SECRET OF A CONTINENT'S LIFE.

Gigantic Heights Famed Since the Days of Homer—Ruwenzori, the Rainmaker or Cloud King—Peaks 19,000 Feet High.

It was June 12, 1889, just before sunset, that Stanley's tired eyes rested for the first time with unbeclouded gaze on Ruwenzori, the far-famed Mountains of the Moon. The weary column had halted at Utsora, the little native village in the valley of the Semliki, bounded on one side by the dark barrier of the forest and on the other by the crested banks of the river. Beyond was a field of snow, and farther on rose snow peaks. All during the day the expectant eyes of the travelers had rested on a long line of dark and solemn spurs whose summits were buried in leaden mists, but toward evening the upper extremities loomed up one after the other till a great line of shoulder-shaped hills broke the sky; then peak by peak struggled from behind night-black clouds till the giant of the hills, the mighty Rain-maker or Cloud King, in all its majestic desolation, was unveiled before their wondering eyes—a square-browed central mass thirty miles in length and white with snow. The upper part of the mountain seemed to be "poised in a void of unsurpassed clearness;" the dome was of dark-blue crystal enfolded in a broad zone of milk-white mist, which produced the impression of a spectral mountain island sailing in mid air.

As the sun descended the mist zone floated away and the apparition became fixed to nether regions of mountain slopes. This was the summit of the range, which is broken up into many sharp, triangular checks or narrow, saddled-shaped ridges, their tops hidden by everlasting snows, their flanks dark as night, looming like storm-clouds, their sides bare and unscalable, dropping through snowy fields to the valley below.

These were the mountains famed in song and story, of which fables have been woven, and of which poets sang; this the creation of the "sea of darkness," Albert Edward Lake; this the shrine at which Alexander and Cæsar longed to worship; the mysterious apparition that bewildered the traveler and then disappeared to mock him as with a mirage. They were placed on the map of Homer's world forty centuries ago and described as the springs that gave birth to the Nile in the region where the pilgrims dwelt, and since his day English and German, French and Flemish explorers have theorized and searched for them and given so much contradictory evidence about them that their latest discoveries, of the Emin relief expedition, give their chart to the world "conscious that some English or German map-maker will, from spleen or ignorance, surely shift their base forty or fifty miles southeast," and so expunge their labors. According to these advices, however, the Ruwenzori range is about ninety miles in length, projecting like an enormous bastion of an unconquerable fort, commanding from the northeast the approaches of the Albert Lake and the Semliki Valley, and on the southern side the whole basin of Albert Edward Lake. Its principal western drainage is the Semliki River, the great stream which connects Albert Edward and Albert Lakes, flowing south, and waters the populous country of the Awamba; its southern drainage is into Albert Edward Lake, into which sixty-two streams from the Ruwenzori alone descend. The table-land surrounding the mountains is about 4000 feet above the sea, and the peaks are from 18,000 to 19,000 feet high.

The highest mountain of the range, the Cloud King, intercepts every breeze from south to east, preventing the exhalations of the valley from being blown in that direction, so that on their meeting the cold winds from the mountain summit they are distilled and rediffused in copious showers. From north to west the northern range obstructs the free passage of the winds and converts the vapor into snow-white mist, which sails in broad, irregular streams and forms what Stanley describes as an inverted sky, an impenetrable veil which for 300 days in the year hides the great mountain range with its colossal crown. It was in character with the proverbial Stanley luck that the Emin relief expedition reached Albert Edward Lake at just that season of the year when the wonder of the dark continent was visible in all its rugged grandeur. Such explorers as have been disappointed, however, may take this comfort, that the peculiar position of Ruwenzori, which obstructs the free passage of the winds, secures for the valley that equable climate which fosters a marvelous vegetation, a vegetation so lush and luxuriant that the region is aptly called the national conservatory of the world; where banana plants are eighteen inches in diameter two feet from the ground; where every tree stem has its robe of soft moss, every rock is clothed with lichens, every tree fern or horizontal branch with orchids, while rare and beautiful flowers distill marvelous perfumes. Best of all, where there are rains and dews and such a productive country, there is every prospect that should a Christian civilization be introduced it would take root, because where men are properly fed their minds are prepared to open to the truth. This then is one of the many uses of the mountains of the Moon; their greatest, however, is that which Greek, and Roman, and Egyptian so long and ignorantly attributed to them. Better than any smiling hill or pleasant vale do these desolate heights brooding under the eternal storm clouds render service to mankind. The torrents that rush from their summits, carving out ravines hundreds of fathoms deep through the rocky core of the range, upturning huge boulders, making their way through dense forests and rank vegetation, at last find a reservoir which supplies the great river that is life and health to a land 4000 miles distant, and peoples of such varied nationalities that we are safe in saying that for this great mysterious mountain, the Cloud King, all nations may join in giving thanks. It is not the least of Stanley's services as leader of the relief expedition—practically perhaps it is the greatest—that he should have been the first to give it its proper geographical definition. He went out to rescue an entomologist, and found the secret of the life of a continent.—Hartford Courant.

The Story of a Ship's Bell.

When you visit the rooms of the Natural History Society in Boylston street ask the custodian to point out to you a ship's bell which rests upon one of the shelves. This bell has a history attached to it. About the year 1856 or 1857 a firm in this city sent out an expedition under the charge of Mr. Whipple, the noted submarine diver of the day, fully equipped with armor and divers, to explore the banks of the Gulf of Mexico for submerged articles of value. The expedition returned in due time from a successful trip, the vessel loaded with kentledge chains and anchors. Among the many craft discovered and explored was a British frigate. From this was taken the ship's bell, stamped with the broad arrow; also, from the hull, several sheets of copper stamped with the initials of the dock yard in which the frigate was coppered and also the year of its application. A statement of these facts, with a sheet of the copper, were sent to the late George Sumner, who was then in London. He placed them before his friend, the Earl of Clarendon, who was then connected with the British Admiralty. On examining the records of the dock yards it was ascertained that two frigates were coppered the year of the stamp and were sent on their way to join the fleet about to attack New Orleans, at the time of its successful defence by General Jackson. They were never heard of after leaving their moorings. One of these was the frigate discovered by Mr. Whipple. In this accidental way was communicated to the Government and friends of the officers and crew intelligence of the fate of the ship. Perhaps a second Whipple may discover the resting-place of the United States sloop of war Albany which disappeared in the same waters carrying to the bottom, among other noble souls, Lieutenant John Quincy Adams, grandson of the President of that name, who, if he had lived ten years longer, would have added lustre to his patriotic name and family. A more accomplished and gallant officer than Lieutenant Adams never trod the quarter deck. The bell is overhung with a massive canopy of coral, which is considered of great scientific value as showing the growth of the coral in a definite number of years.—Boston Saturday Gazette.

Value of Broom Corn.

The value of broom corn has greatly decreased in thirty years. There was a time, "before the war," when broom corn grown in Illinois sold for $240 a ton. In more recent years one season's crop in Coles County alone sold for $850,000. But competition in its production has brought down the value of the brush. With cheaper land and better climate for the growth of the corn Kansas and Western Missouri are gradually taking the broom corn business away from Central Illinois. There has been no profit in broom corn raising here for two years. The farmers calculate that it costs $40 to produce a ton of brush. Sold at $70, and generally for less money, it becomes a less profitable crop than Indian corn. Its cultivation is similar to Indian corn, but it has the advantage of being harvested in a pleasant season of the year and at a time when no other farm work is at hand.

Broom corn seed is planted from May 10 to July 1. It is drilled into the ground with a corn planter, the rows being three feet apart. It matures in about 100 days. It must be cut while green, and is ready for the harvest when the corn is in bloom and the blossom begins to fall. The time of cutting is a very important feature to the farmer. As the seed ripens the brush becomes red, and red brush is unsalable. It must be cut so that when dry it is of a bright pea green color. The first move in the harvest is to "table" the cornstalks. This is done by the operator walking backward between two rows and breaking the stalks about waist high, crossing one over the other, so as to form a level topped "table." Then the cutters, walking between the tables, cut the brush, piling the cuttings from two tables together. Much of the value of the crop depends upon the [illegible] of the cutter. He must cut about eight inches of stem with the brush. More stem than this classes the brush as "long butts." If the brush is cut without a stem it is almost useless for broom making, and may not pass through the machine which takes off the seed.—Chicago News.

A mountain of alabaster has been [illegible] near Denver, Col.

Long Lost Brothers.

A ticket seller in the Union Depot at Atlanta, Ga., relates the following incident as having occurred there recently: "A man came up to my window and asked for a ticket to Palmetto. Another man was standing just behind and made the same request. As I handed out the two tickets Number One said to Number Two,—

"'Are you going to Palmetto?'

"'I am.'

"The two men looked hard at each other for a minute, and then Number Two asked,—

"'What's your name?'

"'Roonley—John Roonley. What's yours?'

"'Frank Roonley. I thought I knew you. You are my brother.'

"The two men were brothers and had not seen each other in forty years."

Lost to Sight.

General Sheridan was not a tall man, though he had a commanding presence. While he was an under-officer, he was one day drilling a company, and was annoyed by the unsoldierly appearance of a tall, round-shouldered Irish recruit.

"Don't stand in that way," Sheridan finally exclaimed, "You look like a Chinaman doubled over a wash-tub. Straighten up—form erect, chest out and chin elevated. Like this!"

Then the officer gave the man a superb example of the perfect soldier in parade movement, his eyes fixed unalterably away from earthly things.

"An' it's shtraight ahid I'll be afther lookin' all the toime?" asked the recruit, glancing down at his superior officer, with a twinkle in his eye.

"Yes; if you mean to be a respectable soldier, certainly."

The Irishman puffed himself out like a pigeon, and stepping off to the measured "Right!" "Left!" he exclaimed, "Well, good-boi to ye, Leftenant; I'll niver see ye agin."

"Which is the best way to get fat, doctor"? "Order from your butcher a piece of lean beef."

The tea-kettle sings because it is always able to keep itself outside of hot water.

When one lays hold of a severed bell-rope he fails to touch a responsive cord.

The average burglar, though he may be regarded as a crook, is true as steel.

An optimist is a man who has enjoyed "bully" good luck up to date.

There is nothing square about gossip. It is always "going round."

It is unreasonable to expect a man to be collected if his bills are not.

In regattas catboats ought to be the first to come to the scratch.

Railroad engineers should be experts in keeping track of things.

A house divided against itself cannot stand the rent.

Always struck on the head—Matches.

Always worn out—Rubber overshoes.

A crying need—A handkerchief.

A joint concern—A skeleton.

BNU 10

POCAHONTAS TIMES.

Vol. VIII JOHN E. CAMPBELL, EDITOR AND PROPRIETOR. Huntersville, West Virginia, Thursday, November 27, 1890. Terms of Subscription.} $1.00 PER YEAR. IN ADVANCE. No. 17 18

Official Directory of Pocahontas County.

Judge of Circuit Court, A. N. Campbell.
Prosecuting Attorney, L. M. McClintic.
Sheriff, M. J. McNeel.
Deputy Sheriff, L. W. Herold
Cl'k of Cir. & Co. Courts, J. J. Beard.
Assessor, C. O. Arbogast.
Com'rs Co. Ct. {C. E. Beard. S. B. Hannah. G. P. Moore.
Co. Surveyor, Geo. Baxter

THE COURTS.

Circuit Court convenes on the first Monday in April, 3rd Monday in June and 3rd Monday in October.

County Court convenes on the 1st Tuesday in January, March, October and second Tuesday in July. July is levy term.

THE BROTHER'S RETURN.

BY H. A.

In a chamber on the top floor of a genteel city boarding house, a young girl of scarcely twenty sat at a table in a despondent mood. Before her was a brief note in a lady's hand, which she listlessly took up, and read as follows,—

"Mrs. Morgan regrets that she will have no further occasion for Miss Tremaine's services in the musical instruction of her children, having been advised by a friend to secure the services of Professor Mantoni."

This was certainly intelligible enough. Probably Mrs. Morgan did not know when she wrote this note that in withdrawing her patronage from the young girl she was depriving her of three-fourths of her income. So it was, however, and it was with a deep sinking of the heart that Margaret Tremaine read the four lines recorded above.

Margaret, as of course the reader will understand was a music teacher. She had been reared in affluence but the sudden failure of her father, and his almost immediate death, had thrown her upon her own resources for support. She had a brother two years older, who had gone to California in search of employment. It was in the early days of the history of that State. Communication with the interior parts of the Pacific State was not as frequent as at present, and she had received only occasional letters. Thus far he had not met with great success in digging gold.

Through the influence of Margaret's friends she had obtained several music scholars at once, enough to defray her expenses, moderate as they had now become. She had taken an attic room in Mrs. Prescott's boarding house and had thus far been able to meet her weekly bills.

But this period of comparative prosperity came at length to an end. One family in which she had several scholars went abroad, and these were, of course lost to her. Another pupil was sent to a boarding-school. And now, to crown all, Mrs. Morgan withdrew her patronage, and the young girl was left with almost no income at all.

What to do she did not know.

She might advertise for pupils, but would she get them? Besides she could not spare the money which the advertisement would cost. With a feeling of dismay she saw utter destitution staring her in the face.

It was at this moment that a knock was heard at the door.

"Come in," she said.

Raising her head as the door was opened, she recognized in the caller one of Mrs. Prescott's servants.

"Well, Bridget, what's wanted?" she said.

"Mrs. Prescott would like to see you in the parlor, miss."

"Now?"

"Yes, miss, if you please."

"Very well; say that I will come down immediately."

Before chronicling the interview about to take place, it may be necessary to say that Mrs. Prescott was a widow with an only daughter not remarkable for good looks. This young lady had for several months engaged the attentions of a young man, who was popularly supposed to be engaged to her. But to the great indignation of the landlady and her daughter, the young man Colton by name, and recently showed some indications of transferring his attentions to Miss Tremaine. The young lady was quite innocent of encouraging him, but nevertheless was unjustly suspected of so doing by Mrs. Prescott and her daughter. The former determined, therefore, on one pretext or another to get rid of her troublesome boarder, hoping that the young man, when no longer exposed to her fascinations, would return to his first love.

It was with a view to this that Margaret was now summoned to the parlor. Although she had noticed the increasing coolness of Mrs. and Miss Prescott, she did not suspect the cause.

As the time for giving a lesson to her sole remaining pupil was near at hand, she went down with her bonnet on.

"Excuse me coming in with my bonnet on Mrs. Prescott," she said as she entered the parlor; "but I am obliged almost immediately to go out to give a lesson, and did so to save the trouble of going up stairs again."

"Certainly," said the landly, stiffly.

"Bridget said you wished to speak to me," said Margaret, finding that the landly hesitated.

"Yes," said the landlady, clearing her throat, "I wished to ask you if you can conveniently obtain another boarding place?"

"Indeed!" said Margaret, in utter surprise, looking from the mother to the daughter.

"Yes;" said Mrs. Prescott, "I think I shall want your room."

"May I ask," said Margaret, after a pause, "whether it is any personal objection to myself that leads to your request?"

Mrs. Prescott was about to answer in the negative, when her daughter no longer able to keep her indignation with her supposed rival within bounds, interrupted her bitterly.

"Yes, there is a reason and a good one, Miss Tremaine. Ma and I have noticed your underhand attempts to attract Mr. Colton's attention, when you knew well enough that he was engaged to me, or the same thing. We don't want any such sly people in the house, so now you know it."

"Indeed, Miss Prescott!" said Margaret quietly, for the acusation seemed so absurd that it did not disturb her, 'you are under a strange delusion. I certainly have no wish to appropriate Mr. Colton's attentions. As to his wants I have nothing to say. I shall be glad to congratulate you on your engagement with him."

"Oh, no doubt," said the young lady sneeringly, "This comes very well after you have done all you could to prevent it."

"Do you believe this ridiculous story, Mrs. Prescott?" demanded Margaret, turning to the landlady.

"I did not intend to have my daughter mention it," said Mrs. Prescott coldly, but it certainly has seemed to me that you have flirted with Mr. Colton as I should not wish a daughter of mine to flirt."

"Then you are very much mistaken," said the young girl indignantly. "Mr. Colton may be a very estimable young man, but he has no attractions for me! I have not the least desire to attract him. He has been polite to me on one or two occasions, but it was by no desire of mine. If I could marry him to-morrow, I should not wish to do so."

"Sour grapes!" said Miss Prescott sneering.

"You may call it what you please," said Margaret, "but it is the truth. However, since you have suspected me so unjustly, I have no wish to stay here any longer. I will leave to morrow when my week is up."

Just then the painful thought flashed upon Margaret that she had not enough left even to pay a week's board, and it was hardly to be supposed under the circumstances that Mrs. Prescott would be very indulgent. She turned pale and sick at heart, and stood for a moment in the middle of the floor when the door was thrown open and a young man entered, ushered by Bridget. While the ladies were so occupied in the discussion of this matter, the bell had rung without either being aware of it.

Scarcely had Margaret lifted her eyes, and suffered them to rest on the stranger, than with a cry of joy she rushed to his arms, exclaiming, "Dear Henry how glad I am to see you."

The landlady and her daughter stood by in statue-like surprise, not recognizing the visitor. Miss Prescott, who did not know of the relationship, had her eyes demurely cast down, shocked by Margaret's indelicacy in thus openly embracing a young man.

When the greeting was over, Margaret turned to Mrs. Prescott with an explanation—

"This is my brother Henry," said she, "unexpectedly returned from California."

"I wish I hadn't made a fuss," thought Miss Prescott. "He's much better looking than Mr. Colton."

"Indeed!" said the landlady more graciously, for she perceived that he was well dressed. "I think I can find a room for your brother if he would like to be near you."

"You forget," said Margaret significantly, "that I am going away to morrow."

"Oh," said the landlady, coughing, "there's no need of that. I have no doubt we have been mistaken, and—"

"I think it will be best," said Margaret, decisively, and the landlady and her daughter considerably crestfallen, retired, leaving brother and sister alone.

"Congratulate me Margaret," said he, when the landlady had withdrawn. "I do not return empty handed. Two months before leaving California I stumbled upon a monster nugget, which with my claim I sold for twenty thousand dollars. I have come back to embark in my father's old business on this capital; and you, Margaret, shall look after my household, until you have one of your own. You must give up your music scholars."

"That will be easily done," said Margaret, smiling, "since all but one have given me up."

"Have you suffered from poverty?" asked the brother anxiously.

"No, Henry, but I should, but for your opportune return."

Margaret was soon installed as mistress of a pretty little establishment. But in less than a year she found some one who needed her more than her brother, and changed her name from Miss to Mrs. Henry spared her the more readily, as there was a young lady who was all ready to take her place at the head of the table. It was not Miss Prescott, however. That young lady is still unmarried, the faithless Mr. Colton having transferred his affections elsewhere.

Husband—Yes, Wicker urged me to go into the saloon with him, and I had to.

[illegible] all? It strikes me that you had more than two.

Benedict—A baby asleep always makes me think of heaven.

Bachelor—It always makes me think what a blessed thing sleep is.

McCorkle—"Did I tell you about a fish swallowing a snake that I saw while away on my vacation?" McCrackle—"No; but before you begin I want to ask you one question." "All right." "Is this a snake story or a fish story?"

Judge—What is the charge against this man?

Officer—Cruelty to animals, Your Honor. He was blowing smoke in a horse's face.

Judge—I shall discharge him. This Court cannot have its time taken up with any such trival affairs.

Officer—But, Your Honor, it was cigarette smoke.

Judge—Ninety days.

"What time is it now?" asked Mrs. Fangle, as she puffed and panted into the waiting room, followed by Mr. Fangle and a miscellaneous assortment of small Fangles.

"Fifteen minutes to wait," replied Fangle, as soon as he could disengage himself from the boxes, bundles and bags with which he was loaded, and look at his watch.

"Fifteen minutes to eight!" gasped Mrs. Fangle. "And the train went at half-past seven. Then we've missed it Mr. Fangle and it's all your fault," she went on, without stopping to punctuate her speech by so much as a comma. "I knew you would be late with your exasperating slowness. You just wasted all that time shaving when you might just as well have shaved when you got to Aunt Mary's. What in the world will she think of us, I'd like to know, after driving five miles to meet us at the station, only to find we haven't come. I'm sure your cousin Joe never treats her invitations like that, and dear knows our children need Aunt Mary's money as badly as ever Joe Hawkin's do. I declare it's enough to aggravate a saint. Now we can't go till to morrow, and we'll have to telegraph right away that we've missed the train. It's very stupid of you, and it's all your fault. I never saw such a man in all my life."

Then Mrs. Fangle sat down, exhausted, and tears stood in her eyes.

"I don't know why you are going on like that, I'm sure," said Fangle, now that he had an opportunity to speak. "What in the world do you mean? We hav'nt missed the train, and we have plenty of time even now."

"Don't it leave at half-past seven?" Mrs. Fangle asked.

"Yes."

"And didn't you tell me it was a quarter to eight?"

"No; I said we had fifteen minutes to wait."

"Well, I think you are real mean, Mr. Fangle, and I believe you said it that way just to aggravate me. So there! Now go and get the tickets, or we'll miss the train after all."

Pocahontas Times.

JOHN E. CAMPBELL,
EDITOR AND PROPRIETOR.

Entered at the Post-office at Huntersville, W. Va., as second class matter.

ADVERTISING RATES.

	1 m.	3 m.	6 m.	1 yr.
One inch	$ 1 00	$ 2 00	$ 3 00	$ 5 00
Three in.	2 00	4 00	6 00	10 00
Qr. column	3 00	6 00	10 00	17 00
Half col'n	6 00	12 00	20 00	30 00
One col'n	10 00	20 00	30 00	50 00

Reading notices, not exceeding five lines, twenty-five cents for each insertion, and five cents a line for each additional line.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION.

One copy, 1 yr., $1.00 in advance; after 6 months, $1.25; after 12 months, $1.50. These terms will be strictly complied with.

Huntersville, W. Va.

November 27, 1890.

The next Speaker of the House of Representatives will be a democrat; that's as much as we care to know.

Senator Quay isn't getting much sympathy from the republican press: in fact one has but to read between the lines to see that many republican editors are really glad of his downfall.

Men are being mentioned now as Presidential possibilities who will actually be entirely forgotten before 1892. Too much "previousness" has been the death of more political booms than any single cause.

Let the democrats of the House elect their ablest and strongest man to be Speaker, and good democrats will not ask or care what state or section he hails from; a weak man in the Speaker's chair can do the party irreparable damage.

The speeches at the "Old Roman Banquet," given in honor of Hon. Allen G. Thurman, at Columbus, Ohio, on the 13, inst., represented all that is best in democracy, and are worthy of being preserved in permanent book form for the edification of future generations of democrats.

We boastfully speak of this Government as being of, by, and for the people, and of this country as being controlled by the majority of its voters. In both we are, to a great extent mistaken. Here are the facts, let us carefully consider them, for sooner or later the time will come when this very condition of affairs will endanger the very existence of this republic. On the 4th day of November, 1890, an unprecedented majority of the voters rendered a most emphatic verdict against the republican Congress and administration, by electing more than two thirds of the House of Representatives. In Monarchial Great Britain such an election would have compelled an immediate and entire change of administration, with the exception of the Queen, who is after all but an expensive and almost powerless figure head for that government. What is the result here? Practically nothing, so far as the policy of this Government is concerned. The newly elected House will not meet until the first Monday in December, 1891, more than a year hence, unless called together in extraordinary session by the President before that date. And when it does meet it cannot dot an "i" or cross a "t" in any law upon our statute books without obtaining the consent of the President and a majority of the Senate, powers, which notwithstanding the rebuke of the people, will strive to thwart the will of a majority of the country's voters. The House of Representatives of the Fifty second Congress although more than two thirds democratic, can do little more than furnish the country the evidence of the good intentions of the democratic party, for even should there be republican Senators enough who would vote with the democrats to modify or repeal the obnoxious and unpopular McKinley tariff law, which is extremely doubtful, the republican President, whose term lasts exactly as long as that of the Fifty second Congress, would be certain to veto all such measures. It will require another victory in 1892 to enable the people to realize the fruits of the one just won over the republican party. This will never be a real Government, of, by and for the people, until such changes have been made as will enable the response to the popular will, on the part of the governing powers, both executive and legislative, to be immediate.

WASHINGTON LETTER.

[From our regular correspondent.]

WASHINGTON, D. C., Nov., 21—Every democrat in the country is interested in Washington this winter, because of the important political events certain to occur here. In the first place, the democratic minority in Congress, feeling that the policy of their party has been endorsed by the country, are determined to resist every attempt of the republicans to pass radical political legislation, and they expect the moral support of every democrat.

It is also proposed that the republicans shall, if possible, be made to provide for the big deficit in the National Treasury, which their wasteful and extravagent legislation has made a certainty for the next fiscal year, instead of leaving it for the democratic House of the Fifty second Congress to do. At least if they cannot be made to adopt the necessary legislation to provide the money to meet this deficit, the attention of the country can be called to their refusal or neglect to do so, and the blame placed where it properly belongs. It is now admitted by Government officials that by the end of the next fiscal year our annual payments for pensions will have reached $200,000,000.

The struggle which will take place this winter between Mr. Blaine and Speaker Reed for the control of the republican party machine will be decidedly exciting, and democrats are very much interested in it, because for one thing, it embraces the fate of the Force bill. If Mr. Blaine becomes the dictator of the party's policy the Force bill will at once be shelved for good and all, and reciprocity, which has in a sense, become Mr. Blaine's special trade mark will be used as a salve for the many and grevious wounds that the republican party has inflicted upon the country. If Mr. Harrison in his annual message recommends the passage of the Force bill, as it is believed here that he will, it will show that Speaker Reed has more influence with him than Mr. Blaine; but if on the other hand the message ignores the Force bill, then it may be presumed that Mr. Blaine is still in supreme command at the White House.

The immense vote cast by the Farmers Alliance in States which have for many years been reliably republican has thrown the republican leaders into a panic, and they are puzzling their bewildered brains to get up a scheme that will get back their lost voters. At a conference of prominent republicans held here a few days ago Mr. Blaine was deputed to ascertain whether by making concessions, in the shape of legislation at this session of Congress the alliance men could not be pacified, and the result is, that a confidential agent of Mr. Blaine's has been sent to the Northwestern States to confer with the Alliance leaders, and it is believed by any [illegible] would[illegible]ly knows what he talks about, that he is authorized to enter into a deal with them if they will agree, in return for the passage of a bill for the free and unlimited coinage of silver or some other bill that will largely increase the amount of money in circulation, to support the National republican ticket in 1892.

By the way, speaking of the Farmers Alliance, Representative Outhwaite, of Ohio, said here a day or two ago, that if the combination, which has been more or less talked about, between the Alliance and the labor organizations of the cities could be brought about that he believed they could elect the next President. I know that the Alliance people are doing their level best to bring about that combination.

It is now regarded as so certain that there will be an extra session of the Fifty second Congress held in the Spring that several of the gentlemen who have announced themselves as candidates for Speaker of the next House have opened headquarters here and begun their campaign for the position. Only a small proportion of the democratic majority in the next House are members of the present Congress, but owing to the nearness of the National campaign and the great political interests now centered at Washington it is expected that nearly all of them will be here within the next few weeks. So far the contest for the Speakership is being conducted in the best of humor, and I see no reason why it should not continue to the end in the same spirit, except the disposition on the part of certain newspapers to make it appear as a fight between Governor Hill and Mr. Cleveland.

Only two of the republican members of the House committee on Ways and Means, which is responsible for the McKinley tariff bill, have received certificates of election to the next House, and one of them—Burrows, of Michigan—is to have his right to a seat contested on the ground of fraud. The other one is McKenna, of California, who it will be remembered made a minority report against the sugar schedule of the tariff bill. So that it looks as if none of the men who fathered that bill as a whole received the endorsement of their constituents, all of which shows the good sense of the constituents.

Not two years ago, by something over three months, the republicans took charge of the Government, finding a big surplus in the Treasury. Since then our receipts have constantly increased and yet is now necessary to consider how we may increase the income of the Government in order to raise the money to meet its annual expenditures. That tells the story.

Charley Jones, a brother of the Rev. Sam P. Jones, shot Jim Young colored, three times on Main street, Cartersville, Georgia, on Saturday evening. He died in twenty five minutes. Jones is in jail.

One Trial Was Enough.

"When the Kansas Pacific was first opened," said B. W. Vedder a locomotive engineer, "the Indians were very hostile, and there was constant fear that they would wreck the trains. That they did not is due to their ignorance of the iron horse and of the best methods of destroying it.

"One of my firemen had an experience with the Cheyennes that he will never forget. He was on the road near Fort Wallace, when he saw that the Indians had cut the telegraph wire, and knew that he might look out for signals. They were never satisfied with simply cutting the wire, but chopped it into inch pieces with their tomahawks to effectually stop the [illegible] lightning messages. As the train came near a large patch of [illegible]ers which grew on both sides of the track over 100 Indians rose up stretched a strong rope across the track, braced themselves, and prepared to receive the shock of the locomotive. As was afterward learned, they had taken rawhide strips, braided them together, and, with a force of fifty at each end of the rope, thought that they would be able to stop the train. The instant the locomotive struck the rope the air was full of Indians. They were thrown in all directions. Some were jerked clear across the train, and more than a dozen were killed or seriously injured. This was the last attempt made for years to stop the trains."

HOME NEWS

—Only 28 days until Christmas.

—Did you have a turkey for Thanksgiving? We didn't, and havent had one since the war.

—Quite a large crowd attended Mr. H. M. Lockridge's sale on the 18th instant, and everything brought a good price.

—The Pocahontas County Musical Association convenes at this place to-night, (Thursday) and will continue several days.

—J. C. Loury, Jr., Esq., of the firm of Loury & Doyle, merchants, of this place was in Baltimore last week, and purchased, we suppose, some fancy Christmas goods.

—Attorney L. M. McClintic and wife are visiting parents at Buckeye and friends in the Level's this week.

—Main street above Hotel by Wagner is being widened and a new side walk will soon be built which will greatly add to the appearance of our little city.

—Mrs. Agnes Levesay and Miss Julia Beard, of Lewisburg are guests of Mrs. Jno. J. Beard, and Mrs. C. F. Moore this week.

—Mrs. A. S. Clark, and son Walter of Academy were visiting at Dilley's Mill the first of the week also Mrs. Jennie Clark of same place and little son were guests of Mrs. John J. Beard, of this place.

—H. M. Lockridge, formerly of near this place but now of Buena Vista, Va., and Mr. B. F. White were in Huntersville the first of the week.

—Edray Farmers Alliance will meet at Mt. Pleasant school house on the 1st Saturday in Dec., for the purpose of electing Delegates to the County Alliance and to attend to other important Business.

—Mr. W. F. Hull, of Edray, passed through Huntersville Tuesday on his way home from taking his son French to the railroad where he started for Colorado for his health. He has been in bad health for some time past, and his many friends sincerely hope for his speedily recover, and return home.

—License to marry were issued to the following persons by our Clerk: Frank N. Jackson to Maggie J. Dilley, of near Dilley's Mill; Alvin G. Dilley to Mary a Gum, of Sitlington's creek; Geo. Wilmoth to Lillie W. Beverage, of Top of Alleghany and Lewis Wheeler to Sallie Truss, (col) of Edray.

Hillsboro Happenings.

Mr. Kell Liveray and Miss Mary Belle, who have been visiting at Mr. Preston Clark's, have returned to their home at Frankford.

Mrs. Agnes Levesay and Miss Julia Beard, of Lewisburg, were visiting at Mr. Joe McNeel's last week.

Mr. J. W. Levesay, of Frankford, spent a few days with his sister Mrs. Lillian Larue, last week.

Mrs. Lucy Hill is very ill at this time with fever.

Mr. Gilbert Sharp, of Huntersville is visiting his sister Mrs. Clara Overholt.

Miss Janet Burnett, who has been visiting at Mrs. Lizzie McNeel's has returned to her home at Staunton.

Mr. Henry Shearer spent Sunday with his daughters at this place.

Mrs. A. S. Clark and son Walter and Miss Jennie Clark & little son Forrest are on a visit to friends and relatives at Huntersville and Dilley's Mill.

Mrs. A. W. Ludington and wife, who have been visiting at her father, Mr. G. W. Beard have returned to her home at Ronceverte.

The Temperance Lodge at this place is flourishing.

ABORIS.

A Card.

THE TIMES of November 6th, 1890, contains a card over the signature of C. F. Moore, perporting to be a reply to a card of S. L. Brown, in which Mr. Moore, states that he conseled time and again with me and that I was heartily in favor of a primary. To some extent this is true. I told Mr. Moore that if the party determined to place a ticket in the field for the County Offices, I was in favor of a primary instead of a Convention, but I spoke only for myself, and the statement that I told him, that a primary was what Mr. Brown wanted, is absolutely false, but I did tell him that Mr. Brown would abide by the decision of the primary, not that he wanted one. This card is simply to vindicate Mr. Brown.

L. M. MCCLINTIC.

ORANGE BLOSSOMS.

"Tho' some spurn Hymen's gentle powers,
We, who improve his golden hours
By sweet experience know
That marriage rightly understood,
Gives to the tender and the good
A paradise below."

It is the writer's belief these lines will find a beautiful realization in the married life of the interesting young persons, whose marriage occurred in Huntersville, Thursday, Nov. the 13th inst. By common consent it is agreed, that one of the more notable of recent society events, was the marriage of John E. Campbell, Editor of the POCAHONTAS TIMES and Miss Effie Sharp, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Henry Sharp.

The nuptials were celebrated at the Southern Methodist Church in the presence of an immense assembly gathered not only from the immediate vic nity, but from various sections of the County.

Near the hour appointed while the sun shone brightly and all the air was serene and balmy the bridal party reached the Church.

Preceded by the officiating ministers Wm. T. Price and L. F. Snapp and attended by the friends selected for attendants the groom and his lovely bride approached the altar and assumed the conventional vows prescribed by the christian faith.

The following persons were attendants and performed their parts quite handsomely indeed: Mr. Boude Hannah and Miss Dosia Sharp; Mr. Robt. Burns and Miss Sadie Hamilton; Mr. Clyde Kinports and Miss Mollie Campbell; Mr. Gilbert Sharp and Miss Mattie Curry; Mr. Henry White and Miss Minnie McElwee; Mr. French Hull and Miss Leila Hull.

Without giving particulars suffice it to say the bride and her friends were attired most becomingly. Their costumes were arranged in fine taste, and all composed a charming tableau that was admired by all and which leaves upon the mind a very beautiful memory.

J. K. S.

A Big Movement.

A dispatch from Fairmont, to the Baltimore American, under date of Nov. 14, says:

About ten days ago James G. Blaine, Stephen B. Elkins, ex United States Senator Henry G. Davis and others made a flying trip over the West Virginia Central Railroad. It turns out that this visit was taken in connection with the recent purchase of 25,000 acres of valuable coal land in the county reached by the West Virginia Central Road. It is also known that the same interest has just acquired 15,000 acres of coal in Monongalia county. It is the purpose in the early spring to extend the West Virginia Central from Elkins to Philippi, thence along the valley of the Tygart river to Grafton, on the Baltimore & Ohio; thence to Fairmont, thence to Fair Chance, Pa., connecting with the Southern Pennsylvania, southeast from Elkins. Three engineer corps are now running lines through Webster, Pocahontas, Greenbrier and Monroe counties, and thence across the mountains to a connection with the Chesapeake & Ohio at Goshen, Va. This road will open up a vast extent of undeveloped coal, iron and timber country, of which many thousand acres have been bought by the head of the enterprise. The road will also be of great advantage to Pittsburg, giving her manufacturers easy access to vast deposits of raw materials.—Valley Virginian.

In Memoriam.

Death comes to all equally, and makes all equal, whether great or small, young or old, rich or poor learned or unlearned, on the land or on the sea, at home and surrounded by friends and loved ones, or abroad, and among strangers. If anything can be a consolation in the presence of death, certainly to sicken and die in the midst of hosts of sympathizing friends, must contribute something toward releiving the last dread agonis of body and mind. Thus amid the most favorable surrounding conceivable, all things considered passed away John Gay, Esq., of Marlinton, W. Va., on Monday evenings 3. P. M. October, 20th, 1890, aged 89 years 4 mo. and 24 days, having been born May 26th, 1804.

He was born, and lived through a long and eventful life, and died on the same farm, dying very near the spot where he was born, thus demonstrating that he was not only a "home maker by his energy, but a lover of his home and family, as many who are yet living can testify who have been in the days past and gone, made the welcome partakers of his generous hospitality.

In integrity he took a high stand early in life, being called to fill the office of Sheriff of his county at the age of 24 years during the years 1828 and 1829.

During twenty eight years of his life, he held the office of Justice of the peace, and was twice called by his fellow countrymen to represent them in the Virginia Legislature at Richmond, Va., 1839 to 1841 and 1843 to 1845.

His progenitors both paternal and material were of Scotch Irish decent, and more than one hundred years, were among the first families of the "Old Dominion, his father Robert Gay having moved to the territory of which Pocahontas Co., is a part, from Rockbridge Co., Va., before the dawn of the present century and while the Redmen of the forrest, still claimed this county as their hunting ground.

During a camp-meeting held by the Methodists, on Droop Mountain, W. Va. early in September, 1877. The subject of this sketch, gave his heart to God, and his name to the Church, and for thirteen years adorned his profession with an upright walk and chaste conversation, and during his last serious illness, which began on the 9th of September last, and ended with his death on 20th of October following, he very clearly and consolingly realized and enjoyed the fruits of the spirit of adoption, into the family of God's redeemed, and gave evidence of his acceptance in the Beloved Savior, all through his illness by often desiring his attendants and visiting friends to engage in singing some of the beautiful songs of "Zion," and offering prayer at his bed-side,—he seemed to enjoy these exercises very much and to his bereaved friends this is a consoling thought,—indicating very clearly that John Gay, Esq., left a good home below, for a" better "Home" above. Often during his illness he expressed his calm and certain reliances upon the promises, mercy, and goodness of God.

A very large concourse of people attended his funeral, which was conducted by Geo. P. Moore and Rev. W. T. Price, at his home and at the cemetery, being buried with the usual Methodist ritual, at a grave-yard near the residence of Mr. George Gibson, upon a part of the original Robt. Gay farm, on Tuesday evening Oct. 21st, 1890.

All the friends (which were many) of the deceased, heartily sympathize with his bereaved and aged companion, who is now left to travel the balance of life's journey alone, but still surrounded by some of her children and many friends.

Peace to his ashes—sympathy to his friends.

G. P. M.

WISEBURG, Jackson Co., W. Va., Nov. 11tht, 1890.—ED. TIMES, Dear Sir: Please publish the following:

DIED—At his home on Little Sandy, near Ravenswood, Jackson Co., Wm. Slaven, on 5th day of Nov., 1890, aged 92 years, 4 mouths and 4 days. He was born near what is known as Traveler's Repose, Pocahontas County. He lived a long and influential life, was always highly honored and held in high esteem where he lived. He represented his native County one session in the Legislature and was justice of the peace for a number of years and filled many offices in the different counties of which he lived with honor to himself, and to the entire satisfaction of the people he served. He moved from Pocahontas more than fifty years ago, first to Lewis county, then to Wirt and then to Jackson.

He was a man of fine mind a great reader, and retained his faculties to a remarkable extent to almost the very last. He was one of the best posted men in the country on the current issues of the day. He was truly a great and a good man. He joined the Presbyterian church early in life, but for many years previous to his death he was Southern Methodist, ever cheerful and pleasant, and very popular with all, both old and young, and he died in peace with all mankind, expressing himself entirely willing and ready for the change. He was buried by the Masons to which order he belonged.

The Sweetest Sound to Counsel for the Defence.

The great Dan Voorhees of Indiana and the equally great, if not so celebrated, Joe Mann of Danville once defended a man charged with murder in Edgar county. This case was a serious one for the defendant, and Voorhees and Mann exhausted their talent in his defence, with scarcely a hope of successfully proving his innocence. The trial was long and bitterly contested: the jury was out for hours, and finally this verdict was read in court: "We the jury, find the defendant not guilty."

As the reading of the verdict broke the stillness of the court room, Voorhees sprang to his feet, seized Mann by the arm with a clutch that nearly took a piece out, and in a hoarse, commanding whisper, said; "Come on! Let's take a walk." They left the court room and walked in silence down the street for some distance. Then Voorhees stopped, laid his hand on Mann's arm, and said, impressively:

"Joe, you're a good citizen, and I believe if justice is done you you'll get to heaven. We are told that in that land of perfect peace and rest there shall be heard such music as mortal ear has never heard. Sweet tones will ring on every side; grand bursts of song will rise from myriad happy souls in praise of their Redeemer; murmuring melody will float along on every balmy breeze, and exquisite music will everywhere and forever thrill the ecstatic senses of the blest —but, Joe, in that heavenly land you will never hear a sound so sweet to human ear as the utterance of those words: "We, the jury, find the defendant not guilty." Now let's go and take a drink."

At a County Court held for the County of Pocahontas at the Court house thereof on the 7th day of October 1890.

On the coming in of petition signed by H. H. McClintic and more than ten other free holders of the Edray District (District No. 2) of this County, it is ordered, that the provisions of section 2nd of Chapter 62 of the code of 1887, apply to all the lands within said District and the Clerk of this Court, is ordered to publish this order for once a week for four successive weeks in the POCAHONTAS TIMES, a newspaper published in the said County of Pocahontas, which publication shall be paid for by the said petitioners and said clerk shall also post a copy of this order for some length of time on the front door of Court House of this County.

A copy teste,

JOHN J. BEARD,
Clerk.

Pocahontas Times.

JOHN E. CAMPBELL,
EDITOR AND PROPRIETOR.

Entered at the Post-office at Huntersville, W. Va., as second class matter.

ADVERTISING RATES.

	1 m.	3 m.	6 m.	1 yr.
One inch	$ 1 00	$ 2 00	$ 3 00	$ 5 00
Three in.	2 00	4 00	6 00	10 00
Qr. column	3 00	6 00	10 00	17 00
Half col'n	6 00	12 00	20 00	30 00
One col'n	10 00	20 00	30 00	50 00

Reading notices, not exceeding five lines, twenty-five cents for each insertion, and five cents a line for each additional line.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION.

One copy, 1 yr., $1.00 in advance; after 6 months, $1.25; after 12 months, $1.50

These terms will be strictly complied with.

Huntersville. W. Va.

November 27, 1890.

Identified at Last.

"You'll have to be identified, before I can cash this check for you, madam," said the pompous cashier of a down town bank to a tall, leathery, hook-nosed woman in a green and red and blue dress and before the war bonnet, who presented herself at his window one afternoon, when the rush of business was greatest.

"I-dentified? what's that? asked the woman.

"Why, that you'll have to bring some one here who knows you to be the person named on this check.

"Well, I—I—why—I—No, it cayn't be! yes, it is too. Ain't you Henry Smith?"

"That is my name, madam," he replied coldly.

"I knowed it, and you don't reckomember me, Hen. Look at me agin. I'm changed some, an' so air you, but I jist knowed I'd seen you afore the minnit I clapt eyes on ye. You've got that same old cast in your left eye and nose still crooks a little to the left and you're a Smith all over. And you don't know me? Don't reckomember Salindy Spratt that you useter coax to become Salindy Smith. Hee, hee, hee! 'Member me now, don't yer, Hen? 'Member how ye useter haul me to school on your sled an' kiss me in the lane an' call me your little true love when we wuz boy an' gal together? 'Member how you cut up 'cause I give ye the mitten an' tok up with Li Link whose wife I now be? Land, Hen, I could stand here all day talkin' over them old times back on the farm but I reckon you're busy now. You kin i-dentify me now, can you, Hen?"

"Hen" did so, but in a mood that almost produced apoplexy, and those who witnessed the re-union of these long separated friends wondered that "Hen's" glance of identification did not strike Salindy Spratt Link dead.

Evening up Things.

I had a room next to a commercial traveler in a St. Louis hotel, and when both of us were packing up to go, after a stay of three or four days, I heard a sudden crash in his room and went in to ascertain the cause. He had the lounge on its back and had broken off a leg.

"You see," he explained, in an answer to my look of inquiry, "I am getting even with the house."

"How do you mean?"

"Sit down, my dear fellow," he continued, as he reached up and cracked one of the gas globes with the door key. "Let us theorize a bit. The object of a hotel is to furnish a temporary home for a man away from his own. The idea is to feed and lodge him and make him comfortable for a money consideration. The rate here is four dollars per day. Did you fee the porter for bringing up your trunk?"

"Yes."

"So did I. That was about blackmail. Did you fee your waiter?"

"Yes."

"So did I. We had to, or one wouldn't been half waited on. That's more blackmail. How was the gas in your room?"

"Very poor."

"Exactly. It is turned off so that no one can get half a light. That's a fraud on the guests. Did you drink at the bar?"

"A glass of beer."

"And they charged you ten cents and the glass was only a pony. They made fully 700 per cent. profit on that beer. That is extortion. Did you have icewater at night?"

"Yes, two or three times."

"And you gave the bell boy a dime each time. You felt that you had to. He felt that you ought to and stood waiting for it. That was more extortion. Did the mosquitoes bother you any?"

"Yes, nearly ate me up."

"And why not? There's not a screen of any sort at any window in the whole house. In other words the landlord hasn't the slightest care for your comfort. He won't go to the least cost or trouble to give you a good night's sleep. Buy any cigars in the hotel?"

"Yes."

"Well, they made from 150 to 200 per cent. on them. Have any laundry?"

"Yes."

"Well they charged you from 75 to 100 per cent. above outside prices. Perhaps you had a coupe?"

"Yes."

"Ordered it through the office probably?"

"Yes."

"Well, you paid from 25 to 50 per cent. above regular outside rates. A man took your hat at the dining room door. He is stationed there to bleed the public, and he bled you. If you got shaved, you paid twenty-five per cent. over outside rates. Same if you got a shine on your shoes. As a matter of fact, you have been blackmailed and robbed from basement to top story. Now, then, how are you going to get even?"

"I don't know."

"Then learn. I have broken a leg off that lounge. The fact won't be discovered for a week or two. No one can say I broke this globe. I take this bottle of ink and pour it on the carpet and move the bureau along. With my knife I rip a slit in this mattress. It's on the underside, and won't be seen for a month. I take this paper and crowd it into the overflow pipe of the wash stand and three or four days hence they will have to call a plumber. Now, with my knife I crack two of the upper panes of this window. The pieces will work loose before snow flies. I rack these bureau drawers so and so, and shut them up, and that will give the carpenter a job. That's all, I guess, and I'll leave it to any fair minded man if I have more than evened up accounts.

A Bargain in Crabs.

"I like to do a little black bass fishing now and then," said Dr. Tompkins, of Penn Yan, "but I'm not one of those enthusiastic people who can't get along without it. The other day, though, a friend of mine came in with a fine catch of bass, and the sight of them rather put me in the humor of going out and getting a lot myself.

"What did you catch 'em with?" I asked my friend.

"Crabs," he said.

"We call crawfish 'crabs' in Penn Yan. I had heard before that crabs were good bait for black bass and thinking that I might get some fish out of them as well as anybody else I went over to Lake Keuka outlet to bait. I lounged around in the creek for three hours turning up stones and slopping about in the water knee deep, and succeeded in capturing five little crabs.

"'Well,' I said to myself, 'that isn't a very big lot of bait to start on a day's fishing with, but I guess I won't have any trouble getting two or three nice bass, anyhow.'

"I was about leaving the creek when I met a small boy. He was a Penn Yan small boy and he had nerve, and he hailed me familiarly and said:

"'Hullo, mister. What you after?'

"I told him I was gathering crabs for bait, but that they were powerful scarce.

"'What'll you give me to get you some?' inquired the small boy.

"I thought it would be a nice thing to have a couple of dozen or so of crabs, for I'd want to be going out after more bass the next day, and knowing what a tough and tedious time I'd had getting only five, I thought I'd make it worth the boy's while spending a day tugging and sweating among the stones, and so I said I'd give him five cents apiece for crabs.

"'How many'll I git you?' he asked.

"'Oh, all you can,' I replied, feeling that all he could get would certainly be few enough.

"'All right!' he said, and I went up the lake a mile or so with my five crabs to get some bass for my supper. I fished all the rest of the day and never got as much as a bite. It was supper time when I pulled for home.

"'The next man that says crabs to me,' I said to myself, 'it won't go well with.'

"After supper I was sitting in my office, feeling a little sore yet over my day's fishing, when a knock came to the door. I opened it, and there stood the small boy I had hired to gather crabs for me. I had forgotten all about him.

"'Hullo, mister!' he said. 'I got some!'

"Crabs were the very last thing I was hankering after just then, but of course a bargain was a bargain.

"'All right,' I said. 'Fetch 'em in.'

"The small boy stepped aside and immediately appeared again, accompanied by another small boy. Each boy lugged in a big tobacco pail. Each pail was filled with crabs.

"'Great heavens!' I exclaimed. 'How many have you got?'

"'There's two thousan,' mister,' said the small boy I had bargained with. 'But we'd 'a' got a lot more if the pails had been bigger.'

"Two thousand crabs! If you'll take the trouble to figure on that you'll find that at five cents apiece 2,000 crabs will come to just an even $100, and that was the price per crab I had bound myself to pay. While those boys had nerve I've an idea that their ideas of financiering were crude, for after some exceedingly anxious and apprehensive argument with them I induced them to compromise on a basis of labor by the day, and even then they made such a good thing out of me that the next man who mentions crabs to me will stand an excellent chance of having the price of that day's work taken out of his hide. I returned those crabs to Keuka outlet, and any one who wants to may go there and catch them—if they can."

SUBSCRIBE

—FOR THE—

POCAHONTAS TIMES,

Every man in the County should take it, and patronize home industry. It sustains your rights, and works for the advancement of your county, which no city paper will do. It gives you the news from all parts of the county, which you could not get otherwise. It furnishes matters of interest to the Merchant, Farmer and Mechanic. It keeps you posted and gives you information, on all general news, and its sections and Miscellany are fit for all ages.

TERM OF SUBSCRIPTION,

One year in advance	$1.00
If not paid within 6 months	1.25
And at the end of the year	1.50

AND IF YOU NEED

Letter Heads, Note Heads, Bill Heads, Envelopes, Drug Envelopes, Tags, Business Cards, Official Blanks, Blank Bonds, Posters, Briefs for the Court of Appeals etc.

GET THEM AT "THE TIMES"

JOB OFFICE,

POCAHONTAS TIMES.

Vol VIII. JOHN E. CAMPBELL, EDITOR AND PROPRIETOR. Huntersville, West Virginia, Thursday, December 11, 1890. Terms of Subscription: $1.00 PER YEAR IN ADVANCE. No. 20.

Official Directory of Pocahontas County.

Judge of Circuit Court, A. N. Campbell.
Prosecuting Attorney, L. M. McClintic.
Sheriff, M. J. McNeel.
Deputy Sheriff, L. W. Herold
Clk of Cir. & Co. Courts, J. J Beard.
Assessor, C. O. Arbogast
Com'rs Co. Ct., C. E. Beard, S. B. Hannah, G. P. Moore.
Co. Surveyor, Geo. Baxter

THE COURTS.

Circuit Court convenes on the first Monday in April, 3rd Monday in June and 3rd Monday in October.

County Court convenes on the 1st Tuesday in January, March, October and second Tuesday in July. July is levy term.

MANY CHRISTMASES.

The Pine Tree Tells The Story of Its Life.

I grew in a wild, tangled forest on the edge of a bluff o'erlooking the sea. At first, I watched the little spring flowers unfold their leaves and blossoms, then the glad summer came, and the woods grew green and dark; after that they changed to red and gold, then all this faded and my home looked dull and cold; just as yours do, little ones, when the fire goes out. I did not like this gloom, for I was such a baby tree; the sea and the wind would moan and wail together, and all the great trees in the forest looked so sad. But at last the beautiful snow came; then I liked winter best of all, for I thought the snow flakes were the pretty dead flowers turned to angels, coming down from Heaven to comfort me; then, too, at night the stars were so bright, and if one looks at the stars long they are apt to think of strange things; so it was with me. I was wondering why some of the trees in the forest were bright and green, while all the rest were so bare and brown. I was trying to think this out when I heard voices, and saw a light coming near; by and by it was so near that I could see a strong, handsome man carrying a lantern, and a lovely lady walking by his side; then they stopped and looked at me, and the lady tenderly touched me and said: "This little one is prettiest of all, so shapely and just the right size." Then the handsome man smiled down at me, brushed the snow away, and with a hard, cruel tool dug me out of the ground, but very gently, indeed, so as not to harm my roots; then he lifted me in his arms and bore me away, and all the trees waved their arms farewell, and I was soon lost to their sight. But I did not feel afraid or sorry, for I looked all the time at the beautiful face of the lady, which somehow made me glad; so the time did not seem long before we came to a cottage, with a bright light in its window, and I heard the lady call it home. She opened the door, and then I knew what a home was. A blazing fire, a smooth clean floor, windows with blooming flowers a friendly clock, a table with an humble meal spread out, a cradle in a cozy corner, a child nestled upon its pillows, and love in the eyes of the mother. But I had never seen any thing so pretty as that baby. I forgot myself, and fairly trembled in my joy as I gazed upon her. At last I heard the mother say: "How beautiful it is, how it will delight my darling's eyes!" They seemed talking of me, so I looked at my self, and what do you think I saw? Festoons of popcorn and scarlet berries, and bright toys on every bough. What a proud little tree I was, to be so dressed as to please that baby; they called me a "Christmas tree," then I knew why it was that some trees must stay green in the winter.

All night I watched the moonbeams on the baby's face, then the morning came and flooded the room with sunshine, and the mother caught the child in her arms and brought her to my side. Oh, those eyes! They shone brighter than the winter stars, and were far more lovely. I was indeed the child's delight and she was mine. They planted me in a box, and I grew and watched the child grow day after day. At last the summer came, the child and I grew out of doors together, only at night she went to her cradle, while I watched for the morning and her coming. When it rained she stood at the window and laughed to see how bright the rain-drops made me look. All this while the child grew larger and more lovely, and I grew larger and more proud. Again Christmas came, again I was decked for the delight of the little girl. She could talk to me now, and I never grew tired of listening to her voice. Thus many Christmas days came and went until the child and I were ten years old. Then came the grandest time of all. My darling was so beautiful, and I was a stately tree, almost too large for a Christmas tree; we did not live in the cottage now, but in a stone mansion which stood in its place. My child had hosts of children friends, all glad and gay as she. Nestled in my arms were fairy dolls almost as lovely as the children; books with wonderful stories and pictures; gorgeous toys of every description; animals that if wound up would run about as though half mad; miniature houses completely furnished, bon bons, sweet meats, and even jewels. Way up in the topmost branch stood a little old Santa Claus, showering gifts from his hands in a most magical fashion. Besides all this a hundred tiny candles blazed on all my finger tips, until I wondered if the very stars in heaven were not jealous; from a distant room came the sound of sweet, low music; this after a time became loud and glad, and then the children joined hands and they danced around me, and I became a very proud tree. But amid all the joy and laughter, all the richness and luxury, all the brilliant scene, I could not help remembering that Christmas eve of long ago, when my brightest ornaments were the scarlet berries, and all that dazzled me was the sweet child's eyes.

Now, when the spring came again, my way of life was quite changed. Out in the beautiful garden there was a great hole dug. Again I was borne in the arms of the gentlemen, while the same lovely lady walked by his side and the child and all her little friends followed in the train. There was music by the singing birds, and in the light of the morning sun, and amid peals of laughter. I was planted in my final resting-place. And now the child began to study; she learned too much for a poor ignorant tree like me to tell about. All I know is that grave-looking masters would come, then my darling would leave me, and I could see through the window the curly head bent over a wise-looking book, and the time would seem very long before she would come back again. Then there came a day more sad than all the rest. My child went away to learn more still, I heard it whispered. I was left alone—for the father and mother could not endure their home with their darling gone, so they went away upon a long journey. My heart was heavy with grief, but I, too, had much to learn; though not from books, but from the flowers and birds, from the rain drops and the snow drops; from the sunshine and the wind, from the starlight and the moonlight, and from the blue sky and the storm clouds; and I became the wisest tree in the garden, for I learned how to make all these things comfort me.

After a very long time had passed away, my darling came back, my child still, and yet so changed; the eyes were the same, but the sunny hair had grown brown, and she was so tall and different, I thought. She would come and dream the hours away by my side. Sometimes she would seem to be seeing something far away, would smile so sweetly, and then the eyes would fill with tears. I thought: "Oh, my child has learned too much;" I thought so still when one day a handsome youth sought her beneath my shade, and I was sure of it when I heard what he whispered; but I changed my mind when my pet ceased to dream and became happy and gay again, and she laughed so merrily that the youth and I would always laugh, too.

All this time everybody seemed very busy, except my darling and the young gentleman. Then one night in sweet midsummer imagine my surprise as I beheld myself again one mass of dazzling light. The garden, too, was a brilliant for moving among the flowers and fairy lights was the gay throng of children that danced around me so long ago one Christmas night. They were all grown to lovely women and handsome men, like my darling and the youth that loved her. And again they gathered in a circle about me and my child and her betrothed stood under my outstretched arms. I was crowned with glory now, for they had made me a sacred altar. I heard their whispered vows and blessed them, and who dare say that a simple pine tree can not shed a blessing?

The merry throng grew merrier still, and so the wedding night was passed and gone.

I am now a portly old pine; there is gossip abroad in the garden to the effect that I am very proud, and I guess it is partly true. Many years have passed away since that wedding night. My child lives with her husband far away where they speak a different language and have no winter season. The father and mother are dead, and another family live in the house, and three little children play in my shade and love me, and climb in my arms; I am very happy, but I never forget the days of my youth, and never tire of talking about them. Early this morning I told of my life to a little snowbird, and when he went to get his breakfast of crumbs, from the hands of a lady in the mansion, whom the children call "auntie," he told it to her and she wrote it down; I saw her do it myself, and there's no knowing what becomes of stories when they once get on paper.

Items of General Interest

No gold or silver coins are issued by the Chinese Government.

It is proposed to tunnel the Irish channel at a cost of $40,000,000

There are nearly 2,000 cigar manufactories in Havanna, some employing over 400 hands. Each factory is taxed £1 year for each man employed.

The Chinese railroad embankment from Tongsan to Tongsan was destroyed by the populace during the recent floods. They alleged that it dammed up the rivers over which it passed and was responsible for the floods.

Master Workman Powderly, of the Knights of Labor, was re-elected by the convention at Denver, without opposition. His salary has been reduced from $5,000 to $3,500. In his annual report he stated that he objected to strikes but firmly believes in organization.

The New York elevated railroads carried last year 188,000,000 passengers. The net earnings were $1,216,000. New cars costing $500,000 have been ordered. The Brooklyn elevated railroads' earnings for the year ending June 30 last, showed an increase of 43.7 per cent, on handsomely increased mileage.

"Ah, then, miss, would you be tellin' a poor old woman where St. Mary's home is?"

The fashionably dressed young woman thus addressed stopped as she was walking in Broadway and looked down on a ragged old crone, the picture of squalor and ill health. Her first inclination was to get away as quickly as possible from the uncanny object, but pity prevailed and she said:

"I'm going past the home myself. Follow me and I'll point it out to you when I reach it."

Then she started on again. If the old woman had only been content to follow quietly the young one would have felt sufficiently rewarded for her kindness by the consciousness of a good deed done; but the old one began in a loud singsong to praise the Lord for sending her so kind and beautiful a lady to lead her to the home.

"Glory be to God!" she almost shouted. "The Lord rest the souls of all the dead belongin' to ye! May the heavens be yer bed, and every hair in yer head a candle 'round yer coffin to light ye to glory! Holy mother send ye a rich husband and a fine big family!" and so on all through crowded Fourteenth street to the vast amusement of the people and the overwhelming confusion of the bashful benefactor, who could hardly restrain herself from running away.

When the Great Spirit created the world he first made three men, all of the same color. Then he led them to a pool of water and bade them jump in and bathe. One of them, obeying at once, leaped in in advance of his fellows, and came out clean and white.

The other hesitated, but one soon followed the first. When he went in the water had become somewhat stained and he came out copper colored.

Then the third man went in. By that time the water of the pool had become black, and he was consequently black when he had bathed.

Thus it happens that there are white men, red men and black men in the world.

Then the Great Spirit laid down three packages before the three men, which contained their future fate. Out of pity for the black man he permitted him to have his first choice of the parcels.

The black man, without hesitation, took the largest of the parcels; the red man, whose turn was next, took the next largest parcel, and the white man got the remaining one, which was very small.

Then the men opened their packages. That of the black man was found to contain shovels and other implements of labor; the red man's contained bows and arrows, and the white man's small parcel consisted of pens, ink and tools for fine, light work.

From that time on each man made use of the tools he had chosen.

Pocahontas Times.

JOHN E. CAMPBELL,
EDITOR AND PROPRIETOR.

Entered at the Post-office at Huntersville, W. Va., as second class matter.

ADVERTISING RATES.

	1 m.	3 m.	6 m.	1 yr.
One inch	$ 1 00	$ 3 00	$ 3 00	$ 5 00
Three in.	3 00	4 00	6 00	10 00
Qr. column	3 00	6 00	10 00	17 00
Half col'n	6 00	12 00	20 00	30 00
One col'n	10 00	20 00	30 00	50 00

Reading notices, not exceeding five lines, twenty-five cents for each insertion, and five cents a line for each additional line.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION.

One copy, 1 yr., $1.00 in advance; after 6 months, $1.25; after 12 months, $1.50

These terms will be strictly complied with.

Huntersville, W. Va.

December 11; 1890.

An able Document—on the Whole.

President Harrison's message is a very voluminous one. He presents his views very clearly and makes some good points in support of them. He commends the work of the last session of Congress and urges the passage of those bills that were held over. He especially commends the Federal Elections bill and the Steamship Subsidy bill. The first of these would defeat its own object, as the testimony of the most reliable witnesses proves. The second would take a large amount of money out of the pockets of the people and put it in the pockets of steamship owners, without any gain to the people that would be at all commensurate with the cost. The true way to build up ocean steamship lines carrying the American flag is to give Americans a fair chance to compete with foreigners in general trade and in the building or buying and repairing of ships. Then they can take care of themselves without Government pay. This steamship subsidy scheme is just another outgrowth of the idea that it is the business of the Government to provide sustenance for the people. Every step that the Government takes in that direction leads naturally to another. Each individual as he comes to realize that he is being bled for the benefit of somebody else, begins to think how he too can get a share of the plunder. By and by we shall come to live like the monkeys in a menagerie—each with his hands in his neighbors' dishes instead of eating out of his own.

WASHINGTON LETTER.

[From our regular correspondent.,

WASHINGTON, D. C., Dec., 5—Senator Gorman, who proved himself such an able and capable leader during the last session of Congress, was by general consent recognized as commander-in-chief of the democratic Senatorial army as soon as it became evident that Mr. Harrison and the radical republican leaders had succeeded in whipping the weak-kneed republican Senators into voting to take up the Force bill, and this spontaneous choice was officially ratified by the democratic caucus which met Wednesday evening. The policy of the democrats in the fight over this infamous partisan measure, which is likely to become one of the most famous in Congressional annals, is to reserve their strength until the republicans begin the attempt to change the rules of the Senate, which is a necessary prelude to the passage of the bill. Unless revolutionary tactics are adopted this change cannot be accomplished, because it must otherwise be accomplished under those very rules. When the attempt is made, as it is certain to be, the democratic watch words will be eternal vigilance and war to the death, and the people of the country may rest assured that nothing will be left undone to defeat the intentions of the desperat and desparing republican leaders.

By a curious coincidence Mr. Blaine chanced to be a visitor to the diplomatic gallery of the Senate, in company with the Brazilian naval officers who have been visiting us, just at the time when the Force bill was being read, and it must have required all his self possession to prevent the contempt he feels for that measure from showing itself in his countenance.

Mr. Harrison has caused it to be semi-officially hinted that he would veto a free silver coinage bill should Congress pass one, but that fact has not prevented a dozen or more Senators and Representatives, at least half of them republicans, from introducing bills providing for free coinage, and Senator Teller has stated that he has positive assurances that such a bill will pass the Senate, and that he believes it will also go through the House. Mr. Harrison seems to learn nothing by experience. He made a similar bluff at the last session in regard to the River and Harbor bill, which he afterwards signed notwithstanding it carried one of the largest appropriations ever carried by a similar measure. He made no suggestion in his political harrangue to the republican party, called by courtesy his annual message to Congress, for the financial relief of the people, and he compelled his Secretary of the Treasury to cut out of his annual report a recommendation for the issue of an incontrovertible 1½ or 2 per cent bond, which might have afforded some relief by increasing the volume of our currency; therefore he should not be surprised if the Senators and Representatives fresh from personal contact with the people and conversant with their needs should attempt to supply them.

One bill has been introduced in in the Senate by a republican—Senator Cullom—which most of the democrats would gladly vote for, if they could get a chance. It provides for one cent letter postage, which Mr. Harrison, in his anxiety to talk partisan politics, forgot to even mention in his message.

Quite a number of bills have been introduced in the House and Senate to repeal certain sections of the McKinley tariff act, one of the most notable of which is that introduced by Representative McCreary, of Kentucky to put what he very aptly calls the seven blessings of mankind, tin and tin plate, cotton ties, agricultural implements and edged tools, binders twine, blankets, worsted for men and women's clothing and salt, upon the free list. If Boss Reed and his henchmen would allow this bill to get before the House it would go through the House "quicker than a streak of greased lightning," as the saying is, but you may be sure that they will not do it. It would hurt some of the wealthy men for whose "protection" the republican party exists.

The Pension appropriation bill for the fiscal year beginning July 1, 1891, has been reported to the House. It appropriates $135,009,785, and those well informed say that it is less by from thirty to seventy millions of dollars than will be required to pay the pensions during the year. Look out for music when this bill is discussed in the House. Some peculiar republican pension methods are to be shown up by the democrats.

The House, after one day spent in filibustering and one in discussion, passed the International copyright bill by a vote of 139 to 95.

Persuasion, threats, and bribery, on the part of the administration, by the promise of future patronage, has so far failed to get together a quorum of republicans in the House. Without that republican quorum no partisan legislation will be allowed to go through the House.

Order of Publication.

At rules held in the Circuit Court Clerk's Office of Pocahontas County, West Virginia, on the first Monday in December, 1890.

Rosella Smith by &c.
vs. | In Chancery
Mary F. Malcomb, & others |

The object of this suit is to obtain a sale and partition of proceeds of 100 acre tract of land in Pocahontas County West Virginia, and it appearing by affidavit filed that Elizabeth Y. Cockran is a non-resident of the State of West Virginia, it is orderep that she, appear here within one month after the first publication of this order, and do what is necessary to protect her interest in this suit.

Teste,
JOHN J. BEARD, Clerk.

Order of Publication.

At rules held in the Circuit Court Clerk's Office of Pocahontas County, W. Va., on the first Monday in December, 1890

Minnie V. Dameron Pl'ff.
vs.
Thomas J. Dameron Def't.
In Chancery.

The object of this suit is to procure a decree of divorce in favor of the plaintiff Minnie V. Dameron from the bonds of matrimony with the defendant Thomas J. Dameron, and to be awarded custody of the two children, Lena Page Dameron and Lewis Houseman Dameron and it appearing by affidavit filed that Thomas J. Dameron is a nonresident of the State of West Virginia it is ordered that he appear here within one month after the first publication of this order, and do what is necessary to protect his interest in this suit.

Teste,
JOHN J. BEARD, Cl'k

Rucker, p. q.

Dec. 4th 4w

To Thomas J. Dameron, Esq.,

Take notice, that on the 12th day of January, A. D., 1891, between the hours of six o'clock, A. M., and Ten o'clock, P. M., at the residence of the late George C. Hill dec'd. on Hill's Creek, Little Levels District, Pocahontas County, West Virginia, I will take the depositions of Miss Mary K. Hill, and others, to be read as evidence in my behalf, in a certain suit in chancery now pending in the Circuit Court of the County of Pocahontas, and State of West Virginia, in which I am Plaintiff, and you are Defendant.

If from any cause the taking of said depositions shall not be commenced or completed on the day aforesaid, the same shall be continued from day to day, or from time to time, at the same place and between the same hours, until the same shall be completed.

MINNIE V. DAMERON,
By counsel.

H. S. Rucker, Sol.

Dec. 4th-4 w

HOME NEWS

—Messrs. E. H. Moore, of Academy and J. S. Smith, of Mill Point, "fell in on us" Monday.

—Speaking of ice houses, why not use the churches? Surely, they are cold enough.

—There is probably more in sausage than in any other food except hash.

—Christmas Goods, Queensware, Glassware &c., at Loury & Doyle's.

—Born to Horace Herold, Esq., and wife, of Frost on the 8th inst. —a boy.

—Miss Sadie Hamilton, of Knapp's creek, is visiting friends at Hinton.

—Only two weeks until Xmas and then look out for the small boy mit the fire cracker, and the large boy mit the fire water.

—Attorney C. F. Moore, who is in the abstract business at Clifton Forge, Va., came home last Friday and returned Monday, accompanied by Fred Beard Esq.

—S. L. Brown, Esq., returned from a two weeks visit to friends and relatives in Randolph and Barbour counties.

—Dr. Jno. Ligon, of Clover Lick, who has been visiting the booming towns of Va., passed through town to day, (Wednesday) on his way home.

—Our young friend Attorney S. C. McNeill, of Buckeye, has been in our city for several days past, and tells us he expects to soon hang out his shingle at this place.

—How great would be our encouragement if every one of our subscribers would send us one new subscriber the last week in December, to begin THE TIMES with the New Year.

—Never trust an able-bodied youth or young man who cannot and does not support himself without calling on his mother for all the money she can spare from what she earns while he is operating as a masher.

—Mrs Morgan Grimes, of near Dilley's Mill was visiting her daughter Mrs. David Bambrick, at this place part of last and the first of this week.

—We are printing this week for Attorney H. S. Rucker, a brief in the case of Allen C. Barner vs. Uriah Hevener. It will make something over thirty pages of printed matter.

—H. M. Lockridge, formerly, of near this place, but now of Buena Vista, Va., has organized an Investment and Improvement Co., at that magic city, composed of some of the best men of our County, and we believe has made investments that will pay them handsomely.

—From a handsome and superbly printed invitation we learn of the marriage of Miss Jennie L. Campbell to Capt. W. O. Robertson, to take place at the home of the bride's parents at Hinton, on Thursday, Dec. 18th. We advance our best wishes for their future and are sorry that business prevents us from attending the happy event.

—Mr. S. L. Gibson, of Frost, died at his home on Monday the 8th instant, of congestion of the lungs. Mr. Gibson, was one of the most worthy and highly respected citizens of our County, filling, in his time, offices of trust and honor. We sincerely sympathize with his children in their sad bereavement, though they have the glorious consolation that their father has gone to his heavenly home.

HAY FOR SALE.

I have for sale 12 hay stacks, excellent hay, which I will sell very low.

GEO. DILLEY,
Beaver Creek.

dec 4 2 t

—Preaching at Bethel next (2nd) Sunday, 11 o'clock, a. am Dec. 14, by pastor Snapp.

—Mason Williams, Esq., of Locust, called to see us to-day, (Wednesday).

—New line of Ladies Trimmed Hat's at Loury & Doyle's.

—Capt. D. A. Stofer, has been quite ill for a few days past, but is now some better.

—The second term of the Hillsboro, M. & F. Academy will open the 29th of December, and continue six months.

—We are requested to announce, that a full meeting of the heads of families in this neighborhood, is desired at prayer meeting, this evening (Thursday), for the purpose of arranging for a Christmas Tree. This Tree is intended for the benefit of the whole immediate neighborhood.

—At a dance near Buckeye, last Thursday night Enoch McNeill, Esq., accused a Mr. Weakly of taking some whiskey, when the latter after Mr. McNeel turned his back, struck him in the back of the head with an axe, fracturing his skull so that pieces were taken out. It is thought he will recover. Weakly has not been arrested.

—Wise Herold, Esq., of Frost and ye Ed. returned last Friday evening from a visit to the booming towns of Va. We were at the lot sale at Basic city last Thursday. Lots were sold at from $500 to $3,000. For yearlings, Clifton Forge, Basic City and Buena Vista, beat the world. They have large manufacturing plants that employ from 1000 to 1500 men, a population of from 2000 or 3000 people, and the structures already built and are now going up, are not common plank things, but large magnificent brick buildings, trimed with pressed brick and marble. They bid fair to become cities of importance—while other towns in that grand and glorious Valley of Va., are not slow behind them. Though, we would advise our friends who are doing well enough, to let well enough alone. Skilled workman get good wages, but common laborers get from $1.00 to $1.25 per day and pay a big price for board, or if they have families, and have to rent it is simply out of the question; small four and five roomed houses on the outskirts are renting for $25.00 per month.

ANNOUNCEMENT!

Hillsboro Male and Female Academy will give a Christmas entertainment on the 19th inst., beginning at 6½ o'clock, p. m. The exercises will consist of a debate by the two literary societies, followed by Pantomines, Motion songs, Music and calisthenics.

There will be an admittance fee of 15 cts. for the purpose of establishing a library for the societies A cordial invitation is given the public.

Green Bank Items.

A little winterish. About a quarter of an inch of snow fell last night.

Mr. J. S. Smith, of near Mill Point, spent last week visiting friends in this vicinity.

We understand Mrs. Agnes Leivlazy who is stopping with Mrs. H. A. Yeager at this place is quite indisposed at this writing.

Mr. Lee Cackley and family, of Mill Point, are on a visit to her parents and friends in this vicinity.

Madam rumor says there will be a wedding on the mountain in the near future and a reception near this place.

LOTTIE.

The steamer Lethers caught fire in the Mississippi River near New Orleans last week, and in attempting to escape seventeen persons were either drowned or burned to death.

Edray Items.

Upwards of twenty wagons and teams have been employed during the last two or three weeks, delivering lumber on the river bank at Marlinton, for the various lumber dealers. There is now lying there 150,000 to 200,00 feet at the various yards—the roads are in fine order now, but if rains set in then the bottom will be deep down.

Messrs. Beverage & Loudermilk are sawing for Geo. W. McCollum, on Greenbrier river, near Mr. Friel's.

Messrs. Sharp & Smith, are running their saw-mill on the Capt. Cochran place on Stony Creek.

Messrs. Gay & Peters, are sawing on Laurel creek.

S. M. Gay & Co., are sawing near Mt. Pleasant.

Jas. Gibson's saw mill is at work near Split Rock.

A. C. Wooddell's saw mill is being closely pushed near Split Rock.

J. N. White & Bro., are sawing cherry at the mouth of Big Spring on Elk.

Thus you see—the 2nd District of this County now boasts of seven steam saw mills at work employing outside of lumber haulers an average of 8 to 10 hands each, at, and about the mills, distributing hundreds of dollars among laborers,—hard work—but not hard times.

Mr. W. C. Hull, received a letter from his son J. F., announcing his safe arrival in Colorado, in fair health, and encouraged prospects.

C. Z. Hevener has been appointed Post-Master at Marlinton, W. Va., vice, Sam'l. Gay removed.

Some stock has been taken in Eastern Booms by our married men in this Dist, if these Booms continue this County will soon be bankrupt, and moonshine towns, and cities on paper, in other sections will be rich, and in these the big fish, will soon swallow the little-fish and then the stream of wealth will be dry, and the country left devoid of means of trade,—with the country capital, in the coffers of city capitalists,—and then a howl about hard times.

As no writ of election was issued, before the late election, so there was no declared vacancies to fill hence no new officers to qualify, instead of appointees.

S. B. Moore is not back yet from Charleston, where he has been attending U. S. Court as a juror, from this County since the 10th of Nov. last.

A Revival meeting held at Fairview, near here, by Rev. S. C. Morgan closed last night, resulting in forty conversions, and accessions to the church.

Mr. Jas. H. Jackson, and Miss Elizabeth S. Adkisson, were married in the Edray Church, by Rev. G. P. Moore on Wednesday the 3rd inst in the presence of a large crowd of interested spectators.

The taking off and hiding of buggy wheels is not creditable in any community. X. X.

A despatch from Memphis, Tenn., dated Nov. 28, says: "James Stockton met his wife here to-day for the first time since the Johnstown flood. They had mourned each other as dead, believing that they had been bereaved by the awful disaster. Stockton had gone to California and Mrs. Stockton was in Massachusetts. They were discovered to each other by a mutual friend in this city, and to-day a most joyful meeting took place at the first station on the Chesapeake and Ohio Railway on the incoming train. They had only been married a few days, and will go from here to their new home in California to complete their rudely interrupted honeymoon."

The oldest man in the world is probably Osman, of Cavaliovit, Turkey. He has lived 165 years, and has documents to prove it. He is an Arabian widower, and is supported by a small pension from the Sultan.

Mrs. Mary E. Beaseley, of Philadelphia, has invented and patented a barrel-hooping machine which gives her an income of $20,000 a year; her machine, it is claimed, being capable of hooping 1,200 barrels a day.

A recent estimate places the annual consumption of tobacco in the United States at 310,000,000 pounds. This makes an average annual consumption of five pounds for every person in the country. But as not more than one fifth of the population use tobacco (and that is an appalling average) those who do use it must consume twenty-five pounds per annum. If the price of these three hundred and ten million pounds of tobacco for three years, were placed in the public treasury, it would more than pay out the entire national debt.

A thousand years hence—so says a member of the Academy of Sciences—nearly all the stone buildings now standing in Europe will have crumbled to dust. So perishable is the material of which they are constructed that the process of decay is already evident in many conspicuous edifices. The same thing is going on in this country. Neither marble nor our favorite brownstone can withstand the action of the elements. Even the Capitol at Washington is undergoing disintegration. It may not be important that an ordinary dwelling-house should last a thousand years. For sanitary reasons it is, perhaps, just as well that people should have to build their houses over again once every two or three centuries. But it is not agreeable to think that the Capitol and all the great churches in the country will have disappeared by the year of grace 2890.

Order of Publication.

At rules held in the Circuit Court Clerk's Office of Pocahontas County, West Virginia, on the first Monday in December, 1890.

Leven Wanless
vs } In Chancery.
John F. Wanless & others

The object of this suit is to obtain a decree for the sale of the lands of which Jas. Wanless died seized and possessed, and a division of the proceeds among his heirs at law, and it appearing by affidavit filed, that Thomas Hatton and Betsy his wife, —— Veria and Zeda his wife and George P. Wanless, are non-residents of the State of West Virginia, it is ordered that they do appear here within one month after the first publication of this order, and do what is necessary to protect their interest in this suit.

Teste,
JOHN J. BEARD, Cl'k.
Skeen p. q.
Decbr. 4th 4 w

Order of Publication.

At rules held in the Circuit Court Clerk's Office of Pocahontas County, West Virginia, on the first Monday in December, 1890.

Rhoda E. Crigger Pl'ff.
vs. In Ch'y.
H. F. Crigger Def't.

The object of this suit is to obtain a divorce from the bonds of matrimony and to be awarded the custody of the child, James H. Crigger, and it appearing by affidavit filed that diligence has been used on behalf of plaintiff to ascertain in what County the said H. F. Crigger resides without effect, and from the best information she can obtain, the said H. F. Crigger is not a resident of the State of West Virginia. It is ordered that said Crigger appear here within one month after the first publication of this order and do what is necessary to protect his interest in this suit.

Teste,
JOHN J. BEARD, Clerk.

Rucker p. q.

Dec. 4 4 w

Notice To Take Depositions.

To H. F. Crigger, Esq.:

Take notice that on the 9th day of January A. D., 1891, between the hours of six o'clock, A. M., and six o'clock, P. M., at the law office of H. S. Rucker, in the town of Huntersville, Pocahontas County, West Virginia, I will take the depositions of John C. Moran and others, to be read as evidence in my behalf, in a certain suit in Chancery now pending in the Circuit Court of the County of Pocahontas, State of West Virginia, in which I am Plaintiff, and you are Defendant.

If from any cause the taking of said depositions shall not be commenced or completed on the day aforesaid, the same shall be continued from day to day, or from time to time, at the same place and between the same hours, until the same shall be completed.

Respectfully,
RHODA E. CRIGGER.
By Counsel.

H. S. Rucker, Sol.
Dec 4-4 t

Pocahontas Times.

JOHN E. CAMPBELL,
EDITOR AND PROPRIETOR.

Entered at the Post-office at Huntersville, W. Va., as second class matter.

ADVERTISING RATES.

	1 m.	3 m.	6 m.	1 yr.
One inch	$ 1 00	$ 2 00	$ 3 00	$ 5 00
Three in.	2 00	4 00	6 00	10 00
Qr. column	3 00	6 00	10 00	17 00
Half col'n	6 00	12 00	20 00	30 00
One col'n	10 00	20 00	30 00	50 00

Reading notices, not exceeding five lines, twenty-five cents for each insertion, and five cents a line for each additional line.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION.

One copy, 1 yr., $1.00 in advance; after 6 months, $1.25; after 12 months, $1.50

These terms will be strictly complied with.

Huntersville, W. Va.

December 11, 1890.

Bloomer (to ragged urchin)—Your parents left you something when they died, did they not?

Urchin—Oh, yes, sir.

Bloomer—And what did they leave you, my little man?

Urchin—An orphan, sir.

"You know, Fanny, I picked out old Squartoes as a safe husband for my daughter and invited him to dinner almost daily for a month. Knowing that he was something of a gourmand I engaged an expensive cook, and at the end of 30 days do you know what happened?"

"No."

"Why, he married the cook."—

First Successful Business Man—I had only a common school education but I found it sufficient. You, I believe, were a college graduate.

Second Business Man—Yes; graduated with high honors, too.

First S. B. M.—Now tell me truly. Did you find any practical use for what you learned at college?

Second S. B. M.—Um-yes. One night, when burglars got into my house, I scared them off with a college yell.

Farmer Roots—I dunno but we'd [illegible] direction leads naturally to another. Each individual as he comes to realize that he is being bled for the benefit of somebody else, begins to think how he too can get a share of the plunder. By and by we shall come to live like the monkeys in a menagerie—each with his hands in his neighbors' dishes instead of eating out of his own.

WASHINGTON LETTER.

[From our regular correspondent.]

WASHINGTON, D. C., Dec., Senator Gorman, who proved himself such [illegible] red-hot partisan stripe. When he heard of Cannon's defeat, he said to his wife, who is one of those women who obey their lord and master blindly:

"Mary pack up everything; I'm going to move."

"Why?" asked Mary."

"Because Joe Cannon is beat, and I won't live in a Democratic district."

"Very well," said Mary, with a little resigned sigh.

The old man went to town to sell his farm. There he heard all the election news. He returned home, and entering the house said:

"Mary, you can quit packing up; I ain't a going to move."

"Why?" inquired Mary.

"Because," he replied sadly, "there's no place to move to."

A boy seven or eight years old, whose parents live on Third avenue, was beating a drum in the alley, when a neighbor appeared and asked:

"How much did your father pay for that drum, sonny?"

"Two shillings, sir."

"Will you take a dollar for it?"

"Yes, sir; [illegible] I'd sell it for ten cents."

The exchange was made and the drum put where it wouldn't do any more good, and the neighbor chuckled over his stratagem. However, when he got home at night there were four drums beating in front of his house and the drummer boy was prompt to inform him:

"These are my cousins, and I took that dollar and bought four new drums. Do you want to give us $4 for them?"

The neighbor bowed to the inevitable and retired.

LIES WILL SOMETIMES DECIEVE

But the following from the Valley Virginian gives itself away: A society known as Omish, in the State of Ohio, is constituted of a singular people. They have very little intercourse with the outside world, and have so intermarried that a low grade of mental capacity is the rule with them. They read none of the secular papers, never leave the boundary of their society, except to take their produce to market, and have very little to do with politics or trade, outside of themselves. The society is included in McKinley's district. Knowing their ignorance and parsimony, the Democratic leaders concieved the idea of capturing the votes of the men. They equipped a number of the shrewd members of the Democratic party as peddlers, and started them out, each with a cargo of tin cups. The price of tin cups had been and is 5 cents. These peddlers moved about in the Omish settlement offering to sell them at $1 a piece. When the Omish protested, the peddlers told them that was the ruling price—that everybody sold them at one dollar and that it was "because of the McKinley bill." This trick was played so insidiously and gently, that the Republicans did not learn of it until too late. The result was that the Omish, who rarely ever went to the polls, on this occasion mustered their full force, and cast their ballots against McKinley, because, as they believed, he had been the cause of the increase of the price of tin cups from 5 cents to one dollar. They cast enough votes to determine the election, and by this fraud the nation is deprived of one of the ablest and cleanest public men who ever sat in Congress, and yet this is the party of "Reform" with a big R.

SUBSCRIBE

FOR THE

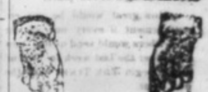
POCAHONTAS TIMES,

Every man in the County should take it, and patronize home industry. It sustains your rights, and works for the advancement of your county, which no city paper will do. It gives you the news from all parts of the county, which you could not get otherwise. It furnishes matters of interest to the Merchant, Farmer and Mechanic. It keeps you posted and gives you information, as all general news, and its sections and Miscellany are fit for all ages.

TERM OF SUBSCRIPTION.

One year in advance	$1.00
If not paid within 6 months	1.25
And at the end of the year	1.50

AND IF YOU NEED



Letter Heads, Note Heads, Bill Heads, Envelopes, Drug Envelopes, Tags, Business Cards, Legal Blanks, Blank Bonds, Posters, Briefs for the Court of Appeals etc.

GET THEM AT "THE TIMES"

JOB OFFICE.

POCAHONTAS TIMES.

Vol. [illegible] JOHN E. CAMPBELL, EDITOR AND PROPRIETOR. Huntersville, West Virginia, Thursday, December 18, 1890. Terms of Subscription, $1.00 PER YEAR IN ADVANCE. No. 21.

Official Directory of Pocahontas County.

Judge of Circuit Court, A. N. Campbell.
Pros. Attorney, L. M. McClintic.
Sheriff, M. J. McNeel.
Deputy Sheriff, L. W. Herold.
Clerk Cir. & Co. Courts, J. J. Beard.
Assessor, C. O. Arbogast.
Com'rs, C. E. Beard, S. B. Hannah, G. P. Moore.
Co. Surveyor, Geo. Baxter.

THE COURTS.

Circuit Court convenes on the first Monday in April, 3rd Monday in June and Tuesday in October.

County Court convenes on the 1st Tuesday in January, March, October and 4th Tuesday in July. July is levy term.

A PIKETOWN ROMANCE.

Old Peter Cummins was "deown with the rheumatiz." Consequently he was very peevish.

He badgered and bullied all who came within hearing of his stentorian voice, from his youngest daughter Martha to his meek, pale faced old wife.

He found fault with his one hired man to such an extent that the latter "quit," leaving the plow in the furrow in the back lot, and went in search of a place where, as he expressed it, he could "chaw his hash in peace, an' not be cussed at w'enever he went in ear shot of the house."

The hired man had not been a rapid worker, an' as Peter had been ailing for weeks his farm work was in a very backward and chaotic condition.

The plowing was no more than half done, the potatoes were not planted, the corn ground was not "fitted," and it was already the middle of May.

The farm hands for miles around had all secured situations, and had been at work for weeks. There was not one to be had for love or money.

It looked as though Peter Cummins would have to worry through the season as best he could without a hired man.

Under the circumstances Peter did not improve either in health or temper.

"Drat the rheumatiz!" cried he. "If I could only git about I'd hitch up ole Jerry an' drive till I found a hired man—a' one good for suthin,' too. But here I am tied down—bound an' gagged—with this pesky rheumatiz. Ow, wow, wow! wot a tinge thet air was."

Although Peter was, in a certain sense, bound to his chair, he was very far from stating the truth when he said he was gagged, as his wife, his daughters and every chance passerby could have testified.

Although plowing and planting were at a standstill on the farm the dairy work went on as briskly as ever, with Miss Susan Cummins as general manager and Miss Martha as able assistant.

The seventeen cows were milked bright and early every morning; the milk was "set" in large shallow pans, and the cream, at the proper time, was churned, salted and "worked" into the sweetest of golden butter.

This was not considered hard work by the tall, broad shouldered, rosy cheeked blue eyed, flaxen haired Susan, who at 19 years of age was as strong, healthy and cheerful as a girl well could be.

Martha, two years younger, although equally as light hearted as her sister, was different in many ways. She resembled her mother, who, when a "gal," as she often told her daughters, was considered a great beauty.

Martha had inherited her mother's coal black hair and eyes, creamy complexion and slim, slender form. She was very pretty, and not a farmer boy for miles around but loved the ground she walked on—especially when she lightly tripped over a portion of her father's fertile soil.

The Cummins homestead would have been fairly overrun with admirers of the two girls (for there were many who liked the robust Susan's style of beauty) but for one thing. They one and all had a wholesome fear and dread of Peter's rasping, but piercing, foghorn voice. He also, when laid down with "rheumatiz," wielded with much dexterity and accuracy a No. 10 cowhide boot.

So, because of the voice and the boot the girls, though greatly admired, had no "steady company."

The nearest approach to it was the three calls Hiram Stubbs had made on Susan.

On his first visit Hiram was very anxious, apparently, to secure Peter's advice as to what he had better do with his "nine acre lot—seed it down er plant it agi'n."

Peter, being in a cheerful mood, for a wonder, expatiated and dwelt on the delightful subject at such great length, and Hiram, to propitiate him, gave him such marked and undivided attention, that Susan remained unnoticed, save at such rare intervals as Peter went to the door to expectorate. On these occasions Hiram rolled a prominent pewter eye toward the damsel, and made a hurried and whispered observation on the state of the weather or solicitously inquired as to her health.

The youth's second visit, ostensibly for the purpose of procuring a recipe for a spavin liniment, passed off in much the same way.

When Hiram, in his store clothes, presented himself at the kitchen door of the Cummins homestead for the third time there was a coolness in the reception tendered him by the old husbandman that should have warned him of breakers ahead.

Peter, being tired and cross, retired early, and the young man, not to lose any precious time, at once commenced edging his chair toward the blushing and expectant damsel.

He reached her side as soon as could be expected under the circumstances and had just succeeded in partially surrounding her buxom form with an arm by no means too long, when the two were thrown apart as by an electric shock. They had heard the following words, uttered in a tone of voice that could be heard a full mile:

"Hi, there Susan! Send thet air tow-headed fool hum, an' mog your boots tew bed. Dew ye hear?"

It was well understood that when Peter said a thing he meant it. He was not only handy with his No. 10 boots, but was a very muscular man and a noted "rough and tumble" wrestler.

In fact Peter stated no more than the truth when he said:

"I kin down anything within ten mile in Piketown, with one exception—thet's the rheumatiz."

He was also a great worker, being able to "out hoe, out mow, out chop an' out-eat" any man that he ever had in his employ.

"Martha, said Susan a day or two after the birial man had taken his departure, "we are out of sugar, molasses and spice, and you'll have to go to the village with some butter and do some trading."

Of course Martha was perfectly willing to do so.

She would not only have a pleasant ride, but would also have the pleasure of seeing Joe Smith, who "clerked it" in Piketown's one store.

Accordingly, after packing a few dozen eggs in oats and placing several rolls of golden butter in an earthenware jar, "Old Jerry" was hitched up, and Martha, with a great fluttering of ribbons and rustling of skirts, climbed into the old buggy wagon and started for Piketown.

She reached the village without mishap, did her trading, and after conversing for some time with Joe Smith headed old Jerry for home.

She had left the village about two miles behind when she saw a young man trudging along ahead of her in the dusty road, a dilapidated carpet bag in hand.

He seemed to be footsore and tired, and as Martha was a kind hearted little thing, and as there was plenty of room in the big, coffin boxed buggy, she halted and asked him to ride.

The invitation was accepted with alacrity, and Martha found herself seated beside a broad shouldered, trim built young man, perhaps 25 years of age. His curly chestnut hair was closely cropped, and his sandy mustache had been recently trimmed. His dark and flashing eye proclaimed him to be a quick tempered individual, while his square, massive jaw denoted determination, if not obstinacy and pugnacity.

"Have you walked far?" queried Martha after old Jerry had jogged on some distance.

"About fifteen miles," was the reply. "Fact is I'm looking for a job. Do you know of any one around here who would like to hire a man for a few months?"

"Why, yes," said Martha. "Pa pa's hired man has left him, his farm work is in terrible shape and he is sick. I am quite sure he will hire you. You, however, will find him very cross. He is always that way when he is ill."

"Oh, I shall not mind that in the least," replied the young man cheerfully. "I am out of a job and out of money, and under the circumstances would work for Lucifer himself. May I inquire your name?"

"My name is Martha Cummins. And yours"—

"Is Robert Sharp."

At that moment old Jerry turned into the Cummins door yard and sedately walked up to the kitchen door.

Martha, with the assistance of Robert Sharp, unloaded her purchases, and taking Jerry by the bridle started for the barn.

"Let me be your hostler," said the stranger, stepping forward. "You go into the house and I will attend to the horse."

The young man soon returned to the house, and was ushered into the old farmer's presence.

As Peter was greatly in need of help, and Robert Sharp was greatly in need of employment, a bargain satisfactory to both was soon struck.

Peter at once saw that his new hired man was a great worker.

Within a week he had the plowing all done and a part of the ground ready for planting.

The old husbandman's mind being thus placed at rest he soon got the better of his rheumatism and went to work with a will.

As has been already stated, Peter prided himself on the fact that he had never had an employe who was able to do as much work in a day as could he.

It had always been his custom to "race it with every new man he hired.

When after a more or less close and exciting contest his antagonist either tacitly or openly admitted his defeat Peter would say:

"Wal, yew dew wot ye kin. Yew can't hev more av of a cat than her skin; an' it hain't to be expected that yew, or any man in this part av the kentry, kin keep his eend up with old Peter. Dew wot ye kin."

One evening, having fully recovered his health and strength, Peter said to Robert Sharp:

"I'm goin' deown tew Piketown this evenin' tew buy me a new hoe. Tew-morrer, yew know, we air tew plant the Green lot tew w'ite flint corn. Yew go to bed arly an' rest jest all yew kin, fer yew'll hev tew git right to w the front tew morrer an' don't yew fargit it."

Bright and early the next morning the two men started for the "Green lot," the hired man carrying a bag of seed corn, while Peter flourished two bright new hoes.

Said the farmer as soon as the lot was reached:

"I'm jest a-going tew make this new hoe fly tewday. This piece has got tew be planted afore night."

With these words, having filled to overflowing his planting bag with corn and his mouth with tobacco, he struck out at a terrific rate of speed, the hired man following after.

The sun having just arisen Peter had discarded his wide brimmed straw hat, and for greater freedom of movement had thrown his suspender from his right shoulder. This latter useful article of wearing apparel having become detached in front streamed out behind like the tail of a kite. His long gray hair was blown about his swarthy face, his blue checked shirt, filled with wind, puffed out like a balloon; his tan colored overalls bagged at the knee, and his mammoth boots, pushed along through the soft, sandy soil, made a shallow canal on each side of his row.

Firmly grasping in one big hand his new hoe and in the other no less than a half pint of corn Peter, puffing and blowing like a locomotive, worked himself across the field at a high rate of speed.

Looking behind him occasionally the exulting husbandman would yell:

"Come on. Come on. Thought you knew heow to plant corn. Git a gait on ye. Git a gait on ye. Haw! haw! haw!"

At the end of the first "bout" the hired man was several yards behind, and Peter, in a high state of exultation and perspiration, took a double shuffle on a fence board which chanced to lay upon the ground near by. He then took a "chaw of terbacker," refilled his planting bag, spat upon his hands, and, seizing his new hoe, struck out with renewed vigor.

"I guess I'll let out a link or two this bout," said the sandy moustached young man to himself.

He did so, and not only passed the hitherto invincible one, but kept the lead until the dinner hour sounded.

Yes, Peter had at last found his match—and a little more.

Although he struggled manfully and well, and received the assistance of many chews of tobacco; although he shoved his sleeves far above his elbows, removed his boots and rolled up his tan colored overalls; although he wielded his new hoe with a desperation born of despair, and paid no attention as to whether he dropped one or twenty kernels in a hill, he at length had to own himself out planted, beaten, vanquished. He did it in these words:

"This ternal new hoe hangs out twoo much."

Robert Sharp could not only out-plant Peter, but he could, and did, out hoe, out mow and out-chop him.

One would naturally suppose that

[Continued on fourth page.]

Pocahontas Times.

JOHN E. CAMPBELL,
EDITOR AND PROPRIETOR.

Entered at the Post-office at Huntersville, W. Va., as second class matter.

Huntersville, W. Va.

December 18; 1890.

The art of making matches has been so perfected that 10,000,000 of the tiny sticks can be cut into shape all ready for dipping, by one machine in a single day.

Bears and deer are very plentiful in the Dismal Swamp, Virginia, and old residents say they are more numerous than for many years. It is said to be no unusual thing to see deer drinking from the canal.

The foreman of one of the largest barber shops in New York is authority for the statement that more men part their hair in the middle now than ever before.

The republican newspapers seem to have taken a rest from their self appointed and laborious task of electing a Speaker of the next House for the democrats.

Some people are born to become hallucinations Mr Harrison actually believes that he will be nominated again in 1892.

Mr. Harrison is not making any friends by threatning to vote a free coinage bill if it is passed by Congress.

According to the charges of his former partner W. W. Dudley seems to have been as crooked as a banker as he was as a politican, and his "blocks of five" political methods sink into insignificance when compared wish his fraudalent financial practises.

The wholesale price of whalebone is now $10,000 a Aproject is on foot to organize whaling expedition from Australia to Anarctic where it is believed plenty of whales are to be found. It is an almost untouched whaling ground.

There are indications at Washington that the Force bill is dying and may be side-tracked for an indefinite time. Republican Senators are beginning to realize that the country will not submit to the outrage upon American liberty as contemplated by the Force bill.

The silver half dollar is so unpopular a coin that $17,000,000, worth of them remain piled up in the Treasury vaults, and cannot be got into circulation. The Director of the Mint suggests that they be recoined into dimes and quarters, and asks for an appropiation for that purpose.

The principal demands of the Farmers Alliance—Tariff reform and financial reform—have long formed the foundation stones of sound democratic doctrine, and the Alliance will find its natural ally in the democratic party, just as it has already found its natural opponent in the republican party. It is well to keep these facts in mind when discussing the political future.

Its a question whether the Sioux Indians were frozen out or starved out. In either case the country owes no thanks to the administration.

Secretary Noble seems to have at last discovered that the Pension office is a nest of corruption. Other people knew it some time ago.

The bottom dropped out of an acre field belonging to Senator Ingalls, in Miami County, Kansas, recently. The Senatar is losing ground steadily.

Edgar Wilson, a life convict, died recently in prison at Stillwater, Minn., and left $30,000 to Walter Williams, a fellow-convict who had been pardoned.

One night quite redently eighty birds were killed by striking the Bartholdi statute. Fifty of them were Maryland yellow throats; among the other species represented were oven-birds, yellow-bellied fly-catcher, Cape May warbler and Philadelphia vireo.

It is stated that the Church of England has raised and expended over $35,000,000 sterling on church building, repairing, etc., during th twenty five years euding with 1884. The church spends a million dol yearly on these objects.

Here are a few interesting statistics, from the report of the Secetary of the Interior. The total number of enlistments during the war was 2,250,000. There were 541,944 pensioners on the rolls July 1 last. There were up to the same date 483,278 claims filed under the new law which President HARRISON approved June 27 last. Claims under this bill are coming at the rate of 138,000 a month. Adding the 537,944 peosnoers and the 892,221 claimants whose papers have not been acted on, we have 1,430,165, and claims still coming in at the rate of 138,000 a month.

There is an interesting case on trial here now before C. C. Hovatter, J. P., and a jury. The matter in controversy consists of ten young turkeys valued at about $7.50. There are thirty one witnesses in the case and their costs together with the magistrate's and constable's costs foots up a neat little sum closely approaching $100. —Phillippi Republican.

It has been proposed that the democratic party should at once reorganize its national and Congressional committee for tha next Presidential campaign, in order that the members—elect of the Fifty-second Congress may be represented thereon, and also that the campaign of education, by means of tariff and other literature, may at once be begun. It is a most timely suggestion and should be carried out at the earliest practicable moment. The value of thorough organization and dissemation of sound democratic doctrine, both through the party press and by means of carefully prepared pamphlets, cannot be over estimated.

A pension for the current fiscal year of $34,500,000 has been reported to the House of Representatives by the Secretary of the Treasury. The pension appropriation bill for the next fiscal year, as passed by the House, carries more than $133,000,000, and it is generally believed that it is less by from forty to seventy millions of dollars than will be required, unless a careful revision is made of the pension rolls of the Government. It is believed that from 25 to 33 per cent of the name on these rolls are there illegally, and that a careful investigation would show this beyond question. We should not object to increasing the pension of every deserving soldier but not one cent of the peoples money should be paid to the undeserving, or should be paid on illegal claims. By all let us have a thorough revision of the pension rules.

WASHINGTON LETTER.

[From our regular correspondent.]

WASHINGTON, D. C., Dec., 12—Questions affecting the financial condition of the country are at present absorbing almost the entire attention of Congress, and the administration has at last become convinced that something must be done. Opinions differ as to what convinced Mr. Harrison and his cabinet, but it is more than probable that the action of Senator Plumb, who, in introducing a bill to replace the retired circulation of national banks and providing for the free coinage of silver, stated that it was his intention, if the Federal Election bill was not speedily disposed of to move that it be laid aside and his bill and others relating to financial matters be considered, in order that something might be done to meet the just expectations of secret here that the republicans who believe with Senator Plumb—there are lots of 'em—have become greatly dissatisfied at what they consider the waste of valuable time, which the debate on the election bill has taken up, and there have been mysterions hints about their forming a combination with the democrats for the purpose of passing a free coinage bill.

All this has had an alarming effect upon Mr. Harrison and those republicans who have appeared to consider the election bill more important than financial legislation. The fact of the matter is that at least three fifths of Congress, irrespective of party, have become converted of the ideas of the Farmers Alliance, as far as financial matters are concerned.

There is an evident desire on the part of the administration to prevent the adoption of a free coinage bill by Congress, by offering something in the place of it, iu fact several somethings. One of which is the immediate purchase of the Government of the thirteen million ounce of silver bullion now stored in various sections of the United States. If Congress get an opportunity it will certainly authorize this purchase, as the money thus put in circulation would greatly help the money market, but this measure will not be addapted as a substitute for free coinage by the silver men, who are fully aware of their strength in Congress.

The apportionment bill which the Census committee of the House has reported places the membership of the House at 455, and is generally regarded as a fair measure. And owing to the fact that under it no state loses any members it will be extremely difficult for the democratic leaders to unite their party in opposition to it, even if they are so disposed. At present their only ground, as stated by themselves for opposing it, is, that it does not provide for the increase that New York might be entitled to by a possible recount of the population of New York city and Brooklyn.

The House committee have so far done an enormous amount of hard work, and one of the regular appropriation bills—pensions—has been passed, and three others reported to the House. This is something unusual at this stage of the session, and yet those who ought to be best informed are predicting that an extra session of the Fifty-second Congress will be absolutely necessary, and the democrats are beginning to make things very interesting in the campaign for the Speakership of the next House.

The House has refused to adopt the Plumb resolution for the removal of the remains of Gen. Grant to Arlington cemetery.

It has been practically agreed by the Pension committee of the House that no special pension legislation shall be passed this session. The idea of revising the present pension rolls is making headway, although nothing may come out of it at this session. It is stated by those who ought to know that many names are fraudulently on these rolls.

Mr. Wanamaker most positively denies the rumor, which was given a fresh start this week, that he is about to fail.

Senator Gorman's statement in a speech that the country was standing over a financial volcano may be true but it is considered by many that such a statement should not have been made by a United States Senator. The aim of every man of prominence should be to inspire not destroy confidence in business circles.

Mr. J. W. Hathaway, of Montana has been elected Postmaster of the House of Representatives.

The Conger lard bill, which was condemned by the recent Farmers Alliance convention, has been reported to the Senate by the Agricultural committee without recommendations. The Paddock Pure food bill will be offered as a substitute for it, and it is thought that the Senate will adopt it.

The republicans of the Senate Finance committee are working on a financial measure, which is to be reported to a republican caucus Monday.

Order of Publication

At rules held in the [illegible] Court Clerk's Office of Pocah[illegible] county, West Virginia, on the first Monday in December, 1890.

Rosella Smith by &c.

vs. [illegible] Chancery

Mary F. Malcomb, & others

The object of this suit [illegible] obtain a sale and partition of [illegible] acre tract of land in Poc[illegible] county West Virginia. and it ap[illegible] by Affidavit filed that Elizab[illegible] Cochran is a non-resident of the [illegible] Virginia, it is ordered th[illegible] appear here within one month [illegible] first publication of this order [illegible] what is necessary to protect [illegible] in this suit.

Teste

JOHN J. B[illegible] Clerk.

Order of Publication.

At rules held in the [illegible] Court Clerk's Office of Pocah[illegible] county, W. Va., on the first Mond[illegible] December, 1890

Minnie V. Dameron Pl'f

vs.

Thomas J. Dameron Def

In Chancery

The object of this [illegible] to procure a decree of divorce [illegible] plaintiff Minnie V. Dameron [illegible] bonds of matrimony with the [illegible] defendant Thomas J. Dameron, and [illegible] awarded custody of the two c[illegible], Lena Page Dameren and Lewi[illegible] Dameron and it appearing [illegible] affidavit filed that Thomas J. Dam[illegible] a non-resident of the State of W[illegible] Virginia it is ordered that he appe[illegible] within one month after the first [illegible] cation of this order, and do what is [illegible] sary to protect his interest in this [illegible]

Teste

JOHN J. B[illegible] Cl'k

Rucker, p. q.

To Thomas J. Dameron [illegible]

[illegible] notice, that on the 13th day [illegible] January, A. D., 1891, between the [illegible] of six o'clock, A. M., and Ten o'c[illegible] P. M., at the residence of the lat[illegible] George C. Hill dec'd. on Hill's Creek [illegible] Levels District, Pocahontas C[illegible], West Virginia, I will take the [illegible] ditions of Miss Mary E. Hill, and o[illegible], to be read as evidence in my beh[illegible] in a certain suit in chancery now [illegible] ding in the Circuit Court of the Co[illegible] of Pocahontas, and State of West [illegible] ginia. in which I am Plaintiff, and [illegible] are Defendant.

If from any cause the tak[illegible] of said depositions shall not be co[illegible] nced or completed on the day af[illegible] said, the same shall be continued fr[illegible] day to day, or from time to time, [illegible] the same place and between the same [illegible] until the same shall be completed.

MINNIE V. DAM[illegible]

By [illegible] Counsel.

H. S. Rucker, Sol.

[illegible] 4th 4 w

HOME NEWS

—Snow, Snow, snow.

—One week until Xmas.

—Locals are scarce this week:

—Mr. J. H. R der, called to see [illegible] Tuesday.

—The bridge abutments are nearing completion.

—Capt. Stofer, is able to be out again.

—Attorney L. M. McClintic attended Court at Warm Springs, last week.

—Mrs. C. F. Moore, went last week to meet her husband at Clifton Forge where they were going to start for a trip to N. C., we understand.

—Rev. Lantenschlager, preached on Douthard's creek last Sunday. We understand he expects to preach there every two weeks.

—Marriage license were issued since our last issue to W. H. Wooddell and Alice C. Williams and to Isaac F. McCollum to Mary M. Gay.

—Rev. W. T. Price held a quarterly meeting at this place last Friday, Saturday, and Sunday during which time he preached a series of very excellent sermons indeed.

—Ronceverte buisness men have taken steps to secure an eclectric light plant. Four hundred of the five hundred lights necessary to secure the plant have already been subscribed.

—As we go to press the snow is 37 inches deep and still snowing. Shops and barn roofs are breaking down.

Dunmore Doings.

Rev. J. F. A. Lantenschlager will preach at Liberty church, Green Bank, on Saturday night, the 27, at half past 6 o'clock; Sunday morning the 28th at Baxter church at 10.30 o clock and Sunday night the 28th on Douthard's creek, at 6 o'clock. He will preach at the above places about every two weeks.

The Dunmore school will commence next Monday.

We are glad to see that our Farmers Alliance is still coming up.

TOM SAWYER.

The following we clip from the Pendleton News: "Circleville items, Nov. 24th. The protracted meeting commenced at Cherry Grove (Big Run) three miles from this place on the 2nd inst still continues with unabating interest and success. Such a glorious work has not been accomplished in our midst for many years. At this writing there has been forty conversions up in twenty accessions and many others will join the church. There are twelve or fifteen penitents still at the altar. This is certainly a noble work, and we hope its influence will be felt and seen in our midst for years to come

With the different charges of our County placed in the hands of men with such zeal and energy for the cause of Christ as that which characterizes the Rev. G. S. Weiford we think the mighty reformation so much needed would be brought about. This noble Christian worker assisted by the Rev. Bennett, Deve and others has worked with untiring zeal for more than three weeks and is still willing to labor as long as there is hope of being instrumental in the saving of a single soul.

GEROME.

Winter schedule of preaching appointments of the pastor of Huntersville circuit M. E. Church, South.

1st Sunday Sunset 11 a. m.
Huntersville 6.30 p. m.
2nd " Bethel 11 a m.
Huntersville 6.30 p. m.
3rd " Huntersville 11 a. m.
Sunset 3 p. m.
4th " Huntersville 11 a. m.
Bethel 3 p. m.

☞ Please preserve for reference.

Foul Chimneys.

On the night of the 12th inst. about one hour after dark, the quiet of our village, was vigorously broken by the wild cry of fire, fire, fire! and the ringing of bells, blowing of horns and yelling of men, soon informed the people that Mr. James R. Poage, Senr's, house was believed to be on fire. Mr. W. C. Hull's family, who reside within sight of Mr. Poage's, first noticed the fire, apparently on top of the house, and heard Mr. Levi Waugh's children who with their father reside with Mr. P.—crying and excitedly saying the house is on fire. Mr. Hull very promptly raised the alarm, and in a very few minutes, every available man and boy in town with buckets, hand pumps, and willing hands were running to the scene of action,—but before the crowd got there some of the most fleet footed, began to return, and reported, nothing but the soot in the flue burning out without damage. So after a terrible scare and a hard race of a half mile, we were very agreeably disappointed But at a distance, it looked to your correspondent, as though the house was burning rapidly. The night was very dry and windy. Moral, keep your flues clean, for dry weather.

X. x. x.

Farmer's Alliance.

The several delegates appointed to meet Mr. J. Crawford, the deputy organizer of Greenbrier county met at Marlinton church, Friday, 2 p. m., Dec. 12, 1 890.

The delegates present were H. A. Yeager and S. B. Hannah, of Green Bank Alliance; E. N. Moore and J. A. Taylor, of Dunmore, Mildred Herold and Points Moore, of Frost; Levi Gay, Levi Waugh, A. M. McGlaughlin and S. D. Price, of Edray, also E. L. Beard and two unknown brethren from Randolph county.

On motion of E. L. Beard Levi Gay was elected chairman of this meeting.

By request of the chair E. L. Beard stated the object of this meeting to be to receive instruction from Mr. Crawford in the secret work of the Union. Mr. Crawford then proceeded at once to instruct in the unwritten work, which was done in an impressive and business like style.

What he committed to us he says he had direct from the lips of the National sec. He further urges that this County at once have a deputy organizer and that the members of the Union stand together as a unit. He bade us notice the determination and zeal displayed by our leaders at the recent National Convention in Ocala, Fla. and be inspired to more earnest and united effort against class legislation and the money power appealing to us to know whether the citizen or, the dollar shall rule in this land of freedom. Hannah moved that we return a vote of thanks to Mr. Crawford for his presence for the valable services rendered us; and as a proof of our appreciation we give him $2.00 from each Union here represented. All of which was given with a will.

Moved by A. M McGlaughlin that the minutes of this meeting be furnished THE TIMES for publication.

J. A. TAYLOR.

List of Transfers of Real Estate.

The following is a list of the transfers of real estate for the month of November:

A deed from St. Lawrence Lumber Co., to Dan'l O'Connell for a tract of 400 acres lying on west side of the Beaver Creek wagon road.

From P. L. Cleek and wife and W. H. Cleek and wife to Holt and Mathews for Mountain land on Knapp's Creek.

From H. A. Yeager and wife to E. M. Yeager grantee and trustee for their interest in real and personal property in Pocahontas and Webster counties.

From H. S. Rucker, Com'r. to Wm. H. Boblet for land sold in the Cancery Cause of Allen D. Grimes adm'r vs. Allen D. Grimes heirs lying on Stamping creek.

From John J. Beard and wife to M. L. Beard for land near Hillsboro.

From F. J. Snyder, Com'r to Mrs. H. S. Rucker for land sold in the Chancery cause of Jacob Piles vs. Jno. Piles, lying on Beaver creek.

From H. S. Rucker, Com'r to Jno. Silva for land sold in the Chancery Cause of Allen D. Grimes adm'r vs. Allen D. Grimes heirs

From G. W. McKeever and wife to Aaron Kee and wife for land near Buckeye.

From R. S. Turk com'r to Nancy J. Bird for land sold in the Chancery cause of R. S. Turk vs. Nancy J. Bird lying near Green Bank.

From H. Darnell and wife to W. S. Darnell for land near Green Bank.

An Investment Company Chartered.

The Pocahontas and Greenbrier Investment Company has secured a charter with the following list of officers:

H. M. Lockridge, President, R. S. Hutchinson, Secretary; Hugh Adams, Treasurer. Directors: H. M. Lockridge, R. S. Hutchinson, Hugh Adams, I. B. Moore, A. F. Mathews, C. C. Hansel, B. F. White, Amos Barlow and Isaac McNeel all of West, Va., except Messrs. Adams and Hutchinson, who are well known in Rockbridge.

This company was organized by its efficient president, Mr. Lockridge of the real estate firm of Adams & Lockridge, who placed nearly all its stock with his personal friends in West Va. They have purchased $60,000 worth of well improved property in our city, the rents from which will make this a handsome dividend paying stock from the beginning.

We will say to the gentlemen from our neighboring State, who have invested with Mr. Lockridge that they have doubtless builded even better than they knew. Investment companies are all paying well here and we predict a very bright future for this one.

Mr. Lockridge has been a successful operator in real estate here for the past year, has fine business judgment, is well posted in values and when backed by so competent a board of directors the success of the Pocahontas and Greenbrier Investment Company as a solid financial institution stands fully assured and we congratulate the stockholders on the solidity of their investment in it.—Buena Vista Advocate

Order of Publication.

At rules held in the Circuit Court Clerk's Office of Pocahontas County, West Virginia, on the first Monday in December, 1890.

Leven Wanless
vs } In Chancery.
John F. Wanless & others

The object of this suit is to obtain a decree for the sale of the lands of which Jas. Wanless died seized and possessed, and a division of the proceeds among his heirs at law, and it appearing by affidavit filed, that Thomas Hatton and Betsy his wife, —— Veris and Zeda his wife and George P. Wanless, are non-residents of the State of West Virginia, it is ordered that they do appear here within one month after the first publication of this order, and do what is necessary to protect their interest in this suit.

Teste,
JOHN J. BEARD, Cl'k.

Sheets p. q.
Decbr. 4th 4 w

Order of Publication.

At rules held in the Circuit Court Clerk's Office of Pocahontas County, West Virginia, on the first Monday in December, 1890.

Rhoda E. Crigger Pl'ff.
vs. In Chy.
H. F. Crigger Def't.

The object of this suit is to obtain a divorce from the bonds of matrimony and to be awarded the custody of the child, James W. Crigger, and it appearing by affidavit filed that diligence has been used on behalf of plaintiff to ascertain in what County the said H. F. Crigger resides without effect and from the best information she can obtain, the said H. F. Crigger is not a resident of the State of West Virginia. It is ordered that said Crigger appear here within one month after the first publication of this order and do what is necessary to protect his interest in this suit

Teste,
JOHN J. BEARD, Clerk,

Rucker p. q.

Dec 4 4 w

Notice To Take Depositions.

To H. F. Crigger, Esq.:

Take notice that on the 9th day of January A. D., 1891, between the hours of six o'clock, A. M., and six o'clock, P. M., at the law office of H. S. Rucker, in the town of Huntersville, Pocahontas County, West Virginia, I will take the depositions of John C. Moran and others, to be read as evidence in my behalf, in a certain suit in Chancery now pending in the Circuit Court of the County of Pocahontas, State of West Virginia, in which I am Plaintiff, and you are Defendant.

If from any cause the taking of said depositions shall not be commenced or completed on the day aforesaid, the same shall be continued from day to day, or from time to time, at the same place and between the same hours, until the same shall be completed.

Respectfully,
RHODA E. CRIGGER.
By Counsel.

H. S. Rucker, Sol.
Dec 4 4 t

At a County Court held for the County of Pocahontas at the Court-house thereof on the 7th day of October 1890.

On the coming in of petition signed by H. H. McClintic and more than ten other free holders of the Elray District (District No. 3) of this County, it is ordered, that the provisions of section 2nd of Chapter 62 of the code of 1887, apply to all the lands within said District and the Clerk of this Court, is ordered to publish this order for once a week for four successive weeks in the POCAHONTAS TIMES, a newspaper published in the said County of Pocahontas, which publication shall be paid for by the said petitioners and said clerk shall also post a copy of this order for some length of time on the front door of Court House of this County.

A copy teste,
JOHN J. BEARD,
Clerk.

Pocahontas Times.

JOHN E. CAMPBELL,
EDITOR AND PROPRIETOR.

Entered at the Post-office at Huntersville, W. Va., as second class matter.

ADVERTISING RATES.

	1 m.	3 m.	6 m.	1 yr.
One inch	$ 1 00	$ 2 00	$ 3 00	$ 5 00
Three in.	2 00	4 00	6 00	10 00
Qr. column	3 00	6 00	10 00	17 00
Half col'n	6 00	12 00	20 00	30 00
One col'n	10 00	20 00	30 00	50 00

Reading notices, not exceeding five lines, twenty-five cents for each insertion; and five cents a line for each additional line.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION.

One copy, 1 yr., $1.00 in advance; after 6 months, $1.25; after 12 months, $1.50

These terms will be strictly complied with.

Huntersvill:. W. Va.

December 18; 1890.

[Continued from first page.]

the farmer would have been greatly pleased with so able an assistant. He was not, however. He disliked the young man because he had taken from him his prominence as a worker.

It was known for miles around that Peter Cummins had at last found a man who was his superior at all kinds of husbandry.

The old tiller of the soil grew to hate his vanquisher.

The young man's presence was a constant reminder to Peter of the many defeats he hae suffered at his hands.

And so he began to cast about for an excuse, good or bad, for discharging him.

He found one sooner than he expected.

One moonlight evening in August Peter paid his nearest neighbor a visit, and coming home through his back lane at about 9 o'clock came spat upon a couple seated on a log beneath the wide spreading branches of a chestnut tree.

The young man's arm encircled the maiden's slim waist, her head rested on his broad shoulder, and their hands were clasped.

As they were deeply absorbed in taking an astronomical observation the presence of a third was for a moment unobserved.

Then Martha, lowering her eyes from the man in the moon to the man on the earth, saw and recognized her sire. Robert Sharp saw him at nearly the same instant.

"Martha!" roared the irate husbandman as though his daughter was a mile away, "you mog your boots tew the house this minute. Come, neow, git. As fur yew (turning to the hired man) yew come with me an' Ill pay yew off, an' then, yew tarnal cuss, git off'n my farm. Ye're nu'hin' but a pesky, no-account tramp, anyway. If I sarved ye right I'd give ye a lift with my boot."

Peter started toward the young man as though he really intended to bring into action his noted No. 10.

Why didn't he do so?

Perhaps he was a glitter in Robert's dark eye, and an ominous clinching of his sunbearned hand that convinced him that "discretion was the better part of valor."

Robert Sharp went to the farm house, received his wages, and thrusting his few belongings into his old carpet bag left the Cummins homestead, as Peter thought, forever.

Before taking his departure he asked to see Martha for a moment, but the request was greeted with a stentorian "No!"

Susan, however, bade him a cordial farewell, and slyly slipped into his hand a tightly rolled piece of paper.

The next day after dismissing his hired man Peter went to Piketown, and falling in with some old cronies did not leave the village till nearly 10 o'clock at night.

When within about a mile of his home he met a rapidly driven wagon in which were seated a man and woman.

Although the woman was heavily veiled and the man pulled his hatwell down over his eyes the old farmer at once recognized his younger daughter and his former hired man.

"Whoa!" roared Peter swinging his horse across the road, thus stopping the further progress of the evidently eloping couple.

"Whoa! Wot does this mean, you tarnal tramp? Git out uv thet wagon at onct, Martha, an' come with me. D'ye hear? Come, neow, mog yer boots."

As the young lady made no move preparatory to obeying the order, but on the contrary clung hysterically to her companion, Peter, in order to enforce his command, leaped from his wagon and approached the other vehicle.

No sooner had he done so than Robert Sharp, freeing himself from Martha, jumped to the ground, seized the husbandman by the collar of his snuff colored coat, pulled him forward, pushed him backward, and, tripping him with lightning-like rapidity, threw him with such force as to make the ground fairly shake.

Hhaving done this he backed Peter's horse into the roadside ditch, clambered into his wagon and drove rapidly away.

Although Peter was so dazed by his fall that he saw ten thousand stars, he notwithstanding managed to get to his feet before the runaways had completely disappeared from view.

"Whoa! Whoa! Come back! Come back, Martha, an' git married tew hum. Wait till a week from tew-night, an' I'll git ye up a weddin' that'll beat anything ever seen within ten miles uv Piketown.

Martha and Robert, being less than a mile away, heard Peter's words, and after a moment's consultatien the ex-hired man turned his horse about and drove to the scene of the late impromptu wrestling match.

"Bob," shouted Peter, holding his hand out toward the young man, "yew kin her the gal in welcome. D'ye hear? In welcome. Ye're worthy uv her. Any man that outplants, outhoes and out mows old Pete Cummins, an' tew cap all slams him on his back the way yew hev, is worthy uv the best gal within ten mile uv Piketown."

The week following the above related incident Robert Sharp and Martha Cummins were married.

The wedding festivities were of a high order and on a very elaborate scale.

The supper went beyond anything in the culinary line that had been known in that vicinity within the memory of "the oldest inhabitants."

The Piketown full string band was in attendance, and Peter, resplendent in a white shirt with a very high collar, a long tailed black coat, blue jean trousers and newly tallowed boots, danced a breakdown with a vigor and abandon unknown to the rising generation.

The boys all "danced till broad day light and went home with the girls in the morning."

Peter is very proud of his son in-law, and permits him to do nearly all of the farm work and a share of the planning.

He is willing at any time to lay a wager that "Bob Sharp—my son-in-law—kin outplant, outhoe, outmow an' outrassel any man within ten miles uv Piketown.

Pocahontas Times.

JOHN E. CAMPBELL,
EDITOR AND PROPRIETOR.

Entered at the Post-office at Huntersville, W. Va., as second class matter.

ADVERTISING RATES.

	1 m.	3 m.	6 m.	1 yr.
One inch	$1 00	$3 00	$3 00	$5 00
Three in.	2 00	4 00	6 00	10 00
Qr. column	3 00	6 00	10 00	17 00
Half col'n	4 00	12 00	20 00	20 00
One col'n	10 00	20 00	30 00	50 00

Reading notices, not exceeding five lines, twenty-five cents for each insertion, and five cents a line for each additional line.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION.

One copy, 1 yr., $1.00 in advance; after 6 months, $1.25; after 12 months, $1.50

These terms will be strictly complied with.

Huntersville, W. Va.

December 18; 1890.

[Continued from first page.]

the farmer would have been greatly pleased with so able an assistant. He was not, however. He disliked the young man because he had taken from him his prominence as a worker.

It was known for miles around that Peter Cummins had at last found a man who was his superior at all kinds of husbandry.

The old tiller of the soil grew to hate his vanquisher.

The young man's presence was a constant reminder to Peter of the many defeats he hae suffered at his hands.

And so he began to cast about for an excuse, good or bad, for discharging him.

He found one sooner than he expected.

One moonlight evening in August Peter paid his nearest neighbor a visit, and coming home through his back lane at about 9 o'clock came spat upon a couple seated on a log beneath the wide spreading branches of a chestnut tree.

The young man's arm encircled the maiden's slim waist, her head rested on his broad shoulder, and their hands were clasped.

As they were deeply absorbed in taking an astronomical observation the presence of a third was for a moment unobserved.

Then Martha, lowering her eyes from the man in the moon to the man on the earth, saw and recognized her sire. Robert Sharp saw him at nearly the same instant.

"Martha!" roared the irate husbandman as though his daughter was a mile away, "you mog your boots tew the house this minute. Come, neow, git. As fur yew (turning to the hired man) yew come with me an' I'll pay yew off, an' then, yew tarnal cuss, git off'n my farm. Ye're nothin' but a pesky, no-account tramp, anyway. If I served ye right I'd give ye a lift with my boot."

Peter started toward the young man as though he really intended to bring into action his noted No. 16.

Why didn't he do so?

Perhaps it was a glitter in Robert's dark eye, and an ominous clinching of his sunbearned hand that convinced him that "discretion was the better part of valor."

Robert Sharp went to the farm house, received his wages, and throwing his few belongings into his old carpet bag left the Cummins homestead, as Peter thought, forever.

Before taking his departure he asked to see Martha for a moment, but the request was greeted with a stentorian "No!"

Susan, however, bade him a cordial farewell, and slyly slipped into his hand a tightly rolled piece of paper.

The next day after dismissing his hired man Peter went to Piketown, and falling in with some old cronies did not leave the village till nearly 10 o'clock at night.

When within about a mile of his home he met a rapidly driven wagon in which were seated a man and woman.

Although the woman was heavily veiled and the man pulled his hat well down over his eyes the old farmer at once recognized his younger daughter and his former hired man.

"Whoa!" roared Peter swinging his horse across the road, thus stopping the further progress of the evidently eloping couple.

"Whoa! Wot does this mean, you tarnal tramp? Git out av thet wagon at onct, Martha, an' come with me. D'ye hear? Come, neow, mog yer boots."

As the young lady made no move preparatory to obeying the order, but on the contrary clung hysterically to her companion, Peter, in order to enforce his command, leaped from his wagon and approached the other vehicle.

No sooner had he done so than Robert Sharp, freeing himself from Martha, jumped to the ground, seized the husbandman by the collar of his snuff colored coat, pulled him forward, pushed him backward, and, tripping him with lightning-like rapidity, threw him with such force as to make the ground fairly shake.

Hhaving done this he backed Peter's horse into the roadside ditch, clambered into his wagon and drove rapidly away.

Although Peter was so dazed by his fall that he saw ten thousand stars, he notwithstanding managed to get to his feet before the runaways had completely disappeared from view.

"Whoa! Whoa! Come back! Come back, Martha, an' git married tew him. Wait till a week from tew-night, an' I'll git ye up a weddin' that'll beat anything ever seen within ten miles av Piketown.

Martha and Robert, being less than a mile away, heard Peter's words, and after a moment's consultation the ex-hired man turned his horse about and drove to the scene of the late impromptu wrestling match.

"Bob," shouted Peter, holding his hand out toward the young man, "yew kin hev the gal in welcome. D'ye hear? In welcome. Ye're worthy av her. Any man that outplants, outhoes and out mows old Pete Cummins, an' tew cap all slams him on his back the way yew hev, is worthy av the best gal within ten mile uv Piketown."

The week following the above related incident Robert Sharp and Martha Cummins were married.

The wedding festivities were of a high order and on a very elaborate scale.

The supper went beyond anything in the culinary line that had been known in that vicinity within the memory of "the oldest inhabitants."

The Piketown full string band was in attendance, and Peter, resplendent in a white shirt with a very high collar, a long tailed black coat, blue jean trousers and newly tallowed boots, danced a breakdown with a vigor and abandon unknown to the rising generation.

The boys all "danced till broad day light and went home with the girls in the morning."

Peter is very proud of his son-in-law, and permits him to do nearly all of the farm work and a share of the planning.

He is willing at any time to lay a wager that "Bob Sharp—my son-in-law—kin outplant, outhoe, outmow an' outtravel any man within ten miles uv Piketown.

SUBSCRIBE.

—FOR THE—

POCAHONTAS TIMES,

Every man in the County should take it, and patronize home industry. It sustains your rights, and works for the advancement of your county, which no city paper will do. It gives you the news from all parts of the county, which you could not get otherwise. It furnishes matters of interst to the Merchant, Farmer and Mechanic. It keeps you posted and gives you information, on all general news, and its sections and Miscellany are fit for all ages.

TERM OF SUBSCRIPTION,

One year in advance	$1.00
If not paid within 6 months	1.25
And at the end of the year	1.50

AND IF YOU NEED

Letter Heads, Note Heads, Bill Heads, Envelopes, Drug Envelopes, Tags, Business Cards, Official Blanks, Blank Bonds. Posters, Briefs for the Court of Appeals &c.

GET THEM AT "THE TIMES"

JOB OFFICE.

POCAHONTAS TIMES.

Vol. VIII — JOHN E. CAMPBELL, EDITOR AND PROPRIETOR. — Huntersville, West Virginia, Thursday, December 25, 1890. — Terms of Subscription, $1.00 PER YEAR IN ADVANCE. — No. 22

Official Directory of Pocahontas County.

Judge of Circuit Court, A. N. Campbell.
Prosecuting Attorney, L. M. McClintic.
Sheriff, W. J. McNeel.
Deputy Sheriff, L. W. Herold.
Cl'k of Cir. & Co. Courts, J. J. Beard.
Assessor, C. O. Arbogast.
Com'rs Co. Ct. { C. E. Beard. S. B. Hannah. G. P. Moore.
Co. Surveyor, Geo. Baxter

THE COURTS.

Circuit Court convenes on the first Monday in April, 3rd Monday in June and 3rd Monday in October.

County Court convenes on the 1st Tuesday in January, March, October and second Tuesday in July. July is levy term.

DUNCAN'S WARD.

BY MATTIE DYER BRITTS.

"You see Bob, there's nobody else I can leave her to—" The dying man's voice grew faint, and Robert Duncan leaned over him to say, kindly:

"Has she no relatives in the East?—and no friends of her mother's?"

"Absolutely none," replied Dr. Malcolm "I left her in the care of some old friends, to board her while she was in school. Carter is the name, but the husband is dead—died since I came out to the mines—and the widow, if she were here, could not take charge of Mollie's affairs as well as you can. She will have a mint of money, and I want somebody who will not let her be wronged——"

The voice broke there, and in fifteen minutes more Dr. Malcolm had gone "over the range," as [illegible] it out there, and [illegible]peated, as spite of [illegible] the pines outside [illegible], an hour later. "Well, I haven't been a saint, but I swear that a hair of that child's head shall never be harmed, if I can help it! I'm rather a young fellow for the guardian of a little child, but I'll do the best I can for her and hers. I wish the doctor had known his danger in time to tell me more; but this morning we didn't think of this."

Bob broke down there and wept like a child, big six footer as he was. He had formed a strong friendship for the doctor in the short time he had known him—men come very close to each other so far away from home—and there were few congenial friends near him in Colorado.

An accident had happened at the "Lone Star Lode," the day before, and in trying to save one of the miners, Dr. Malcolm was hurt. No one thought it fatal, at first but a sudden change had given him but an hour to prepare for the last and now he was gone.

Bob saw that everything was done in the best possible manner, and turned away from the lonely grave to write to the little girl, who was now his charge, of her father's death.

"I hardly know how to do it," he said, to himself. I never had much to do with children. I suppose I ought to send her a present, too. All guardians do that, I believe. Wonder what it ought to be?"

He finally decided on a tiny ring set with garnets, rode twenty miles to purchase it, and then to guess at the size. But nearly all children of eight or ten like jewelry, he reflected, and what would fit one, would another. So he tried the ring on the jeweler's little daughter, and sent it, with his letter, back to Pennsylvania.

In due time he recieved a nicely written reply, expressing the daughter's grief at her father's loss, and thanking him for his gift.

"Writes a very good letter," remarked Bob. "Must be a smart [illegible]. Maybe the widow wrote it for her, though. Well I'll go to see her, when I return to the States [illegible] spring."

But Robert Duncan did not go [illegible] the next spring, nor the next year. [illegible] required his presence [illegible] Creek Valley, and it was [illegible] months after the death of Doctor Malcolm, when one day he found himself riding through the [illegible] hills to visit his ward.

It was late in October, and the trees had almost flung off their gay robes of russet and crimson; but the air was as balmy as a May morning and Bob, when he left the train at the little station of Wildmere, took a fancy to walk to his destination through the woods.

It was not unfamiliar ground to him. He had relatives living near, and had frequently visited the region. A little inquiry at the station had informed him that the widow Carter lived on the old Gresham place, and he set out to find it unaided.

"Let's see," he mused, walking along with grip over his shoulder, "there used to be a bit of woods, then a creek, and then more woodland; yes I think I'm right. I've done my best with Mary Malc[illegible] money—she needn't [illegible] grows up, thing she [illegible] am a respectable [illegible] myself, and takes a notion to some worthless scamp who is after her money! Ah, these daughters! they do worry a fellow awfully, when he has to look after the future for them!"

And Bob heaved a deep sigh, and felt very aged and responsible. He hurried on, wondering what the little girl he had never seen was like—whether she resembled her father or not, and how she liked the great box of presents he had sent her from Colorado last Christmas, said box containing a big wax doll, a set of China dishes and doll's furniture, and several other trifles such as are dear to the hearts of small maidens, and had cost Bob quite a penny to send so far.

At this point in his meditations, he came to a spot where two paths met, and was a little in doubt which one to take. But, glancing up, something to his surprise, he saw, coming toward him, a tall, slender figure—a young girl, dressed in the quiet style which always marks the true aristocrat, carrying a small russet leather portfolio in her hand.

"An artist, of course," was Bob's thought. "Wonder if she couldn't direct me?" As the lady drew near, he removed his hat, and with a gallant bow, said: "Pardon me, but can you tell me whether this path leads to the home of Mrs. Carter?"

He caught one flash from the largest, sweetest pair of dark gray eyes he had ever looked into, as their owner answered:

"Yes, sir. You will find the gate just beyond those trees yonder."

"Thank you." And with another bow, Bob passed on, wishing he knew that beautiful girl, and half resolving to stay in the neighborhood until he got acquainted with her, if possible.

"Perhaps Mrs. Carter may know her. An artist with gray eyes and red lips—that describes her. I'll ask about her, anyhow. I don't care much for girls, in general, but that face strikes me, somehow."

He rang at Mrs. Carter's door, with a vision of the lovely face and dark eyes still haunting him. Yes, he was even so crazy as to think how nice it would be if she belonged to him, and they had a pleasant home somewhere, and took his little ward to live with them; and he did not know her name, or even whether she was not already married.

But life in the mines makes any one think and decide rapidly, and that was Bob's excuse. Nobody was at home at the Carter place, excepting an old colored woman, who, learning who he was, showed him into a handsome parlor, saying that her mistress and Miss Mary would soon be at home, if he would wait.

"Dey wasn't a 'spectin' nobody to day, or dey wouldn't a went out," she added.

"Oh, it's all right!" responded Bob, cheerfully. "I didn't let them know just what train I would arrive on. It's all right, aunty. I'll wait."

Just then a light step sounded on the porch, and the old woman looked around.

"Needn't to wait, sah, h'yars Miss Mary comin' now," she said[illegible]parlor,

"Yes, aunt He[illegible] in the pres[illegible]swered a gray-eyed artist of the [illegible].

"I am sure you are Mr. Duncan," she said, frankly, coming forward with her hand held out to welcome him.

"That is my name," replied Bob, slightly mystified at her knowing him, and wondering if she were not his little girl's teacher in drawing, or something of that sort.

"As soon as I passed you, in the woods, I felt sure you were my guardian, and I turned back immediately. I am very glad to see you."

The words brought Bob to his feet, with a sudden sence that something awful was happening, and he fairly caught his breath, as he made out to stammer: "But you—you surely are not—little Mary Malcolm?"

"I was once, though I am not very small at present," was the laughing rejoinder.

"But—but—I always thought—you—were—you were——"

"Did you think I was a little child?" asked Marry, pitying his embarrassment, yet with a laugh in her eyes. "Was that why you sent me the little ring, and the doll and dishes?"

Her laugh rang out merely, then, but poor Bob actually had to wipe the sweat from his brow, at the thought of what he had done. That dreadful doll, and those ridiculous little toy dishes rose before his vision, and wrung from his tortured soul a remorseful cry:

"Oh! Miss Malcolm, what must you have thought of me?"

Again the sweet laugh rang out, as she answered:

"I thought you were mistaken, that is all. See here, Mr. Duncan."

She held up her watch chain, and Bob saw attached to it a familiar little garnet ring.

"What! Did you care to keep the silly thing?" he exclaimed, flushing again with very shame at his blunders.

"I cared very much, Mr. Duncan. It came to me almost as if from—from poor papa." The tone faltered an instant, then she went on: "I could not wear it on my finger, and so I wore it here. Thank you for it now."

"It is I who should thank you for being so patient with my stupidity," said poor Bob, humbly. "Oh! Miss Malcolm, why didn't you tell me?"

The smiles lighted her eyes anew, as she spoke:

"Aunty Carter did want me to, but the joke was so delicious, I couldn't spoil it. Did not papa tell you——"

She stopped, and Bob said, very gently:

"He had no time to tell me anything, beyond the bare fact that he wished me to undertake the guardianship of his daughter. You remember I wrote you there had been an accident?" She bowed her head, and Bob went on: "I accepted, because he was my friend, and I loved him." Mary's hand was held out instantly, and he added: "I honestly supposed you to be a child of ten or twelve, at most."

"I am almost nineteen, Mr. Duncan." She hesitated a second, smiled at him again, and frankly added: "Don't quarrel with me for what I can't help, please[illegible] near her, you have [illegible]king a fool of him[illegible] on the spot; but he managed to be reasonable, and talk with her about her father and her interests both in Pennsylvania and Colorado. He found her a sensible, intelligent girl, quite able to understand business details. What she thought she expressed, when she said to him:

"Now, Mr. Duncan, I have a little confession to make, as well as you. If I was older than you expected, you are very much younger than I supposed. I really thought," and the gray eyes danced again "that the guardian papa had selected for me, was a grave, elderly gentleman, possibly with grandchildren of his own."

Bob couldn't help laughing here in which Mary joined as she went on:

"It was not until after I remembered that you were to come to day that I had the least idea you were my guardian, when I met you in the woods. But I am sure you have been so kind and so faithful to my affairs, that I have reason to be glad papa did choose you."

"Thank you, Miss Mary. It was hardly a case of choosing—there was nobody else at hand," said Bob, honestly. "But," he couldn't help adding, "since I have seen you, I never was so proud or so glad of anything in my life. I shall try to be a father to you, indeed I shall."

Bob did try to look very fatherly and dignified just then. But, nevertheless, he saw the mischief in Miss Mary's eyes, as she demurely answered:

"I am sure you will Mr. Duncan."

Mrs. Carter came in presently, and her astonishment at learning that this young man was Mary's guardian, was very evident.

"Mary, my dear," she said, after Bob had gone to the hotel, (he declined stopping altogether at Mrs. Carter's), "Mary, my dear, he is very nice. But I'm afraid it won't do, I am indeed my dear!"

"Afraid what won't do, aunty?" asked the girl, with such an air of innocence that the good lady could not explain.

"I see just how it will end! Oh, yes, I do!" she said to herself, in the silence of her own room that night. And a month later, when she had come to know Bob better, she added, to the same hearer: "I don't care if it does, either! He is just the one she ought to have, and I'm glad of it!"

Bob stayed in the neighborhood for three months. Then it was necessary for him to go out to Colorado, for a short time, at least. Of course, his rights as her guardian gave him a great deal of access to Mary's society, and they were together almost constantly. But as he began to think about going back to the mines, he became moody and silent. Constantly in his

[Continued on fourth page.]

Pocahontas Times.

JOHN E. CAMPBELL,
EDITOR AND PROPRIETOR.

Entered at the Post-office at Huntersville, W. Va., as second class matter.

Huntersville, W. Va.

December 25, 1890.

CHRISTMAS [illegible] GIVING.

Tired and perplexed present-seekers are apt to feel about this season that Christmas is something of a nuisance. First, there is the puzzle to know what to get for whom. Second, there is the difficulty of finding just what you want. Third, there is the conviction that whatever you get it will not be exactly the right thing. And last, but not least, there is the difficulty of deciding how the money spent on Christmas presents can be saved out of the comforts and necessaries of every-day life. The trouble is that this business has gradually assumed a wrong character. It is not the value or even the usefulness of the present, but the love that goes with it that constitutes present-giving a suitable way of commemorating Christmas.

What would the world have been without the first Christmas and all the blessings which have flowed from it? "Blackness and darkness and tempest"—ignorance and depravity and desolation.

It is impossible to overstate the temporal benefits which the world has derived from the advent of Christ, as anyone can see who will study history carefully and note how the world's civilization had run itself out and was destroyed by its own inherent depravity before Christian civilization began to make itself felt.

The wonderful discoveries of modern times in which we take so much pride are in fact the offspring of Christianity, because whether the inventors were themselves Christians or not, they were brought up in the light of that knowledge and civilization which had its origin and inspiration in the wide circulation of the Bible.

And we who know Christ as a personal Saviour, what a joy it should be to us to commemorate the day of His birth! Only let us do so with true kindness of heart and without ostentation, either in present-giving or otherwise, and Christmas will be to each of us the glad time it ought to be.

There is no particular reason why President Harrison should feel the McKinley prices. He has a fifty thousand dollar salary and a little more or less makes no difference. But how about the fellow who gets a dollar a day and has a family to support.

Bids for the construction of the Chesapeake and Ohio Branch railroad up the Warm Springs Valley from Covington, Va., to the Warm Springs have been accepted, and it is expected the road will be completed by the 1st of June next. This road will not only accommodate the Hot, Healing and Warm Springs, but open up a very rich mineral and timber region. It will be a boom for Covington as well; and when the Potts Creek road is constructed it will make Covington an important point in connection with the mineral development of that section.

The bodies of two men who had been frozen to death were found near Clay Court House, W. Va., Saturday. They were recognized as those of James Lane and George Sisken, two well-known farmers and stockmen, who lived in the eastern part of Clay county. The men had started for Clay Court House on Wednesday and it is believed were caught in the terrible wind and snow storm which prevailed in the mountains on that day.

Sitting Bull, the most troublesome Indian of the Sioux band, and his son, Crow Foot, were killed in their camp, near Standing Rock, South Dakota, on the 15th. They were about to leave their camp for the Bad Lands, preparatory to taking the war path, when they were arrested. A fight ensued, resulting in the death of half dozen on either [illegible]

Just before the [illegible] of an unknown man at Tenay[illegible] a few days ago, he made the startling assertion that he was the murderer of John R. Bittenbach, near Fort Branch, twenty years ago, for which crime Thomas Camp asserting his innocence, was hanged.

WASHINGTON LETTER.

[From our regular correspondent.]

WASHINGTON, D. C. Dec. 19,—Senator Paddock who, like some of the other republican Senators from the northwest, has a mind of his own as to how he shall vote, and who values the interests of his constituents above caucus decrees, gave Mr. Harrison a bad turn when that gentleman attempted to bull doze the doughty Nebraskan into voting for the Force bill, by telling him plainly that he was very decidedly opposed to the measure and would certainly vote against it. Mr. Harrison then made an ineffectual effort to get Mr. Paddock to promise that he would absent himself when the vote was taken.

As a last resort to get the republican Senators into line Mr. Harrison is said to have stated to several of them that he would consider the defeat of the Force bill an intimation that they did not wish him to be a candidate for a renomination in '92. That is a very dangerous argument for Mr. Harrison to use, and it will probably result in making more votes against the bill than in its favor, for it is doubtful whether there is a half-a-dozen republican Senators who are sincerely in favor of giving Mr. Harrison another nomination

A republican caucus has voted to change the rules of the Senate in order to push the Force bill through. The programme is to debate the bill the rest of this week, then to take up the new silver bill approved by the same caucus, and pass it in its present condition, if the wicked democrats do not succeed in substituting free coinage therefor; afterwards the change of rules is to be adopted, if enough republicans can be persuaded to vote for it.

The rumor is again here, and generally believed to be true, that Mr. Harrison has fully made up his mind that Commissioner Raum is a heavier load than he cares to carry. He will ask for Raum's resignation, it is said, as soon as the House committee, which is pretending to investigate the Pension office, makes its report, which will probably not be until after the holidays.

The House expects to vote on the substitute for the Senate subsidy shipping bills tomorrow. This substitute is a sort of a combination of the subsidy and bounty features of the other two bills which has been concocted by the republicans of the House committee on Merchant Marine in order to compel certain republicans who favored subsidizing steamship lines, but opposed the bounty bill to vote for both. The republicans claim that it is certain to pass. An attempt will be made by democratic members to attach an amendment providing for free ships to the bill, and it may succeed as a number of republicans are believed to be willing to support it.

Representative Pierce of Tennessee, a member of the Farmers Alliance, has introduced in the House a resolution instructing the committee on Ways and Means to report the Sub-Treasury bill not later than Monday January 5, and fixing the following Monday for its consideration.

Representative Mills has introduced a resolution providing for a recess from Dec. 22, to January 5 and it has been referred to the committee on Ways and Means. It is not believed that the republicans will agree to such a lengthy recess, in fact a Senatorial caucus said there would be none.

Representative Wilson, of Washington, who took part in one of the [illegible] slugging matches on the floor of the House at the last session came very near to having another one with Representative Milliken, of Maine, whom he accused of having "turned down" his bill for a public building at Spokane Falls. Milliken called him a liar and Wilson started for him in regular pugilistic attitude when a friend grabbed him and Mr. Milliken made a hasty exit from the Speaker's lobby, where they had met. There may be more of it, as Wilson is known among his friends as a fighter.

While the apportionment bill, which passed this week, was under discussion in the House the democrats paid their respects to Secretary Noble, Superintendent Porter and the faulty Census upon which the bill is based. If the census was a correct one, which it was not, the bill would be as fair as could be expected.

A joint Congressional committee will undertake next week to make some of the gentleman concerned tell something about the buying of American industries by Foreign syndicates. If theye'd tell what they know it would be interesting.

Mr. Wanamaker has succeeded in getting the House committee on Post-offices to report a resolution to the House setting aside January 6 for the consideration of the postal telegraph bill. He doesn't seem to be worrying any to get a one cent postage bill through.

The National Citizens Alliance, which is intended to be a twin brother to the Farmers Alliance, is to have headquarters and a newspaper in this city.

Order of Publication.

At rules held in the Circuit Court Clerk's Office of Pocahontas County, West Virginia, on the first Monday in December, 1890.

Rosella Smith by &c.
vs. | In Chancery
Mary F. Malcomb, & others

The object of this suit is to obtain a sale and partition of proceeds of 100 acre tract of land in Pocahontas County West Virginia, and it appearing by affidavit filed that Elizabeth Y. Cochran is a non-resident of the State of West Virginia, it is ordered that she appear here within one month after the first publication of this order, and do what is necessary to protect her interest in this suit.

Teste,
JOHN J. BEARD, Clerk.

Printers fee $6.35.

Order of Publication.

At rules held in the Circuit Court Clerk's Office of Pocahontas County, W. Va., on the first Monday in December, 1890

Minnie V. Dameron Pl'ff.
vs.
Thomas J. Dameron Def't.
In Chancery.

The object of this suit is to procure a decree of divorce in favor of the plaintiff Minnie V. Dameron from the bonds of matrimony with the defendant Thomas J. Dameron, and to be awarded custody of the two children, [illegible] Page Dameron and Lewis [illegible] Dameron and it appearing by affidavit filed that Thomas J. Dameron is a non-resident of the State of West Virginia it is ordered that he appear here within one month after the first publication of this order, and do what is necessary to protect his interest in this suit.

Teste,
JOHN J. BEARD, Cl'k
Rucker, p. q.
Dec. 4-4 t.

Printers fee $6.35.

To Thomas J. Dameron, Esq.,

Take notice, that on the 19th day of January, A. D., 1891, between the hours of six o'clock, A. M., and Ten o'clock, P. M., at the residence of the late George C Hill dec'd. on Hill's Creek, Little Levels District, Pocahontas County, West Virginia, I will take the depositions of Miss Mary E. Hill, and others, to be read as evidence in my behalf, in a certain suit in chancery now pending in the Circuit Court of the County of Pocahontas, and State of West Virginia, in which I am Plaintiff and you are Defendant.

If from any cause the taking of said depositions shall not be commenced or completed on the day aforesaid, the same shall be continued from day to day, or from time to time, at the same place and between the same hours, until the same shall be completed.

MINNIE V. DAMERON,
By counsel.

H. S. Rucker, Sol.
dec. 4th-4 w

Printers fee $7.00.

HOME NEWS

—Christmas Gift.

—Q. W. Poage, Esq., Clover Lick, was in town Tuesday.

—The bar-rooms have done a good business this week.

—Albert Sharp, Esq., who has been for a few weeks past at Buchannan, Va., came home Xmas.

—H. A. Yeager, Esq., of Green Bank, was in Huntersville, Tuesday.

—Has every body got a turkey for Xmas? Ye Ed. has one, but it isn't much bigger'n an old rooster.

—One of Attorney H. S. Ruckers little girls has been quite sick for a few days past.

—The work on the abutments and wing walls of the bridge at this place was suspended for the winter.

—The St. Lawrence Lumber Co., has eight or ten thousand logs in one pile about one mile and a half above Huntersville.

—We finished last week a brief for Attorney H. S. Rucker in the case of Allen C. Burner vs. Uriah Heyener, of 39 pages.

—Ring out the old, ring in the New Year if you like, but don't forget, that the latter is 1891, when changing your date line after December 31.

—We understand that while four colored men were coming up the Warm Springs mountain during the big snow, one of them gave out and froze to death.

—As is usual with most country papers and THE TIMES with the rest, it will not appear next week but will promise after Xmas, to come out chuck full of news and reading matter.

—Mitchel Beard, Esq., of Beaver creek, called to see us Tuesday, and informed us that he, with a party from his neighborhood, spent a few days last week hunting on Cranberry mountain and killed five deer.

NOTICE.

Owing to a change in our firm Feb. 1st, '91, all persons indebted to us either by bond or acc't must pay up by that time. We mean business and it will pay you to settle at once.

Respectfully,
HEROLD & MOORE,
Frost, W. Va.

Dunmore Doings.

Snow at Dunmore on the 17th, 31 inches deep, which is the deepest snow that ever fell here.

Miss Mary Cackley, Nelia Pritchard and Iszie McCutcheon are home from school, and will remain until after the holidays.

We may have a few surprise parties during the holidays.

We would like to have a few good hops during the holidays. There is a time to dance and we think this is a good time.

Mr. Sam Cooper, of Green Bank, has the contract for the Farmer's Alliance store at Green Bank. A good deal of interest is being taken in the Alliance at that place. Let the good work go on.

TOM SAWYER.

Young Cassay, the bell-boy, who stole $16,000 from the Hotel Vendome, New York City, has been sentenced to hard labor for ten years. There was no possible ground for clemency, opines the World. He philosophically remarked to the landlord of the hotel that he would serve his time and then enjoy his stolen money, which was more than he could earn in ten years honestly. It would be poetic justice if somebody were to play a philosophic theft on the money in the hands of Cassin's imprisonment.

—THE TIMES wishes a happy Xmas to all its friends and patrons.

Big Snow.

On Tuesday and Wednesday of last week the deepest snow fell that has ever been witnessed in this section. It fell to the depth of 36 or 37 inches, and Wednesday night being very windy it drifted, in some places 10 feet deep. Barn and shop roofs were broken in and mails were stopped for several days.

DEATHS

Mr. Jacob Warwick, who resided on the Valley pike a few miles north of the city, died on the 10th instant, aged seventy-four years. The deceased was a native of Bath county and in the prime of his manhood resided in Nelson county, where he married and had a large relationship. He was liberally educated and chose farming as a pursuit. As entered into fellowship with Virginia farmers, he enjoyed the pleasure and comforts of that class, which never before or since witnessed such prosperity as that which prevaded the State in the decade before 1860. Settled upon a fine Rockfish estate in Nelson county, he married a daughter of the late Mr. William Massie, one of the most eminent patrons of agriculture in the State, and enjoyed his cultured associations, which called him into the public service of the people, one of which was that of a representative of the county in the Legislature. Whilst engaged in agricultural pursuits in Nelson, he controlled a large cattle-range on the mountain above the Crab Tree Falls, and, more than any other person in that day, opened the approaches to that wonderful curiosity of which he delighted to convene all the remainder of his life. Some years ago, he changed his interest to Augusta county where he continued to reside till his death.—Staunton Spectator.

Mr. Warwick was a brother of Mr. John W. Warwick, of near Edray, this County, and also of Mr. Jas. W. Warwick, of near Warm Springs, Bath Co., Va.

Mr. D. W. C. Slanker, fell dead in his house, near Split Rock last Friday, the 19th inst., cause, supposed to be heart trouble. Mr. Slanker was an excellent citizen, and for a number of years after the war, merchandised at this place, and was regarded among that class as a very fine salesman. He leaves a wife and five grown children to mourn his loss. Also his son John is lying in bed from the effects of a broken leg.

State Senator B. J. Smith, of Hancock county, died Friday, the 12th inst. Senator Smith is the republican member who was carried 300 miles on a sick bed to vote for Goff during the gubernatorial contest in the Legislature.

HIS EDITORIAL CAREER.

The Lincoln Citizen sizes up the career of Editor Richards, who recently sold out in Clarksburg, in the following language: "A printer named Richards came to Clarksburg a few years ago, his only stock in trade being an old army pistol and lots of sand in his craw. He got hold of an old printing office, which, to use the vernacular of the craft, had been 'dumped into the hell box,' and started a nondescript paper called the Telegram. In a month he had raised shed, so to speak, and people were shooting at him at every convenient opportunity. He got in a pop shot himself, occasionally, and kept up the racket with his newspaper. The more he abused people the more his paper prospered and the more he was respected. He got to be Mayor of the town, owned an eclectic light plant, bank and mining stock—in fact, got rich. A few days ago he sold out for a little fortune, and now some other editors whose papers are struggling for life are wondering if it wouldn't be a good idea to try Richard's plan.

ENTOMBED ALIVE.

DENVER, December 18.—A man named Lowe was buried Monday in Riverside cemetery. For some unexplained reason the horses attached to the hearse proved stubborn and the driver could not even coax them into a funeral march. About the same time Henry Stock, who drove a livery horse, had trouble, and both teams had to be changed.

Arriving at the cemetery the body was lowered into the grave with ceremonies prescribed by the Red Men's Order. A bird is set free as the first earth rattles on the coffin, a symbol of the flight of the soul to the realms of the hereafter, but the dove fluttered from its cage and alighted at the edge of the grave. It would not take wing until frightened away by the grave diggers. Gossips talked and it was decided to exhume the body. The work was done, and is [illegible] the coffin ered, as soon as [illegible] that the casket itself was split and the glass in the cover broken, as if the dead had come to life. The coffin lid was raised and the full horror burst upon the spectators.

His body lay in a position unlike a peaceful one. The arms were bent and the hands so tightly tightly clinched that the finger nails had been sunk into the flesh. The face of the dead was distorted from the awful struggle through which the man had passed, and the cheeks showed that in his frenzy the man, entombed alive, had used his nails with terrible effect.

Blown Sixty Feet.

CHARLESTON, W. Va., December 16.—Just above Ceredo, West Virginia, on the Ohio extension of the Norfolk & Western railroad, yesterday morning, there occurred a terrible dynamite explosion, which resulted in the death of two, men and the serious injury of a number of others. The workmen had been drying some dynamite, preparing to use it for a blast and the stuff caught fire. One of the men attempted to stamp the fire out with his foot and caused the explosion. He was blown through the roof of the shed where they had been drying the dynamite and landed in a beech tree sixty feet away, but strange to say he was not killed. An Italian named Bocili and a negro named Barrett, were in the building, were killed instantly, and ten other laborers dangerously wounded, some of whom cannot recover. The names of the injured could not be learned.

A Dog Procures a Pardon.

"That was a fine passage between the Executive of Kentucky and the wife of the condemned man, who went to Frankfort last Friday to ask for a pardon. She had presented her papers and sat breathless whilst the arbiter of her fate perused them; and, as she waited, a mastiff, the playmate of the Governor's little son—a beast not given to strangers—uncoiled himself from the rug, there he had been lying, and came up in that friendly way which only dogs know how to affect with perfect sincerity, and, seeing suspense and pain in the agitated features of the poor woman, he put his paws gently upon her knees and began to lick her hands. The Governor finished the papers and the petitioner was about to speak when the grim old soldier said: "It is not necessary, madam; the dog has spoken for you," and straightway signed the document which was to release a dying man from prison and enable him to go to his grave from his own home.

KEEP POSTED.

If you want a good news paper during the session of the Legislature subscribe for the Charleston Daily Gazette. It gives all the news. It owns the Associated Press Franchise which gives a decided advantage in printing the latest and most important happenings. A full report will be given each day of the Legislature proceedings [illegible] cents per [illegible] The Weekly Gazette, [illegible] large columns to each page, only $1.00 per year.

Address
THE GAZETTE,
Charleston, W. Va.

Order of Publication.

At rules held in the Circuit Court Clerk's Office of Pocahontas County, West Virginia, on the first Monday in December, 1890.

Leven Wanless [illegible] & others } In Chancery.

The object of this suit is to obtain a decree for the sale of the lands of which Jas. Wanless died seized and possessed, and a division of the proceeds among his heirs at law, and it appearing by affidavit filed, that Thomas Hatton and Betsy his wife, —— Veris and Zeda his wife and George P. Wanless, are non-residents of the State of West Virginia, it is ordered that they do appear here within one month after the first publication of this order, and do what is necessary to protect their interest in this suit.

Teste,
JOHN J. BEARD, Cl'k.
Skeen p. q.
Decbr. 4th—4 w

Printers fee, $7.40

Order of Publication.

At rules held in the Circuit Court Clerk's Office of Pocahontas County, West Virginia, on the first Monday in December, 1890.

Rhoda E. Crigger Pl'ff.
vs. In Chy.
H. F. Crigger Def't.

The object of this suit is to obtain a divorce from the bonds of matrimony and to be awarded the custody of the child, James H. Crigger, and it appearing by affidavit filed that diligence has been used on behalf of plaintiff to ascertain in what County the said H. F. Crigger resides without effect, and from the best information she can obtain, the said H. F. Crigger is not a resident of the State of West Virginia. It is ordered that said Crigger appear here within one month after the first publication of this order and do what is necessary to protect his interest in the suit.

Teste,
JOHN J. BEARD, Clerk.
Rucker p. q.
Dec. 4-4 w

Printers fee $7.50.

Notice To Take Depositions.

To H. F. Crigger, Esq.:

Take notice that on the 9th day of January A. D., 1891, between the hours of six o'clock, A. M., and six o'clock, P. M., at the law office of H. S. Rucker, in the town of Huntersville, Pocahontas County, West Virginia, I will take the depositions of John C. Moran and others, to be read as evidence in my behalf, in a certain suit in Chancery now pending in the Circuit Court of the County of Pocahontas, State of West Virginia, in which I am Plaintiff, and you are Defendant.

If from any cause the taking of said depositions shall not be commenced or completed on the day aforesaid, the same shall be continued from day to day, or from time to time, at the same place and between the same hours, until the same shall be completed.

Respectfully,
RHODA E. CRIGGER.
By Counsel.

H. S. Rucker, Sol.
Dec 4-4 t
Printers fee $7.78.

[Po]cahontas Times.

JOHN E. CAMPBELL,
[ED]ITOR AND PROPRIETOR.

[E]ntered at the Post-office at Hunters[vil]le, W. Va., as second class matter.

ADVERTISING RATES.

	1 m.	3 m.	6 m.	1 yr.
One inch	$ 1 00	$ 3 00	$ 5 00	$ 8 00
Three in.	3 00	4 00	6 00	10 00
Qr. column	5 00	6 00	10 00	17 00
Half col'n	6 00	12 00	20 00	30 00
One col'n	10 00	20 00	30 00	50 00

Reading notices, not exceeding five lines, twenty-five cents for each insertion, and five cents a line for each additional line.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION.

One copy, 1 yr., $1.00 in advance; after 6 months, $1.25; after 12 months, $1.50. These terms will be strictly complied with.

Huntersville, W. Va.

December 25, 1890.

mind were [illegible] [first page.]

Malcom, "somebody [illegible] her be wronged," and he [hesitated] to speak other words which were on his tongue. At last, in desperation, he said to himself:

"God knows I would sooner die than wrong her! But it is not her wealth, nor her beauty—it is her dear, true, sweet self that draws me, and she shall decide."

Sitting by Mary's side, that evening, he was so silent that she said to him:

"Mr. Duncan, I believe you are getting tired of being my guardian."

"Mary, I am," was Bob's instant answer. "I want to be something more than that—I want to be your husband. Will you take me for that, sweet?"

Mary looked up, her face grew rosy, her lips smiled and trembled; but she lifted the little hand which lay in her lap, and gave it to him.

Tommy is very hard on shoes and trousers. His mother understands this and governs herself accordingly when she goes shopping.

One day, while out with another lady, she was buying cloth for a pair of pantaloons for Tommy, and ordered a good deal more than seemed necessary.

"Why do you get so much?" asked her friend.

"Oh," was the reply, "this is for reserved seats!"

KEEP POSTED.

If you want a good news paper during the session of the Legislature subscribe for the Charleston Daily Gazette. It gives all the news. It owns the Associated Press Franchise which gives a decided advantage in printing the latest and most important happenings. A full report will be given each day of the Legislative proceedings. Price fifty cents per month. The Weekly Gazette, nine large columns to each page, only $1.00 per year.

Address

THE GAZETTE,
Charleston, W. Va.

A boy about 15 years of age applied to a factory on Atwater Street for the job of running a small engine in the place of a boy who had quit.

"Have you run an engine?" was asked.

"Yes, sir."

"You understand how steam works, do you?"

"I do."

"You know that water makes steam?"

"Of course."

"How is water got into a boiler?"

"By an injector."

"Suppose you have too much water?"

"Then I can't get steam enough until I draw it down."

"Correct. Suppose you haven't enough?"

"Then look out for an explosion."

"Correct again. Suppose you found the water almost gone and couldn't start the injector—what would you do?"

"Come up stairs and notify you to get your insurance policies out of the safe and make a sneak before she busted!"

"You seem to be all right, young man; you can come on in the morning."

"You look worried, my dear," said Childers, when he came home from the office the other day. What is the matter?"

"The children have been very tiresome to-day," replied Mrs Childers, wearily. "It seems as if they would make me distracted."

"Don't let 'em!" said Childers, with considerable energy. "Don't let 'em ride over you. Just—Georgie, don't talk when papa's talking—Just deal with them gently but firm—Did you hear me, Georgie?—firmly, and you'll get along all—Silence, Georgie, this instant!—all letting 'em [illegible] for letting 'em worry—on my pockets, [po]ckets, Dick—Will you take your hands out or not? Now keep them out. You've broken a couple of cigars for me now, you—What's Georgie making such a racket about, Annie? Great Scott! He's got my silk hat. Take it—hang it up high. Now, Dick, if you cry you'll have—Lord, they've both commenced. It does seem, Annie, 's if the minute I come into the house, I can't talk!—I can't think. Won't you take them off to bed? My gracious I'll bet if I was home I'd——"

But as the boys clattered away up the stairs with their tired mamma, Childers sat down and gazed gloomily into space, without saying just exactly what he would do if he was home.

A country school-mistress had much trouble with her pupils, and to avoid it, made her examples placed before them of an explanatory character or illustrative. The effect was often unexpected. In going over their usual reading lesson a line was chosen by the lady upon which to test the merits of the scholars. The line read, "and he was a man of unlimited credit in business."

"Now, John, can you tell me what is meant by the word credit, when used as in the lesson?"

Thus she addressed one of the stumbling-blocks of the school.

"I dunno, marm," said Johnny, looking sheepish.

"You don't know!" said the mistress. "Well, look here. Supposing your mother was to come short of money at the latter part of the week, and needed provisions, etc., now what would she have to do?"

She was satisfied that her illustration was plain, and awaited the correct reply, and it came thus:

"Well, marm," replied Johnny, "I dunno what she would do, unless she pawned dad's Sunday coat."

The subject was instantly dropped, and the teacher has lost all faith in that style of illustration.

Stranger—"If a man falls down an open coal hole, can he sue the owner of the premises for damages?"

Lawyer—Certainly, sir, certainly, big damages, and get them, too. Give me the particulars."

"Well, as my brother was passing your house this morning he f[ell] through a coal hole and broke his leg."

"Hem! Did he use ordinary vigilance to prevent such an accident? Did he look at his feet as he walked? Did he stop and examine the condition of the pavement before entering upon it? Answer me that, sir."

"Stop! Why, no——"

"Ah, ha! I thought so. Guilty of criminal negligence. He might have fallen on one of my own family under that coal hole—might have killed us all, sir. As it is I shall sue him for mussing up my coal bin."

SUBSCRIBE

FOR THE

POCAHONTAS TIMES,

Every man in the co[unty should] take it, and patronize home industry. It sustains your rights, and works for the advancement of your county, which no city paper will do. It gives you the news from all parts of the county, which you could not get otherwise. It furnishes matters of interest to the Merchant, Farmer and Mechanic. It keeps you posted and gives you information, on all general news, and its sections and Miscellany are fit for all ages.

TERM OF SUBSCRIPTION.

One year in advance	$1.00
If not paid within 6 months	1.25
And at the end of the year	1.50

AND IF YOU NEED

Letter Heads, Note Heads, Bill Heads, Envelopes, Drug Envelopes, Tags, Business Cards, Official Blanks, Blank Bonds, Posters, Briefs for the Court of Appeals etc.

GET THEM AT "THE TIMES"

JOB OFFICE.

POCAHONTAS TIMES.

Vol. VIII JOHN E. CAMPBELL, EDITOR AND PROPRIETOR. Huntersville, West Virginia, Thursday, January 8, 1891. Terms of Subscription, $1.00 PER YEAR. IN ADVANCE. No. 23

Official Directory of Pocahontas County.

Judge of Circuit Court, A. N. Campbell.
Prosecuting Attorney, L. M. McClintic.
Sheriff, M. J. McNeel.
Deputy Sheriff, L. W. Herold.
Cl'k of Cir. & Co. Courts, J. J. Beard.
Assessor, C. O. Arbogast.
Com'rs Co. Ct. C. E. Beard, S. B. Hannah, G. P. Moore.
Co. Surveyor, Geo. Baxter

THE COURTS.

Circuit Court convenes on the first Monday in April, 3rd Monday in June and 3rd Monday in October.

County Court convenes on the 1st Tuesday in January, March, October and second Tuesday in July. July is levy term.

Too Much for Him.

BY K. STUB GRAPS.

Privileges of copy granted THE TIMES.

ARUNDALE—a house on a marshy creek, letting up from the bay; lawn laid off squeamishly, walks diagonalled and circled; a third class summering resort, strictly private; free bathing in murky water, salted by the tide; free fishing for snapping turtles, wandering crabs, catfish and sunperch; free boating in a cast-away drift vessel; free drives in an ox-cart, through swampy and gated avenues; free promenades across the cornfield to the turnip patch: it all summed up in the ad. is as follows:

"Boarders Wanted at Arundale, elite Summer Home. Strictly private. Best of references required. Beautiful lawns. Free bathing, boating, fishing, driving, promenading. 4 dollars a week. Address, Miss Alicia Tompkins, Arundale, Callawan's Point. Care Capt. Blaswick, Steamer 'Wawa.'"

[2]

The boarders had come and gone, and the cold drizzly rains of Autumn had set in; and with it all there was a dissatisfied expression in the countenance of Miss Alicia Tompkins,—a reckless air, baffled, but not subdued,—disappointed, as if a certain investment had failed to make a coveted return, but with a morbid determination to invest again.

Miss Tompkins was an odd character. Unadorned, she was tall, gaunt, bold featured; only a batch of hair and that smirched as by the sun: her eyes had a keen eccentric blaze and her face showed the wrinkles of sixty autumns. Thus a lank black dress was her usual robe. But adorned; that is, rigged up according to her ideal of beauty—a store flaxen coil and girlish bangs upon her head—an unusual vermillion flush upon her cheek—the stroke of the pencil where ordinary eyebrows ought to be—slippers with New Port ties and a heavy sash drawn gracefully around her contracted form, she posed as the consummation of the aristocratic intellect and erudition of a long and honorable ancestry; priding herself, not upon what she is, but has been. Her tongue is glib and she can talk most fastidiously. She is what the world terms an "old maid" but she prefers the more comely expression "bachelorette." However she wants it, above all things, distinctly understood that she has had many bleeding hearts cast at her feet, but she pittyingly rejected them all and made a thoughtful choice of her present situation. Her father and mother were dead, and her three sisters married and went away and left her to stem the torrent with Nancy the old colored cook and her son little "Wooly Head" and Jack Mace, a white man servant who was reared by the family.

Jack was afflicted, not only with physical ugliness [illegible] under lip, stooped and knock kneed, but with an impetuous, wilful and mulish temper. He was also ignorant, rude and agitated, especially, so when things did not move to suit him. He was raised as a knock-about boy, and in such a sphere when left alone, discharged his duties well; [illegible] had spoiled him [illegible] which was [illegible] was always [illegible] and [illegible] could not find [illegible] first, would take a fancy to him, and second, who relished the position of house-maid for the mistress of Arundale.

As for Miss Tompkins, there were some very queer things said about her among them was that she had been a defeated candidate for matrimony ever since she was thirteen years old, that she had vainly endeavored to trap many of the masculine kind by "setting her cap" for them; but each defeat had strengthened her determination, so that she clung on to her intention with such a tenacity which only warranted her rigging at the age of sixty the fixtures of a sixteen year old girl, the shy girlish capers she would cut before a contemplated possible case and the askant glance from amid a profusion of blushes and graces while reciting amusing instances which happened "just eighteen years ago when she was a very young girl." Her case had long long since been pronounced a woeful one by the neighborhood. Marriage to her was as much of a mirage as to Jack. But a woman is a woman, and not often to be outwitted, I tell you. It seems that she had made a "catch as catch can" rush for a man and was determined to have him against all odds. Finding all her schemes and smiles exhausted to secure one of the elite or clever stock, and that all others were beyond the reach of her decoy, she thought of one and only one possible case—and that one was—even—poor Jack. Yes, in him rested her last hope, and after due contemplation she made up her mind to bait, and cast out her hooks when the first opportunity presented itself.

[3]

Jack was emptying a hod of coal in the grate when Miss Tompkins, who had her feet propped up on the fender "baking" them, began by way of introduction, hoping at the same time the introduction, would be so favorable as to be the finis. She looked upon him with a wistful eye and said, "Poor Jack, poor, poor fellow."

"Yaas, I kno' wot yer hawnyin' me erbout naw; ye wants ter git er ride but I got sumpin' else ter do; I 'as" he replied with much emphasis.

"O no, poor dear. I was just thinking about how sad was your lot—nobody to care for you—to—to—love you." And with these words she jobbed her fingers in her eyes and began weeping.

"Git out; none o' yer bawlin' 'bout me; I aint a keer'n. You 'ad better go an' look arter ole granny an' not come o' round botherin' me," he responded as he gave the door an ill-humored slam behind him.

Jack gone, she tottled into her room, which, by the array of cosmetics, head gears, crayons etc., reminds one of an anomalous medley composed of an illy kept barber shop, dental office, studio and apothecary shop. She glanced into the looking glass and frowned—then smiled—then looked sidewise—then over her shoulder—then put her finger on her temple, and smiled again, and murmured sweetly, "Jack my boy,"—then with a frown—"He is such a stupid goose, he can't understand anything!"—then more encouragingly—"But he will think about what I said to him awhile ago and understand in good time. I will talk as plainly as [illegible] Morgan can understand."

Her glass [illegible] Jack at the wood-pile chopping, she went out for a basket of chips. "Jack my boy," with finger on her temple and smile as before the glass.

"Mam," answered Jack, with the uplifted.

"Wouldn't it be nice for you to be a master and not a servant?"

"Well, I aint, an' thar's no use o' thinkin' er bout it," decidedly answered Jack.

"But Jack dear, have'nt I got the power to make you so?" she said takingly.

"You! you!" he exclaimed resting his axe on the chopping block, "I knows as well as you'r standin' thar thet you aint a goin' ter gin me eny lan' ter call my own. Yer wouldn't gin me two green cents wuth ef yer tho't yer'd never get'n back agin. Talk erbout you gin'n; All the lan' I specs ter git I'm you'll be nuff ter burry me in."

"But Jack you dont understa—"

"Ne-o use'r talkin', I aint no fule" he interceptingly put in as he resumed his chopping.

Baffled again she retreated into the house. She thought Jack was the dumbest, hardest headed, stubbornest piece in the shape of a man she ever saw: he crossed her in every particular. But while thinking of this peculiarity of Jack's, her eyes glistened with a new thought freshly coined. "Aha!" she ejaculated "I'll work him this time. I'll cross him, and scold him; I'll tell him if I were his wife I would horse whip him. That's the very thing." And she laughed and clapped her thin old hands in a demoniac sort of style. All her experience art and genius was brought to bear upon the pendant issue. Like one driven to desperation, she hesitated not.

[4]

The next morning was cold, chilly and benumbing. Jack was carrying water from the spring to supply the kitchen for the day. He was out of fix because little "Wooly Head" had failed to bring down an extra bucket for which he had spent his patience calling.

"Thet leetle carufunted brat, I'll blast 'is hade offen 'im; thet's wot I'll do, an' 'is missus don't keeru, wot the leetle night saplin' don't do." And with these words the poor wretch made an unlucky step, slipping down, falling headlong down a little incline, the water from his only bucket spilling itself completely upon him.

"Carufunt it" he gasped between his breath while struggling to get up.

Miss Tompkins saw it, and recognize it as her supreme moment. She had kept the negro back in order to provoke Jack, but she had hardly hoped for such a favorable circumstance to aggravate him. She bounced out in a torturing flurry menacing him with, "Now, there, now there, you have gone and carelessly spilled the water and we have been waiting, and waiting, and waiting, and you only had half enough any way; you ought to have had two buckets. O my! how provoking; you are a good-for-nothing rascal. O sakes! if I were only your wife I would horse-whip you so you couldn't get up, I would; now, there."

"Haa," he groaned, "yer would, would yer? well I reckon yer wouldn't naw. I'd teach yer some sense, comin' foolin' round me with er hoss-whip."

"Yes, I would; I would thrash you within an inch of your life for being so careless. I believe I would treat you to the cowhide every day any way now, there," she persisted.

"Haa, yer'd gin me a gude cowhiden' every day, would yer? well, I'd like fer yer ter be my wife, jest ter teach yer some sense, an'—"

"Hush up," she screamed "if you don't keep your mouth shut, I'll go straight over and get Mr. Carr to bring the license and a preacher and a horse whip, so I will, now, there."

"I'm gittin' mad now," yelled Jack, "go and git yer preacher and hoss whip, an' I'll take an' use it on yaw—yer ole scarecrow. I wouldn't have yer fer a wife if any body'd gin me a dozen of yer, but I'll let the preacher do the job jest ter gin yer a gude soun' thrashin—wot yer need," with a flourish of his fist while sitting flat upon the ground in the water and mud, "I'll show yer how much thrashin' yer'll do if yaw was may wife."

"All right Mr. Snigglefritz, you stir your stumps and get out old Morgan and I'll go straight to Mr. Carr's and will very soon show what I will do; you speak in distortion, you," stamping her foot fiercely on the ground.

"Haa, haa !, all right ole buzzard, we'll see" said Jack as he cracked his teeth together, giving the empty bucket a furious kick and starting for the old horse.

The horse was soon gotten and Miss Alicia Tompkins spent no idle time in getting off to Jade Carr's, an eccentric old neighbor. She heartily congratulated herself upon being so victorious. She must rush the matter through and make quick work of it, for if Jack would suspect anything her last opportunity would be gone. She must keep his wrath boiling so that he will not stop to think.

In the meantime Jack jumped up and cracked his heels together and dashed his fists against each other and gave vent in half audible words to his insulted spirit. "Git yer gone ole gal, I'll teach yer that I'm the biggest rat in this mus."

[5]

The next morning bright and early brought by Jade Carr came the horse whip, the license and the preacher; the preacher evidently not knowing why he was called. It is needless to say that a very strange surprise was meted out to him when he was taken into a dilapidated room and instructed. After fishing his ritual out of his hand satchel he glanced around him, the chandelier was made up of odd lamps, the antiquated fruiture was merely propped up and the equally old piano had not been tuned for forty years, and while he was dizzily wondering which had gone crazy, Miss Tompkins or Jack Mace, the door opened and the duo, accompanied by Jade Carr, Nancy the cook and little "Wooly head" came in. Jack had on his Sunday clothes and his face was set and determined. The license was tendered by Jade Carr and Miss Tompkins extended her hand with a [illegible]

The minister was [illegible] and dazed; in a sort of bewildering dream he read the ceremony and pronounced them man and wife; and through his habit he began his usual blessing which was brought to an unfinished terminus by Jack, who turned around to his ag[illegible] wife with, "Naw yer's my wife, git yer cow-hide an' [illegible] I'll see which's the biggest dog. I means biz, I does!"

"What! what!" exclaimed the minister ritual dropping from his hand and his eyes almost [illegible] from their sockets, "[illegible] speak Jackson! [illegible] married [illegible]"

"Yaas," he answered, pointing [illegible] his [illegible] and getting his [illegible] [illegible] if she was my wife she'd [illegible]

(Continued on fourth page.)

Pocahontas Times.

JOHN E. CAMPBELL,
EDITOR AND PROPRIETOR.

Entered at the Post-office at Huntersville, W. Va., as second class matter.

ADVERTISING RATES.

	1 m.	3 m.	6 m.	1 yr.
One inch	$1 00	$[illegible]	$[illegible]	$[illegible]
Three in.	[illegible]	4 00	[illegible]	10 00
¼ column	[illegible]	[illegible]	10 00	17 00
Half col'n	[illegible]	12 00	20 00	30 00
One col'n	10 00	20 00	30 00	50 00

Reading notices, not exceeding five lines, twenty-five cents for each insertion, and five cents a line for each additional line.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION.

One copy, 1 yr., $1.00 in advance; after 6 months, $1.25; after 12 months, $1.50

These terms will be strictly complied with.

Huntersville, W. Va.

January 8, 1891.

The residence of Hon. Jas. G. Blaine burned to the ground on the 1st inst.

Two theatres and a hotel were destroyed by fire in New York on the 3rd inst.

Sodie Martinez paid $115 for the doll dressed by Mrs. Cleveland for the New York charity dolls' fair.

The McKinley bill was milk punch and ice cream for large manufacturing corporations, but skim milk and ice in the wash bowl for millions of farmers and their families.

While the republican party has raised the tariff on imported goods it has raised the taxes that all farmers must pay on what they buy for home consumption, and have also raised——!

It is announced that the New York and London committees on the Virginia State debt have definitely agreed upon a plan which it is expected the Virginia Legislature will readily approve.

December 26th the Gem City Stove Works, in Dayton, Ohio, were destroyed by an explosion of natural gas. Loss $55,000. The business portion of St. Augustine, Tex., was burned. Loss $100,000. A fire in Milton, Del., caused a loss of $30,000. The Marshall County Court House, Kan., was burned. Loss $50,000. Granite Hall, in Augusta, Me., was burned. Total loss, about $50,000. The village of Noble, Ill., was partially destroyed by fire.

The New York World was moved into its new quarters in the Pulitzer Building at the end of Brooklyn Bridge, December 23, and now it is in the best appointed printing office in the country. With 150 other tenants in the same palatial edifice, it is quite a business town of itself. Aside from those having rooms for its own use, the World, or its owners, the Press Publishing Company will receive about $200,000 a year rental from their tenants.

The man who still clings to the old party machine, expecting general benefits thereby, reminds us of the jocksentiral dutchman who swallowed a bad oyster twenty-nine times and twenty-nine times threw it up. Then he ordered it pickled and shoved down his throat after he was dead, that he might prove that he could and would hold fast to a rotten oyster.

A very severe engagement took place between 120 Indians under chief Big Foot and 500 U. S. troops, in the Bad lands, Dec. 29, in which more than 30 Indians were killed and several of the troops were wounded. The latest advices are that the Indians are being pursued in every direction and are being killed wherever found, no quarter being asked or given. It is supposed that Big Foot's band will be entirely exterminated.

The bronze statue of "Stonewall" Jackson, for the Jackson monument in Lexington, arrived there on Wednesday night, the 24th Dec.

M. A. Dauphin, for twenty years president of the Louisiana Lottery Company, died Sunday at New Orleans, aged 53 years.

The following is a model of New Year reveris, self depreciation, and resolution, which shows the heart from which it springs to be pure and disinterested:

"New Year resolutions,—What shall they be? Nothing good, pure and noble, for those things I am incapable of being. What under the light of heaven I ever was made for, to me is a mystery. Is there a single person who has been benefited or made happier in any way by me? I dont know. Yet this instant am I committing a sin by questioning the wisdom of the All-Wise in placing me here.

Retrospection! 'tis vain and useless. Live for the future, not for the past.

"What is done, is written in a rock, yea, with a pen of iron."
I will do the best I can."

WASHINGTON LETTER.

[From our regular correspondent.]

WASHINGTON, D. C., January 2.—Senator Hoar enjoyed his New Year's day dinner less even than his Christmas dinner, if it were possible. Senator Stewart spoiled his Christmas dinner by his speech against the Force bill and appetite for his dinner yesterday was killed by a grand triple attack upon his pet scheme for getting even with the South by Senator's Wolcott, Teller and Hale. The first named Senator fired broadside into the Force bill of unanswerable argument; the groundwork of his logic being opposition to enacting a law for the purpose of placing an acknowledged ignorant and incompetent majority over an intelligent minority. He stated plainly that if there were a majority of ignorant negro voters in the State of Colorado, solidly opposed to the united intelligent white votes, that in some way and by some method the white vote would govern. That he is a broad gauge man the following words from his speech fully demonstrate: "For a quarter of a century, out from poverty and despair, the South has been reaching forth in efforts to plant its foot on the solid rock of material prosperity; and in view of the marvellous growth and transformation now taking place in the Southern States I believe it would be unwise and unpatriotic for us to interfere in the conduct of its internal affairs."

Senator Tellers speech was a ringing demand for the shelving of the Force bill and the enactment of the financial legislation demanded by the people of the country, which he described as being on the very verge of a financial panic.

Senator Hale's remarks, which probably hurt the would-be-leader from Massachusetts more than all the rest, was an attack upon Mr. Hoar charging him with being responsible for the month's time which has been wasted in consideration of the Force bill, and demanding the speedy disposal of that measure in order that other and more necessary legislation might have a chance. Mr. Hale also took occasion to give the closure or gag rule now pending, which he says is is altogether needless, a few hard raps. Take them all in all they were three of the most remarkable speeches ever made in Congress outside of a secret caucus against a party measure by members of the same party.

And yet, there is a well grounded fear on the part of democratic Senators that by the vigorous use of the party whip and the administration patronage the bill may be passed if it ever reaches a vote which it will not do if the democrats can by any means prevent it. In order to defeat it upon a vote, assuming that ever Senator will be in his seat or paired, it is necessary that eight republicans should vote against it, and only three have yet openly announced their intention of so voting, although there are a dozen or more who have privately expressed themselves as being opposed to it.

One thing is evident it will have to be passed or laid aside within the next ten days; other legislation, particularly financial, is crowding it, and Senator Hoar is reported to have said to-day that if it was not passed next week it would never pass. The administration has all the detectives of the Post-office department working on the recent killing of the post-master at Carrollton, Mississippi, in order to try to make capital to help push the bill through, notwithstanding letters in the possession of Senator George from the leading citizen of the town, including its most influential minister, stating that politics had nothing whatever to do with the killing.

Treasury department officials are now preparing the annual deficiency bill. It will be the largest in the history of the country, aggregating about $75,000,000, nearly half of which is for pensions. These deficiencies were deliberately made by the republicans in Congress at the last session for the purpose of blinding the voters of the country to the amount of money that was being spent by that party.

Senator Hearst is somewhat better than he has been for several weeks, though still a very sick man.

The Civil Service Commission has jumped on Mr. Wanamaker to the extent of several newspaper columns because of his criticism of its methods in his annual report. This is regarded by many as an attack upon Mr. Harrison, who approved the report of the Post-master General or it would not have been made public, and some people think that there may be vacancies in the commission before long. The country could get along if the whole business was abolished.

Democrats are by no means anxious for an extra session of Congress, but if, as now looks almost certain, one be made necessary by the failure of the republicans to pass the regular appropriation bills they will not complain. They are ready to do their duty, but they wish the responsibility for an extra session to be placed where it rightfully belongs—on the republicans.

Want [illegible] Sullivan.

QUEENSTOWN, Jan. 3.—McAuliffe and Madden left here Thursday on the D[illegible]. Madden told a newspaper representative that he was commissioned by Arthur Cockburn, the well known English sport, to bet £1,000 to £3,000 that Slavin would knock Sullivan out in six three-minute rounds.

Slavin told Madden that he was willing to undertake the task if his backer consented. Madden, on his arrival, will deposit $500 to bind the match.

Madden was also asked by Charlie Mitchell to match him against Sullivan in a ring as small as twelve feet with skin gloves or bare knuckles, to fight in America, for $5,000 a side. Mitchell will start immediately he hears from Madden that the match is made.

KEEP POSTED.

If you want a good news paper during the session of the Legislature subscribe for the Charleston Daily Gazette. It gives all the news. It owns the Associated Press Franchise which gives a decided advantage in printing the latest and most important happenings. A full report will be given each day of the Legislative proceedings. Price fifty cents per month. The Weekly Gazette, nine large columns to each page, only $1.00 per year.

Address

THE GAZETTE,
Charleston, W. Va.

HOME NEWS.

—County Court last Tuesday.

—What has become of our correspondents?

—Mr. Geo. H. McGlaughlin, of Edray, called to see us Tuesday.

—Several persons attended court here Tuesday.

—Mr. O. Gay, the French cook, of the St. Lawrence Lumber camp near town is at Hotel by Wagner with fever.

—Miss Mary Rucker died at the home of Mr. Wm. McComb, on Beaver Creek, on the 25th inst. of consumption; aged about 60 yrs.

—Hon. I. B. Moore, of Frost, called to see us Tuesday. He will soon take his departure for Charleston as a member of the House of delegates, which convenes on the 14th inst.

—The Clifton Forge Nonpareil is the name of a new paper published at Clifton Forge by J. V. Henderson. It is newsy and well gotten up. Independent in politics and sold at $1.00 a year.

—Bill Toliver, a colored boy, whose home was near Huntersville, was on Christmas eve at Mt. Grove Va., accidentally shot in the head and killed, while carelessly handling a pistol.

—A. K. Hathaway, of Dumiso, Texas and Jas. W. Whitworth, of Sulphur Springs, Texas, both students of the Staunton Military Academy, and about 15 yrs. of age, while carelessly handling and snapping, what was supposed to be an unloaded revolver, it was discharged and the former was killed.

—In this issue will be found the ad. of Rivercomb, Lam & Co., real estate agents, Covington, Va. They are live wide awake real estate men, and parties having lots for sale can do no better than to place them in their hands, and those desiring to purchase should consult them before investing.

—We are requested to inform the talent holders of the Southern Methodist Sunday school, at this place, that it is now time for the talents, with their increase; also a statement of any specially interesting ways of increasing the same, to be handed to Superintendent C. F. Moore or Pastor Snapp. They will be duly recorded, and the result, will probably be mentioned hereafter.

—The Ohio Press favors the alliance of the Farmers Alliance with the people, and thus the formation of a People's Party. As the principles put forth so clearly by the Farmers Alliance are for the good of the people, and as the people have a right to form a People's Party, in and through which all who love their country and humanity in general better than old countries and usurers in particular, it is to be hoped the alliance will be general and permanent.

—The following gentlemen were in attendance at County Court and registered at the hotels Monday and Tuesday: Messrs. M. J. McNeel and C. E. Beard, of Mill Point; E. L. Beard and Lincoln Cochran, of Locust; Geo. W. Siple, Maj. J. C. Arbogast, H. A. Yeager, S. B. Hannah, and Wm. Siple, of Green Bank, L. W. Herold, and B. F. White, of Driscol, R. K. Burns, Geo. B. Curry and Richard Beard, of Academy; Levi Gay, S. D. Price, G. M. Kee, A. M. McGlaughlin, Geo. Gibson, and H. T. Metcalf, of Marlinton; Chas. Cook, J. E. Barlow, Levi Waugh, W. C. and T. W. Mann, J. W. Gum, J. D. Gay, of Edray; Sherman and Wm. Gibson, W. B. Hannah, Sam and Jno. A. Moore, and M. F. Herold, of Frost, E. O'Farrell, of Mt. Grove, Sheldon Moore, Huntersville. Several other gentlemen were in the city, were not registered at the hotels consequently we failed to get their names.

—Mess. Jno. Taylor and C. B. Swecker, of Dunmore called to see us Tuesday.

—Our friend C. D. Lam, formerly, of the firm of Lam & O'Farrell Mt. Grove, called to see us this week. We are pleased to learn that he is in the real estate business at Covington, Va., and doing a good business. He is now traveling in the interest and selling stock for the Covington Improvement Co., which from the railroad facilities, and present indications of other roads, of which the Pittsburg, W. Va. southern road is one, and almost an assured fact, is an excellent investment for those who want to invest in that line.

Deathards Creek Items.

Well X-mas is over, and we do not think the young people can complain about not having enough snow for sleighing.

Miss Ida White, who is attending school at Hillsboro, spent X-mas at home.

Mr. Albert Sharp, who has been at Buchannon, Va. for some time is spending a week or two at home.

Mr. H. Lee White, has returned from Bath, where he has been to see his best girl.

Miss Alice McGlaughlin who is teaching school on this creek, spent last week at her home near Dunmore.

John E. Campbell and wife spent a few days last week at the home of her parents Mr. Henry Sharp's.

C. D. Lam, Esq., of Covington, Va., spent Friday night at Mr. Henry Sharp's.

JESSIE JAMES.

Hillsboro Happenings.

Plenty of Snow.

The Bazar at this place was quite a success.

Mr. N. C. McNeil spent last week in our town.

Mrs. Sallie Alstep, of Warm Springs is spending the winter at Mr. J. W. Belton's.

Miss Minnie Brown, of Narrows Va. has enrolled as a pupil of the M. & F. Academy.

Mr. Harry Beard, of Huntersville is clerking for W. H. Overholt.

Mrs. Susan Shover is spending the winter with her daughter Mrs. Fannie Jordon.

Mr. Harry McGlaughlin, of Elk, was in our town last week. Mr. H. is suffering with a Payne in his heart.

The following officers were elected for the next Quarter of Sons of Temperance: Worthy Patriarch, H. W. Burgess; Worthy Associate, Belle Eskridge; Recording Scribe, Verdie Clark; Assistant Recording Scribe, W. A. Eskridge; Financial Scribe, G. F. Crummett; Treasurer, G. R. Curry; Chaplain, Rev. C. Sydenstricker; Conductor, A. C. Kinnison; Assistant Conductor, E. H. Moore; Inside Sentinel, Maude Eskridge; Outside Sentinel; J. C. Waugh.

ADRONIS.

County Court Proceedings.

The following are the proceeding of the Co. Ct., up to Wednesday, 12 o'clock:

Wm. and Sherman Gibson qualified as adm'r of S. L. Gibson, dec'd.

G. M. Kee qualified as Com'r of the Co. Ct., and took his seat in place of G. P. Moore.

S. B. Hannah, was elected president of the Co. Ct.

S. L. Brown, qualified as Cl'k of the Co. Ct.

J. C. Arbogast qualified as Sheriff of P. C.

R. K. Burns qualified as J. P. in dist. No. 4; Chas Cook in dist No. 2; H. A. Yeager in dist. No. 1 in place of J. H. Patterson resigned.

Wm. R. Siple qualified as Constable in dist No. 1.

The President has nominated Judge Henry B. Brown as Associate Justice of the Supreme Court to fill the vacancy occasioned by the death of Justice Miller.

RAILROAD NEWS.

PARKERSBURG, W. Va., Dec. 29—The Daily Sentinel, of this city, publishes an interesting article giving the details of ex-Senator Camden's big railroad enterprise, particularly the West Virginia and Pittsburgh scheme, which is one of the most important ventures in the history of the developement of West Virginia. The Sentinel says:

It is learned through reliable sources that Senator Camden, with other West Virginians, has formed a syndicate and completed the purchase of an immense iron ore territory on Potts creek, near Covington, Va., said to be the most extensive iron ore field in that part of Virginia. It is reported to embrace from 60,000 to 70,000 acres, covering continous iron ore beds for over twenty-five miles in length, on both sides of Potts creek valley. This means the immediate extension of the West Virginia & Pittsburgh railroad from its southern terminus on Williams river, a branch of the Gauley, to a connection with the C. & O. road at Covington, the junction of Potts creek with Jackson's river, a distance of about sixty miles and furnishing through the West Virginia & Pittsburgh railroad a direct line of road from Covington to Fairmont, and thence through its connection with the B. & O. roads to Pittsburgh and Wheeling, reaching Pittsburgh down the valley of the Monongahela by the Fairmont and Morgantown branch of the B. & O. road and its connections, the short gap to connect the Morgantown branch with the B. & O.'s line near Fairchance, being already in course of construction, to be completed next summer.

MUCH ACCOMPLISHED.

Mr. Camden is always reticent about his plans, and is slow to communicate what he has in contemplation, until his combinations are well digested and the work under way; in this way he has accomplished within a short space of time without attracting much attention to himself a remarkable amount of railroad developement in West Virginia. This part of the Camden system of roads, extending up the valley of the Monongahela and through to Covington, is destined to be the most important and richest road in the State, embracing the Monongahela River road, from Fairmont to Clarksburg, and the West Virginia and Pittsburg railroad, commencing at Clarksburg and extending southward by way of Weston, Braxton C. H., to Gauley river, and thence to Covington, both roads being controlled by President Camden in the same interests, and forming part of the same through line.

The road from Fairmont to Clarksburg runs along the face of a nine foot vein of coal continuously for over thirty miles, a large amount of the coal being owned by a company formed in the interest of the railroad, of which Mr. Camden is also President, and which has now in operation the finest coal and coke plants in the State. The coal is of a very superior quality, both for coke and fuel purposes. The success of the developement is attracting much attention, large purchases in the same region having since been made by Senator Davis, Elkins, Senator Don Cameron and others.

UP THE VALLEY.

From Clarksburg the West Virginia & Pittsburgh road extends up the valley of the Monongahela by way of Weston and Braxton C. H. to Gauley and Williams river, where it reaches the immense timber and coal property purchased by Senator Camden and conveyed to the railroad company as a basis for building the road. The immense property owned by the West Virginia & Pittsburg road at this point compromises 135,000 acres of the finest timber in the State, and also covers at least 100,000 acres of the fine veins of cooking coal found on the New river. This property reaches to within about sixty miles of Covington, and the extension now proposed to be made by this road to that point in combination with the rich iron ore fields of Virginia with the immense coal field and timber lands already controlled by the company brings together the most valuable elements for railroad traffic possible to be combined in a line of road of the same length.

The roads outlined above are completed facts from Fairmont south, to Clarksburg, Weston and Braxton C. H., and under contract and now being graded from Braxton to William's river, leaving only about sixty miles on the south end to be built to reach Covington, and as the West Virginia & Pittsburgh road has built and laid over one hundred miles of railroad track in the past year, it is only reasonable to expect to see this line pushed through before the end of the coming year, when the long agitated question of connecting the iron ore region of Virginia with Pittsburgh by a railroad through West Virginia, will have been solved, and in operation almost before it was generally known to be in contemplation.

WILL OPEN UNTOLD WEALTH.

The great value of this part of the Camden system of roads, to the interest of West Virginia, cannot well be over-estimated. They follow the line of the Pittsburgh coal measures from the Pennsylvania line through West Virginia, and will open up and develop the heart of the mineral and timber sections of the State. The Williams river coal field is the nearest coal to the Virginia iron furnaces, and also the nearest coal to the Virginia tidewater by the C. & O. road. The road will also pass through the large iron ore district of Pocahontas county, and bring the ore of that district; and the coal, coke and lime stone all within twenty miles of each other.

By reference to a map it will be seen that from Covington to Pittsburgh by the Camden roads and the Baltimore & Ohio roads from Fairmont down the Monongahela river is almost a straight line, reducing the difference between Virginia and Pocahontas county ore fields to Pittsburgh and Wheeling at least two hundred miles—or to the shortest possible minimum of distance.

Taken altogether it is a most important enterprise, and its early completion is no doubt assured.

A Co-Partnership.

The undersigned have this day formed a co-partnership for the purpose of practicing law in the various Courts of Pocahontas and adjoining Counties and the Supreme Court of Appeals of this State, under the firm name and style of Moore & McNeil.

They offer their professional services to the public and promise faithful and prompt attention to all business entrusted to their hands. Arrangements will at once be made by which one member of the firm will be at their office in Huntersville, all the while, ready to give immediate attention to parties calling or communicating through the mails.

C. F. MOORE,
N. C. MCNEIL.

January, 1st, 1891.

NOTICE.

Owing to a change in our firm Feb. 1st, '91, all persons indebted to us either by bond or acc't must pay up by that time. We mean business and it will pay you to settle at once.

Respectfully,
HEROLD & MOORE,
Frost, W. Va.

Order of Publication.

At rules held in the Circuit Court Clerk's Office of Pocahontas County, West Virginia, on the first Monday in December, 1890.

Leven Wanless vs John F. Wanless & others } In Chancery.

The object of this suit is to obtain a decree for the sale of the lands of which Jas. Wanless died seized and possessed, and a division of the proceeds among his heirs at law, and it appearing by affidavit filed, that Thomas Hatton and Betsy his wife, —— Veris and Zeda his wife and George P. Wanless, are non residents of the State of West Virginia, it is ordered that they do appear here within one month after the first publication of this order, and do what is necessary to protect their interest in this suit.

Teste,
JOHN J. BEARD, Cl'k.
Skeen p. q.
Decbr. 4th—4 w

Printers fee, $7.40

Order of Publication.

At rules held in the Circuit Court Clerk's Office of Pocahontas County, West Virginia, on the first Monday in December, 1890.

Rhoda E. Crigger Pl'ff. vs. In Chy. H. F. Crigger Def't.

The object of this suit is to obtain a divorce from the bonds of matrimony and to be awarded the custody of the child, James A. Crigger, and it appearing by affidavit filed that diligence has been used on behalf of plaintiff to ascertain in what County the said H. F. Crigger resides without effect, and from the best information she can obtain, the said H. F. Crigger is not a resident of the State of West Virginia. It is ordered that said Crigger appear here within one month after the first publication of this order and do what is necessary to protect his interest in the suit.

Teste,
JOHN J. BEARD, Clerk.

Rucker p. q.
Dec. 4-4 w

Printers fee $7.58.

Notice To Take Depositions.

To H. F. Crigger, Esq.:

Take notice that on the 9th day of January A. D., 1891, between the hours of six o'clock, A. M., and six o'clock, P. M., at the law office of H. S. Rucker, in the town of Huntersville, Pocahontas County, West Virginia, I will take the depositions of John A. Moran and others, to be read as evidence in my behalf, in a certain suit in Chancery now pending in the Circuit Court of the County of Pocahontas, State of West Virginia, in which I am Plaintiff, and you are Defendant.

If from any cause the taking of said depositions shall not be commenced or completed on the day aforesaid, the same shall be continued from day to day, or from time to time, at the same place and between the same hours, until the same shall be completed.

Respectfully,
RHODA E. CRIGGER.
By Counsel.

H. S. Rucker, Sol.
Dec 4-4 t
Printers fee $7.78.

Pocahontas Times.

JOHN E. CAMPBELL,
EDITOR AND PROPRIETOR.

Entered at the Post-office at Huntersville, W. Va., as second class matter.

ADVERTISING RATES.

	1 m.	3 m.	6 m.	1 yr.
One inch	$ 1 00	$ 2 00	$ 3 00	$ 5 00
Three in.	2 00	4 00	6 00	10 00
Qr. column	3 00	6 00	10 00	17 00
Half col'n	6 00	12 00	20 00	30 00
One col'n	10 00	20 00	30 00	50 00

Reading notices, not exceeding five lines, twenty-five cents for each insertion, and five cents a line for each additional line.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION.

One copy, 1 yr., $1.00 in advance; after 6 months, $1.25; after 12 months, $1.50.
These terms will be strictly complied with.

Huntersville, W. Va.

January 8, 1891.

Continued from first page.

whip me, an' I tells her, saays I, 'I wouldn't hev yer ef somebody 'd gin me a dozen like yer, but,' saays I 'I'll let the preacher do up the job jist ter gin yer a gude soun' thrashin', an' larn ye a leettle sense;' an' naw I wants 'er jest ter blaze away" —turning to his bride—"Git, do yer. heer! git yer caw-hide, I'm wait'n fer yer." He stood posed for battle.

"A strange, strange case," muffled the minister with a dubious shake of the head.

"Va'y qua' endade, va'y qua' sa'; something wrong sa'" chimed in Jade Carr.

Lor' breas dis po' chiles' sole; sumpins up sush. Missy wha' de mattah? Lor' breas dis chile. Ole Nancy neber seed setch afo' in her bo'n days," chorussed the old cook.

"Golly, I's gwine to git out'n heah, if dis niggah wants any hide lef' on hisse'f" rang in "Wooly Head" as he made for the door.

"Dy'er heer? I'm in fer it naw," bleated Jack again while rolling up his sleeves.

"Jack, my boy, I bought the whip for our our buggy, and I got you a pound of candy, and a new hat, and a new pair of trousers—I was just joking dear," said Mrs. Jack Mace, (nee Miss Alicia Tompkins) pleadingly as she put her hand on Jack's shoulder,—"Yes, I was just joking."

"Haa" said Jack with a dupish grin, "well carnfunt it, I ain't a keer'd"

He Numbered His Children.

"Do you not find in Tennessee many queer Christian names?" a gentleman asked a friend who had just returned from a visit among the hills.

"Yes, for Christian names—or rather in this case, given names, for some of them are decidedly unchristian—have ever been of interest to me. I found just this side of Bear Wallow a young fellow named Longdistilled Peterson, and a little further on I fell in with a gentleman named Allwood Jones. Mr. Allwood Jones was a circuit rider, he informed me, and he asked me to stop at a small log church and hear him preach. I did so, and must say that Allwood's sermon was more than a yard wide. One afternoon I stopped at a house and addressed a young fellow who sat on the fence:

"'Who lives here?'

"'We do.'

"'Yes, but who are "we?"'

"'Pap, mar an' the rest of us.'

"Just then a man came out, and as he approached, said, 'Git down [illegible] Four [illegible] stranger,' ad[illegible] 'wont you git down?' As I was in much need of rest I dismounted. The man yelled, 'Come here, Betsek, an' take the stranger's hoss.'

"I was conducted into the house, and in that cordial manner the peculiar social property of southern backwoods-men was urged to make myself at home. My host's name was Beasely and was kin to old Ham Bledsoe what lives in middle Tennessy near Drake's creek summers.' Mrs. Bledsoe moved a lot of clothes which she had hung in front of the fire, kicked a cat, spanked with a shovel an enormous brindle dog, and told me to feel easy, for she would get a snack to eat after a while. I had never seen so many children belonging to one family. Look which way I might I caught sight of dirty faces and tow heads.

"'You have quite a family,' I said to Mr. Beasely.

"'Ruther, but we live in er big neighborhood, whar we've all got room.'

"'I should think that you would have found some trouble in selecting names for all your children.'

"'I didn't, though. I know that a great many folks have had trouble in that way, an' I was determined to steer cl'ar uv it, so I 'dopted a rule; an' when the fust chile was born we called him One. The next was named Two, the next Three, an' so on. W'y it worked like a charm, and we didn't have a bit uv trouble. I would advise ever'body to 'dopt the rule. One is married to a sorter slouch uv a woman and lives down yan on the branch. Two is a hoss trader. All the rest air at home. Three thar,' turning to a blushing girl, 'is old anuff to git married. Eight don't stand so clost to the fire; you'll scorch yer britches. Mur make Nine an' Eleven behave thorselves. Twelve, go on now an' rock the cradle, fur don't you hear Sixteen cryin'?'

"Yes, it was a very large family, and I don't know how Mr. Beasely could have managed had he not adopted the numerical system."

Polly Made A Match.

"A parrot is usually regarded, I know, as a very mischevious, meddlesome bird, and all the stories are of their interference and trouble making, but I have always believed that I owe my life's happiness to one of them," remarked Mr. M. C——, of this place, a day or two ago to a friend. The story being entreated Mr. C—— continued:

"I was the most bashful youth you ever saw, the very shyest imaginable, especially where ladies were concerned. I was fond of their society, enjoying it so that I sought it as often as I could, and yet at the same time in a perfect agony of bashfulness if required to answer the simplest question or to express an opinion on any subject, while to be asked to button a glove or any such little service would throw me into such a state of nervous excitement that I usually ended in making an awkward dunce of myself.

"I visited at one house where the girls, or rather, two of them, romping, high spirited misses, took the keenest deliget in playing upon this bashfulness of mine; but, secretly adoring the other sister—the eldest —I bore this patiently, for, while she could not always refrain from laughing at her sister's pranks, and the confusion they threw me into, she herself never teased me.

"But to get to Miss Polly. She was a green bird with a yellow head and a wicked eye and a habit of walking in the flower garden, where in a little summer house fitted up as a parlor the girls were fond of entertaining their company during the pleasant months. This bird was sitting one day on a trellis near by, when in a state of the greatest excitement I came to this summer parlor, and meeting a servant sent Miss Nellie word to please meet me there. I had heard that a rival had appeared on the scene and that it was thought that the girl I had loved so long in silence was favoring the new [illegible], but I had made up my mind to find out the truth of the report by speaking at last in my own cause.

"I had fully determined in doing this, which seemed an easy task, till I caught sight of her sweet face as she advanced toward me, then my courage fled and in abject terror I waited for her. I stammered out some foolish speech intended for an apology and sat looking at her dismayed to see how unusually quiet and depressed she seemed, while Polly, walking up and down the trellis, watched us both suspiciously. At last just as I decided to put it off, as I had decided a hundred times before, that parrot paused in her strutting and, leaning over, urged, 'Kiss her! kiss her, quick! you goose!' My heart stopped beating and I scarcely dared steal a glance at Miss Nellie, but when I did she was blushing so divinely, her lips were so tempting and—well, there was a look in her eyes that told me a delicious secret; so, with sudden courage, I leaned forward and with a 'May I, Nell?' followed Poll's sage advice.

"Yes, my wife's name is Nellie, and Poll, now gone the way of all flesh, now stands upon our mantel beautifully stuffed and prized most highly. In all probability I would have allowed the tresure I coveted to slip through my fingers had she not helped me out, for my wife has since told me she had just decided it was lost time to continue to love a man so bashful that he would not take his own, and that she would try and like the other fellow."

A Flemish Legend.

The Flemish people of Belgium and Holland are a simple and slow-going race, but are by no means without a sense of humor. They have an imaginary character—La Guerliche they call him—of whom they tell all manner of stories; a bantering, boastful old fellow, who speaks in parables and proverbs, but often to the point. He is always very ready in his replies, as the following story of his wisdom illustrates:

On a certain occasion the King of the Netherlands visited his faithful subjects of Flanders. On his way through the country he passed through the country he passed what he declared was the finest farm he had ever seen; and within but a step he came across the most beautiful windmill that had ever met his gaze.

"Whose mill is that?" the king asked.

"It is the miller La Guerliche's mill, sire."

"And whose farm is that?"

"It belongs to the bailiff Carefree, sire."

"Carefree, eh! Well he must be a happier man than I am. Let word be sent to him at once that I shall give him audience to-morrow, in order to put three questions to him: first, how much the moon weighs; second, how much his king is worth, and third, what I am thinking. If he answers any one of these questions wrong he will be hanged."

Bailiff Carefree was in despair when he heard this summons from the king, but La Guerliche offered to take his place before the king on condition that he, Carefree, should renounce his claim to the hand of Trinette, who was beloved of both.

Carefree accepted the terms, and next day La Guerliche appeared before the king.

"Well, well," said the monarch fiercely, and can you tell me how much the moon weighs?"

"Exactly a hundred weight," said La Guerliche.

"How do you know that?"

"Because it consists of four quarters."

"That's a fact," said the king. "Now tell me what you estimate my value at."

"Twenty-nine silver pieces."

"What! [illegible], what do you mean?"

"Ah, sire, our Master was sold for thirty pieces, and as a good Christian. I should have to rate you a little lower."

"Um—very well," said the king. "And now, perhaps you can tell me what I think?"

"Precisely, sire. You think I am Bailiff Carefree."

"Yes."

"Well, I am not. I'm LaGuerliche!"

"I appoint you my prime minister on the spot!" said the king, with great enthusiasm.

"Bub!" he called at the market yesterday morning after he had disposed of all of his potatoes, "is there any toy store near here?"

"Yes, sir."

"Just show me the way, will you? I've got to buy a few things for Christmas."

"Got children?"

"Yes."

"Got a boy as big as me?"

"Just about your age."

"What are you going to buy him for Santa Claus?"

"I dunno yet. I was thinking I'd git some sort of toy."

"Say, lemme give you a bit of advice," said the lad, as they walked along together. "Let toys alone. Steam engines are dangerous, toy mules won't kick for shucks, and Christmas jack knives fall to pieces in week. If you've got a boy, and you want to tickle him most to death, I'll sell you my roller skates for half prices, 'cause we aint got no place for skating this winter, and I want to sell 'em and spend it all in cocoanut candy."

SUBSCRIBE

• FOR THE—

POCAHONTAS TIMES,

Every man in the County should take it, and patronize home industry. It sustains your rights, and works for the advancement of your county, which no city paper will do. It gives you the news from all parts of the county, which you could not get otherwise. It furnishes matters of interest to the Merchant, Farmer and Mechanic. It keeps you posted, and gives you information, on all general news, and its sections and Miscellany are fit for all ages.

TERM OF SUBSCRIPTION.

One year in advance	$1.00
If not paid within 6 months	1.25
And at the end of the year	1.50

AND IF YOU NEED

Letter Heads, Note Heads, Bill Heads, Envelopes, Drug Envelopes, Tags, Business Cards, Official Blanks, Blank Bonds, Posters, Briefs for the Court of Appeals etc.

GET THEM AT "THE TIMES"

JOB OFFICE,

[P]OCAHONTAS TIMES.

JOHN E. CAMPBELL, EDITOR AND PROPRIETOR. Huntersville, West Virginia, Thursday, January 22, 1891. Terms of Subscription, $1.00 PER YEAR IN ADVANCE. No. 25.

[Di]rectory of Pocahontas County.

[Cir]cuit Court, A. N. Campbell.
[Pros.] Attorney, L. M. McClintic.
M. J. McNeel.
[Sher]iff, L. W. Herold.
[Clerk] & Co. Courts, J. J. Beard.
C. O. Arbogast.
[...]n, C. E. Beard. S. B. Hannah. G. P. Moore.
[...]e, Geo. Baxter

[T]HE COURTS.

[Circuit C]ourt convenes on the first [...] April, 3rd Monday in June [...]nday in October.
[County] Court convenes on the 1st [...] January, March, October [...] Tuesday in July. July is [...]

The Cloud Was Past.

BY DR. ISAAC HUNT.

Lovers they had been in the old dead days, when Maggie Blaine was a merry, red-checked lass, and Oliver Downs was an awkward, sun browned youth, guiding the plow on his father's farm, or carrying home Maggie's pails of milk through the cool shadows, as they slanted along the pasture land of a summer eve.

They had been lovers then in the shy, unspoken manner of country youth and maid, and their neighbors were won't to smile as they saw the dark face of Oliver and the blooming one of Maggie in the soft glow of the twilight.

It would be a match they said; and so one day the Downs farm and the Blaine farm would become one—for the lands adjoined, and Oliver was an only child as well as Maggie.

But strangers from the city not far away drifted into the Downs farm house for a few weeks of summer, and when they had gone Oliver forgot to whistle as he followed his oxen, and even sometimes forgot to go to the pasture lot to carry home Maggie's pails of milk.

And then, when the harvest was over, and autumn had come, he suddenly turned his back on the farm, and with an almost tearful good by to Maggie, and a promise to write often, to remember her always, and to return some day, the strong sinewed young farmer started out, sure that he could make a mark on some part of the world which would last—ah, so we dream when we are young!—longer than did the furrows made by his plow in his father's land.

The young farmers who had admired Maggie before, then sought her, glad of Olive'r absence; but the girl, grown silent and more sad, would have none of them, and it was said about her that her heart had gone afar with Oliver Downs.

If that was true, how weary must that young heart have grown in the first five years that followed his departure, for he drifted hither and theither, to the north and the south, the east and the west, often sick unto death with discouragement, yet never turning his face toward his home, rarely writing.

He would not fail he must succeed! Better death by the wayside than to go back and own that his strong right hand was empty—that he had dreamed in vain.

Then he wrote no more; and but for Maggie's faith in his return one day, and her brave, sunny words to the farmer and his wife, they would have deemed him dead.

Maggie's father suddenly lost his health, and she and her mother conceived the idea of receiving a few boarders for the summer to fill the great vacant chambers of the farm-house, and add to their income.

Time went on, and the Blaine farm became a pleasant thought to city people who had seen it. They returned there year after year, bringing with them an air of cities, which acted upon the girl

She grew—by contact with polished women of the world, who sought her simple home to regain roses lost in city revels, or perchance to [...] study—a [...] lipped, stately, self-reliant woman, to whom clear sight gold was gold, and dross was dross.

But no man could pass with her the boundary line between love and friendship.

So, after almost nine years, and then without a line to tell of his coming, without any sort of warning, Oliver Downs walked up the steps of the veranda and stood—more pallid of cheek, more clear of eye, more firm but sad of lip—before her.

"Maggie," he said, a slight falter in his tones as he put out his hand to the woman whom he had left a girl—"Maggie, have you quite forgotten me?"

A low cry of delight cut across Maggie's incoherent murmur, and a slight figure darted between them.

A girl's jewelled hand was placed in Oliver's palm, and a fresh, musical voice rang out joyously:

"I have not forgotten you, Mr. Downs! But who would think of seeing you here—you whom we last saw in San Remo a year ago? I—I am so glad!"

Maggie drew back—still, cold, white as marble. Had she loved him all these years, to realize her folly when another woman's voice faltered and broke in gladness at sight of his face? This fair, flower-faced stranger, who was boarding for a summer at the farm—was it because her face was so sweet and her gray eyes like stars for long years no line of him had come to the girl watching and waiting in love and faith?

He said some courtly words to Miss Desbrow, then once more his hand was extended to Maggie.

"You have not forgotten?" he said again, as she gave a cold but steady hand to his clasp.

And she smiled a little as she answered:

"You have changed."

"And you?" he questioned, half sadly, his eyes upon her.

Again the slight smile touched her lips.

"The years have marked me—yes," she replied, steadily. "I am more changed than even you.

He turned away with a quick breath, which might have been a sigh! and presently her parents came out, and she heard them ask the question which she had not dared put into words herself—what had he been doing since he went away, and on what soil had he left footprints?

He replied, with a smiling lip but a darkened eye, that he had done all things that were hard, and left no footprints save on sand.

In the hush of later evening, Miss Desbrow glided up to Maggie where she sat apart, and told her many things concerning Oliver Downs which she did not know.

He had saved the life of Miss Desbrow's mother one year before, in San Remo, by risking his own when a great hotel in which they were was burned. Mr. Desbrow had found him poor, unemployed, ambitious. He took Oliver as a clerk at first; but three months later made him a partner. And now there was a smooth path before the young man, junior partner in a wholesale silk house.

"And he loves her," thought Maggie, leaving the sweet face near her own with eyes that pain made dim; "he loves her, and all these years I have dreamed—dreamed—dreamed! It would be easier to die than waken now!"

She went early to her room, and there knelt lowly—lowly, with her face concealed, praying as we only pray when [...] death; praying that she might not [...] against her lonely lot, [...] to hate him whom now she loved, for all the wasted years of her trust and her love—not wish evil to the girl who unconsciously had robbed her; prayed while the night closed down, and the clock struck harshly every passing hour; prayed until a strange sound, like the rush of wild waters, stole over her dulled senses, and cries from distant rooms of the old farm-house rang shrilly out; then, numbled, dulled to all save her own agony she arose slowly to her feet groped her way to the door, opened it, and caught the scorching breath of flames that were coiling like maddened serpents in the hall. The farm-house was on fire!

As she paused in the doorway a woman flew along the hall, wringing her hands and screaming like a frenzied creature:

"My daughter! my Jennie! my child! I cannot wake her! Save my child—my child!"

Maggie lost the dulled feeling in an instant; into her heart crept that for which her lips had prayed to God—the greatness to not envy Jennie Desbrow a love for which her own heart hungered.

"I will save her! Hush! I will save her!" she cried.

And she darted through the coiling, circling flame tongues, and threw herself fiercely against the door of Jennie's room, which was quite near.

Again and again she flung all her weight against the scorched panels, before the lock gave way, and then she staggered into a room which was full of dusky smoke clouds. She grooped her way to the bed. Jennie lay there, unconscious, suffocating in the smoke.

With untrembling hands she folded the blanket about the girl, lifted her in arms which seemed to have nerves of iron, and turned to the door.

How she won her way through fire and smoke she never knew; nor did she know that her hands and face were burned and blackened, until afterwards.

As she staggered across the threshold, and felt the soft air of the night on her parched lips, a man dashed toward her from a path which made a short cut to the Downs farm-house; other hands relieved her of her burden, but his were put out, his arms drew her into a close embrace, and held her to a heart that was beating like a war drum.

"Maggie—you are safe!"

In the red glare that burst from a window just then, she saw the pale face of Oliver Downs bent over her.

"She is safe," she said, hoarsely. "I saved her for you."

"For me?" he echoed, in surprise. "Ah, Maggie, you do not know what you say! My love, my little sweetheart of the old days, I have come back for you, as once I promised. Are you truly changed? Is your warm heart cold to me now? If you knew why I did not write, why I did not come before, you would be kinder to me now. My darling, I have striven vainly and despaired often. But when at last fortune smiled on me, I came—to remind you of your promise and ask you to share all with me. Maggie, my dear one, you have not forgotten the dear old days, the sweet love dream? Tell me you have not, Maggie!"

"I have not," she answered, softly. "But I thought to-night that it was but a dream. Forgive me, dear!"

And the cloud was past.

Father (looking over the paper): More bad news! [...] has been discovered in Central Africa."

Mother: "What is that to us?"

Father: "What is that to us? It means that every one of our eight children will have to have a new and revised edition of Highprice's Geogrophy."

Sleeping With a Baby.

The free from care and easy taking old bachelor who, in his momentary lapse of wisdom, contemplates matrimony, should at the same time reflect on the remote but contingent possibility of his having to some time sleep with a baby, should he marry. Years of experience of martyrdom of this kind make me feel it to be my duty to set forth the misery arising from a contingency of this kind.

The baby, if he happens to be a lusty little fellow of eight or ten months, will decline to stay covered, and will also decline to allow you to keep yourself covered. He indicates his wishes in this direction by keeping his little pink heels going all night, a good part of the time on your back.

He will also insist in lying "crosswise," "endwise," "catacornered," "bias," or in any other position but that which will give you a few inches of room in the bed or a few minutes' sleep. His infantile needs will begin to manifest themselves about 1 o'clock in the morning, at which witching hour you go blundering around in the dark for a drink of water.

He will howl steadily and cheerfully from 2 to 3 o'clock, and will kick you furiously between the shoulder blades with every howl. It will not be of any use for you to pat him tenderly, and sing out, "There, there." He is right there, and knows it, and intends that you shall know it.

It is of no use to say coaxingly: "What does papa's baby want?" Papa's baby doesn't want anything but to howl, and he is gratifying that amiable desire to the utmost. It is of no use to add to your judgment day list of enormities by swearing. And if your wife has been calmly passive through it all she will develop an amazing degree of spirit if you dare lay the weight of your finger in anger on that "poor dear innocent darling [...]." He will squirm all night as though he were first cousin to an angleworm. He will journey around all over the bed, both under and on top of the coverings.

You are no sooner asleep than one of his moist little heels is planted firmly in your nose or in your mouth, and later on, with childhood's scorn of decency and decorum, he will sit astride of your neck, and grow green and purple with rage when gently made to sit elsewhere. Should he fall out of bed and yell loud enough to be heard all over your ward, your wife will say that she firmly believes that you pushed him out, and that you are not fit to be a father anyhow. An animated dialogue of purely personal and private nature will follow this remark.

But when the [...] little chap finally "snuggles up" to you, and goes to sleep with one of his velvety little cheeks close to your own, and one of his warm soft arms around your neck, you find your heart growing very soft and tender toward him and you would single handed wage war against a [...] or lay down your life for the love of him.

Pocahontas Times.

JOHN E. CAMPBELL,
EDITOR AND PROPRIETOR.

Entered at the Post-office at Huntersville, W. Va., as second class matter.

ADVERTISING RATES.

[illegible]

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION.

One copy, 1 yr., $1.00 in advance; after 6 months, $1.25; after 12 months, $1.50.

These terms will be strictly complied with.

Huntersville, W. Va.

January 22, 1891.

[illegible] the Bill.

The one supreme duty of the hour for Democrats is to prevent the passage of the Force bill. By an unexpected turn of events it has raised its ugly head in the Senate again, and is squirming, alive.

For the seven weeks that remain before the end of the Fifty-first Congress the responsibility that rests upon the Democracy of the Senate is tremendous.

If this bill passes the Senate it will be signed by the president. [illegible]

[illegible]

Will be Greatly Missed.

The announcement that Capt. George H. Moffett, editorial writer on the Globe, is soon to leave the city and take up his residence in Portland, Ore., will be received with regret not only among newspaper men, with whom he is very popular, but also in business and social circles as well. Capt. Moffett has been connected with the Globe ever since Lewis Baker assumed its management, the two being old-time friends in Virginia. As a writer Capt. Moffett has made many friends for the paper with which he has been connected, and while he has often taken decided grounds on any political or local movement his opinions have been expressed in such a clear and forcible manner, and presented with such logic, that they have carried great weight. And yet he has so avoided personalities and invective that when the matter under discussion had passed, there was left no bitter feelings against the writer, even by those who held to different opinions. It was this same spirit which made the captain so popular among business men, in the chamber of commerce and other public bodies of which he was an honored member. In social circles and at the banquet table he has also been cordially welcomed, and at no place have his words been better received as at the informal fortnightly meetings of the Twilight club. Capt. Moffett has purchased an interest in the Evening Telegram, of Portland, Ore., and will take up his new duties as general manager on Feb. 1. His family will accompany him, and he makes the change for business reasons and in the interests of better [illegible] for himself and family.—Minneapolis Tribune.

Announcement.

The Entertainment, which Hillsboro Academy had intended giving on Dec. 25th, was postponed until the 30th of present month. A cordial invitation is still extended, to the public to attend these exercises. This school will be reorganized on the 2nd of Feb., and continue a term of five months. New classes will be begun in Arithmetic, Geography, History, Physiology, Algebra, Book Keeping, Eng. Literature, Physical Geo., Philosophy, Surveying &c.

Parties wishing to attend during the 2nd term will do well to enter at the beginning. Those desiring to compete for medals and prizes still have an opportunity to join the contest.

WASHINGTON LETTER.

(From our regular correspondent.)

WASHINGTON, D. C. Jany. 16.—The merry jingle of silver is the music which the Senate has provided for the people to dance to, by the adoption of the free coinage substitute for the Financial bill, which went through in spite of the determined and extraordinary opposition of the administration and the republican leaders in the Senate.

The democratic party has been committed to free coinage, as far as the votes of all the Senators of the party (with one exception—Wilson, of Md.) can do so, while the republican party, of the eastern and middle States, are by the same token committed against it. On this question of finance, the most important in every country, the republicans of the west and northwest, if the votes of their Senators represent their views, and the presumption is that they do, seem to be in accord with the democrats and the Farmers' Alliance, which is a much more powerful factor in this matter than most people believe.

The most sensational feature of the debate which preceded the adoption of the free coinage amendment, was the speech of Senator Ingalls in favor of free coinage. It was more than that; it was a most ingeniously made plea to the Farmers' Alliance legislature of Kansas to re-elect him to the Senate. It was in many respects the best and most brilliant oration ever delivered by Mr. Ingalls, and had he not have allowed his hatred of the South to inveigle him into a defense of the Force bill, which by the way, again has the right of way in the Senate, at its opening, it would undoubtedly have made him many friends in that section, where, as he probably knows, he now has none. As it is, although it was carefully listened to and all of its strong points, and there were many of them, against the monopoly and greed of the growing money power, were applauded in the senate in spite of the efforts of the Senate officials to prevent it, it is regarded as the artificial plea of an office-seeker to obtain the support of members of an organization pledged to oppose his re-election to the Senate, and not as representing his real sentiments. Nevertheless he told his republican colleagues and the republican President, who stands ready, it is believed, to veto free coinage, should the bill get through the House over the unscrupulous opposition of Speaker Reed, some mighty truths about what the people will do in the future, should their wishes be thwarted in this matter. But it was casting pearls to swine. The republican party never paid any attention to the wishes of the people, unless they happened to coincide with those of the bosses of that party.

John Bull must be trying to give the dying republican party a boom. At least one would so suppose from his foolish action in attempting to get the aid of the United States Supreme Court in his controversy with the administration over the Behrings Sea seal fisheries. Mr. Blaine would not have asked for anything better than the latest move of the British Government. It has given him what he has never had before—the united support of the American people. England should have learned from experience that American dignity cannot be trifled with without danger. Already a democrat, Representative Enloe, of Tennessee, has introduced a resolution in the House resenting this action and declaring it to be in derogation of the dignity of the United States, and providing that a copy of the resolution be sent to the British Government. Uncle Sam hasn't much of a navy, but he has lots of dignity, and not even the "queen of the Sea" must dare to rub him the wrong way.

A rumor very pleasant to democrats is circulating here this week, to the effect that ex Representative Perry Belmont may be elected to the Senate as Mr. Evarts' successor. Mr. Belmont's aggressiveness while Chairman of the House committee on Foreign Affairs several years ago proved that he has the capacity of making just the kind of a Senator that the democratic party would like to see sent from the great State of New York.

One republican—Mr. Dawes—joined Senators Berry and Blodgett in a minority report on the Apportionment bill favoring an additional Representative for Arkansas, Minnesota, Missouri and New York.

Senator Hearst is said to be dying at his residence in this city from a cancer in his stomach. His physicians have given up all hope.

Senator Quay's new Force bill providing for the suspension of the writ of habeas corpus and the use of the Army and Navy at the discretion of the President, is regarded as too absurd for serious discussion, and some of his friends say that he introduced it for the purpose of disgusting the country with with the whole subject. It may not have been introduced for that purpose, but that will be the effect.

HOME NEWS

—R. P. McGlaughlin, Esq., was in the city of Frost Monday.

—Mr. Hugh Dever, of Sunset, called to see us Tuesday.

—We learn from Mr. A. W. Moore, of near Sunset, that 65½ inches of snow has fallen the present winter, to date.

—Attorney H. S. Rucker, has already five divorce cases for the April term of the Circuit Court. All white.

—The Pittsburg and W. Va. Southern R. R. will pass through Huntersville.

—Mess. Albert and Gilbert Sharp, have gone to Buckhannon, Va., to work at the carpenter business.

—Huntersville will have a railroad inside of two years. Mark this prediction.

—Options are being taken on farms, and other land being bought by the Pittsburg and W. Va. Southern R. R. Company at Edray, Marlinton and Huntersville.

—Talk about your booming towns Old Pocahontas will beat them all in a few years. She has timber coal and mountains of iron which speaks for her.

—Mr. J. H. Patterson, of Green Bank, late elected Clerk of the Circuit Court, resumed his duties in said office last week.

—Mr. H. Nathan and Miss Neda B. Shearer, were married at Academy Tuesday morning, 20th inst. THE TIMES extends congratulations and best wishes for their future happiness and prosperity.

—After we get our new office in the spring, we hope to be able to add a couple of new presses; a cylinder newspaper and Gordon jobber.

—The 4th Quarterly Meeting for Huntersville circuit, M. E. Church, South, will be held at Huntersville, Sunday and Monday, February 1—2. It is desired that all the officials of the circuit be present at the conference, on Monday, 12 m. Other announcements to be made next week.

—The reception held by Gov. Fleming at Charleston on the 8th of this month was a most brilliant affair and has been favorably spoken of by the State press. Attorney Geo. W. McClintic, of that city, son of Mr. Wm. T. McClintic, of Buckeye and brother of Attorney L. M. McClintic, of this place was present and assisted in receiving the guests.

—We are going to make THE TIMES one of the best County papers in the State. We have added to our subscription list over three hundred new subscribers since we have had control and it is daily growing. All we want, to give you a good paper is the patronage and we are receiving it liberally. True, our advertising patronage is small, but it is because our County is without a railroad and its resources undeveloped, which great obstacle will be overcome in a year or two, and then we will have a county second to none in the State. Ere long, grand will be the name of our heretofore almost unknown mountain County of old Pocahontas.

—Our streets Tuesday were the scene of the most disgraceful carryings on we have ever seen in any [illegible] community, except at this place, at times. The beastly drunkenness, cursing, swearing and general heathen rowdyism capped the climax. There was one knock down, but unfortunately the principal participant wasn't seriously hurt. We have one of the best jails in the State, which cost the County over $4,000 and the [illegible] [illegible] is money wasted, as an such [illegible] [illegible] can be found to [illegible] [illegible] the great architecture and excellent job of plastering on the aforesaid building; also that S. L. Brown, Esq., jailor, keeps an excellent table attached, and it is extremely annoying to these gentlemen who so earnestly request by word and deed an escort to the above named inn, that no officer can be had. We would suggest that a play card, something like this be tacked to the aforenamed beautiful limestone building, "No boarders wanted. Our doors are not open to transgressers; only for lack of a competent porter."

—It would be a good idea to report some of the postmasters of this County to the Post Office Department, and especially the one at this place, for allowing the mails to depart before the schedule time. The Warm Springs and the Lewisburg mails are due at this place at 12 m. and depart at 1 p. m., but more frequently Depart before 12:30 p. m., which is extremely annoying to parties wishing to answer a letter by same mail, or country people coming in town about 12 o'clock and finding the mails gone. THE TIMES should go out in Thursdays mails, and would, always, if they were run on schedule time, but as they are not, and very frequently leave 15 or 20 minutes after arrival, consequently it is some times a day late. We had better have no mails at all than to have them conducted the way they have been for several months past. When you write a letter and put it the office you have no assurance of its ever reaching its destination, or if it does it too frequently shows signs of having been tampered with. We have known in the past couple of weeks of more than one letter showing signs of having been tampered with, and it is just a few days ago that we received a letter with the end burnt open, but we suppose, fortunately for us it was a check on the inside instead of money. We dont pretend to say where it is but there is something radically wrong somewhere, which should be looked into by the officials.

Preaching Notice.

Services at Sunset, the fourth Sabbath of January at 11, a. m.

Services at Huntersville at night, same Sabbath.

W. T. P.

Academy Items.

Mr. H. S. Ruckr, of Huntersville, was in town last week.

Mr. Walter Shearer, of Williams River, spent Monday night with his sisters.

Mr. Clark Mann and daughter, of Edray and Miss Olive Overholt, of Buckeye, were the guests of Mr. W. H. Overholt, Thursday night.

Miss Eliza Kee, of Marlinton, has enrolled as a pupil of the H. T. School and L. J. R. Dysard, of Driftwood of the M. & F. Academy.

Mr. Joseph McNeel and wife and Miss Lillie Curry, who were visiting relative at Huntersville, have returned home.

Mr. Tom Williams, of Healing Springs, Va., is spending a few days with his sister Mrs. J. W. Bolton.

Mrs. Sallie Alstrop is very ill at this time. Also Mrs. W. W. Byrd.

Mr. Gilbert Sharp and Mr. White who were visiting relatives and at thes place have returned home.

ADONIS.

Dunmore Doings.

Our school is flourishing under the management of Squire Cook. The Squire is well calculated to learn the young shoot how to idea.

We now have a literary organization which meets every Friday night.

Mrs. Isaac Moore, Mrs. Jacob Taylor and Mrs. Renick Kerr who are on the sick list and who were very sick, we are glad to say are improving.

Born to Renick Kerr, Esq., and wife a boy.

Capt. E. A. Smith, is home for a few days.

Rev. John A. Taylor has gone to Randolph.

No mail across Cheat Mountain yet.

Miss Lowe and Austie Ligon were in town a few days last week.

The Dunmore Farmers' Alliance Mercantile Association met Saturday the 17th and elected Dr. J. P. [illegible], Pres., Capt. J. C. Lakin, Vice-Pres., H. M. Moore, Sec., E. N. Moore, Treas., B. F. McGlone, C. B. Swecker, J. B. McCutcheon and H. M. McGlaughlin, were also elected to [illegible] a house for the County and make other arrangements to commence business by the first of April. Any member of the Alliance can take stock in the Store. People all over the Co., are beginning to find out that there is more in the Alliance than they thought for.

[illegible]

P. S.

[illegible] says we will have a R. R. soon. Let her come.

Douthards Creek Items.

Mess. Jas. A. and J. G. Sharp, left a few days ago for Buchanan, Va., where they expect to work at the carpenter trade.

B. Frank White, spent a few days of last week at Frost, on business.

Capt. E. A. Smith, stopped al night at Driscol enroute for his home at Dunmore, from his Lumber Camp on Meadow Creek, where he had been detained by the deep snow.

Miss Minnie McElwee and brother Howard, have gone to Dunmore to attend school, taught by Prof. Chas. Cook.

The Douthard's Creek school taught by Miss Alice McGlaughlin, will close Saturday next, with a "Taffey Pulling" and other appropriate closing exercises.

The boys are now, devoting much of their time to trapping furs, which is said to be fine this season. Mr. H. Lee White has been trying for quite a while to catch a fox: but he says he is not catching it for the fur, but for the (help) meet.

Mr. James H. Doyle, is now running a sled line between Huntersville and Douthard's Creek, leaving Huntersville promptly at about 8 o'clock A. M., and returns same day, daily except Sundays. For further particulars apply to him on Cor. Main and Knapp's Creek Avenue, Huntersville, W. Va.

Very Respectfully,

O. C. CASIONAL.

Edray Items.

When Messrs. Moore & Hannah's Clerk returned to their store on Wednesday morning last, after making a fire, and going to his breakfast, he found the house full of smoke and on instigation found the stove box about burned up and two or three holes burnt through the floor. An absence of ten or fifteen minutes more and the building with its contents would have been destroyed.

Three of the six rafts that started to Ronceverte on the last rise in Greenbrier river had bad luck; one hung on the Bird Mill dam, and two of them lashed together and running after night, were completely wrecked and torn to pieces on the McClure rocks. There were nine men on them, and all escaped safely to land. LESSON, run rafts in daylight and sleep at night—and rest on Sunday.

Kenney and Amos Courtney went to Ronceverte with sleds, for Barlow & Moore this week.

Messrs. Gay & Peters' teams are bringing in lumber to their landing this week at the rate of 6000 feet per day, on sleds, one team of four horses hawling 2700 feet at a load on Bob sleds.

BIG HOG.—Samuel M. Gay, butchered a two year old hog last Thursday that weighed four hundred and eighty-six pounds. LESSON, Keep few hogs and feed well.

Capt. J. W. Marshall was in our town Friday morning. It is reported that he is taking time by the forelock in purchasing land at Marlinton. A boom for Pocahontas is in the near future. The R. R. is the mainspring of action.

B. M. Yeager, Esq., was in our section last week, buying lands—and paying money.

Geo. H. McGlaughlin just now comes into ye correspondents sanctum and says he is done sold out at forty five thousand and is going to skip. Edray can't hold him much longer.

One of our town men has the "boom fever." Can any of your readers prescribe for him, he must be relieved of his cash soon, or his case will be disastrous.

XXX.

Geo. Bancroft, America's greatest historian, died at Washington on the 17th inst.

The infernal Force bill has been taken up again.

The Legislature.

The Legislature met in session last Wednesday and both Houses were organized by the election of the Democratic caucus nominees for the various offices.

Senator J. W. McCreery, of Raleigh, was elected President of the Senate, Holly Armstrong, of Jackson, Clerk, M. Tracy, of Ohio, Sergeant at Arms, and W. M. Dent, of Fayette, Doorkeeper.

Hon. Lewis Bennett, of Lewis, was elected Speaker of the House, Bernard Peyton, of Charleston, Clerk, W. B. Gibbs, of Roane, Sergeant-at-Arms, T. J. Feamster, of Greenbrier, Doorkeeper.

In the caucus of Democratic members held on Tuesday evening the following preamble and resolutions were unanimously adopted:

WHEREAS, The bill known as the "Federal Election Bill" is still pending before the Congress of the United States; and

WHEREAS, We regard it as a measure proposed solely in the interest of the Republican party, and full of menace to the dignity of the ballot in all parts of the country, but specially intended to subvert and retard the social and material development of the South, therefore.

Be it Resolved by the Democratic Members of the Legislature of West Virginia. That we cordially endorse the splendid efforts put forth by our Senators for the defeat of said bill, and that we urge every Representative from this State to exhaust lawful means for securing the defeat of this measure so full of threat to the liberties of our people.

Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be sent to Senators Kenna and Faulkner, and to the Representatives of our State in Congress.

The assistant clerks of the Senate are Will A. Strickler, of Ritchie, B. B. Hardin, of Cabell, and J. W. Williams, of Wayne.

The assistant clerks of the House are W. E. R. Byrne, of Braxton, B. P. Conard, of Webster, and J. M. Scroggin, of Wood.

The House proceeded to work immediately after the reading of the Governor's Message.

The message was an able and exhaustive document, and presented in a business and practical way many valuable recommendations for the guidance of the Legislature in the coming session. It also sets forth the increase of our prosperity during the past decade, during which, on the basis of the Eleventh Census, "the population increased from 618,457 to 762,794, 23.34 per cent., a percentage exceeded by only two of the Southern States. Our railroad mileage has increased 95 per cent. during the same period, and in that time we have also advanced from the seventh to the fourth rank among the coal producing States. This remarkable advancement, our wonderful resources and development should be placed before the world in practical shape, and the Governor recommends the appointment of a commission to prepare a satisfactory exhibit at the World's Fair.

The finances of the State are shown to be in a flourishing condition, the balance in the treasury, October 1, last being $285,793.22, after paying upon temporary loans $63,341.45. Attention is called to the fact that great prudence and economy is nevertheless very necessary since there will be a necessity for increased appropriations, owing to the growth and development of the State.

The Governor calls attention to the important fact that there is no State law requiring State banks to make public periodical statements of their condition, and recommends the passage of such a law.

As to the proposed re-apportionment of the State, the Governor takes the ground that it "be on the basis of the present number of Senators and delegates, or such number not materially in excess thereof as will more nearly secure to each county her just share of representation."

Under the head of "costs in criminal cases," the Governor refers to the Wood county case as an example, showing that there is something radically wrong in our laws on this subject. He shows that over $14,000 has been illegally drawn from the treasury, through false and forged court orders and fraudulent clerk's certificates. Counsel has been employed by the State to recover, so far as possible, the amount stolen. "If justice," says the Governor, "is not defeated by the mere technicalities of the law, convictions in many cases will be secured and possibly a portion of the amount recovered." It will be remembered that in the case of Clerk Clouston at Parkersburg, Judge Boreman quashed the indictment against him on the merest technicality—the fact, among others, that the sum in the indictment was set forth in figures instead of writing. The Governor recommends that the statutes be amended to properly cover these cases of fraud.

The enactment of an election law modeled after the Australian ballot system is earnestly recommended by the Governor, who declares it essential to the preservation of the purity of the ballot. He also recommends that severer penalties be provided for illegal voting, the importation of voters and such gross frauds as necessitated the late gubernatorial contest in this State.

A re-valuation of the wild lands of the State is recommended. Valuable coal, iron, and timber lands are now held by outside parties for speculative purposes, the tax on which is a mere bagatelle, compared to what it should be on the basis of a proper valuation. The enactment of laws that will prevent the entry of forfeited lands upon the assessors' books is also recommended.

The great advancement the State has made in an educational way is shown by statistics from the report of the Superintendent of Free Schools, which, among other things, shows the average daily attendance to have increased in the past 20 years from 55,983 to 121,798. The Irreducible School Fund in 1870 was $229,300; in 1890 it was $[illegible]011.48, and the General School Fund in 1870, $233,139.02, and in 1890, $360,431.21.

The message contains numerous excellent recommendations for the improvement of the various institutions of the State and for the general advancement of the public good, which we have not the space to give.

Pocahontas Times.

JOHN E. CAMPBELL,
EDITOR AND PROPRIETOR.

Entered at the Post-office at Huntersville, W. Va., as second class matter.

ADVERTISING RATES.

	1 m.	3 m.	6 m.	1 yr.
One inch	$ 1 00	$ 2 00	$ 3 00	$ 5 00
Three in.	3 00	4 00	6 00	10 00
Qr. column	3 00	6 00	10 00	17 00
Half col'n	8 00	12 00	20 00	30 00
One col'n	10 00	20 00	30 00	50 00

Reading notices, not exceeding five lines, twenty-five cents for each insertion, and five cents a line for each additional line.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION.

One copy, 1 yr., $1.00 in advance; after 6 months, $1.25; after 12 months, $1.50. These terms will be strictly complied with.

Huntersville. W. Va.

January 22, 1891.

A Little Lame Boy.

About sixty years ago a lame boy, named Erastus, left a humble home in New England, and entered a hardware store in Troy, N. Y. Besides being lame, he was slender and sickly, and his prospects in life seemed anything but promising. He knew little of the sports and pastimes that his companions enjoyed in their childhood; his face, even in the freshest years of life, bore the marks of suffering and care, and his friends pitied him, and said that he was very unfortunate.

But he had a quick, active mind, full of right aspirations, and a heart full of generous impulses. His mind was at York, preparing for usefulness in the future, and fondly dreaming of bright days to come, even in the solitary hours of sickness and suffering.

He did the best he could, though his lot was so circumscribed, and God had a life work, full of honor, for the poor little lame boy.

When he first applied for work in a store, he was so small that the proprietor looked into his earnest face with some surprise and said:

"Why, my boy, what can you do?"

"I can do what I am bid," was the manly answer.

There was the right ring in this reply, and the proprietor recognized it.

"Well, my little fellow," said he, "that is the kind of a boy we want; you can have the place."

That boy was Erastus Corning, the millionaire. The neglected, solitary lame boy made himself so useful to his employers, by his willingness to do "what he was bid," as to secure for himself the highest positions of responsibility and trust.

He became a bank president, a railroad president, canal company president, was three times elected mayor of Albany, was a member of the State Legislature, and for three terms a member of Congress. In 1863 he retired from business, with a fortune estimated at five millions.

The Bible says that "he that humbleth himself shall be exalted," and the boy who would become successful in life must, like this man, begin by showing a willingness to do anything that he is bid. A conceited, hesitating, ever-nice clerk comes to nothing; but the lad who is earnest and resolute, whose aims and purpose are his motive power, who is not to be turned aside from an object in life by false pride, in short, who, in any honorable calling, "is willing to do as he is bid," is almost certain, other things being equal, to rise in reputation, and to be richly rewarded with success.

He was a westerly hustler and his seat mate was a quiet looking gentleman from the East.

"You carry on a manufacturing business, perhaps," said the Westerner.

"Well—yes, I—"

"Use a good deal of coal, eh?"

"Yes, a great deal."

"Ever compare the cost of coal with the cost of natural gas?"

"No."

"Well, sir, do you know that you could move your establishment out here to Ohio, and save thousands of dollars every year just by using natural gas? Why, we use it for heat, power, illumination—everything. Just stop off at Toledo and look into that matter, and I guarantee we'll have you settled there inside of a year."

"I hardly think it would be worth while," answered the Easterner. "Don't think my business would benefit at all by the change."

"You don't know anything about it, my friend," exclaimed the Westerner, with enthusiasm. "Why, I know it would save you money. It couldn't help saving you money. Why, you could produce your—er, see, what do you manufacture?"

"Gas," replied the quiet man, in an ordinary tone of voice

The recent death in Canada of Mrs. Sterling, mother of Charles M. Sterling, who was executed at Yougstown, Ohio, for the murder of Lizzie Grombacher, has unveiled the facts concerning an incident that occurred shortly before his execution. His mother came to Youngstown from Maxwell, Canada, and though he had left home when but a lad, with maternal intuition she recognized him. When brought to his cell Sterling, without the quiver of a muscle, said:

"You are mistaken, madam; I am not your son."

She implored him to recognize her, but he refused, and she returned home half convinced that she was mistaken. To his counsel Sterling said:

"She is my mother, but I could not break her heart by telling her that her son would be hung. Keep it secret until she dies."

Her death caused his attorney, W. S. Anderson, to break the seal of silence.

"It was the most dramatic scene I ever witnessed," said Mr. Anderson. "I have seen all the tragedians of the past quarter of a century, but none that compared to the scene on that occasion. The mother, every line in her face showing the most intense suffering, and her heart nearly broken, while the son, knowing that the truth would kill her, stood like a statue, his face showing the pallor of death, assuring her that she was mistaken. Such intensity of action was never produced on any stage. It could not be."

On the Train.

"Excuse me, sir, but that open window is very annoying," said Blossom to a drummer sitting by the open window in a railway train.

"I'm sorry, but I'm afraid you'll have to grin and bear it," said the drummer.

"I wish you would close it, sir."

"Would like to accommodate you, but I can't," was the reply.

"Do you refuse to close that window, sir?"

"I certainly do."

"If you don't close it I will."

"I'll bet you won't."

"If I go over there I will."

"I'll give odds you won't."

"I'll ask you once more, sir, will you close that window?"

"No, sir; I will not."

"Then I will, sir," said Blossom, getting on his feet.

"I would like to see you do it."

"I'll show you whether I will or not, sir," placing his hands on the objectionable window.

"Why don't you close it?" said the drummer, as Blossom tugged at the window.

"It—appears—to be stuck," said Blossom, getting red in the face.

"Of course it is. I tried to close it before you came in."

How to Kill Your Town.

Glory in the downfall of a man who has done much to build up the town.

Make your town out a very bad place, and stab it every chance you get.

Refuse to unite in any scheme for the betterment of the material interest of the people.

Tell your merchants that you can buy goods a great deal cheaper in some other town, and charge him with extortion.

If a stranger comes to your town tell him everything is overdone and predict a general crash in the near future.

Keep up divided public sentiment on the best method of increasing business.

When you have anything to say of your town, say it in such a way that it will leave the impression that you have no faith in it.

If you are a merchant don't advertise in the home paper, but buy a rubber stamp and use it. It may save you a few dimes and make your letter heads and wrappers look as though you were doing business in a one horse town.

If you are a farmer curse the place where you trade as the meanest on earth. Talk this to your neighbors, and tell them the business men are robbers and thieves. It will make your property much less valuable, but then you don't care.

Even With the Bag Family.

"Now, madam," said the attorney for the defendant, to a little, wiry, black eyed, figety woman, who had been summoned as a witness in a breach of the peace case, "you will please give in your testimony in as few words as possible. You know the defendant?"

"Know who?"

"The defendant—Mr. Joshua Bagg?"

"Josh Bagg! I guess I do know him, and I knowed his daddy afore him, and I don't know nothing to the credit of either of 'em, and I don't think——"

"We don't want to know what you think, madam. Please say 'yes' or 'no' to my question."

"What question."

"Do you know Mr. Joshua Bagg?"

"Don't I know 'im, though? Well, I should smile! You ask Josh Bagg if he knows me. Ask him if he knows anything 'bout tryin' to cheat a pore widder like me out of a two-year old steer. Ask him if—"

"Madam, I——"

"Ask him whose land he got his cord wood off of last spring and why he hauled it in the night. Ask his wife, Betsey Bagg, if she knows anything about slippin' into a neighbors's paster lot and milking three cows on the sly. Ask——"

"Ask Josh Bagg about that uncle of his that died in the penitentiary out west. Ask him about lettin' his pore old mother die in the pore house. Ask Betsey Bagg about putting a big brick into a lot of butter she sold last fall——"

"Madam, I tell you——"

"See if Josh Bagg knows anything about feeding ten head of cattle all the salt they would eat and then letting them swill down all the water they could hold just 'fore he driv them into town and sold 'em. See what he's got to say to that?"

"That has nothing to do with the case. I want you to——"

"Then there was old Azrael Bagg, own uncle to Josh, got rid out of his native town on a rail 'tween two days, and Betsey Bagg's own brother got ketched in a neighbor's hen house at midnight. Ask Josh——"

"Madam, what do you know about this case?"

"I don't know the first livin' thing 'bout it, but I'll bet Josh Bagg is guilty, whatever it is. The fact is, I've owed them Baggses a grudge for the last fifteen year, and I got myself called up as a witness on purpose to git even with 'em, and I feel that I've done it. Good-by."

"Miranda," said the proprietor, "do you know anything about the new minister that is going to have charge of the church in the new block hereafter?"

"Yes," replied the saleswoman. "He is a tall, fine looking man, about 28, and he isn't married."

"Miranda," said the proprietor, briskly, "you may put all the new bonnets in the store in that front window right away."

SUBSCRIBE

FOR THE

POCAHONTAS TIMES,

Every man in the County should take it, and patronize home industry. It sustains your rights, and works for the advancement of your county, which no city paper will do. It gives you the news from all parts of the county, which you could not get otherwise. It furnishes matters of interest to the Merchant, Farmer and Mechanic. It keeps you posted and gives you information, on all general news, and its sections and Miscellany are fit for all ages.

TERM OF SUBSCRIPTION,

One year in advance . . $1.00
If not paid within 6 months 1.25
And at the end of the year 1.50

AND IF YOU NEED

Letter Heads, Note Heads, Bill Heads, Envelopes, Drug Envelopes, Tags, Business Cards, Official Blanks, Blank Bonds, Posters, Briefs for the Court of Appeals etc.

GET THEM AT "THE TIMES"

JOB OFFICE.

POCAHONTAS TIMES.

Vol. VIII JOHN E. CAMPBELL, EDITOR AND PROPRIETOR. Huntersville, West Virginia, Thursday, February 5, 1891. Terms of Subscription, $1.00 PER YEAR IN ADVANCE. No. 27.

Official Directory of Pocahontas County.

Judge of Circuit Court, A. N. Campbell.
Prosecuting Attorney, L. M. McClintic.
Sheriff, M. J. McNeel.
Deputy Sheriff, L. W. Herold
Cl'k of Cir. & Co. Courts, J. J. Beard.
Assessor, C. O. Arbogast.
Com'rs Co. Ct. { C. E. Beard, S. B. Hannah, G. P. Moore.
Co. Surveyor, Geo. Baxter

THE COURTS.

Circuit Court convenes on the first Monday in April, 3rd Monday in June and 3rd Monday in October.

County Court convenes on the 1st Tuesday in January, March, October and second Tuesday in July. July is levy term.

The Lover's Cup.

BY MARY KYLE DALLAS.

"I LEAVE you with a heavy heart Genie," said Ralph Meredith, "While I am gone, Ben Brander will have it all his own way. I may lose you."

Genie laughed.

"We are engaged to each other, Ralph," she said. "I like you, and I care nothing for Ben Brander. I shall not begin to flirt as soon as you are out of sight, I assure you.

They were sitting side by side upon a fallen log. Ralph pulled a bit of moss off the bark and picked it to pieces before he answered,

"Well Genie, with a woman out of sight is out of mind, very often. A year is a long time to be parted; many things may happen."

"Our hearts will not be parted," said Genie. "Come now, I'll go to the witch well and drink the lover's cup with you, and then whatever happens we'll meet again and be happy."

"You seem to mean that," said Ralph. "Do you believe that nonsense?"

"Well," said Genie, "our folks all believe it. Mother has great good sense, and she does. They say a girl cannot break her vow if she tries to do it after drinking the lover's cup with a man she is promised to. There was Miss Nancy Vaughn, who, as we all know, drank the cup with Jack Grey. She jilted him and engaged herself to a richer man, but he dropped dead at the very altar, and Jack made up with her, after all. And Captain Shicer was on a desert island five years, grandmother says, and his wife had fifty offers, but refused them all. 'We've drunk of the lover's cup,' she said, 'and he'll come back.' So he did. Come Ralph."

She arose and tripped away. Ralph following her. They plunged into the heart of the wood, and soon came to a natural fountain gushing from a rock into a sort of basin below. On a ledge above the flowing water stood a cup, cut from translucent white stone—a curious thing with a handle on either side, and a figure of Cupid carved upon it.

It was not known who cut the cup nor how long it had been there. It was a miracle that in all those years no one had broken or stolen it.

Probably the superstitions that hung about it protected it.

It was said that in the course of three generations it had been twice in the hands of dishonest folk, but each time as the thief turned away a blow was dealt him by an unseen hand and he fell to the ground, and was only too happy to crawl away alive. True or false, every boy in the village believed this solemnly, and the lover's cup was as safe as though guarded by a regiment of soldiers.

As Genie stopped before the fountain she turned and lifted her finger warningly.

"Remember," she said, "we must lift the cup together, fill it as we hold the handles, drink at one moment, leave a drop to throw into the fountain, and neither must release the cup until it stands in its place again, and not one word must be spoken by either in all that while."

Thus warned Ralph went through the mystic performance properly, and the two returned to Genie's home. The next day Ralph was journeying toward the far West, and Genie was beginning to count the days of his absence.

At first Genie's words seemed to prove true. Distance scarcely seemed to divide these lovers. Their letters were frequent, and grew warmer as time went on. Six months were gone when one day news came of trouble with the Indians; then mails were delayed then a strange letter came. It began this way:

"DEAREST GENIE,—As I write to you my rifle stands within reach. I am watching a devil of a redskin who is looking about the edge of the woods near the Widow Taggart's little house. There may be more behind him. He does not guess that there is any one near. Now he has gone away again. He may only be hungry. God help the poor creatures—they are often enough, only they are such demons that one feels like saying, 'Serves them right!' Perhaps if white men——"

There was nothing more, not another word, so the letter ended. Genie was terrified at first, but the letter was enclosed in an envelope, directed in Ralph's well known hand, and she could not fancy it a mistake of some sort. However as time went on her anxiety increased. No other letter followed this. Vainly she wrote, there was no answer. Meanwhile the family had hidden a paper from her, in which was given full description of a foul Indian massacre in "Lonely Village." Twenty bodies, mutilated and unrecognizable, had been buried when the soldiers at last put the redskins to flight.

At last Genie wrote to an old clergyman of whom she knew, who, though he did not reside at Lonely Village, sometimes preached there. The answer that came confirmed her worst fears. Lonely Village the old man wrote, was no more, those residents who had not been murdered had departed thence.

Ralph Meredith had been seen in the thick of the fight. A girl, one of the widow's daughter's the only one living of her family, had told him that Ralph had asked her, if she escaped, to post a letter she would find upon his table; she had done so.

A garment, marked with Ralph's name, had been found on one of the mutilated bodies, and so with kind and pious words, the letter ended.

When she actually realized that was dead, lost forever, Genie felt he that all happiness was gone from her life.

She thought at first that she should not live, but grief rarely kills the young. After awhile she began to go about a little, still dressed in the mourning she wore for Ralph and one day she put a bunch of violets in her belt, and in two years she left her black off altogether. Time has a healing power, say what we will, and Ben Brander began to follow Genie Bell about again. He was a handsome fellow, and had a charm about him.

At first she was very cold to him, but in time he changed all that. She could never love him as she had loved Ralph, she knew; it was he whom she hoped to meet in heaven. But she might have years to live; her friends besought her to take the good that was offered.

After awhile she began to feel that it would be best to marry Ben, and so she said "yes" to him one day, and their wedding-day was set.

From that day Ben was happy and she was wretched. Her conscience reproached her. She did not dare to look at the little photograph of her lost lover which she kept in her room and had hitherto kissed every morning and every night. Its eyes seemed to reproach her.

"I have been false to him," she repeated. "False! false! false!"

But she had not the courage to break her promise to Ben, and so the day before that of the wedding day came.

By this time Genie's conflict with her emotions had become too dreadful to endure and she had formed a terrible resolution.

It was that she would not live to marry Ben Brander, but would join her only true love in the other world. She had procured some poison, at once fatal and painless, and it was her intention to go to the old fountain in the forest, swallow the poison, pledge her faith to Ralph in life or in death in a draught from the "lover's cup," and then lie down to sleep the sleep that knows no waking. Then all would be over; no one would blame her, and she believed that Heaven would forgive her.

"You must not come this evening," she said gravely to Ben Brander. "I cannot see you if you do."

"Too busy with the fal-lals and fixings?" he said. "Very well, I'll stay away."

He was not quite contented with her manner. He knew that she often thought of Ralph Meredith, and until to-day he had rather feared that she would break her promise after all.

He thought of this a great deal as he went his way, which led past the railway station. A train had just come in, passengers were alighting. Suddenly he saw a figure that he thought he recognized. The blood seemed to leave his heart. He started forward. Yes! it was Ralph Meredith, and their eyes met and they uttered each other's names.

"How strange that you should be the first to meet me!" Ralph cried.

"We thought you dead!" gasped Ben.

Neither of the men held out a hand to each other, or made any sign of friendly greeting.

"The Indians took me prisoner. My skill in drugs saved my life," said Ralph. "They made a medicine man of me. I have just escaped. Genie Bell? Tell me about her."

"We are to be married to-morrow," said Ben. "This is the wedding ring"—he took from his pocket a little box. "You cannot blame Genie," he went on. "She wore black for you as if she were your widow. If I comforted her at last, remember we thought you dead. She is very happy now. You'll make her wretched, I suppose."

Ralph turned away and leaned his head against the trunk of a great elm that shaded the road, for awhile, then he turned again to Ben.

"Luck is against me," he said, "but I have not come back to make folks unhappy. She has forgotten me—she loves you. There is no one else in the place I care much to see. I have no relatives here. Good-bye—you may consider me dead again," and he turned upon his heel.

"Does he mean it?" asked Ben of himself. "If he does go back it will be all over for me. Genie cares more for him now than she will ever care for me while she lives.

"Yes, he really seems to mean it," he added, as he watched Ralph out of sight. "He has gone back to the depot."

And Ralph indeed had done so, but no train was yet due, and he walked away again. Instinctively he turned toward the great woods where he had so often rambled with Genie. The memory of the fountain and the lover's cup was strong upon him. He turned his feet that way and saw the pearly water flowing into the shallow basin, the strange stone cup standing in its niche, the shadow of the great trees falling over all, the whole place unaltered as if he had left it only yesterday.

"Why did they not kill me with the rest, there at Lonely Village?" he sighed.

Suddenly a light step sounded on the path, he stepped back into the shadow and saw a woman approaching; the next instant he recognized Genie!

She was pale and there was a strange look in her eyes. She reached across the basin and took the lover's cup in her hands, she filled it at the fountain, and lifted her eyes to heaven.

"Ralph, my beloved, to whom I plighted my troth beside this fountain," she said, "listen while I repeat it, this time for eternity." She emptied the cup. "Now God forgive me and receive my soul," she sighed.

Ralph saw her take a vial from her bosom and lift it to her lips; he understood all, and springing forward, clasped her in his arms, while she clung sobbing to his breast.

"The charm of the lover's cup is fulfilled' darling!" he cried, "we meet again! You are mine and I am yours! And since you love me still, no man shall come between us while we both live!"

A little later a messenger came to Ben Brander; he brought with him a note containing only these words:

"Ralph has returned to me."

SOME CLEVER CONUNDRUMS.

Why is a crow like a lawyer? He likes to have his caws heard.

What are many wrinkles in a merchant's forehead? Trade marks

What is the proper length of ladies' crinoline? A little above two feet.

Do you know the soldier's definition of a kiss? A report at headquarters.

Which travels fastest, heat or cold? Heat; because you can easily catch cold.

When is a man a muff? When he holds a lady's hand without squeezing it.

Why don't the American girl like the English dude? The yankee dude'll do

Why is a dead hen better than a live one? She will lay wherever you put her.

Why was Blackstone like an Irish vegetable? Because he was a common tatur.

Why don't they charge policemen on the horse cars? Because they can't get a nickel out of a copper.

What's the difference between a mouse and a young lady? One wishes to harm the cheese, the other to charm the he's.

What is the difference between homicide and pig sticking? One is assault with intent to kill, the other a kill with intent to salt.

Why are two young ladies kissing each other an emblem of christianity? Because they are doing unto each other as they would do unto them.

Why are ladies so wicked? Because they not only bone their stays and steal their petticoats, but they positively sith their babies and back each other's dresses.

Pocahontas Times.

JOHN E. CAMPBELL,
EDITOR AND PROPRIETOR.

Entered at the Post-office at Huntersville, W. Va., as second class matter.

ADVERTISING RATES.

	1 m.	3 m.	6 m.	1 yr.
One inch	$ 1 00	$ 3 00	$ 5 00	$ 5 00
Three in.	3 00	4 00	6 00	10 00
Qr. column	[illegible]	6 00	10 00	17 00
Half col'n	6 00	12 00	20 00	30 00
One col'n	10 00	20 00	30 00	50 00

Reading notices, not exceeding five lines, twenty-five cents for each insertion, and five cents a line for each additional line.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION.

One copy, 1 yr., $1.00 in advance; after 6 months, $1.25; after 12 months, $1.50

These terms will be strictly complied with.

Huntersville, W. Va.

February 5, 1891.

Judge W. A. Pieffer, a Farmers' Alliance man has been elected to the U. S. Senate to succeed Senator Ingalls. Senator Ingalls is one of the most brilliant men in the Senate, but he is politcally such a very bad man that his removal from a place of power is a matter of congratulation for good people everywhere.

This administration will go down to posterity as the one that got away with the largest surplus the country ever had in less than two years after it came into power; will also be known as the murderer of the Republiian party as a national organization.

Iowa elected a Republican Secretary of State by a plurality of 2,925 Votes, and gave 9,181 majority against the McKinley bill. If the Republicans will only stand by that bill they will all slide out of sight together.

Governor Hill will gain neither honor nor profit by running a third term for governor. If he is not fit for Senator or President by this time he never will be, and will never get in either position by waiting.—Advance Thought.

Law makers ride on railroad passes.

Forty thousand families control the masses.

Voters refuse to think, and vote like asses.

Mortgage covers all the grain and grasses.

Now is it not time a Farmers Alliance,

In defence of homes, bid thieves defiance?

If the time has not yet come, then abandon the idea, crowd back into the traps of the old parties, and keep right on going to hell. By either of the old routes, it is all the way down hill.—Advance Thought.

Good old English law is stiff enough to cut in to gate posts. Not long since, a man in London put arsenic into a pudding with the intent to kill his wife and two children. The children died from the effects of the poison thus placed for them. His wife did not partake of the pudding and escaped. She told the facts of the case. He was arrested, but not punished, as under English law a wife cannot give testimony against her husband, except in respect of outrage or offence against her own person. Therefore, her testimony against her husband, except in respect of outrage or offence against her own person. Therefore, her testimony against her husband as to his poisoning the children could not be accepted, and the brute went unpunished.

The immigration to this country which passes through the port of New York amounts, roughly stated, to a thousand a day. Sometimes the total exceeds somewhat that figure; sometimes it falls short of it. According to the figures just published for 1890, it amounted to 359,510. Except during the first two years of the civil war, the immigration to this country from Europe has never in a single year since 1864 fallen below 100,000, and only during the three years of financial depression, from 1876 to 1879, has it fallen below 200,000. In 1882 it reached a mammoth total of nearly 800,000, and since that time it has averaged about 400,000, of which about 365,000, or, as we have said, about a thousand a day, come through the port of New York.—N. Y. Sun.

Whites Increasing Faster than Blacks.

The Census Bureau has given out the population of Alabama by races, and the figures are calculated to reassure those timid souls who have imagined that the negroes were multiplying so rapidly that there would soon be no room for white folks south of Mason and Dixon's line. The population of Alabama, exclusive of a few Indians and Chinese, was as follows in 1880; White, 662,185; colored, 600,103; white majority, 62,082. In 1890 the figures were: Whites, 830,796; colored, 681,431; white majority, 149,365, considerably more than double what it was in 1880.

Now take the percentage of increase. The entire population of the State, which was 1,262,500 in 1880, was 1,513,017 in 1890, an increase of a very small fraction less than 20 per cent. But the white population increased 25.3 per cent.—almost 25.4 per cent.—while the colored population increased only 13½ per cent.

These figures should calm some perturbed spirits that have been wondering what would become of the Southern whites.

From the two Carolinas there has been some emigration of colored people, and there has been some immigration of colored people into Mississippi, Louisiana and Texas. But we beleive that there has been no emigration of negroes from Alabama that explains these figures. On the other hand, we believe that there has been no immigration of whites into the State to account for them. A good deal of capital has moved into the State in the past ten years, but we take it that not many thousands of white laborers have moved in. The increase of the white population of Alabama is pretty nearly the general average of natural increase for the whole country.

Additional statistics may cause a modification of this judgment, but as far as the Alabama figures go they indicate that the natural increase of the whites greater than that of the blacks. The latter are the more fecund possibly, but their death rate is higher than that of the whites.

WASHINGTON LETTER.

From our regular correspondent.

WASHINGTON, D. C., Jan. 30,—Mr. Harrison dies hard, very hard. Senator Hoar and his radical colleagues recognize that their last defeat meant the final disposition of the Force bill, and they have accepted the result with the best grace possible although it is far from satisfactory to them. Not so Mr. Harrison. He is so wedded to the idea of Federal interference in Southern elections and its consequent benefit to him and his party that he refuses to believe the Force bill dead, and has begun scheming for another attempt to rush it through the Senate. He is strongly seconded by Speaker Reed and the House republicans generally, but the idea has so far been very coldly received by the Senators whose recollection of the two square knock-downs they have already received while battling for this unpopular and unjust bill makes them shy of again entering the ring against the intelligent public opinion of the country.

Still there is no telling what these republicans may do. It is certain that if they saw their way clear to pass the bill that would again take it up. Their desire is as strong for the passage of the bill as it ever was, but it is the dread of another defeat that makes them hesitate. Democratic Senators are fully aware that all danger from this bill will not be passed until the close of the session, and they will see to it that the republicans get no chance to catch them napping.

That the democrats are always ready to aid in the transaction of legitimate business was shown when Senator Gorman notified the republican steering committee that the democrats were prepared to agree to any order of business which did not include the cloture rule or Force bill. The programme as arrangek provides for the consideration of the following bills, after the Apportionment bill is disposed of; eight Hour bill, Copyright, Pure-food, and the job of the session, the bill to gurantee the payment of $200,000,000 in bonds of the Nicaragua canal company. It is certainly a suspicious circumstance that this bill for the exclusive benefit of a corporation should have been given a place in the order of business when dozens of bills important to the country at large were left out. Some music ought to be heard when this bill gets before the Senate, and will be, unless I am very much mistaken.

The defeat of Senator Ingalls did not raise a cyclone of grief at the Capitol.

Unless the republicans attempt some of their tricks it is believed that all of the appropriation bills can be disposed of by the 4th of March, and an extra session avoided.

Chairman Dingley, of the House committee now investigating the silver pool scandal, is charged with having intimated, in a conversation with Mr. Payne, a member of the committee, that Senator Vest would never have been allowed to testify if he had known that he would "give away" Senator Cameron. This charge is not made by a democrat, but by a good republican. Gen. H. V. Boynton. Mr. Dingley denies it, and Gen. Boynton says W. B. Stevens heard the conversation in question. Its a nice mess, a republican mess, all through, and before the committee finishes its labors it will be in need of being investigated.

The arguments in the Behring Sea case were heard by the supreme Court this week. They contained nothing new on either side, thanks to the enterprise of our newspapers in having told us two weeks age what points each side would try to make.

The anti-silver men have opened their campaign against free coinage by bringing a lot of Eastern bankers here to tell the House Coinage committee what a dangerous thing free coinage is. Another dodge of the antis, is to amend the free coinage bill so as to make it conform to the views of the President. Both schemes are meant to accomplish the same thing—delay, and that's how it will be beaten if it is beaten. The committee will delay reporting it back to the House as long as possible, and after it is reported Speaker Reed will delay its consideration if he can, and between all these delays the time will have become too short to pass the bill at this session. See? Great scheme isn't it? Not very original though.

Mr. Blaine isn't saying anything about the Force bill, but he has had a kind of an I told—you—so look ever since Mr. Harrison was knocked out at the same time his pet measure was.

HOME NEWS

—Mr. J. C. Kinports went up to Dunmore to-day (Wednesday).

—Knapp's creek was fuller Sunday than it has been this winter.

—Mr. John T. McGraw, of Grafton, was in town last Friday.

—J. H. Doyle, Esq., one of the proprietors of Huntersville hotel, has been sick for a few days past.

—The ground hog undoubtedly must have seen his shadow, if the old saying is true.

—Mess. Harry Beard and Sydney Payne of Academy was in our city over Sunday.

—Mrs. Henry Sharp, of Douthard's creek, is on the sick list at her daughter's Mrs. G. M. Ervine.

—Capt. J. W. Marshall, of Mingo Flats, was in the city Thursday night and Friday.

—The mail from Mt. Grove failed to come in Monday again for no cause whatever.

—Mr. E. C. Ferguson, of Green Bank, has got his home place secured, which he had some trouble recently, about the title &c.

—License to marry was issued on the 2nd inst. to J. C. Kinnison and Miss Mattie E. Cutlip, of near Academy.

—Mr. O. Guay, who has been sick at the Wagner hotel for several weeks past is able to walk around in the house now.

—There were 33 indictments made at the last term of the Randolph Cir. Ct. Three were for felony.

—Attorneys H. S. Rucker, N. C. McNeil, and F. J. Snyder, were at Academy the first of the week on legal business.

—Monday was ground hog day and if he came out he surely saw his shadow, consequently we will have 42 days more of winter weather.

—Miss Ella Kerr who has been the guest of Mrs. Geo. Bambrick since her school closed on Beaver creek last week, returned to her home at Dunmore to day (Wednesday).

—We hope our correspondents will bear in mind that THE TIMES still charges occasionally for ads. And if any body wants to advertise an auction sale or anything of the kind, let them send it in and it will go in at the lowest possible rate.

—Pocahontas County will undergo the greatest development and prosperity of any County in the State in the next five years. She will have a railroad, and the industries that will spring up from it will furnish employment to thousands of families. She has iron ore coal and untold millions of feet of lumber, which speaks for itself.

—Old Pocahontas County will not be without a railroad two years longer.

Dunmore Doings.

Col. Robt. Seals drove out of Sitlington's creek on the 2nd inst.

As soon as the ark is built the drive will leave for Ronceverte.

Capt. J. C. Lakin, and C. H. Myers left with a large flat and lumber for Capt. Smith's ark at the mouth of Anthony's Creek.

Mr. Alex Batterbough had the misfortune to have a cant hook run in his leg which is very painful.

Jim Watson, got up while asleep the other night, ran against a table and broke his toe.

Miss Alice McGlaughlin has finished her school on Douthard's creek, and is now going to school to Squire Cook at this place.

TOM SAWYER.

One hundred miners were killed in an explosion at Mammoth, Pa., last Wednesday. About 60 bodies have been taken out. The explosion was caused by fire damp.

Academy Items.

Dr. C. W. Eskridge, who has been at Staunton, Va., several days has returned home.

Mr. Abe Beard, of Renick's Valley, was in town Wednesday.

Misses Mary and Pauline McNeel are visiting at Staunton, Va.

Mr. Dan O'Connell and wife stopped at the American House, Monday.

Mr. B. M. Yeager, of Traveller's Repose, spent a few days last week with his son who is attending school at this place.

Miss Ethel Kincaid, of Va., is visiting at Mr. R. A. Pollocks.

Miss Mary Caranay, of Renick's Valley is visiting Miss Lucy Renick.

Mr. Harry McGlaughlin, spent Friday night in town. Mr. H. is improving slowly.

Miss Addie Williams, who has been teaching school near Green Bank has returned to her home at Locust.

The entertainment given by the M. F. Academy, Friday night was quite a success.

ADRONIS.

Douthard's Creek Items.

We have been watching for the Railroad but have seen nothing of it yet. Expect the creek was too high.

Mrs. Henry Sharp and Mr. Alek. Rider, are on the sick list.

Mr. B. F. McElwee, of Dunmore, spent a few days with his brother at Driscol, last week.

Mr. H. M. Lockridge, of Buena Vista, Va., spent a few days at his old home on Knapp's creek. He says business is opening up lively, and people are looking forward for booming times at Buena Vista in a short while.

H. A. Yeager, Esq., spent one night on our creek, last week, on his return from Virginia.

Much success to THE TIMES.

O. C. CASIONAL.

Marlinton Matters.

Another tide in the river, and as rafting has become somewhat monotonous, we will not mention particulars.

It is a subject for thanksgiving, that the snow so far has disappeared so gradually. Had the snow gone off, in one thow, the whole valley of the Greenbrier would have been a watery waste, by this time.

William Mayse, made the trip to Millboro Depot, in seven days, for Mr. Hull, of Edray.

Up to this period there has been no suffering for store supplies. Tallow is cheap, water plenty, hence we are fortified against scarcity of carosone and coffee, should there be a second winter, after February second.

There were so many ground hogs shot last summer and fall, it may be the survivors will be easily frightened, and be careless about warm weather lest hostilities renewed by the Winchester shooters, in the spring.

There is some talk about a railroad likely to come. It seems strange however, to have such talk, for it is next to impossible to keep rails enough to fence in garden and corn patches. What the people want a railroad for, is quite a question under such circumstances.

Miss Emma Warwick has a nice school going on at her home. She is nicely fixed in her new school house, near her father's new residence.

Miss Annie Wallace, is teaching a very nice school in this vicinity at the residence of Mr. Andrew McGlaughlin.

Just to be with those superior ladies is a good education, to say nothing of the book learning acquired.

Such schools are omens of great good in store for our young people.

May your hopes be realized, and THE TIMES visit a thousand families every week.

J. K. S.

Dunmore Literary Society.

The Dunmore Literary Society was re-organized a few weeks ago with the following officers. W. H. Cackley. Pres; J. C. Lakin, V. P; Miss Cora E. Jones, Sec; Miss K M. Lakin, Treas; Chas. Cook, Critic; John A. Taylor, Cansor.

Our meeting on last Friday evening was especially interesting.

Question: Resolved, that the U. S. Senators should be elected by the votes of the people of the various states and not by the Legislatures.

Among the things worthy of especial notice was the singing of a celebrated French song by Z. Goulet.

J. A. TAYLOR, Sec. Protem.

Cleveland: West Virginia's Choice.

CHARLESTON, W. VA., Jan. 21.—A complete canvass of the Democratic members of both branches of the Legislature, shows the following expression of choice for President of the United States in '92:

In the Senate—For Cleveland, 13; Hill, 4.

In the House—Cleveland, 40, Hill, 2, Gray, 1; Carlisle, 1.

One of the Hill men is very anxious that his name shall not be given out, because he wants to be a delegate to the National Convention and he thinks there are so many Cleveland people that he would stand no show if his sentiments were known. The vote was taken quietly, unless he chose to tell it himself.

Farms Sold.

On the line of the Pittsburgh W. Va. Southern railroad, in this County about $130,000 worth of ore timber and farming lands have been sold to Jno. T. McGraw, of Grafton. Every farm at Marlinton was sold. Messrs. Andrew McGlaughlin sold his farm for $40,000 Levi Gay his for $15,000, and the Mess. Price, McClintic and Mrs. Wm. McGlaughlin we didn't understand the price paid for theirs. Also Mr. M. D. McGlaughlin a mile from this place sold his for $6,000, Options were taken on other farms near this place.

It is thought that the above named Railroad Co., is at the head of these immense purchases, and that the road will be built to Covington, Va., within two yrs.

Nellie Lewis Carnation.

The latest and one of the best novelties for 1891 is an elegant Carnation, growing on long stems, a free bloomer with large flowers, of an exquisite shade of pink, something entirely different from anything in Carnations. This flower is destined to become a great favorite among the florists, as the ladies prize it very highly for corsage bouquets and decorative purposes generally. The endorsement of the old firm of James Vick, Rochester, N. Y., who introduce this plant, is enough to assure the public that it is all they claim for it. The price is only 50 cents each three for $1.25, six for $2.25, doz. $4.00; but a better way would be to send 10 cents for Vick's Floral Guide and the 10 cents can be deducted from the first order forwarded for seeds.

The Cigarette Bill.

CHARLESTON, W. Va., January 29. There was considerable wrangling in the Senate this morning over a bill to prevent the sale of cigars, cigarettes or tobacco in any form to a minor under eighteen years of age. The violation of this act is a misdemeanor and a fine of twenty-five dollars and not more than one hundred is the penalty for a violation thereof. The merchant may also be confined in jail for six months if the court sees proper to impose imprisonment. A farmer cannot even send a written order to a store by his son for tobacco.

—There will be no preaching in the Southern Methodist church next Sunday.

Transfers of Real Estate.

The following is a list of the transfers of real estate for the months of December and January.

A deed from M. K. Baggs, Spec'l Com'r to Isaac P. Boggs for land on Rich Mountain and both sides of the Greenbrier river.

From Ellis M. Buzzard to P. A. Buzzard for land on Sitlington's creek.

From Wm. A. Schwecker and wife to J. W. Marshall for land on Dry Branch, of Elk river.

From R. S. Turk and wife to Isaac Daughirty for 397 acres lying on east side of Greenbrier river.

From Isaac Daughirty and wife to R. S. Turk for two tracts one 379 acres and the other 729 acres lying on east side of Greenbrier river.

From S. L. Gibson, to Jno. Drepard, for lot near Frost.

From Jno. Drepard to his wife for house and lot near Frost.

From Henry White to his son H. L. for 372 acres lying on Douthard's Creek.

A deed of trust from Rebecca J. Claytor to H. S. Galford on land lying on Swago Creek.

From J. L. Sheets and wife to Withrow McClintic, for 106 acres lying on Williams river.

From Wm. Auldridge and wife to Withrow McClintic for land known as the Mt. Lick tract.

From E. H. Darrah and wife and others to Jno. Driscol for land on the head waters of Greenbrier river, Consideration $13,767.

From Porter Kinports and wife and others to Jas. W. Kinports for land on head waters of Greenbrier river. Consideration $4,760.

From J. W. Wilson and wife of Vernon Co., Mo., to Howard H. Slaven for land, on headwaters of Greenbrier river.

From J. W. Warwick com'r school land to R. S. Turk for land on Thorny creek.

From same to Q. W. Poage for land near Edray.

From same to E. N. Moore for land on Sitlington's creek.

Same to Geo. Hamilton for land on waters of Knapp's creek.

From Edward Webb and wife to Jacob Boner for 50 acres of land situate on Buckley mountain.

From L. M. McClintic and wife to Withrow McClintic for land on the waters of Swago creek.

From H. H. McClintic, to Withrow McClintic for Mill property on Swago creek.

From Sam'l. B. Hogsett and wife to C. F. Moore trustee for the benefit of Sheldon Moore for land on the waters of Brown's creek.

From Jno. W. Irwine and wife to Thos. C. Malcomb for land near Edray.

From E. G. McNeill to D. A. McNeill for land on Swago creek.

From S. L. Brown, Clerk of the Co. Ct, to H. S. Rucker for 295 acres lying on Droop Mountain.

From S. S. Varner and wife to Maggie E. Slanker for land near Split Rock.

From S. L. Brown, Cl'k Co. Ct. to W. R. E. Hannah for land on Clover Lick creek, containing 81 acres.

A new play, "The Devil in Search of a wife," is announced. This is kind of the devil, who for several years has been gathering in husbands and children till he evidently has more than he can take care of. Knowing that so many women are content with worthless husbands and a hell upon earth, he is after help to care for his job lot of guests.

NOTICE.

Having bought Zane W. Moore's interest of merchandise at Frost, W. Va. All persons indebted to the old Firm either by bond or acct. must come forward and settle and pay up at once. My former partner will assist me in collecting and paying up all the old Firms debts settle at once and save cost.

Very Respectfully,

H. F. HEROLD.

Commissioner's Notice.

John Dilley's Adm'r. &c.

vs.

Wm. Dilley & others

Notice is hereby given to all parties interested that in pursuance of a decree of the Circuit Court of Pocahontas County, entered in the above named cause on the 21st day of October, 1890, I shall proceed as Commissioner of said Court, at my office in the town of Huntersville, W. Va., on Saturday, the 28th day of Feb., 1891, to take, state and report the following matters of account:

1st. The liens upon the land of the defendant William Dilley, with their respective amounts and priorities, showing to whom such amounts are payable.

2nd. The lands owned by said defendant William Dilley, together with the fee simple and annual rental value thereof.

3rd. The amount of consideration furnished by the defendant Wm. F. Dilley for the bond for the $475 mentioned in the trust deed, at which a copy is filed as Exhibit of the bill, marked "L."

4th. Any other matter deemed pertinent by the Commission or or required to be specially stated by any party in interest.

C. F. MOORE, Com'r.

Printers fee, $8.95, Jany 29, 4 t

Pocahontas Times.

JOHN E. CAMPBELL,
EDITOR AND PROPRIETOR.

Entered at the Post-office at Huntersville, W. Va., as second class matter.

ADVERTISING RATES.

	1 m.	3 m.	6 m.	1 yr.
One inch	$ 1 00	$ 2 00	$ 3 00	$ 5 00
Three in.	2 00	4 00	6 00	10 00
Qr. column	3 00	6 00	10 00	17 00
Half col'n	6 00	12 00	20 00	30 00
One col'n	10 00	20 00	30 00	50 00

Reading notices, not exceeding five lines, twenty-five cents for each insertion, and five cents a line for each additional line.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION.

One copy, 1 yr., $1.00 in advance; after 6 months, $1.25; after 12 months, $1.50

These terms will be strictly complied with.

Huntersville, W. Va.

February 5, 1891.

UNITED FOREVER.

BY F. B. CONVERSE.

"I pronounce you man and wife."

The solemn words fell upon the silence, and the vast audience listened with rapt attention. It was the grandest wedding of the season and all society was on the quivive over the great social event.

The bride was simply perfection, in a cold, statuesque way—a lovely blonde, she was bewitchingly beautiful in her trailing bridal robe of white brocade covered with rare lace.

The bridegroom was a distinguished looking man, but there was a hard look upon his face and a firm compression of the lips at times, which betrayed his real nature to be selfish and cruel.

And the gossips all discussed the rumor that the bride, Maud Hetherington, had jilted her old lover, Richard Wylde, for the sake of Warner Percy.

The young ladies were very indignant over the supposed conduct of Miss Hetherington.

"It was a shame," they declared, "to turn away from handsome Dick Wylde, just because he had lost his fortune!"

But comment and criticism were all lost upon Maud Hetherington. If there lingered any feeling of affection in her heart for the dark eyed, splendid, looking Richard Wylde, she kept the secret well from the eyes of the world; and to-night she stands at the altar with another, and vows to "love, honor, and obey" until death should intervene.

The silence of death reigns throughout the vast church; the last words are spoken; there is a hush—then the crowd poured forth, and outside the church they all halt to await the coming of the bridal party.

And here Richard Wylde, just arrived from a distant city, paused also, his eyes riveted upon the pale, lovely face of the woman who was to have been his own. The news of her expected marriage had reached him; she herself had written the few cold lines which were to set them free from all ties that had bound them. The young man had striven to bear the blow bravely, and like a man, but some fascination had drawn him back to the city, and to the church where the wedding was taking place.

It caused quite a commotion when the bride fainted away in the carriage after the bridal party had made its way through the surging crowd upon the pavement. But Mrs. Warner Percy kept her secret well, and no one there knew—though there were critisms and surmises both—that a glimpse of her old lover's face in the crowd at the church door had been the cause of her swoon.

Richard Wylde had seen enough to satisfy him. He turned abruptly and made his way back to his hotel, his face pale and his teeth set hard into his under lip.

"Money!" he muttered, savagely; "that is all she wants! When she heard of my failure in business and loss of my fortune, she broke the engagement between us coldly, heartlessly. And she did not dream that I would soon inherit another fortune. She does not know that I am a more wealthy man to-day than ever before. Ah, the power of gold! It is potent and all powerful. But I will banish her fair, false face from my heart, and from my thoughts. She is altogether unworthy!"

The next day the newspapers, which were filled with glowing accounts of the stylish wedding, also contained notices to the effect that Richard Wylde had returned to town for a brief sojourn. He had just inherited an immense fortune, and was busily engaged setting his affairs in order, prior to a trip across the ocean. Mrs. Warner Percy read the paragraph, and a deathly pallor overspread her beautiful face.

Poor Maud! she was the victim of a cruel plot, but she did not know it. When the time should come for her to learn the truth, heaven help Warner Percy's wife!

She was at the opera that night, looking like a princess, in a pale rose colored silk and pearl ornaments. A beautiful iceberg, men called her as they looked upon that white, still face. Only once a trace of emotion ruffled its calm fair serenity. That was when glancing from her box, her eyes fell upon the face of a man in the stalls—a handsome face, with dusky, cold, unsmiling eyes, and a firm mouth. Richard Wylde was watching her every movement, yet no one could aver that he had seen her at all.

The play was nearly over when the audience was startled by the cry of fire. The drapery of one of the boxes had in some mysterious way become ignited, and the box was wrapped in flames. It was Maud Percy's box, the sweet, pale face was that Richard Wylde saw as he started to his feet, and with one mad bound sprang through the orchestra on to the stage, and from thence reached the box in a moment.

And there he halted for a brief space, overcome with horror at the scene upon which his eyes rested. Warner Percy—her husband—had fled from the burning box, leaving his helpless wife to her fate. The entire wing of the building was in flames by this time, and the audience was shrieking and rushing madly toward the different entrances, while the actors, together with the manager, strove hard to calm the tumult. It was a horrible stampede.

Setting his teeth hard together over a muttered execration as he saw Warner Percy flying like a coward, Richard Wylde lifted Maud in his arms and sprang upon the stage, and then he turned to a private entrance used only by the actors. He knew that if he could reach that door in safety she would be saved.

It was a horrible conflict that he fought with death as he made his way slowly onward inch by inch toward the private door, the drooping form of the woman he had loved and lost clasped close to his breast.

Her eyes [illegible], and he heard her whisper, softly:

"Oh! Richard, how could you deceive me so?"

He stooped and pressed his lips to hers.

"I have never deceived you [illegible]," he made answer, slowly.

Saved at last! Out in the open air he found [illegible] waiting carriage and [illegible] with her to her home. Rather a little later was brought the bleeding, mangled form of Warner Percy, dying from the effect of injuries received while in the act of deserting his helpless wife and leaving her like a coward to her fate.

"I am dying," he said slowly—"I know it. And before I go, Richard, I must set right the wrong that I have done. Dick, I instigated that letter to you which Maud wrote. I told her that you were false to her and made her believe my assertion. In her pride and anger she wrote whatever I bade her to write. She has never been false to you, and she did not care for your money. But I shall soon be dead, and then you can belong to each other. I seperated you, but my sin has found me out, and I am justly punished."

He died that night. Society marvelled a little when a year later Maud became Mrs. Richard Wylde, but the nine day's gossip was soon over, and the two who had been parted by a cruel plot were now united forever.

The Future White House.

Of course the Farmers' alliance is a good thing, but we do not think that the farmer is hardly fitted to discharge the duties of the Presidential chair, says the Arkansaw Traveler. It wouldn't look very well to foreign diplomatists to see the President's wife knitting a pair of mittens nor to hear her ask the President if he had locked the hen-house door. It would shock some people to see the President come in from the stable smelling horsey. Of course he could hire men to help him kill hogs, but then the people that elected him would complain.

The following is supposed to be a future conversation in the blue room.

"John," said the mistress of the White House, one evening when the Chief Executive had washed his hands at the kitchen door, and stood wiping them on the hired girl's apron, "did the sheep do much damage to the corn?"

"Yes, they destroyed a good bit of it, gol darn 'em. If the Secretary of State don't keep his infernal sheep at home I'll shoot 'em, gol darn if I don't."

"Whose cow was that in the yard last night?"

"Belongs to the secetary of the Treasury, and if he don't look out I'll scald all all the hide offen her. Got any of them cold beans left?"

"You'll find some in the pantry. While you air out I wish you would look in the girl's room and see if she is burnin' that gas. I told her she must use a lamp, but girl's are so awful [illegible] these days, what you say goes in at one ear and out tuther. What did Congress do to day?"

"Wall, passed the Ab Tucker fence bill and now folks better keep their hogs up or suthin' will happen. We are goin' to hold a cabinet meetin' to-night."

"Anything important?"

"Yes, we are going to recommend the passage of the Anderson pitchfork bill. Did the Attorney General fetch them hames back?"

"Yes; they are hangin' out there on the gallery. The Secretary of the Interior was here to-day, an' axed for you an' I told him that you was mighty pushed to get your hay in before it rained."

"Did he say what he was a doin'?"

"Been choppin' wood lately, he says, but is going to dig a ditch next week."

"About the most disagreeable man on earth," said Charlie Cashgo "is the pawnbroker."

"Yes," responded Billy Brodie, dolefully, "but we have to put up with him."

Father—"Did you break this vase?"

Johnny—"Yes, father! I can't lie."

Father—"Indeed! Well you won't be able to sit, either, when I am done with you. Come along to the woodshed."

It is hard for us, whether we are old or young to see our best efforts pass unappreciated; and what older people feel younger people say.

Little Mary, who is only 4 years old, had a new hat given to her, of which she felt very proud. On the following Sunday she wore it to church, but her pleasure in the event was greatly lessened by the fact that a certain lad on whom her childish affections were just then set appeared not to notice her splended adornment.

Monday morning she saw him going by the house driving a cow, and at once she clambered upon the fence.

"Oh, Ed," she called, "that was me to church yesterday, with a new hat on!"

Father—"Didn't I hear high words between you and your brother just now, Henry?"

Henry—"Very likely, father, but surely you wouldn't wish me to use low language."

De Dude (buying a cane)—I sa-ay, mah good man, this cane won't do. The handle is too big foh mah mouth.

Dealer—It's the exact size worn by the Prince of Wales, sir.

De Dud—Aw! Wait a bit. I'll go to a surgeon's and see if I can have mah mouth stwetched.

Mr. Billus had been away from home several days, and had just returned.

"Did you miss me, Maria?" he inquired as he deposited his valise in the corner, hung his overcoat on a hook, and then gave his wife a business like kiss.

"Miss you?" replied Mrs. Billus, tenderly. "Indeed I did, John. There hasn't been anybody to swear at the biscuits for six whole days."

SUBSCRIBE

FOR THE

POCAHONTAS TIMES,

Every man in the County should take it, and patronize home industry. It sustains your rights, and works for the advancement of your county, which no city paper will do. It gives you the news from all parts of the county, which you could not get otherwise. It furnishes matters of interest to the Merchant, Farmer and Mechanic. It keeps you posted and gives you information, on all general news, and its sections and Miscellany are fit for all ages.

TERM OF SUBSCRIPTION,

One year in advance	$1.00
If not paid within 6 months	1.25
And at the end of the year	1.50

AND IF YOU NEED

Letter Heads, Note Heads, Bill Heads, Envelopes, Drug Envelopes, Tags, Business Cards, Official Blanks, Blank Bonds, Posters, Briefs for the Court of Appeals etc.

GET THEM AT "THE TIMES."

JOB OFFICE,

POCAHONTAS TIMES.

Vol. VIII JOHN E. CAMPBELL, EDITOR AND PROPRIETOR. Huntersville, West Virginia, Thursday, February 12, 1891. Terms of Subscription: $1.00 PER YEAR. IN ADVANCE. No. 28.

Official Directory of Pocahontas County.

Judge of Circuit Court, A. N. Campbell.
Prosecuting Attorney, L. M. McClintic.
Sheriff, J. C. Arbogast.
Deputy Sheriff, L. W. Herold.
Cl'k Co. Court, S. L. Brown.
Cl'k Cir. Court, J. H. Patterson.
Assessor, C. O. Arbogast.
Com'rs Co. Ct. C. E. Beard, S. B. Hannah, G. M. Kee.
Co. Surveyor, Geo. Baxter

THE COURTS.

Circuit Court convenes on the first Monday in April, 3rd Monday in June and 3rd Monday in October.

County Court convenes on the 1st Tuesday in January, March, October and second Tuesday in July. July is levy term.

Vera's Escape.

Vera Lyons had been wandering through the woods for nearly three hours.

She was a student of botany, and had gathered a number of beautiful ferns, her enthusiasm leading her farther and farther into the heart of the wilderness, until at last the sudden decrease of light warned her that it was past the hour of sunset.

Now that the last rosy glow that had deceived her had faded, it seemed to darkened very fast, and in nervous trepidation she turned to seek the path.

A half-hour's walk convinced her that she had mistaken her way; she had not noted the path particularly, but now she found herself in an unfamiliar spot, a wide cleared space, in the center of which stood the ruins of an old country house, an oddly built built cottage, the lower half of which was formed of rough stones, surmounted by wooden peaks and gables.

Part of the structure had fallen into decay, but the stone foundation stood in fairly good condition, and creeping vines lent it a picturesque effort.

"This must be the place I have heard of," she thought. "The home where that fierce captain brought his lovely Spanish bride, and left her to pine in solitude. He was so jealous of her beauty, so fearful lest she should seek the society of others during his absence, poor thing! And one day—so the story goes—he came home and found her gone.

"Then he started out to find her, and in Spain he saw her in the company of a handsome young man, and, without waiting for a word of explanation, he followed and challenged him, and it the combat that followed the young man was killed.

"He proved to be the brother of the young girl, and in grief she took her own life.

"Then the captain came back, shut himself up i this lonely place and ended his days in solitude, an old servant his only companion."

"Yes, I remember the story; but really, I would have preferred visiting the place at some other time. It is getting alarmingly dark, and I'm not sure I can find my way to the road again."

Even as she glanced anxiously at the gray sky, a flash of lightening cleft its surface, while a dull rumbling sound rolled up from the distance.

"Lost in the woods and a storm coming!" she thought. Dear! how foolish I was to take so little note of my surroundings! I can not possibly reach shelter before the rain falls, unless——"

She turned her eyes upon the ruined cottage. It was not a pleasant alternative, but a sudden fall of raindrops decided her.

She gathered up her skirts and darted across the space, disappearing through the doorway just as the storm burst in all its fury.

The thundering peal shook the stone foundation, and Vera shrunk with a cry from the blinding flash that illuminated the apartment.

She saw that she was in a large, low-roofed room, from which several oaken doors opened upon inner apartments.

"What a dismal place! thought Vera. "I wonder if one of the inner rooms would not be more cheerful?"

She opened the nearest door, but shrunk back when she saw a dark recess, walled with stone lined with shelves.

"Probably a closet, but it looks like a vault," she reflected, peering into the next opening with less confidence than she had hitherto displayed. "I don't wonder the poor young wife ran away from this place! Oh, this is better, and here's a seat by the window. Why, it seems to be growing lighter; but how it rains! Suppose I have to pass the night here—well, there's no danger of any one disturbing me, and I'm not easily frightened, but I would rather be in my own cosy room. And then to-morrow——"

A warm glow crept over Vera's face, and her eyes brightened.

To-morrow would be her wedding day—to-morrow would see her the bride of a man she had not known but who had taken her heart by storm—a darkly handsome, elequent man, whose love all the weman envied her, who had seemed to be her ideal, and embodiment of all her girlish fancies.

Suddenly she was startled to hear a man's voice, borne on the air from the outer room.

"Come in, Cassy, and don't be a fool! You're drenched now. What do you think I would do to you? You act as if you were afraid of me."

Vera's heart stood still. Surely the voice was familiar, but not the cold scorn and contempt with which it was intoned.

Yet—could Harmon Dupont speak thus?

A woman's plaintive voice replied:

"It's so dark and ghostly looking. Harmon! I don't see why you brought me here. I expected to go to a hotel or your boarding place."

"Could we talk there? You must think I want my business known," said the man impatiently. "Did I know it would rain when we left the station? Come in; here's a settee."

A moment of silence, during which Vera sat upright, with her eyes fixed upon the door.

"Now we can talk matters over," said Harmon Dupont. But I warn you to be reasonable, Cassie—I'm not in a mood for nonsense."

"Reasonable!" echoed the other bitterly. "Suppose I said I had come here because you neglected me and deceived me, that my patience was worn out, and I demand my rights."

"Demand!" said Dupont with a short, ugly laugh. "No one ever gained anything by making demands of me!"

"Then I will not waste my energies. I go straight to Miss Lyons," said the girl.

"Ha! you know—"

"I know that to-morrow is the day set for your marriage, but Cassie Trueman is the woman who should stand beside you!" said the woman passionately. "Harmon, I left my home and kind parents at your bidding; I put a barrier forever between me and—and the old life. I thought you would keep your word, but I found that you were false. When you discovered that I was not the weak fool you took me for, you threw aside the mask, yet even then you would not tell me the truth, but I know you never intended to be true to your word. Harmon I could not believe that you had ceased to love me; I would have married you even when I knew what a selfish, cruel man you were, for I loved you, but when I heard you were to make another woman your wife I crushed out that love and resolved to make one last appeal, and then if you refused, go to her and tell her whom she was about to trust herself with."

"So that is your game!" sneered Dupont, and the string of his tones pierced the heart of the silent listener—it killed the fancy she called love. "And you dare tell me this—in this place!"

"Why——!"

"Oh, you may well shrink, Cassy, for you have roused the demon within. I tell you I love Vera Lyons, and I know your story would turn her from me, and rather than have that belief shattered I would still your treacherous tongue, do you hear me? Do you think I would let you come between me and happiness now? Great heavens, I would kill you first!"

"Harmon

The word ended in a muffled gasp, for he sprang upon her and clasped his arm around her slender form. Vera rushed to the doorway, forgetful of herself, but she paused when she saw that the man was not about to commit the dread deed she feared.

He had lifted the girl from her feet and borne her to the vault like closet. The next instant the door clang to, and the rusty bolt slipped into place. From the inside came a shriek, responded to by a sardonic peal of laughter from without.

"Good-by, Cassy" said Dupont, sarcastically. "I hope you'll have a pleasant night. No one comes this way once a month, and you'll have time to reflect upon your folly."

"Harmon—mercy. I'll die here!" came the muffled tones.

"Very well. I dare say it is not a good place for living."

And with a last malicious laugh, Dupont walked out.

The storm was nearly over, and evening gloom hid his form ere he crossed the clearing.

Vera waited a few moments, during which utter silence reigned. Then she crossed to the closet door and drew the heavy bolt.

"I am Vera Lyons," she said to the girl who approached her, with fear and wonder on her face.

* * * * * *

A beautiful bright morning.

Harmon Dupont approached the cottage home of his betrothed bride with a face as radiant and calm as if his conscience was as clear as that of the pure lovely girl he sought.

Very went to meet him, clad in a simple lawn dress, and there was a strange look on the fair face. She held him back with a single sweeping gesture.

"Vera, what is the matter?" he cried. "Why are you attired like this? What do these strange looks and actions mean?"

"It is your wedding day, is it not?" she said, composedly. "Well, there is a bride for you, ready and waiting. See here is a woman to whom your promises were made."

And catching back the curtain that fell before the alcove, she allowed a slender figure to step forward.

A slendor woman dressed in Vera's pale, silvery-hued wedding dress, with Vera's bridal bonnet and veil adorning her dark head.

"Cassy!" cried Harman Dupont; and then silence fell.

At last he turned to Vera, ghastly pale, but with a fine sneer upon his lips; he knew that there was not the ghost of a chance for him.

"Your ability for dramatic effect is worthy of praise," he said. "I congratulate you both."

"Yes, we need congratulations," answered Vera with a meaning glance.

"I did not think, when I entered the ruins of that old house to escape from the storm, that the act would bring about my escape from a worse fate than even you planned for this poor girl, for death would be preferable to life with you. I know now that I never really loved you. I am glad it was so, for if ever I do truly love, the heart I give will be without a scar."

Harmon Dupont did not prolong the interview. That day he disappeared, and the two women he had deceived never saw him again.

In time they were wooed and won by honest men, and the episode of that stormy eve and following morn became a vague, undisturbing memory.

TO PREVENT BEING BURNED ALIVE.—The will of Harry Moss, who is an electric man, was filed at at Elkton, Md., last week. In it he directs:

I desire that my body be dressed in reasonable apparel and placed on its back, with a pillow under its head, in a sapling pen sufficiently close to keep out mink, and with a good roof, slanting but one way, with a bottle of water on each side tightly corked, a door in the pen fastening on the inside with a latch with out any string to it. There I wish to be left forty days and nights. If after that time any one chooses to bury me he can do so, if he is certain that I am good dead, beside my father out in the graveyard at Bermuda, but I dont enjoin it upon any one to bury me at all."

AN ARKANSAS REPUBLICAN ON HIS PARTY.—W. Jasper Blackburn, editor of the Little Rock Republican, has decided to discontinue his paper, now the only Republican paper in Arkansas. Announcing his intention, he says: "We all must confess—every well informed and candid man will confess—that the Republican party, compared to what it once was, has become the mere play thing of tricksters, of few brains and smaller hearts—traders in politics for personal aggrandizement—for the purpose of pelf and plunder; indeed, has become literally a den of thieves, recalling what Christ said to the money changers who trafficked in turtle doves for gain: 'Take these things hence; and make not my Father's house a house of merchandise—about what Abraham Lincoln would say to the so-called leaders of to day could he speak from the tomb, and his words and actions, while living, still say as much with burning rebuke; and if this be true from the national standpoint—and, alas, it is only too true—what hope can be found reasonably to remain in Arkansas or for Arkansas from this standpoint is simply a question too palpable absurd to be propounded."

Young man of ambition, intelligence, energy, who choose well their work, are pretty certain to succeed in it if they persistently stick to it. Failure comes oftenest to those who lack earnest, continued endeavor, and only less frequently to those who change from one pursuit to another, and who being Jack, of all trades are master of none, and succeed in none.

Pocahontas Times.

JOHN E. CAMPBELL,
EDITOR AND PROPRIETOR.

Entered at the Post-office at Huntersville, W. Va., as second class matter.

Huntersville. W. Va.

February 12, 1891.

THE SCHOOL BOOK QUESTION.

In this issue will be found a letter from our County Supt. of schools urging that no change be made in text books, which is a question of great importance to the people of the State, and therefore should, as it does, have commensurate attention by the law making body. All the different methods and plans adopted by other States of furnishing books deserve careful consideration. The class of text books to be used also requires the most thorough and intelligent investigation. And above all keep this in mind: Do not make a change in the text books now in use unless it be deemed an an absolute necessity. By that term we mean that it is generally conceded by the teachers and county superintendents that any particular text book is out of date and has lost its usefulness; that some newer work has been proved to be its superior, and because of its greater value in helpfulness to the scholar, should supplant the former.

It cannot be too deeply impressed upon the Legislature that of all obnoxious things to parents, changes in text books are among the greatest.

If the Legislature wants to foment a general discontent that has never had its equal, let it inaugurate general and unnecessary changes in the text books of the public schools. They are costly irritating annoyances that cause more demoralization and confusion in the household, and consequently in the school, than all other causes combined.

Victims of the hard work and enormous responsibilities of the Treasury port folio—Folger, Manning, Windom, all within eight years.

In less than a year from the terrible Tracy tragedy Secretary Windom fell dead. Those who believe that such things always travel in threes are asking, who will be the next victim?

A dispatch from Omaha, Neb., says: "Business circles are much surprised by information that the prospective wheat crop is 10,000,000 bushels less than reported by the Government, and that the growing crop is in a very unpromising condition. The matter was made public by a committee reporting at the National Farmers' Allance convention. The committee was secretly formed two months ago and visited all the western wheat territory.

Will the new Secretary of the Treasury be a goldbug or will he be a free coinage man? If Mr. Harrison decides the matter upon his own judgment he is certain to be the former, but, if he takes the advice of some of the longest headed men in his party he will be the latter. But in either event Benjamin Harrison, the candidate will lose votes in the national convention of his party, and that is what is the matter with Benny at this time.

So Mr. Harrison will veto the free coinage bill, will he? Well, he could do nothing that would be more beneficial to the democratic party.

One would suppose from reading the comments of the republican press upon the pleasant exchange of courtesies between Governor and Senator elect Hill and ex-President Cleveland at a recent dinner at New York that the republicans expected these two gentlemen to meet a la Fitzsimmons and Dempsey. This is absurd. Cleveland and Hill are good friends and are both good democrats, and we have no hesitation in making the prophecy that when the next national campaign opens they will both be hard at work for the democratic nominee, whether it be one of them or some other democrat.

For A Democrat.

The Atlanta Constitution defines in these few words its position in regard to the selection of the Democratic candidate in 1892:

"We are tied to no man's cart-wheel!, but the success of the party is our first consideration.

We are first and last for a Democrat.

The nominee of the Democratic party must be a Democrat in the full sense of the word.

He must favor freecoinage, as well as tarriff reform and must signify a willingness to 'turn the rascals out.' Unless he comes up to this standard, the people might go somewhere else for a President, as they did in 1888.

We are for victory this time."

That is the ticket and that the platform demanded by the great majority of the Democracy. They are sick of humbug and Mugwumpery. They want to win and not lose in 1892, and they know that they cannot win unless the candidate is an all around, unquestionable Democrat.

The Democratic party was betrayed in 1888. Its leader in 1892 must be faithful to its wishes and deserving of its confidence. It will know how to protect itself from imposture this time.—N. Y. Sun.

WASHINGTON LETTER.

From our regular correspondent.

WASHINGTON, D. C., Feb. 6th.—Mr. Harrison made a last desperate attempt, through Senator Hoar, in behalf of the Force bill at a caucus of republican Senators held last night. In order to give the Senators who had voted against the old bill an opertunity of returning to the ranks a new bill was presented to the caucus, shorter and without some of the objectionable features of the Lodge bill. Stories differ as to the conclusion arrived at. Some say that it was decided to pass the new bill in a few days and others that no definite conclusion was reached. One republican Senator, who voted with the democrats to lay aside the gag rule resolution, is reported to have said that if it would be any satisfaction to the radical members of his party he would vote for the new bill, because he was satisfied that there was not enough time remaining to get it through the House.

The republicans seem to be getting the worst of the silver pool investigation, in spite of the evident intention of the committee to find out as little as possible. No democratic member of either branch of congress has been implicated, while two prominent republicans Senator Camron and Representative Taylor, of Illinois have admitted their guilt, and another one—Representative Ketham, of New York—is expected to do likewise. The greatest farce of the investigation was enacted this week when Owenbey, the man who claimed to have been a member of a silver pool' was brought from Chicago under arrest and put on the stand. Almost before he began his testimony, the committee decided that he must not mention the names of Senators or Representatives that he had heard named by other people as speculating in silver. That practically shut out all that portion of his evidence that might have led to finding out something, and it is believed that it was intended to have just that very effect.

The free coinage bill has been the cause of some very plain talk this week, and unless all signs fail it is going to bring on a big row in the House. Senator Cockerell said that the opposition to the bill which has suddenly sprung into life, in varous sections, but principally in the East, was inspired by telegrams from the capitol; and Reprsentative Bland charged Representative Walker, who is a Massachusetts banker, with trying to smother the bill in committee by granting endless hearings to all who asked for them. The vote of the committee shows that the bill will get no favors there, and all that the free coinage men can now do is to await a favorable opertunity to bring it diectly before the House.

Congress has granted Mr. Harrison's request and passed a bill extending the time during which an assistant may act as the head of any executive department of the Government from ten to thirty days, and now that gentleman is up to his ears in the recomendation of various would be Secretary's of the Treasury. All the big republicans from Gen. Alger and Chauncey Depew down to "me too" Platt, who is himself a candidate; are flitting in and out of Washington like restless ghosts. It is stated by republicans that Mr. Harrison has promised not to give the place to a silver man. He'll have a hard time to fill the shoes of the late Secretary Windom; Severel of those who might do so satisfactorily to the country would under circumstances connect themselves with the present unpopular administration.

Senator Turpie, in accordance with the resolution recently adopted by the Indiana legislature, has offered a joint resolution proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States, for the election of Senators by a direct vote of the people.

It looks now as if the Fifty first Congress would come to an end before the committee which has been for lo these many months making an alleged invitation of the Pension office and Commissioner Reum, makes its report. It is thought that the report is held back to keep Raum in his place as long as possible, as he is almost certain to be removed when the report goes to Mr. Harrison.

The National Legislative Council, which was provided for at the late Ocala convention of the National Farmers Aliance, is now holding its first session here. It is composed of the Presidents of the State organizations and the National President. Its principal duties are to prepare the bills that the Alliance will ask the next Congress to pass.

There is a rumor that the council has already decided upon a material modification of the sub-treasury scheme.

Speaker Reed's action in having refused to give the House committee on Foreign Affairs a day for the consideration of measures favorably reported from that committee makes it practically impossible for us to make a single step towards the reciprocity now extended by the Canadian goverment. Well, there's one consolation, Reed will be a depoed Czar in a very short time.

NOTICE.

Owing to a change in our firm Feb. 1st, '91, all persons indebted to us either by bond or acc't must pay up by that time. We mean business and it will pay you to settle at once.

Respectfully,
HEROLD & MOORE,
Frost, W. Va.

...E NEWS

...are scarce this week.

...'s creek got full Monday ...y.

...ant every body in the ...ubscribe for THE TIMES.

...forget that Saturday is ...day.

... in another column of ...r's auction sale.

... McGlaughlin, Esq., of ...alled to see us last Satur...

... all the logs, a million or ...ave gone out of Knapp's ...

...aven't heard, as yet, who ...e our next County Su... ...nt of schools.

... Guay, who has been ...e past month at Hotel by ...s about well again.

... Henry Sharp, who has ... for the past 10 days is ... better.

... L. F. Snapp will leave for ... Macon College next ...

...Geo. R. Curry, of Academy, ...enrolled as deputy organ... ...e Farmers Alliance.

... C. L. Gatewood, of Split ...ssed through town Wed...

...earn that the contract for ...sion of the Pittsburg W. ...ern railroad to the mouth ...n's river will be let on the ...

... Govener sent the following ...ons to the Senate on the ...nt, for confirmation: Briga... ...eral on the Govener's staff, ...illman, Parkersburg; Direc... ...he Penitentiary, H. B. How... ... Mason; Frank Brown, of ..., J. A. Miller, of Ohio, P. J. ..., of Preston, and Wm. ...rr. of this county.

...CE.

... person securing a fine ...n of the White Rabbit, of ...at mountains, and mailing ... of the same, carefully ...to address given below I ...e two dollars each. The ...st be entire, ears, feet, tail ...perfect.

...rs for further information, ...SCHRUK, Basic City, Va.

...ICE.

...ng bought Zane W. Moore's ... of merchandise at Frost, ... All persons indebted to ... Firm either by bond or ...ust come forward and set... ...pay up at once. My former ... will assist me in collecting ...ying up all the old Firms ...settle at once and save cost.

Very Respectfully,

H. F. HEROLD.

...y Items.

...ty of rain and mud.

...rs. Geo. McGlaughlin and ...ater, of Edray, were in ...Monday.

...R. C. Shrader, of Dilley's ...ent a few days in our city ...ek. He was accompanied ...iss Birdie Dilley and his ...ters Emda and Minnie, who ...rolled as pupils of the H. ...ad.

... Sharp and wife of Edray ...nding a few days with their ...r who has been quite sick.

... Alice Clark, who has been ...g school at Dilley's Mill has ...d home.

... O'Connell passed through ...Monday.

... Charlie Henderson has en... ...as a pupil of the M. and F. ...my.

...die Callison, took some fine ...ows to Ronceverte this week.

... don't forget to send your ...al a valentine.

...duntz is coming to the front, ...ne Troup in gown.

...ast Emmit Beard, of Laurel, ...een enrolled as a pupil in the ... F. Academy.

ALGERNON.

Company I, 25th Va. Regiment.

Below we give a list of Company I, 25th Va. Regiment, "Pocahontas Rescues," which left Huntersville, on the 18th day of May, 1861., and was mustered into Service at Grafton. Those with an x after their names died while in service:

D. A. Stofer, Capt., James H. McGlaughlin, 1st Lieut., Beverly B. Boon, 2nd Lieut., Wm. H. Carpenter, 1st, Sergent.

PRIVATES.

Timolan Auges, James Akers, Andrew C. Alderman, x Daniel Arbogast, x George Burr, x Wm. Burr, Frederick Burr, x James Bradley, x Geo. H. Chash, M. H. Corbett, P. L. Cleek, Wm. Cole, Charles Eagan, M. A. Friel, Peter Grimes, John Granfield, Potts Griffin, x C. S. Gammon, Wm. T. Gammon, Geo A. Helmick, A. G. Hamilton, x Isaac B. Haines, x Robt. A. Hannah, J. C. Hannah, x Wm. H. Henson, x C. B. Herold, x B. F. Herold, x Wm. R. Hogsett, Wm. H. Irvine, Joseph J. Jordan, x Enos Lyons, Levi Moore, x H. P. McGlaughlin, Michall Moore, x Sylvester Mitchell, x Patrick Maher, x Pat. Mararty, J. W. Mathews, Wm. F. Piles, x John W. Penel, John Piles, Cain H. Sivey, Chesley A. Simmons, B. F. Shrader, x James Shannon, Michel Shannon, Lanty W. Seebert, x Wm. W. Slaven, Louis Smith, James Swadley, x David A. Varner, x Pat. Willihan, x Michel Willihan, Eugene M. Ware, x George C. Ware, x Wm. F. Ware, C. W. Weaver, R. L. Weaver.

Our School Books.

ED. TIMES: As servant of the schools of this county, I beg leave to say through your paper that a change in the text books of our State would be very injurious to our people, as it would increase the burden of our taxation on them.

A change of books would throw the schools of the State into confusion, and compel the people to spend a large sum of money unnecessarily.

This matter is with our Legislature, and I hope that our Representative, Hon. I. B. Moore, will do what he can to prevent a change in our school books, and only fight for a reduction in the price.

M. G. MATHEWS, Co. Supt.

Fire at Ronceverte.

A big fire at Ronceverte, Greenbrier county, West Va., about four o'clock Thursday morning, Jan. 29th, destroyed severel thousand dollars worth of property, goods, etc., the losses are as follows:

The building owned and occupied by Rodes, Whiting, & Co., valued at $8,000, with $35,00 worth of stock. Insuranc $23,000.

Miss Henning's building, valued at $3,000, occupied by White as a drugstore with a stock of $2,000. Insurance $2,400. Williams & Co. with $4,000 stock—Assured for $2,500.

The upper stories of these buildings were occupied by two families, and also contained Mrs. Hunt's millinery establishment and Dr. De Vedar's office.

It is stated that Mrs. Gardner's house, next to the hotel, is destroyed and Hotel Dickson is badly scorched.

The fire originated in Messrs. Williams & Co.' store, and was accidental.

Ernest Forbes, who was convicted of assault in Baltimore is sentenced to be hanged.

Representative McKinley and Senator Spooner are mentioned among the possible successors of Secretary Windom.

The gross area of the State of West Virginia is 24,780 square miles. The water surface is given at 135 and the land surface is 24,645. Randolph is the largest county, with an area of 1,115 sq. miles. Brooke county is the smallest, her area is only 84 sq. miles.

Found Dead.

On Sunday last an unknown man was found dead in the country road near Stafford's Ferry on the north side of Cheat river. An inquest was held on Monday, but the cause of his death was not determined. There was nothing on his person that would give the least clue to his identity. No marks of violence were found on his body, and some people supposed he had poisoned himself, as on Saturday afternoon he called at severel houses near where he was found and asked for a drink of water, each time taking inordinate quantities. Judging by his queer acts some persons think he slightly deranged. Deceased was apparently about 30 years of age, of medium size, with blonde mustache and dark hair. He was dressed in rather good clothes, and his hands were soft and white, showing that he was not a laborer.

There was not a letter nor anything valuable upon his person except an empty purse. The official report of the inquest has not been received. The remains were interred at the chuachyard at Zion.—Dominion.

Destitution in Kansas.

KANSAS CITY, Jan. 31st.—W. S. Shrimp, of Lirad Township, Rawlins County Kan., was in the city yesterday soliciting aid for the destitute farmers of his county. He says the people of the township are in a deplorably poor condition, their crops have failed for three seasons, and many of them have neither food nor fuel. He says they will be unable to withstand the rigors of the winter, and will freeze and starve to death without assistance. They were unable to raise any corn last summer, and their cattle, pigs and chickens are dying from starvation. Many families have been obliged to burn their furniture for fuel. Mr. Shrimp collected enough money here yesterday to buy a carload of flour, which will be shipped immediately to the suffering people. The Rock Island Rail road is giving free transportation.

Needs A School Teacher.

A correspondent writing from Port Huron, Mich, says that one of his good republican neighbors, a tax payer and a church member, delares that—

An import tax on products of other countries brought to this to be admitted on payment of custom house duties is not a tax.

That if it is, it is paid by the exporter and that the exporter is the one the old country that has to pay the duty charged by this country before he can sell in this country.

That the higher the duty or entrance fee he has to pay the more out Government is benefited and the more of a tax the foreigner has to pay.

This man should hire a little cotton-picking darkey to come up from an Alabama plantation and open a school for his benefit.

The importer is the resident of this country who buys goods in other countries at prices there ruling, brings them over here, pays an importation tax thereon, and adds the sum thus paid as "duty" to what he has to pay for the goods, the freight, insurance, etc., and thus piles the entire kaboodle on the consumer.

The exporter is one who sends goods out of his country, and no tax is laid on what goes out of the country seeking the markets of other countries.

A friend of ours imports watches. He pays a large tax on the goods he imports. This tax, when he charges it up on the goods he sells, becomes a tax on the consumer, whoever and wherever he may be.

Our country is no longer in baby clothes. It is quite well grown, and it would benefit the entire country by free trade with all the world, and thus making [illegible] goods and opening new markets [illegible] nation.—[illegible]

The first digging began last week on the lake front, opposite Harrison street, Chicago, in connection with the World's Fair.

Young Frank Singer, son of the sewing machine man, was married to Miss Blanche Marcelin, on February 7, in Paris.

The Nebraska Legislature has adopted a memorial to Congress asking an appropriation of $1,000,000 for the relief of the sufferers in that State.

Col John C. Taylor, of Dayton, Ky., has fallen heir to estates in Ireland that makes him the Earl of Tyrone, and better still, give him property valued at $7,000,000.

A true bill of indictment has been found against the publishers of the Harrisburg Call for libels on Governor Pattison during the campaign.

An English farmer forwarded some apples to a London commission man to sell. Then he disguised himself as a costermonger, went to the dealer and bought his own apples at eleven shillings a bushel. Returning after undisguised, he was informed that his apples had been sold for four to five shillings. An interesting scene followed.

If you wish to hear a fly walk you can do it without the aid of the ungaphone provided you can find the fly at this season of the year. Having made friends with the fly spread a silk hankerchief over your ear and induce the insect to crawl across the handkerchief. As he approaches your ear you will distinctly hear a harsh, rasping sound made by the contact of the insect's feet with the filaments of silk.

A cattle dealer from the Indian Territory purchased last week of Mrs. King, of Corpus Christi, the Texas cattle queen, 15,000 two year old steers for $82,000. This is probably the largest order filled in Texas at any one time for cattle, and the King ranche is said to be the second largest in the world. It is taxed at $900,000, including 150,000 horses and cattle. Mrs. King owns several others in other portions of Texas.

It seems a little queer that those republicans who shout the loudest for a protective tariff high enough to shut out all the world, claiming that America can exist without any commercial dealings with the rest of the world, are the very men who oppose an American system of finance,—the free and unlimited coinage of silver—basing their opposition upon the ground that America cannot have free coinage without consent of the great commercial countries of Europe. We merely give this as a specimen of republican consistency. Our readers can make their own comments.

Wm. Bradley, a brakemen, who resides in Parry, Ill., heated an iron rod red hot while drunk and ran it through his body. He will die.

Governor Pattison, of Pennsylvania has vetoed the resolution instructing the Senators from that State to vote for the force bill.

With one exception all the fruit canners in California formed a trust with $5,000,000 capital, to last for fifty years.

Commissioner's Notice.

John Dilley's Adm'r. &c.

vs.

Wm. Dilley & others

Notice is hereby given to all parties interested that in pursuance of a decree of the Circuit Court of Pocahontas County, entered in the above named cause on the 21st day of October, 1890, I shall proceed as Commissioner of said Court, at my office in the town of Huntersville, W. Va., on Saturday, the 28th day of Feb., 1891, to take, state and report the following matters of account:

1st. The liens upon the land of the defendant William Dilley, with their respective amounts and priorities, showing to whom such amounts are payable.

2nd. The landsowned by said defendant William Dilley, together with the fee simple and annual rental value hereof.

3rd. The amount of consideration furnished by the defendant Wm. F. Dilley for the bond for the $475 mentioned in the trust deed, at which a copy is filed as Exhibit of the bill, marked "L."

4th. Any other matter deemed pertinent by the Commission or or required to be specially stated by any party in interest.

C. F. MOORE, Com'r.

Printers fee, $8.95. Jany 29, 4 t

Pocahontas Times.

JOHN E. CAMPBELL,
EDITOR AND PROPRIETOR.

Entered at the Post-office at Huntersville, W. Va., as second class matter.

ADVERTISING RATES.

	1 m.	3 m.	6 m.	1 yr.
One inch	$ 1 00	$ 2 00	$ 3 00	$ 5 00
Three in.	2 00	4 00	6 00	10 00
Qr. column	2 00	4 00	10 00	17 00
Half col'n	6 00	12 00	20 00	30 00
One col'n	10 00	20 00	30 00	50 00

Reading notices, not exceeding five lines, twenty-five cents for each insertion, and five cents a line for each additional line.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION.

One copy, 1 yr., $1.00 in advance; after 6 months, $1.25; after 12 months, $1.50

Those terms will be strictly complied with.

Huntersville, W. Va.

February 12, 1891.

MIKE WILL NEVER COME.

In winter and summer she comes there.

Snow, hail, rain or a blazing sun do not keep her away.

With mournful blue eyes she peers far out on the bay, then moans and breaks out into a low, melodious Irish song of home and friends far away.

Down in battery park on the wide walk along the sea wall can be seen any day a tall, neatly-dressed young woman, probably 35 years of age, walking up and down with her hands clasped in front of her as though in prayer.

Now and then she stops in her walk, mutters to herself, then takes a step toward the chain which is strung along the sea wall and, making a shade out of her right hand, she looks out on the bay.

An expression of disappointment overspreads the exquisite face as, with a sigh, she murmurs:

"No! No! Mike will come."

Then she sings a song to herself and sits for hours in blissful reverie.

Three years ago last November the young woman made her first appearance at the Battery.

She passed through Castle Garden and was registered as Mary McGrath, County Cork, Ireland.

She said she came to look for work as a domestic, and when she was sent to Mrs Boyle, the matron of the Employment Bureau, she confided in that kind hearted lady that her people at home were well off, but that they would not let her marry Mike Riordon because he was only a farmer's boy.

Then she told how she asked to be allowed to come to this country and earn her living, and how, after she had threatened to run away, her parents had consulted the priest and he had given her a letter of introduction to the good Father Callahan, and they had consented to her trying her luck in the land of promise among strangers.

She told Mrs. Boyle that Mike said he would follow her in one year, and then she hoped she would have enough money to get married and start housekeeping.

For several days Mary hung about the employment bureau sleeping in the Mission House, until finally she obtained a position with an uptown family as waitress.

On November 10 following her arrival in this country, she told her friends Mike would arrive. She went down to Castle to meet him, but he did not come. Then she returned home and there found a black bordered letter, telling her that as Mike was leaving his home, three days before the vessel sailed from Queenstown, he was accidentally killed.

Poor Mary ran out of the house raving mad.

She was found several days later wandering aimlessly through the streets, and sent to an insane asylum.

She remained there six months until her people, who had reverses, also concluded to try their luck in this country. They sought out Mary, and as she was a harmless lunatic they had no trouble in getting her discharged from the Ward's Island insane asylum.

They took her home to live with them on Pearl street, and every day since she has been domiciled there she appears in the park.

The children all know her. Even the newsboys do not taunt her, but give her flowers in the summer time, and fruits when they have them.

To the policemen in the park she is known as "Annie Rooney," and it would be unfortunate for any person to insult her when a gray coat is about.

"I pity her," said Jim Livingstone, the park officer, to a New York Journal man the other day; "she is so sad, and will not speak to any one. In the summer she spends her time between feeding the birds and looking down the bay, and even the coldest day she is here, always warmly clad watching for her Mike."

GOLDEN BRICKS.

Fools sneer and wise men investigate.

The most useful man is he who dares explore for something new.

Every life that is devoted to some good purpose is advancing heavenward.

It does not require a high degree of intellect to acquire only material wealth.

The poorest man of all is he who is not willing another should enjoy his religion, whatever it may be.

How many there are who would be unhappy if they could not find something to be miserable about.

One sure way to get into heaven for one day at least is to do a kind act to some one who does not like you.

Punishment of those weak enough to commit crime will never check the flow of the stream.

Thought and force moove the world, while doubt and idleness are death.

To think his own think a man need not prevent his neighbor thinking and enjoying his.

The best way to please God is as to become a good example.

Man has no right to use his superior strength of thought or body to rob those who are weaker than him self.

Beware of every man who obtains by fraud, no matter what his cloak or excuse.

No man has a right to eat his fill while his neighbor is hungry.

Man cannot give to man any right to rob any one of God's creature here on earth or elsewhere.

Till the church can speak the truth and this outside of creed, it can never cope with politics nor perfect the morality of the world.

A revival of religion need not be a revival of hate, spite or bitterness against any one who does not see and think as you do.

Religion may be expensive for the poor, but it will be less expensive and more beneficial than either liquor or tobacco.

WHAT MUSTACHES TELL.

There is a great deal of character in the moustache. As the form of the upper lip and the regions about it has largely to do with feelings, pride self reliance manliness vanity and other qualities that give self control, the moustache is connected with the expression of these qualities or the reverse.

When the moustache is ragged and, as it were, flying hither and thither, there is a lack of self control. When it is straight and orderly the reverse is the case, other things, of course, taken into account.

If there is a tendency to curl at the outer ends of the moustache, there is a tendency to ambition, vanity and display; when the curl turns upward there is a geniality combined with a love of approbation; when the inclination is downward there is a more sedate turn of mind, not accompanied with gloom.

It is worthy of remark that good-natured men will in paying with the moustache invariably give it an upward inclination, whereas cross-grained or morose men will pull it obliquely downward.—Northwest Magazine.

HE HAD AN OBJECT.

"Gentlemen," he said, as he approached the four of us seated in a row in the waiting room, "it grinds me to the soul to be obliged to ask favors of strangers, but I've got to do it right here and now."

"What's your case? asked the man on my left, who looked like a Judge.

"I've lost a wife and five children."

"Well?"

"Then my house burned down and I got no insurance."

"Well?"

"Then I fell out of a tree and broke my leg, and didn't walk for a year."

"Well?"

"Then I sold a piece of real estate—the only property I had—and a fellow robbed me of every cent."

"Well?"

"Then I got a heavy cold, consumption set in, and one of my lungs is gone and the other going."

"Well?"

"Well, I'm ragged, poor, hungry and sick, and want money to buy a supper and pay for a night's lodging."

"I see. You are hard up indeed. I should think you were tired of life."

"I have but one object in living."

"And that?"

"When I was a boy, 10 years old, and lived in Vermont I stole a watermelon from a farmer. My crime was never discovered, but it has weighed like lead on my conscience, and I know it has hastened my end. I want to live long enough to enable me to return to Vermont, go to that farmer's house, and, standing before him, say:

"'Mr. Pritchard, thirty-nine years ago, when I was but a giddy boy, I stole a watermelon of you. I want to be forgiven before I die, and I want to make such reparation as I can. Here is $30,000 in gold. Take it and buy a steamboat, and say I am forgiven."

"You are an infernal dead beat and liar!" roared the Judge as the man stood in an attitude of humility, but we chipped in half a dollar apiece, and sent him away rejoicing.

DIDN'T WANT ANY SOAP.

"You can either beat a farmer as slick as grease or you can't beat him at all," said the patent hay fork man as we were talking about his adventures in the rural regions. "That is he his either gullible or oversuspicious. Some will refuse a good thing and some will snap at a swindle. I think I can illustrate my declarations right here, or at least one of them. The man in the seat over there is a farmer."

"I should say so."

"And he is one of the sort who suspects every stranger. Watch me try him."

He took a cake of toilet soap from his satchel and going over to the farmer, saluted him in a pleasant manner, and added:

"I have a new make of soap here which I am introducing to the public. It is worth fifteen cents a cake but I make the price only five."

"Don't want it," was the gruff reply.

"With every cake goes a $5 greenback, a gold bracelet, the deed of a town lot in Kansas, a pocket knife, a pair of eyeglasses and a solid gold ring."

"Don't want 'em, sir?"

"As I want your opinion of the soap I will give it to you."

"I won't take it!"

"But, sir, in order to introduce it into your neighborhood I will give you 100 cakes free, and at the same time leave five watches and five deeds to town lots."

"Look a here!" shouted the farmer, as he jumped up and spat on his hands. "You go away from me or I'll mash you! I'm on to your tricks old man, and if you think you have picked up a hayseed, you are barking up the wrong tree."

And the hay-fork man had to move lively to escape the blow leveled at his nose.

SUBSCRIBE

FOR THE——

POCAHONTAS

TIMES,

Every man in the County should take it, and patronize home industry. It sustains your rights, and works for the advancement of your county, which no city paper will do. It gives you the news from all parts of the county, which you could not get otherwise. It furnishes matters of interst to the Merchant, Farmer and Mechanic. It keeps you posted and gives you information, on all general news, and its sections and Miscellany are fit for all ages.

TERM OF SUBSCRIPTION,

One year in advance	$1.00
If not paid within 6 months	1.25
And at the end of the year	1.50

AND IF YOU NEED

Letter Heads, Note Heads, Bill Heads, Envelopes, Drug Envelopes, Tags, Business Cards, Official Blanks, Blank Bonds, Posters, Briefs for the Court of Appeals etc.

GET THEM AT "THE TIMES"

JOB OFFICE,

POCAHONTAS TIMES.

Vol. [illegible] JOHN R. CAMPBELL, EDITOR AND PROPRIETOR. Huntersville, West Virginia, Thursday, February 26, 1891. Terms of Subscription: $1.00 PER YEAR IN ADVANCE. No. 30.

The Woman in Black.

It is a good thirty years since that cold winter during which I, Wyllis Hunter, of New York, found myself detained in London on special business for the firm of which I was then a member. It was the winter of 1854-55. People were talking a great deal about the war in the Crimea, and wagers had been won and lost concerning the time required for the taking of Sebastopol, and Queen Victoria was a bright young matron, with her handsome husband always at her side, and her brood of little children around her.

I was very solitary in the great British metropolis, and after business hours, and when I had finished my late dinner, I usually went to some theatre, or another. I was fond of the drama, and the London stage at that time afforded a good deal that was worth seeing. So I visited all the principal theatres, one after the other, and to some of them I went repeatedly. It was at one of the leading theatres that I first saw, one evening while watching with languid attention a play that I had already witnessed some three or four times, the Woman in Black.

She sat near me in one of the orchestra chairs. She was a decidedly striking-looking person, though she was neither young nor handsome. Tall and gaunt, with strongly-marked features and irongray hair and large, gray, restless eyes, her appearance was sufficiently strange to attract my attention at once. She was dressed in black—rigid, uncompromising black—without any relief of color or of ornament, or even that [illegible] common in those days of a bright opening of the corsage below the throat.

She was always alone. As soon as the performance was over she would envelop her head and throat in a scarf of black lace, and would glide out into the night [illegible].

She never spoke to anybody, and nobody ever recognized her, though those restless, glittering eyes went hither and thither.

The month of December wore away and at last came Christmas eve. The arrival of holidays intensified the dreariness of my position, and I thought longingly and with acute pangs of homesickness, of the dear ones across the sea. I could not but picture to myself the bright, sparkling winter days, when a cloudless sky looks down upon a spotless world, the earth garbed in ermine and the heavens our blaze of azure and gold.

To add to my discomfort and to lengthen my longings for my native land, the weather had assumed the very worst aspect of which the winter climate of London is capable.

[illegible]

The Spanish dancers, with the celebrated Pepita Nunn at their head, were simply wonderful, and excelled everything that I had heard about them. I enjoyed my evening immensely, and quite forgot that it was Christmas eve, and that I was far away from home in a foreign land, where I knew scarcely anybody, and where the winter fogs made locomotion at times not only difficult and disagreeable, but positively dangerous.

As I stood under the arcade in front of the theatre, I could see no more of the street than if a wall of granite rose before me. Cabs and cabmen had alike disappeared in the dingy depths of the darkness, and had there been hundreds of vehicles just in front of me, I could not have seen them. Of course, there was nothing left for me to do but to try to regain my lodging on foot. Unfortunately they were full two miles away, and though I knew my way about London pretty well when I could see where I was going, a journey through the black, dense darkness of that impenetrable fog presented itself as a hopeless impossibility.

There were no hotels then as now in the neighborhood of the Haymarket, or I might have taken refuge in one of them. I did not know enough about the neighborhood to venture to ask for lodging at any private house. I was fond of jewelry in those days, and my diamond studs and sleeve buttons and my elaborate double watch-chain presented too many temptations for theft for me to feel at all at ease respecting my personal safety [illegible] in the black obscurity. I stood plunged in meditation and in perplexity. But suddenly a light touch on my shoulder caused me to look around, and I saw, standing beside me, the Woman in Black.

"So, my fellow-spectator of so many evenings," she said, "you find yourself puzzled as to how you shall return home, doubtless. Do you live far away from here? Perhaps I may be able to give you some directions."

I named the address, which was in Harley street, near the Regent's Park.

"Poor [illegible]" she cried; "you never in the world will be able to get there to-night. The cabmen have all [illegible] work and have gone home, and it would be dangerous for you to strike your way back on foot."

"What in the world am I to do?" I exclaimed in my perplexity.

She paused and seemed to muse for a moment. "Well," she said, as if to herself, "I'll risk it. I have a son of my own in a foreign land, and should he get into any such distress, I should hope [illegible] key which she took from her pocket.

[illegible]

I followed her into the hall, and then the door was closed behind us. She ushered me at once into the front room on the ground floor. It was furnished as a dining room, with massive, old-fashioned mahogany chairs and table and sideboard.

A good fire was blazing in the grate and two gas-burners illuminated the whole apartment with their cheerful radiance. Altogether more comfortable refuge from the cold and the black fog of the winter night without could hardly be imagined. My hostess bustled about in the energy of her welcome, brought a great easy chair up to the fire for me and seemed bent on making me as much at home as possible.

"Will you have supper—some sandwiches and cold meat, or a biscuit and a bit of cheese? The tray's all ready, and can be brought up in a moment. No? Then I'll have a fire lighted in the bedroom that you are to occupy, and which is on the ground floor, just back of the dining room, in fact."

She left the room without heeding the little speech of thanks that I tried to deliver, but speedily returned with a long, white garment hanging over her arm.

"Your room is all ready, and here is a night gown for you to use," she said, touching a work-basket that stood on a side table and from which a mass of white work protruded; "I make these garments myself, and I have hard work to keep up the supply."

"Why, what become of them?" I asked, more out of politeness than from curiosity.

"They get lost—once worn, I am not aware to see them again," responded the Woman in Black.

Then she led the way to the back bed room, a small but well furnished room, with a well barred window which looked out, she told me, upon a paved yard with a stable beyond. The bed already turned down, showing the white sheets, was placed against the wall, opposite the window. A smoking glass of whisky punch stood on a small tray on a table in the centre of the room.

"Here is your nightgown," said my hostess, leaving the garment that she carried upon a chair; "and there," she continued, pointing with a smile to the tumbler of punch, "is your nightcap."

My first act was to close and lock the door securely. And then I sat down upon the nearest chair and meditated upon the situation.

My inspection had practically reassured me, but I could not make up my mind to drink the steaming punch. I left it to waste its tempting odors on the air, and with due deliberation prepared to go to bed.

The nightgown left for me was [illegible]

[illegible]

the water. And suddenly I emerged, spent, chilled, and half suffocated with the mephitic vapors of the vault, into the free open air, on the bosom of the Thames.

The fog still hung above the river. But a party of men, on a barge moored near the shore, were celebrating Christmas eve, with much drink and many songs, and their holiday merriment undoubtedly saved my life. Guided by the sound of voices, I contrived to reach the barge, and my despairing cry for help brought me ready assistance. I was taken on board, was wrapped in a rough great-coat belonging to one of the bargemen, and was plied with hot gin and water till all the ill effects of my sudden immersion had disappeared. I spent the rest of the night in the cabin.

The next morning I insisted on one of these good fellows accompanying me back to my lodging in the first available cab that would be obtained; and though I am not wealthy, I contrived to spare for my preservers a respectable lot of sovereigns, so as to make that Christmas Day a memorable one for them for some time to come.

When I went with my story to the police office in Scotland Yard my statement was at first received with a mild incredulity that was very exasperating. But this tone was changed to one of conviction when I produced the nightgown that I had worn on that terrible Christmas eve, and for which I had left in exchange my watch and chain, my diamond studs and sleeve buttons and some £15 in gold and notes, to say nothing of a new dress suit and my best overcoat. The functionary to whom I showed the garment examined it attentively. Then he called to a subordinate:

"Higgins!"

"Yessir."

"Bring me that lot of nightgowns."

They were brought and were spread out before me—five in all. They were in every respect similar to the one in my possession.

"Each one of those nightgowns," quoth the Chief Inspector, "was taken from the body of a drowned man picked up in the Thames. You, sir, come here a living man with another. That completes the half dozen."

And I think, had I drunk the glass of punch that my hostess prepared for me, I, too, should not have been left alive to tell the tale.

The researches of the police to discover the whereabouts of the house to which I had been conducted proved wholly ineffectual. I frequented assiduously the different first-class theatres for a month or more, hoping to meet my mysterious hostess, and so to be able to hand her over to justice. But all my efforts were vain.

Never again did I come across the Woman in Black. Never again have I spent such a Christmas Eve.

Stanley says that certain portions of Africa will be worthless on account of the ravages of the grasshoppers. In one instance he saw a column of young grasshoppers ten miles broad by thirty long marching down a valley, and when the grass was fired against them, they were thick enough to smother the flames.

Pocahontas Times.

JOHN E. CAMPBELL,
EDITOR AND PROPRIETOR.

Entered at the Post-office at Huntersville, W. Va., as second class matter.

ADVERTISING RATES.

	1 m.	3 m.	6 m.	1 yr.
One inch	$ 1 00	$ 2 00	$ 3 00	$ 5 00
Three in.	3 00	4 00	6 00	10 00
Qr. column	5 00	6 00	10 00	17 00
Half col'n	6 00	12 00	20 00	30 00
One col'n	10 00	20 00	30 00	50 00

Reading notices, not exceeding five lines, twenty-five cents for each insertion, and five cents a line for each additional line.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION.

One copy, 1 yr., $1.00 in advance; after 6 months, $1.25: after 12 months, $1.50

Those terms will be strictly complied with.

Huntersville. W. Va.

February ,30 1891.

The McCurdy House in Covington has been sold for $10,000, possession given on the 1st of March.

Will Mr. Harrison make speeches on the financial question when he visits the Pacific coast this spring?

"Fighting Bob" Kennedy, of Ohio, should make a reply to Senator Quay's speech.

If Mr. Harrison can stand the coat of white wash that has been given to Commissioner of Pension Raum, he can stand anything.

Mr. Cleveland has written a letter against the free and unlimited coinage of silver. No flies on that man's nerve.

New Foundland wants to join the Union at once, whether or note and she hasen't even asked the consent of either John Bull or Uncle Sam. Better wait awhile, brethren. There are some little formalities that must be gone through with first.

The death of Admiral Porter and General Sherman, the two last great commanders on the Union side, during the late Civil war, reminds us that death has been kinder to the great commanders on the confederate side, of whom Johnson, Longstreet, Early, Gordan, and Beauregard are still living.

These hide bound high protection republicans who are just now shouting themselves hoarse over the little reciprocity treaty that Mr. Blaine has negotiated with Brazil, seem to forget that reciprocity a d free trade are synonymous. But they are, all the same.

Peter Jackson, the colored pugilist, says he does not like prize fighting and intends to quit it, but that before doing so he intends to challenge John L. Sullivan to a mill for the championship, and that the Boston pugilist must fight him or surrender.

What cowards be these congressmen. Voting by tellers the house of Representatives by a large majority voted for giving each member of that body a clerk at $1 200 a year, but upon a roll call upon the same question it was overwhelmingly defeated. The reason is obvious. In the first place the vote was by acclamation and the members were not individually recorded, while in the latter it was by roll call, and each member's vote was permanently recorded in the Congressional Record.

Senator Quay has at last broken his long silence with a speech making a general denial of all the charges made against him. This will convince nobody of his innocence. Why if he could have proven himself in a court of justice not guilty, did he not take advantage of the invitation extended him by the New York World and other wealthy newspapers in bring a suit for libel? Crooked people seldom admit their guilt, not even when convicted by the courts.

Judge William Lewis, of Harlan county, Ky., was killed by his son, Sidney Lewis, on the 12th, seven bullets having been shot into his body. Judge Lewis had been a terror to the desperadoes of that county and among them was young Lewis. He had threatened his father's life, and as a protection to himself he had his son placed under peace bonds. He visited his father, with the result above stated.

Mrs Grover Cleveland has undertaken, in connection with a member of patriotic ladies, a crusade in which she and they are entitled to the good wishes of every America n who loves his country, and he is a poor stick who doesn't. The object of these worthy women is to persuade our young men and women of the absurdity of aping foreign customs in talk, deportment and dress. The campaign was opened in New York city by a stirring lecture on the formative period of American history.

The men who achived reputation are usually the ones that take care of themselves. Senate, Gorman, the great democratic leader of the Senate, gets up every morning at 6 o' clock' sits one hour at his dinner, and never allows himself to be interrupted when at his meals. He never uses either tobacco or liquors in any shape, and makes it a rule after a bath, which is taken daily always at the same hour, to take a long walk in the open air. No physician could give you better health rules to follow than these.

The republicans in Congress are evidently determined to make hay while the sun shines. The latest subsidy scheme is the adoption by the Senate of an amendment to the Diplomatic Appropriation on bill granting a subsidy of $3,000,000, in annual installments of $250,000, to a company that proposes to lay a cable between San Francisco and the Sandwich Island. All this business will be stopped when the Government is controlled by the democrats.

The new York Herald on Thursday interviewed by its representative, the Democrats in the Legislatures of twenty six States and one Teritory as to their preference for President in 1892 as between Hill and Cleveland. The result showed a vote of 1,515 for Cleveland, 199 for Hill and 276 scattering or doubtful.

The Democrats in the Legislature looked upon as representative Democrats and their expressions as being practically the expressions of the people they represent. With the single exception of New York, where the vote stood: Hill 31, Cleveand 2, scattering or doubtful 47, every State gave Cleveland a large majority. In West Virginia the vote was Cleveland 56, Hill 5. The Herald's headlines over the various telegrams express in a few words the contents of the telegrams, are as follows:

Gov. Hill apparently the favorite of New York Legislators.

Cleveland almost monopolizes Massachusetts.

Little Rhody a Cleveland State.

Cleveland divides Texas with all others.

Alabama unanimous for Cleveland.

Kentucky knows Cleveland only.

Colorado gives Cleveland the lead.

Nobody but Cleveland for Wisconsin.

Missouri Democrats undecided.

Ohio prefers Cleveland to Hill.

Kansas Democrats in restless moods.

Harrisons State a Cleveland stronghold.

Great strength of Cleveland in Illinois.

Arizona gives Cleveland the preference.

Blaine's State unanimous for the man who beat him.

Michigan solid for Cleveland with a proviso.

Hill has one friend in Nebraska.

Nearly four to one for Clevaland in Arkansas.

Cleveland a strong favorite in North Carolina.

South Dakota almost unanimous for Cleveland.

Two men in Minesota favo Hill.

Hill not in sight of Cleveland in Conneticut.

Montana for Cleveland three to one.

West Virginia overwhelming for Cleveland.

A single vote for Hill in Washington.

Big lead for Cleveland in Pennsylvania.

Hill scarcely in it in Tennessee.

Oregon would rather have Cleveland than Hill.

There are said to be a flood of counterfeit silver dollars in circulation. They are made of Babbit metal, washed with silver, and are very near the same weight and appearance of the real dollar.

Fiduciaries.

The accounts of the following fiduciaries are before me for settlement, viz:

Uriah Hevener, adm'r of David McGlaughlin, dec'd.

James D. Kerr, Ex'or of Washington Nettingham, dec

Geo. W. McCarty, Adm'r of Jacob McCarty dec'd.

Perry A. Buzzard, adm'r of John M. Buzzard, decd.

Wm. Aldridge, Adm'r of Joseph Rogers, dec'd.

L. M. McClintic.
Com'r of Acc'ts.

HOME NEWS

—Several cases before justice Grose lately.

—Drummers have been numerous in town fore some time.

—Levi Gay, Esq., of Marlingtan, was in town Tuesday.

—We are having some fine weather for the time of year.

—The croak of the frog is heard in the distant swamp.

—Joe McNeel, Esq., of Academy was in town the first of this week.

—Mr. Geo. McGlaughlin of Edray, was in too see us Tuesday.

—Attorney C. F. Moore has returned from a months sojourn at Clifton Forge.

—Mr. N. J. Brown, of Mill Point, was in the city the first of the week and called to see us.

—John Grogg contrator on the bridge abutments, has returned to finish his job.

—Mess. Mitchel McGlaughlin of near this place, and A. M. McGlaughlin of Marlington are, we understand in Monroe Co. this week prospecting for a farm.

—Dr. M. Wallace of Mill Point is very sick, with something like heart disease. Dr. Patterson of this place is attending him, with other physicians.

—Dr. James McGraw, of Brooklyn N. Y. died suddenly on the 17th inst. He was a brother of Col. Jno. T. McGraw, of Grafton who is at the head of the large land purchases recently made in our county.

—Charlotte Scott, the old colored nurse of Att'y H. S. Rucker, of this place, and the woman who contributed the first $5.00 paid toward a monument for Abraham Lincoln, in Washington, and whose name is on that account inscribed in bronze on the base of it, died recently.

—"Jack the Ripper" has been captured, and now a syndicate of American newspaper publishers are trying to purchase him in order to bring him to this country and turn him loose among delinquent subscribers.

—The boom at Marlington seems to be on. Extensive excavations are now making by E. G. McNeil for the erection of a large store. As this store is to be across the river from the town, we suppose it is his intention to do business in the corporation with out paying corporation taxes.

—An experienced school teacher says that pupils who have access to newspapers at home, when compared with those who have not, are are better readers, better spellers, better gramarians, better punctuators, and obtain a practical knowledge of geography in almost half the time it requires the others. The news paper is decidedly an important factor in modern life.

—In the House of Delegates last week. Mr. Moore of this county offered a resolution asking the Auditor to furnish a statement showing the amount of monies paid into the State Treasury by commissioners of school lands during the last ten years, the statement to include the name and county of each commissioner making the payment and the amount paid. Adopted.

—The bill to prohibit the sale of "cigarettes or opium in any form to minors under 16" at last passed the house. "Cigars, tips, cheroots, stogies and tobacco" were stricken out. They are made in this state and the interests of the people who make them are of more importance in the minds of some people than the health of our boys. If cigarettes and opium were produced in West Virginia in large quantities the bill wouldn't have passed at all. The almighty dollar and so called "business interest" outweigh health, morality, decency and every thing else with some people.

Hillsboro Happenings.

Mr. Abraham Sydenstricker and wife, who have been in China for ten years, are visiting her parents at this place.

Mr. Andrew McGlaughlin, of Marlington, was in town Monday.

Misses Mary and Pauline McNeel, who have been visiting at Staunton have returned home.

Mr. Joe Gay, of Elk, spent Monday night in town.

Mr. Sam Sheets, one of the lumberman on Driscol's drive had the misfortune to get his leg so badley broken, that it had to be amputated.

W. H. Overholt, has returned from a business trip to Ronceverte.

Misses Addie Williams and Georgia Collison have entered as pupils of the H. T. School, also Page Barlow in the M. & F. Academy.

A terrible excitement prevails among the Academy boys. Foot ball in progress.

DARKNESS AND DAYLIGHT.

Green Bank Items.

Rev. W. H. Ballengee preached his last sermon for the Conference year last Sunday. He will leave for conference the 28th inst. Should he be sent back a hearty welcome awaits him.

The ground is bare of snow and the weather is nice at this time.

Our heart was pained to learn of the sad accident which befell Mr. Sam Sheets on the log drive, that losing his leg.

J. H. Curry, Jr., is on the sick list.

There will be an entertainment at the Green Bank church on Friday night 27th inst. at 6 o'clock. There will be reading, recitations and addresses, also ice cream and cake will be served. Proceeds to used for missionary purposes.

Dr. C. L. Austin, of this place is in Florida.

Dr. J. P. Mooman, who has been sick is out again.

The roads have been opened across the Alleghany mountain.

We understand the Green Bank tannery will be opened up in a short while.

Success to your paper.

JUDY.

Marlinton Movements.

The floating camp, under the pilatage of Capt. Boies, passed down on St. Valentine's day. A night was passed at Marlinton. It is better than a circus to see the feats of agility played by the men, takling immense logs on the shallows and rapids. It is doubtful whether the famous Blondin could handle him self on rolling pine, as well as many of these woodsmen can.

Pilot McCollum, started the last raft on Wednesday morning. About next spring a year hence, some of the material be took away, will be found at Edray, Huntersville, Buckeye and elsewhere, as fork handles, buggy shafts, and the like. Why should this be thus, and all these and many more things not be fixed up nearer the original stump.

One of the interesting things observed in the gay cavalcade of of young men, from Randolph on their way to and from Lewisburg, as pupils of the Lewisburg Collegiate Institute. It is among the possibilities that school, or some other will be at Marlinton should matters pan out to suit all around. Strange as it may seem, thing are working, and resolute people are talking.

A red flag, attended by three or four persons, is seen passing in various direction, and notes are being taken very copiously, and when they are printed, perhaps, your correspondent will be able to give you a pointer or two.

What your correspondent meant in reference to Mr. Thomas Sawyer, was, that much depended on him, whether the railroad from Dunmore would go to Frost or to Huntersville. These points should see that his influence should be secured, in such a way as to give all a fair showing. No one should desire a better friend for he is, "just what he is," and he means for the best.

It is about time O. C. Casional was fixing up another joke, as foxes and coons have some out.

With many kind wishes,

Yours as ever,

J. K. S.

PARKERSBURG, Febuary 18.—The grand jury of the circuit court brought in 150 more indictments this afternoon, making over 400 in all, and the jury is still grinding. Crap shooters, dice shooters, dice throwers, gamblers, saloon keepers and houses of ill fame got it bad to day. If the number of indictments hold good three-fourths of the saloons will have to quit business. Several car loades of exodusting gamblers and sports are in Marietta and Zanesville. They keep the wires hot making inquires. Something like 200 mules are in the hands of officers for runaways; who will be received on their return with heavy fines and imprisonment. The town is all torn, up and everybody wants to know when the grand jury is going to let up.

WASHINGTON LETTER.

From our regular correspondent.

WASHINGTON, D. C., Feb. 20th.—Quite a political sensation has followed the announcement of Senator Gorman, whose political astuteness cannot be gainsaid, that be was not and would not under any combination of circumstances be a candidate before the democratic national convention next year, and that he favored the nomination of ex-president Cleveland as the strongest and most available man and proposes to do all in his power to get him nominated. It is yet too early to see what effect this announcement will have, upon those democratic Senators and Representatives who have expressed the opinion that Mr. Cleveland's letter against the free coinage of silver has destroyed his availability as a candidate, and what adds to the interest of the situation is the fact that some of these gentlemen have been, since the publication of Mr. Cleveland's letter, strongly in favor of nominating Senator Gorman.

It seems strange that three democratic Senators should have cast their votes for such a palpable "job" as that contained in the Senate amendment to the diplomatic appropriation bill, which gives a subsidy of $3,000,000 to the company, which as yet only exists on paper, that proposes to lay a cable between San Francisco and the Sandwitch Islands, but they did. It is not believed that the House will concur in amendment, at any rate no democrat should vote to do a thing so foreign toall the principals of the democratic party.

Rumors have been flying thick and fast this week anent the new Secretary of the Treasury. One day it was Representative Cannon, the next Clarkson and today, it is ex Gov. ("Calico Charley") Fostor, of Ohio. It is believed that Mr. Harrison has determined upon the man, and his nomination is looked for every day.

Senator Quay's much advertised speech of vindication fell as flat in the Senate as one of Senator Blair's educational harrangues, and he has gone to Florida to seek consolation in fishing.

The general deficiency bill is this year $36,000,000. Is it strange that the surplus has disappeared!

The international copyright bill has been passed by the Senate with several amendments, which makes its becoming a law at this session very doubtful.

Mr. Harrison and all of his cabinet, except Secretary Proctor, went to New York to attend Gen. Sherman's funeral. They returned last night.

The republicans in the House are so much alarmed lest the wicked democrats should interfere with their plans during the closing rush of the session, that telegraphic appeals have been sent to all absent republicans begging them to Come and remain until the end of the session. What they are wanted for is to pass the subsidy shipping bill, which is opposed by nearly all of the democrats.

Representative-elect Jerry Simpson, and several of his Farmers Alliance to the colleagues in the next House, are in town. They are the recipients of a great deal of attention at the capitol.

The House committee on coinage today reported the free coinage bill to the house, but the general belief seems to be that its friends will not succeed in getting it before the House, but they intend to try very hard to do so.

Senator Plumb desparing of getting his joint resolution providing for the violation of existing law by the transfer of the employes of the Census bureau to the classified department service without the formality of a civil service examination, has offered it as an amendment to the sundry civil appropriation bill.

It is commented upon rather unfavorably that congress did not adjourn the day of Admiral Porter's funeral.

Probably the most disagreeable legislative duty ever performed by Senator Ingalls was the presentation by him this week of the credentials of John A. Peffer, Senator-elect from the State of Kansas for the term beginning March 4, next.

Notwithstanding the almost daily reiteration of the charge that somewhere in the neighborhood of one forth of the enormous amount of money paid out by the Pension bureau is paid on fraudulent claims no republican in or out of Congress has proposed an ivestigatien for the purpose of purging the rolls of such names as may be shown to de there fraudulently. This, as well as other things will be thoroughly looked into by the next House.

Representative Payton, of Illinois, was elected Speaker protem of the House, this week, during the sickness of speaker Reed.

The republicans are beginning to be frightened at the prospect of losing control of the Senate. It is now regarded as certain that the McKinley tariff law will be repealed outright or greatly modified in 1893, if not next year.

The increase in the white population of the South shows comparatively little difference from 1880, while then egro increase is but little over one-third of what it was ten years ago, although in the total is included the State of Arkansas, which has received the largest immigration of negroes. Additional returns only confirm the first statement that some million odd negroes were deliberately omitted from the census in the South in order to decrease the Southern representation in Congress and the electoral vote. —New Orleans Times-Democrat.

The Philadephia Evening Tela'graph, an independent republican paper, expresses the opinion that the annual expenditure for pensions is likely to reach $200,000,000 before it stops growing. It is already over $135,000,000. The farther we get away from the war the bigger the pension list becomes. What an anomaly! Pentioners, instead of dying out, continue to multiply. How long will the taxpayers of the country continue to submit to this bare faced swindle!

Accoding to the New York Herald Mr. Blaine's reciprocity treaties will not reciprocate.

A lump of pure gold weighing eleven ounces without any gravel or dirt about it, was found at the Hearne and Hathcock mine, near Albemarle, N. C. It was found only a few feet below the surface.

Pocahontas Times.

JOHN E. CAMPBELL,
EDITOR AND PROPRIETOR.

Entered at the Post-office at Huntersville, W. Va., as second class matter.

ADVERTISING RATES.

	1 m.	3 m.	6 m.	1 yr.
One inch	1 00	$ 2 00	$ 3 00	$ 5 00
Three in.	3 00	4 00	6 00	10 00
Qr. column	5 00	6 00	10 00	17 00
Half col'n	6 00	12 00	20 00	30 00
One col'n	10 00	20 00	30 00	50 00

Reading notices, not exceeding five lines, twenty-five cents for each insertion, and five cents a line for each additional line.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION.

One copy, 1 yr., $1.00 in advance; after 6 months, $1.25; after 12 months, $1.50

These terms will be strictly complied with.

Huntersville, W. Va.

February 30 1891.

HE WAS FROM INDIANNY.

Just as the hour of 3 was announced to a more or less thankful people, a fashionably attired man of amiable port, rubicund countenance denoted familiarity with flesh pots and wassail bowls, sauntered forth from the portals of a prominent hotel, buttoned his fur trimmed top coat around his ample form, lighted an imported Garcia, drew on a pair of chocolate colored kids, swung a silver headed stick of abnormal size joyously through the atmosphere, and walked jauntily down the street towards the Detroit River.

His whole appearance indicated boundless self-satisfaction, and an air of lo! it is well seemed to radiate from his being. And why, indeed, should he not so demean himself for he had dined and wined well? An elaborate feast of the market's choicest delicacies had been washed down by copious draughts of Pommery. Inasmuch as he has gratified the inner man with epicurian delights, his heart found time to give thanks that the recent flury in financial circles had not affected his pecuniary standing, and that the exigencies of the times had not cast his lot in that wild and woody allotment of this great country where the noble red man taps his gun barrel lovingly, capers merrily in the mazy whirl of the ghost dance, and smiles with fond anticipation as young man with-the fell hand prophetically announces the soon coming of the Messiah.

At the corner of Woodward and Jefferson avenues our friend's glance rested casually on the form of a thin-faced gaunt formed man of middle age, whose threadbare, well worn garments clung close to his figure as he stood shivering and crouching in the cold, raw air. His hands were thrust deep into his trouser's pockets, the patched collar of his rusty coat was pulled close around his ears and his shabby hat of four distinct colors was drawn down over his almost purple ears. There was a hungry look in his faded blue eyes that betokened a uneasy yearning within, and n his unique entirety there was a mute protest against the spirit of tha day. Our friend of the bon viant mien walked up to this ill favored brother and with a resounding slap on his stooped sholders queried of him thusly: "I say, old man, have you been to dinner?"

"Naw," was the melancholy response.

"Then come with me, my good fellow" and I will see to it that the cravings of your unoccupied stomach are forthwith satisfied. I have no family board to sit myself at on this day of national Thanksgiving, no circles of beauty, winsome faces to gaze on while I do justice to the kitchen's delights for I am alone in the world. But the day will linger far more sweetly in my memory if I have the happy consciousness of having made one fellow mortal happy, so come with me."

A short walk brought the conspicuously dissimilar pair to the portals of a swell restaurant. In they walked, and in a trice were seated at a small table dainty and inviting with its profusion of damask cutlery. A well-drilled, attentative waiter was soon at elbow, and a few whispered direction were sufficient to send him hurrying towards the region where the white capped chief reigns supreme.

In short order the waiter returned, bearing on high a tray covered with dishes of all sizes and descriptions. The table was soon groaning under its weight of piping hot edible. And then our hungry brother fell to, and what fell work he wrought with that dinner, oh my country men. Duck with jelly quickly followed turkey with cranberry sauce. Venison larded with green peas succeeded, and then a dozen blue points, hitherto overlooked, were stowed away. Entrees, vegetables, desert, were all duly attended to, and as a grand finale four cupfuls of verry black coffee were tossed off even as the driver of a beer wagon would quaff a "schooner" of amber. Handing the surfeited banquet a cigar, our friend of the beguning of the narrative handed the waiter a quarter, stepped up to the cashier's desk paid a good-sized check and walked out on the street.

"By Jove, old boy," he exclamed, rubbing his hands gleefully together, "how it pleased me to see you eat. I shall not forget you in many a day."

"No, nor I you nuther," was the reply. "I'd like fust rate to spend the ballance of the day with you, but I've got three car loads o' cattle over in Winsor that I brung from my place over in Indianny, and I've got to git over thar an' see to it that those gol durned hired men of mine ain't loafin and neglectin' the critters. So long, stranger, so long"

And our friend said never a word as he walked back up the street, but he softly whispered, as he gazed reflectively toward the blue vault of heaven, "And the band played Annie Laura."

POPULAR FALLACIES.

That the physician collects his bills with greater ease than the tailor.

That men never read cook books or fashion magazines.

That only the eye glass young ladies feel that inward bliss which comes of culture.

That a passion for fancy drinks denotes a love of the beautiful.

That every two for a penny liar is qualified for newspaper reporting.

That prussic acid is a neater form of suicide than paris green.

That a folding bed was made for any other purpose than the encouragement of profanity.

That there is a woman living who has not in her boudoir a work on "How to become beautiful."

That there is a good-looking woman in the world who doesn't know it.

That there is anything that has served more friendships than the simple phrase "Lend me $5."

That the dude isn't strong enough to make the milk of human kindness turn sour.

The match is easily found which lights the fire the first time you strike it.

That a man has a bald head when there are a half-dozen hairs on it.

That the new tariff will cause the five-cent barber shops to increase their prices.

That there is a limit to knowledge any more than there is to be a game of poker.

That the fact of one's being a first-nighter increases one's credit any.

Henpek—That new doctor you introduced me to, Bowler is a great symptomotologist—great student of humane nature.

Bowler—suites you does he?

Henpek—to a dot. Him in last night to treat my wife for a cold; said she didn't need any medicine, but that she must be particular, above all things, to keep her mouth shut and breathe through her nose.

Rawley—why, Curtin, how is it you were not a first nighter at your own play?

Curtin—I was to nervous. Are you just from the theatre?

Rawley—Yes.

Curtin—Did my pathetic scenes bring any tears?

Rawley—Yes, the people in the house laughed till they cried.

IT CAUGHT HIM.

A man with a glimmer of hope in his countenance ascended to a third story office in Detroit the other day and was cheerfully bidden to "come in" as he knocked.

"Oh, it's you, eh!" observed the occupant.

"Yes. I called to ask——"

"Say!" interrupted the other, as he wheeled about, "did you ever see such a winter as this!"

"How!"

"I've been here ten years, and I never saw such a season. I have an average of fifteen men per week come up here to borrow money or to get me to indorse paper for them."

"I-I called to——"

"You called to see if there were any offices vacant in this building. I don't know. Ask the elevator boy to direct you to the Janitor. Central locations and the rents are very reasonable. Good day.

And when the other had backed out and shut the door he uttered an expression which a passer by would have interpreted to mean "——him!"

SO PARTICULAR

"I'm rather paticular about my celery," he said to the waiter who took his order at a Dearborn st. restaurant. "Bring me only the small stalks, and see that they are perfectly bleached."

"And see that there are no specks in the potatoes, I wont touch a potato that has a speck in it. I am rather particular about my potatoes.

"Yes sir."

"When you bring me the broiled fish see that it has the skin and fat all removed. Don't bring me any excep the upper part of the body. Cut away all the tail."

"All right, sir."

"Hold on a moment. I'm rather particular about my bread. I don't want any of the end pieces, and I dont want any of this cigar-shaped bread with a thick crust, either. Bring me square bread, in thin slices, cut from the middle of the loaf."

"Yes sir."

The waiter went back and returned in due time with a tray full of eatables, which he unloaded on the table.

"Take back this potato," said the guest, "and bring me one that has no specks. I've got no time to dig specks out of potatoes. I told you about that."

The potato was changed, and the waiter asked him if everything was right now.

"No," he answered. "This bread is not cut from the middle of the loaf. Take it away and bring me what I ordered."

The bred was accordingly changed.

"All right now?" inquired the waiter.

"No! You've got some celery here that isn't properly bleached. Bring me the kind I ordered. And hold on! There is a piece of skin on the fish. Take it back. I told you I was particular about my fish."

The celery and fish were removed and brought back again in a few minutes with the objectionable feature eliminated.

"Is it all right now? asked the waiter.

"Guess it will do," growled the guest, as he began to eat, "but if I was a kicker I'd kick about this fork and spoon. They don't exactly match.

SUBSCRIBE

FOR THE——

POCAHONTAS TIMES,

Every man in the County should take it, and patronize home industry. It sustains your rights, and works for the advancement of your county, which no city paper will do. It gives you the news from all parts of the county, which you could not get otherwise. It furnishes matters of interest to the Merchant, Farmer and Mechanic. It keeps you posted and gives you information, on all general news, and its sections and Miscellany are fit for all ages.

TERM OF SUBSCRIPTION,

One year in advance	$1.00
If not paid within 6 months	1.25
And at the end of the year	1.50

AND IF YOU NEED

Letter Heads, Note Heads, Bill Heads, Envelopes, Drug Envelopes, Tags, Business Cards, Official Blanks, Blank Bonds, Posters, Briefs for the Court of Appeals etc.

GET THEM AT "THE TIMES"

JOB OFFICE,

POCAHONTAS TIMES.

Vol. VIII. JOHN E. CAMPBELL, EDITOR AND PROPRIETOR. Huntersville, West Virginia, Thursday, March 12, 1891. Terms of Subscription. $1.00 PER YEAR. IN ADVANCE. No. 32.

Official Directory of Pocahontas County.

Judge of Circuit Court, A. N. Campbell.
Prosecuting Attorney, L. M. McClintic.
Sheriff, J. C. Arbogast.
Deputy Sheriff, Geo. W. Callison.
Cl'k Co. Court, S. L. Brown.
Cl'k Cir. Court, J. H. Patterson.
Assessor, C. O. Arbogast.
Com'rs Co. Ct. { C E. Beard. S B. Hannah. G. M. Kee.
Co. Surveyor, Geo. Baxter

THE COURTS.

Circuit Court convenes on the first Monday in April, 3rd Monday in June and 3rd Monday in October.

County Court convenes on the 1st Tuesday in January, March, October and second Tuesday in July. July is levy term.

THE PICKET GUARD.

BY ETHELIN ELIOT BEERS.

"All quiet along the Potomac," they say,
"Except now and then a stray picket
Is shot, as he walks on his beat to and fro,
By a riflemen hid in the thicket.
'Tis nothing; a private or two, now and then,
Will not count in the news of the battle;
Not an officer lost—only one of the men,
Moaning out, all alone, the death rattle."

All quiet along the Potomac to-night,
Where the soldiers lie peacefully dreaming;
Their tents, in the rays of the clear autumn moon,
Or the light of the watch-fires, are gleaming.
A tremulous sigh, as the gentle night wind
Through the forest leaves softly is creeping;
While stars up above, with their glittering eyes,
Keep guard—for the army is sleeping.

There's only the sound of the lone sentry's tread,
As he tramps from the rock to the fountain,
As he thinks of the two in the low trundle bed,
Far away in the cot on the mountain.
His musket falls slack; his face, dark and grim,
Grows gentle with the memories tender,
As he mutters a prayer for the children asleep,
For their mother—may Heaven defend her!

The moon seems to shine just as brightly as then,—
The night when the love, yet unspoken,
Leaped up to his lips—when low-murmured vows
Were pledged to be ever unbroken.
Then drawing his sleeve roughly over his eyes,
He dashed off tears that are welling,
And gathers his gun closer up to its place,
As if to keep down the heart swelling.

He passes the fountain, the blasted pine tree—
The footstep is lagging and weary;
Yet onward he goes, through the broad belt of light,
Toward the shade of the forest so dreary.
Hark! was it the night wind that rustled the leaves?
Was it the moonlight so wondrously flashing?
It looked like a rifle. "Ha! Mary, good-by!"
And the life-blood is ebbing and plashing.

HENRY FLETCHER'S LUCK.

"What have you got there, John?" inquired Henry Fletcher of his fellow-clerk, John Raymond.

"A ticket to the concert this evening."

"Who is to sing?"

"Signora Bertaniga, and one or two others whose names I do not remember. Shall you go?"

"How much are the tickets?"

"A dollar."

"Then I shan't go."

"Why not?"

"Because I cant afford to pay a dollar for an evening's amusement."

"You can afford it as well as I can. We both get the same salary."

"That is true. We both get ten dollars a week. But doesn't it seem a little extravagant to spend a tenth part of your week's wages in a concert ticket?"

"How prudent and cautious you are, Henry. Of course I don't want to exceed my income. But I shan't do it—I can live on ten dollars a week, and still afford myself a little amusement now and then. So could you if you only thought so."

"I do think so."

"Then why dont you go?"

"Because I want to do something more than live on my income."

"You don't mean to say that you expect to save anything out of ten dollars a week?"

"Yes I do."

"But you find you can't do it," said John creduously.

"I have done it."

"You have?"

"Certainly."

"Half a dollar a week, perhaps! But that isn't worth while."

"I should think it worth while if I couldn't earn any more."

"How much have you saved?" questioned John with some couriosity.

"During the six months that I have been here, I have been saved fifty dollars."

"Why, thats two dollars a week."

"Yes."

"How in the world did you do it?"

"Our board costs us five dollars a week."

"Well."

"I set apart from a dollar and a half to two dollars for clothes."

it costs me more. And how much for sundries?"

"Enough to make eight dollars. The rest I save."

"But you have to pinch yourself."

"No I am not conscious of it. I can't go to concerts where the tickets are a dollar, to be sure, but I take two or three weekly papers, and get out books from the Mercantile Library, and with these I have no trouble in passing the time.'

"Well, I had no idea money could be saved on our salaries. If all the world were like you Henry, the signora would make a poor living. You approve of nothing expensive."

"I didn't say that. Some people have larger incomes than you or I. It is proper enough for them to pay for expensive amusments if they like."

"But after all, you can't save much. what is your object."

"I'll tell you John. I don't want to be a clerk all my lifetime. I want to go into business for myself. But I can't do that without capital.

"So that is what you are saving up for. Well, fifty dollars will set you up in a peanut stand."

"I hope to have more than that when I get ready to go into business. But excuse my lecturing. I hope you will have a pleasant time this evening."

"No doubt I shall. You had better give up your economy for once and buy a ticket."

"I believe not."

"All right. Perhaps you are wiser than I."

Six months later both the young men who took part in the preceding conversation had their wages raised to twelve dollars a week.

On the strength of this John Raymond went at once to a fashionable tailor,and ordered a new suit of clothes which he particularly desired should be made in stile. The suit was not needed for he was already well supplied with clothes, but the extra two dollars per week made him feel rich, and he took this way of making known his prosperity to his acquaintances.

Henry Fletcher, on the contrary, did not think it necessary to increase his expenditures at all, but kept on as if nothing had happened.

"I don't see that it does you any good to have your salary raised, Henry," said his fellow-clerk.

"Why not?"

"Because you don't spend any more."

"But I save more."

"How much?"

"I can lay by four dollars a week now."

"You can! I don't see how it is. It's two months since our salary was raised, and I haven't laid by a cent. Besides, I am in debt on my new suit.

"Better have waited till you could pay for it."

"O well, I knew I could very soon."

No more passed between the two clerks at this time. At the end of the second year their wages were again raised—this time to fifteen dollars a week. Constant to the original purpose, Henry Fletcher continued to live on eight dollars a week, thus saving seven. But it is not our purpose to follow the fortunes of the two young men in detail. Suffice it to compare their pecuniary positions at the end of two years.

At this time Henry Fletcher was master of eighteen hundred dollars. His fellow clerk, John Raymond, was just even with the world. He had increased his expenses as his income advanced, and this was the natural result. He had long since ceased to question Henry about his savings, and had no idea that he was so much in advance of him.

It has been marked that future often showers her benefits on those who do not deserve them. At all events John Raymond about this time had twenty-five hundred dollars left him by a near relative. This, of course, exhilarated him not a little. He had got tired of being a clerk. He determined to go into business for himself. He announced his determination to Henry one night.

"Well, Henry," said he, nonchalantly, I've just given old Fairbanks warning."

"You have! When are you going?"

"I've dropped clerking. I am going into business for myself."

"I thought—"

"That I had no capital?"

"Yes."

"Well I am lucky enough to have received a legacy of twenty five hundred dollars."

"I congratulate you. That with your saving—"

"Pooh! I have saved nothing."

"At any rate, that will give you a very fair start."

"I suppose you will go on clerking for some time to come."

"There you are mistaken. I have engaged a store, and expect to begin business on my own account in a few weeks."

"You don't say!" ejaculated Raymond, in surprise. "Have you had a windfall, too?"

"No."

"Then where did you raise the funds?"

"I have saved up eighteen hundred dollars, and that must do for the present."

"Eighteen hundred! You don't mean to say you have saved all that?"

"With interest; yes."

"I had no idea you were worth half that. It is most as much as I have."

"Not quite."

"Well, we shall start in business about the same time. I wonder how we shall be situated four years hence?"

"Both prosperous. I hope."

"So do I."

It so happened that the two young men went into their new stores the same day. Both understood their business. So far as that went, there was no reason to doubt of their success. But John Raymond at once went to a fashionable boarding house, where he paid a high price for a fine room, opened a bill at a fashionable tailor's, bought a horse and carriage and boarded the horse at a livery stable, and in fact, lived as if his income was equal to his stock in trade. He had no reason to complain of the patronage he received. If his expenditures had not been so great he would have embarrassments. But he was continually drawing so much out of his business that he found it hard to meet his bills as they became due. But this never led him to retrench his personal expenditures. He must keep his carriage, and pay high board.

So things got worse and worse, till at length a crisis came. In a little short of a year failure came. The money with which he started had somehow melted away, and he found himself thrown upon the world. He was glad to accept his old situation at "old Fairbank's store."

How stood Henry Fletcher at the end of the year? He had managed his business prudently, lived economically,and put his surplus profits into his stock in trade. When he took account of stock at the end of the year,it footed up to twenty-five hundred dollars—just where John Raymond had been at the beginning of the year.

Five years later Henry Fletcher found himself to be worth ten thousand dollars.

John Raymond is just even with the world, and so fixed has his habit of self-indulgence became that it is feared that he will never be any better off. He thinks Henry Fletcher "a very lucky fellow;" but we know that there is something more and better than good luck at the bottom of his prospeaity.

WHEN THEY WERE NEW.

Pins made, 1450.
Needles used, 1545.
First cast iron, 1544.
Matches made, 1829.
First newspaper, 1494.
Coal used as fuel, 1834.
First gold coin, B. C. 206.
Lead pencils used in 1594.
First steam railroad, 1830.
Window glass used in 694.
Kerosene introduced, 4826.
First postage stamps, 1840.
Electric light invented, 1874.
First insurance, marine, 533.
First American express, 1821.
First wheeled carriages, 1659.
First illuminating gas in 1792.
Musical notes introduced, 1338.
Iron found in America in 1815.
Bible translated into Saxon, 637.
Gunpowder used by Chinese, 80.
Old testament finished B. C. 430.
Bible translated into Gothic, 872.
Photographs first produced, 1802.
Paper made by Chinese, B. C. 220.
Bible translated into English, 1534.
Tobacco introduced into England, 1583.

Pocahontas Times.

J[illegible]N E. CAMPBELL,
EDITOR AND PROPRIETOR.

Entered at the Post-office at Huntersville, W. Va., as second class matter.

ADVERTISING RATES.

	1 m.	3 m.	6 m.	1 yr.
One inch	$ 1 00	$ 2 00	$ 3 00	$ 5 00
Three in.	2 50	4 00	6 00	10 00
Qr. column	3 00	6 00	10 00	17 00
Half col'n	6 00	12 00	20 00	30 00
One col'n	10 00	20 00	30 00	50 00

Reading notices, not exceeding five lines, twenty-five cents for each insertion, and five cents a line for each additional line.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION.

One copy, 1 yr., $1.00 in advance; after 6 months, $1.25; after 12 months, $1.50.
These terms will be strictly complied with.

Huntersville, W. Va.

March 12, 1891.

A broken sceptre—that once wielded by "Czar" Reed.

It is customary to speak well of the dead, but the custom is more honored in the breach than in the observance, as far as it relates to the fifty first Congress.

The Fifty first Congress appropriated nearly $200,000,000 more than the fiftieth Congress, but it couldn't stand the small amount necessary to give the people one cent letter postage. All right, wait until the people's Congress takes hold.

Ex Representative Anderson, of Kansas, thanks to his having been a schoolmate of Mr. Harrison's, gets a snug berth in the diplomatic service that will enable him to keep out of the Kansas Farmers Alliance for some time, and get a good salary for doing it.

The great majority of the republican "ex's" have a double edged stickeroo in their trouser leg to be used upon the Harrison boom, and some of them have a sharper or heavier weapon than Mr. Huston, of Indiana, ex U. S. Treasurer, who says he resigned because of "personal, social and political dissatisfaction" with the administration.

Nobody seems to have heard of Mr. Harrison having tendered his friend, ex Senator Ingalls, a plum in the shape of an appointment, nor has any one heard that the vitriolic Kansan proposed employing any of his spare time during the ensuing year in corralling delegates for the present occupant of the White House, to the next republican national convention.

American Congressmen will show their good sense by keeping their fingers out of the Canadian campaign now raging. We have nothing to do with the fight and no right to interfere in any way. Suppose we had a Congressional campaign going on, would we fancy members of the Canadian Parliament trying to take a hand in it by writing letters on this, that or, the other subject? Not much we wouldn't.

WASHINGTON LETTER.

From our regular correspondent.

WASHINGTON, D. C., M'ch 6th.—The United States Treasury is bankrupt, as far as the republican Congress can make it so and it would be actually so today if all of the appropriations had to be paid at once. In the dying hours of the Fifty first Congress the republicans threw prudence, conscience, fear of a hereafter and ever other restraining influence overboard and boldly voted for every possible thing that promised to assist in the looting of the Treasury, which their leaders had agreed upon for the purpose of confronting the democratic Congress with a deficiency. Old mouldy claims that had been refused a hundred times were tacked on the appropriation bills, and railroaded through, extra salaries were voted to employes who are already paid beyond their deserts and money was scattered around in every direction as though the Treasury was overflowing with surplus, as it was two years ago when turned over to the republicans.

Where the money is to come from to pay all of these wild appropriations is more than any one can see at this time; it isn't in the Treasury nor can it possibly get there under the present methods of taxation. Two years of democratic economy in the House and a purging of the pension rolls of the frauds thereon may pull the country through without making it necessary to put new taxes upon the already tariff ridden people.

The republican ex Representative are loath to leave Washington until Mr. Harrison has distributed the plums now at his disposal, which includes nine new U. S. Circuit Court Judges as provided by the new law, which purports to be for the relief of the Supreme Court, but Mr. Harrison proposes to try their patience as he is going to Maryland tomorrow for a few days of wild duck shooting, and says he will do nothing in the matter until his return.

Ex Speaker Reed has a pretty thick skin, but he couldn't hide the chagrin he felt when every democrat in the House voted against the usual resolution of thanks that Mr. McKinley, after vainly trying to persuade a democrat to do it, had offered. Served him right is the verdict among democrats.

Senator Vilas is here just as natural as when he so successfully presided over the Interior department under Mr. Cleveland. He says that Wisconsin has cut loose from the republican party for good and all, and that her vote may be confidently counted upon for the democratic candidate next year.

It is pleasing to know that the Fifty first Congress did one good thing. It passed the International Copy-right bill, although it was apparently done under a misunderstanding, and Mr. Harrison signed it with a quill pen, from the wing of an American eagle, which had been provided for the occasion by one of the editors of the Century magazine.

Senator Edmunds is entitled to thanks for having balked Senator Plumb's scheme for transferring the employes of the Census bureau to the regular classified departmental service, without the formality of a civil service examination. Mr. Plumb attempted to hitch it on to an appropriation bill, but Mr. Edmunds raised a point of order against it which was sustained by the chair.

And while giving thanks I must not forget the democrats in the House, who with the aid of a few republicans jumped upon the Pacific cable subsidy "job", after it had been agreed to by a conference committee, and strangled the life from it.

The democratic Senators also deserve well for the smartness they displayed in preventing the mail subsidy bill from being sent to a conference committee, which would surely have incorporated the tonnage subsidy bill in it. It is much better to accept the least of two evils than to take them both.

Senator Ingalls made a very "small" use of his last official hour. He dismissed the clerk of the committee of which he was chairman and appointed his son, Axel Ingalls, clerk to the committee. The object lies in the fact that the clerk draws his salary during the recess, but does no work. Senator Wolcott at once employed the dismissed clerk as his private secretary.

There were some disgraceful scenes at the last night session of Congress, caused by that old time offender, John Barleycorn. The tipsy statesmen were kept off the floor of House and Senate with some difficulty by their friends, but their antics in the committee rooms and corridors were witnessed by many Collapsed—the pedestal upon which Thomas B Reed once exhibited himself.

COMMISSIONER'S SALE

Of Valuable Lands in Pocahontas County.

The undersigned Commissioner appointed by the Circuit Court of Pocahontas County, West Va., by decree pronounced on the 21st day of October, 1890, in the chancery cause therein pending in the name of of Enoch E. Moore and wife as Plaintiffs v. Wm. Burr's adm'r and others as Defendants, will proceed, by virtue of said decree, at the front of the Court House of said County, at Huntersville, West Virginia, on

MONDAY, APRIL 6TH, 1891,

(Court day) to sell by way of public auction, to the highest bidder two certain tracts or parcels of land belonging to the Estate of said William Burr, dec'd, to-wit: One tract of 200 acres, and one tract of 30 acres, both lying & being in the said County of Pocahontas. The first of the above tracts is the same land which was allotted and assigned to the Heirs at Law of the said Wm Burr, dec'd in the partition of the lands of the Estate of Frederick Burr, dec'd.

These lands are worthy the attention of investors, and persons desiring to purchase will do well to examine them before the day of sale.

TERMS OF SALE:

Cash in hand sufficient to pay the costs of the suit aforesaid, and the expenses of sale, and as to the residue of the purchase money upon a credit of Six, Twelve and Eighteen months in equal installments with legal interest on the deferred installments from the day of sale. The purchasers or purchaser to give bonds for the deferred installments with good personal security, and the legal title to be retained as ultimate security.

WM. M. MCALLISTER,
Commissioner.

In the Clerk's office of the Circuit Court of Pocahontas County, West Virginia, I, J. H. Patterson, Clerk of the said Court, do hereby certify that Wm. M. McAllister Commissioner to sell the above described lands, has executed the bonds required by the decree of sale in the above styled cause.

J. H. PATTERSON, Cl'k.

mar 5-4t Printers fee $14 40

VALUABLE LANDS FOR RENT.

I shall offer for rent for the term of one year, at the front door of the Court House of Pocahontas County,

ON THE 6th DAY OF APRIL 1891

the lands belonging to Allie McGlaughlin, recently assigned her out of her father's estate situated on Elk, about 3 miles from Edray. This is a valuable tract of grazing and meadow land. The renter, however shall be required to keep no sheep on said land while in his possession.

For further particulars apply to the undersigned, or to H. D. McGlaughlin at Huntersville.

Terms made known on day of renting.

SUSAN McGLAUGHLIN,
Guardian of ALLIE McGLAUGHLIN.
march 5th.

ANNOUNCEMENTS.

To the Voters of Pocahontas County.

At the solicitation of many friends in the County, I announce myself a candidate for re-election to the office of County Superintendent. If elected I will perform the duties of the office without fear or favor. Thanking You for past favors, I again solicit your support at the coming election, May 19th, 1891.
M. G. MATHEWS.

To the Voters of Pocahontas County.

I hereby announce myself a candidate for the office of County Superintendent. If elected, I will perform the duties of the office to the best of my ability, without partiality. Election, May 19th.

Respectfully,
J. M. BARNETT.

HOME NEWS

—Mr. Isaac McNeel, of Mill Point, was in town Tuesday.

—Subscribe for THE TIMES and get your county news.

—Mess. Wise and M. F. Herold, of near Frost were in Huntersville last Friday.

—The Baltimore conference M. E. Church South meets to day in Roanoke city, Va.

—A new line of mens', women' and childrens' shoes just received at Loury & Doyle's.

—Part of Mr. Jas. Barkley's mill dam was washed out during the last high freshet.

—Mr. A. M. McClintic, of the firm of McClintic & Co., of Mt. Gove., Va., was in the city Tuesday.

—Mess. R. K. Burns and M. A. Dunlap, of Academy were in the city Tuesday.

—We are sorry to learn that Mr. Wm. Cole, of near this place lost his last and only horse a few days ago. It is supposed that some low flung son of a gun gave it glass.

—Mr. D. B. McElwee has sold his store house and lot at the Lockridge ford to Mr. H. M. Lockridge, also Mr. Jas. Barkley, Sr., has sold his mill property to same.

—In a week or two we will add largely to our job department, and hope that every body that needs nice job printing of any kind will give THE TIMES office a call.

—Mr. A. M. McGlaughlin, of Pocahontas county, was here Saturday. Having sold his valuable farm at Marlinton, he is on the lookout for another. We should be pleased to have him buy in this county, for we like to get in such men as Mr. McGlaughlin.—Independent.

—St. Louis is now the largest fur market in the United States. At a recent sale of pelts in that city more than a million skins of the coon, muskrat, skunk, mink, gray fox and opossum were disposed of.

—A few days ago a half dozen State Senators and a drummer were sitting at a supper table at the Hotel Ruffner, Charleston. The Senators were painfully polite to one another, evidently desiring to impress the drummer with their importance. One statesman would say: "Will the Senator from So and so pass me the salt?" Another would say: "Will the Senator from Blank county pass me the pepper?" This was kept up until the drummer got weary. Turning to the negro waiter he said: "Will the Senator from Africa pass me the butter?" The Senators quit.

—Recent advices from a reliable source are to the effect that owing to the large purchases of real estate in this County by Marshall and McGraw by which the permanent success of a railroad is assured the work on William's River route has been abandoned and all the contracts annulled. It is now proposed to bring the P. & W. Va. from Daisville via. Mingo and Edray to Marlinton, thence it will probably follow the old headlines to Huntersville and will connect with the C. & O. at Covington. It is thought that the Davis road will go down the Vally River headed for Pittsburg.

—The State Senate has agreed on an amendment to the World's Fair bill appropriating $40,000 to make an exhibit of this State on that occasion. That will certainly be the limit to which the Legislature will go. We hardly think that the amount is large enough, but it is better than nothing. The Legislature has hemmed in the appropriation by all safe guards necessary to secure a faithful application of the money.

—We are informed that Mr. Wm. Curry, of this place has sold his large and most magnificent farm adjoining this city to Mr. H. M. Lockridge. We understand that the price paid, was about $23,000; also that negociations are pending for the purchase of Mr. J. C. Loury's farm, also adjoining Huntersville, and that an offer has been on Mr. Amos Barlow's farms, one adjoining this place and the other ½ mile from here. Ere another year rolls around we expect to see these farms laid off into lots and the foundation laid, and the boom, boom, for a grand and glorious city, in the very heart of hundreds of thousands of acres of the best iron ore the State produces and millions upon millions of feet of white pine lumber, as well as a good sprinkling of cherry, walnut, ash, chesnut, locust, white oak and other kinds. Our grand old mountain State is coming out of the ruts faster than any other state in the Union, and ere she is five years older she will be one of the foremost.

—"Many people think newspaper men persistant dunners. By way of comparison let us suppose that a farmer raises 1,000 bushels of corn and sells it to 1,000 different persons in all parts of the country. When the sale is made a great many of them say, 'I will hand you the dollar in a short.' The farmer does not want to appear small and says, 'All right.' Soon the wheat is gone and he has nothing to show for it, and he thus realizes that he has frittered away his whole crop, and that it is due him in a thousand little dribletts, consequently he is seriously injured in his business because his debtors, each owing him a dollar, treats it as a small matter and think it would not help him much. Continue this business year after year as the publisher does, how long would he stand it? A moment's thought will convince anyone that a publisher has cause for dunning." No sensible man should ever get angry because a newspaper man duns him for his money. A dun is not an impeachment of a subscriber's integrity but simply the result of the publisher necessities. He has to have his money to pay expenses. Consequently the subscriber should thank the editor for waiting on him so patiently and pay promptly.—Ex.

Dunmore Doings.

W. J. Pritchard, has returned home.

Walter Bird has moved near Dunmore.

Rev. Lautenschlager was out last week.

Jas. Night, (col.) died at his home near Clover Lick last week. He was about 23 years old.

Y. J.

Marlinton, W. Va.

Some of the good people of Pocahontas are getting things ready to boom Marlinton. This is the name of the postoffice near the bridge across the Greenbrier river in that county. Large tracts of land have been sold in that vicinity, recently, at good prices, and it is supposed that they were bought in the interest of a railroad company who will build a town at that place. It is an excellent location for this purpose, being where Knapp's creek empties into the Greenbrier. The land is comparatively level and very fertile. The boom seems to be fairly on and it will work wonders for that part of the county.—Elkins News.

Farmers Alliance.

At a meeting of the Edray Alliance at Mt. Pleasant school house, the fact of the death of John Simmons, one of our members, having been called to the attention of the order the following resolutions were unanimously adopted.

1st. Resolved that it is with the deepest regret that we are called upon to chronical the death of our esteemed brother and co-workes in the I. U. & F. A. but with the humble submission to the will of God, we humbly bow to the decrees of his providance.

2nd. That the death of this man, the community has sustained a loss which will be greatly felt, and the Alliance a faithful, consistent, and devoted member.

3rd. That we as an Alliance and as individuals heartily sympathize with his bereaved family in the great loss they have sustained in being deprived of his faithful example and loving companionship.

4th. That a copy of these resolutions be furnished his family and published in the POCAHONTAS TIMES. By order of the Alliance.

A. M. McGLAUGHLIN,
ANDREW PRICE,
G. W. MANN.
JOHN WAUGH.
Committee.
M. G. MATHEWS, Sec.

Rev. M. D. Dunlap Dead.

We clip the following from the Hillsboro Items in the Greenbrier Independent:

It is with a sad heart that we announce the death of Rev. M. D. Dunlap, which occurred at his residence near here on last Sunday morning the 24th ult., in the 83rd year of his age. He passed peacefully away, his last hours being attended with but little suffering. Death resulted from kidney trouble and a general dibility, occasioned by old age. He leaves no family, his beloved wife and two children having gone on before. He leaves, however, a large circle of sorrowing friends and relatives here and in Monroe county.

Mr. Dunlap was born in Augusta county, Va., in the year 1808. At the age of 25 he graduated at Washington College with high honors, and was shortly afterward ordained as a minister of the Southern Presbyterian Church.

He was married in the year 1844, and he and his wife, a most estimable lady, came to this county in the year 1845. For 11 years he taught school here, during which time he also attended to his duties as a pastor of the Oak Grove Presbyterian Church. As a teacher he gained great distinction and was the founder of the old Academy, one of the finest institutions of learning near here in that day, and from which the postoffice at this place derives its name.

During his ministry, which covered a period of 40 years, he espoused the cause of his Master faithfully zealously, and the Church prospered in his hands. How many of us remember the old brick Church that stood a mile south of here, and the able and sterring sermons that fell from the lips of Mr. Dunlap. He was one of the most exemplary christians we ever knew. If there ever lived a man that showed by his daily walk and conversation that he was trying to lead a true christian life that man was Mr. Dunlap. His life was made up of good deeds and his noble qualities of mind and heart have endeared him to every one who knew him. He is gone but he leaves behind a shining record that will never die, but ever remain fresh and green on memory's page.

It is a waste of space to say nothing of being very unkind for the newspaper to remind "me-too" Platt of the part he took in nominating Harrison.

County Court Proceedings.

The following is a list of the County Court proceedings, which convened last Tuesday.

Geo. W. Callison, qualified as deputy sheriff.

Ordered that Geo. Sheets be paid $111.34 for work done on Snake Den road.

H. S. Rucker and F. J. Snyder were appointed to examine the Clerk's office.

Ordered that Jno. Grogg be paid $100 for work done on the bridge abutments near this place.

Ordered that a voting place be established at Buckeye.

The following commissioners are appointed to conduct the school election to be held on the 19th day of May next:

District No. 1, Traveler's Repose—C. C. Burner, N. B. Arbogast and Henderson Darnell.

Green Bank—J. R. Warwick, Wm. B. Wooddell and B. M. Arbogast.

Dunmore—J. W. Taylor H. N. Moore and Geo. Arbogast.

Dist. No. 2, Split Rock—A. C. L. Gatewood, Frank Vandevort and Harmon Sharp.

Edray—Jno. Waugh, S. B. Moore, and Wm. M. Sharp.

Buckeye—R. E. Overholt, W. C. McNiel, and A. M. Kee.

Dist. No. 3 Huntersville—L. M. McClintic, C. F. Moore, and N. C. McNeil.

Frost—I. B. Moore, W. A. Sharp, and M. F. Herold.

Dist. No. 4 Academy—J. B. Kennison, Howard Clark, and C. W. Eskridge.

Chas. Cook was appointed justice in Edray district.

H. A. Yeager appointed Justice in Green Bank district.

DENTISTRY.—Dr. J. H. Weymouth will be at Edray, on the 19th of March and remain 4 days; Mill Point on the 25th 3 days; Levels (Frank Harpers) 28th 3 days; Huntersvill April 1st and remain 4 days Frost April 6th 5 days; Dunmore April 13th 4 days; Green Bank April 18th 3 days, and will be prepared to attend to all Dental work. Call early and make your engagements as his time is limited to the above dates.

It is apparent from the speeches made at the Woman's Suffrage Convention at Washington that the woman of Kansas elected Senator Peffer, the successor to Mr. Ingalls. How long have the women of Kansas been voting.

The death of Senator Hearst was a double misfortune to the country and the democratic party. The party loses the services of an honest level headed Senator, and owing to the Governor of California be a republican, that party will gain the vote of his successor for the unexpired term, which ends March 3, 1893.

Senator Wilcott thinks the Postoffice department has become a little chesnutty under the management of Mr. Wanamaker. Next time Mr. Wolcott wants a new postmaster appointed or an old one removed he expects to get it done more promptly than heretofore.

No wonder Quay got disgusted with his republican colleagues and went fishing. The beginning of the republican Congress was bad enough, but the ending was worse. Well, the people will see that the country isn't burdened with another soon.

Somebody said that Mr. Harrison's selection of ex Gov. Foster, of Ohio, to be Secretary of the Treasury, indicated the adoption by the administration of a new southern policy. If one may judge by the nomination of the disreputable negro, "Jim" Hill, to be postmaster at Vicksburg, Miss., the new policy is a shade or two blacker than the old one.

Knapp's creek was higher Saturday night and Sunday than it has been this winter.

We would suggest to "Buffalo Bill" that he might add a new feature to his "Wild West" show, which is now in Europe, by employing the ex-members of Congress to repeat daily, for the edification of the adherents of the "effete monarchial system," the "riot act," which they have enacted so often during the lifetime of the unlamented Fifty-first Congress. The expense would not be great, as most of the repudiated politicians would be glad to go for their expenses, in order to avoid having to return to their constituents before time shall have kindly glossed over some of their most glaring misdeeds.

COMMISSIONER'S SALE OF LAND.

Pursuant to two decrees of the Circuit Court of Pocahontas County rendered on the 23rd day of October, 1889 and on the 21st day of October, 1890, in the Chancery cause of Levi Gay, Adm'r &c. vs. Wm. Skeen, I as special Commissioner appointed by said decree, shall proceed to sell at public auction to the highest bidder, in front of the Court House of said County, on the

6TH DAY OF APRIL, 1891,

the following tracts of valuable lands; to-wit: a tract containing 2545 acres, and a tract of 44 acres situate on the waters of Knapp's Creek a tract of 2292 acres situate on Buckley Mountain and a tract of 161¼ acres situate on Droop Mountain, all in Pocahontas County, West Virginia. Any one desiring further particulars concerning said lands may obtain same writing to the undersigned Commissioner.

TERMS OF SALE.

So much cash in hand as will pay costs of suit and sale, and for the residue the purchaser to execute three several bonds with approved security falling due in 6 12 & 18 months respectively from day of sale; said bonds to bear interest from date. A lien will also be retained on said lands as ultimate security.

C. F. MOORE, Spec'l Com'r.

Bond has been given by above Com'r as required by decree in said cause.

J. H. PATTERSON, Clk.

mar 12-4t Printer's fee $8.85

Pocahontas Times.

JOHN E. CAMPBELL,
EDITOR AND PROPRIETOR.

Entered at the Post-office at Huntersville, W. Va., as second class matter.

Huntersville, W. Va.

March 12, 1891.

Mary Ravenel.

"Hop-picking?" said young Durell, as he took a rosy August apple from his pocket, and fed it leisurely to the beautiful white horse against which he leaned. "Why, yes, it is rather a romantic business, if you look upon it from a romantic point of view. You're an artist, eh? Come to sketch our little bits of rustic scenery? But there's nothing particularly picturesque about our hop fields. Just sunshine, and the gold green of the clusters, and the curling tendrils reaching out for something to grasp at, and the air so blue and clear that one can almost see the straight lines of the sunshine. Of course, it looks pretty to me, for I was born and brought up in it; but—excuse me—I can't see what there is specially worthy of an artist's pencil!"

Mr. Raymond smiled.

"Do you see those long perspectives of green alleys," said he; "with the figures running in and out, and the old woman sitting among the fragrant heaps, with the scarlet cloak, and the two little toddlers at her feet? And yonder feeble, bent old man, with water-cans on his

...ismal, social and ... dissatisfaction" with the administration.

Nobody seems to have heard of Mr. Harrison having tendered his friend, ex-Senator Ingalls, a plum in the shape of an appointment, nor has any one heard that the vitriolic Kansan proposed employing any of his spare time during the coming year in corralling delegates for the present occupant of the White House, to the next republican national convention.

American Congressmen will show their good sense by keeping their fingers out of the Canadian campaign now raging. We have nothing to do with the fight and no right to interfere in any way. Suppose we had a Congressional campaign going on, would we fancy members of the Canadian Parliament trying to take a hand in it by ... on this, that or the their last. It's healthy the doctors say. At all events, it's profitable.

In hop season, there isn't a cottage, or a farmhouse garret, nor even a barn untenanted. There are tents, a white sprinkle of them, down in the meadow by the vines, where people sleep at nights. You can see them from here. You are staying in this part of the neighborhood? No? My father will be very glad to see you, up at the house, if you will honor us by becoming our guest to-night."

And raising his light straw hat, Daniel Durell went his way, the beautiful, satin-skinned white horse following, like a docile kitten, at his heels.

"Hugh," he said to a servant who had come down with a hamper from the house, "take a tray of hot coffee and two or three of those white rolls, with my compliments, to that gentleman in the white linen sunhat who is sketching under the trees. And, Hugh!"

"Sir?"

"Did you carry the sardine sandwitches, and the basket of apricots, and the fresh milk, to the young girl in black?"

The man nodded.

"She didn't want to take 'em, Mr. Daniel," said he. "She was all for calling me back, but I minded your order, sir, and made off as fast as I could, pretending not to hear."

Durell smiled.

"That's right," said he. "And don't forget the cold meat and slices of new bread for old Constable. He grows feebler and feebler every day, and there was nothing but the heel of a loaf and a black cheese rind in his dinner basket, for I saw it myself."

"It's all right, sir," said Hugh.

And then Durell, going up to the great house, shrewdly noting all the hop pickers as they sat and lay around under the shadow of the vines, in the dolce far niente of the noon intermission, finally came into the great, cool room, where the scent of cheese-making filled the air, and the muslin curtains fluttered to and fro in the breeze.

The Squire himself sat there, gouty, but content. Iced claret and cold chicken were on the table; forced hot-house peaches scented the atmosphere; a plate of deviled tongue, with curry sauce, supplied the fiery element; and delicate cutlets, breaded and fried in egg, were brought in, hot and hot. The old gentleman's face brightened at the sight of his son.

"It has seemed a long day without you, my boy," said he. "Sit down, sit down. Do you know, Daniel, I've been thinking all the morning that I wish you'd bring a wife home to the old place. She would be company for me when you are gone. Why don't you think of it, my lad?"

"I have been thinking of it father," said the Squire's son. "But what would you say, if I were to marry a poor girl?"

The Squire set down his glass of iced claret. Evidently this was a new view of matters.

"A poor girl, Daniel!"

"But a good girl, father, and as sweet and lovely as yonder half-open rosebud. You will perhaps laugh at me," he added, "but I believe I have lost my heart to one of your hop pickers."

"Daniel!"

"Her name is Mary Ravenel, sir. I never saw her before this season. She is picking hops with her aunt, or some elderly relative—a pale and fragile looking girl, but as beautiful as a dream. And—I love her!"

The old Squire nodded his head.

"I can trust you, my son," said he, "and whoever you choose to bring here will be as welcome as flowers in May."

While all this time the artist, strolling idly along to observe the various groups, came upon a pale-faced girl in black—a girl with large, melting, wine-brown eyes, straight, pure features, and tender, dark hair, overhanging her forehead like a mist of jet.

"Miss Ravenel!" he cried, in amazement.

"Yes, 'Miss Ravenel,'" she smiled back. "You are astonished to see me here. But the doctor declared that hop-picking would be the very thing for me. So Aunt Verna brought me, and here we are. And I am really accomplishing wonders in the hop-picking line! Sit down here and eat some of these delicious hot-house grapes. They are sent to us daily by an unknown benefactor. That is," as Aunt Verna smiled meaningly, "not exactly unknown. It is Squire Durell's son. He will persist in sending all these delightful things, although I tell him over and over again that I have no need of them. I believe he thinks I am a starving dressmaker, or something of the kind," with a blush and a smile, "But, oh, he is so good! And I like him so much! Now show us, please what you have been sketching."

Mr. Durell came down, in the warm, red glow of the summer sunset, to the willow shaded curve of the river where Miss Ravenel liked to sit, when her day's work was done.

"I am so much obliged to you," said she, gratefully. "But, Mr. Durell, I have something to tell you."

"Stop a minute," he said. "I have something to tell you—that I love you, that I want to make you my wife. Dear Miss Ravenel, are you surprised at this? Have you not seen it growing out of my heart by degrees? My father is old and infirm, but he is ready to welcome you with all paternal love, and—"

"You really love me?" she cried, with wide-open eyes. "Me, a poor, pale, little hop picker?"

"You my queen and my ideal!"

"Then," she said, all smiles and blushes. "I think I ought to repay you by loving you a little. And I think I do—nay, I am quite certain of it."

"My darling! Oh, my darling!" he murmured.

"But wait; you have not heard what I am," she urged.

"You are Miss Ravenel."

"I am General Ravenel's daughter. I am here by the doctor's orders, not because I need the daily wages of a hop picker. But you won't like me any the less will you for that?"

Mr. Durell stood amazed. Miss Ravenel, the great heiress!

"We are stopping at the 'Clancliff Hotel,'" said she. "I have my phaeton and ponies there. I will drive up to the house to see your father, since he cannot come to see me."

"But I thought you were a poor girl hiring one of these tents at so much a night," said Daniel, in perplexity.

"That is where you were mistaken," said Miss Ravenel, smiling. "But the hop-picking has done me a deal of good. Aunt Verna says my cheeks are redder than they used to be; and I must be better, because——"

"Well?"

"Because I feel so happy," said Mary Revenel, coloring like a rose.

And so Daniel Durel found his life's treasure out among the garlanded hoppoles.

SUBSCRIBE

FOR THE

POCAHONTAS TIMES,

Every man in the County should take it, and patronize home industry. It sustains your rights, and works for the advancement of your county, which no city paper will do. It gives you the news from all parts of the county, which you could not get otherwise. It furnishes matters of interest to the Merchant, Farmer and Mechanic. It keeps you posted and gives you information, on all general news, and its sections and Miscellany are fit for all ages.

TERM OF SUBSCRIPTION.

One year in advance	$1.00
If not paid within 6 months	1.25
And at the end of the year	1.50

AND IF YOU NEED

Letter Heads, Note Heads, Bill Heads, Envelopes, Drug Envelopes, Tags, Business Cards, Official Blanks, Blank Bonds, Posters, Briefs for the Court of Appeals etc.

GET THEM AT "THE TIMES"

JOB OFFICE.

POCAHONTAS TIMES.

Vol. 8. JOHN E. CAMPBELL, EDITOR AND PROPRIETOR. Huntersville, West Virginia, Thursday, March 19, 1891. Terms of subscription, $1.00 PER YEAR IN ADVANCE. No. 33.

Official Directory of Pocahontas County.

Judge of Circuit Court, A. N. Campbell.
Prosecuting Attorney, L. M. McClintic.
Sheriff, J. C. Arbogast.
Deputy Sheriff, Geo. W. Callison.
Cl'k Co. Court, S. L. Brown.
Cl'k Cir. Court, J. H. Patterson.
Assessor, C. O. Arbogast.
Com'rs Co. Ct. C. E. Beard. S. B. Hannah. G. M. Kee.
Co. Surveyor, Geo. Baxter

THE COURTS.

Circuit Court convenes on the first Monday in April, 3rd Monday in June and 3rd Monday in October.

County Court convenes on the 1st Tuesday in January, March, October and second Tuesday in July. July is levy term.

A Determined Woman.

In one of the back settlements of South Carolina, in the days which rendered the names of Marion and other heroes forever glorious in the annals of their country, dwelt a brave and devoted family of patriots named Hart.

Abijah and Abigail Hart were scarcely past the prime of life, although they had been blessed with a large family of children, only three of whom, however—two boys and a girl—had survived the common ills incident to childhood.

The elder son would have been two and twenty had his life been spared, but eight months before he had fallen an innocent victim to the rage and malice of the Tories who swarmed in predatory bands throughout this section.

Upon these murderous wretches, who had wantonly deprived them of their eldest born at a time when he might have been of inestimable service to them, the father and mother and only remaining son, Silas, now in his nineteenth year—afterward the celebrated Indian fighter of Hardin county, Ky.—swore to be revenged whenever and wherever an opportunity afforded to wreak their vengeance.

Leah, the second remaining offspring, was a beautiful and warm hearted maiden of seventeen, and the affianced bride of Randolph Darrell, a brave young officer, at one time upon the staff of General Marion.

Yong Darrell was in the habit now and then, whenever he could make an excuse to obtain a furlough, of paying a visit to Gum Tree farm, the humble though comfortable home of the Harts.

On one of these occasions a party of seven mounted Tories pursued him nearly the entire distance from the American camp to the residence of the Harts, he, however, contrived to elude them in a piece of woods just before reaching the farm.

The Tory horsemen now wheeled about and retraced their way to the farm house, which was only a short distance, just as Randolph Darrell was on the point of emerging from the wood; but luckily he discovered them in season to escape their notice by abruptly retreating back again under cover.

Alighting at the door of the farm house the Tory leader ordered Mrs. Hart to prepare dinner for the party and bestride herself.

"How can I give you dinner when I've nothing to cook!" retorted the resolute woman, angrily. "I should need a full larder to satisfy a half dozen such dirty rascals as you are."

"Silance woman!" thundered the Tory in a commanding voice, "and do our bidding. I'll soon give you something to cook," he added, leveling his carbine as he spoke and bringing down a plump turkey gobbler that was strutting along under cover of the garden wall. "There, now, go and pluck that fine fellow my beauty, and don't be long about it or we may be tempted to serve you in the same way."

Leah, who had shrunk timidly into a corner, started up in alarm when she heard his threat and made her way out to the spot where the bird had fallen.

With great alacrity, but with an anxiously beating heart, Leah spread the homely board and brought forth the promised viands, which she laid out temptingly before them. She then placed what chairs and stools the house afforded around the table and politely invited her unwelcome visitors to be seated.

Complying with her invitation the Tories carelessly stacked their carbines near an open window and seating themselves at the table, fell to greedily devouring the repast.

Mrs. Hart, in the meantime, with a heroism superior to her sex, had watched her hungry guest till she saw she was not observed by them when she slipped out slyly from their midst, and cautiously approached the open window and succeeded in drawing out three of the carbines before her little game was discovered.

The moment the Tories perceived the deadly purpose of the giantess the three nearest the windows prang to their feet in terrified astonishment.

"Stand back!" she cried in a threatening tone, presenting one of the loaded carbines with an air of resolute determination. "The first villian of you that stirs a step I'll shoot, and the first one that touches a mite of that pork I'll blow his brains out!"

Without heeding her blazing eye or her stern verbal warning the Tory leader sprang fearlessly toward the stack of arms, but before he could reach them there was a report of a carbine and the advancing ruffian fell to the floor, while the slug which had entirely passed through his body, struck another in the temple who was sitting at the table, killing him instantly.

A third rendered desperate by the trying situation, made a reckless attempt to get hold of one of the carbines, and instantly paid the penalty with his life.

Throwing the second empty carbine aside Mrs. Hart caught up the third one, with which she covered what remained of the terrified party.

There were but four left, and not one of the four dared to move a finger,

"Leah, blow the dinner horn!" cried the mother in a tone of resolute triumph. "It is safe now to call in Silas and your father."

The young girl, half frightened out of her wits, promptly obeyed the maternal command, and a long winding blast echoed and re echoed through the intervening woods.

She had left the house and joined her mother on the outside before she essayed to blow it, and as she lowered the horn from her lips, now rendered colorless from her recent fright, her anxious eyes were bent in the direction of the distance corn field, where her father and brother and a faithful negro servant were at work, although a narrow belt of timber stretched between them.

She uttered a quick exclamation of joyous pleasure, for at that moment she saw all three strike out of the wood and start on a rapid run toward the house.

Hearing the first shot that had been fired and then alarmed at the other two which had followed in such rapid succession, they caught up their loaded carbines and started on a run from the field where they were then at work.

The moment they had quitted the timber they saw at a glance by the several horses hitched to the fence and the belligerent attitude of the heroic giantess at the window pretty nearly how matters stood at the house, and they all three sent up an encouraging shout to the women.

Just at this point they heard the ringing sound of a horse's hoofs in an opposite direction, and turning suddenly Leah beheld her lover, dashing furiously toward the house. The additional enforcement, coming so opportunely, yet so unexpectedly, filled the heart of the timid maiden with increased confidence.

In another moment Randolph Darrell had alighted at their side, and in the next the blushing and happy Leah was enfolded in his manly embrace.

While the lovers were thus preoccupied Abijah, Silas and the negro arrived, fearfully excited and wholy out of breath

Silas recovered first, and was about to shoot down one of the Tories when his mother resolutely interfered.

"Don't shoot them! Leave them to me, Silas. I will mete out their punishment to them. We haven't forgotten Eben's murder yet, and shooting's too good for 'em. We will just hang them like a pack of dogs, the whole cowardly kit of them. Get the clothes line, Leah; we can afford to cut it on such a righteous and heaven sent occasion."

Randolph shuddered, for he understood the determined character of the woman, and knew that she would not be long in putting her terrible threat into execution. Nor, indeed, was she, for within the ensuing hour, in spite of their prayers and protestations, the bodies of the four Tories were dangling from the nearest tree. And thus at the hand of a resolute and heroic mother was the death of a beloved son simply and satisfactorly avenged.

SERVED HER RIGHT.

The happy lovers were Janet Elwood and John Wentworth. It remained for a young artist to seperate them.

Ugene Raycliffe came down to board with the Elwoods for a few weeks, and found it very enjoyable to make love to the daughter. This was too much for John, who, finding his betrothed so ingrossed with the stranger, kept away from her home. But she had little time to think of him, while Mr. Raycliffe devoted himself so entirely to her amusement. He painted her portrait, and while she sat for him, beguiled the time reciting in melting tones yards of tender, sentimental poetry; they went on sketching tours; they sat on the piazza in the twilight, and sang together, for Janet had a sweet alto voice, which the boarder was not long in finding admirably suited to his own.

Things went on until Janet's mother, with many a nob and beck and wreathed smile, intimated that there was an "understanding" between the young people. John Wentworth was well enough in his way, honest, sober and industrious, and shrewd as need be, but she looked higher for Janet. Janet had been to boarding school, she had the education of a lady, she could sing and play the piano, and Mr. Raycliffe had praised her drawing more than a little. And, by the way he hung around (his time to go back to the city was up long ago, but he had engaged the room for another month), she was sure something would come of it. She could sniff a wedding in the air, and went so far as to ask Mrs. Brown's opinion as to the most fashionable way of making dresses.

Time is a great healer, and when, one hazy October day, Janet rode over in her little phaeton to ask John and his sisters to her wedding, he looked her straight in the eyes, and wished her "a happy future," without a tremor in his hearty voice or a quiver of his eyelid.

"Eugene has gone to Boston," said Janet, flicking the flies off her gray pony, and leaning forward. "We should have heard from him yesterday. I feel a little worried. He had a good deal of money with him. We sent to the city by him for things we could not get here, and several of the neighbors—Judge Jordan, 'Squire Ellis and others—paid him in advance for portraits. I dreamed last night of his being robbed and killed. Ugh! it makes me shiver. I know I am foolish, but I can't feel easy."

Two days went by, and no news of the prospective bridegroom. The wedding preparations lagged. Three days—Judge Jordon and Squire White had a consultation.

Bills began to fall due, and Mr. Eugene Raycliffe was still like the unknown quantity represented by X. People began to talk. Janet's mother took to her bed with an illness' sudden, and a nature unexplained and obscure.

Janet grew pale, waiting for a letter. Finally one bright Saturday morning, Sunnydale, endividually and collectively, was agape over a startling headline in the Boston Journal:

"Arrest late last night of Joseph Raymond, otherwise known as 'Dashing Jo,' and having his latest alias, Eugene Raycliffe. Several well-to-do residents of Sunnydale victimized by the accomplished and gentlemanly scoundrel."

The affair was a nine day's wonder. But after a month or two had passed away, and the excitement had quieted, people began to wonder if John Wentworth would "take up with his pretty early love."

Encouragement for him to do so was not lacking (so the matrons Sunnydale will tell you) from Janet herself wrote a little note on perfumed paper to John, and this was the closing part of the reply:

"I do not want to reproach you for your throwing me over as you did. You have beeen punished enough. But for a man like you it's no use trying to go on with things as they are now. Better each go our own way. And although I can't feel toward you as I did once, believe that I bear no ill will toward you, and regard me, if you will, as a friend still."

"When, a year after, on another still October day, John told Janet of his approaching wedding to a young lady of Boston, Janet cried a little, and offered faint, lachrymose congratulations, with a fury of regret and jealously in her heart that the young lady of Boston fortunately knew nothing about.

An Irish lover remarked that it is a great pleasure to be alone, "especially whin yer sweetheart is wid ye."

She—"A pretty time of night for you to come home."

He—"A pretty time of night for you to be awake."

"I have staid awake for the last four hours waiting for you to come home."

"And I have been keeping myself awake for the last four hours at the club waiting for you to go to sleep."

"Are you acquainted with this?" asked Banks, as he displayed an unpaid note to its maker.

"No," replied Kyting; "I never met it."

Patient—"I am ever so glad to be up again, doctor. You wouldn't do anything to cause a relapse, would you."

Doctor—"Why of course not."

"Then don't bring in your bill for about twelve months."

Pocahontas Times.

JOHN E. CAMPBELL,
EDITOR AND PROPRIETOR.

Entered at the Post-office at Huntersville, W. Va., as second class matter.

ADVERTISING RATES.

	1 m.	3 m.	6 m.	1 yr.
1 inch	1 00	2 50	3 00	5 00
2 in.	2 00	4 00	5 00	10 00
1 column	3 00	6 00	10 00	17 00
½ col'n	6 00	15 00	20 00	30 00
1 col'n	10 00	20 00	30 00	50 00

Reading notices, not exceeding five lines, twenty-five cents for each insertion, and five cents a line for each additional line.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION.

One copy, 1 yr., $1.00 in advance; after 6 months, $1.25; after 12 months, $1.50. These terms will be strictly complied with.

Huntersville, W. Va.

March 19, 1891.

Some Republican blatherskites having claimed that, "whatever may be the faults of President Harrison, there are no scandals connected with his Administration," the New York World gave two pages of fine type to a brief summary of the following fifteen scandals—all of them dirty, some of them infamous—though it does not take into account the Force bill and several other infamous jobs which failed because Harrison could not carry them through without the unanimous support of his party in Congress. Here is the World's list of scandals:

1. Selling protection for cash to a class of monopolists.

2. Appointing to a Cabinet position the vulgar hypocrite, John Wanamaker, who was the largest contributor to the fund that purchased Harrison's election.

3. Expending the money thus procured in the open purchase of votes.

4. Utter disregard of civil service reform pledges, and a galaxy of disreputable party service.

5. The shameful administration of the great Pension Bureau for the benefit of pension sharks.

6. Prostituting the most honorable office in the world to a purely family affair.

7. The President of the United States as a gift-taker and tool of real estate boomers.

8. Stealing the representation in the United States Senate of a new State [Montana.]

9. Creating new States of mining camps for the sole purpose of retaining partisan control.

10. Evicting Democratic members of the House of Representatives for the same purpose.

11. Usurpation of power by the Speaker to insure the passage of partisan measures.

12. Disgraceful scenes and gross vulgarity in the House, the direct result of the Speaker's actions.

13. Making a fraudulent census for partisan advantage through a reapportionment of Congressional representation.

14. Government officials having public lands, regardless of a very mild rebuke.

15. Squandering the money of an overtaxed people to get rid of a troublesome surplus.

The whole history of Harrison as candidate, as President-elect, and as President is simply a huge scandal, and these specific scandals are merely a few of the spots on the skin of the leopard.

WASHINGTON LETTER.

From our regular correspondent.

WASHINGTON, D. C., M'ch 13th.—Mr. Harrison was fortunate in being out of town this week. He escaped the first explosions of the Blaine howlers, who have gone completely wild, because the alleged reciprocity treaty has been formally accepted by the Brazilian government, instead of being rejected as has been rumored, and because the British government has agreed to submit the Behring sea dispute to arbitration, reserving the right to insist upon the payment of damages by this government for what it calls the illegal seizure of vessels sailing under the British flag. Before crowning Mr. Blaine king of the world of diplomacy the Blainites should procure a copy of the dispatch of Lord Salisbury, sent to the British Minister here last summer, which was a part of the correspondence submitted to Congress at the last session. They will find that the proposition then made by Great Britain to arbitrate was, with dispute, substantially the same as that now accepted by Lord Salisbury. If there has been any diplomatic victory won in these negotiations Mr. Blaine was not its winner.

Notwithstanding the statement that Mr. Harrison had concluded not to make the appointments of the nine United States Judges until Congress met again the republican applicants for these life time positions are patiently waiting for his to return to the White House in order to renew the seige. His ostensible reason for going to Maryland was to shoot wild ducks, but I think that his real reason was to escape the importunities of the "Tame duck" of his party. It is thought here that he will make these appointments before going to the Pacific Coast in search of voters in the next republican national convention, and the vote hunting just is to begin, very appropriately in the neighborhood of the first of April. Attorney General Miller is said to be studying the law under which these judges are to be appointed as doubts have been expressed of its constitutionality.

Secretary Foster is in Ohio, but there is quite as much consternation in the Treasury Department as there usually is upon a change of administration, and the impression is general that many heads are to fall in order to make places for Foster's machine republicans. Treasurer Huston is expected to return to Washington to morrow but he will not, they say at the department, again resume his duties, although his resignation has not been officially accepted. There is a well defined rumor here that Mr. Harrison will try to get rid of Huston by tendering him an important foreign mission. Private Secretary Halford says there is nothing in it, but it finds many believers nevertheless.

Last night at the Hotel at which Hon. William R. Morrison, lives there was a gathering of delighted Illinois democrats exchanging congratulations upon the election of Gen. Palmer to the United States Senate, and no one expresses more pleasure than Mr. Morrison, who had been prominently mentioned as a candidate in case of the withdrawal of Gen. Palmer.

Republicans here take a special delight in the knowledge that the extravagant appropriations of the last Congress will make a deficit in the Treasury which the incoming democratic Congress will have to provide for, either by reducing expenses or increasing taxation, and they actually have the "gall" to express their delight to the democrats. Perhaps when the democratic House begins to show up some of the financial crookedness of the majority in the last Congress, as it is almost certain to do these fellows will not feel quite so gleeful.

The Treasury Department has notified the claim agents that all payments under the direct tax act will be made to the States in trust for the citizens there of from whom they were collected and that no one will be allowed to examine the direct-tax records of the department unless authorized by one of the States to do so. This is a black eye to the fraternity of claim agents as it would be safe to bet that copies of favored individuals before the order was issued.

The illegal sealers in Behring sea will have a lively time this season as pending the arbitration the ships of Great Britain will assist those of the United States in putting an end to the business.

COMMISSIONER'S SALE

Of Valuable Lands in Pocahontas County.

The undersigned Commissioner appointed by the Circuit Court of Pocahontas County, West Va., by decree pronounced on the 21st day of October, 1890, in the chancery cause therein pending in the name of Enoch H. Moore and wife as Plaintiffs v. Wm. Burr's adm'r and others as Defendants, will proceed, by virtue of said decree, at the front of the Court House of said County, at Huntersville, West Virginia, on

MONDAY, APRIL 6TH, 1891,

(Court day) to sell by way of public auction, to the highest bidder two certain tracts or parcels of land belonging to the Estate of said William Burr, dec'd, to-wit: One tract of 286 acres, and one tract of 30 acres, both lying & being in the said County of Pocahontas. The first of the above tracts is the same land which was allotted and assigned to the Heirs at Law of the said Wm Burr, dec'd in the partition of the lands of the Estate of Frederick Burr, dec'd.

These lands are worthy the attention of investors, and persons desiring to purchase will do well to examine them before the day of sale.

TERMS OF SALE:

Cash in hand sufficient to pay the costs of the suit aforesaid, and the expenses of sale, and as to the residue of the purchase money upon a credit of Six, Twelve and Eighteen months in equal installment with legal interest on the deferred installments from the day of sale. The purchasers or purchaser to give bonds for the deferred installments with good personal security, and the legal title to be retained as ultimate security.

WM. M. MCALLISTER,
Commissioner.

In the Clerk's office of the Circuit Court of Pocahontas County, West Virginia, I, J. H. Patterson, Clerk of the said Court, do hereby certify that Wm. M. McAllister Commissioner to sell the above described lands, has executed the bonds required by the decree of sale in the above styled cause.

J. H. PATTERSON, Clk.

mar 5-4t Printers fee $14 40

VALUABLE LANDS FOR RENT.

I shall offer for rent for the term of one year, at the front door of the Court House of Pocahontas County,

ON THE 6th DAY OF APRIL 1891

the lands belonging to Allie McGlaughlin, recently assigned her out of her father's estate situated on Elk, about 5 miles from Edray. This is a valuable tract of grazing and meadow land. The renter, however shall be required to keep no sheep on said land while in his possession.

For further particulars apply to the undersigned, or to M. D. McGlaughlin at Huntersville.

Terms made known on day of renting.

SUSAN McGLAUGHLIN,
Guardian of ALLIE McGLAUGHLIN,
march 5th.

ANNOUNCEMENTS.

To the Voters of Pocahontas County.

At the solicitation of many friends in the County, I announce myself a candidate for re-election to the office of County Superintendent. If elected I will perform the duties of the office without fear or favor. Thanking You for past favors, I again solicit your support at the coming election, May 19th. 1891.

M. G. MATHEWS.

To the Voters of Pocahontas County.

I hereby announce myself a candidate for the office of Couty Superintendent. If elected, I will perform the duties of the office to the best of my ability, without partiality. Election, May 19th.

Respectfully,
J. M. BARNETT.

HOME NEWS

—Sheriff J. C. Arbogast was in the city Tuesday.

—Send us the news from every post office in the County.

—Two weeks from Monday until circuit Court.

—One murder trial for the April Court.

—Lewisburg is playing havoc with the illicit whiskey men.

—S. J. Payne, Esq., of Academy, was in city the first of the week buying furs.

—Mess. J. C. and Chas. Arbogast and Jno. R. Rock of near Green Bank, were in the city today.

—Mr. Geo. R Curry of Academy called to see us Tuesday on his return home from visiting relatives at Green Bank.

—Gilbert Sharp Esq., has returned from Buchannon, Va., where he has been for several months past, working at the carpenter business.

—A. T. Staard Esq. a logger who works in the lumber camps of this county, advertises himself as the best man in Pocahontas and Greenbrier counties.

—Rev. Absolom Sydenstricker Missionary to China, will preach at Huntersville Sabbath night March 22, and at Marlins Bottom, Sabbath morning March 29th. Usual services at Sunset, the fourth Sabbath.

—Mrs. Julia S. Larue, wife of C. S. Larue Esq., three miles from Lewisburg died on the 7th inst., aged 70 years 5 month's and 18 days. Also Mr. Robert McVey, of Muddy Creek Greenbrier Co., on the 6th inst., aged about 70 years.

—Jake Kilrain, of Baltimore, and the negro pugilist Godfrey of Boston fought a finished fight in San Francisco on the 13th inst., for a $5,000 trophy. Kilrain knocked the negro out in the 34th round.

—Next week, we expect to add a new Keystone Job Press, and other job material to our already good job office. So if you want nice job printing of any kind, and as cheap as you can buy it in the city, give us a call.

—The corn crib of Mr. J. P. Wooddell near Green Bank, was broken into a few nights ago, but Mr. Wooddell's discovered the thief before he had made way with any of the corn, and fired a few shots at him. The thief decamped.

—The case of Frank Barrett vs. Wm. H. McAlister, which has made its second trip to the Court of Appeals, was finally decided by that Court last Saturday in favor of Barrett. The amount in controversy was considerably, approximating $4,000. Messrs. F. B. Knight, of Charleston and C. F. Moore, of this place conducted the case for Barrett.

DENTISTRY.—Dr. J. H. Way [illegible] will be at Edray, on the 19th of March and remain 4 days; Mill Point on the 23rd 5 days; Levels (Frank Burgess) 28th 3 days; Huntersville April 1st and remain 4 days; Frost April 6th 5 days; Dunmore April 13th 4 days; Green Bank April 18th 5 days, and will be prepared to attend to all Dental work. Call early and make your engagements as his time is limited to the above dates.

Gleanings from Hillsboro.

Mr. Henry White, of Douthard's creek, was visiting in Hillsboro.

Miss Daisy Yeager, of Traveler's Repose entered this morning as a pupil of the H. M. & F. Academy and also Miss Roxie Rogers, of Hill's creek at the Hillsboro Training School.

Mrs. Birdie Ballengee is visiting relatives in the Levels, while her husband is a'tending conference at Roanoke city.

Before these last cold snaps the frogs and the brass band run a pretty even race.

Rev. C. A. Sydenstricker and R. W. Hill are absent attending conference.

The teachers are much gratified by seeing the announcement of Mr. M. G. Mathews for Co. Supt. He has won the regard of all the teachers in this section.

There is talk of a string band for the upper end of town. Several dollars have already been subscribed toward the enterprise. Let her come, as it is the sweetest music.

Mr. Dassonville, of Frankford, is laying the foundation for a large and commodious barn for the American House, owned by C. W. Callison.

Mr. Wm. H. Overholt has returned from Ronceverte where he has spent several days looking after his interest in the lumber business.

The dogs attacked Capt. Edgar's sheep one night last week and killed four. As your correspondent does not own a dog, he thinks the tax on the dogs should be rased to $50.00 and stop this mischief.

The ladies of the Presbyterian church have finished and presented to Mrs. Sydenstricker, the pastor's wife a handsome silk crazy quilt. The finishing of the quilt was due to the energy of Mrs. Emma Beard, although most of the ladies of the congregation had a hand in it.

Mr. Preston Clark is quite ill at the time of this writing.

Dr. Wallace is improving.

Dr. McClintic was called to Clover Lick to-day by the illness of his mother-in-law, Mrs. Dr. Ligon.

Dr. Larue received the sad tidings of the death of his mother at her home near Lewisburg last week of heart disease.

MAX.

Marlinton Mentionings.

During the recent rafting tide but one raft could be gotten up, owing the scarcity of material at the four yards. It was a jumbo of a raft however, belonging to Giles Sharp, and piloted by John Callison.

Nearly fifteen thousand dollars worth of material has been sent out, during the season.

It grieves many friends to hear that Mr. J. C. Price, has been bereaved of his youngest child, Edgar a very bright, beautiful little boy.

"Suffer little children to come unto me, of such is the kingdom of heaven."

There is a boy at Marlinton, who is interested in the almanac, on clear morning. He has found out that the sun in one hour, passes a space covered by the palm of the hand. He learns from the almanac the time the sun rises, then observes how many palms, or parts of a palm the sun is above the horizon, and thence calculates the hour. If the sun rises at 6:15, and its position is two palms above, he decides it to be 8:15 o'clock. For the afternoon time he subtracts the palms and parts of a palm, from the time the almanac gives for sunset. The result serves all practicable purposes and he wants no better Waterbury watch than the grand old timepiece hung out in the skies.

The new store building is going ahead at Kee's run. All day and far into the night, it is hammer and saw.

It looks now as if there might be a chance for a railroad, from some recent developments, the writer does not feel at liberty to speak of very definitely just at present.

It gratifies all his friends to hear that Fred Wallace made a fine speech at the recent celebration of the 22nd, at Hampden Sydney College.

The Hon. L. C. Draper of Wisconsin is editing a revised edition of Border Warfare and is corresponding with parties for more information than what that book gives. Persons who could give interesting items not mentioned in that book would do well, to send them to W. T. Price, at Marlington. He would take pleasure in giving all such historical material to Dr. Draper, at the earliest time, in his power.

Many friends sympathize with Mr. J. C. Price in the death of his two little boys, Forest and Edgar, recently, at the home of their grand father, Adam See, in Randolph Co.

"Suffer little children &c."

Yours as ever,
J. K. S.

Meat House Broken Into

On last Friday night the 13th inst. the meat house of Mr. Jno. Rock, near Green Bank was broken into and several pieces stolen. Tuesday night David Rader who came from the same place a day or two ago to work on the bridge abutments at this place was arrested for the crime and given a hearing before Justice Grose in which he confessed the whole thing, saying that he and Wm. Rexroad anothes hand on the abutments, committed the crime, but before a warrant could be issued Rexroad skipped out, but it is hoped that he will be arrested to-day or tomorrow.

Rader was committed to jail.

CAN THIS BE TRUE.

The New York Sun of the 4th inst has the following:

Seven Bohemians who were sent from an employment agency in Greenwich street to labor on the railroad near the Pocahontas coal mine in West Virginia have written a letter to a Bohemian newspaper in this city that is like a chapter from the blackest records of slavery. They arrived with emmigrants of several other nationalities, at Elkhorn, W. Va., in the latter part of November under the impression that they were to receive $1.20 a day and an allowance of $9 a month for board. They signed a paper which was not read to them, but which bound them, they afterward found out to servitude.

"We were put on the train at Norfolk after our arrival from New York," the letter reads, "and taken to Pocahontas. After leaving the train we were told that we would have to travel one day on foot, and that we would have to leave our trunks behind. Instead of traveling one day we traveled three. The cold was so severe, and most of our shoes gave way, so that we were almost barefooted. At Pocahontas we were joined by two young men who rode on mules and were heavily armed. The agent carried a pistol in his hand. They compelled us to wade through icy water. Those who objected were hit on the head. What happened to us after we reached our destination is so dreadful that it may seem incredible to you. We are helpless here, as we are watched and guarded like prisoners. We did not get a trunk until a month after we got here, and our bodies were covered with vermin. The food is always the same—bitter black coffee and bacon three times a day. Whether a man is ill or not, it makes no difference to our masters. He must go to work, and when he is not able to work he is flogged until he is blue, and told that he has signed the contract and must abide by it. We have received no money, and when we ask for it we are told that we owe $11 for railroad fare and $11 for board.

At the store we are charged double for what we get, so that we have debts amounting to $35. Our labor is in vain, as hard as it is; we are hungry, and our nights are sleepless because of cold and dirt. We eat breakfast at 5 o'clock in the morning and go immediately to our work; which goes far into the night. "Two men tried to escape on January 18. One was a Russian Jew and the other a Pole. They were caught and brought back. For punishment they were compelled to wade in water up to their waists and draw large boats after them. After this their coats were taken off, and they were whipped until they begged on their knees for mercy. At night they were chained together so they could not escape. When we asked about our trunks and received an unsatisfactory answer we refused to work. We were confronted with pistols, and told that we would be shot down like dogs unless we resumed work.

"We have been sold like slaves. Is there no help? Oh, if we could flee from here and save others from a similar fate! Perhaps this letter may be published, and through Providence, we may yet be saved. We sign ourselves very respectfully,

"WILLIAM HOFFMAN,
"JOSEPH LANGER,
"J. P. MAYER,
"MIKE HRANYO,
"J. MRAZ,
"J. GERRY.

Our address is Elkhorn, McDowell county, W. Va., care of J. Bowell, Purcell's Camp (No. 2)."

NOTICE.

I will be in Pocahontas Co. the first of April for the purpose of castrating horses and spaying cows and calves in the latest style.

G. B. WALLACE

A deplorable tragedy was enacted in Wheeling last Saturday morning. Dr. Geo. I. Garrison shooting and killing Dr. Geo. Baird, Bothmen were well known in the city, having held prominent puplic offices. The shooting was the culmination of the personal animosity existing between the two men they having been rivals for public honors.

—Many people in the upper end of Pocahontas county, W Va., have been almost reduced to starvation by the recent storms. People can scarcely get flower, sugar, salt or soda, and feed for domestic animals is rapidly becoming a thing of the past.—Wheeling Quest.

Our esteemed contemporary The Quest, has been misinformed as we have heard nothing of the kind. The deep snow of December caused some inconvenience but there was no suffering as we know of.

At a County Court continued and held for the County of Pocahontas at the Court house thereof, on the 4th day of March, 1891.

On the coming in of a petition signed by John W. Welford and more than twenty other voters, of Edray district praying that a polling place be established at the store house of R. E. Overholt & Sons at Buckeye in said district this said polling place is hereby established according to the prayer of said petition; and the Clerk of this Court is hereby directed to have notice published in the POCAHONTAS TIMES, a newspaper published in Pocahontas County, West Virginia, in accordance with Chapter 3, Section 8, of the Code of West Virginia.

A Copy Teste:
S. L. BROWN, Cl'k.

COMMISSIONER'S SALE OF LAND.

Pursuant to two decrees of the Circuit Court of Pocahontas County rendered on the 23rd day of October, 1889 and on the 21st day of October, 1890, in the Chancery cause of Levi Gay, Adm'r &c. vs. Wm. Skeen, I as special Commissioner appointed by said decree, shall proceed to sell at public auction to the highest bidder, in front of the Court House of said County, on the

6TH DAY OF APRIL, 1891,

the following tracts of valuable lands: to-wit: a tract containing 2845 acres, and a tract of 44 acres situate on the waters of Knapp's Creek a tract of 2292 acres situa'e on Buckley Mountain and a tract of 161½ acres situate on Droop Mountain, all in Pocahontas County, West Virginia. Any one desiring further particulars concerning said lands may obtain same writing to the undesigned Commissioner.

TERMS OF SALE.

So much cash in hand as will pay costs of suit and sale, and for the residue the purchaser to execute three several bonds with approved security falling due in 6 12 & 18 months respectively from day of sale; said bonds to bear interest from date. A lien will also be retained on said lands as ultimate security.

C. F. MOORE, Spec'l Com'r.

Bond has been given by above Com'r as required by decree in said cause.

J. H. PATTERSON, Clk.

mar 12-4t Printer's fee $9.95

COMMISSIONER'S NOTICE.

Lizzie Lightner,
vs.
Wm. J. McGlaughlin's heirs, &c.
IN CHANCERY.

Notice is hereby given to all persons interested in the above styled suit, now pending in the Circuit Court of Pocahontas County that on the 19th day of March, 1891, at the law office of F. J. Snyder in the town of Huntersville, Pocahontas Co., W. Va., the undersigned Commissioner of said Court acting under a decretal order in said suit made on the 21st day of October, 1890 will proceed to take and state for report to Court the following matters of account, viz:

1st. A statement of the accounts of L. M. McClintic and C. F. Moore as administrators of Wm. J. McGlaughlin, dec'd.

2nd. An account showing the distributive interest of each of the heirs of said Wm. J. McGlaughlin in the personal estate of the intestate;

3rd. Any other matter deemed pertinent by the Commissioner, or required to be specially stated by any party in interest.

F. J. SNYDER, Com'r Cir. C't P. C.

feb. 19-4t. Printer's fee $7.95

Pocahontas Times.

JOHN E. CAMPBELL,
EDITOR AND PROPRIETOR.

Entered at the Post-office at Huntersville, W. Va., as second class matter.

ADVERTISING RATES.

	1 m.	3 m.	6 m.	1 yr.
One inch	$ 1 00	$ 2 00	$ 3 00	$ 5 00
Three in.	3 00	4 00	6 00	10 00
Qr. column	5 00	6 00	10 00	17 00
Half col'n	8 00	12 00	20 00	30 00
One col'n	10 00	20 00	30 00	50 00

Reading notices, not exceeding five lines, twenty-five cents for each insertion, and five cents a line for each additional line.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION.

One copy, 1 yr., $1.00 in advance; after 6 months, $1.25; after 12 months, $1.50

These terms will be strictly complied with.

Huntersville, W. Va.

March 19, 1891.

WHAT A HORSE WOULD SAY.

Don't hitch me to an iron post or railing when the mercury is below freezing.

Don't compel me to eat more salt than I want by mixing it in my oats I know better than any other animal how much I need.

Don't think because I go free under the whip that I never get tired.

Don't think that because I am a horse that iron weeds and briars won't hurt my hay.

Don't whip me when I get frightened along the road, or I will expect it next time and may be make trouble.

Don't trot me up hill, for I have to carry you and the buggy and myself, too.

Don't keep my stable very dark, for when I go out into the light my eyes are injured, especially if snow be on the ground.

Don't say "Whoah!" unless you mean it. Theach me to stop at that word.

Don't make me drink ice cold water nor put a frosty bit in my mouth. Warm the bit by holding it a half minute against my body.

Don't forget to file my teeth when they get jagged and I cannot chew my food. When I get lean, it is a sign that my teeth want filing.

Don't ask me to "back" with blinds on. I am afraid to.

Don't run me down a steep hill, for if anything should give away I might break your neck.

Don't put on my blind bridle so that it irritates my eye, or so leave my forelock that it will be in my eyes.

Don't be so careless of my harness as to find a great sore on me before you attend to it.

Don't lend me to some blockhead who has less sense than I have.

SOME CHESTNUTS.

The optician is the eye-deal tradesman.

Brought to light—An after-dinner cigar.

Foot prints—Boot and shoe advertisements.

It is a wise old saw that knows who filed it last.

"Yes, my child, yes; dun is the future tense of due."

A man doesn't have to understand military tactics to drill a hole.

How can a man follow a calling and yet be at the head of his profession?

The capitalist who loaned money to the cattle man referred to it as a beef stake.

When a brainless individual gets a cold in the head, it is case of a long felt want being filled.

It sounds rather paradoxical, but is a fact, nevertheless, that the stoutest man is the one who has to move the slimmest.

After you have discovered that your coal merchant is an honest man, never contradict him. Let him have his own weigh.

"You're always full of news," said the letter to the box. "I'm glad you dropped in," replied the box. "I'll keep you posted."

A DEAD CAT MINE.

It was the man on whose land natural gas was first struck in the Findlay, O., district, and he was telling some of us about it as we waited in the depot at Columbus.

"Wall, you know," he began, "my son Bill was a great hand to read. One day he laid away a book he had been reading and says to me:

"'Dad, I've been reading up on minerals and I'm goin' to find suthin' right here on our farm.'

"'Shoo, Bill,' says I, 'but you won't strike nothing outside of cobble stones and worms.'

"But he went at it and begun to dig and bore and fool around and leave me to hoe the corn and one day he struck suthin'. There cam sich an infernal smell that both of us was driven to the house, and then the smell got so bad that we was drove to a neighbors and we had to let the hogs out of the pen, or they would have keeled over.

"'Bill,' I says, when I got where I could breathe again, 'you said you'd strike sunthin', and you have. You've wasted three months gettin' down to whar Christopher Columbus buried about a thousand tom cats, and we've all been driv off the farm in consekence. It's my turn now to strike suthin', and you kin git ready for the all-firedest lickin' a boy ever got.'

"I give it to him gentlemen, and then I went spookin' around to find somebody who'd buy the farm at about the cost of the barn. A feller who seemed to hev catarrh and didn't mind the smell closed up a deal with me, and I had to grin as I walked off with his money under my arm. I kept on grinnin' for about a week, but then I heard some news that stopped me, and I guess it's three years since I've opened my mouth sideways. Them dead cats was worth a hundred thousand dollars to me, and I sold 'em for $800 and walked around patting myself on the back fur bein' so all fired cute."

A MODERN FABLE.

One day a peasant carried a basket of potatoes to the field and dug holes in the soil and planted them. His young son watched the operation for a time and then inquired.

"Pop, why do you put those taters in the ground?"

"By so doing each one will bring me back ten," replied the father.

The boy went away and when his father came up to dinner he found him digging in the yard and asked:

"Sonny, what are you seeking for?"

"Why, pop. I have planted the clock, the bootjack, two umbrellas, the teapot, your sunday hat, ma's shoes and a tablecloth, and each one will bring me back ten."

"You young idiot, come out and be paralyzed," shouted the father, and he tanned that boy up and down and crosswise and sidewise until the supply of peach limbs gave out.

"Pop planted 'taters to get back ten," mused the boy, as he sat down under the low shed to think, "but I planted clocks and hats and shoes to get a licking. It must be the difference in the soil."

Moral—And the next fall, when the father cut down his corn stalks to save them, and the son cut down the currant bushes for the same object, as got licked again.

Tompkins—"When I called at the Smythes' to-day, I noticed that Mrs. Smythe had a black eye."

Mrs. Tompkins—"You don't suppose her husband beats her, do you?"

Tompkins—"Oh, I guess not; her mother's eyes were of the same color."

The chance of a man being struck by a tornado is one in 29,000,000. And the chance of his recovery when struck is about the same.

Jimson—All this talk about young wives' biscuits being as hard as bricks is a slanderous lie.

Simson—I'm glad to hear you say so, Jimson.

Jimson—Yes, I've been married four weeks now, and every loaf of bread that Mrs. Jimson has made so far has been as soggy and soft as apple dump.

"Why did you assault this man?" was asked of a prisoner in the police Court the other morning.

"He hurt my feelings, Judge."

"In what respect?"

"Well, I had pawned my overcoat, socks and undershirt to get money to get out of town, and he came up and chargea me with picking his pocket of $10,000 in clear cold cash."

"Well?"

"Think of it, Judge! I stood there hungry and shivering, and he demanded his $10,000 back! Ten thousand dollars! Why, the most I ever had at any one time was $17! I suppose I hit him, but how could I help it? Ten thousand dollars! Wanted me to go down into my pocket and pull up $10,000. in greenbacks. Great Scot! but I haven't got over the feeling yet!"

Sentence suspended.

SUBSCRIBE

FOR THE——

POCAHONTAS TIMES,

Every man in the County should take it, and patronize home industry. It sustains your rights, and works for the advancement of your county, which no city paper will do. It gives you the news from all parts of the county, which you could not get otherwise. It furnishes matters of interst to the Merchant, Farmer and Mechanic. It keeps you posted and gives you information, on all general news, and its sections and Miscellany are fit for all ages.

TERM OF SUBSCRIPTION.

One year in advance	$1.00
If not paid within 6 months	1.25
And at the end of the year	1.50

AND IF YOU NEED

Letter Heads, Note Heads, Bill Heads, Envelopes, Drug Envelopes, Tags, Business Cards, Official Blanks, Blank Bonds, Posters, Briefs for the Court of Appeals etc.

GET THEM AT "THE TIMES."

JOB OFFICE,

POCAHONTAS TIMES.

Vol. 8. JOHN E. CAMPBELL, EDITOR AND PROPRIETOR. Huntersville, West Virginia, Thursday, March 26, 1891. Terms of Subscription. $1.00 PER YEAR IN ADVANCE. No. 34.

Official Directory of Pocahontas County.

Judge of Circuit Court, A. N. Campbell.
Prosecuting Attorney, L. M. McClintic.
Sheriff, J. C. Arbogast.
Deputy Sheriff, Geo. W. Callison.
Cl'k Co. Court, S. L. Brown.
Cl'k Cir. Court, J. H. Patterson.
Assessor, C. O. Arbogast.
Com'rs Co. Ct. C. E. Beard, S. B. Hannah, G. M. Kee.
Co. Surveyor, Geo. Baxter

THE COURTS.

Circuit Court convenes on the first Monday in April, 3rd Monday in June and 3rd Monday in October.
County Court convenes on the 1st Tuesday in January, March, October and second Tuesday in July. July is levy term.

TOM'S WIFE.

Uncle Trotcombe came driving up to Miss Medbury's employment office in an irritable frame of mind. He had not had any previous experience in engaging help, but as his wife was laid up with the rheumatism, and there was no one to look after farm, kitchen or house work, the case became one of necessities to look for a hired girl.

The women, young and old, waiting for employment, were none of them anxious to accompany Uncle Trotcombe home, because a farm was so lonely in winter, and a girl would die for want of society in such a place.

Miss Medbury was about to announce to the old man that it would be impossible for him to get suited that day, when a pale, lady-like looking girl whispered a few words in her ear. The speaker was willing to work on the farm, and though Uncle Trotcombe vowed she looked too delicate for hard work and too much of a lady for the position, he engaged her.

So Mary Linn went out to the old one storied farm house, with the huge butternut trees standing above and the little cataract roaring down the glen behind, and strange to say Uncle Timothy Trotcombe's "old lady" fell in love with the pale, sweet stranger at first sigh.

"I made sure you wouldn't like her," said Uncle Timothy.

"That shows just how much a man's judgment is worth," said Aunt Betsy.

"To be sure she hasn't had much experience doing housework, but she is quick to learn, and handy in the kitchen, and, I declare, her hands are that soft and her ways that gentle and coaxing, it's a pleasure to have her to wait upon one!"

And by degrees Aunt Betsy wiled this stranger's sad story from her with womanly sympathy and artifice.

"Poor lamb! She's got a husband somewhere, but she don't exactly know where," said Mrs. Trotcombe there was meddlin' friends, and he was jealous without a reason.

"Or with one," said Uble Timothy shrewdly.

"Don't tell me," said Aunt Betsy. "And she ran away to her own folks; and they was dead, and she was too proud to go back and tell her husband of all she suffered; and finally she fell sick and nearly died in a hospital. And when she came back to life, as it were, she saw everything in such a different light; and she begged and worked her way back to her husband's house; and when she got there—lo and behold the house was shut up and he was gone to Europe. And she wrote to him, and she never got no answer; and now poor lamb, she's supporting herself as best she can. I wish you could a seed her cry, with her head on my lap. I cried too."

"I'll venture you did," said Uncle Timothy.

"Well, nobody could a helped it. And then I told her the story of our nephew, Tom, as we brought up just like a child of our own, and how he went west and married the play-actin' beauty, and how she ran off and left him, and broke his heart; and how he was wanderin' around now in Switzerland and Y'roop, and them furrin parts tryin' to forget her. And Mary looked up at me with her big eyes, and, says she, 'Oh, dear, dear Mrs. Trotcombe, don't judge the poor girl too hardly. Look at me and think what she too, may, have suffered.' And I declare to you, Timothy, it never occured to me before that there might have been two sides to that question too."

"Humph!" said Uncle Timothy Trotcombe, and he took snuff. "Did you tell her as Tom was comin' back this week?"

"No," said Aunt Betsy. "Why should I?"

"Did it ever strike you as possible that he might come to-day?"

"No." Aunt Betsy answered wondering more and more.

Uncle Timothy wheeled the old lady's invalid chair a step or two forward so that it was on a range with the window, and then he pointed out toward the garden gate, where the crimson honeysuckels were just bursting into bud and a white lilac waved its crest of bloom back and forth in the soft spring wind. A tall figure bronzed in the face, and bearded as to the chin was striding through.

"It's Tom!" said Aunt Betsy spasmodically.

"Yes, it's Tom," said Uncle Timothy. Hush!"

For at that instant a slight figure which had been stooping over Aunt Betsy's white lillies, rose into the bland May sunshine, and the two young people stood face to face.

"Tom, oh Tom!"

"My Mary!"

And the next moment they were clasped in each others arms.

Uncle Timothy and Aunt Betsy stared at one another.

"Old lady,' said Uncle Timothy "did you ever suspect this?"

"Never!" cried the old wife, with a mist fast gathering on her spectacle glasses.

"I did," said Uncle Timothy; "long ago. Well, it's all right now. Pull down the shade, old lady. It ain't hardly fair for old folks like you and me to be peeping. And Tom will think of us now.

"Well," said Aunt Betsy, huskily, "I'm glad of it. For I always liked that girl."

"So did I," said Uncle Timothy Trotcombe.

THE CIRCUS DID IT.

Nathan, you are married, I understand," said the Governor of Tennessee to a hillside constituent, according to the Arkansas Traveler.

"Yes, sir; captured the best looking girl in the whole community. Old Lige Peterson's daughter, Rose. You know her, I reckon."

"Yes; I thought she was engaged to Sam Parker.

"She was, but I got ahead of him. Tell you how it was. She loved Sam powerful, for he is the best circus-rider we have ever had. I loved Rose, and was mightily downcast for I thought there wasn't no use in buckin' agin him. Well the day for the marriage was set, and a passel of us come to town to see the weddin', for Rose 'lowed that she wanted to be married in town, then take the cars for home thereby gettin' a ten mile bridal tower. When we got to town lo and behold there was a circus with mo' horses than a strong man could shake a stick at. Rose was mighty keen to go to the show but Sam says, says he, 'Rose, you know it's agin my religin. Stay here 'till I go and git the license.' Rose's under jaw dropped. When Sam was gone, I says, says I, 'Rose wouldn't you like to go to that show?'

"Yes, but Sam won't take me.'

"That's bad; they've got a world of horses.'

"Then she turned up and begun to cry.'

"Rose', say's I, "if you marry Sam you can't go to the show, but if you marry me I'll take you."

"She studied awhile and says, says she, 'An' let me stay to the concert airter the big show's over?'

"'Yes.'

"'An' let me look at the monkeys all I want to?'

"'Tibby sho."

"'An' won't pull an' haul when I get interested?'

"No, sw'ar I won't.'

"'An' when the show's over you let me look at the monkey agin?'

"Yes.'

"Nath,' said she putting her hand mighty lovin'ly on my arm, 'I'm yourn.' Then I jumped up, popped my heels togather, an, in less'n half an hour we were dun married an' a lookin' at the monkeys.'

MAKING IT PLEASANT.

Owing to a confusion in the names of stations, I got off at the wrong one in Tennessee, and as there was no public house in the hamlet, the station agent said I could go home with him. His house was a humble one, as seen in the darkness, and as we reached the gate he halted and said:

"Stranger, perhaps I ought to tell you——"

"What?" I asked, as he hesitated.

"Well, never mind. Come along in.'

He took me into the front room which did not seem to be much used by the family. As we entered there came a loud yell from an adjoining room, and he explained:

"It's only my wife boxing the oldest gal's ears for sassing her. Let me take your hat.

He had scarcely taken it when a boy was heard whooping, and he explained:

"It's only wife pulling young Tim's hair for not bringing in the night wood.

The whoop was followed by a yelp and a howl, and my host calmly explained:

"One o' the dogs got in the way, you see, and she lifted him.'

I was trying to make his position a little less embarrassing, when there were two yells in quick succession, followed by a scramble, and he crossed his legs and remarked:

"The twins was proably hooking vitles off the table and got caught at it."

Half a minute later, just as I had got ready to ask about the crops in that locality, the door was banged open and a woman, who had a fork in one hand and a baby on her shoulder, bounced in and shouted out:

"You onery, lazy Jim Murdock, if you don't help take keer of those brats I'll——!"

She saw me and stopped and retreated, and when she had gone the husband explained:

"That's what I was going to tell ye at the gate—that ye'd have to take chances on her being in a tantrum. She's got one, and if you don't mind being called squint-eyed, bald-headed, gander shanked, and hump backed, and if you can kick the dogs off, when she sets 'em on and put up with the children climbing over you, I'll try to make it pleasant otherwise."

"Did you ever see anything like that?" asked a young lady to her escort at a church fair where raffling was in progress.

"Only once."

"When was that?"

—It was when a bunco man in New York steered me into a little game of [illegible], and I was robbed of $25."

After all, [illegible] absence of body, there is nothing so desirable in moments of danger as presence of mind, says the San Francisco [illegible].

THAT BLESSED BABY.

"Oh, Mr. Wilkins," said a young Madison avenue mother, as one of her husband's bachelor friends arose to say good evening, "you must see baby before you go."

"I should be obliged," he answered rather meakly, "but isn't it too late?" he inquired, looking about for his hat.

"Not a bit," she insisted, and after a moment's absence the fond mother returned with a bundle of dainty wraps and lace, and presented an infant countenance for inspection.

"You never saw a dearer baby in your life," she declared, putting the mite of humanity into her guest's unwilling arms.

"I'm not up on babies," he ventured feebly, holding the infant as if it would explode, "but I should say it was—was beautiful."

"I knew you would think so," said the pleased mother.

"I hope it hasn't a fever," he rashly added.

"Fever?"

"Yes, looks flushed you know."

"Nonsense," said the mother indignantly, "all babies are pink, and besides Mr. Wilkins," she continued coldly; "you keep saying, 'it.' My baby is a boy."

"I beg your parden," stammered the unhappy bachelor, the prespiration beginning to stand out on his brow, "there wasn't any thing in the—the attire to indicate—but then,' he blundered, "I might have known it was a boy because it—he is bald.

A look of horrified amazement came on the young mother's face.

"Don't let me detain you, Mr. Wilkins," she said, quickly relieving him of the burden, "and when you get home if you will read up on babies you will find," she added a significant glance, "that red faces and bald heads are mostly confined to middle-aged bachelors.

She—Mr. Jones, look at that impudent man on the other side of the street. He has been following us for the last ten blocks.

Jones—Why didn't you tell me so before. I'll teach the impudent puppy a lesson.

Walking boldly across the street Jones says to the man: Look here, Snip, I am very sorry I've not got the money to pay you for that last suit, but you ought not to follow me up and dun me when I'm trying to capture that girl. She has got lots of money, and if I succeed you will not only get your money but also an order for a wedding suit."

Snip goes off satisfied.

Returning to the yong lady Jones says: "I am glad you called my attention to that cowardly scoundrel. I don't think he will ever stare at you again. I had great difficulty in restraining myself."

She—Dearest Frank, if I were to suppose for a moment that you were going to marry me for money, I should in despair put an end to my wretched existence.

"Calm yourself, dearest; let us get married as soon as possible, and you shall see what efforts I'll make to get rid of your money."

Stern Parent—Hello, you young reprobate! Where are you going with that fishing pole on Sunday morning? My pole, too!

Erring Son—Going' to do as you and Solomon told me.

S. P.—The mischief you are!

E. S.—Yessir. Didn't you say that Solomon said that if a man didn't let his boy have the rod he'd spoil the kid?

Pocahontas Times.

JOHN E. CAMPBELL,

EDITOR AND PROPRIETOR.

Entered at the Post-office at Huntersville, W. Va., as second class matter.

ADVERTISING RATES.

	1 m.	3 m.	6 m.	1 yr.
One inch	$ 1 00	$ 2 00	$ 3 00	$ 5 00
Three in.	2 00	4 00	6 00	10 00
Qr. column	3 00	6 00	10 00	17 00
Half col'n	6 00	12 00	20 00	30 00
One col'n	10 00	20 00	30 00	50 00

Reading notices, not exceeding five lines, twenty-five cents for each insertion, and five cents a line for each additional line.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION.

One copy, 1 yr., $1.00 in advance; after 6 months, $1.25; after 12 months, $1.50

Those terms will be strictly complied with.

Huntersville. W. Va.

March 26, 1891.

The German legislative news will assume a new interest if Bismarck becomes the leader of the opposition in the Reichstag.

U. S. Treasurer Huston thinks this country presents greater opportunities than Russia for the political dyna miter, therefore he refuses to accept the Russian mission. He thinks probably that his proper mission is to prevent the nomination of Benjamin Harrison again.

The newspaper scrapping match between those sharp tongued republicans, ex Senator Ingalls and Murat Halstead, is growing interesting. They can say nothing about each other so bad that the people of the country will not endorse it.

The election of Gen. John M. Palmer to the United States Senate by the Illinois legislature was worth all the patient waiting through the apparently endless deadlock. Patience, persistence and popularity are valuable aids in "getting there", and don't you let it slip from your mind.

The British steamship Utopia, from Italian ports, bound to New York with 700 Italian emigrants aboard, collided with the British ironclad Rooney, anchored in Gibraltar Bay, and sank soon afterward off Ragged Staff. A southwest gale was blowing at the time of the collision. Many women and children were drowned. A large number, clinging to the rigging, have been rescued by boats from the channel squadron.

The Italian government has protested and Mr. Harrison has forwarded a communication to the Governer of Louisiana calling his attention to the treaty obligations which compel us to protect citizens of foreign countries. Mr. Blain now has an opertunity. Let him show the world the why and wherefore of this unfortunate occurrence, and give the citizens of New Orleans the hearing they are entitled to.

The son of the late Senator Hearst will, it is said, shortly begin the publication of a great daily newspaper in the city of New York. As the young man has just inherited $20,000,000 he will not be hampered by lack of capital, and if his paper shall be as sound politically as the San Francisco Examiner, the paper he now owns and edits, it will be a decided acquisition to the democratic party.

Mr. Benjamin Harrison is looming up in the republican mind as the next candidate of his party. That suits us to a dot. It would hardly be possible for the republican party to put up a weaker man than Harrison, unless it took Tom Reed. Were for Harrison, tooth and toe nail, because we know that we can lick him out of his boots, and because we will enjoy "showing" him more than any other man, because of the accident that placed him where he is. Oh, yes, by all means give us Harrison.

The negroes who foolishly went to Oklahoma expecting such great things are many of them actually starving while all of them are suffering from one or another cause. The negroes, in large bodies can never thrive and prosper in any place where the climatic conditions are widely different from those of the Southern States, and they will find no place in any of the other states where it is possible to live with as little work as they can in the South, which is their natural home, and to which the sensible members of that race will stick.

A terible riot occured in New Orleans on the 14th inst. in which thirteen Italians were shot and killed. These parties had been on trial for the assassination of David C. Hennessey, a policeman, which occurred some time ago. The proof against them was strong and convincing, but through the influence of money which was used to corrupt the jurors in the case, they were acquitted and would have been released on that day. This manifest attempt to defeat the ends of justice provoked the deepest indignation among the best people of the city, and in a few minutes a large crowd of representative citizens collected and proceeded to the city prison. They forced an entrance and the work of death soon began. When all was over they dispersed and went quietly to their homes. The action of the mob seems to have been jutifiable.

Lynch law is always to be deprecated, even though the course of justice be sometimes turned aside by or through corrupt methods, but there are mitigating circumstances in the case of the citizens of New Orleans who recently lynched twelve members of "Mafia", an outlawed society organized for plunder and murder. These men had been acquitted by the intimidation and bribery of the jury, in the face of evidence of the most positive and convincing kind of the guilt of a number of them of having been in a conspiracy which resulted in the cold blooded murder of the chief of police of that city. The mob which lynched these prisoners was composed of the leading citizens of New Orleans, many of whom carried in their pockets the "death warnings" issued by the "Mafia", and who deemed it a question of life or death, whether they or the "Mafia" should be exterminated. Before condemning the action of these threatened citizens who have for months been compelled to take every precaution to prevent their own assassination it is well to read the opinions of those great commercial bodies, the Board of Trade, the Sugar Exchange and the Stock Exchange, of New Orleans, as expressed in the following preamble and resolution unanimously adopted by all on the afternoon of the day the lynching took place:

"Whereas the deplorable administration of criminal justice in this city, and the frightful extent to which the bribery of juries had been carried, has rendered it necessary for the citizens of New Orleans to vindicate outraged justice.

Be it resolved, That, while we deplore at all times the resort to violence, we consider the action taken by the citizens this morning to be proper and justifiable"

The Pert Young Man.

See that half grown man? He never will know as much again as he does now at the ripe age of 20.

When he gets to be 50, when his hair is grizzled and his hopes are like the dead leaves that cling to November trees, he will look back upon those years of rare wisdom and colossal effrontery and blush a little, perhaps, at the recollection.

Now he has no reverence for a woman or for God. He sneers at good in a world whose threshold he has barely crossed, as a youngold child might stand in the doorway of his nursery and denounce what was going on in the drawing room. Most of the seathing things that are said about domestic felicity, and the sneers that are bestowed on love, and the gibes that are flung at purity, and the scoffs that are launched at established religions; all the jokes at the expense of noble womanhood and the witticisms that are lavished upon the old fashioned virtues, spring from the gigantic brain of the youth of the period. —Ex.

COMMISSIONER'S SALE

Of Valuable Lands in Pocahontas County.

The undersigned Commissioner appointed by the Circuit Court of Pocahontas County, West Va., by decree pronounced on the 21st day of October, 1890, in the chancery cause therein pending in the name of of Enoch H. Moore and wife as Plaintiffs v. Wm. Burr's adm'r and others as Defendants, will proceed, by virtue of said decree, at the front of the Court House of said County, at Huntersville, West Virginia, on MONDAY, APRIL 6TH, 1891.

(Court day) to sell by way of public auction, to the highest bidder two certain tracts or parcels of land belonging to the Estate of said William Burr, dec'd, to-wit: One tract of 266 acres, and one tract of 50 acres, both lying & being in the said County of Pocahontas. The first of the above tracts is the same land which was allotted and assigned to the Heirs at Law of the said Wm Burr, dec'd in the partition of the lands of the Estate of Frederick Burr, dec'd.

These lands are worthy the attention of investers, and persons desiring to purchase will do well to examine them before the day of sale.

TERMS OF SALE:

Cash in hand sufficient to pay the costs of the suit aforesaid, and the expenses of sale, and as to the residue of the purchase money upon a credit of Six, Twelve and Eighteen months in equal instal ment with legal interest on the deferred installments from the day of sale. The purchasers or purchaser to give bonds for the deferred installments with good personal security, and the legal title to be retained as ultimate security.

WM. M. MCALISTER.
Commissioner.

In the Clerk's office of the Circuit Court of Pocahontas County, West Virginia, I, J. H. Patterson, Clerk of the said Court, do hereby certify that Wm. M. McAllister Commissioner to sell the above described lands, has executed the bonds required by the decree of sale in the above styled cause.

J. H. PATTERSON, Cl'k.

mar. 5-4t Printers fee $14 40

VALUABLE LANDS FOR RENT.

I shall offer for rent for the term of one year, at the front door of the Court House of Pocahontas County,

ON THE 6th DAY OF APRIL 1891

the lands belonging to Allie McGlaughlin, recently assigned her out of her father's estate, situated on Elk, about 5 miles from Edray. This is a valuable tract of grazing and meadow land. The renter, however shall be required to keep no sheep on said land while in his possession.

For further particulars apply to the undersigned, or to M. D. McGlaugtlin at Huntersville.

Terms made known on day of renting.

SUSAN McGLAUGHLIN.
Guardian of ALLIE McGLAUGHLIN.
march 5th.

ANNOUNCEMENTS.

To the Voters of Pocahontas County.

At the solicitation of many friends in the County, I announce myself a candidate for re-election to the office of County Superintendent. If elected I will perform the duties of the office without fear or favor. Thanking You for past favors, I again solicit your support at the coming election, May 19th, 1891.

M. G. MATHEWS.

To the Voters of Pocahontas County.

I hereby announce myself a candidate for the office of Couty Superintendent. If elected, I will perform the duties of the office to the best of my ability, without partiality. Election, May 19th.

Respectfully,
J. M. BARNETT.

HOME NEWS

—Next Sunday is Easter.

—Mess. Loury & Doyle are building a new barn.

—We are haveing some beautiful spring weather now.

—Don't forget that April 6th is Circuit Court day.

—Several new subscribers since our last issue.

—Advertise your spring goods in THE TIMES, it will pay you.

—Lewisburg, has a total population of 949.

—The bridge abutments across Knapp's creek near this place, will soon be finished.

—Attorney N. C. McNeil, spent a few days at his home at Buckeye, last week.

—We hope some one from every post office in the county will send us the news from their locality.

—Richard Beard, Esq. of Academy, was in town last week, also F. W. McCoy of same place.

—Wise Herald, Esq., of near Frost, and brother Bedford were in town last week.

—Rev. I G Michael, of the Baltimore Conference was sent to the Huntersville Circuit.

—Rev. W. H. Ballengee and wife passed through town Tuesday, on their return home to Green Bank from conference.

—J. K. Campbell Esq., dentist is in town to remain but a short time. Parties wishing dental work done will do well to call on him at once.

—C. L. Austin, of Green Bank, who has been visiting in Florida, for several weeks, passed through Huntersville, last week on his return home.

—G. F Eakle Esq. of Ballar' Va. was in our city last week, selling stock for the Charlestown Building and Improvement Co.

—Read the Auction Sale ad. this week, of Mr. Jno. A. McNeel, to take place at the Seebert farm on Knapp's creek on the 31st inst.

—In the Supreme Court, the case of Hull's adm'r vs. Hull's heirs, it al., from this county, opinion by Brannon; decree of Circuit Court reversed and cause remanded.

—There are three prisoners in jail at this place, for trial at the April Court: One for murder, one for incindiary, and the other for breaking into a meat house.

—Monday night a young man registered at one of the hotels at this place by the name of J. Simmons of Peachtree, Cal. He claimed to be a minralogist and from everywhere except here, and when one of the clever and accommodating proprietors, J. H. Doyle, Esq., went to collect his bill, he found that he was also from here.

—The U. S. Commissioner of Internal Revenue is ascertaining the names of farmers who are likely to produce 500 or more pounds of maple sugar, as there is a provision in the law passed Oct. 1st, 1890, allowing a bounty of two cents per pound to those who produce this amount. Farmers who intend producing this quantity of maple sugar should at once notify the nearest Internal Revenue officer.

—Mr. Jno. Hutton, of Huttonsville, was in the city last week.

—The work on the Pittsburg W. Va. Southern railroad is progressing very rapidly. It will be completed to Sutton, Braxton Co., by the first of May. From there at will be pushed as rapidly as possible to the mouth of William's river, then up William's river and across to this place. We expect it to reach this place at the longest calculation in a year and a half.

—Why is a newspaper lake a pretty girl? To be perfect it must be embodied in many types; it is chased through it is inclined to be giddy; it enjoys a good press, and the more rapid the better; it has a weakness for gossip; talks a great deal; it can stand much praise and is awfully proud of a new dress. But the greatest resemblance is, it can't be kept in a good humor without cash. Delinquent subscribers will make a note of this, and call and settle their accounts when they come to Court April the 6th.

—Huntersvill seems to be on a boom. Several valuable farms lying near that place were recently sold for big prices and it is proposed to lay them off into town lots. It is said that a number of industries and companies will be located there with a view to the development of many valuable resources of that section of the state.—Tucker Democrat.

You're right brother Democrat. Old Hunaersville is going to be among the foremost of W. Va. towns some of these days.

NOTICE.

I will be in Pocahontas Co. the first of April for the purpose of castrating horses and spaying cows and calves in the latest style.

G. B. WALLACE

DENTISTRY.—Dr. J. H. Weymouth will be at Edray, on the 19th of March and remain 4 days; Mill Point on the 25th 3 days; Levels (Frank Harpers) 28th 3 days; Huntersvill April 1st and remain 4 days Frost April 6th 5 days; Dunmore April 13th 4 days; Green Bank April 18th 3 days, and will be prepared to attend to all Dental work. Call early and make your engagements as his time is limited to the above dates.

Green Bank Items.

Dr. C. L. Austin, retuaned home from Florida, several days ago.

Will Gladwell had the misfortune last week to cut his hand very badly while cutting feed for his horse.

Mrs. James Curty and Enos Tallman, are on the sick list.

J. P. Wooddell, will start his truck wagon to Monterey, to bring in supplies for the people soon.

A. M. Oliver will leave today for Virginia, where he will boss a lot of hands on the railroad.

Why don't our TIMES come on Thursdays as it used to do. [Because we have got no postmaster at this place. We hope it will be all right after a while again.—ED.]

We have plenty of rain and mud but not much bacon and flour.

We hope to see Tom Sawyer's railroad soon puffing down our valley.

Keep watch on your corn cribs and meat houses, if it is only a waterberry.

L. Bartlett is painting J. H. Halston's house.

Judy.

Dunmore Doings.

Soap boiling is the order of the day, and a little sugar occasionally.

Some plowing is being done and more ought to be done.

Miss Cora Jones was called home from her school, owing to the illness of one of her brothers.

Quite a lot of our people went to Frost this week to buy store goods.

Quite a number of our people are going to [illegible] city to build up with the town.

Rev. [illegible], preached a very able sermon for us last Sunday night. He will preach again the 2nd Sunday night in April.

Mess. Jno. A. Noal and Morgan Wakeman are off in the interests of their Patents.

Swecker will blow his horn on Knapp's creek the 28th inst.

Miss Minnie McElwee and brother Howard have gone to their home at Driscol.

Y. J.

The Wheeling Register has the following to say of the Rev. J. G. Armstrong, a noted minister, who died recently at his home in Atlanta, Ga.:

Rev. J. G. Armstrong was for years a paster of this city, and was remarkable for his resemblance to J. Wilkes Booth; many people maintaining to this day that he was Booth. There certainly was a strong resemblance, even to a gun shot wound in the leg and a scar on the neck. When confronted with the stories here he always declined to talk on the subject, and all efforts to trace his past history were futile. He refused to talk of Lincoln's assassination."

WASHINGTON LETTER.

From our regular correspondent.

WASHINGTON, D. C., M'ch 20th—Mr. Blaine made a bad brake in the injudicious and undiplomatic language he used in the telgram which Baron Fava, the Italian minister, stampeded him into sending to Governor Nichols, of Louisiana, in relation to the unfortunate lynching bee at New Orleans that as soon as he realized his error, he took to his room and it was given out that he was unwell, and he has peen invisible to callers ever since. Members of the diplomatic corps say that Mr. Blaine's telegram will give the Italian government all the ground it needs to demand a heavy indemnity if it can be proven that any of the men killed were its subjects. But demanding and getting are two things. No democrat in Congress is likely to pass an appropriation to pay indemnity for the killing of a lot of thugs and murderers who had mane murder their chief occupation even if they were killed outside of the law. But it is not believed that the Italian government will desire to take any further action when it is fully informed of the "Mafia" acts which led up to the massacre, as it has had some experience with the "Mafia".

I was told today by an eminent republican who is friendly to neither Harrison nor Blaine that the deluge of Harrison talk which has recently emanated from republican Senators and Representatives in the colums of republican newspapers in all sections of the country is the direct result of a bargain between Harrison and Blaine, whereby the latter agrees to give the former a chance to get himself renominated if he can, and the former agrees that in the event of its becoming impossible for him to get the nomination he will withdraw in favor of Mr. Blaine. I cannot vouch for the truthfulness of this story, but circumstancial evidence is strong in its favor. It is not at all probable however that Mr. Blaine would have made such a bargain if there was any probability of the election of the republican nominee.

Representatives Springer and Spinola, who have been dangerously ill in this city are both convalescing.

General Joseph E. Johnson, whose erect figure has been familiar in Washington for some years is a very sick man, owing to his extreme age—nearly 85—his physicians haven't much hope of his recovering. He was a pall bearer at the funeral of the late Gen. Sherman and at that time was in good health but a few days afterward he contracted a cold which resulted in his present illness, which is aggravated by a heart trouble from which he has suffered more or less for years.

The administration has struck a dangerous snag in the negotiations for reciprocity with Cuba. The Spanish minister will hear of nothing that does not include the free admission of Cuban tobacco; which is a concession that is beyond the power of Mr. Blaine to grant. Not having any confidence in the ability of Gen. E. Bird Grubb, of New Jersey, the present minister to Spain, who is ignorant of the Spanish language and without a diplomatic experience, ex Minister J. W. Foster has been sent to Spain with the ultimation of Mr. Harrison, in the shape of a threat to retain the present duty on Cuban sugar if reciprocity is not agreed to by the Spanish government. The outcome of this matter is looked forward to with concerable interest, as the sugar schedule of the tariff law will go into effect April 1, and Cuban sugar will be admitted free just the same as sugar from Brazil and other countries, unless Mr. Harrison shall take advantage of the power conferred upon him by the tariff act and order the present duty continued.

Although it has been nearly three weeks since Congress adjourned it is still impossible to get a correct idea of all the pernicious legislation enacted into laws or of the exact amount of money carried by the appropriations tucked away in corners of bills of all sorts. Every day something is discovered showing a new and unexpected appropriation or a new piece of unexplainable botch legislation. Secretary Noble has discovered what he considers a $3,000,000 steel in connection with one of the Indian bills, and he says the money shall never be paid if it is in his power to prevent it, but owing to the fact that several prominent republicans are to get a big slice of the money in the shape of attorney's fees, it is doubtful wether any remonstrance on the part of Mr. Noble will prevent the steal being consummated.

It is not believed that Mr. Harrison proposes taking any action upon the congressional reports of the investigations of either the Civil Service Commission or the Pension office, notwithstanding the public verdict against Raum, of the Pension office, and Lyman, of the Civil Service Committee.

The two Indiana "H's", Harrison and Huston have it is said, made friends and that oft offered resgnation has again been withdrawn.

The spring business boom has started all over the South, and the season promises to be one of unexampled prosperity in the States south of Mason and Dixon's line.

Auction.

I will sell at Public Sale on Tuesday, March 31st, 1891, at the Seebert farm on Knapp's creek, all my personal property, consisting of Household and Kitchen furniture, Farming utensils, 17 Cows 7 yearlings, 5 two-year-olds, 1 thorough bred Bull, 3 horses, &c.

TERMS made known on day of sale.

I will also offer to rent at Public Auction, on Monday, the 6th day of April, first day of Cir. Ct., my entire grazing lands on William's river.

Respectfully,
JOHN A. McNEEL.

THE POLICE GAZETTE

Is the only illustrated paper in the world containing all the latest sensational and sporting news. No Saloon Keeper, Barber or Club Room can afford to be without it. It always makes friends wherever it goes.

Mailed to any address in the United States, securely wrapped, 13 weeks for $1.00.

Send Five Cents for sample copy.

RICHARD K. FOX,
Franklin Square, New York City.

COMMISSIONER'S SALE OF LAND.

Pursuant to two decrees of the Circuit Court of Pocahontas County rendered on the 22rd day of October, 1889 and on the 21st day of October, 1890, in the Chancery cause of Levi Gay, Adm'r &c. vs. Wm. Skeen, I as special Commissioner appointed by said decree, shall proceed to sell at public auction to the highest bidder, in front of the Court House of said County, on the

6TH DAY OF APRIL, 1891,

the following tracts of valuable lands: to wit: a tract containing 3545 acres, and a tract of 44 acres situate on the waters of Knapp's Creek a tract of 2222 acres situa'e on Buckley Mountain and a tract of 161½ acres situate on Droop Mountain, all in Pocahontas County, West Virginia. Any one desiring further particulars concerning said lands may obtain same writing to the undersigned Commissioner.

TERMS OF SALE.

So much cash in hand as will pay costs of suit and sale, and for the residue the purchaser to execute three several bonds with approved security falling due in 6 12 & 18 months respectively from day of sale: said bonds to bear interest from date. A lien will also be retained on said lands as ultimate security.

C. F. MOORE, Spec'l Com'r.

Bond has been given by above Com'r as required by decree in said cause.

J. H. PATTERSON, Clk.

mar 12-4t Printer's fee $9.95

COMMISSIONER'S NOTICE.

Lizzie Lightner,
vs.
Wm. J. McGlaughlin's heirs, &c.
IN CHANCERY.

Notice is hereby given to all persons interested in the above styled suit, now pending in the Circuit Court of Pocahontas County that on the 19th day of March, 1891, at the law office of F. J. Snyder in the town of Huntersville, Pocahontas Co., W. Va., the undersigned commissioner of said Court acting under a decretal order in said suit made on the 21st day of October, 1890 will proceed to take and state for report to Court the following matters of account, viz:

1st. A statement of the accounts of L. M. McClintic and C. F. Moore as administrators of Wm. J. McGlaughlin, dec'd:

2nd. An account showing the distributive interest of each of the heirs of said Wm. J. McGlaughlin in the personal estate of the intestate;

3rd. Any other matter deemed pertinent by the Commissioner, or required to be specially stated by any party in interest.

F. J. SNYDER, Com'r Cir. C't P. C.

feb. 19-4t. Printer's fee $7.95

FOR THE BEST FURNITURE CHAIRS, PICTURE FRAMES, LOOKING GLASSES AND THE FINEST TRIMMED in the county, go to

C. B. SWECKER,
AUCTIONEER, UNDERTAKER AND CABINET MAKER.
Dunmore, W. Va

A. B. SMITH,
Academy, W. V.

UNDERTAKER.

Is prepared to furnish and deliver Coffins upon very short notice and at Reasonable prices.

At a County Court continued and held for the County of Pocahontas, at the Court house thereof, On the 4th day of March, 1891.

On the coming in of a petition signed by John W. Walford and more than twenty other voters, of Edray district praying that a polling place be established at the store house of R. K. Overholt & Sons' at Buckeye in said district the said polling place is hereby established according to the prayer of said petition; and the Clerk of this Court is hereby directed to have notice published in the POCAHONTAS TIMES, a newspaper published in Pocahontas County, West Virginia, in accordance with Chapter 3, Section 3, of the Code of West Virginia.

A Copy Teste:

S. L. Brown, Cl'k.

Pocahontas Times.

JOHN E. CAMPBELL,
EDITOR AND PROPRIETOR.

Entered at the Post-office at Huntersville, W. Va., as second class matter.

Huntersville. W. Va.

March 26, 1891.

A FEW YEARS HENCE.

He was sitting before a great fire at the club, with eyes half closed, when a friend roused him.

"Dreaming, old man?" asked the friend.

"Half dreaming, half musing," was the reply as the young fellow stretched him self. "My grandfather has been telling of the hardships of early days, and I was wandering what I'd tell my grandchildren in that line."

"Couldn't think of much, could you?"

"Well, I don't know. Hardship is hardship only by comparison with luxury. The luxury of one age is the hardship of the next. Now I conjured up a picture of my grand child sitting on my knee asking me for a story.

Several men had gathered around the armchair and one asked:

"Did you tell a story?"

"Oh yes," replied the dreamer. I rememer I told him that about 1890 I had a brother in New York. One day I received a dispatch that he was dying. I took the limited, and for twenty-six hours I was in an agony of doubt, fearful lest he should die before I arrived. I dilated a little on the terible suspense and then how my appetite seemed to have left me."

"And what did the boys say?" asked one of the party.

"The boy? O, he wouldn't believe it at first; wanted to know if it was possible that there was an accident that delayed me, and if there was, why it delayed me so long. He figured it out, too. He said:

"Regular time from here to New York, two hours. O, they couldn't have delayed you twenty four hours, grandpa.'

"And when I told him that twenty-six hours was the regular time he looked sorry for me and said:

"Poor grandpa. You must have had an awful hard time. And how slow you were in those days. Ate on the train, too! Dear me, I can go from here to San Francisco without getting hungry! Didn't the pneumatic tube work well?"

"And then?" was the query as the dreamer paused.

"Then I explained that the pneumatic tube route wasn't in operation at that time, and drew out a little more sympathy by telling him about an exorbitant gas bill that I had received and had to pay, because if I didn't the company would cut off the supply. O, but he was surprised!

"Gas! he exclaimed. What did you want of gas?'

"I explained that we used to light our houses with gas, and the boy couldn't pity me enough. Said it must have been awful to have to depend on gas for light.

"But it was when I told him about going home one night when the electric light on Clark street went out that his heart bled for me.

"You must have had a terrible time grandpa,' he said. 'I wouldn't have lived in those days for anything.'

"My boy,' I said,' we didn't have the comforts then that we have now, but those hardships are what made us the hardy race that we are.'"

Then the dreamer asked the crowd to leave him while he figured out another hard-luck tale for his grandson.

HE CARRIED IT.

Three or four of us had closed our umbrellas and gathered under a store awning at the lower end of Market street, Philadelphia, to wait for a grip car. Along came a colored man, carrying a faded and rent old umbrella, and we all noticed that he carried the shelter tipped forward at such an angle that his feet were protected at the expense of his back.

"Stop, sir!" shouted the man at my left, who had the look and bearing of a Judge.

"Yes, sah—what's wanted?" queried the colored man.

"I want to show you how to carry an umbrella. Your toes are dry, while your back is all wet. I don't believe that one person in fifty knows how to carry an umbrella so as to get the most protection out of it."

"It's an old one, sah."

"Yes; I see, but you don't grasp the handle right. Here—take mine."

"Yes, sah."

"Take the handle with your right hand, and carry it on a line with your right shoulder. There—that's better."

"Can't git along wid sich stiffness, sah."

"Yes, you can. Now walk up to the corner and back. Hold the handle on a line with your shoulder. That's it—go ahead."

The negro marched off at a steady pace, and while he was stepping off the gentleman turned to us with:

"It's a knack to shelter yourself under an umbrella, particularly if it rains hard, and the want of this knack provokes me when I see it."

We agreed with him, and the minutes passed by and a car came down.

"Why, where did the nigger go to?" asked the owner of the umbrella.

We looked up and down, but he had disappeared. The man ran up the street two squares, but there was no African carrying a fine silk umbrella with a gold handle—not as he could see. We started to rally him a bit as we went up on the car, but he checked us by saying:

"If any of you think I can't lick you in one round all you have to do is to step off the car! I won't detain you three minutes.

CONSIDERATE.

In a certain school the teacher always went to her pupils when they needed help, instead of having them come to her. This habit led one day to a rather amusing incident.

Little Tommy Page was being punished by "standing in the floor", while he got his spelling lesson. Finding a hard word he raised his hand, and the teacher at once came to his assistance. A moment later this was repeated, and soon his calls for the teacher became frequent.

But, by and by, Tommy's legs began to get tired and he longed for a seat. A little later he walked boldly up to the teacher's platform and calmly seated himself on its edge.

When asked by the surprised teacher what his strange conduct meant, he replied:

"Well, seems to me you're walking too much, and I thought I'd get nearer. I don't want you to get all tired out, same as I am."

Since we are all made of dust it must be that our colored brethren are made of coal dust.

Young Bigley, the commission merchant, was walking in from a little poker party—he had captured the entire "kitty"—in the Western addition about 2 a. m., the other night, when he observed that he was being followed by a couple of suspecious-looking characters who wore rubber shoes.

"Great Scott!" muttered Bigley, breaking into a cold prespiration.

"If they are footpads I'll be stood up and sandbagged, if they're policemen, and I run, I'll get shot sure."

But a successful poker player has loads of nerve, so Bigley struck an idea. He quietly made a pad of some letters in his pocket, slipped a pencil behind his ear and walked boldly up to the men.

"Can you gentlemen show me the house where the bank clerk suicided this evening?" he asked.

"Holy smoke!" said one of the highwaymen. Here we've been following a——journalist all this time."

And striking Bigley for a couple of cigarettes, the disgusted boodles pocketed their sand-bags and hurried off to lay for an assemblyman who had come down from Sacramento since the fire commissioners' bill passed, and was sure to be well fixed.

ODDS AND ENDS.

Swift was 59 when he published "Gulliver's Travels."

The first geographical map of England was made in the year 1520.

M. Eiffel, who built the tower, is seeking an election to the French senate.

When art is a day old it is a daub. When it is 200 years old it is a masterpiece.

The once mighty Indian population of the United States has dwindled to 244,075.

The population of London is greater than that of Norway and Sweden combined.

John Start Mill was 53 when his essay on "Liberty" was published, and 56 when he gave us that on "Unitarianism."

The difference between a man's mind being turned on politics and his mind being turned is not a very, very vast one.

Black slippers are worked with pink beads, lined with pink and have a fluted bow lined with the same rosy shade.

The French chouvinists rebel against the use of English word "yacht," and in deference to their feelings the word will probably be spelled "yaute."

SUBSCRIBE

FOR THE——

POCAHONTAS TIMES,

Every man in the County should take it, and patronise home industry It sustains your rights, and works for the advancement of your county, which no city paper will do. It gives you the news from all parts of the county, which you could not get otherwise. It furnishes matters of interst to the Merchant, Farmer and Mechanic. It keeps you posted and gives you information, on all general news, and its sections and Miscellany are fit for all ages.

TERM OF SUBSCRIPTION.

One year in advance	$1.00
If not paid within 6 months	1.25
And at the end of the year	1.50

AND IF YOU NEED

Letter Heads, Note Heads, Bill Heads, Envelopes, Drug Envelopes, Tags, Business Cards, Official Blanks, Blank Bonds, Posters, Briefs for the Court of Appeals etc.

GET THEM AT "THE TIMES"

JOB OFFICE,

POCAHONTAS TIMES.

Vol. 8. JOHN E. CAMPBELL, EDITOR AND PROPRIETOR. Huntersville, West Virginia, Thursday, April 23, 1891. Terms of Subscription. $1.00 PER YEAR, IN ADVANCE. No. 39.

Official Directory of Pocahontas County.

Judge of Circuit Court, A. N. Campbell.
Prosecuting Attorney, L. M. McClintic.
Sheriff, J. C. Arbogast.
Deputy Sheriff, Geo. W. Callison.
Cl'k Co. Court, S. L. Brown.
Cl'k Cir. Court, J. H. Patterson.
Assessor, C. O. Arbogast.
Com'rs Co. Ct. C. E. Beard. S. B. Hannah. G. M. Kee.
Co. Surveyor, Geo. Baxter

THE COURTS.

Circuit Court convenes on the first Monday in April, 3rd Monday in June and 3rd Monday in October.

County Court convenes on the 1st Tuesday in January, March, October and second Tuesday in July. July is levy term.

IN THE NIGHT.

As I enter the shadowy portals of night,
To stray in her solitude vast,
Pale memory whispers a vanished delight
And summons a shade from the past.

Let my Marguerite plays the sweet passion and skill
That we loved speak again in her art.
How the strains of her violin sound, at her will,
Like the chords of a human heart

It is only a dream, such as travelers say
Thirst gives in the lands of the sun;
And the sad, sweet face and the form pass away—
The music and glory are done!

I call on my love in grief's passionate words,
If only one moment to stay;
But all that I hear is the twitter of birds
That wake in the morning gray.

Where the far distant Alps seem a cloudland of snow,
Are a lake, and a valley so fair,
And a sculptured stone, with its record of woe,
To tell she is sleeping there.

—W. Gow Gregor in Once a Week.

WAYLAID.

"Chip, you'd better start at once. Don't be on the road after dark with so much money about you."

The window was high from the ground, and the disreputable looking tramp who had entered the garden heard Mr. Stockwell's remark and came to a stop on the graveled walk.

Neither Mr. Stockwell nor his trusted clerk, Chip Ferris, saw him as he half crouched beneath the open window, from which place their tones were plainly audible.

Mr. Stockwell had the largest grocery in Lebanon, and Chip Ferris, though only 17 years old, was his right hand man.

He owned another grocery in Milldale, a thriving little village eight miles away, and Chip had just been directed by him to go over and collect the month's receipts from the man in charge.

"Tell Hanley I'll be in Milldale to see him just as soon as I can get out of the house," said Mr. Stockwell, who had been overcome by his old remedy, the rheumatism. "I've instructed him in the note to turn over the collections to you, and if any stock is needed he can let you know."

The man at the window did not wait to hear more, but went noiselessly to the gate, all thought of begging removed from his mind.

A companion, as ragged and vicious looking as himself, stood waiting for him some distance down the street.

"What kept you so long?" he growled. "Any luck?"

"I should say so," was the response.

"You didn't get any money, did you?"

"No, but we'll soon have plenty if we manage things right."

And he proceeded to confide what he had overheard, whereat the other worthy's eyes glistened.

"Well, that is luck, and no mistake," he said. "If he's only a boy it will be as easy as rolling off a log. There he comes now."

At that moment Chip Ferris was closing Mr. Stockwell's gate.

He walked down the street in the direction of the two men, giving them no more than a casual glance as he passed by, for tramps were no rarity in Lebanon.

"Those fellows are pretty rough looking customers," he thought. "It's a wonder the constable hasn't got them."

It was 3 o'clock then, and he went to the stable in the rear of the shop and harnessed the horse to a light vehicle.

The drive to Milldale was a pleasant one, and Chip enjoyed the prospect of it exceedingly.

About a mile from town, resting under a leafy tree by the roadside, were the two tramps he had seen some time before.

"Hello!" he said to himself. "There are those fellows again. I wonder what they're up to now."

He passed by in a cloud of dust, and, looking back, saw that an animated conversation had suddenly sprung up between the two.

Somehow Chip got it into his head that they were talking about him.

"They can't know about the money, of course," he said, uneasily. "Such men look evil enough to do anything."

When he reached Milldale he was disappointed to learn that Mr. Hanley had gone into the country to look at a colt that he thought of purchasing.

The money was locked up in the safe and he had the key with him, so that there was nothing for Chip to do but to wait for his return, which he did with a good deal of impatience.

It was nearly 6 o'clock and the sun was far down in the west when Mr. Hanley came back, and Chip lost no time in transacting with him the business on which he had come.

"Better stay with me to supper, Chip," said Mr. Hanley. "There'll be a moon [illegible] back."

"No, thank you," said Chip. "I don't want to be out late with this money. I'll just take some bread and cheese with me."

He bade Mr. Hanley good-by, and, giving his horse the reins, was soon going at a smart pace through Milldale, until the last of the straggling houses at its outskirts was left far behind.

The sun sank behind the distant blue hills and twilight came on.

"It won't be long now before it's dark," said Chip. "I hope I won't meet those tramps again. They'd stop me in a minute if they thought I had so much money about me."

As the light faded he grew more nervous, and, with an idea in his head, he reined in the horse to carry it out, first looking around to satisfy himself that no one was in sight.

In his pocket was a copy of the village paper, which he carefully tore into strips the size of bank notes.

He selected from the roll of notes Mr. Hanley had given him four of the least valuable and wrapped them around the strips, placing them in his pocketbook.

The money he hid in one of his shoes.

"Perhaps I'm over cautious," he told himself, with a smile. "Those men have likely enough taken another road, but if they should try to rob me this bogus roll may fool them."

He was half way home when he came to a large tract of woods, through which the road passed for some distance.

The thick foliage of the over arching trees shut out the light, and the road was so bad that Chip was obliged to let the horse walk.

There was an absurd story which had long been current of a headless horseman who appeared in these very woods, and Chip could not help recalling it with a shudder in spite of its utter improbability.

Suddenly the horse shied, and the startled boy caught sight of two dark figures lying in wait at the side of the road.

The horse gave a leap forward, but a hand seized the bridle and swerved the animal to one side, so that the vehicle was nearly overturned in the deep rut.

"No, you don't, youngster," a gruff voice said. "Just you give up that money you got at Milldale or it will go hard with you."

"How do you know I got any money?" asked Chip, with a fast beating heart, for he saw the gleam of a revolver that was in the man's hand.

"None of that," replied the rascal angrily. "You just give it up, that's all. If you don't you'll never drive this wagon again."

Chip took his pocketbook out with trembling fingers, and the man greedily snatched it from him.

"You'll let me go now, won't you?" the boy pleaded.

"Not much," said the robber coolly. "Get out of that vehicle, and don't waste any time about it. Do you hear me?"

With shaking limbs Chip obeyed and submitted to a thorough search of his pockets, after which he was bound, with his arms behind him, to a tree.

"There, I fancy that'll do," said the man, with a chuckle. "Turn the vehicle round, Bill, and let's be off."

"Are you sure you've got all?" his companion asked.

"Yes," was the reply. "If we hadn't used up all the matches trying to get a light for our pipes I'd count what was in the pocketbook."

The two rogues jumped into the vehicle and drove off in the direction of Milldale, leaving Chip straining and tugging at the rope that bound him.

His fear that the robbers would return when they discovered the deception that had been practiced upon them made him almost frantic, but all his efforts to free himself were in vain.

Helpless and exhausted he awaited the outcome, turning pale at every noise that he heard in the woods.

He was as brave as any ordinary boy, but beads of perspiration were on his brow and his hair almost stood up on end when at length he heard the ominous sound of wheels drawing near.

"Good gracious!" he said in terror. "It's they; and they'll kill me."

Nearer and nearer came the sound, and then, as the vehicle passed by, there was a sudden transition from despair to hope.

"Stop!" cried Chip wildly. "Help, help!"

"Who is it?" a startled voice called back. "What are you doing there?"

"It's I—Chipman Ferris," said the boy. "Two men, who tried to rob me, have tied me to a tree."

He heard some one alight, and the next moment footsteps came crashing toward him.

Chip was overjoyed to recognize Mr. Bolton, a farmer well known to him.

"How did you come to get in such a fix, Chip?" he asked, as with a few cuts of his knife he released him from his uncomfortable position.

Chip explained to Mr. Bolton how he had been waylaid, and the farmer said indignantly:

"The villains! They must have taken the road to Maiden, for I didn't pass them."

Just as they were getting into the farmer's vehicle they heard the sound of angry voices from behind.

"Quick, Mr. Bolton!" cried Chip, excitedly. "They are armed, and they are coming back."

The farmer needed no urging, but gave his horse the whip.

As they flew on they still heard the desperate men venting their rage in angry threats, and they knew they were in hot pursuit.

They emerged into the open, and looking back in the light of the moon that had risen, Chip could see the men as they beat their jaded horse in their effort to overtake them.

The rascals shouted out for them to stop, and discharged their revolvers to intimidate them, but Mr. Bolton's horse was the fresher of the two, and they soon gave up the chase.

Chip was glad when he saw at length the lights of Lebanon shining out from ahead, and it was not long before every one in the village knew of the attempted robbery.

The constable and several men at once started out to arrest the tramps and found the horse and vehicle abandoned by the roadside, the men having feared capture and taken to the woods.

But the telegraph is effective, and the very next day the robbers were arrested in another county and got the punishment they so richly deserved.—New York World.

He Didn't Purchase the Shoes.

It was nearly 6 o'clock one evening when a gentleman, apparently 60 years of age, entered one of our leading shoe stores. He wanted a pair of shoes, he said, and the clerk proceeded to supply his wants. The customer selected a pair of $3 shoes, and while the clerk, who was in a hurry to get home, was hastily doing them up the man hunted his pockets over and after much exertion pulled out thirty coupons in payment for the shoes. The clerk protested that the coupons were of no use, and the man insisted that they were. The clerk explained that the firm had published coupons in an evening paper with the announcement that they would deduct ten cents from each dollar purchased. The man had cut the coupons from thirty papers and saved them to secure a pair of shoes, and was deeply disgusted that he couldn't get them.—Springfield (Mass.) Homestead.

Charity in the Rockefeller Family.

John D. Rockefeller's method of disposing of charity is described by The Cleveland Plaindealer. It says that the great bulk of his mail is examined by his private secretary, and only the few appeals which impress the latter gentleman favorably are passed along to Mr. Rockefeller, who takes a stack of them to the breakfast table every morning and distributes them among his children. These members of his family are charged with the duty of opening the letters and consulting their contents. Then each child decides what shall be done with the application, and the decision is written on the envelope and the name signed for reference if need be.

After breakfast, Mr. Rockefeller gathers up the mail and personally inspects each application. He then weighs the case and then acts as his conscience dictates. This dictation is frequently contrary to the decision rendered by his child, but that doesn't end the matter, not at all. The father gathers his children about him and reviews the case, announcing his decisions, and when they conflict with those given by the children he explains the reason for the departure from the recommendation.

A Double Dog.

Tom Wyly, of Johnsonville, has a most remarkable freak of nature; it is a double female dog pup, about six months old. It has four well developed legs in the proper place. Aside from these there is another well developed leg protruding from near the root of the tail and has grown about half the distance to the ground, at which point two well developed feet began to form and have grown in perfect shape, and both feet now drag on the ground as she walks. She is in perfect health and is a well developed double female, each part of her organism performing in unison the separate functions.—Nashville American.

A Bargain in High Life.

Mr. Highup—You said that thing would not cost over $50.

Mrs. Highup—I gave exactly $50 for it, but then I paid the modiste [illegible] extra for her promise to tell everybody that it cost a hundred.—New York Weekly.

The Old Woman and the Earthquake.

At Ischia they disinterred an old woman, uninjured. "Lord bless you!" she said, as they helped her out. "But [illegible] [illegible]," she added [illegible], "dig a little deeper and save my [illegible]!" "What! Is there any one else alive buried?" they inquired anxiously. "My hens!" [illegible] the old dame.—Cornhill Magazine.

NATURE.

I know she loves me. Every day she fills
My soul with joy that only true love thrills
So free, I cannot measure if I would
This love unspoken yet well understood.

'Tis never once the same, this tale of love,
For now 'tis written in the blue above;
And if the hand be hid, yet still I trace
The clearest lineaments of her lovely face.

Or yet she breathes it on my raptured ear,
No sweeter romance can we mortals hear,
For when among the trees the south wind plays
Each little trembling leaf her love betrays.

Or now she drops, all loverlike, a flower,
As if to company some quiet hour;
Or yet the throat of some sweet singing bird
Repeats the tale, and all my soul is stirred.

So, like a courtier, everywhere I stray
She smiling meets me, as for holiday,
As if to draw me in her close embrace,
And, like a lover, woos me face to face.

Mary Woodward Weatherbee in Boston Transcript.

A Saved Man Cries for His Hat.

"Yes," said an old lake captain, "a drowning man will catch at a straw. I have seen many illustrations thereof. Most people think the old proverb is merely a figure of speech, but it is a living truth."

"Is it true, captain," was asked, "that the first thing a rescued man thinks of is his hat?"

"Yes, sir," replied the captain, his face lighting up, "that is a fact, too. I have seen it emphasized many times in the course of my experience. Over and over again I have been called to the assistance of a drowning man. I would plunge in and rescue him just, let us say, at the last instant. Dragged on the dock, gasping for breath, his voice choked with water, the man, if he follows his instincts, will, as soon as he regains the least degree of strength, suddenly rise from his prostrate posture and stretch his arms toward his head, then, missing his hat (usually lost in the struggle), he will cry out desperately, pointing to his hat floating down the river, 'Oh, save my hat! save my hat!'"

"And he will never think of himself, captain?"

"But seldom, sir," was the reply. "A rescued man is the most obstinate and headlong being imaginable. He wants to do all sorts of foolish things. He generally wants to rush up and be away before he has had time to recover his strength. He means well enough, no doubt, but he nearly always forgets to present his obligations in tangible form."—Detroit Free Press.

Who Originated the Upas Tree?

Perhaps the deftest artist in the department of fabrication was George Steevens, the Shakespearian commentator. Animated by an impish spirit of trickery, to which jealousy of rival annotation may have lent a spice of malice, he industriously devised cunning snares for their feet. He would, for example, disseminate fictitious illustrations of Shakespeare's text in order that Malone, who was his chief butt, might be entrapped into adopting them, and give him the gratification of correcting the blunder in his next edition. Under the pseudonyms of Collins and Amner he would insert paragraphs in the daily press purporting to be curious extracts from rare books, copies of which no one who wished to verify the passages ever succeeded in discovering.

Among these curiosities was the romantic story (that has found its way into Todd's "Life of Milton") of the poet having been seen asleep under a tree by a lady who became enamored of his beauty and placed in his hand some impassioned verses of Guarini, which, when he awoke, so fired his fancy that he made a journey to Italy in the hope of tracing her. Another was the story of the deadly upas tree of Java, which long obtained credit as one of the fairy tales of science.—Nineteenth Century.

Three Skulls.

There are three human crania in the Washington museum which were found in the gravel at Trenton, one several feet below the surface and the others near the surface. The skulls, which are of remarkable uniformity, are of small size and of oval shape, differing from all other skulls in the museum. In fact they are of a distinct type, and hence of the greatest importance. So far as they go they indicate that paleolithic man was exterminated, or has become lost by admixture with others during the many thousand years which have passed since he inhabited the Delaware valley.—Washington Letter.

Cream of tartar is the tartaric acid of grapes, and may be used in water with sugar as a substitute for grape juice. It is the substitution of mineral acid for those of fruits and vegetables that is so injurious to health; for instance, sulphuric acid in wine and vinegar for the natural fruit acid.

After fifty-nine years of labor Bartholomew [illegible] has finished his translation of "Adelaide," a work in thirty-five volumes.

Pocahontas Times.

JOHN E. CAMPBELL,
EDITOR AND PROPRIETOR.

ADVERTISING RATES.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION.

Huntersville, W. Va.

April 23, 1891.

WASHINGTON LETTER.

ANNOUNCEMENTS.

To the Voters of Pocahontas County.

At the solicitation of many friends in the County, I announce myself a candidate for re-election to the office of County Superintendent. If elected I will perform the duties of the office without fear or favor. Thanking You for past favors, I again solicit your support at the coming election, May 19th, 1891.

M. G. MATHEWS.

To the Voters of Pocahontas County.

I hereby announce myself a candidate for the office of Couty Superintendent. If elected, I will perform the duties of the office to the best of my ability, without partiality. Election, May 19th.

Respectfully,
J. M. BARNETT.

HOME NEWS

—County Court met in special session Monday.

—Mr. Jno. Warwick, of Edray was in the city Tuesday.

—Now is a good time for working roads.

—Several wagons passed through this place this week for Millboro Depot.

—Attorney L. M. McClintic has been confined to his bed for 10 days with influenza.

—Mr. J. W. McAlpin, of Split Rock, passed through Huntersville, to day, on his way to Va.

—B. F. McElwee, of Dunmore, passed through town the first of the week, on his way to Ronceverte.

—Jas. W. Loury, Esq.,of Brown's creek, was in town to day, and wants to come back, again, if possible, when it rains.

—WANTED, a few lbs. of nice, fresh butter at THE TIMES office. Will pay 20 cts per lb. for it if brought this week.

—Mr. Amos Barlow, merchant, of this place is in Northern cities, this week buying spring and summer goods.

—Geo. W. Wagner, Esq., proprietor of Hotel by Wagner left the first of the week for a two weeks trip to Pennsylvania.

—Mr. J. H. Patterson, Cl'k Cir. Ct., left the first of the week to spend a couple of weeks at his home at Green Bank.

—We understand the farmers of this County expect to put out large crops this year. This certainly is a move in the right direction, as grain is always saleable and at good prices.

—The foundation is being laid and the carpenter work commenced on the POCAHONTAS TIMES printing office, adjoining the Court House square and law office of Atty. McClintic.

—New and the latest improved presses have been added to THE TIMES job office, and we are prepared to furnish as neat and as cheap printing as can be bought elsewhere.

—Sheriff J. C. Arbogast and son Earl left Monday morning for the State penitentiary having in custody David Rader who was sentenced to one year at our last term of Court.

—Died, Mrs. Mary W. Sharp, at her home near Odessa, Mo., on the 15th inst. Mrs. Sharp, was formerly a few years ago,of Beaver creek, this County.

—Mr. Jno. Gragg has finished the bridge abutments across Knapp's creek near this place and the work men will commence the bridge about May 1st.

—The city papers are all right if you want them, but it is the local paper that advertises your business, your schools, your churches, your numerous societies, sympathizes with you in your affliction and rejoices in your prosperity. In short, it is your local paper that mentions the thousand and one items in which you are interested during the year, and which you do not find in the city papers.

—We learn from our Edray correspondent that Dr. J. M. Cunningham is making a good start there as a physician. Also that Mr. J. F. Hull, who has been very ill is able to be out again, and is improving in general health. We hope he will continue to gain health until perfectly restored. Drs. McClintic and Cunningham have attended him faithfully.

—Should any of our subscribers fail to get their paper regularly they will please notify us by postal card, and as far as lies in our power we will cheerfully supply all missing numbers. Occasionly papers get lost in the mails, and without investigating the matter the subscriber jumps to the conclusion that his paper was with held by the publisher. Make your complaints direct to us and we will see that you get the paper regularly.

—If people could buy lots at anything like a reasonable price Huntersvile would improve rapidly and a genuine boom would be upon us. We know of at least a half dozen families who would like to locate at once with us if they could get houses, or lots to build on. There are a few parties in our town, who own all the building property and wont sell it for three times the real worth of it. They seem to think our town will become a city some day,and they can become wealthy off of a few acres of real estate. How is a town to build up if you don't give it a start! Sell a few lots at something like a reasonable price and give the town a start, and your property will become valuable as the town grows.

Swago Siftings.

As Buckeye has some one to send you brevities, so Swago, must be emulous, and furnish some siftings.

This romantic stream retains its Indian name, and perhaps, means playful water. It rushes towards its home in the Greenbrier like a playful child to its mother.

The valley and its contiguous hills are occupied by a quiet and interesting people, bearing very worthy names, and much is to be expected of persons claiming such an ancestry.

Persons visiting Swago, have nothing but complimentory words for the people unles a buggy wheel comes off. Then prayers are ejaculated for the saving of the world and heavenly wrath invoked upon those having monkey wrenches.

The worthy and well known citizen Capt. Gratton Miller has not been well since the deep snow. His family are greatly bereaved by the recent decease of the dutiful son Hermit, his loss is irreparable to his aged parents, who have now five sons in their graves.

Solomon has said "Train up a child in the way he should go, and when he is old he will not depart from it." This person made a mistake, if some parents on Swago have done their full duty, as any one may see, who attends church.

If matters do not change, pious people like your correspondent, will be afraid to go to preaching for fear of being called before the grand jury to give evidence against, friends and neighbors.

The penalties for such disturbances are very severe, and the present Judge seems determined to let the law take its full course in all cases come before his Court, hence it is a serious matter to be a witness these times.

The aged Mrs. Sadler, a pensioner as the widow of a soldier in the war of 1812, is quite infirm, at the home of her son William.

Yours truly.
CLARK [illegible].

Mr. Harrison is getting a taste of Southern hospitality, but that does not indicate that he will get any Southern electoral votes next year, should he succeed in getting himself renominated.

Hillsboro Happenings.

Mr. Andrew Price spent Sunday in our town. He was on his way to the depot after his mother. He was accompanied from this point by Miss Annette Ligon, who was leaving for Virginia to study stenography.

Mrs. Sallie Ligon and daughter Eva, spent Saturday and Sunday with Mrs. Lizzie McClintic.

Mr. E. I. Holt and wife left this morning—Mr. H. for Baltimore to buy his spring goods and Mrs. H. to visit at Hamlin W. Va. until his return.

Mr. Jas. Bright, of Lewisburg, and Willie Wade of this place, left last week for Harrisonburg with nine fine horses and two mules for sale for Mr. Wm. H. Overholt, of this place. Unfortunately one of them got water foundered at Huntersville and is now in a bad fix.

Mr. Wm. H. Overholt and son Clarence left this morning for Baltimore to buy goods.

A large wild cat has been visiting the grove on the east side of town and creating quite an excitement, the past few days.

Messrs. Mathews and Barnett, our candidates for County Supt. have been in town and vicinity the last few days electioneering.

Mrs. Phœbe Overholt,of Buckeye, spent last week in town visiting relatives.

Miss Minnie Shrader who has been attending the H. T. school returned to her home at Dilley's Mill, Monday.

Peach trees are in full bloom and apple trees in leaf. Spring has come again sure.

Stock of all kinds have been turned to pasture.

MAX.

Notice To Teachers

According to the decision of the State Supt. all applicants for first grade certificates will have to pass an examination in book keeping and civil government this year, and applicants for a second grade will have to pass an examination in civil government and applicants for third grade will not have to pass on either.

Will let the teachers know other changes soon as I receive them.

M. G. MATHEWS Co. Supt.

ROADS.

Public attention is invited to the action of the grand jury at the April term, 1891, of the Circuit Court of Pocahontas County, in regard to violation of the law, in placing or allowing to be placed, on, in, or near any public road, any obstruction or nuisance, in the shape of wood pile, plank or rail pile, pig pens, hog troughs or anything else calculated to frighten horses, or impede public travel.

The attention of the jury was called to a number of cases of trespass on public rights and would have made a number of indictments in this direction, as well as for placing fences, inside of 25 ft. from center of road, had it not after careful inquiry concluded that it would be the better way to give public notice that these things must abate, and the trespassers have time to comply with an enforced statute, before action be taken in this direction. Subsequent grand juries will inquire diligently into this matter hereafter.

This is written at the request of the jury by

A MEMBER THEREOF.

Canadian reciprocity is not even to be talked about by the administration until McKinley has had an opportunity to bamboozle the Ohio farmers by telling them of what they owe him for the clauses in his tariff act shutting out Canadian agricultural products. It remains to be seen whether the Ohio farmers will swallow this "taffy" to the extent of voting for McKinley for governor. We don't believe they will.

Hints To Correspondents.

Write on only one side of the paper.

Do not refer to people by their initials.

Be brief; do not abbreviate any words.

Avoid personal items as far as possible.

Write legible, especially all proper names.

Get the news, the whole news and nothing but the news.

Do not write an item that will be under stood by only a few of our readers.

Always sign your name, not necessarily for publication, but for the protection of the public.

Subscription Laws

Dr. Tuckerman, editor of The Workman, Cleveland, has taken some paines to collect and compile the decisions of the United States court on this subject, and gives to the Washington Post, as the result of his investigations, the following:

First—Subscribers who do not give express notice to the contrary are considered as wishing to renew their subscriptions.

Second—If subscribers order the discontinuance of their periodicals, the publisher may continue to send them until all the arrearages are paid.

Third—If subscribers neglect or refuse to take their periodicals from the post office to which they are directed, they are responsible until they have settled their bills and order them discontinued.

Fourth—If subscribers move to other places without informing the publisher, and the papers are sent to the former address, they are held responsible.

Fifth—The courts have decided that refusing to take periodicals from the office or removing and leaving them uncalled for is prima facie evidence of intentional fraud.

Sixth—If subscribers paid in advance they are bound to give notice at the end of the time, if they do not wish to continue taking it; otherwise the publisher is authorized to send it, and the subscriber will be responsible until express notice, with payment of all arrearages, is sent to the publisher.

The latest postal laws are such that newspaper publishers can arrest any one for fraud who takes a paper and refuses to pay for it. Under this law the man who allows his subscription to run along for some time unpaid and then order it discontinued, or orders the postmaster to mark it "refused," and have a postal card sent notifying the publisher, leaves himself liable to arrest and fine the same as for theft.

Should Italy and the United States go to war it would be a sort of eagle and monkey affair

There will be a corner in hay seed if the Farmers Alliance continues to grow.

It pays to be a humbug. P. T. Barnum left an estate worth more than $5,000,000.

Will senator Sherman's new barn be large enough to store the fall crop of Ohio Farmer's Alliance votes?

Ex-senator Ingalls may cover himself with hay seed and talk about the crops, but it takes more than that to make a farmer.

Representative Belden, of New York, who was chairman of the republican Congressional Committee last year, aptly but inelegantly expressed the present condition of the republican party when he said; "the republicans are all pretty well in the dump heap now".

There's a heap of work for the political bad killer this year, and he can't return from his long vacation too soon.

Pocahontas Times.

JOHN E. CAMPBELL,
EDITOR AND PROPRIETOR.

Entered at the Post-office at Huntersville, W. Va., as second class matter.

ADVERTISING RATES.

	1 m.	3 m.	6 m.	1 yr.
One inch	$ 1 00	$ 2 00	$ 3 00	$ 5 00
Three in.	2 00	4 00	6 00	10 00
Qr. column	3 00	6 00	10 00	17 00
Half col'n	6 00	12 00	20 00	30 00
One col'n	10 00	20 00	30 00	50 00

Reading notices, not exceeding five lines, twenty-five cents for each insertion, and five cents a line for each additional line.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION.

One copy, 1 yr., $1.00 in advance; after 6 months, $1.25; after 12 months, $1.50

These terms will be strictly complied with.

Huntersville. W. Va.

April 23, 1891.

UNCONQUERED.

High o'er the city's roofs a storm blown gull,
Driven landward from the sea,
Battles against the winds without a lull,
Yet inland farther, ever back
Helpless is tossed with flying rack:
But, messenger of constancy to me,
I joy to see him facing ocean still,
As beaten souls through storm and night
May changeless face the hidden light
By heaven sent power and strength of steadfast will.
—M. A. De Wolfe Howe, Jr., in Youth's Companion.

CLEVER AUNT KATE.

"It ain't no use in a-goin' agin your pa, Jennie—he's had his own way 'round here continual, for more'n thirty years, an' you'll jest hev to give in; no use talkin' at him. 'T only makes him wuss."

Poor little Mrs. Olcott had been accustomed during the whole of her married life to "jest give in," and her only chance of peace was in yielding to her selfishly determined husband and allowing him to carry his point without opposition.

Jennie was differently constituted. She inherited her father's strong will, and he had, much to his surprise, suddenly discovered an opposing force in his youngest child.

She had been away from home for nearly three years—this pretty, brown haired girl with the determined face and graceful carriage, and the father secretly admired and almost feared her. A wealthy and childless aunt in the city had besought Jennie to share her home, and Hiram Olcott's pretty daughter, though clinging to the farm, with all its dear memories of childhood and childhood's joys, chose wisely when she yielded to her aunt's request. It was better, far better for her, for even after her going there were plenty of children to keep the miserly old farmer in a perpetual grumble about money matters.

It was May and the country wore one glad smile, and Jennie hailed with delight the prospect of a visit to her home, assuming very willingly the responsibility of housekeeping while her two unmarried sisters attended the wedding of a cousin in a distant town.

This morning she was cooking, and with her sleeves rolled above her elbows stood beside the kitchen table. In one hand she held an earthen plate while the clip, clip, clip of a fork sounded noisily as she whipped some eggs to a froth.

"Yer sisters hed to marry to suit him," wailed the nervous little woman, "an' you'll hev to, too; ef you don't there be awful fusses, so you'd jes better give in."

That morning the father had spoken to Jennie of a young farmer, whom he termed a "likely catch." She had expressed her opinion of him in so decided a way as to alarm Mr. Olcott for the safety of his much prized authority.

He was wont to speak of himself as a marvelous example of the patriarch. "Make 'em mind," he would say. "Keep yer household beneath yer feet; govern 'em well, an' they'll git along."

Jennie's boldness in opposing his judgment so stupefied him that his anger had not yet had time to blaze forth; but Mrs. Olcott knew it would come, and so after her husband had left the kitchen she pleaded with the girl to "give in." Jennie had been very thoughtful during the little woman's appeal, but now she was roused, and it was the Olcott in her nature which spoke. "I wouldn't marry Jordan Moggs though father should threaten to murder me."

The eggs were stiff now, and as she set the plate down on the table she turned from her mother and busied herself among the ingredients for cake baking which were before her. Jennie was blushing as she began softly. "There is some one in Poole I like very much, mother, and he's coming out here to"—

"He needn't mind comin'," said Farmer Olcott grimly as he stepped quietly into the kitchen. His face wore a scowling look, and his wind reddened cheeks were distorted by the sneering curves of his hard lined mouth. Seating himself on one of the painted wooden chairs, he drew the bootjack toward him and took off his heavy shoes with a calmness and deliberation which warned Mrs. Olcott that he was thoroughly aroused. The poor little nervous, broken spirited woman had learned that this particularly quiet and inoffensive manner of removing his footgear always preceded a burst of passion.

Hiram Olcott set his cowhide boots by the stove to dry, kicked the jack under the table, and, turning toward his daughter, shouted:

"Don't let me ketch none o' yer city fellers comin' to see you. Ef they do, I'll talk to 'em; not a word now," he growled, shaking his long finger menacingly at Jennie, as she essayed to speak. "I'm master in my own house, an' you'll not talk till such time as I'm done. You've been away an' kinder forgot how things is run here, but you might as well get broke in now. I tell you I won't hev any city fellers a follerin' you; an' ef I ketch yer aunt Kate makin' matches fur you I'll jest fetch you home from bein' a fine lady down there an' set you workin'."

Before Jennie could speak he had gone into the dining room, slamming the door behind him.

Tears of mortification and rage stood in her brown eyes and hot words leaped to her lips, but as she glanced down at the agonized face of the little woman beside her the fierce mood changed. She bent to kiss the pain drawn lips, murmuring, "Never mind, mother dear, I'll be patient for your sake."

"That's a good girl, Jennie," replied Mrs. Olcott, with a sigh of relief, "try and git along peaceable like, an' jest give in for the sake of quiet. Yer pa's gettin' wuss and wuss."

Jennie wrote a partial account of what had occurred to her Aunt Kate, and this was the answer of that clever woman: "My Dear Niece—Your father needs managing, and I will undertake to do it. I have written to him to come down to the city and advise me about the sale of a piece of property, and you need not be surprised at anything that happens."

Mrs. Kate Calding was the only one in the world who ever did understand her brother Hiram, and she had planned a clever little ruse to be played on the unsuspecting farmer.

Mr. Bryan, whom Jennie had confessed to her mother she cared a great deal for, was well suited to her. He had not yet declared his love, but it was not unguessed by the shrewd little maiden. To Mrs. Calding, however, he had opened his heart, and she bade him wait a little. She knew how prejudiced her brother was against all arrangements not conducted by himself, and rightly concluded that he might put serious difficulty in the way of the young people. After satisfying herself that the name of Jennie's lover was quite unknown to her brother, she resolved to introduce him as a young man who would be a good match for Jennie, if only the girl could be wise enough to think so. Allowing him to believe they had never met she trusted to his unequaled obstinacy to do the rest.

"I've wanted so much to talk with you about Jennie," said that lady, as she and Hiram sat in her well appointed drawing room the night of the arrival.

"Yes, and I'm willin'. She ought to be settled," said the old man decidedly.

"It does not do, Hiram," began Mrs. Calding, watching the hard lined face intently, "to depend on a girl's choice, and"—

"Well, I guess it don't," he interrupted with a sneer.

"There is a young man in town who I know admires Jennie, and if he should meet her I think something would come of it." Very quietly, yet with the utmost caution, she made this statement. The old man was interested. "Rich?" he inquired, rubbing his hands gently together.

"Yes," was the answer; then she went on.

"Of course it's so very uncertain, Hiram. You see, Jennie might refuse to have a word to say to him, and"—

"Now, Kate, look here," interrupted the thoroughly excited old man, as he drew his chair nearer hers and emphasized his words with decisive gestures, "ef I like that young man I'll jest take him out home with me, an' I'd like to see Jennie tell him to go, if I'm livin'."

Mrs. Calding was delighted at her success thus far. The next day Mr. Bryan was introduced, and became the old man's ideal of a son-in-law.

On the farmer's return to his home Mr. Bryan accompanied him, having accepted the hearty invitation of his new friend to "jest run out an' take a look around our part of the country."

Jennie had been apprised of Mr. Bryan's coming, and of the little deception in which she was to play her part. She met him as if he were a stranger, while her father secretly rejoiced at the thought of subduing his proud young daughter.

Mr. Olcott took an early opportunity to enlighten Jennie as to her duty toward his new friend, and with a twinkle in her eye she promised to do her best to please him in the matter.

A week passed. Jennie and Mr. Bryan were very happy. The days were delightful ones to them, and the old farmer rubbed his hands at the success of his scheme, and gave his consent to an early marriage with no hesitation.

He often speaks now of his match making. "There's Jennie," he will say. "She'd hev picked up with some empty noddled city chap ef I hadn't jest took her in hand. I brung Bryan out an' told her that she'd got to behave to him. It's the only way to do—jest make 'em mind, an' they'll git along."

They would not deceive him for anything—the happy young couple; but when he boasts they think with loving gratitude of clever Aunt Kate.—Frances Burton Claire in Drake's Magazine.

Horses That Like Human Flesh.

There appeared in the papers some time ago a story of a horse which, standing in a Toronto street, mistook for new mown hay the blonde hair of a young lady on the sidewalk, seized it in its watering mouth and was rewarded by a blow between the eyes which could have been possible only in the days of roomy garments. One of the beauties of that story was that it was rigidly true, although the name of the horse's owner was withheld. But since then either the same animal or a full brother by the same sire and out of the same dam has been making a name for himself as a luncher off melton coat sleeves, sealskin caps, bearskin boas and tweed capotes.

He is a pretty little roan beast, owned by Larry Cosgrave, and a very snapping turtle in harness. He stood hitched to a little cutter in front of the Bank of Commerce and had five minutes of solid enjoyment, during which time he nearly pulled the arm out of an advertising agent. The arm looks as if it had been vaccinated. But Larry Cosgrave's horse is not the only one in the city that has fallen into evil ways. It is a common thing to see these ferocious animals sprawled half way across the sidewalk, seeking whom they may devour.—Toronto News.

Effect of Plenty of Air.

A marked improvement is at once noticeable in those who, having previously existed in small, air tight rooms, timely avail themselves of an abundance of nature's most generous gift. Pure air will not only prevent disease, but effectually overcome feelings of languor and faintness. It will brighten the intellect, and make new creatures of the old wrecks, who by their very presence will exalt, ennoble and glorify the general conditions of mankind.—Hall's Journal.

A Matter of Charity.

Teacher—Why does Great Britain support royalty?

Pupil—Because royalty cannot support itself.—Epoch.

Cutting.

Ethel—Why, are you so foolish as to be afraid of the dark? I am not in the least.

Mabel—You forget that the dark is not so kind to me as to you.—West Shore.

A Plea for Indifference.

A little indifference to one's self, to one's food, one's personal appearance, clothes, and even one's mental and moral condition, is a wonderful aid in life. When I refer to indifference to one's moral condition I do not, of course, wish to be an advocate of license; but I do protest that it is well, having done one's duty to the best of one's ability, to await the issue with tranquility.—All the Year Round.

The Earliest Lens.

The earliest known lens is one made of rock crystal, unearthed by Layard at Nineveh. This lens, the age of which is to be measured by thousands of years, now lies in the British Museum, with its surface as bright as when it left the maker's hands. By the side of it are very recent specimens of lens which have been ruined by exposure to London's fogs and smoke.—St. Louis Republic.

SUBSCRIBE

FOR THE——

POCAHONTAS TIMES,

Every man in the County should take it, and patronize home industry. It sustains your rights, and works for the advancement of your county, which no city paper will do. It gives you the news from all parts of the county, which you could not get otherwise. It furnishes matters of interst to the Merchant, Farmer and Mechanic. It keeps you posted and gives you information on all general news, and its sections and Miscellany are fit for all ages.

TERM OF SUBSCRIPTION.

One year in advance	$1.00
If not paid within 6 months	1.25
And at the end of the year	1.50

AND IF YOU NEED

Letter Heads, Note Heads, Bill Heads, Envelopes, Drug Envelopes Tags, Business Cards, Official Blanks, Blank Bonds, Posters Briefs for the Court of Appeals etc

GET THEM AT "THE TIMES"

JOB OFFICE.

POCAHONTAS TIMES.

Vol. 8. JOHN E. CAMPBELL, EDITOR AND PROPRIETOR. Huntersville, West Virginia, Thursday, April 30, 1891. Terms of Subscription. $1.50 PER YEAR, IN ADVANCE. No. 40.

Official Directory of Pocahontas County.

Judge of Circuit Court, A. N. Campbell.
Prosecuting Attorney, L. M. McClintic.
Sheriff, J. C. Arbogast.
Deputy Sheriff, Geo. W. Callison.
Cl'k Co. Court, S. L. Brown.
Cl'k Cir. Court, J. H. Patterson.
Assessor, C. O. Arbogast.
Com'rs Co. Ct. C. E. Beard. S. B. Hannah. G. M. Kee.
Co. Surveyor, Geo. Baxter

THE COURTS.

Circuit Court convenes on the first Monday in April, 3rd Monday in June and 3rd Monday in October.

County Court convenes on the 1st Tuesday in January, March, October and second Tuesday in July. July is levy term.

HOW I SAID YES.

My godfathers and my godmothers in my baptism called me "Olive," and I they lived to be heartily ashamed of themselves for it, for never was there a child with a more mistaken name. A belligerent state was my normal condition. I do not remember my nurses, but I have grace enough to pity them. The mildest of my teachers considered me "unruly," and you can ask Geoffrey what he thought of me a year ago. Now it is different. I have found my master, and I believe I rather like it. This is how it came about:

Geoffrey had asked me three times to marry him, and three times I had said "No" in the most decided manner. But that never made the least difference to him. He only laughed, and said I would know my own mind better next time.

"I suppose," I said, you mean to ask me once a quarter?"

"Is that enough?"

"Too often, a great deal, sir."

"Well, then, we will say once in six months, Miss Olive."

And then he walked smilingly away, and began some nonsensical talk with father about Dr. Koch and his bewildering theories.

The last asking was just at the beginning of warm weather, and father, who thought Geoffrey's opinion infallible, asked him where he would advise us to go for the summer.

I had made up my mind to go to Long Branch, and I said so very distinctly, but Geoffrey proposed some out of the way place in the Virginia mountains. Then he painted it in such glowing colors that nothing would satisfy father but a personal investigation. It was all Geoffrey's doing, and I told him so at the railway station.

"It is your doing, sir," I said, "and I shall remember you for it."

"Thanks, Olive," he replied; "there is nothing I fear but forgetfulness."

I wanted to speak unmistakably to him, but the train moved, and I felt that it would be only waste of material.

At the end of the second day we got to our destination. It was a pretty place, I must acknowledge that. Nature had done all she could for it, but art and civilization had passed it by. The men were simply "frights," and the women were—well, none too good for the men. The houses were log cabins, through which daylight peeped and the wind blew as it listed. But there was of course a big white hotel—there always is. I have no doubt if we had gone to Stanley falls or Guthrie we should have found a hotel and a proprietor—the institution is ubiquitary. We procured rooms, and my trunks were with some difficulty got up the hill and the flight of wooden steps into the hall.

"I suppose," I said, with a resigned look at father, "there is no use in taking them upstairs. I can have no use for my dresses here?"

"As you like, Olive," he replied, in one of his meek and mild ways, "as you like, dear; that gray thing you have on looks pretty well, and it does not show the dirt."

After this remark of course I had every trunk, bonnet box and satchel taken upstairs; and the noise and confusion, and even the occasional bad word their size and weight called forth, were quite grateful to me.

"It is not my fault," I explained. "If people will build stairs like corkscrews I am not responsible."

In this amiable mood we took possession, and I think, if Geoffrey had known what I was thinking about it, as I did up my hair and put on my white evening dress, he would have lost a trifle of his self complacency—that is, if men ever do make a loss of that kind. The first thing that pleased me was the supper. It really was good, particularly the berries and cream, which are a specialty with us.

"But, sir," I inquired, "are there any Christians here besides ourselves?"

"It is to be hoped so, Olive. I saw a little church in the valley."

"Pshaw, father! I did not mean church Christians, I mean society Christians."

"Ah, they are different, are they? Well, what do you think of Augusta Pennington for a Christian?"

"Augusta Pennington! Is she here?" I asked, alarmed.

"No, she is not, but her brother lives within two miles, and he has a daughter about the same age as yourself. Mrs. Pennington wrote them we should be here today; they will doubtless call in the morning."

Well, I did not care if they did. The dresses in my trunks were sufficient to impress any woman with considerable [illegible]. The next morning I made a beautiful toilet, but neither Mr. nor Miss Lacelles called. Just after supper I heard a little stir and bustle on the stairs, a rippling laugh, the rustle of silken robes, and, leaning on her father's arm, Miss Lacelles entered. She was beautiful. I saw that at a glance; tall and pale and ladylike, reminding you of a full white lily.

We soon struck up a friendship—a girl's friendship, I mean. Some one has said that there is no friendship between the sexes, and some one is mistaken, I think, for the world holds no safer friend for a woman than an honorable man. A woman's friendship is very likely to be the result of convenience, contiguity, or of being, as my father rather sneeringly remarked, "the only Christian within hail of each other." Mary showed me all her dresses and told me her secrets, and I returned the compliment, mindful of Burns' advice to still "keep something to mysel' I wadna tell to ony."

Life settled down into an unexciting but endurable routine. Mary and I visited each other and arranged our next winter's campaign, for I had invited her to pass the cold weather with me in New York. One day, in the middle of one of these pleasant chats, a servant came in and handed me a card. The name on it roused at once all the antagonism in my nature. It was:

GEOFFREY GARDNER.

Now, it so happened that the existence of this gentleman was the one thing I had kept back in my confidences with Mary. So I had now to explain who and what he was. I wanted her to come into the parlor with me; but no, she would go home first and dress; but she promised to be back to tea.

I disliked Geoffrey, yet I was glad to see him. My mental faculties were rusting for want of attrition. Father would not quarrel with me, and Mary was my only face card. I could not throw her away. Besides, I liked to see his great, handsome figure in the room. He was so full of life that he seemed to vitalize even the chairs and stools; they tumbled about and got out of the way in the strangest manner. I told him about Mary Lacelles, and warned him that he would lose his heart. He gravely told me he had none to lose.

Imagine six feet two inches of manhood without a heart!

We waited tea for Mary, but she did not come till quite dark, and we had begun tea. She said she had been detained by company, but I knew better than that. She was dressed with reference to candle light effect, and would not lose its influence on her first appearance. I never saw her look so lovely. Her rose colored dress, with its broad shimmering bands of white silk, wonderfully enhanced her charms. Geoffrey looked delighted, and she gave him the full benefit of both her upward and downward glances.

When tea was over I left the room a few minutes, and when I came back found Geoffrey and Mary sitting opposite each other, with the chessboard between them as an excuse for flirtation. The move had been so rapid that I was astonished, and a little angry, too; and father did not improve matters by whispering as I passed his chair:

"Checkmated, Olive!"

It was not a pleasant evening to me, and it was the beginning of many unpleasant ones.

"How it came let doctors tell," but I began to like Geoffrey just as soon as he began to like Mary. I called up pride to the rescue, but it did not help me much, and I suffered a good deal in watching Geoffrey's attentions to Mary and listening to her prattle about him. I thought her supremely silly, and I told her so. She was astonished at my petulance, but I don't think she suspected the truth. Only father did that, and he looked so "Serve you right, miss," that I longed for him to be a woman for an hour or so, that I might talk back to him.

One day, after Geoffrey had been a month with us, a riding party was proposed to the top of the mountain. Father and I, Geoffrey and Mary—that would be the order, of course, and I was prepared for that; but there is a last straw in every burden, and my last straw was this incident: They were mounted and waiting for me, when Mary dropped her glove. From my window I saw Geoffrey pick it up, put it on the hand laid so confidingly in his, and then kiss it. After that I was not going to ride for king nor kaiser. I sent a positive refusal to all entreaties, and as soon as they were out of sight indulged in a good, refreshing cry. I cried myself to sleep, and woke about dusk with a new born purpose in my heart which comforted me wonderfully, the keynote of which was, "She stoops to conquer." Yet I did not dress again. I knew they were to take tea at Mr. Lacelles', so I threw my dressing gown around me, and taking a novel in my hand, I ordered a cup of strong tea and went into the sitting room. As I walked in at one door, Geoffrey walked in at the other.

"I come to take you to Mr. Lacelles', Olive," he said.

"How do you propose doing it, sir? For unless you bind me hand and foot, and get a couple of [illegible] to take me there, I really don't think you will succeed."

"I could carry you myself."

"Could you. I don't think you would enjoy the journey."

"Will you dare me to do it?"

"Not to-night. I should like to insure my life first."

"Olive, you have been crying."

"I have not, sir," indignantly. "And if I have, what is that to you?" reproachfully.

"A great deal. Oh, Olive, you teasing, provoking, bewitching little mortal! How often must I tell you I love you? How often must I ask you to marry me?"

"It is not six months since the last time, Geoffrey."

"I don't care; it seems like six years. And, oh, Olive, you know that you love me."

"I do not."

"You have loved me ever since you were 8 years old."

"I have not."

"Now you must take me forever or leave me forever to-night. I have asked you three times before."

"Four times, sir."

"Well, four times, then. Old numbers are lucky; here is the fifth time. You know what I want, Olive—your promise to be mine. Is it to be? Now or never!"

I suppose every one has a good angel. Mine must have been at its post just then, for a strange feeling of humility and gentleness came over me. I glanced up at the handsome face all aglow with love's divine light; at the eyes full of gracious entreaty; at the arms half stretched out to embrace me. Yet pride struggled hard with love. I stood up silent and trembling, quite unable to acknowledge myself vanquished until I saw him turn away grieved and sorrowful. Then I said:

"Geoffrey, come back; it is now."

That is the way I said "Yes," and I have never been sorry for it. If I live to be as old as Methuselah I shall never be a meek woman; but still I suit Geoffrey, and I take more kindly to his authority than I ever did to paternal rule. Father laughs with sly triumph at Geoffrey's victory, and he sent me as a wedding present a handsome copy of "The Taming of the Shrew."—Amelia E. Barr in New York Ledger.

THE BLACK RIBBON.

The gentlemen of Cove house sat upon the piazza, smoking and looking at the sea as it tumbled in, when the evening coach, laden with piled up baggage and passengers, came rattling down the turnpike and made the sweep which led up to the hotel. This in itself was matter enough for attention, but when, in the wake of the yellow old coach, just beyond its clouds of dust, a glittering little pony carriage rolled swiftly on, a dozen pair of lazy eyes grew interested and expectant.

The coach drew up with a scientific flourish, and the sweating horses stood panting with the tug through the heavy sand, while the driver leaped down, and with much tumbling and crashing of trunks the old stage was unladened. Meanwhile the pony carriage, holding two girls, rolled smoothly up to a side door, and three waiters were instantly in attendance upon them.

The ladies alighted, and the two disappeared at the private door of the Cove house.

"Who are they?" asked Paul Hanover, withdrawing his cigar from his mouth and turning his handsome blue eyes on the friend at his elbow.

Fane King, who was looking thoughtfully out at the sea, replied quietly that he did not know.

"It's Miss Payson, of New York," said Will McKenzie, who knew everybody. "At any rate, that's her turnout."

"Which one?"

"The blonde, I suppose. I never met her, but she was at Newport with my sister last season. Nice, ain't she?"

"Who is the other one?"

"I don't know. Poor cousin, I presume."

Hanover and King relapsed to their cigars; but everybody was thinking more or less of Miss Payson.

The ladies appeared at supper. There were only five of their party—the old gentleman, the two young ladies and an invalid child of 12 with her nurse. It was soon remarked that they appeared sufficient for themselves, and neither sought nor received acquaintances. The face of the blonde girl was as blue without the jockey hat as with it, but the profile of her companion only was to be seen. A broad black ribbon bound around the cuts and nearly concealing a wealth of rich brown hair revealed only the side view of a set of regular features and one smooth, fresh cheek.

"What can be the matter?" queried the ladies one of the other.

So, without the least possible [illegible] on the subject, Alice Payson was decided to be an object of [illegible] and compassion, while [illegible] all attention and admiration were offered the other one.

I cannot say that either appeared much affected by the regard of those around them. Certainly they spoke to no one for at least three weeks. People became discouraged about making their acquaintance, and few more attempts were tried.

But things inevitably changed. One evening when all Cove house was in the surf a scream arose. The scream was followed by a frantic cry:

"Alice! Oh, Alice! She is drowning! Save her! save her! save her!"

"Who can swim?" was the cry.

Long before it was answered Fane King was seen striking out boldly for the spot.

But he had some forty rods to swim, and it was probable that Alice Payson had sunk for the second time while the strong tide swelled against the rocks.

"Swim, man, swim!" shouted the old uncle upon the beach.

"Save her, oh, for God's sake!" cried Maud, wringing her hands.

But within a few strokes of Fane King's outstretched arms Alice disappeared.

There was already death upon her closed eyes and pallid forehead. He thought it was a corpse he clasped as he dropped beneath the surface and caught her sinking figure.

It was with difficulty he arose to the surface. Thrice the great billows rolled over his head before he appeared. He could only hold himself and his burden off the cruel rocks. Already his arm was lacerated with their sharp teeth.

They had put out a boat, and it at last came to his relief. As they lifted the senseless girl into the wherry they saw that the black ribbon had been torn from her face, and a large, dull red, discolored mark appeared. It showed more plainly in the otherwise deadly pallor of her sweet face, for sweet it was, and pure as a child's. They covered face and figure reverently, thinking her quite dead, and rowed back while Fane found his way up the rocks to have his hand wrung speechlessly by the agonized old man.

"I don't think she is dead, Mr. Payson," said Fane, remembering with a thrill the silken hair which had washed against his lips. "She cannot be dead!"

She was not dead. In three days she appeared among them again, fairer, gentler, sweeter than ever, and frankly grateful for the interest everybody betrayed in her. And then it came out that there had been a mistake. It was Alice who was the heiress and Maud the poor cousin, though as beautiful, as radiant and perfect as a Hebe.

Miss Alice Payson, with the black ribbon replaced, tried to thank Fane King on the first day of her reappearance, but her brown eyes filled and she only said:

"You are young; life is sweet to you; it was noble in you to risk yours for me, Mr. King."

Fane's heart swelled so that he hardly knew what was the matter with him. But, somehow, the friendly clasp of Alice Payson's light hand and the gaze of her sweet eyes affected him as no hand or eyes had ever affected him before.

The ice once broken, a bevy of gentlemen strove for the attention of the cousins. Paul Hanover was foremost.

He was very handsome, fair, brilliant, graceful. He was not poor either. Fane remembered that bitterly as he saw him strolling with Alice on the beach or driving for her the little pony carriage. His own peace and comfort seemed suddenly gone. Miss Payson's gentle friendliness only made him worse.

He was startled one day as if shot by Hanover remarking:

"If you're not altogether gone with the blues, Fane, I'd like you to congratulate a fellow."

"Have you won your bet on the trotting match?"

"Pshaw! hang trotting matches! Don't be stupid, Fane. Haven't I been riding with Miss Payson?"

"Well?"

"Well it is," pirouetting around the room and snapping his fingers like castanets. "I'm the first betrothed of a lovely girl, after the latest novel. Now, what have you to say, my respectable, carping friend?"

Fane tried hard to command himself and not betray his secret.

"Alice Payson is too good for you, Paul," he answered, with an attempt at being easy and composed, in which he succeeded but indifferently.

"I dare say, but it isn't her, Fane."

"Isn't her!"—looking electrified.

"Certainly not. The money's very well, but that defect of hers—it's a delicate subject, but I really couldn't marry a girl with a disfigurement like that."

"You mean that you are engaged to Maud?" asked Fane, hardly believing his ears.

"Exactly."

"Why, I congratulate you, with all my heart," jumping up excitedly.

"They are going away to-morrow. Don't you want to see them again?"

Continued on 4th page.

Pocahontas Times.

JOHN E. CAMPBELL,
EDITOR AND PROPRIETOR.

Entered at the Post-office at Huntersville, W. Va., as second class matter.

Huntersville, W. Va.

April 30, 1891.

In a Nutshell.

Here is the tariff question in a nut shell. The New York Sun a high protectionist newspaper, says: One of the benefits of the protective tariff is that it enables millions of men whose sole stock of goods is their day's labor to sell that stock at an advanced price.

This is the protectionist's claim. Suppose it to be well founded in regard to manufacturing goods what is the result? The laborers who sell their labor consume most of what they manufacture and pay a larger price for the products of their own labor than they would pay if prices were not artificially advanced. At the same time they make it impossible for what they produce to be sold in other countries and thereby greatly limit the possible production of manufactured goods in this country. It is asserted by the advocates of lower tariff rates that the laborers would be benefitted and the prosperity and growth of the country enhanced by abandoning the attempt to maintain the prices of all exportable goods at a higher rate than they are sold for in the markets of the world.

But it appears that a prohibitory tariff does not really maintain the higher wages that the tariff protectionists claim for it. The united silk workers of North America have held during the present week their quarterly convention in Paterson, N. J., and here are the resolutions which they adopted:

WHEREAS, The silk industry of the United States, despite the high protective tariff, is at present in a most deplorable condition, wages being so low that skilled operatives are seeking other occupations and in view of the fact that since 1889 the wages of ribbon weavers have been reduced 25 per cent, be it

Resolved, That the representatives of the United Silk workers of North America, now in session appeal to the friends of American labor not to purchase silk fabrics of foreign manufactures which are actually inferior to those made here and be it further

Resolved, That in our opinion neither protection nor free trade benefits the workingmen, and we therefore call upon all silk workers who are unorganized to band themselves together in the national body. And it is our further opinion that the only protection workingmen will ever receive will be that they give themselves.

In as much as the experiment of free trade has never been tried in this country and no one proposes at present to try it the expression of opinion concerning its benefits to workingmen need not be considered. But there is an opportunity here for the New York Sun and all the high protectionist newspapers to explain on what grounds they found their assertions in regard to the benefits of McKinleyism.

If the condition of the silk workers is so bad as they describe it why should they be compelled to pay an artificial price on all the woolen clothing they wear and a multitude of other things which they have to buy? We are glad they are studdying the tariff question.—National Democrat.

WASHINGTON LETTER.

From our regular correspondent.

WASHINGTON, D. C., Apr. 24th—The news of the snubbing given Mr. Harrison by the National Republican League convention at Cincinati caused no surprise here, where every one who is at all posted on political matters knows the contempt felt for the present occupant of the White House by the leaders of the republican party, chief of whom is Mr. Blaine, who in now believed to have intentionally deceived Mr. Harrison when he promised him that he would not oppose his nomination. It is now conceded that Blane may have or dictate the republican nomination next year, and if he allows Mr. Harrison to be nominated it will be simply because he will have become convinced of the impossibility of electing a republican

A gentleman who is a warm personal friend of Mr. Harrison tells me that he is not the dupe of Mr. Blaine to the extent imagined by that gentleman and his friends, and that if after a careful observation of the political field he does not think he can be re-elected he will refuse to allow his name to go before the next republican convention. That may be Mr. Harrison's intention, but it would be impossible for a man with his overwhelming egotism to believe that he could possible be defeated. So that it may be put down as certain that he will gladly take the nomination, if Blane will let him have it. That's where the uncertainty comes in. Will Blaine let him have it?

The effect of the legislation of the billion dollar congress is beginning to be felt at the Treasury department, and already Secratary Foster has began to scheme as to how he can get the $30,000,000 that must be paid on the 1st of July for pensioners. He has decided to utilize the $18,000,000 in silver half dollars now in the Treasury by dispositing it in the National banks, thus making them available for the Government's current expenses.

Another item, aside from the Congressional appropriations becoming payable after July 1, that is taxing Mr. Foster's ingenuity to provide for is the $50,000,000 of 4½ per cent bonds that will mature in September. Although it has for some weeks been given out that all of these bonds would be taken up at or before maturity. I have it on good authority that it is the present intention of Mr. Foster to allow those in the hands of the National banks to remain outstanding at a reduced rate of interest, if the banks will consent to it. Whether he can legally do this without the passage of a special funding act of Congress is a debatable question.

Nobody has ever had much confidence in the honesty of Secratary Tracy's alleged reform in the employment of the foreman and master mechanics of the navy yard of the country, and now that it has been endorsed by Senator Chandler there is not an atom of confidence left in it.

If Jerry Simpson isn't careful somebody will charge him with being in the pay of the Washington [illegible] lobby. He made a speech here this week in favor of the Government's paying the Union soldiers at their [illegible] the difference between the value of the greenbacks paid them during the war and of gold. He says it will only take $1,000,000,000 to do it. Only!

It has leaked out through the State department that the [illegible] is extremely anxious to dispense with the services of Fred. Douglass, minister to Hayti, because of the [illegible] made of the negotiations for a coaling station on the island for the United States. It fears, however, to dismiss him now lest it may effect the negro votes in next years convention.

The remnants of the Sixth Massachusetts regiment, of which Lieut. Gov. Jones of New York was commander when it was attacked by the mob in the streets of Baltimore in April 1861, visited Washington this week and was royally entertained. They left for home this morning.

The Senate Finance committee has designated as a sub-committee to investigate the working of the McKinley tariff law, under the resolution adopted by the Senate at the last session. Senators Allison, Aldrich, Hitchcock, Carlisle and Harris. The sub-committee begins work next week, and it is already apparent that an attempt is to be made to make republican camaign thunder, but the two wide awake democrats—Messrs. Carlisle and Harris—will see that their end is held up.

Thomas Garfield the only brother of the late President, who has lived on a farm in Jamestown township, Ottawa county, Mich., for the last twenty five years, is slowly dying. He is 68 years old and all his life has been a hard-working farmer.

The Pennsylvania World's Fair Bill provides an appropriation of $300,000, and makes the Governor and Lieutenant Governor ex officio members of the commission.

ANNOUNCEMENTS.

To the Voters of Pocahontas County.

At the solicitation of many friends in the County, I announce myself a candidate for re-election to the office of County Superintendent. If elected I will perform the duties of the office without fear or favor. Thanking You for past favors, I again solicit your support at the coming election, May 19th, 1891.

M. G. MATHEWS.

To the Voters of Pocahontas County.

I hereby announce myself a candidate for the office of County Superintendent. If elected, I will perform the duties of the office to the best of my ability, without partiality. Election, May 19th.

Respectfully,
J. M. BARNETT.

HOME NEWS

—Drummers are plentiful.

—Mr. R. V. Hill, of Academy, was in town to day.

—Jas. Stretch Esq., has moved with his family in the Hogsett house at this place.

—C. B. Swecker sells the best big plows made. They are manufactured at Ronceverte.

—Mess. R. C. Blair, of Mowcow, Va., and J. C. Baxter, of Mt. Solon, were in town Monday.

—Large droves of cattle are daily passing through town for the Elk pastures.

—Mr. M. G. Mathews our genial Co. Supt., was in the city to day and made us a paying call.

—Rev. I. G. Michael, will preach at Edray, next Sunday at 11 o'clock a. m.

—Mr. Henry Grose, is going to build a new house this summer. As is also Beckly McComb, Esq.

—Attorney C. F. Moore, has been at Clifton Forge for several days past.

—We are sorry to note that Attorney L. M. McClintic isn't able to be out yet.

—William Muscoe, alias William F. Jourdan who murdered policeman Seal in Charlottsville Va. a couple of years ago was hanged in that place Tuesday 21st inst.

—A competitive examination for an appointment of a cadet at West Point will be held at Charleston, May 15th. We understand one or more young gentlemen of this county have applied for the appointment.

—Mr. Amos Barlow returned last week from Baltimore and New York where he had been buying his spring and summer goods. He is now on the sick list.

—The price of THE TIMES has not increased on account of the McKinley bill, but we wish to correct the misapprehension of some of our subscribers who appear to think it was placed on the free list.

—About a dozen wagons from near this place hauling for Mr. Amos Barlow, and from Edray, hauling for Barlow and Moore passed through this place this week for Millboro Depot.

—George Ervine Esq., the cedar oil man has quit the rendition of his oil and gone to plowing, and we understand he says he will plow 3 acres or die in the furrow.

—We have it from good authority that the Pittsburg W. Va. Southern and the C. & O. railway companies met in Baltimore last week and came to the determination following: That the Pittsburg W. Va. Southern Company build their road up Williams river and across to Marlinton, 6 miles west of this place and the C. & O. Company build their road to the State line 7 miles east of here, and then the two Companies are to make and build the 13 miles between, by way of this place. We understand that the former Company are surveying up Williams river now, and the latter have been camping and locating their road to the state line for several weeks. We understand these contracts will be let in connection in the near future.

—Some of our farmers are planting corn.

—A move is being made to build a Southern Methodist parsonage at this place. A parsonage has been needed for a long time and we hope to see it up before long.

—Extensive forest fires have been raging around the town for several days, endangering the fences of many of our surburban residents.

—The Governor has appointed Att'y C. F. Moore, of this place, agent to represent this State in all matters partaining to the Southern Inter States Exposition to be held at Raleigh, N. C., October first to December first 1891.

News From Dunmore.

What has become of Tom Sawyer and his railroad?

Garden making and corn planting seems to be all the go.

We had two big frosts this week, and fear the fruit is killed.

Rumor says there will be about three wedings this summer, here.

Some improvements going on.

Robt EcGlaughlin has built himself a splendid barn.

Rev. Lautenschlager will preach at Dunmore, Sunday night, May 10th.

Mr. B. F. McElwee and wife and W. H. Cackley and wife are visiting at Ronceverte.

Miss Kittie Lakin has returned home.

The Misses Ligo ,of Clover Lick, spent Sunday at Dunmore.

Lee Nottingham has moved his stock of goods to the Swecker store house.

Several wago''s are off for Staunton this week.

Your correspondent last week struck the nail on the head in regard to obstructing public roads.

Overseers of roads should have all hands out now with plows and scrapers, putting them in good order.

Auctioneer Swecker is going to attend the Circuit Court at Beverly.

The Sunday schools at Dunmore and Cross Roads are in a flourishing condition.

Singing at Cross Roads, Sunday, May 10th, at 2 p. m. All come and bring your books.

Hon. H. A. Yeager is moving to Marlinton.

Andrew Geiger is off for New York, to lay in his spring goods.

The road around Snake den is done.

Let every body subscribe for THE TIMES. It is the only paper that gives you your County news.

TRAVELER.

A Earnac A Poor Rank

CLARKSBURG, W. Va., April 25. —The residence of Asa Sutton aged 80, living near Caseville, was entered by a body of masked men Wednesday night, revolvers placed at the heads of Sutton and his wife, and the bureau robbed of $1,500 in cash and notes. They got a substantial lunch and partook of the same before leaving. Sutton was thought by his neighbors to be in the habit of keeping considerable money in the house, and several parties are under suspicion, although no arrests have been made.

Lively Lincoln.

CHARLESTON, W. Va., April 24. —A sensational affair was enacted in Lincoln county a few weeks ago, when two Mormon elders, who have been preaching their doctrines over in the fastnesses of that county, were visited at night by sixty-two armed horsemen and forced at the points of their guns to leave the county. The elders had been in the county over a year and had been quietly at work preaching their doctrines and proselyting among country people. They were well-educated, clever fellows who were always ready for a debate with any of the country people on Scriptural subjects, and by their superior education and sophistry usually managed to outargue their opponents.

They were succeeding in getting quite a following of disciples but in so doing they only gained the hatred of others, who determined the Mormons must go. The constitutional guarantee of religeous liberty could not prevent the detirmened band of sturdy mountaineers from ridding their county of the polygamous Mormons, who were trying to lead into their hideous practices the wives and daughters of the Lincoln farmers. Accordingly, a few nights since, sixty two mounted men appeared about midnight at the house were the elders were staying and told them to leave. They left and have not been heard of since, and the people over there hope they never may.

Mr. Blaines Reply.

Mr. Blaine's elaborate and careful reply to the latest representation of the Italian Government on the New Orleans affair will scarcely prove satisfactory to the Marquis di Rudini, and it will please him the less because it will not be easy for him to answer it. From the American point of view, Mr. Blaine's position appears impregnable. After showing distinctly that the United States had never acknowledged, as the Italian Minister assumed, an existing obligation to indemnify "those Italian subjects who may have been wronged by a violation of the rights secured to them under the treaty," Mr. Balaine goes on to a minute consideration of what those rights are and whether the treaty has been violated.

He finds a precedent exactly to his hand in the attack upon the Spanish residents of New Orleans by a mob in 1851, and in the successful contention of Mr. Webster at that time that while an official resident, like the Spanish Consul, may claim special indemnity, the subjects of a foreign State "who have come into the country to mingle with our own citizens and here to pursue their private business and objects" have no such claim, but are simply entitled to be "protected by the same laws and the same administration of law as native-born citizens of this country." This is almost precisely the language of the treaty between the United States and Italy, which guarantees to the citizens of the contracting powers in the territory of each equal treatment and free access to the Courts of justice. "Foreign residents," says Mr. Blaine, "are not made a favored class," although they have one advantage over native citizens in that they have access for redress of grievance not only to the State Courts, but also to the Federal tribunals of the district.

The Secretary of State does not, however, dismiss the subject here as of no further concern to the Government of the United States. The President, he says, has instructed the District Attorney at New Orleans to make full inquiry into the facts and to ascertain whether any action lies with the Federal authorities. It is understood meanwhile that the State tribunals are investigating the matter, and while it is possible that they may accomplish nothing, it cannot be assumed that such will be the case. It will be only when the ordinary administration of the law has failed to do justice to Italian subjects that the United States can be called upon to consider whether some other form of redress may be asked.

What are the conditions under which such a duty might be recognized Mr. Blaine defines in terms of precise trait the Italian Government will have to make out a much clearer and stronger case than has yet been presented, to command consideration. If it should appear, he says, that among those killed at New Orleans that there were some Italian subjects "who were resident or domiciled in that city agreeably to our treaty with Italy and not in violation of our immigration laws, and who were abiding in the peace of the United States and obeying the laws thereof and of the State of Louisiana," and that the public officers connived at the work of the mob, or on proper notice failed to take any steps for the preservation of the peace and afterwards to bring the guilty to trial, "the President would, under such circumstances, feel that a case was established that should be submitted to the consideration of Congress."

As these are conditions that did not exist, or that certainly cannot be made to appear, the concluding paragraph of Mr. Blaine's letter comes as near as possible to a diplomatic disavowel of responsibility. And yet it is logicaly supported by all the facts and arguments that have preceded it, so that it throws upon Italy the burden of beginning anew to prepare and present a case for consideration. And the letter is all the stronger because, with the utmost courtesy of expression, it yet practically convicts the Italian Government of ill considered bluster if not of actual misrepresention and juggling with quotations. Possibly it may provoke Rudini to an angry rejoinder, but if harm should come of that we cannot feel that the United States would be to blame.—Phila. Times.

Pocahontas Times.

JOHN E. CAMPBELL,
EDITOR AND PROPRIETOR.

Entered at the Post-office at Huntersville, W. Va., as second class matter.

ADVERTISING RATES.

	1 m.	3 m.	6 m.	1 yr.
One inch	1 00	$ 2 00	$ 3 00	$ 5 00
Three in.	2 00	4 00	6 00	10 00
Qr. column	3 00	6 00	10 00	17 00
Half col'n	6 00	12 00	20 00	30 00
One col'n	10 00	20 00	30 00	50 00

Reading notices, not exceeding five lines, twenty-five cents for each insertion, and five cents a line for each additional line.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION.

One copy, 1 yr., $1.00 in advance; after 6 months, $1.25; after 12 months, $1.50

These terms will be strictly complied with.

Huntersville, W. Va.

April 30, 1891.

Continued from 1st page.

Fane went down upon the piazza where the ladies sat, unreasonably happy.

The ladies were standing upon the piazza, in the early sunlight, when he approached Alice Payson to say good-by. Paul was talking to Maud, saucy and beautiful in her jockey hat as Fane found his way to Alice's side.

"Good-by, Mr. King. You will come and see us, with your friend?" she said.

There was no one very near. He answered:

"No; I love you, and so I must say good-by forever, Alice."

He saw the delicate features pale. At that instant old Mr. Payson came hurrying out, followed by a porter with a large valise in each hand.

"Ready, girls!" he called. "Come, hurry, or we'll miss the train."

Alice, with downcast face, gathered up her gray trailing skirt. He thought she was going without a word, but suddenly she looked up into his eyes.

"No. Come," she said. And then in a moment she was gone, the dainty carriage glittering down the beach.

A week later he waited for her in the costly splendor of her drawing room. She came down, giving him her soft hands, nor resisting his embrace.

"I love you so!" he murmured.

"Do you, really—with this disfigured face?"

"I never think of it, Alice."

She laughed then and slipped off the black ribbon, and there was one smooth cheek as fair and perfect as the other.

"I had blistered my face for the toothache. It was nothing lasting, you see."

When Fane told Hanover his happiness, or as much of it as can be expressed in words, he looked as if there was something unsaid upon his mind, but when he beheld Alice under her bridal veil he seemed suddenly enlightened.

"If I hadn't been afraid of a black ribbon," he murmured. "I might have been fifty thousand dollars richer."

Perhaps.—E. E. in New York News.

THE BARBER'S MANIA.

John Rhett, the handsomest young man in the county, he of the raven locks and with the beautiful black mustache that the women adored—John Rhett walked into the barber shop in Yorkville for a shave.

It was a cold day and there were three or four of his friends, besides several tonsorial artists, standing around the stove at the time, but the man who always did his work being idle he walked directly over and threw himself into the comfortable chair.

The barber was a tall, well built young fellow by the name of Henry Casey, whom Rhett had known for a long time. The usual preparatory process was gone through with and then he sharpened his razor and went to work, but he started off in a manner that made Rhett uncomfortable from the first. This was due to the unusual and seemingly reckless way in which he handled the razor. There was entirely too much flourish about it to make one feel easy. He would whirl it round in one or two circles before it touched the face, and then take it off again in the same artistic style. This may have looked very pretty to a spectator, but to the person who formed the center of these concentric circles, Rhett thought it was anything but pleasant. At first he was inclined to think the fellow was drinking. But he soon dismissed this idea, for the work was being done well and skillfully and no [illegible] could do it. Finally he told Casey that he didn't like any such flourishes around his head, and to stop it.

But the only reply he received was the press of the barber's finger against his throat, and a short hissing "keep still."

This made Rhett mad, and he started to [illegible] himself very forcibly, but when he looked up at the man who stood throwing the sharp razor over his face his anger gave way to a far more fearful feeling. The words died on his lips and a sudden chill crept over his heart.

He had looked into the wild, excited eyes of a maniac.

"Don't you move or say a word; if you do I'll cut your throat," came again in a suppressed whisper, as that sharp, cunning face bent near to his.

"Do you know," said the barber as he kept on with the work; "do you know that this will be your last shave—that I intend to kill you with this same razor the moment I have finished?

"I have long wanted to make the experiment," he continued as he went rapidly on, "just to see how quickly it could be done. Perhaps you think I am crazy, but you are wrong. I only want to do this work in the interest of science. I believe it will prove to be the most painless and quickest of all deaths. If I succeed today, as I expect to do, my method may become the public mode of execution in this country, supplanting the gallows. You see what an honor it will be to have started such a reform in capital punishment. My name will become immortal. There will be none of the suspense attending executions now; none of the terrible scenes at the gallows. You simply take the condemned man in for a shave and before he knows it he is in eternity."

He kept on talking in this rapid, excited way, and kept on shaving.

Rhett heard his friends conversing on the other side of the room, and he turned his head to see if he could tell them of his danger. But it was quickly jerked back in position, and the barber told him if he did that again or tried to get out of the chair it would be the signal for his death. And the wicked gleam of his eye more than his words showed that he was in terrible earnest. Under the circumstances the intended victim thought it best not to move again, and so he laid there as still as death.

But his brain was not idle. It was working with the rapidity of lightning, and well it might.

Rhett had always been regarded as a cool and brave young man; he had proved it on more than one trying occasion. And he determined in this last extremity to be himself and to meet the sharp cunning of the maniac with an equal cunning.

Then commenced a fierce and hidden game between those two—a game in which one knew the prize for him was life, and, if he lost, the profit death.

"Henry," said the young man, and he smiled, though his heart was beating fast, "you shouldn't try to frighten a good customer in that way. You know you wouldn't kill an old friend like me."

"I'll show you, Mr. Rhett," half shrieked the barber, and the gleaming eye grew fiercer and the voice trembled with passion.

Rhett saw that this had only added fuel to the flame, and he began to despair of conciliating the madman.

"Yes," said Casey, and his wild hand grew wilder and the razor pressed harder upon his victim's face; "yes, you must die this very hour for the sake of science. Why, it will be a noble death. You ought to feel honored to perish in such a cause."

The young man was now thoroughly frightened, and he watched for an opportunity to spring from the chair and escape. But he looked in vain. Though the barber occasionally relaxed the stern grip upon his throat, yet he still held him with his glittering eye.

"You see, the criminal will not know that his hour is at hand. The barber will be taken into the jail to give him a shave, and without a fear or tremor, without a single thought of doom, he will be hurried into another world. Talk about executing by electricity, but my method will not only be quicker, but more painless."

"Just a stroke like this, and it's all over," and Rhett's heart gave a wild leap, for he thought his end had come.

Casey, however, had only drawn the back of the razor across his throat, but with such force and rapidity that it burned like fire.

The situation was growing desperate. In a minute the barber would be through with his work. With one hand he had Rhett by the hair and with the other was finishing up the job, while his lips kept muttering and his body swayed with excitement. Rhett knew with the next sweep of that infuriated arm he would meet his doom. Whatever he did must be done instantly.

"Well, Henry," he said, as lightly as he could, "sharpen up your razor well before you start, for I don't want any bungling job." For he thought when the barber turned to do this he could leap from the chair and get away.

"It's sharp enough for you, Mr. Rhett," and the madman grew madder as he spoke; "it's sharp enough for you, sir."

He had already finished shaving. Rhett's heart almost stood still.

"Now we'll see if it needs to be sharpened," said Casey with a demoniac laugh, and Rhett felt a sharp sting as the keen blade cut the skin on his throat.

"But, Henry," he rapidly ejaculated, "I want you to make a success of this, for it will be a blessing to the world—but if you go on now I tell you it will be a failure."

The razor stopped.

"Why?" asked Casey.

The maniac was interested. Rhett saw that he had gained a point and he knew his life depended upon how he used it. He had touched upon the man's pet scheme. It seemed strange to him now that he had not thought of it before.

"You will make a failure," he continued, "because you have told me all about it, and I have already suffered as much suspense as the criminal on the gallows. Besides, when I feel the razor giving me the fatal wound I will shriek out in agony, and the people will say that I suffered a terrible death. They will not believe you then that it would be the most painless mode of execution. So you see, Henry, you would defeat the very object you are trying to accomplish."

The barber withdrew the razor and held it motionless in his hand. Rhett breathed easier and became eloquent on the subject of the experiment.

"Now, the next man you shave, Henry, don't say a word to him on the subject, but all at once, in the twinkling of an eye, put him out. And I believe you will become a greater man than the inventor of the guillotine."

"Well, Mr. Rhett, I believe you are right about it," and he began to close the razor.

The mania was wearing off, and in its stead there came a playful and mischievous humor.

Patting his customer under the chin, "Ah, Mr. Rhett," he said, "you would look so much better without your mustache. Now, don't you want me to take it off for you?"

Afraid to cross him in his humor, Rhrett replied, though it almost broke his heart to say it:

"Why, certainly, Henry, if you think it will look better."

On went the lather, and in another minute the beautiful silken strands were no more than the withered leaves of the forest.

"Now, Mr. Rhett, if you had your hair clipped you would look splendid. Don't you want me to take it off?"

"Of course, Henry, clip it," came from those anguished lips. He was willing to say or do anything to get that razor back into its case.

So the clippers were brought out and in less than two minutes he was slicker than a new born rat.

But if his head was light his heart was too, when he arose from the chair, and never in all his life did he feel so willing and happy to pay for a shave and hair cut.

Of course everybody laughed at him when he went out on the street, and the wind blew cold about his head. To his friends, when they gathered around him, he told his harrowing experience, and he was still as pale as a ghost.

A committee forthwith waited on the barber, but they did not find anything in his words or actions to denote insanity. So some believed the story and some didn't—and the barber kept on shaving.

But never again did he put his razor upon the face of John Rhett.—W. M. Hobby in Atlanta Constitution.

Well to Know.

Not all may know that a hot iron—poker, if nothing better—run around window glass will loosen the putty, when it may be easily scraped and the broken pane removed. The new pane may be inserted, putty neatly and carefully laid on, and the work is done. This may be convenient to know when one becomes the family "handy man," or one's own, as is sometimes the case.—Good Housekeeping.

HUMAN NATURE.

If life were not [illegible] a three,
Who then would think of being merry!
If God's will would hear [illegible],
His plans we should not try to vary!
Were we once free from pain and care,
We straight would seek some cross to bear!

If upon love's seal were set,
How many seals would then be broken!
If gentle speech were hard to get,
How many kind words would be spoken!
If heaven were once denied us all,
How we should then to heaven call!
—Mary A. Mason in Youth's Companion.

THE WISE MAN.

What is the good man and the wise?
Ofttimes a pearl which none doth prize;

Or jewel rare, which men account
A common pebble, and despise.

Set forth upon the world's broad mart,
It mildly glances, but no one buys;

Till it be anon heaven withdraws
From the world's undiscerning eyes;

And in its shell the pearl again,
And in its mine the jewel lies.
—Richard Chenevix Trench.

Hard work is not so apt to injure a horse as the failure to receive proper attention after the work.

POCAHONTAS TIMES.

Vol. 8. JOHN E. CAMPBELL, EDITOR AND PROPRIETOR. Huntersville, West Virginia, Thursday, May 7, 1891. Terms of Subscription. $1.00 PER YEAR. IN ADVANCE. No. 41.

Official Directory of Pocahontas County.

Judge of Circuit Court, A. N. Campbell.
Prosecuting Attorney, L. M. McClintic.
Sheriff, J. C. Arbogast.
Deputy Sheriff, Geo. W. Callison.
Cl'k Co. Court, S. L. Brown.
Cl'k Cir. Court, J. H. Patterson.
Assessor, C. O. Arbogast.
Com'rs Co. Ct. C. E. Beard, S. B. Hannah, G. M. Kee.
Co. Surveyor, Geo. Baxter

THE COURTS.

Circuit Court convenes on the first Monday in April, 3rd Monday in June and 3rd Monday in October.

County Court convenes on the 1st Tuesday in January, March, October and second Tuesday in July. July is levy term.

Going To Leave The Farm.

The work of he farm house was over for the day; the children—with the exception of the eldest son, who had gone to the village—were in bed and in the big comfortable kitchen Farmer Harewood, his wife, and his wife's sister, Mrs. Lucas, were sitting around a center table. The farmer was reading a paper, his wife was putting a patch on the knee of little Harry's diminutive knickerbockers, and Mrs. Lucas was crocheting a hood of blue and white zephyr for a small niece.

There was a silence in the kitchen save for the snapping of the fire in the stove, the ticking of the big, eight-day clock in the corner and the rustle of the farmer's newspaper, and when Mrs. Harewood sighed deeply, both her sister and husband looked up in surprise.

"What's the matter Sarah?" asked the latter. "That sigh was the loudest I ever heard you give. Has anything gone wrong? You look as though you had a big load on your mind."

"I have," answered the wife. "And it is a load which you must share, Eli; I have borne it alone as long as I can bear it. There is a great trouble in store for us, husband—George is going to leave the farm."

The newspaper fell to the floor, and for a moment the farmer looked at his wife, too much surprised to utter a word.

"Going to leave the farm!" he replied at last. "Sarah, you must be dreaming."

Mrs. Harewood shook her head sadly.

"I wish I were," she said "No, Eli, it is true. George has made up his mind to leave us. I have noticed for months past that he seemed dissatisfied and restless, and since you sold Vixen he has grumbled a great deal about the work and the dullness of his life. And to-day I heard him say to Jasper Flint that he would not be here a month from now; that he had enough of farm life and intended to leave, and if we refused our consent to it he would run away, and take his chances."

"We'll see about that," said the farmer angrily. "Consent to it! I rather think not! I won't consider it for a moment. What would he be worth a year from now if I let him go? He'd fall in with all sorts of rascals in the city, and get us all into trouble. Besides, I need him here. It'll be ten years at least before Harry can take his place, and he's got to stay if I have to tie him down."

"Why dont you make him want to stay, Eli?" asked the gentle voice of his sister in law.

"If he's got the city fever on him all the talking in the world wouldn't do any good," rejoined the farmer. He wouldn't listen to a word."

"Don't talk. Don't let him ever suspect that you are aware of his desire to leave you. Try a new plan, Eli, a plan I have been thinking of all day.

"The best plan I know of is to tell him my mind freely, without any beating about the bush; and the sooner its done the better."

"Now, Eli, don't be above taking a woman's advice. Let me tell you how to deal with George. I have been here three months now and have taken a deep interest in the boy. I have seen his dissatisfaction, and [illegible] the cause. I have overheard him talking to Jasper Flint more than once, and only yesterday I heard him say that if he went to the city what he earned would be his own, but that here he worked from dawn to dark and was no better off at the end of the year than at the beginning. He said that Tom Blythe, who is in a grocery store in the city gets $12 a week, and Tom is only seventeen. Now, if you want George to stay on the farm, give him an interest in it, Eli. He is eighteen years old, and has worked faithfully for you ever since he could talk plain. He has had his food and lodging, and two suits of clothes a year, to be shure, but all he actually owns is that collie dog which is always at his heels. You even sold the only horse you had fit for the saddle. And George was extraordinarily fond of Vixen."

"It seemed a pity to keep a horse that no one but George ever rode," said the farmer, "and she was too light for work. I'm a poor man, Hester, and can't afford playthings for my children."

"You can better afford to keep an extra horse than to have your son leave you, Eli. Whom could you get who would take the interest in the work that George has? You have thought it only right that George should do his share toward running the farm, and have considered your duty done in giving him a home. You are disposed to think him ungrateful because he wants to leave you now that every year makes his services more valuable. But the boy is ambitious, and is not satisfied to travel in a circle. He wants to make some headway. And it is only natural."

The farmer leaned his head on his hand, a look of deep thought on his grave, weather-beaten face. His gentle sister in law's plain speaking had given rise to thoughts which had never before entered his mind.

"I believe you're more than half right, Hester," he said at last. "I'll think it all over to-night, and make up my mind what to do. I'd be lost here without George, and he shan't leave the farm if I can help it."

"Force won't keep him, Eli, remember that," and Mrs. Lucas, feeling that she had said enough, folded up her work, and taking up a lamp from a shelf by the stove, went up stairs to her own room.

Just at daybreak she was aroused from a sound sleep by the sound of horses' hoofs in the yard, and looking out of the window she saw Eli trotting away on old Roan.

"Where can he be going at this hour?"

When she went down stairs at 6 o'clock George was standing by the kitchen table, having just come in with two full pails of milk. His face wore a discontented, unhappy look, and he merely nodded in return for his aunt's cherry "Good morning."

A few minutes later his father entered, but George, who had gone to one of the windows, and was looking out dejectedly, did not even glance up.

"You were out early, Eli," said Mrs. Lucas. "I heard you ride away at daybreak."

"Yes, I went to Pine Ridge on a matter of business."

"That's where you sold Vixen, papa, isn't it," asked little Harry, and Mrs. Lucas saw a queer pass over George's face as the child spoke.

"Yes, my boy, I sold Vixen to Lawyer [illegible]. George," turning to his son, "I've made up my mind to part with that fifty acre lot by the river. What do you think of that?"

"Of course you are to get a good price for it, sir," said the young man indifferently. "Its the best piece of land you have."

"But I have'nt sold it. I am going to give it away."

"Give it away!" repeated George, roused out of his indifference and staring at his father as if he thought he had not heard aright.

"Yes, deed it over, every inch of it to some one I think a great deal of, and who deserves it," laying his hand on his son's shoulder, and his voice breaking a little. "I am going to give it to my son, George Harewood, to have and to hold as he sees fit, without question or advice."

"To me! You intend to give that fifty acres to me, father?"

"Yes, my boy, and with my whole heart. You've been a good son, George, and I only wish I were able to do more for you. But I am not a rich man, as you know, and I have your mother and the three little ones to provide for, too. Still, I want you to have a start, and this fifty-acre lot will yield you a handsome profit. You can have three days a week to call your own, and that will give you a chance to work and if you choose to break that pair of young oxen I bought the other day from Bagley, you can have them for your trouble."

"This—this seems too much sir," stammered George. "I don't know how to thank you."

"Too much! Then I don't know what you'll say to this," and the farmer took his son by the arm and led him out on the porch. "There's another present for you my boy."

"Vixen!" The words came from George's lips with a long sigh of joy, and with one bound he was at the side of the black mare he had thought never to see again, and had both arms around her neck. "Oh, father, I'd rather have Vixen than anything else in this world!"

And he buried his face in the pretty creature's mane, and in spite of his eighteen years, fairly broke down and sobbed.

That ended George's desire to leave the farm. He was never again heard to mention the subject, and he grumbled no more about the hard work and the monotony of his life, but in every way tried to show his appreciation of his father's kindness.

In fact, Eli Harewood was wont to say occasionly in confidence to his wife, that he had reasons to bless his sister in-law for her good advice, and that he owed it to her that he had a stalwart arm to lean on in advancing years.

But George never knew to what he owed the change in his fortunes.

MIND READING IN CHICAGO.

F. Alexander Johnstone, the wonderful young mind-reader, gave an exhibition of his powers on an Indiana avenue horse car that resulted in the complete demoralization of a prominent South Side business man, and furnished infinite amusement to several of his friends. This business man is very fond of his wife, whom he affectionately calls Jennie, and is exceptionately proud of his three interesting children, the eldest of whom is an auburn haired miss of 15. When he seated himself beside Johnstone, facing his friends, he ventured a remark that led up to an animated conversation. Mind reading was finally broached, when Johnstone, concealing his identity, said he could duplicate the mind reader's work. The business man's [illegible], was [illegible] his [illegible].

"Take one of those letters [illegible] hold in your hand," said Johnstone, "and think intently of the signature." The man complied, and in an instant Johnstone repeated the name at the bottom of the epistle. The man looked a little surprised, but presently, glancing at the envelope, saw the signer's card on the upper left corner. "That's only a trick," he said, "now tell me the signature to this," holding out a dainty missive.

Johnstone took the man's wrist, closed his eyes, and after thinking a moment, asked if he really wanted the full signature mentioned. "Why, yes," said the man, doubtfully, and betoken by a certain apprehension.

"Your loving little sweetheart, Edith," Johnstone replied.

The business man looked at Johnstone in wild-eyed amazement, and then hastily left the car, followed by the uproarious laughter of his friends. "It's a good thing for Ned that Jennie isn't here," commented one of the friends.

[Po]cahontas Times.

JO[H]N E. CAMPBELL,
[ED]ITOR AND PROPRIETOR.

[Ent]ered at the Post-office at Hunters[ville], W. Va., as second class matter.

ADVERTISING RATES.

	1 m.	3 m.	6 m.	1 yr.
[In]ch	1 00	$2 00	$3 00	$5 00
[2] in.	2 00	4 00	6 00	10 00
[¼ c]olumn	3 00	6 00	10 00	17 00
[½ co]l'n	6 00	12 00	20 00	30 00
[1 co]l'n	10 00	20 00	30 00	50 00

[Rea]ding notices, not exceeding five [lines] twenty-five cents for each insertion, and five cents a line for each additional line.

[TE]RMS OF SUBSCRIPTION.

[One c]opy, 1 yr., $1.00 in advance; after [6 mon]ths, $1.25; after 12 months, $1.50. [The]se terms will be strictly complied [with].

Hunte[r]sville, W. Va

May 7, 1891.

[The] brass bands in the Italian army [are] to be abolished. It would perhaps be well to abolish that one [playe]d so disastrously by Premier [Ru]dini not long since.

The new republican cry "Tin, tin, [A]merican tin", probably refered to [the] "tin" that the protected manu[fa]ctures are expected to put up next [ye]ar.

Yes cheap sugar is good and de[si]rable to have it; but why isn't it [ju]st as good and desirable to have [ch]eap clothing, blankets and farm [im]plements?

Mr. Harrison may be having a [g]lorious good time on his royal [s]pecial train, but the indications [a]re that the other fellow will con[t]rol the nominating convention.

According to a census bulletin [t]he real estate mortgage debt of [c]itizens of Alabama was on Janua[r]y 1, 1890 $39,027,983; and at the same period the same class of debt in Iowa footed up $199,034,956.

Republican editors are not saying anything about the deficit in the Treasury now staring the country in the face. They have so often said that it could not come that they hate to acknowledge that it will soon be at hand.

France has been trying a high protective tariff, a la McKinley, and the result is, an uprising of the people, which threatens to become revolutionary unless the duties are lowered. The question is now under discussion in the French Parliament, and its decision will be watched with interest by the people on this side of the Atlantic.

Gen. B. F. Butler, who was recently ejected from a court room by order of Judge Carpenter of Rhode Island, who was temporary sitting in the U. S. Court at Boston, has requested that a contemplated indignation meeting of citizens at Faneuil Hall be not held, as it is his purpose to obtain redress in the Courts.

The hardest blow yet struck the much vaunted (by republicans) tin plate clause of the McKinley tariff act, which goes into effect July 1, ..., was given by Hon. David A. ..., Wells, who says that the Standard Oil Monopoly will thereby be benefitted to the extent of $1,[illegible] a year in draw backs, on the tin used in its export packages. Mr. Wells, who says that the notice was served on Mr. McKinley and his republican associates by the Standard oil people that unless their interests were taken care of by the insertion of a provision allowing a draw back on imported tin plate used in the exportation of domestic products they would defeat the bill. The provision was inserted, and under it this wealthy monopoly will get its tin plate for about [illegible] a box, while all ordinary consumers will have to pay about $6 a box.

Dr. Talmage has cut off his whiskers. It is now in order that the whiskers should be cut off some of his sermons sent out as new.

The groth of the democratic clubs of the country is phenomenal when one comes to consider the fact that the democrats have no favored class to draw upon for funds to be used in pushing their organization or adding to their membership, as their republican opponents have, in the protected manufacture. The democratic clubs have been up to this time entirely self supporting, a spontaneous uprising of the people, as it were. They are doing a great and good work for the party and all members so situated that they cannot take an active part in club work should aid them by becoming contributing members. Remember that Clarkson, Duly and company are "in the saddle" on the other side well supplied with audacity and "boodle."

WASHINGTON LETTER.

From our regular correspondent.

WASHINGTON, D. C., May 1st— Mr Blaine will, I am informed, shortly remove himself from the danger of being struck by Presidential lightning by writing a letter declining to allow his name to be considered in connection with the nomination next year, and announcing his fealty to Mr. Harrison and his desire to see him nominated, but there is another danger that he either lacks the courage or inclination to remove himself from, and which may prove as disastrous to him as the anchors he once cast to windward by the advice of "burn this letter" Fisher.

This danger arises from his desire to protect the financial interest of his friend Stephen B. Elkins, who is a leading member of the syndicate that now has the government sealing privilege in Behrng sea. But for this desire all the trouble might have been avoided for the coming season in Alaskan waters, as it is known that the British minister was ready to pledge his government to stop all British vessels from capturing seals for one year if Mr. Blaine would make the same pledge for American vessels. Last year, before Elkins became interested in the sealing industry, that was what Mr. Blaine was asking for, but now he doesn't wish to stop the sealing, because his friend hopes this season to take an enormous number—a courageous Treasury agent blocked the game last season by stopping the catch, but a more accomodating agent in the person of J. Stanley Brown, once the private secretary of President Garfield, and now the husband of Mollie Garfield, has been selected for duty with the sealers this season, and Mr. Elkins and his partners anticipate no trouble in taking all the seals they can catch, if Mr. Blaine can only maintain the status quo until the fall.

Secretary Foster appears to be getting what the boys call "rattled" over the condition of the Treasury, to quiet the alarm created by the announcement that he intended to extend the outstanding 4½ per cent bonds at 2 per cent instead of redeeming them when they mature September the first, next, he had his Director of the Mint furnish a statement to the press which made it appear that the enormous sum of $[illegible] was available to pay any debts or appropriations. This was so absurd that Mr. Foster had himself interviewed in order that he might say that he did not altogether endorse that statement. He then proceeds to figure out an available cash surplus of $[illegible] and to merely inform the country that he also considers the $[illegible] in gold which has always been regarded as a reserve held against the $[illegible] greenbacks in circulation, to be available cash and that he will not hesitate to use it if it comes to a pinch. Notwithstanding these statements the daily balance sheet of the Treasury for yesterday shows a surplus of less than $12,000,000.

The evident Harrison stampede which has set in among the big republicans is exciting the curiosity of political observers. Even Quay, Clarkson and Dudley have announced their allegiance to "Little Benny", and their determination to see him nominated. The only reason that I can see for it is that no other man wants the dubious honor of leading the republican forlorn hope next year.

Representative McMillin, of Tennessee, who is a candidate for speaker of the House, and several of his friends held a conference this week. Mr. McMillian, has been traveling in the Eastern States and the presumption is that he has been doing a little quiet missionary work for himself. He declines to talk about his prospects further than to say that he is in the fight until the Speaker is elected.

"Called Back" is now applicable to ex Senator Blair, who the Chinese Emperor declines to receive as U. S. Minister. Some other diplomatic position is to be found for Mr. Blair who has been ordered to report to the Department of State.

The joint committee of Senate and House that has been trying to locate the waste of money in the printing and distribution of public documents has adjourned until June. Its members have found out enough to make it certain that that from 15 to 25 per cent. of the money now paid out may easily be saved. The same thing could be done in every branch of Government if the attempt was made by men unhampered and in earnest.

The report of the investigation made into the antecedents of the Italians lynched at New Orleans by the U. S. District Attorney of that place has been received by the Attorney General and turned over to Mr. Blaine who will decide whether it shall be made public.

Pocahontas Times.

JOHN E. CAMPBELL,
EDITOR AND PROPRIETOR.

Entered at the Post-office at Huntersville, W. Va., as second class matter.

ADVERTISING RATES.

	1 m.	3 m.	6 m.	1 yr.
One inch	$1 00	$2 00	$3 00	$5 00
Three in.	3 00	4 00	6 00	10 00
Qr. column	3 00	6 00	10 00	17 00
Half col'n	6 00	12 00	20 00	30 00
One col'n	10 00	20 00	30 00	50 00

Reading notices, not exceeding five lines, twenty-five cents for each insertion, and five cents a line for each additional line.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION.

One copy, 1 yr., $1.00 in advance; after 6 months, $1.25; after 12 months, $1.50. These terms will be strictly complied with.

Huntersville, W. Va

May 7, 1891.

Brass bands in the Italian army are to be abolished. It would perhaps be well to abolish that one used so disastrously by Premier Rudini not long since.

The new republican cry "Tin, tin, American tin", probably refered to the "tin" that the protected manufactures are expected to put up next year.

Yes cheap sugar is good and desirable to have it; but why isn't it just as good and desirable to have cheap clothing, blankets and farm inpliments?

Mr. Harrison may be having a glorious good time on his royal special train, but the indications are that the other fellow will control the nominating convention.

According to a census bulletin the real estate mortgage debt of citizens of Alabama was on January 1, 1890 $39,027,983; and at the same period the same class of debt in Iowa footed up $199,034,956.

Republican editors are not saying anything about the deficit in the Treasury now staring the country in the face. They have so often said that it could not come that they hate to acknowledge that it will soon be at hand.

France has been trying a high protective tariff, a la McKinley, and the result is, an uprising of the people, which threatens to become revolutionary unless the duties are lowered. The question is now under discussion in the French Parliment, and its decision will be watched with interest by the people on this side of the Atlantic.

Gen. B. F. Butler, who was recently ejected from a court room by order of Judge Carpenter of Rhode Island, who was temporary sitting in the U. S. Court at Boston, has requested that a contemplated indignation meeting of citizens at Faneuel Hall be not held, as it is his purpose to obtain redress in the Courts.

The hardest blow yet struck the much vaunted (by republicans) tin plate clause of the McKinley tariff act, which goes into effect July 1, next, was given by Hon. David A. Wells, who says that the Standard Oil Monoply will thereby be benefited to the extent of $1,500,000 a year in draw backs, on the tin used in its export packages Mr. Wells, who says that the notice was served on Mr. McKinley and his republican associates by the Standard oil people that unless their interests were taken care of by the insertion of a provision allowing a draw back on imported tin plate used in the exportation of domestic products they would defeat the bill. The provision was inserted, and under it this wealthy monoply will get its tin plate for about $1.22 a box, while all ordinary consumers will have to pay about $6 a box.

Dr. Talmage has cut off his whiskers. It is now in order that the whiskers should be cut off some of his sermons sent out as new.

The groth of the democratic clubs of the country is phenomenal when one comes to consider the fact that the democrats have no favored class to draw upon for funds to be used in pushing their organization or adding to their membership, as their republican opponents have, in the protected manufacture. The democratic clubs have been up to this time entirely self supporting, a spontaneous uprising of the people, as it were. They are doing a great and good work for the party and all members so situated that they cannot take an active part in club work should aid them by becoming contributing members. Remember that Clarkson, Duly and company are "in the saddle" on the other side well supplied with audacity and "boodle."

WASHINGTON LETTER.

From our regular correspondent.

WASHINGTON, D. C., May 1st—Mr Blaine will, I am informed, shortly remove himself from the danger of being struck by Presidential lightning by writing a letter declining to allow his name to be considered in connection with the nomination next year, and announcing his fealty to Mr. Harrison and his desire to see him nominated, but there is another danger that he either lacks the courage or inclination to remove himself from, and which may prove as disastrous to him as the anchors he once cast to windward by the advice of "burn this letter" Fisher.

This danger arises from his desire to protect the financial interest of his friend Stephen B. Elkins, who is a leading member of the syndicate that now has the government sealing privilege in Behring sea. But for this desire all the trouble might have been avoided for the coming season in Alaskan waters, as it is known that the British minister was ready to pledge his government to stop all British vessels from capturing seals for one year if Mr. Blaine would make the same pledge for American vessels. Last year, before Elkins became interested in the sealing industry, that was what Mr. Blaine was asking for, but now he doesn't wish to stop the sealing, because his friend hopes this season to take an enormous number—a courageous Treasury agent blocked the game last season by stopping the catch, but a more accomodating agent in the person of J. Stanlep Brown, once the private secretary of President Garfield, and now the husband of Mollie Garfield, has been selected for duty with the sealers this season, and Mr. Elkins and his partners anticipate no trouble in taking all the seals they can catch, if Mr. Blaine can only maintain the status quo until the fall.

Secretary Foster appears to be getting what the boys call "rattled" over the condition of the Treasury. to quiet the alarm created by the announcement that he intended to extend the outstanding 4½ per cent bonds at 2 per cent instead of redeeming them when they mature September the first, next, he had his Director of the Mint furnish a statement to the press which made it appear that the enormous sum of $258,000,000 was available to pay any debts or appropriations. This was so absurd that Mr. Foster had himself interviewed in order that he might say that he did not altogether endorse that statement. He then proceeds to figure out an available cash surplus of $70,000,000 and to naively inform the country that he also considers the $100,000,000 in gold which has always been regarded as a reserve held against the $346,000,000 greenbacks in circulation, to be available cash and that he will not hesitate to use it if it comes to a pinch. Notwithstanding these statements the daily balance sheet of the Treasury for yesterday shows a surplus of less than $12,000,000.

The evident Harrison stampede which has set in among the big republicans is exciting the curiosity of political observers. Even Quay, Clarkson and Dudley have announced their allegiance to "Little Benny", and their determination to see him nominated. The only reason that I can see for it is that no other man wants the dubious honor of leading the republican forlorn hope next year.

Representative McMillin, of Tennessee, who is a candidate for speaker of the House, and several of his friends held a conference this week. Mr. McMillian, has been traveling in the Eastern States and the presumption is that he has been doing a little quiet missionary work for himself. He declines to talk about his prospects further than to say that he is in the fight until the Speaker is elected.

"Called Back" is now applicable to ex Senator Blair, who the Chinese Emperor declines to receive as U. S. Minister. Some other diplomatic position is to be found for Mr. Blair who has been ordered to report to the Department of State.

The joint committee of Senate and House that has been trying to locate the waste of money in the printing and distribution of public documents has adjourned until June. Its members have found out enough to make it certain that that from 15 to 25 per cent. of the money now paid out may easily be saved. The same thing could be done in every branch of Government if the attempt was made by men unhampered and in earnest.

The report of the investigation made into the antecedents of the Italians lynched at New Orleans by the U. S. District Attorney of that place has been received by the Attorney General and turned over to Mr. Blaine who will decide whether it shall be made public.

ANNOUNCEMENTS.

To the Voters of Pocahontas County.

At the solicitation of many friends in the County, I announce myself a candidate for re-election to the office of County Superintendent. If elected I will perform the duties of the office without fear or favor. Thanking You for past favors, I again solicit your support at the coming election, May 19th, 1891.

M. G. MATHEWS.

To the Voters of Pocahontas County.

I hereby announce myself a candidate for the office of Conty Superintendent. If elected, I will perform the duties of the office to the best of my ability, without partiality. Election, May 19th.

Respectfully,
J. M. BARNETT.

HOME NEWS

—Mr. Isaac McNeel, of Mill Point, was in town one day last week.

—A few cases before Justice Grose lately.

—The forest fires have all died out in this vicinity.

—Several wagons are out to the railroad this week.

—Preaching next Sunday at Bethel 10 a. m.; at Sunset 3 p. m.

—Rev. Jacob Cohn, of Baltimore, was in town this week.

—We have had a good run of job printing the past few weeks.

—We done a lot of printing for Mr. U. S. McNeel, who opened a store at Marlinton last week.

—Everybody subscribe for THE TIMES and get your county news.

—Read the advertisement of Mr. M. W. Beard's, found in another column.

—Mr. Levi Gay, of Marlinton, called to see us Tuesday.

—The contractors have come on to put the bridge on the abutments at this place.

—Mess. B. M. Yeager and Jacob Arbogast, of Traveler's Repose were in town today.

—Capt McCormick and Chas. E. Steinmeyer, Esq., were in town a few days last week and this.

—The big frosts we have had in the last week have killed most of the fruit.

—The thermometer hovered closely around freezing Tuesday and Wednesday of this week.

—Messrs. W. C. Hull and son J. F. and Patterson Poage, Geo. S. Taylor, A. C. Waddell and others of Edray were in the city last Saturday.

—License to marry were issued to Jas. [illegible] Philips and Miss Florida Sheets, and S. F. Hevener to Miss Maggie F. Wanless last week.

—E. A. Friel, Esq., who has been running a steam saw mill near Green Bank for two months past visited his home near this place this week.

—Work on THE TIMES' new printing office is going ahead. We want to have it ready to move in by the middle of June. When finished, for convenience and appearance it will be equaled by but few in the State.

Elk News.

As I notice nothing in your valuable paper from this section of the County, I deem it a pleasure to give you a few items that will likely be of interest to some of your readers.

Quite a number of cattle have been driven to the Elk pastures in the last two weeks.

C. W. Callison is moving his cherry lumber to the banks of the Greenbrier river preparatory to rafting to Ronceverte.

A very large eagle measuring 7½ feet from tip to tip was killed on Samuel Varner's place. He had a trap fastened to him.

It is high time the good people were organizing a Sunday school at this place. We have always had one heretofore and don't see why we need fail this year.

S. H.

Gillispie News.

Garden making is a thing of the past, and corn planting is in full blast.

The fruit was mostly killed by the big frosts last week, and the briers are all burned up by the forest fires, so that fruit of all kinds will be scarce here this year.

Last Thursday fire broke out from where C. W. Slaven was burning brush, and the flames swept through the fallen timber and tree tops to a lot of lumber belonging to Mess. F. B. Scott, of Beverly and R. B. Kerr, of this place, and burned two or three thousand dollars worth.

Married, Mr. Squire Hevener and Miss Maggie Wanless, on 29th April, by Rev. C. B. Collins, at the home of the bride's parents. Also Mr. Moses Phillips to Miss Florida Sheets, on April 30th, by same at the residence of the bride's parents.

Messrs. B. M. and H. A. Yeager have just completed the sale of the Seebert lands on the head waters of Greenbrier river, to Jno. T. McGraw for $16,000.

Mrs. Keller is seriously sick with pneumonia.

NOW AND THEN.

Hillsboro Happenings.

Mr. S. J. Payne, of Frankford, spent Sat. and Sun. in town.

Lovers Repose has gotten to be quite a fashionable Sunday evening summer resort. If any one wishes to find more pretty girls and handsome young men to the square foot than can be found anywhere else in the State let them go up there some balmy Sunday evening, between 4 and 6 o'clock.

Mr. C. L. Stalting, the Hillsboro brass band instructor left Monday morning for his home in Virginia. The band advanced rapidly under his instruction and can play better now than some bands with a long practice. Mr. S. also taught an excellent writing school while with us.

Mr. Wallace Moore of Kansas has been visiting his brother E. H. Moore, of this place the past week. He expects to spend some time in this county visiting relatives.

Rev. Absalom Sydenstricker, missionary to China left this week for the Lexington Presbytery.

The merchants are receiving their spring goods and are kept right busy.

The members of the Methodist church are preparing to build a new church this summer. Some of the members are in favor of a new site for it and some still wish it on the old site on the hill.

Mr Wm. Wysong lost a fine milch cow this week by getting her foundered.

Farmers are all through planting corn several days ago. We have a fine prospect for fruit if it doesn't freeze, and it feels very much like it to-night.

A number of people have been suffering from grip lately.

MAX.

No queerer convention has ever been held than that of the Republican League at Cincinnati; after deliberately insulting Mr. Harrison and yelling itself hoarse for Blaine it elected a man president, who had, in a long letter, read to the convention, sneered at Mr. Blaine and reciprocity and declared himself in favor of making the Force bill the issue next year. It was the advice of this same man—J. S. Clarkson—that led the republicans into water loo of last November; we are pleased that he was elected president of the league, and we hope that he will be allowed to run the republican end of the campaign next year.

It will not be Senator Mills this year, the governor of Texas having named Mr. Horace Chilton for the vacancy caused by the resignation of Senator Reagan, but it may be Speaker Mills next winter.

RAILROAD BUILDING.

Senator Camden Says the West Virginia and Pittsburg

Will be Built to Potts Creek Within a Year.

The following is from the Charleston Gazette of the 2nd inst:

"Ex U. S. Senator Camden was in the city yesterday in conference with Judges Snyder and Holt of the Supreme Court of the State, and the Messrs. Thayer and Savage of Charleston, and Judge Harmon and Mr. Paxton of Cincinnati and others, members of the Potts Creek Iron Ore Syndicate.

A Gazette reporter saw Senator Camden who talked freely of the consummation of the purchase of the iron ore district, and railroads to be built for its development. He spoke enthusiastically of the iron ore on Potts Creek and of its early development by railroads; that the present object is to complete the titles to the property and to commence the development of it at once; that the West Virginia and Pittsburg Railroad Company now has surveyors in the field locating the line from Gauly to a connection with the Chesapeake & Ohio road, and that the railroad would be built up Potts Creek and in operation within twelve to 15 months. The West Virginia and Pittsburg road will form a direct line from the iron ore regions of Virginia through the center of West Virginia to Pittsburg, and with its arrangements with the Chesapeake & Ohio road will make this iron ore development one of the largest and most productive in this section. The length of road in West Virginia, from Morgantown to the Virginia State line, will be about two hundred miles, passing through the largest undeveloped coal and timber region of the state.

There is to be expended in West Virginia about five million dollars, which has all been raised, and one hundred and thirty miles of the road constructed and in operation, the road now being completed to Braxton Court House and under contract to the Gauly river.

Transfers of Real Estate.

The following is a list of the transfers of real estate for the month of April:

A deed from Mary J. Seebert and others to H. M. Lockridge, for 324 acres of land on Douthard's creek.

From Geo. W. Shin and wife to Wm. A. Parsons, 270 acres of land.

From Mary M. Pullen and husband to Jno. F. Cutlip for land on Droop mt.

From J. C. Curtis to C. L. Curtis, for land on Back Allegheny mt.

From Sabina Kertner and husband to Peter Hill for land on west side of Droop mt.

From Alice McGlaughlin to Mary A. McClintic for land near Marlinton.

From H. A Yeager and wife to Samuel Cooper for house and lot in Green Bank.

From H. A. Yeager and wife to S. E. and P. L. Williams for land on west side of Alleghany mt.

From Sarah E. Johnson to F. J. Allen for land near Edray.

From Jas. W. Hughes and wife to Maggie L. Ervine for land on Buffalo mt.

From Wm. A. to Jas. H. Gum for lands on Back Allegheny mt.

From R. B. Kerr &c. to Wm. A. Philips &c. for land on Buffalo mt.

From Wm. [illegible] and wife to the heirs of Margaret [illegible] for lands on Droop mt.

From Cynthia E. Cardwell and husband to F. T. McClintic for lots in Hillsboro.

From Wm. A. [illegible] and wife to Allen Gillilan, for land on Elk

Lick run.

From Wm. C. McClure and wife to A. R. Smith for land on headwaters of Stamping creek.

From A. P. McGlaughlin and wife to Wallace H. McGlaughlin, for interest in 60 acres of land on Brown's creek.

From Thos Barrett and wife to W. H. McClintic, for land on Greenbrier river.

From T. W. Hogsett and others to Jno. T. McGraw for land on Alder Lick run.

From A. R. Smith and wife to Wm. C. McClune for land in Hillsboro.

From David Grogg and wife to Preston C. Ervine for interest in land on Dunkins run.

From Levi Waugh to trustees of M. E. Church South, for church lot near Mt. Pleasant school house.

From F. K. Moore to Jno. Driscol for lumber on 259 acres of land on Back Alleghany mt.

From W. H. Grose and wife to H. M. Lockridge for land adjoining Huntersville.

From Jno. B. McCutcheon and wife to David Smith for land on Thomas creek.

From M. M. Burkett and wife to Abraham Burkett for land on Buffalo mt.

From Wm. A. Philips and wife to John S. Griffin for land on Deer creek.

From Levi Wanless to John F. Wanless for interest in land on Thorney creek.

From Jane Ratcliff to Susan J. Loudermilk for land on Dry Fork of Swago creek.

From Geo. W. Beverage and wife to same for land on Spruce Flat.

From D. F. Wilfong and husband to Louisa C. Pullen for land on west side of Alleghany mt.

From Jno. W. Warwick, com'r of School lands to R. S. Turk for two tracts, aggregating 1156 acres on Thorney creek.

From M. Wallace to D. A. McNeel for lands on Swago creek.

From Wise Herold and wife to Andrew Herold for land eastern slope of Alleghany mt.

From Andrew Herold and wife to H. M. Lockridge for land on western slope of Alleghany mt.

From Andrew Herold and wife to H. M. Lockridge for land on western slope of Alleghany mt.

From F. K. Moore to Thomas J. Moore for land Back Alleghany mt.

From Chas. W. Beard and wife to Geo. R. Curry for land near Hillsboro.

A CARD.—The successful results of the treatment of horses by H. Williams is evidence that he understands his business.

Pocahontas Times.

JOHN E. CAMPBELL,
[illegible]TOR AND PROPRIETOR.

Entered at the Post-office at Huntersville, W. Va., as second class matter.

ADVERTISING RATES.

	1 m.	3 m.	6 m.	1 yr.
One inch	$1.00	$2 00	$3 00	$5 00
Three in.	2 00	4 00	6 00	10 00
Qr. column	3 00	6 00	10 00	17 00
Half col'n	6 00	12 00	20 00	30 00
One col'n	10 00	20 00	30 00	50 00

Reading notices, not exceeding five lines, twenty-five cents for each insertion, and five cents a line for each additional line.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION.

One copy, 1 yr., $1.00 in advance; after 6 months, $1.25; after 12 months, $1.50

These terms will be strictly complied with.

Huntersville, W. Va.

May 7, 1891.

VICTORS.

Not to the brave who [illegible] the battlefield
Alone the [illegible] of victory belong;
Nor only to the great of earth the song
Of praise and crown should the singer yield.
Greater the souls that, singly handed, wield
The battleaxe against the hosts of wrong.
Unknown, unnoted in life's [illegible] throng,
And only in God's day to stand revealed.
How many such, in [illegible], humble guise,
Beside us walk their brief appointed way
[illegible] enduring; [illegible] to shine
As fixed stars in Heaven's eternal skies!
For these, for this, I reverently lay
On their dear dust this little leaf of mine.
—Overland Monthly

THE CARLYON TRAGEDY.

Just the two men composed the family at Carlyon Hall, and a gay, wild life they led. Not that they were much together, or that good will inclined them to the same course. Truth to tell, there was little sympathetic feeling lost between the two Carlyons.

The elder man gave his select dinners and champagne suppers to his clique, while Ralph, his son, scoured the country for a score of miles about with choice spirits of his own.

The Hall itself was a patched up pile of ruinous masonry. The Carlyons for three generations back had proved a spendthrift race, and their once ample patrimony had dwindled down to a few barren acres, with a village of miserable houses, which yielded the sole income of the present proprietor. Still he could boast a long descent, and we all know how far an illustrious pedigree will go toward propping up a falling house.

This was the state of affairs when Mrs. Mondeville came down from town with a half dozen servants at her back, and pretty Bertha Mondeville, her very reluctant companion.

Bertha was the lady's youngest daughter, and, besides the generous portion of Mondeville property destined to fall to her share, had good prospects of an inheritance from a certain wizened, eccentric old woman who had stood godmother to her at her christening, eighteen years before.

With such expectations, and possessed of natural attractions which drew hosts of sighing lovers to her feet, it was certainly reprehensible in her to give preference to one far beneath her in the social scale. At least so reasoned her lady mother. But Bertha was wilful, and maternal restrictions went for naught. She had given her heart and promised her hand to Henry Bernard, the struggling artist, who as yet was quite unknown to both fame and fortune. He was sanguine, though, and Bertha no less so. She reposed the utmost confidence in his genius and ultimate success, and he toiled with renewed energy for the [illegible] wreath, knowing that her [illegible] was involved in the result of [illegible].

[illegible] Mrs. Mondeville interposed. [illegible] wrath fell harmlessly upon her [illegible] a perverse head, until angered [illegible], she had recourse to extreme measures to break off the proposed [illegible]. Henry Bernard was forbidden the house, and Bertha was placed under espionage for the time.

[illegible] Carlyons were distant relatives of the [illegible], and Mrs. Mondeville fixed upon the Hall as a secure and retired asylum for her wayward child. [illegible] had come [illegible] upon the track [illegible] [illegible].

[illegible] had been put in hurried order for the [illegible] of the ladies. The [illegible] [illegible]

[illegible]

[illegible] maid to the hospitable charge of the Carlyons.

It was not a pleasant duty for the latter to assume, and for a time they regretted the necessary suspension of their reckless pleasures. Not that either reformed, even temporarily, but the hall could no longer be thrown open to loose comrades and nightly orgies. They clung to their customary habits, but unused to the trouble of concealment, chafed against the bondage which common courtesy imposed upon them.

This state of things did not continue long, however. Bertha's cheery young presence brought a flood of sunshine into the dreary old house, such as it had not known for years. The grim, dark rooms held attractions for their inmates which they had not hitherto possessed.

Certainly, in removing her daughter from the influence of one lover, Mrs. Mondeville had not meant to subject her to the importunities of two. Carlyon, drawn perhaps by visions of the ample dowry destined for, and Ralph—blasé as he was—actually touched with an approximation to noble sentiment, were both soon numbered among her devotees.

Bertha's position was becoming extremely unpleasant. A note smuggled out despite the watchfulness of the maid brought no response from Henry Bernard. Her mother remained unmoved by her urgent entreaties for a speedy return, and meantime the two Carlyons urged their individual suits with persistent ardor.

Ralph, impulsive and passionate, could wait to take no politic moves in prosecuting his wooing. His very earnestness would have pleaded powerfully for him had not the girl's heart and mind been filled with other love and other thoughts. He came in upon her suddenly one afternoon when he knew her to be alone.

"It's the old, old story, Bertha, that I want to tell you," he said. "I suppose I am not worthy of you, for I've been a wild blade in my time, but I will make myself better when you give me the [illegible] I am waiting for. Bertha, love, come to me."

His dark face, handsome despite the lines dissipation had left upon it, grew tender. His eyes looked down in hers with eager, hope-flushed light. Bertha's heart throbbed pityingly as she realized the pain her words must inflict upon him.

"Oh, Ralph, I had hoped you might not subject me to this test! It would be cruel to give you false hope, for I can never be more than your earnest friend. Forget that you have ever cared for me and bestow your love on some one who will make you happier than I ever could."

"Bertha! Bertha! You can't mean to leave me in utter despair? I will wait and work, and prove myself a better man than I have yet been. Only tell me that there is a chance of winning you at last!"

"It never can be, Ralph! Because—because I love another."

The still, white rage which settled down upon his face frightened her more than if he had broken out in angry words.

"I shall not give you up, nevertheless," he said, with quiet intensity. "Give me a little hope and an equal chance, and I will try for your love by fair means; but by measures foul or fair, no other man shall ever ever take you from me!"

With that he returned, leaving her abruptly as he had come, and his quick steps gave back a sharp ring from the [illegible] walk without. At a little distance he encountered the elder Carlyon, who accosted him, timing his leisurely pace to the other's hasty strides.

"[illegible], my son! I have some information which it may be best to impart at once. I happened to overhear your conversation of a moment ago—by the way, you should never make love near open windows—and am gratified to know that Bertha holds such an important place in your estimation."

"Ah!" Ralph waited, knowing that something more lay behind that suave address.

"Yes, but I must warn you against your own impetuous nature, which may lead you to extremes. As she said, it is quite impossible for her to regard your suit with favor."

"May I ask why?"

"Simply because I intend to marry her myself!"

"By heavens, you shall not!"

The elder Carlyon drooped his eyelids a trick of his when angered.

[illegible]

A week wore heavily away. [illegible] Ralph [illegible]

[illegible]

cruel forces he brought to bear upon her.

At last he gained his purpose. How he accomplished it himself and the maid best knew. But the clergyman was waiting at the church, and Bertha, worn to a shadow of her former cheery self, with her face scarce less white than the bridal robes she wore, went tremblingly down the worm-eaten stairs to go and be wedded to the man she both hated and feared. Carlyon met her with a triumphant smile upon his face, but the words of [illegible] he was about to offer never left his lips.

A man, with haggard face, bloodless lips drawn away from his glittering teeth, and dishevelled hair streaming about his neck, rushed up the length of the passage and grappled with him. It was Ralph, who had been confined all this time in one of the vault-like cellars beneath the old hall, and had escaped now to wreak insane fury upon his jealous jailer. There was an inherent madness in the Carlyon blood, and those weeks of solitude and mental torture had brought the curse upon the younger man.

A struggle ensued that was fearful to witness. Bertha crouched upon the stairs, with rigid, blanched face, and eyes never wavering from the horrible spectacle. Servants ran screaming, all was chaos for a moment, and then awful quietude fell upon the hall.

There was a crushed, bleeding, senseless mass upon the floor; and the madman, his rage appeased, unresistingly submitted to the bonds which were placed upon him. The elder Carlyon went to answer for his sins before an eternal tribunal; his son drags out a living death in a lunatic asylum.

But Bertha, sorely tried, found peace at last. Shocked beyond measure by the frightful tragedy which had been enacted, and appalled by the peril her daughter had passed, Mrs. Mondeville recalled Henry Bernard from the fruitless quest he was pursuing. It is needless to say that Bertha's letter never reached him, and that Mrs. Mondeville had sent him as far as possible from the actual track. But the young people could freely forgive all past [illegible] in the happiness which was theirs at last.—New York World.

SUBSCRIBE

FOR THE
POCAHONTAS TIMES,

Every man in the County should take it, and patronize home industry. It sustains your rights, and works for the advancement of your county, which no city paper will do. It gives you the news from all parts of the county, which you could not get otherwise. It furnishes matters of interest to the Merchant, Farmer and Mechanic. It keeps you posted and gives you information on all general news, and its sections and Miscellany are fit for all ages.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION.

One year in advance $1.20
If not paid within 6 months 1.25
And at the end of the year [illegible]

AND IF YOU NEED

Letter Heads, Note Heads, Bill Heads, Envelopes, Drug Envelopes, Tags, Business Cards, Official Blanks, Blank Bonds, Posters, Briefs for the Court of Appeals etc

GET THEM AT "THE TIMES"

JOB OFFICE.

POCAHONTAS TIMES.

Vol. 8. JOHN E. CAMPBELL, EDITOR AND PROPRIETOR. Huntersville, West Virginia, Thursday, July 9, 1891. Terms of Subscription, $1.00 PER YEAR, IN ADVANCE. No. 50

Official Directory of Pocahontas County

Judge of Circuit Court, A. N. Campbell.
Prosecuting Attorney, L. M. McClintic.
Sheriff, J. C. Arbogast.
Deputy Sheriff, Geo. W. Callison.
Cl'k Co. Court, S. L. Brown.
Cl'k Cir. Court, J. H. Patterson.
Assessor, C. O. Arbogast.
Com'rs Co. Ct. { C E. Beard. S B. Hannah. G. M. Kee.
Co. Surveyor, Geo. Baxter

THE COURTS.

Circuit Court convenes on the first Tuesday in April, 3rd Tuesday in June and 3rd Tuesday in October.

County Court convenes on the 1st Tuesday in January, March, October and second Tuesday in July. July is levy term.

MISS PARKER GREY.

BY NANNIE S. BARKER.

Jack Melton was Lady Crofton's only brother, and her great wish was to see him happily married, but to a wife who should keep up the Melton establishments in their former splendor. Lord Melton was not wealthy; but his title dated from the Norman Conquest, spread for him by maneuvering mammas.

But for the past eight years he had been attentive, in a lazy, half-indifferent way, to a certain Mrs. Mortimer, one of the beauties. It was to the influence of this bewitching young widow that Lady Crofton attributed her brother's continued state of single-blessedness, and she disliked her accordingly.

Six months before the opening of this story, Lady Crofton and her husband had traveled in California for the benefit of the latter's health, and had there become acquainted with Parker Grey, a Western heiress. Miss Grey lived with her brother, and was chaperoned by a Mrs. Braxton, an English widow, who had formaly been her governess, and to whom she owed her English accent and modulated voice. But in every other respect she was thoroughly American.

Lady Croften became very fond of the girl, and on hearing that she and a party of friends were to sail in April, to travel through Europe for a year, she invited her to come a month sooner, spend May at Crofton, and then join her friends on their arrival in London.

At first, Lady Crofton feared that her potegee had not made a favorable impression upon her fatidious brother. In fact he told her very frankly that he considered her friend the most free and easy young person he had ever had the pleasure of meeting.

"I don't think her conversation style is what one would term elegant. As a sample, I was quoting a French proverb this morning, and she politely asked me to 'come off of that, and talk United States.' Now she may be very beautiful; I don't deny it; but she isn't exactly the style I admire."

"How easily taken in you are, Jack!" laughed his sister. "Parker told me about that, and said she only did it to horrify you. I'll tell her she succeeded. She uses all that dreadful slang for your especial benefit; and as for French, she speakes it as well as you do."

In spite of Miss Grey's collection of slang and typical American manners, Lord Melton became aware that he liked the "wild Indian" more and more every day, until he confessed to himself that she was "exactly the style he admired." there being no other guests at Crofton during Miss Grey's visit, she and Lord Melton naturally saw a great deal of each other's society. Each being a very attractive young person, it was not surprising that the outcome of numerous tete-a-tete walks and rides, and duets in the softly lighted drawing-room after dinner, should be an exceedingly warm friendship, which promised to develope into something more.

So the last two weeks of October drifted happily and swiftly by, and then the climax was reached.

Miss Grey's departure was drawing near, and that gay and laughter loving young lady became [illegible] almost silent, and even pensive. Lord Melton, wise in his generation, smiled quietly to himself at these outward and visible signs of that disturbing malady—love.

One afternoon about dusk, when the only light in the drawing-room was from the open fire, Miss Grey entered, and, sitting at the piano, let her fingers wonder idly over the keys. Evidently she was in a melancholy frame of mind, for she began to sing softly and plaintively:

"I know not why I love thee, thou dost not care for me,
And yet my heart will wander, forever back to the,
For—"

Here the song came to an abrupt end, for an arm encircled Miss Grey's slender waist, and a low voice said passonately:

"But I do love you, my darling. Surely you know it. Will you make me happy, sweetheart? Be my wife."

With a quick exclamation, Miss Grey attempted to rise and to remove the detaining arm, but Lord Melton clasped her trembling hand in his and held it captive. She sank back opon the music-stool, and with averted face, remained silent.

"Tell me, my darling, that you love me," pleaded the voice which had become as music to her ears. But she made no reply. As he waited for her to speak, he could hear distinctly the beating of her heart.

"Answer me," he said at last rather sternly. "My love deserves at least an answer, and this coquetry is unworthy of you, Parker!"

Then slowly she turned her downcast, blushing face, until the fire light shone full upon it, and raising reproachful, loving eyes to his, let him read in them the secret which her lips refused to confess.

But there was one power which had not been consulted in this alliance of England and America, and that power was Mrs. Horatio Mortimer. If men would only realize the wisdom of "being off with the old love before they are on with the new," how many complications might be avoided.

When this lady heard of Lord Melton's engagement to the American heiress, she spent several unhappy days, and then becoming calm, but with a dangerous light in her blue eyes, read over some of his Lordship's recent letters to herself. Lord Melton never wrote on both sides of the paper, and selecting the first page of a certain letter, she carefully cut it in two pieces. The first half read as follows:

CROFTON, Oct. 1st, 1886.

"DEAREST EDNA: Just a few lines to tell you of the arrival of Harriet's protegee, the heiress, whose American gold, metaphorically speaking, is to regild my tarnished fortune. The whole affair is cut and dried. I am to have no rivals while she stays at Crofton, so Harriet, with wisdom which would do the serpent credit, has invited no other guests. She says it will be my own fault if I do not succeed, for she is quite sure Miss Grey will be only too glad to marry an English nobleman. Charming programme, is it not?"

The second half quite altered the meaning of the first.

"And yet I have flatly and positively refused to follow it. Harriet, however, being generously endowed with that most estimable of qualities, perseverance, hopes that by throwing me daily within range of Miss Grey's manifold charms, that young lady may finally bring me down. She is really very handsome, but were she Venus herself I would not marry her for money. As long [illegible] to see you again, so expect me to drop in any day next week.

"As ever, as I am going to ride with the American.

Your [illegible], JACK."

"I think this will answer very nicely," said Mrs. Mortimer to herself, and putting the second half, away among the papers in her desk, inclosed the first in a fresh envelope and addressed it to her successful but unconscious rival.

To a causal observer Miss Grey appeared to be a dejected heap of silk and lace, as she sat curled up in an arm chair before the open fire of her boudoir, Lord Melton had been obliged to run up to London on business, to be gone several days, and his fiancee found that time hung very heavily on her hands. Leaning back with half closed eyes, she thought of her absent lover.

Her revele was soon interupted by a knock at the door, and a maid entering handed her two letters—one from Lord Melton and the other, addressed in a woman's hand right, she did not recognize. On the principle of keeping the best to the last, she opened the note of her feminine correspondent.

"'Dearest Edna'—and no signature! There must be some mistake." And then she recognized Lord Melton's handwriting. Carefully comparing the letter with the address on the envelope she had just received from him, Parker Grey knew the same hand had written both. Then it flashed upon her that some woman whom she did not know had purposely sent her one of Lord Melton's letters to read. She felt the safest and wisest thing for her to do would be to return it to him unread.

"But have I not the right?" she argued. "Perhaps it is something I ought to know."

He who hesitates is lost, and so Miss Grey with beating heart. read the severed letter.

When she had finished it she buried her face in the cushioned back of the chair and broke into a passion of sobs. After while she became calmer, and tried to realize the blow she had received.

She could not doubt that the man she had loved and respected had written the heartless, mercenary letter she had just read. There was no possible room for doubt. Nothing Lord Melton could say would alter the fact that he himself had confessed to this woman "Edna" his intention of marrying her for her money. Each phrase of his letter seemed burned into her brain. She particularly resented his saying: "She will be only too glad to marry an English nobleman."

"Does he imagine that I, like himself, am feigning love, but in reality buying his title? Thank Heaven that I have found this out in time to prove that if he does not respect me, I respect myself."

She bathed her eyes in rose-water until all traces of tears had been removed. Ringing for her maid, she ordered her to pack at once. Then going to Lady Crofton's room, she tapped lightly at the door.

"Come in!" cried her ladyship.

"I have come to tell you," said Parker, entering, "that I have just received letters which oblige me to meet my friends in London tonight. I am very sorry to leave so abruptly, and want to thank you for all your kindness; and you have been kind to me, very kind, in many ways."

"Just when you [illegible] to come back [illegible] Lady Crofton, in great surprise. "[illegible], what in the world will Jack say?"

"[illegible] quite impossible for me to [illegible], but I shall write to your brother at once and he will understand perfectly."

"But, my my dear child, you look positively ill!" you look as pale as a ghost!"

"I have a bad headache—that is all. I think I will go now and write to Lord Melton. If it is quite convenient, I will leave to night by the seven o'clock train."

Parker Grey had intended to frankly tell Lady Crofton the reason of her hurried departure, but when the time came, felt unequal to the scene she knew it would create, no decided to let Lord Melton be the one to enlighten his sister on the subject.

Seating herself at the desk, she quickly dashed off the following note to him:

"I write to break our engagement, and to request, if a meeting is unavoidable, that we meet as strangers. Do not attempt to see me, to offer any explanation; and if you write to me, I shall return your letters unopened. The note I inclose makes further comment from unnecessary.

"PARKER GREY."

Putting this and Mrs. Mortimer's note in the same envelope, she addressed it to Lord Melton at his London club. Calling a footman, she told him to take it to the station and mail it at once. But Lord Melton, wishing to give his ladylove a pleasant surprise, had telegraphed that morning to James to meet him with the dog cart at 6 o'clock, but to say nothing about it to any of the family. So it came to pass that Miss Grey's note did not reach Lord Melton at his club, but was handed him that evening on his arrival at the station.

Opening it at once, he read the two notes, and with a muttered impreccation he sprang into the dog cart, and seizing the reins, put the handsome roan he drove to his fastest pace.

While Lord Melton was being whirled home, Miss Grey unconcious of his approach, was waiting in the dressing room, reay ddressed for her journey.

She was alone, her hostess having just left the room to write her a list of addresses which would be of use in her London shopping.

Hearing the sound of wheels, she supposed the carriage had come to take her to the station. As she went toward the door leading into the hall, it was suddenly opened from the outside, and Lord Melton entered, looking pale and haggard. Before she had time to speak, he took her hands in his and began hurredly.

"Parker—my darling—you do not, you cannot, believe that letter was written seriously? The part that woman cut off completely altered the meaning. I would never marry for anything but love, and heaven knows I love you my darling! Surely you must know it. Do not let a jealous, unprincipal woman ruin our lives! Can you not trust me, Parker! Will you not believe me?"

"No!" said Miss Grey coldly wrenching her hands free, "although you act your part most excellently."

At first, when Lord Melton entered so unexpectedly, she was taken off her guard, but as he went on speaking, she regained her self-possession.

"I had hoped she continued, "that I should have been spared your explanations of what is unexplainable. I condemn you from your own words written not a month ago. Of course I knew you would explain them away; for although it is a custom here for English noblemen to marry American girls for their money, surely it is a transaction which [illegible]

(Continued on 4th page.)

Pocahontas Times.

JOHN E. CAMPBELL,
EDITOR AND PROPRIETOR.

Entered at the Post-office at Huntersville, W. Va., as second class matter.

ADVERTISING RATES.

	1 m.	3 m.	6 m.	1 yr.
One inch	$ 1 00	$ 2 00	$ 3 00	$ 5 00
Three in.	2 00	4 00	6 00	10 00
Qr. column	3 00	6 00	10 00	17 00
Half col'n	6 00	12 00	20 00	30 00
One col'n	10 00	20 00	30 00	50 00

Reading notices, not exceeding five lines, twenty-five cents for each insertion, and five cents a line for each additional line.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION.

One copy, 1 yr., $1.00 in advance; after 6 months, $1.25; after 12 months, $1.50

These terms will be strictly complied with.

Huntersville, W. Va.
July 9, 1891.

Travelers Repose Items.

Not seeing any news from this part of the county for some time, I will endeavor to give you a few items.

We are having very warm weather.

Crops are looking well in this section.

Mr. S. M. Yeager ret urned home from Grafton Sunday, accompained by Messrs. Jno. T. McGraw of Grafton and T. S. Riley of Wheeling.

Messrs. J. L. Arboghast and W. J. Yeager of this place returned from Highland Co., Monday.

Misses Daisy and Gertie Yeager attended the picnic on the river five miles below Dunmore on the 4th. They report a very enjoyable time. Also Mr. Guy Burner attended the picnic at Dunmore.

Several persons of this place spent the fourth at Cheat Bridge.

PEAK SISTER.

Dunmore Doings.

The 4th of July came and lots of people to the picnic, and everything thing went off quietly except a few fights. Fortunately no one was hurt.

A party from this place went fishing to the river the 4th inst., and had quite a nice time, catching fine bass.

Mrs. S. G Ligon of Clover Lick and Mrs. C. P. Dorr, of Addison are visiting at this place.

Messrs. J. J. Coyner and Jacob Hill, of Basic City are out on a visit.

Mr. H. M. Moore is off on a business trip to Highland Co.

Jacob K. Taylor is off for Staunton Va.

Revs. J. A. Taylor and W. H. Ballengee are at Staunton this week getting a few points from Sam Jones.

Auctioneer Swecker will blow his horn at Edray the 17th and 18th.

Our new mail carriers are making good time.

TOM SAWYER.

BRIDGE LETTING.

S. L. Brown is ordered by the County Court to receive bids on the painting of the bridge and handrailing thereto. It is to be painted a solid white, with oil and white lead, and to be completed by Nov 1st, 1891. Bids will be opened and contract awarded at the Levy term. Court commencing the 2nd Tuesday in July. The Court reserves the right to reject any and all bids.

HILLSBORO Male & Female ACADEMY.

THE Seventh Session of this School will open September 7, 1891, and continue 10 months.

Special Advantages Offered.

1. A healthy location in a moral town.

2. Thorough course in the languages, Sciences and Mathematics for young men and women, preparing to enter College. Students advanced within two years of graduation at any first class Colledge.

3. Thorough instructions in music.

4. Two well organized Literary Societies.

5. Course of studies as follows:

1st and 2nd Grades,—Same as that adopted in the Public Schools of W. Va.

3rd Grade,—Orthography by dictien, Elementary Algebra, Higher Arithmetic, Rhetoric, Universal History, Philosophy, Physical Geography and Latin begun.

4th Grade,—English (Rhetoric and Eng. Literature) French, German, Latin, Greek and Higher Mathematics.

6. Terms very moderate.

Tuition in 1st Grade per mo. $1.75.
" " 2nd " " " 2.25.
" " 3rd " " " 2.75.
" " 4th " " " 3.25.
Music with use of Instruments 3.50
Contingent fee, 25 cts.
Good board from $7.00 to $10.00.

7. Medals awarded for excellence in Scholarship, Music, Elocution, and Debate.

8. Tuition reduced one half for ministerial students, and for sons and daughters of Ministers.

9. Select course for young men and women preparing to teach.

C. A. BROWN, A. B. Principal,
Assisted by able Instructors.
MISS GRACE L. CLARK of L. F. I, in charge of Music.

ORDER OF PUBLICATION.

State of West Va. County of Pocahontas, to-wit:

At rules held in the Clerk's office of the Circuit Court of Pocahontas County on the first Monday in July, 1891.

Edwin T. Dudley, Rodney H. Dudley, Alexander P. Dudley, Earnest M. Dudley, Geo. W. McDonnald, Aurelius Gilkeson, Andrew G. Crawford and Wm. A. Crawford.

against

Felix H. Hull, L. H. Huff and Lillie E. Huff, his wife, Edgar P. Hull, R. S. Turk, Adm'r of Elizabeth M. Turk, dec'd, J. C. Arbogast, Sheriff of Pocahontas County, and as such Adm'r de bonis non of F. H. Hull, dec'd, Benjamin F. Jackson, Levi Gay, late Sheriff of Pocahontas County, and as such Adm'r of Andrew G. Mathews, dec'd, Wm. H. McClintic and Mary Ann his wife, John W. Warwick, Jesse F. Bright, Adm'r of Kyle Bright dec'd James W. Johnston, Sheriff of Greenbrier County and as such Adm'r de bonis non of Joseph McClung, dec'd S. W. N. Feamster and Annie E. his wife, Warwick W. McClung, E. G. Brownlee and Mary E. his wife, Sherman H. Clark, L. H. Stephenson, Wm. Skeen, D. C. McClung, Adm'r of James M Seig dec'd, Samuel A. Wilson, John C. Price, Wm. Gibson and James H. Renick.

IN CHANCERY.

The object of this suit is to convene the creditors of Felix H. Hull, dec'd subrogate the plaintiffs and other purchasers of the land in the case of Hull's Adm'r and widow vs. Hull's Heirs and others in the Circuit Court to the rights of said creditors, and enforce the payment of said debts by sale of the lands of said Felix H. Hull, dec'd, and it appearing by affidavit filed that the defenants Felix H. Hull, L. H. Huff and Lillie E. Huff, his wife, Edgar P. Hull, L. H. Stephenson Wm. Skeen, Samuel A. Wilson, E. G. Brownlee and Mary E. his wife are non-residents of this State, it is ordered that they do appear here within one month after the date of first publication of this order and do what is necessary to protect their interest in this suit.

Teste:
J. H. PATTERSON, Cl'k.

Robert L. Parish, John W. Stephenson, } pq.
July 9-4t. Printer's fee $14.98.

ORDER OF PUBLICATION.

State of West Virginia, County of Pocahontas, to wit:

At rules held in the Clere's office of the Circuit Court of Pocahontas county on thefirst Monday of July 1891.

Wm. M. McAllister
vs.
Sam'l C. Tardy Sr. and Sam'l C. Tardy Jr.

The object of this suit is to inforce the payment of the proportion of certain judgment due by said defendants, recovered by Frank Barrett against the plaintiff and defendants, the said judgment now being the property of said plaintiff; and in satisfaction of the same to sell the interest of the defendants in 2197 acres of land lying in the "Old field fork" of Elk river in Pocahontas county, west virginia, and it appearing by affidavit filed, that the defendant Samuel C. Tardy, Sr. and Samuel C. Tardy Jr., are non-residents of this State, it is ordered that they do appear here within one month after the date of the first publication of this order and do what is necessary to protect their interest in this suit.

Teste:
J. H. PATTERSON, Cl'k.

Charles P. Jones, pq.
July 9-4t. Printer's fee $8.94

HOME NEWS

—Mr. Henry Yeager, of Marlinton, was in town Tuesday.

—Rev. I. W. Michael has moved in the Skiles house at Marlinton.

—Mr. H. M. Lockridge, of Buena Vista, Va., is in town.

—B. M. Yeager, of Traveler's Repose was in town Tuesday evening.

—Several drummers have been here lately.

—Mr. J. H. Patterson, Cl'k Cr. Ct., has returned from visiting his home at Green Bank.

—The Pocahontas County Farmers Alliance, will meet at this place, next Friday, the 10th inst.

—Capt. C. B. Swecker and Maj. J. C. Arbogast, were in town last week.

—Capt. J. W. Marshall and Mr. Sam Holt, of Mingo Flats, were in town the first of this week.

—Mr. A. M. McGlaughlin, of Marlinton, was in Huntersville Tuesday.

—Levy term of the County Court convenes next Tuesday.

—We want everybody who comes to Court next Tuesday to call and see us.

—Wm. H Grose, Esq., took a business trip to the "booming" towns of Va.; last week.

—Geo. Foutz, Esq., of Buena Vista, Va., and Dr. Lockridge of Knapp's creek, called to see us to day.

—We notice from the Buena Vista Advocate that Miss Minnia Patterson, of Green Bank, is visiting her aunt, Mrs. J. W. Warwick, at that place.

—Rev. J. A. Lautenschlager will preach in the Presbyterian church in Huntersville, the 4th Sunday of this month at 10:30 o'clock.

—Josiual Taylor, an old colored lunatic of near Academy, was brought to this place last Monday and confined in the County jail to await removal to the asylum.

—Mr. J. W. D. McCarty, and Jesse Curry, Esq., of Academy, was in the city over night Tuesday. Jesse was on his way to Green Bank, with a load of corn, which, he informed us, would bring him $1.25 a bushel.

—Messrs. Albert and Gilbert Sharp and Geo. Buzzard, who have just completed our handsome new printing office, started to Elk to build Mrs. Susan E. McGlaughlin a dwelling house.

—Wheat harvesting is progressing rapidly, and we are informed that there will be an average crop, notwithstanding the late frosts in May.

—Mess. Jno T. McGraw, of Grafton, and T. S. Riley, Chairman of the Democratic Executive Committee, of Wheeling, were in our city Tuesday.

—On account of the plastering of the lower part of our office last week we were unable to run our presses, consequently were unable to get out any paper.

—The picnic at Mt. Grove the 4th inst. passed off, we understand, with an exception of one little fight, which nobody knew anything about except the participants, very quietly.

—Mr. Henry McGlaughlin, of Marlinton, who has been at Hampden Sydney college, for the past two sessions, has returned home for the summer. He will go back next session. Mr. McGlaughlin's high standing in his class speaks well for his intelligence and ambition.

—Enos Sharp, ex-convict and who now stands indicted in several cases for illicit retailing of liquor, was lodged in jail at this place last week on an indictment for forgery, committed before he was sentenced to the penitentiary for horse stealing, several years ago.

—It is announced that General Jubal A. Early will be the orator at the unveiling of the Jackson monument at Lexington, July 21. His subject will be the military achievements and character of General Jackson.

—Died, on the 5th inst., Miss Fannie Hogsett, of consumption, at the home of her parents Mr. W. T. Hogsett's on Brown's creek, aged about 40 years. She was burried near Huntersville the following evening. The sorrowing parents have the sympathy of the entire community in their sad bereavement.

—Mr. John. A. McNeel, formerly of Pocahontas county, but now of Lexington, Va., arrived in Union last Tuesday. We learn Mr. McNeel anticipates purchasing a farm and locating in Monroe county.—Monroe Watchman.

—Mr. O. K. Lapham, of Staunton recently purchased 7,000 acres of timber land in Pocahontas county, W. Va. The deal was made principally for the bark on the timber, but the land is worth the money when the bark has been peeled. We have no doubt, coal and iron will also be found on the tract.—Valley Virginian.

—Died at her residence on the 6th inst., 12 m. Mrs. Naomi Dilley, aged 72 years and 23 days. She had been a consistent member of the Methodist Church for 54 years. Her illness was brief, but bourn with great patience and christian fortitude and her last moments were calm and peaceful.

—We received a communication from Dr. Jno. Ligon, of Clover Lick last week, which we got misplaced in some way. It was in answer to a communication, which appeared in THE TIMES a few weeks ago from Edray, in regard to the question of building a bridge near Clover Lick. Dr. Ligon thinks a bridge should not be built until the route of the W. Va. Central railroad is definitly determined, as no doubt it will be in the near future, and then, probably a more convenient place would appear. We think the argument of Dr. Ligon is very logical.

—The Staunton correspondent of the Valley Virginian says: The sermons of Sam Jones on Sunday and Monday were the topics of discussion throughout Staunton, on Monday, From the expressions we heard we conclude that Mr. Jones has stirred up a hornet's next and and was provoking the evil in men to find utterance at the mouth. Several very angry controversies, between parties who heard some of his sermons were had on the streets and anything but a christian spirit manifested—Mr. Jones, himself, set the example, as he pitched into anybody and everybody, and denounced indiscriminately, respecting neither persons nor community. We are afraid he has encountered a people who are incorrigible from his standpoint.

Preaching Notice.

Sacramental meeting at Huntersville, second Sabbath of July (12). Preparatory services Friday and Saturday evenings. The assistance of Rev. B. A. Pendleton, is promised.

Providence permitting there will be an all-day meeting at McGlaughlin Church, 1st Sabbath of August, to be conducted by W. T. Price, and perhaps others.

Preaching Saturday afternoon before at 3.30.

DEATH

COMES IN A HORRIBLE FORM

To The Passengers on a Crowded Excursion Train.

But One Passenger on the Train Escaped Injury.

The Death List Numbers 15, The Injured 50 or More.

Awful Scenes of Suffering Among The Injured.

Charleston Gazette of the 4th inst.

The Dead.

The following is a list of the dead:

Col. W. E. Fife, of Buffalo, W. Va.

T. N. Wilson, late city editor of the Bulletin, Gallipolis, Ohio.

Charles Huffman, Blue Creek, W. Va.

Jasper Daughterty, New Martinsville, W. Va.

Walter Wilcher, Elk City, W. Va.

Miss Ella O'Leary, Mason City, W. Va.

Amos Coulter, Elk City, W. Va.

Orville Robinson, Midway, W. Va.

Thomas Thornton, Conductor, K. & M. Railroad, Middleport, O.

Mary Sullivan, Hampten, W. Va.

L. L. Rose, Blue Creek, W. Va.

Jud White, Middleport, O.

Mrs. Mary Walker Elk City, W. Va.

J. D. Jones, Charleston, W. Va.

There were fifty-two wounded, of whom mostly were of this State.

Never before have the citizens of Charleston been called upon to mourn so serious an accident as befell the Kanawa & Michigan passenger train No. 1 yesterday morning near Farm station, eight miles from here, and it is to be sincerely hoped that never again will there be a repetition of any thing so horrible that will appeal to such an extent to the sympathies of the people.

The day dawned bright and clear and with the elaborate programme prepared for the celebration of the Forth of July, a day of the greatest pleasure was anticipated by all, none for an instant dreaming of the terrible tidings so soon to be flashed over the wires that were to bring sorrow to so many homes.

The order of United American work-men had arranged to spend the day at Poca and with their wives and friends were on board the ill fated train. A good many of the K. & M. employese who are working here and live elsewhere along the line of the road were among the passengers and it was found later, were among the killed and injured. The excursion rates offered by the road had drawn out a good many people and it is known that there must have been 75 or 80 persons aboard the train by the time it reached the place where the wreck occurred.

Among the passengers was John E. Norvell, of the Charleston National Bank, who was on his way to Gallipolis to spend the day with his wife. He had carried a bucket along with him, and finding that postal clerk Hayes, whom he knew was in the mail car, went in there to talk with him a few minutes and get a string with which to tie his card on the bucket. This was all that saved him, he being the only passenger in that train load who escaped injury. He had been in the mail car but a few minutes when it began to rock and shake. Mr. Norvell says he voluntarily grabbed the post [illegible] in the mail car for the purpose, while Mr. Hayes stiffened himself up and seized another one. The car jumped the track; they could feel it jolting over the ties. Suddenly it regained the rails when with a sudden jerk and jar the coaches broke loose and left the track. The postal car though it kept the rails was so jolted and jerked that the windows and doors were jarred out. The crashing of the coaches on the earth beneath mingled with the shreaks of the unfortunate victims in the terrible confusion.

The trestle where the accident occurred is probably 60 feet high in the center and about 300 feet long. About in the center of the trestle fire had in some manner broken out and had burned some of the ties. These gave way under the weight of the heavy train. The engine and baggage car passed over safely, but the ties gave way under the coaches derailing them. They jolted along some 50 feet over the ties, shaking the passengers up and giving them the first warning of their fate, then left the trestle, carrying their load of human lives to death. The forward car rolled over the bank of the approach to the trestle, some ten or fifteen feet, turning completely over and stopping upright beneath the trrck. The rear coach tumbled over the right side of the trestle and rested upside down a few feet from the side of the trestle and parallel with the track. The fall was perpendicular and must have been 20 feet. This was probably the cause for all the killed and so many of the injured being cut and mashed about the head. When the car turned over they fell head first to the top of the car and received their cuts on the head.

Immediately after the fall of the cars, these who were able started nobly to the resque. Engineer Pat O'Connor, fireman W. S. Wyatt, postal clerk Hayes and John Norvell, who alone remained on the track, went to the cars, burst open the windows and removed the debris sufficiently to let those who were uninjured to escape. A number of the injured assisted in getting out those who were worse hurt, and persons from the neighboring farm houses also arrived and assisted in the work.

Mrs. Thomas at the poor farm, supplied a number of sheets and clothes for bandages which were used as best could be by the inexperienced hands who were there. It was awful work. Pulling the living and the dead out from the cars, bandaging up the injured, caring for the dead, quieting the disconsolate and doing all they could to relieve the suffering and prolong life, they spent an hour or more before the first relief train arrived from St. Albans bearing Doctors Lee and Clark. It was not long till the first train got in from Charleston with Doctors Thomas, Barber, Putney, Houston, Tompkins and Campe, half a dozen railroad officials, John B. White, John O'Conner and Jesse McLain, all of whom rendered valuable assistance. With the arrival of the physicians the work began to be easier and better care was rendered the wounded. Several of those who were taken out of the cars badly wounded died soon afterwards. A dozen were dead when the train bearing them started back to Charleston and Mary Sullivan died on the way up.

J. D. Jones and Mrs. Mary Wall died before night, making 15 deaths.

About 11o'clock another relief train was sent down with cots and blankets. A gruesome sight met the gaze of those who went down on it. A long row of corpses was lying in a field awaiting the arrival of the train, while in every direction the injured were scattered. They were gotten on the train as rapidly as possible and the ghastly load was brought back to the city, where the dead were put in charge of the undertakers, and the injured were taken to their homes or placed under the care of physicians by the railroad company.

Many harrowing scenes are related by those who were first on the ground. The force with which the ponderous trucks crashed down on the inverted car carried the bottom down with it and the people inside were squeezed in tight between the roof and the floor of the car. Some of the least injured managed to crawl to an opening in the wreck and make their escape, but many of them had to be literally dragged out of their places. One of the bodies in this part of the car was found with the head missing from the mouth up. It was the body of Jasper Daugherty. Some hours later in rummaging through the debris, a gentleman found what he thought was another body. Examination proved it to be the missing head of Mr. Daugherty. The face was mangled beyond recognition and the brains were scattered among the dirt and rubbish of the car. The head was wrapped in a piece of linen and carried to the cot where the body lay.

Most of the bodies of the other dead were terribly cut. Each of them had a cut or bruise in the head. In some ones fingers might have been placed with ease.

About the saddest sight in the whole affair was the little child of Mr. and Mrs. Walter Welcher. The little thing is a beautiful child of about a year, with great blue eyes. It was picked up out of the wreck, slightly bruised, and cut with its little fingers missing from one hand. The little thing seemed to understand what was going on. It never uttered a cry while the surgeons dressed its wounds, nor did a tear drop from its bright eyes. It was placed beside the dead bodies of its parents and tenderly ran its little hand across their blood-stained faces. The little orphan was taken in charge by kind friends and will be given to the relatives of the deceased.

The homeward journey of the funeral train was a sad one. In one car lay nine dead bodies and two injured. In every other car lay from four to eight injured or dead. The news of the wreck spread like a flash and at every station curious crowds were out to catch a glimpse of the train and in some cases to inquire after friends. One woman came up to the train at Glen Elk and inquired for Walter Welcher. "Dead," was the answer. "And his wife?" she asked breathlessly. "Dead, too." "How about Mrs. Wall?" "Badly injured." The woman turned away in tears. Every friend she had on the train was dead or injured. Throughout Charleston and Elk City homes are in sadness. Scores of persons are lying on beds of pain, some of whom will probably never leave them again. Although it was the saddest holiday ever witnessed in Charleston.

The railway company has done everything in its power to allevate the sufferings of the unfortunate victims. Every physician who could be secured in Charleston or St. Albans was sent at once to the wreck; cots and blankets were provided; relatives were given information and permitted to go on the relief train to the scenes of the wreck. Division Superintendent Dawson got up from a sick bed to personally supervise the work, and every official of the road did all he could. Some criticism was made for not having a track walker out. A Gazette reporter called at one of the K. & M. offices and was informed that every section of the road is gone over from one end to the other every day, but that the burnt trestle was at the end of a section and the walker started from the other end and had not reached it when the train came along. The accident seems to have been unavoidable but is none the less to be deplored.

TIN SPOUTING.

A. W. Arbogast, of Monterey Va., will be in the County for several months spouting houses. Parties wishing work of this kind done can do no better than to get him to do it.

Pocahontas Times.

JOHN E. CAMPBELL,
EDITOR AND PROPRIETOR.

Entered at the Post-office at Huntersville, W. Va., as second class matter.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION.

One copy, 1 yr., $1.00 in advance; after 6 months, $1.25; after 12 months, $1.50. These terms will be strictly complied with.

Huntersville. W. Va.

July 9, 1891.

(Continued from 1st page.)

not reflect credit upon you, and of which neither of the contracting parties can well be proud. You have fallen into the error of thinking I cared to buy your title; allow me to inform you that I do not! I believe now we have both said all that is necessary."

"I, at least, have not said all," broke forth Lord Melton, hotly. "Do you suppose I intend to calmly lose the only woman I have ever loved, through a horrible mistake? Never! And if you had loved me, Parker, as well as I love you, you would not have been so ready to doubt me; for there is nothing, no matter how conclusive, which could make me attribute a base motive to an action of yours."

She felt herself weakining, and in desperation took advantage of of the cue he had unconsciously given her. So, in a voice that trembled slightly as she uttered the falsehood said defiantly:

"Perhaps you are right, and the reason I doubted you so quickly was because I did not love you."

"Great God, do you mean that?"

"I mean it," repeated Miss Grey, steadily, but not looking at him. had she done so, she might have been convinced that Jack Melton was no hypocrite, for never were grief and despair more genuine than those expressed in every line of his face.

There was a pause before he replied:

"Then, of course, I release you. I will ask you once again to believe I love you, and that I always shall. Goodbye."

Before she was aware of his intention she was in his arms, and felt his hot, despairing kisses on her lips, her cheeks, her eyes. Then suddenly releasing her, he strode into the library and closed the door behind him.

Five minutes later Miss Grey was being rapidly driven to the station. That night she joined her American friends, and traveled with them a year through Europe before returning to America.

SAN FRANCISCO, Nov. 10th, 1890.

"MY DEAR MABLE: At last I have a few minutes to spare, and I shall tell you something about the wedding. I suppose you have seen by the papers it took place Tuesday. Parker made a beautiful bride and Jack was joy personified. You know they were engaged in England, three years ago, but that horrid Mrs. Mortimer, who used to drag Jack around after her, broke the match off. She told Parker that Jack was only marrying her for her money, and her story seemed so straight and so true that Parker believed it. After that her fortune was a barrier between them; but six months ago, when she lost every cent, Jack came right over, and was able to prove it was not his money he cared for.

"Of course when he was comparatively poor, I wanted him to marry a rich woman; but since he has come into a fortune of his own, I could not have chosen him a [illegible] of more charming wife than Parker; and now that everything has turned out so happily, Jack who has been looking wretchedly ever since their first engagement was broken, is quite his old self again.

"I am the guest of Mr. Grey, Parker's [illegible], who has entertained me most handsomely. I shall be [illegible] ry to leave, but I sail the first of next month, to get Melton House in order by the time Jack and Parker arrive. So I shall see you before very long.

"Hoping you and the dear children are quite well, Your affectionate cousin.

"HARRIET CROFTON.

"P. S. Parker's presents were superb."

Barbara's Test.

Pretty Barbara Ferros would not marry. Her mother was in consternation.

"Why are you so stubborn, Barbara?" she asked. "You have plenty of lovers."

"I want, when I marry, a man who is brave, equal to any emergency. If I give up my liberty I want to be taken care of."

"Silly child! What is the matter with big Barney, the blacksmith?"

"He is big, but I never learned that he is brave."

"And you never learned that he is not. What is the matter with Ernest, the gun smith?"

"He's as placid as goats milk."

"There is little Fritz, the tanner; he is quarrelsome enough for you surely?"

"He is no bigger than a bantam cock. It is little he could do if the house was set upon by robbers."

That night Ernest, the gunsmith, knocked early at the door.

"You sent for me, Barbara," he said, going to the girl who stood upon the hearth, coquettishly warming one pretty foot and then the other.

"Yes, Ernest," she replied. "I've been thinking of what you said the other night when you were here."

"Well, Barbara?"

"I want to test you."

"I want to see if you dare do a very disagreeable thing."

"What is it?"

"There is an old coffin up stairs. It smells of mould. They say Redmond, the murderer was burried in it; but the devil came for his body and left the coffin empty at the end of a week, and it was finally taken from the tomb. It is up stairs in the room my grand father died in, and they say grandsire does not rest easy in his grave for some reason though that I know nothing about. Dare you make that coffin your bed tonight."

Ernest laughed.

"Is that all?" I will do that and sleep soundly. Why, pretty one, did you think I had weak nerves?"

"Good night, then, I will send a lad to show you the chamber," said imperious Miss Barbara.

Ernest turned straightway and followed the lad in waiting through dim rooms and passages, up echoing stairs, narrow damp ways, where rats scuttled before them to a low chamber. The boy looked pale and scared, and evidently wanted to hurry away, but Ernest made him wait until he took a survey of the room by the aid of his lamp. It was very large and full of recesses with high windows in them, which were barred across. He remembered that old Grandsire Ferros had been insane for several years before his death, so this precaution had been necessary for the safety of himself and others. In the centre of the room stood a coffin, beside it was placed a chair. The room was otherwise perfectly empty.

Ernest stretched himself in the coffin.

"Be good enough to tell Miss Barbara that it's a very good fit," said he.

The boy went out and shut the door, leaving the young gunsmith alone in the dark.

Meanwhile Barbara was talking with the big blacksmith in the keeping room.

"Barney," said she, pulling her hands from his grasp when he would have kissed. "I have a test to put you through before I give you my answer. There is a corpse lying in the chamber where my grandsire died in the unoccupied wing of the house. If you dare sit with it there all night, and let nothing drive you from your post, you will not ask me to marry you again in vain."

"Are these all the conditions you can offer me, Barbara?"

"All. And if you get frightened you need never look me in the face again."

"Ill take them, then."

So Barney was conducted to his post by the lad, who had been instructed in the secret, and whose involuntary stare at Ernest's placid face as it lay in the coffin was interpreted by Barney to be natural awe of a corpse. He took his seat and the boy left him alone with the darkness, the rats and the coffin.

Soon after young Fritz, the tanner arrived, flattered and hopeful from the fact that Barbara had sent for him.

"Have you changed your mind Barbara?" he asked.

"No, and I shall not until I know that you can do a really brave thing."

"What shall it be? I swear to satisfy you Barbara."

"I have a little proposal to make to you. My plan requires skill as well as courage."

"Tell me."

"Well, in this house is a man watching by a corpse. He has sworn not to leave his post till morning. If you can make him do it I shall be satisfied that you are as smart and as brave as I require a husband to be."

"Why nothing is so easy," exclaimed Fritz. "I can scare him away. Furnish me with a sheet, show me the room, and go to your rest, Barbara. You shall find me at the post in the morning."

Barbara did as required and saw the tanner step blithly away to his task. It was then nearly 12 o'clock and she sought her own chamber.

Barney was sitting at his vigil, and so far all had been well.

The face in the coffin gleamed whiter through the darkness. The rats squeaked as if a famine were upon them and they smelled dead flesh. The thought made him shudder. He got up and walked about, but something made a slight noise as if something was behind him, and he put his chair with its back against the wall, and sat down again. He had been hard at work all day, and at last in spite of everything, he grew sleepy. Finally he nodded and snored.

Suddenly it seemed as if somebody had touched him. He awoke with a start, and saw nobody near, though in the centre of the room stood a white figure.

"Curse you, get out of this!" he exclaimed in a fright, using the first words that came to his tongue.

The figure held up its right arm and slowly approached him. He started to his feet. The spectre came nearer pressing him into the corner.

"The d——l take you?" cried Barney, in his extremity.

Involuntarily he stepped back; still the figure advanced, coming nearer and nearer, and extending both arms, as if to take him in a ghastly embrace. The hair started up on Barney's head; he grew desperate, and just as the gleaming arms would have touched him, he fell upon the ghost like a whirlwind, tearing off the sheet, thumping, pounding, beating and kicking, more and more enraged at the resistance he met, which told him the truth.

As the reader knows, he was big and Fritz was little; and while he [illegible] the little tanner [illegible], and Fritz trying in vain to get a lunge at Barney's stomach, to take the wind out of him, both plunging and kicking like horses, they were petrified by hearing a voice say:

"Take one of your size Big Barney!"

Looking around, they saw the corpse sitting up in his coffin. Then [illegible] and opened the door upon Ernest the next morning.

"It's very early; one more little nap," said he turning over in the coffin.

So she married him, and though she sent Fritz and Barney invitations to the wedding, they did not appear. If they discovered the trick they kept the knowledge to themselves, and never willingly faced Barbara's laughing eyes again.—Sheffield Telegraph.

SUBSCRIBE

FOR THE——

POCAHONTAS TIMES,

Every man in the County should take it, and patronize home industry. It sustains your rights, and works for the advancement of your county, which no city paper will do. It gives you the news from all parts of the county, which you could not get otherwise. It furnishes matters of interst to the Merchant, Farmer and Mechanic. It keeps you posted and gives you information, on all general news, and its sections and Miscellany are fit for all ages.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION.

One year in advance $1.00

If not paid within 6 months 1.25

And at the end of th year 1.50

AND IF YOU NEED

Letter Heads, Note Heads, Bill Heads, Envelopes, Drug Envelopes, Tags, Business Cards, Official Blanks, Blank Bonds, Posters, Briefs for the Court of Appeals etc.

GET THEM AT "THE TIMES"

JOB OFFICE.

[illegible]

POCAHONTAS TIMES.

Vol. 8. JOHN E. CAMPBELL, EDITOR AND PROPRIETOR. Huntersville, West Virginia, Thursday, July 23, 1891. Terms of Subscription. $1.00 PER YEAR. IN ADVANCE. No. 52

Official Directory of Pocahontas County

Judge of Circuit Court, A. N. Campbell.
Prosecuting Attorney, L. M. McClintic.
Sheriff, J. C. Arbogast.
Deputy Sheriff, Geo. W. Callison.
Cl'k Co. Court, S. L. Brown.
Cl'k Cr. Court, J. H. Patterson.
Assessor, C. O. Arbogast.
Com'rs Co. Ct. C E. Beard. S B. Hannah. G. M. Kee.
Co. Surveyor, Geo. Baxter

THE COURTS.

Circuit Court convenes on the first Tuesday in April, 3rd Tuesday in June and 3rd Tuesday in October.

County Court convenes on the 1st Tuesday in January, March, October and second Tuesday in July. July is levy term.

TALES OF A GREAT CITY.

STUB'S SATURDAY NIGHT.

It wasn't much to boast of, Stub's sleeping place.

If there had been six feet of Stub instead of only four, there is no knowing what he would have done with his toes.

Stub's sleeping place wasn't mentioned in the city directory. Stub's eyes would have grown as large as his appetite if you had ever suggested looking him up in a book—unless it was the big book at the Harrison street police station.

Stub's sleeping place was in an alley. It had once been rather a respectable box, but teamsters had bunted their truck wheels against it, and janitors had swept filthy water upon it, until its gentility had departed.

Stub had had ideas of his own about art, and he recorded them on the walls of his box. When he had newspapers he couldn't sell, he cut out the pictures and pasted them on the walls of his sleeping chamber. As he changed the pictures every day, his apartment became a humble panorama of passing events.

He allowed only one picture to remain unmolested. At the foot of his bed of papers, where his eyes rested first in the morning, the roughly sketched but motherly and pleasant faced portrait of a woman looked down from the pine wall.

Stub used to think that if he ever had a mother she would look just as the portrait looked.

So you see that even little heathen Stub, who would have thought nothing of stealing your bundle, and who never neglected an opportunity of giving the wrong change or making impish faces behind your back—even little heathenish Stub possessed the mothersome instinct to be observed in the young of all forms of animal life.

II.

There wasn't very much room in Stub's box so he wasn't often annoyed with lodgers. He liked to be alone, and he wasn't afraid of the dark. To be sure it was never very dark in the alley, and never very still, but many boys only ten years old would have cried themselves to sleep there. Stub didn't. He only kept out of the way of the policemen.

When Stub got home that Saturday night he discovered a ragged little urchin curled up in his box. Stub had had a bad day's business, and had been nagged into a fight down on State street, so he wasn't in good humor.

He had fought many a battle for the possession of his box, and was preparing to fight another, when he saw how small the intruder was, and how white and pinched his face looked. So he decided not to attack him, but just to civilly turn him out.

"Come, Cully," he said, giving the box a terrific shaking with his strong little hand, "you sherry your nibs. This is my bed."

The intruder rubbed his eyes and began to cry.

"Cheese," said Stub, "none o' that. Get out. Home's the place for sny babies."

Instead of getting out, the urchin cried harder than ever, so Stub crawled in on his hands and knees and sat down.

"Why don't you go home," he demanded, "and not be around crowdin' 'ona feller's' rooms?"

"I runned away from home," the child finally managed to explain.

Stub couldn't understand how a boy who had a home could voluntarily run away from it, so he sat and stared at the intruder in open-eyed wonder.

"I'll bet," he said, rattling the pennies in his pocket, "that you don't know how to do anything."

The intruder shook his head and rubbed harder than ever at his eyes. Then Stub tried him on another tack.

"I'll bet," he said, rattling his money again ostentatiously, "that you hain't had nothin' to eat."

No; the intruder had had nothing to eat that day. Stub had part of his supper and most of his breakfast in his pocket, and the intruder was soon devouring it, much as a hungry animal would have done.

"Where did you come from?"

"Away out in the country."

"Well," said Stub, almost out of breath with astonishment, "you're a bloomin' bloke to cut away from the country. Can you roll on the grass out there, an' wade in the brooks?"

"Lots."

"Then you go back. Mebbe I'll give you a nickel in the mornin' to ride out on the grip."

And the boys nestled together for the purpose of increased warmth and went to sleep.

III.

The fire must have been burning a long time before the glare and the noise disturbed the occupants of Stub's sleeping apartments.

When Stub sat up and looked about him the buildings on both sides of the alley were a-blaze, and firemen and policemen were helping people out of high windows with long ladders. The air was hot with the breath of the flames and thick and black with smoke. In the distance he heard the thunder of falling walls and the hoarse cries of excited people. His companion started up in terror, but Stub held him back.

"Can't you see the alley is all afire, you little fool," he said. "You would roast out there in a minute. Wait 'till they put the fire out. I'll bet number six will swipe it when she comes. You ought to see number six play on a fire."

The air in the box was stifling. The boys gasped for breath. Walls were falling on all sides. A great iron beam lodged in a low window rent and protected the box for the time being.

"Now," said Stub, after another mighty crash, "there's a place under that wall to get out. No; not that way. There, where the bricks have lodged. You're so little, mebbe you can get through if you skip it lively. I'll go after you; but if you don't see me again; just you get for them brooks where you can wade. Mebbe the gripman'll give you a ride. Now!"

Stub watched the intruder crowding through the tunnel-like place, stumbling over fallen beams and piles of brick, and wondered if the place was large enough for him to pass through, and if the oven-like heat wouldn't take him before he got to the street. At last the tiny figure passed through the blaze of light at the other end and disappeared.

There is another heavy crash, and Stub wonders vaguely if the intruder of the night before has taken the tunnel with him.

There surely is nothing where it was—only a mass of brick and stone, crashing and steaming with the [illegible] water pouring over it. Stub is crowded back into his box, and then a high chimney, standing like a great sentinel high above the crumbling walls, sways and totters in the hot air.

The smouldering ruins are lashed into a sudden flare as the topmost part of the chimney detaches itself and leads the way headlong into the red pit of fire below. In that one burst of light Stub's frightened eyes looked dimly at the roughly sketched portrait of a motherly face standing out on the pine wall. There seems to be a new expression on the face—a look of peace and rest he has never seen there before.

And then the main mass of the structure comes crashing through the hot air, burying a disreputable goods box and a mangled newsboy many feet beneath smoking ruins.

A FISH'S FUNERAL

"Come, Everett, say your prayers, then shut your eyes and go to sleep, for it is almost 8 o'clock," said Everett's mother, leading him to his bed in the small room just off hers.

Everett began a prayer and mama's thoughts wandered off to "I must not forget to tell Mary to have ham and eggs for breakfast, and as tomorrow is ironing day we must do with a picked up"—when she was startled by hearing Everett say; "God bless mamma, God bless papa—but say, God, you needn't go botherin' about Aunt Grace, for she went home this morning—for thine is the kingdom, and the power, and the glory, for ever and ever. Amen. Two men, three boys."

His voice had grown louder and louder as he neared the close of the prayer, and the last words were in a dreaded scream.

"Why, Everett! What did you do that for? No little boy acts like that," said his mother.

"Oh, yes, they do. Tommy Diddles told me today that God was miles and miles and miles away, and how can he hear me when the window is shut if I don't yell?"

Mamma tucked him in bed and went away.

Everett's goldfish died last Monday, says a writer in the New York Recorder, and he, with Tommy Diddles and Cara Potter, buried it. A lead-pencil box served as a coffin, and Cora wheeled it to the graveyard in her doll carriage. Miss Ellies, the dolly was the chief mourner, and sat on top of the coffin all the way there. Tommy Diddles was undertaker, and followed the carriage in his wagon drawn by the billy goat. The way was a long one, for it took them three times around the house, and once around the barn, thence to the lilac bush, under which Everett had dug the grave.

The ceremony was a solemn affair. Everett made the following remarks:

"Fishy, you are as dead as a door nail, and you can't wag your tail ever any more in the water nor bite my finger in the morning when I feed you your breakfast. Mamma will get another little fish and put in the water and we won't hardly know you are gone up to heaven. [illegible] don't you feel so awfully sorry 'cause petty quick it will swim on its side, and we will send it up after you. I wouldn't try to come back if I were you. I wouldn't try to come back if I were you, little fish 'cause I guess you wouldn't see the [illegible] fish in your [illegible]. Now let us sing."

"All right," said Tommy, [illegible] struck out with "All 'Round the Mulberry Bush." But Cora said she would not play if she could not sing "London Bridge is Falling Down."

"I'll tell you," interrupted Everett, "the fish is dead, isn't it?" "Yes," said both listeners.

"It's going to heaven isn't it?" "Yes" Well, it will be an angel, won't it?"

"Guess so," answered Tommy, and Cora nodded.

"Then let us sing 'I Want to Be an Angel;'" which they did and the funeral was over.

It grew late and mamma called and called, but Everett did not answer. Finally she found him on the ground beside the grave, crying as if his heart would break.

"Mamma, mamma," he said "it takes the fish so long to go to heaven; and now if you put me to bed I won't see it go."

"Never mind, dearie, I suppose it went long ago; it did not know you wanted to watch it."

"No, no, mamma! It is there," pointing to the grave. "I have dug it up 'leven times, and it is always there." And he broke into sobs afresh.

JOKED ON HIS DEATHBED.

Not long before his death, the story runs, Barnum summoned his lawyer to the side of the couch where he was lying.

"I am very much worried," he said, "about a certain matter, and I want to consult you. My neighbor keeps peacocks. Suppose some of them should fly over into my yard—which they are doing all the time—and lay some eggs here. Would these eggs belong to me, or could my neighbor compel me to give them up?"

The lawyer having duly scratched his head, answered:

"Well Mr. Barnum, I must take time to look into this matter. But the best thing for you to do would be for you to keep the eggs and let your neighbor sue for the possession. In that way your rights would be determined, and we should have a very valuable test case."

"Well," said Barnum, "while you are looking into the matter will you find out how it would be if the eggs were laid by peahens?"

The lawyer swore softly to himself, but never made an investigation.

City Editor—The street is all excitement. An electric light wire has blocked traffic, and no one knows whether it is a live wire or not.

Editor—Detail two reporters to go to the wire immediately—one to feel of it and the other to write up the result.

First Plague (on the way to a city)—What are you?

Second Plague (traveling in same direction)—I am a common cold.

First Plague (loftily)—You might as well stay away. Nobody recognizes you any more. I am the grip.

Fully 2,300 persons commit suicide in Russia every year; indeed, the violent deaths of all kinds annually reach 15,000 while 10,000 people die of typhus fever, the most destructive national disease.

A bottle thrown into the Atlantic on Nov. 24, 1887, from the Cephalonia, about 400 miles out from Boston, was recently washed ashore on a little islet in the Caribbean sea, 6,300 miles away.

Cremation is very economically conducted in Japan, and therefore is quite popular. In Tokyo there are six crematories, in which one third of the dead are burned. The highest price for burning a body is $3.75, and the lowest, $1.

Pocahontas Times.

JOHN E. CAMPBELL,
EDITOR AND PROPRIETOR.

Entered at the Post-office at Huntersville, W. Va., as second class matter.

ADVERTISING RATES.

	1 m.	3 m.	6 m.	1 yr.
One inch	$ 1 00	$ 2 00	$ 3 00	$ 5 00
Three in.	2 00	4 00	6 00	10 00
Qr. column	3 00	6 00	10 00	17 00
Half col'n	6 00	12 00	20 00	30 00
One col'n	10 00	20 00	30 00	50 00

Reading notices, not exceeding five lines, twenty-five cents for each insertion, and five cents a line for each additional line.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION.

One copy, 1 yr., $1.00 in advance; after 6 months, $1 25; after 12 months, $1.50

Those terms will be strictly complied with.

Huntersville. W. Va.
July 23, 1891.

WASHINGTON LETTER.

From our regular correspondent.

WASHINGTON, D. C., July 17th—"I was not for Campbell first" said a member of the democratic National Committee, "but recently, after looking carefully over the field I became convinced that Campbell's hold on the farmers of the State made him the most available man, that is to say the one who could under the peculiar circumstance surrounding the Ohio campaign this year, pole the most votes, and now that he has been nominated I trust that every democrat in Ohio will recognize the national importance of the election in that State and lay aside all personal objections to the candidate and work as hard as he knows how for the success of the democratic party. The adoption of the free coinage plank in the platform leaves the Farmers Alliance no excuse for putting a third ticket in the field, and if they vote as they have talked Campbell should receive their support. Of course I cannot say that he will; but anyway I am confident that we can elect Campbell and the legislature, if all of the democrats of the State can be persuaded to actively assist."

Secretary Proctor is on one of his periodical visits to the War department, over which he is supposed to preside. It is not known how long he will remain, but it is safe to say that he will only be here for a few days, as it isn't probable that he has any intention of breaking his record by remaining for any extended period.

Representative Crisp, of Georgia, whose chances of being next Speaker of the House have taken such a decided upward spurt recently, is in town this week. He talks confidentally but not boastfully of his Speakership prospects, and has nothing but good words for his competitors in what he calls "the friendly competition." He says that if he or one of the other candidates gets the prize there will be no soreness or hard feelings, as every one of them will cheerfully accept the decree of the caucus as final.

Secretary Rusk is to attend the annual encampment of the G. A. R. at Detroit next month, and he is to help fix up things for Mr. Harrison with the old soldiers.

Look out for a break between the Harrison and Blaine people. It may be avoided, but it may also occur at any time. The Blaine people have long suspected that most of the misrepresentations concerning Mr. Blaine's health were the work of Mr. Harrison's friends, but it was only the other day that they succeeded in running one of the fakes down—the one saying that Blaine had placed his resignation in Harrison's hands because he never expected to get well again—and in placing the authorship mighty [illegible] to "Lige" Halford, it having [illegible] telegraphed from here by the [illegible] respondent who represents the [illegible] Journal, [illegible] which "Lige" used to edit, and which has for years been regarded as Mr. Harrison's personal organ. This correspondent is known to be on the closest terms with Halford and it is charged by the Blaineites that Halford inspired this fake dispatch, which the correspondent did not dare to wire his own paper although it was sent to several other papers in the West. To say that the Blaineites are mad is to draw it very mildly indeed. One of them—a man with an international reputation—has gone to Bar Harbor to lay the facts that he has discovered about the systematic attempts of the Harrison crowd to create the impression that Mr. Blaine is a wreck, mentally and physically, before that gentleman, and to implore him to grant the use of his name as a Presidential candidate, which would of itself put an end to the Harrison candidacy at once.

Senator Call, of Florida, is in Washington. He says that his opponents are at work on several schemes by which they hope to keep him out of his seat in the Senate on the ground that his election was illegal, but that he isn't alarmed as he knows that he was legally elected and hasn't the least doubt of being able to establish that fact before either a legislative or legal tribunal.

The count of cash in the Treasury was completed this week, and some foolish republicans are disposed to shout because the total reaches more than $600,000,000 forgetting that there are liabilities outstanding against this amount in the shape of gold certificates, silver certificates, silver Treasury notes and United States notes (greenbacks) amounting to $813,746,984, which puts a very different face on the matter.

Representative Oates, of Alabama, says if the democratic party in the South does not wake up and do some lively fighting it will be swallowed lock, stock and barrel by the Farmers Alliance.

Eleven more suits were brought against the K. & M. R. R. Co. by persons injured in the recent wreck. The suits aggregate 82,000 dollars, which with the 50,000 dollars already sued for makes 132,000 dollars so far. Among these suits was one of the Welcher baby, who lost both her parents, for 20,000 dollars damages to herself. The suit was brought by her next friend, John H. Ritter who has already brought suit as administrator of the estate of her dead parents.

Ex Govenor Wilson brought suits in the circuit court at Charleston against the K. & M. Ry. Co. aggregating $80,000 for the execution of Walter Welcher and wife, who were killed in the railroad wreck last Saturday; also J. L. Stone and Mariah L. Henson, who was injured in the same wreck. The suits are for $40,000 each for Welcher and wife, $20,000 for Stone and $10,000 Henson. A large number of other suits will be brought against the company for others who were injured if compromises cannot be effected.

Alliance News.

Late Matters of Interest Partaining to the Order

The Edray Farmers Alliance and I. U. will meet at the Edray school house on Saturday, August 1st.

What has become of the Alliance at Huntersville. They should have regular meetings.

The Farmers Alliance of our county is we beleive in a prosperous condition.

We hope all sub alliances of our county will send in any news that they may have, for publication, also the time of the meeting of the respective Alliances.

At least two thirds of our patrons belong to the Farmers Alliance and it is our desire to serve those who patronise us. With this view we propose to vie with them in what we think is best for their interests, and it is an evident fact, as some Alliance speaker says, that there is an undercurrent at work, moving heaven and earth, led by monopolists and plutocrats whose sole aim is to disorganize the people and render futile their efforts to break the shackles of financial and commercial slavery. Success of the Farmers means freedom to the masses and what is good for them is good for every wage worker under the sun.

The work of organizing goes forward very rapidly in Indiana.

There were at last report, more than 2,200 subordinate Alliances.

The F. A. & I. U. has more than 3,500,000 members in the 35 states in which it is organized.

In Ohio there are over 900 subordinate open Alliances and nearly 300 subordinate secret Alliances.

Pennsylvania and New York are being rapidly organized and both will soon be strongholds of Alliance principles.

The Alliance in Nebraska is not connected with either of the great National bodies. They prefer to stand alone.

The Alliance in Texas is taking on a new growth which bids fair to eclipse anything ever before seen in that State.

The Alliance has planted its banner in every state except four in New England, and these will be set afire in a few weeks.

*Oregon will soon organize a Farmers' Alliance and Industrial Union and Washington will follow in a short time.

Besides the 2,200 subordinate open Alliances in Iowa, Secretary Lang of the secret Alliance reports nearly 300 secret Alliances. There were but 135 March 20.

NOTICE TO CONTRACTORS.

Under an order of the County Court of Pocahontas County made July 16th, 1891, sealed bids in writing addressed to the undersign, or either of them, at Huntersville (P. O.) Pocahontas Co., West Virginia, or handed to either, will be recieved until 12 o'clock, Monday, of the 3rd day of August, 1891, for the construction of a Wooden Trestle Approach to the Bridge at its Southern end, over Knapp's Creek near Huntersville in said Pocahontas County.

Specifications for said work are recorded in the Clerk's Office of said County Court which will be shown by the Clerk of said Court on application to him.

Bond with good personal security in a penalty equal to bid conditioned for completion of said work according to said specifications within 60 days from said third day of August, 1891, must accompany such bid.

Right reserved to reject any or all bids.

J. H. Patterson,
A. Barlow,
L. M. McClintic, } Comm'rs.

July 23 2t.

HOME NEWS

—Locals are scarce this week.

—Hay harvesting is in full blast.

—L. M. McClintic, Attorney, is in Va., this week on business.

—We understand the Teachers Institute begins the 10th of August.

—Hon. Jas. E. Campbell was nominated for Govenor of Ohio on the firt bollot.

—Misses Mary and Pauline McNeel, of near Academy, were the guests of Mrs. Jno. J. Beard the latter part of last week.

—Mark M. Pomerey, better known as "Brick" was in Charleston last week. He is well pleased with that portion of the State.

—Mr. H. P. McGlaughlin, of this place is in attendance at the unveiling of the Jackson monument at Lexington, Va., to day (Wednesday).

—Some of the officers of the K. & M. Railroad have been indicted by the Grand Jury of Kanawa county for negligence in causing the terrible accident that occured near Charleston on the 4th of July.

—J. C. Loury, Jr., and Mrs. Wm. A. Grose have returned from the Webster Springs. Mrs. Grose is considerably improved in health, while it did not help Mr. Loury much.

—Josh B. McNeil, Esq., of Beaver Creek, is traveling the county, selling a pat. stove pipe shelf, which is the most convenient thing of the kind we have ever seen. No family can afford to do without it, at even twice the price.

—Lloyd Moore, Esq., son of the late Rev. Jas. E. Moore, and Miss Bessie Bird, daughter of Uriah Bird, of Mill Point, we understand were married today, at the home of the bride's parents. THE TIMES extend congratulations and best wishes for a happy and prosperous married life.

—Mr. R. V. Perkins, the miller at Mill Point, was in town Sunday, and informed us that he had never seen a better wheat crop raised in the Levels than they have this year. Mr. Parkins has already ground some new wheat and is highly pleased with the turn out.

—Attorn ys Capt. Stofer and N.C. McNeel and Squire Grose of this city attended a justice's trial at Marlinton, of Hauf. Waugh of nea r Edray for wilful trespass. He was remanded to awate the action of grand jury in the sum of $200, which amount he gave and was released.

—W. T. Slaven will visit each family in the County with a book called the "New Method" tells how to cure diseases without the use of drugs. He can furnish best of refernce as to the results of the treatment of it. Sold at $2.00 each.

—In our little local notice last week in regard to Miss Duffie Marshall as assistant teacher in the Hillsboro Male and Female Academy, some of the teachers misunderstand its meaning. We meant that Miss Marshall stood first among the teacher of our county; that is we believe her to be as good a teacher as we have, which does not say she is the best. There are many others who no doubt are as good as the lady mentioned, and who got the same grade of certificate at the examination.

—There are five persons in our county jail—two charged with murder, one for forgery, one serving an 8 month sentence for malicious assault and one lunatic. The Bright boys who are in for murder seem to be in good spirits and are confident of getting cleared at our Oct. Court. They will have to be tried at the Oct. court or they go free, as more than two terms cannot pass without a trial, unless the counsel for defense is agreed.

—Dr. John M. Cunningham, of Ekray, Pocahontas county, is now visiting his parents at this place. We are glad to hear that he has been successful in practicing his profession.—Highland Recorder.

Green Bank Items.

Mr. and Mrs. J. H. Ralston are off on a visit to friends in Rockbridge Co.

Mrs. J. R. Slaven and daughter Mrs. S. L. Brown, of Huntersville, who were visiting in this vicinity, returned home Tuesday.

Miss Hattie Patterson returned home last week from an extended visit to relatives in the Levels.

Mr. C. O. Arbagast has purchased and moved to the property near Green Bank, formaly owned by his father.

Messrs. C. A. Lightner, Wm. H. Hull and Dr. C. L. Austin are off to Lexington to be present at the unveiling at that place the 22nd.

Mr. W. A. Gladwell made a flying visit to McDowell last week.

Mr. Wilson of McDowell is boarding at the Central Hotel.

PAULINA.

Hillsboro Happenings.

Miss Fannie Johnson of Virginia is visiting the family of Rev. C. Sydenstricker.

Mr. Theo. Brinkley of Frankford is now weilding the yard stick behinn Mr. Wm. H. Overholts counter. He is an expert clerk and salesman.

Miss G. M. Shearer returned last week from a three weeks trip in the interest of the Hillsboro Training School. Also Prof. Brown returned a few days ago off of a trip of the same kind in the interest of the H. M. & F. Academy.

Rev. D. S. Sydenstrickre has been on the sick list the past week.

Miss Duffie Marshall who has attended three sessions of the Hillsboro Training school taught by Miss Shearer will assist Prof. Brown in the primary department of the Hillsboro Male and Female Academy the coming term. Miss Shearer trains her pupils well and we feel miss Duffie will do her duty in the Academy.

The Hillsboro Cornet Band assisted by the ladies of Hillsboro and vicinity will give a lawn party next Saturday in the afternoon. A nice supper and refreshments of all kinds will be served. The entertainment will be interspersed throughout with amusement and music by the band. The public is cordially invited to attend, and a fine time promised. The band has improved rapidly since Mr. Stulting's return and have learned new pieces for the occasion.

Died, Col. R. G. Miller, Sunday evening at his house near Buckeye. Col. Miller is too well known to say much about him. His numerous friends all feel his troubles are ended and he has found a happier clime where sorrows and troubles are unknown. None of his children were permitted to be with him in his last moments except two daughters. His remains were laid to rest in the old Brick Church grave yard, where three sons are buried. The burial services were read by Rev. Wm. T. Price assisted by Rev. Absalom Sydenstricker. Requiescat in pace.

MAX.

County Court Proceedings.

At a County Court held for the County of Pocahontas at the court-house thereof, on the 14th day of July, 1891. Present, S. B. Hannah, president, C. E. Beard and G. M. Kee, commissioners:

J. H. Patterson was appointed a comm'r. to make a settlement with M. J. McNeel, late sheriff.

H. A. Yeager, justice in Green Bank district resigned and Geo. W. Siple was appointed in his place.

A levy was laid of 37½ cents on the $100.

It was ordered that a change be made near Mrs. Mary Bird's residence on the public road leading from Charles Moore's to Frost.

It was ordered that L. M. McClintic institute proceedings against Henry Wooddell and J. B. Bradshaw to condemn land for the Glade Hill and Green Bank road.

On motion of C. O. Arbogast, assessor license were granted to the following persons to keep private entertainment: W. W. McCoy and E. H. Moore, of Academy; Loury & Doyle, G. W. Wagner and H. P. McGlaughlin, Huntersville; J. A. Ralston and P. D. Yeager, Travelers Repose; A. P. Herold, Frost; and J. C. Arbogast, Green Bank.

Charles Levisay to whom a contract was awarded for building the approach at the southern end of the bridge at Huntersville, declared in Court that he did not intend to build said approach, and J. H. Patterson, Amos Barlow and L. M. McClintic were appointed to advertise and recieve bids for its construction.

M. J. White was ordered to expend $25.00 in dressing up the road beginning at the Lockridge ford and ending at the top of the Alleghany mt.

Odrered that the contract be awarded Jno. E. Campbell to do the county printing for the year beginning July 16th '91 and ending July 16th '92, for the sum of $50.

To Build a Town.

PARKERSBURG, July 17.—A company was organized at Blenerhassett Hotel to be known as the Centralia Improvement Company for the purpose of building a town at Centralia, at the mouth of Laurel, on the Elk, on Senator Camden's West Virginia and Pittsburg railway. The following officers were elected: President, Judge W. G. Bennet, Weston; Vice President, C. P. Dorr, Addison; Treasurer, J. S. Hyer, Sutton; Seretary and General Agent, Alfred Rheinstorm, Wheeling. Directors: Judge Henry Brannon, Weston; John H. Holt, Huntington; Judge W. G. Benton, Weston; R. P. Camden, Parkersburg; Jonathan Bennett, C. P. Dorr, A. Rheinstorm, J. S. Hyer, W. Mollohan.

The Fair.

We clip the following from the Greenbrier Idependent:

About six weeks hence the Greenbrier Industrial Exposition will hold its first annual Fair. We have in press, and will have for distribution in a few days the corrected programme. The catalogue offers premiums in every department. Our graziers should take pride in entering their fat, breeding and thoroughbred cattle; our horsemen, their horses, mares, fillies, colts and the finer grades; our housewives should vie with each other in producing from dairy, garden and kitchen some meritorious specimens of their handicraft, and make an interesting exhibit. In the ornamental department should be exhibited embroidery, needlework, chrocheting, rugs and Carpet, the work of the loom, along with flowers, crayons, drawings, etc.

We feel assured every one conceives it a duty to work for the success of the Fair, and show what we can do. The attractions are so varied and numerous that the managers are fully convinced that they will have a large number of exhibitors and visitors, and to secure space, stalls and pens entries should be made at once.

The directors are untiring in their efforts to make the programme superior to that of any Fair held in this section, and to restore the pride of ante bellum days, when the mention of "Greenbrier Valley" was only needed to brand every article from the counties composing it, superior. The district is composed of Greenbrier, Monroe, Pocahontas, Summers and Fayette, and it is the desire of the Exposition to make this a district exhibition, assuring every exhibitor fairness, courtesy and welcome. Prepare for the Fair, the time is short, and for any information you want, write to any of the officers of the Association and you will recieve a prompt reply.

NOTICE.

I have a new Deering Mowing Machine only been used two years which I will sell for $25.00. Any one wanting a machine let me know at once. J. B. Lockridge, Driscol, W. Va.

Harry Christian was hanged in McDowell county for murder on the 17th inst.

ORDER OF PUBLICATION.

State of West Va. County of Pocahontas, to wit:

At rules held in the Clerk's office of the Circuit Court of Pocahontas County on the first Monday in July, 1891.

Edwin T. Dudley, Rodney H. Dudley, Alexander P. Dudley, Earnest M. Dudley, Geo. W. McDonald, Aurelius Gilkeson, Andrew G. Crawford and wm. A. Crawford.

against

Felix H. Hull, L. H. Huff and Lillie E. Huff, his wife, Edgar P. Hull, S. S. Turk, Adm'r of Elizabeth M. Turk, dec'd, J. C. Arbogast, Sheriff of Pocahontas County, and as such Adm'r de bonis non of F. H. Hull, dec'd, Benjamin F. Jackson, Levi Gay, late Sheriff of Pocahontas County, and as such Adm'r of Andrew G. Mathews, dec'd, Wm. H. McClintic and Mary Ann his wife, John [illegible] James P. Bright, Adm'r of Kyle Bright, dec'd [illegible]

IN CHANCERY.

[illegible]

ORDER OF PUBLICATION.

State of West Virginia, County of Pocahontas, to wit:

At rules held in the Clerk's office of the Circuit Court of Pocahontas county on the first Monday of July 1891.

[illegible] McAllister

vs.

Sam'l C. Tardy Sr. and Sam'l C. Tardy Jr.

[illegible]

Pocahontas Times.

JOHN E. CAMPBELL,
EDITOR AND PROPRIETOR.

Entered at the Post-office at Huntersville, W. Va., as second class matter.

ADVERTISING RATES.

	1 m.	3 m.	6 m.	1 yr.
One inch	$ 1 00	$ 2 00	$ 3 00	$ 5 00
Three in.	2 00	4 00	6 00	10 00
Qr. column	3 00	6 00	10 00	17 00
Half col'n	6 00	12 00	20 00	30 00
One col'n	10 00	20 00	30 00	50 00

Reading notices, not exceeding five lines, twenty-five cents for each insertion, and five cents a line for each additional line.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION.

One copy, 1 yr., $1.00 in advance; after 6 months, $1.25; after 12 months, $1.50

These terms will be strictly complied with.

Huntersville, W. Va.

July 23, 1891.

IN THE CANON.

A Terr fic Battle between Rattlesnakes.

"About the most exciting fights I ever saw," observed old Matt Towle, the prospecter and mountaineer, "was one beteen rattlesnakes. You never seen one?" he continued, interrogatively, observing the look of interest on the part of his listner. "No more did I till a few years ago. Young man even if you have traveled 'bout this coast considerable, you know I started out afore you're born, and what it took me thirty five years to first lay eyes upon you'd hardly expect to see in a few years' skirmishing.

"In '82 me and Jack Jenning went down to Gunsight district a prospecting, and while we took care to keep in Arazona we made camp at a tank not very far—ten miles or so—from the Mexican line. Water being scarce that year we had to locate a tank, even if the indications for minerals was good or not, but as luck would have it we struck a pretty promising lead—it was a true contact—and began sinking a little hole to find out what she was worth. For eight or nine weeks we kept up our work with out seeing a living soul except a coyote or a jack rabit, but as the location was showing up fine we didn't particularly care for company.

"What's the matter with a rattlesnake fight?" said Jack to me one day when we were keeping Sunday for a change, although we had lost all track of Sundays.

"I told him pretty sharply that I had never heard of one, and then he went on to tell how he was in the San Juan country in Colorado, where the boys worked up a fight between two different dens of rattlers and had lots of fun. He said he knowed where there were two sets of serpents, not far from the camp, that were fast coming out for the summer campaign, and he thought there was a good chance for us to have considerable fun with the pizenous devils. I am not struck on rattlers as a general thing, but we set out for the place, Jack carrying a canteen of Mexican whiskey and me one of water.

"Pretty soon we came to a place where the water had cut across a ledge of limestone running across the gulch, leaving precipices about twenty five feet high and about thirty feet apart at the top. At the bottom was a dry sand wash eight or ten feet wide and three or four feet above, irregular shaped shelves had been cut in each wall of the limestone. Sure enough these shelves were literally covered with rattlesnakes, stretched out at full length, warming life into themselves in the sun. I saw that there was two different gangs—those on my side being the black and white kind, short and stubby, which stay in the mountains and are always quick and vicious, while Jack's crowd was made up of the big, lazy, yellow mottled fellows, from five to six feet long, which go out on the deserts in the summer time, camp in holes with the prairie dog and ground owl, and can't crawl around more than three hours in the twenty-four without getting their bellies scorched by the hot sun. I counted exactly twenty of the blacks and calculate that there must have been twenty five or thirty of the larger kind on the other side of the arroya.

"We began dropping clods of dirt, bits of rock and cholla burrs down among the reptiles and soon disturbed their happy dreams. One after another coiled himself up and set his rattle agoing, while they darted their ugly heads around in every direction, trying to find out what was the difficulty. The sharper they looked for something to bite the madder they got and the louder they rattled, till at last their noise sounded like a drum corps leading a Fourth of July procession. When ever they'd slack up a little another chollo burr would start 'em up worse than ever. Finally, as they couldn't see us each gang seemed to conclude that the other was kicking up all the disturbance, and they all started down for the sand wash. Some were so mad and vicious that they didn't even stop to crawl, but rolled down in the sand all in a lump, so as to be on hand when the performance opened.

"When they all got down and it was a dead sure thing the game was 'bout to open, Jack sang out to me: 'Mat, I'll bet you my half in the Silver Stirrup agin yourn that my side wins.'

"Now, Jack is a thouroughbred gambler, but he had more and bigger snakes than I did. Besides this, I thought a good deal of the Silver Stirrup, which was the name of our mine, and didn't like to play big stakes agin such odds. But if I let him bluff me out I knowed I'd never hear the last of it, so I sang back: 'I'll go you,' and plunked a cholla burr square among my gang of reptiles.

"This opened the ball, and at the very start I saw I had a chance for my white alley. The captain of Jacks crowd got out upon a rock behind his men, where he was dead safe, and did nothing but rattle, while my leader a glossy, black fellow, about two and a half feet long, cut a pattern for his band to follow, and then they all went at it like mad, a-rattling and a hissing and a-biting, so you could hardly tell which was which. There eyes were like beads of fire, there tales moved so fast you couldn't see 'em, and their heads shot here and there like flashes of lightning. It was a terrible sight, and mighty exciting, and Jack and me was a yelling and shouting like Apaches.

"Inside of three minutes after the fight opened only two rattlers were alive—Jacks big snake which still stayed upon the rock, and my captain, who had put the kibosh on three or four of the big clumsy sarpents without getting a scratch himself. The little black fellow was dead game, and he kept waltzing around the rock, trying to get the big yellow coward to come off and finish the fight. But Jack's snake seemed to want the best of the game all the way through, and showed no sign of giving up the advantage he held.

"So interested was Jack and me in watching the jockeying and waiting for the outcome that we didn't see nothing else. All of a sudden we heard the 'thud! thud!' of a deer's feet upon the ground, and right before our eyes a big fine buck sprang into the air, and, holding all four feet so close together that they'd strike upon a silver dollar, he hit fair and square upon Jack's big sarpint. There wasn't as much as a button of his rattles left. You know a deer hates a rattlesnake like an Injun does soap. Well, that buck must have been browsing around there when he caught sight of Jack's snake, and thought it a good time to get in his work on his natural enemy, which he did to the Queen's taste.

"'The Silver Stirrup is all mine!' I shouted to Jack, and began cheering."

Tenderer—"I feel it just as much, my dear little boy," said papa after he had spanked Billykins. "Y-yes," sobbed Billykins. "Bb-ut n-not in the s-same p-place."

"Were you ever in an engagement, major?"

"Oh, yes; several. But you see I escaped harm."

"Never was wounded, eh?"

"Never was married."

"Why, Mr. Ardent, how ungallant of you to say you thought I was thirty-two!"

"Well, it certainly struck me that you were somewhere near the freezing point."

Returned Traveler—Is your daughter as fond of music as ever?

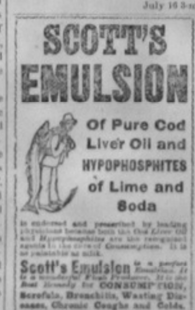
Hostess—She has not touched the piano for two years.

Returned Traveler—Indeed! I did not know she had married.

A great grandmother at the age of 47! This is the record of Mrs. Henry K. Updegrave, of Tower City, Pa. She was married in her 14th year; her oldest daughter was married at 15; her grand-daughter was married at 16, and is now a mother.

TINSPOUTING.

A. W. Arbogast, of Monterey Va., will be in the County for several months spouting houses. Parties wishing work of this kind done can do no better than to get him to do it.



Every man in the County should take it, and patronize home industry It sustains your rights, and works for the advancement of your county, which no city paper will do. It gives you the news from all parts of the county, which you could not get otherwise. It furnishes matters of interst to the Merchant, Farmer and Mechanic. It keeps you posted and gives you information, on all general news, and its sections and Miscellany are fit for all ages.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION,

One year in advauce	$1.00
If not paid within 6 months	1.25
And at the end of th yaer	1.50

AND IF YOU NEED

Letter Heads, Note Heads, Bill Heads, Envelopes, Drug Envelopes Tags, Business Cards, Official Blanks, Blank Bonds, Posters Briefs for the Court of Appeals etc

GET THEM AT "THE TIMES"

JOB OFFICE,

POCAHONTAS TIMES.

Vol. 9. JOHN E. CAMPBELL, EDITOR AND PROPRIETOR. Huntersville, West Virginia, Thursday, July 30, 1891. Terms of Subscription. $1.00 PER YEAR. IN ADVANCE. No. 1

Official Directory of Pocahontas County

Judge of Circuit Court, A. N. Campbell.
Prosecuting Attorney, L. M. McClintic.
Sheriff, J. C. Arbogast.
Deputy Sheriff, Geo. W. Callison.
Cl'k Co. Court, S. L. Brown.
Cl'k Cir. Court, J. H. Patterson.
Assessor, C. O. Arbogast.
Com'rs Co. Ct. C. E. Beard. / S. B. Hannah. / G. M. Kee.
Co. Surveyor, Geo. Baxter

THE COURTS.

Circuit Court convenes on the first Tuesday in April, 3rd Tuesday in June and 3rd Tuesday in October.

County Court convenes on the 1st Tuesday in January, March, October and second Tuesday in July. July is levy term.

Letter From Dr. Hudson.

The following letter we clip from Union Star (Mo.) Comet, written by Dr. W. M. Hudson:

GREEN BANK, W. Va., June 27.

EDITOR Comet: Here we are, lost right in the heart of the Alleghany mountains, at the headwaters of the Greenbrier and James rivers, the latter coursing east and feeding the Atlantic ocean at York town, the former flowing west through the Ohio and Mississippi to the gulf, and on its way mingling with the waters of Platte and Third Fork.

We left Union Star on the 9th and were just thirty six hours reaching Ronceverte, Greenbrier county, West Virginia, and from there we had an up and down and rough and tumble stage ride of 72 miles over the steepest, wildest, grandest and most picturesque scenery this side of the Rockies, many places so steep that a mishap or upset would have hurled the stage hundreds of fee, to the foot of the mountain.

Since our arrival here we have been hunting fishing and climbing mountains day in and day out, and it is no child's play to climb mountains here, but fine sport to fish. We went up to the creek yesterday and caught 200 mountain trout, the real genuine, speckled, frisky fellows. They give the angler a double dose of sport; first in catching them, and then in eating them. The only fish here are the trout and bass, and the streams are clear and cold and fed by mountain springs, cold as ice, in every direction. You may just whisper to our friends that we are having a big old time. Of course you will know it is high time when I tell you we are on top of the Alleghany range, 5,000 to 6,000 feet above the level of the sea. To give you a rough idea, a very rough idea of what some think of the height of these mountains and depth of the valleys, let me give you a rude but expressive verse, carved on the bark of a tree in one of the deepest recesses of this mountain chain by some reckless poetic wag. It reads thus:

"These mountains are as high as heaven,
And these valleys deep as hell;
But the people living on them
Are very kind and treat us well."

Yes, the chief characteristics of these mountain people are kindness and hospitality. They abhor avarice and selfishness, so much cherished and practiced in many other parts. They live a slower life than we do in the west; they work and eat and sleep slower, they ride and drive and plow slower, and this aids them in living happy and longer than we do. We live two years while they live one. We tax our energies and exhaust our strength in the middle of the heat; they reserve theirs for the home stretch.

There is still a good supply of game in these mountains, such as bear, deer and wild turkeys, but hard to find at this season of the year. If it was fall or winter, the boys vow they would never return home without a pair of buck horns and a bear skin with which to astonish their school mates.

They have had an excellent season here and crops look well. It is a fine grazing country, but inferior in all other products of the farm. As an evidence of this, corn is worth $1 per bushel, while hay is plenty and cheap. The stores are like everything else here and away behind the age. Their trade is nearly all barter and but little cash, and to the honor of Pocahontas county, be it said, there is not a saloon in it; and furthermore, there is not one drug store or distillery in the county either, and yet there are plenty of rattlesnakes. Is this not strange? How paradoxical it seems. Many in the west would not beleive it. Just think of it—the mountains full of snakes and not a saloon, drug store or distillery in the county, and 72 miles to the drug store. Why, I knew men in Missouri who would die from the sheer thought of such a predicament. And yet it ought to teach a wholesome lesson to all who think they cannot and dare not live in a snaky country without a jug full of antidote hid about the house or stable. What do people drink here? Beer? No; there has not been a keg of beer in the country for ten years. They go to the pure, cold springs, so abundant here, and drink the pure liquor distilled up in these mountains by the Almighty, and that is what paints the rosy blush of health on their cheeks instead of there noses. Let us profit by their example by doing likewise.

We see but few familiar faces and friends whom we left thirty five years ago. What sad and wonderous changes these years have wrought. Here and there one with some of the old landmarks in his face, but alas! how few. Ah me! so many have crossed over the dark, silent and mysterous river while some have taken Greeley's advice and floated west with the tide of empire, till nearly all familiar faces are gone and nothing remains as it was in my boyhood, except those dear old hills and mountains and springs and creeks and rivers. May God bless them and their people. I will soon leave the, and only on the tablets of my memory will I see them hereafter, I fear. But it may be I will come again, for there will soon be a railroad through here and then the trip will be short and easy. We leave for home in about a week.

W. M. H.

PUNGENT POINTS.

The devil has lots of silent partners in the world.

A great many people get into the swim who can't swim.

The hill of life never has been graded and never will be.

A pessimist is a man who says it hurts to have teeth pulled.

If we are true to the present, we can expect much of the future.

Does any man ever know when he stops being agreeable and becomes a bore?

Suspicion of wrong doing breaks up more homes than actual wrong doing.

There are a thousand and one ways of making money; there is only one way to save it.

The sooner we learn the fallibility of all human kind, the sooner we respect ourselves.

The best friends a man has are those who are never called upon to prove their friendship.

No man ever forgot to charge his friends up with all the things he promised to do for them.

When woman obeys a man, she is his delight; when man obeys woman, he earns her contempt.

Love is a sacred matter, but it is difficult for a woman to make her fourth or fifth lover believe it.

If a man can learn to forget himself, he is in a very fair way of earning popularity by remembering others.

If it gags a man to kiss a woman, why doesn't it gag a woman to kiss a man? Women are much more [illegible] than men.

Alliance News.

Late Matters of Interest Partaining to the Order.

The Montezuma Record, (Ga.) says: Why not boom farming for awhile? It has been run down long enough. Let us turn off the chronic grumblers who have had sutch a glorious feast for the past fifteen years. There is no sense in running down the best business on the earth. Now is a good time to talk up farming and keep talking it up until we make it easy for a farmer to borrow money at a reasonable rate.

Garden City Alliance: The government is now loaning money to the people, through the medium of national banks as loan agents, at the rate o f 10 per cent per annum. The people demand that this money shall be loaned direct to them at the rate of 2 per cent per annum. The difference to the borrower is this: $1,000 loaned at 10 cent per annum, compound interest, in twenty years amounts to $6,722.50, while the same amount loaned for the same length of time at 2 percent, amounts to but $1,485. The difference between these two sums is the profits of the banks for acting as loan agents for the government. The people simply demand that the government shall act as its own loan agent and save them these enormous profits.

If the movement inaugurated by the Alliance is right, and we believe it is, none should be more ready to give it their sanction than our merchants, who are aware of the fact that anything that will rebound to the good of our farmers will be of good to them also. If the sub-treasury idea will, as a means for which it is intended, get more money in circulation in the country, no one will feel the good arising from it more perceptibly than the merchant. And it is offered by the Alliance as a way to get more money into circulation, and at a low rate of interest which the producer can stand. If the Alliance is the means of getting $50 per capita in the circulation there will be more to spend and more goods will be bought. No one will question this statement. Then would not the merchant profit by it? He most certainly would, and we believe that in a majority of cases the farmers and laborers have the good will of the merchant in their endeavors to bring about these measures.—Commercial.

More than 1,000 voters join the colored Alliance every day that the sun rises. Suppose, then, that twice as many join the Farmers Alliance, Total 3,000 daily. Surely the traitors who are trying to stay among us and oppose our demands will take this hint and pull out. Politicians who have mocked stay at home, and partisan newspapers who have spent their energies to throw contempt upon us may prepare for earnest work. Ministers of the gospel who have left their sacred calling to heap scurrilous remarks upon our members and officers because we tried to help and save the downtrodden poor, may find their roads to the warm climate they speak of shortened many leagues. Surely the pulpit that feels no interest in 2,000,000 American citizens turned into common tramps, that hears without a tear of 3,000,000 American maidens driven to bawdy houses and other dens of shame for shelter and food, that preaches about charity and the sorrows of the Irish while [illegible] and officers in holy Pennsylvania are spending the holy Sabbath evicting thousands of American families, nee the ax at its roots. Lord send us another John the Baptist with an ax. Or if more in accord with "Thy providences," water the Alliance with Thy truth that they may continue to and do Thy will. Amen!—National Alliance.

The Laboring Man Gets Left.

It is reported that the employees in one of the big cloak-making establishments of Cleveland were recently notified that a reduction of wages was necessary.

The toilers were under the impression that their pay was small enough any way and so walked out of the shop in a body.

This is one of the protective industries and it furnishes a good illustration of the kind of prosperity we shall enjoy when the McKinley bill gets a good head of steam on.

Mr. McKinley has crowded his pet illusion down the throats of a patient people and it is bringing about a condition of affairs which is just what we don't want.

The wage earner looked forward to a higher reward for labor, but instead of that his income is cut down ten per cent.

However, he may possibly like it, and if he does we have nothing to say.—N. Y. Herald.

THE LIEUTENANT LOST HIS BEER.

"How is it, Lieutenant," asked a young man of a gray-mustached naval officer, "that with your many years of sea life, involving, no doubt, many strange adventures, one never hears you relate your experiences of the sea?"

"Well," was the answer, "I will relate to you a little instance of misplacing confidence. Some years ago I was attached to a ship on the China station. One night it was my turn to take the midwatch. I settled myself on the starboard bridge-rail.

"In a few moments I noticed a commotion in the water close to the ship. There appeared not more than a half cable length from where I was standing a most gigantic sea serpent. I had often read of such things, but had never believed in them, but I could not doubt the evidence of my own eyes. In a moment it vanished, to reappear the next instant almost under our bow. The moon was shining brightly and I got a good look at it. The monster's head was full the size of an ordinary flower barrel and it was at least twelve feet above the water.

"It disappeared in a few moments. The next morning at breakfast I related my experience to my brother officers, and soon after turned into my bunk. Just before lunch I felt like drinking a glass of beer, and ringing for the boy, ordered him to bring me a bottle. The rascal didn't appear in a reasonable time and I rang again. 'What's the matter with the beer, Jim?' I asked.

"'Nothin' de matter wid de beer, Mr. Bolstay.'

"'Then why don't you bring it?'

"'Can't do it, Mr. Bolstay. De doctor done stopped yore beer. Said dat a pusson dat sees such snakes as you was talking about dis morning ain't to hab no more beer.'

"And that is the reason I don't like to tell remarkable stories.—N. Y. Times.

Pocahontas Times.

JOHN E. CAMPBELL,
EDITOR AND PROPRIETOR.

Entered at the Post-office at Huntersville, W. Va., as second class matter.

ADVERTISING RATES.

	1 m.	3 m.	6 m.	1 yr.
One inch	$ 1 00	$ 3 00	$ 3 00	$ 5 00
Three in.	3 00	4 00	6 00	10 00
Qr. column	5 00	6 00	10 00	17 00
Half col'n	6 00	12 00	20 00	30 00
One col'n	10 00	30 00	30 00	50 00

Reading notices, not exceeding five lines, twenty-five cents for each insertion, and five cents a line for each additional line.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION.

One copy, 1 yr., $1.00 in advance; after 6 months, $1.25; after 12 months, $1.50. These terms will be strictly complied with.

Huntersville. W. Va.
July 30, 1891.

THE TIMES' NINTH YEAR.

With this issue THE TIMES passes its ninth year of existence, and it is now in a more healthy condition than it has ever been before.

It has been a little less than two years and a half since we took charge of it and since that time we have paid for it, nearly doubled its circulation, built as good an office as there is in any country town in the State added as good a job press as there is made, and a large amount of new type and many other things necessary to make up a printing office; we have increased our job printing at least one half, and are daily being complimented both on THE TIMES and the work we turn out.

We expect to enlarge THE TIMES as soon as circumstances will permit, and in the meantime we are going to give you a newsy little paper, worth at least, the dollar you pay for it. We want one thousand subscribers by this fall, and are going to have them if it is in our power.

Thanking our friends and patrons very much for their patronage and past favors, and believing we can do better in the future, we ask them to stick to us as we will to them and do for us as we will do for them.

Senator Hall makes a very big mistake if he realy thinks, as he recently said, that reciprocity is to crowd out the tariff and silver as issues in the presidential campaign.

"The republican party is in a bad shape at the North," writes a republican correspondent of the New York Tribune. He might just as well have added East, West and South, for the g. o. p. is in bad shape everwhere.

The hardest thing for republican speakers and editors in Ohio to explain is, why wool is cheaper now than it was before the McKinley bill became a law, instead of higher, as Maj. McKinley had assured his wool-raising constituents that it would be.

Will the next republican national convention dare to put the one cent letter postage plank, which was conspicious in its last platform, and which has been utterly disregarded by the present administration, into its platform?

It will certainly be queer if woman suffrage becomes one of the issues upon which the next parliment of Great Britian is elected, and yet recent remarks of Lord Salisbury in favor of the issue and of woman suffrage make it apparent that such an issue is probable.

The farmers of Ohio will have an excellent opportunity this fall to express their opinion of the high tariff legislation of the republican party, which taxes them for the benefit of a few "protected" manufacturers, and there is little doubt that the opinion will be most emphatically expressed at the ballot box.

One by one the big republicans are declining to accept the nomination of their party for Govenor of New York. The meaning is plain. These gentlemen are not ambitious of leading a political forlorn hope, nor of opening their barrels for nothing. New York is naturally a democratic state, and this year the party is so thoroughly united that victory is assured in advance.

The New York Herald has been doing a bit of excellent service for the poor of this country by showing up a number of the coporations organized solely to catch the savings of the honest and industrious working man and woman by glittering promises of great benefits to follow small investments in their stock. Only a paper as wealthy and as widely circulated as the Herald could afford to expose these concerns, which are often bolstered up by the names and influence of men of prominence.

When the amendment to the McKinley tariff bill provided for the payment of a bounty to the American sugar producer was before Congress it was estimated and so stated in public by republicans that it would not cost over $7,000,000 a year, and a longheaded democrat who predicted that the payments under the amendment, if it became a law would not be less than $10,000,000 for the first year and after that much larger, was hooted at by the republicans. Now let us see which statement was nearest the truth. The Internal Revenue at Washington has made up from official data an estimate of the sugar product of the present fiscal year and its figures are 539,710,000 pounds on which the bounty will be $11,134.000, or nearly twice as much as the largest republican estimate.

WASHINGTON LETTER.

From our regular correspondent.

WASHINGTON, D. C., July 24th—The Harrison crowd were badly stampeded by the publication in this correspondence last week of the fact that the Blainietes had in the slang of the day "got onto" their scheme of making Mr. Blaine too ill, in the newspapers, to think of being a candidate next year, and denials have been the order of the day ever since, but the Blaine fellows are by no means satisfied with denials because they have in their possession a number of republican papers which printed Washington specials supposing them to be sent by "Lige" Halford's protege and therefore be not only true but to be strictly in accordance with the sentiment of the administration, or rather its head, and they refuse to believe that it is a mere coincidence that these papers are all anti-Blaine sheets. They don't think the excuse that "Lige's" protege was out of town and that these anti-Blaine specials were sent by a substitute is a satisfactory one. The oddest part of this comedy of errors "is that these super-serviceable Harrison men have offended the man they were trying to help and they have been sharply lectured, by the proxy, by Mr. Harrison, who however much he may fear Mr. Blaine doesn't approve of this method of disposing of him. The whole affair is furnishing no end of amusement for democrats.

It is now stated at the State Department that the arbitrators in the Behring sea controversy will soon be appointed, an agreement having been reached between the department and Syr Julian Pauncefote, the British Minister, and the papers sent to Mr. Harrison.

A gentleman from Texas, who although prominent in that State is so modest that he doesn't wish his name mentioned, has, by a few words more or less carelessly spoken, given those interested in the Speakership contest something to think about. He said: "There is considerable pressure being brought to bear upon Gov. Hogg to persuade him to call an extra session of the legislature. He has not given no intimation of his intentions, but if he calls the extra session one of the duties will be to elect a United States Senator, and I rather think that Representative Mills would be elected although a combination of the other aspirants, among whom are the Govenor and Mr. Chilton, who was so promptly named by the Govenor as successor to Senator Reagan, might result in his defeat." If the legislature of Texas should meet in extra session any time before next December it is certain that some very strong democratic influence from outside of that State will be brought to bear to get Mr. Mills elected Senator, because that would remove him from the Speakership contest and a number of other gentlemen are ready and willing to go into a good natured catch-as-catch can scramble for the votes that have been pledged to Mr. Mills for speakership, which would de released by his election to the Senate.

Representative Oates, of Alabama, who is here on business, loses no opportunity to warn the Southern democrats of the danger which he thinks menaces it in the Farmer's Alliance. He said: there are certain men who have joined hands with the Alliance simply with a desire to advance their personal interests and pull down every man who has gained any political prominence. Unless the democrats of the South come to some understanding and determine to live up to the principals of the democratic party, the Alliance, in its efforts to dominate that section may capture Alabama, Georgia and the two Carolina's.

It caused little surprise here to lerrn that Secretary Foster will become a candidate for the Senate,—in case the republicans elect the legislature in Ohio this year, as it has been known for some time that the administration influence would be thrown against Foraker.

The Spanish minister hurriedly returned to Wash'ngton this week from Cape May where his family are now staying, and there is an unverified rumor that there is a hitch somewhere regarding the reciprocity agreement with Spain, which for some reason Mr. Harrison has never yet made puclic. The usual mysterious silence is preserved at the department and the minister will sap nothing further than that he was called to Washington on important business.

It is extremely difficult just now to find a cabinet officer in Washington; they flit in one day and out the next and are mone intent upon having a good time than in attending the busines of the Gonernment.

Under the reorganization of the Postoffice departmeht just completed the First Assistant Postmaster General will attend to many things that hane been looked after by Mr. Wanamaker and that gentieman will have more time to look after his private busines, in order that he may be in a position to make a large campaign bontribution next year. This is reform!

The Mew Jersey girl who eloped with a Chinamen certainly took the wrong cue.

NOTICE TO CONTRACTORS.

Under an order of the County Court of Pocahontas County made July 16th, 1891, sealed bids in writing addressed to the undersign. or either of them, at Huntersville, (P. O.) Pocahontas Co., West Virginia, or handed to either, will be recieved until 12 o'clock. Monday, of the 3rd day of August, 1891, for the construction of a Wooden Trestle Appaoach to the Bridge at its Southern end, over Knapp's Creek near Huntersville in said Pocahontas County.

Specifications for said work are recorded in the Clerk's Office of said County Court which will be shown by the Clerk of said Court on application to him.

Bond with good personal security in a penalty equal to bid conditioned for completion of said work according to said specifications within 60 days from said third day of August, 1891, must accompany such bid.

Right reserved to reject any or all bids.

J. H. Patterson,
A. Barlow,
L. M. McClintic, } Comm'rs.

July 23 2t.

HOME [illegible]

—Subscribe for THE TIMES.

—Read the Alliance news on the first page.

—Mr. M. G. Mathews, County Supt. was in town Monday.

—Mr. Jno. J. Beard and daughter Mrs. C. F. Moore, started Monday for Webster Springs, where they will spend several weeks for their health.

—In this issue will be found an interview with ex-Senator Camden by a Wheeling register reporter, in regard to the West Virginia and Pittsburg railroad, which will be very interesting to the enterprisidg citizens of our county.

—Mrs. Minnie Early and little son Forest who have been visiting her parents at this place for several weeks past, started for her home in Union, Monroe Co., Monday, accompanied by her brother J. C. Loury, Jr., Esq.

—E. M. Rutledge, Esq., the mail carrier between this place and Dunmore, had the misfortune to let his horse run off Monday, near Mr. Jno. McCutcheon's. No serious damage was done except to smash up his cart considerably.

—On the first page will be found a letter from Dr. Hudson, who moved from the upper end of this County to Mo., about 35 years ago. He came back on a visit a month or two ago, and wrote back to his home paper of his trip and our country.

—The Huntersville Farmers Alliance met last Saturday and elected officers for the ensuing year. It will meet again the 2nd Saturday in August, and at which time there is important business to transact, and it is earnestly requested of every member to be present. It is the duty of every Alliance man or woman to be present at these meetings, and do everything in their power to promote its interests. There is no use in having an order if we do not attend the meetings and take interest enough in it to keep it up.

—Mr. Decatur Axtell, vice President of the Chesapeake and Ohio railroad, of Richmond, Va. and Dan'l O'Connell Esq., were in Huntersville last Friday night. Mr. Axtell was looking over the survey of the extension of his road, made a month or two ago to this place. He also visited Marlinton, six miles below here, and was very much pleased with the grade between here and there; it being only a fall of 20 feet to the mile, which is a most excellent grade for a rail road. It is not deffinitely known yet, as we understand, whether the C. & O. will meet the West Virginia and Pittsburg road at this place or at Marlinton; but it is an assured fact that the roads will be built next summer. Mr. Axtell was very much pleased with our country, and remarked when he started the next morning that the next time he came he would come on the railroad.

—The County Court of Bath County, have built a most excellent road from Warm Springs to the top of Allegheny mountain, about 8 miles above here, and placed mile posts on the same, which would be very convenient to the traveling public, if they would keep a man at each one to explain the signs, or probably a card tacked on them with explanations in detail would answer: The following is a facsimile of the first post you come to going east, and if any one can explain the meaning they can do more than we can:

G
11
and 15
and 44
M

H
7
1/2
1/2
M

[illegible] very much dislike to [illegible] of our patrons to trouble, and therefore hope they will settle as soon as they are presented, as we mean business. It is not our plan to continually dun our patrons through THE TIMES; but to notify them by letter, of their indebtedness, and give them ample time, and then if they do not pay up, place their acc'ts in the hands of an attorney for collection. We have built a first class printing office this spring and added largely to our printing material which cost us a considerable sum of money, a part of which we still owe and which must be settled at once, and we hope our patrons will take a business view of the matter and not take offence at the presentation of their accounts, but pay them and order THE TIMES for another year.

—W. T. Slaven will visit each family in the County with a book called the "New Method" tells how to cure diseases without the use of drugs. He can furnish best of reference as to the results of the treatment of it. Sold at $2.00 each.

Dunmore Doings.

The roughest road that we have traveled over since the war is up Clover creek and across Elk mt.

We found the road good betwen Split Rock and Edray, and much improvement going on in that section

We found lots of business going on at Edray.

The Farmers Alliance is booming all over the County, except in Green Bank district. We must get a hustle on us or we will be left.

Rev. J. A. McCall has returned to his circuit.

We notice the Court did not make any arrangements to have a bridge built across the river at Sitlington's creek.

Prof. G. E. Swecker, of Crabbottom, Va., was out this week and got a load of furniture for the Lutheran parsonage at that place.

Morgan Wakeman leaves today for his new home in Orange county, Va.

Mr. B. F. McElwee leaves to day for Ronceverte. He has had patented a section box for mowing machines which beats anything in the U. S.

Dunmore is about to get on a boom. We have one store and will soon have two more. Oposition is the life of trade.

Singing at X road school house Agug. 2nd, at 2 p. m.

Singing at Baxter church the 9th of August.

The furniture and organ for the new church at this place have come.

Capt. Smith is off for Ronceverte.

T. S.

INSTITUTE NOTICE.

The Teachers Institute for Pocahontas County will convene in Huntersville, August 10th, at 10 o'clock a. m.

The law requires that all teachers attend some Institute. Those who hold four years certificates not exempt.

Teachers will be required to put in full time or no certificates granted. Examination at close of Institute.

All applicants for first grade certificates must attend this examination.

M. G. MATHEWS, Co. Supt.

H. T. SCHOOL.

The fifth session of the Hillsboro Training School will open Sept. 2nd 1891. For further information address,

Miss G. M. SHEARER, Principal.
Academy P. O. W. Va.

[illegible] Camden Talks

[About] the Great Railroad Developement in West Virginia.

A Wheeling Register reporter interviewed ex-Senator Camden, the 24th inst, in regard to railroad building in W. Va., in which the following will be of very great interest to the people of Pocahontas County. In speaking of different railroads in which the ex Senator is interested the reporter asked him about the density of the forests along the line of the Pittsburg W. Va. road:

"It is very dense," said Mr. Camden. "There are four or five hundred square miles that is practically an unbroken forest. Cherry, poplar, ash, oak and pine are very abundant—and the very finest cherry and oak. From the Gauley river the road will extend to a connection with the Chesapeake and Ohio road at Covington. Arrangements have just been completed between the Chesapeake and Ohio road and the West Virginia and Pittsburg road to form a junction at Marlin's Bottom, or some point on the Greenbrier river, where perhaps the largest town in the interior of the State will be made. This junction is expected to be made next summer. The C. & O. road will have only about twenty-five miles to complete from its warm spring branch on Jacksons river, and the West Virginia and Pittsburg road about thirty-five miles from the Gauley."

It is a very handsome location. The country between the Greenbrier river on the west, and Alleghany summit on the east, in Pocahontas county, is a pretty and productive plateau. It has fine limestone and is a good grassgrowing country, and has a large amount of iron ore.

"What effect will this connection have upon the future developement of the State?" asked the reporter.

"This connected with the C. & O. road," said Mr. Camden, "will open up a direct line through the center af the State, from the iron ore regions of Virginia, including Potts' creek, Craig's creek and the Low More and other furnaces in that section, to Wheeling and to Pittsburg while it will also develope and make accessible about 150 miles of the State between Weston and the Virginia State line, which has heretofore been inaccessible to exportation."

"How soon do you expect to have all that completed?"

"We expect to have it all completed next summer. The junction on the Greenbrier will be made next summer or fall."

In Europe they are talking about the feasibility of making sailors out of women. The idea will never become popular with the women of America, because the first duty of a sailor is obedience.

Cleanliness is next to godliness, but we should stick to soiled linen a long time before patronizing the Chinese leper who is allowed to conduct a laundry in New York City.

The news from every section of Ohio is encouraging to democratic success. Of course there is no objection; some don't enthuse over the platform and other's wanted another candidate, but now that both candidates and platfor mare accomplished facts there is a decided and praiseworthy disposition to lay aside personal prejudice and work for the good of the party.

SCHOOL HOUSE BUILDING.

Sealed and marked bids will be received at the office of the Secretary of the Board of Education of Huntersville District, until September the 1st, 1891, for the erection of a School house near Frost, to be completed by January 1st, 1892, according to the following plans and specifications: The house is to be 24x18 ft., 10 ft. high in the clear, 3 sills 24 ft. long and 10x10 in, 2 sills 18 ft long and 10x10 in; to have under the sills 18 good stone pillars, each with a 12 in. face, to be 2ft. under ground and 18 in. above ground, (no cobble or small stones to be used in filling centres of said pillars); to have 4 pillars under each side sill, 4 under centre sill and 3 under each end sill; sleepers to be 35 in number 9 ft. long and 10x3 in, to rest on side sill and centre sill 16 in. from centre to centre; floor to be laid lengthwise of good flooring lumber, 6 in. wide by 1¼ in. thick, broken jointed; to be ceiled with ceiling 7¼ or 6¼ in. wide, leaving a scuttle hole in ceiling above 2 ft. x 18 in. 4 ft. wide across rear and must be ceiled out of lumber entirely free from knots, and this space shall be blacked by contractor for use as a black board: upper joists to be 10 ft. 6 in. long 8x3 in. and 16 in from centre to centre; plates to be good and substancial, studding to be 11 ft. long 4x3 in 16 in. apart; to be weatherboarded horizontally, with lumber 6¼ or 7¼ in. wide; to contain 16 desks 8 ft. long, made according to the plan of those in the house on Beaver creek near Huntersville and two benches 8 ft. long for recitation purposes. House to contain 6 windows of 12 lights each, each light to be 9x14 inches; to contain 1 4 panel door 7x3 ft.; boxing to be what is called rail road boxing; to be covered with good white pine shingles either shaved or sawed; to have a good flue to extend 3 ft. above roof and well secured against fire where pipe enters. All lumber for weatherboarding ceiling or other inside work shall be well seasoned and nicely dressed, and all work to be done in good and workmanlike manner.

The contractor must file seperate bids for school house and desks and an aggregate bid for both. He must also file with said bid, bond with good security in double the amount of his bid. The Board obligates itself to pay $150 00 on completion of the work the residue, if any, in one year from that date. It also reserves the right to reject any and all bids.

By order of the board.

C. F. M[illegible]

Pocahontas Times.

JOHN E. CAMPBELL,
EDITOR AND PROPRIETOR.

Entered at the Post-office at Huntersville, W. Va., as second class matter.

ADVERTISING RATES.

	1 m.	3 m.	6 m.	1 yr.
One inch	$ 1 00	$ 2 00	$ 3 00	$ 5 00
Three in.	2 00	4 00	5 00	10 00
Qr. column	3 00	6 00	10 00	17 00
Half col'n	6 00	12 00	20 00	30 00
One col'n	10 00	20 00	30 00	50 00

Reading notices, not exceeding five lines, twenty-five cents for each insertion, and five cents a line for each additional line.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION.

One copy, 1 yr., $1.00 in advance; after 6 months, $1.25; after 12 months, $1.50.

These terms will be strictly complied with.

Huntersville, W. Va.
July 30, 1891.

FOILED.

The train was over crowded. Even if she had walked to the other end of the car, instead of stopping, shy and irresolute, as soon as she entered it, she would not have found an empty seat. She was somewhat nervous, too, for although her eyes wandered searchingly around she did not notice that an elderly gentleman had moved his plaid and satchel from his seat, and he gently touched her arm before she saw the offered place. If this had been a bit of trouble to him he was amply repaid by the bright smile that lighted up the troubled young face and thanked him more than her "Much obliged, sir." She was a pretty girl of the sunny, cheerful, healthy type that pleases not only the eye but warms the heart and calls forth sympathy everwhere, and she brought with her into the close car a whiff of fresh, fragrant May air without and a bit of morning sun entangled in her soft brown hair.

"Good bye, Martha."

She raised the window, and although the smile did not leave her face, a bright tear came to her eye as she looked at an old lady who stood on the platform gazing anxiously at the various heads at the window, and raising her hand to attract her friend's attention—"Good bye, mother, I'll soon be back."

At the sound of her voice a young man who had dozed away the long hours of the night on the seat behind her opened his eyes with a start and looked around in the crowded car with a bewildered face before a smile crept over it. "Just a dream, I was sure I heard mother's voice," he muttered.

The train now slowly pulled out but soon sped along at a 30-mile rate, and the uniform motion and noise of the wheels on the rails that acts like a lullaby on old travelers and like a nerve-crusher on a novice, had set in.

"Are you going far?" asked the old gentleman.

"... from going to Chicago ... world be.

involuntarily drew together and let slip a peculiar little whistle of surprise.

"Earnest Case." That was his father, so the girl before him must be his cousin Martha, the daughter of his mother's sister. Yes, and that was the explanation of the riddle that had puzzled him for the last half hour. Should he make himself known to her? "No, just wait," he muttered, and an arch smile flitted over his face as he thought of the indignant look with which she turned toward him when she heard the whistle and caught his curious glance over her shoulder. This, then, was Martha, the little Martha he knew so well, although he had never seen her.

As the train whirled on the old man knew how to draw out his young protege until she had told him nearly every event of her innocent young life and even her plans and expectations for the future.

"We'll be there soon now, Miss Martha," he remarked. You just keep close to me. Let me carry your shawl and satchel.

"Ah!—I must have dropped my bunch of violets. I told you, you know, that my uncle was to recognize me by flowers," and she began anxiously to hunt on the floor while the passengers all hurried into the aisle to get out of the car as quickly as possible.

"Never mind the violets; I'll see to everything," consoled the old gentleman. "Come on now."

He had taken hold of her bundle, and, letting her go before him, he handed her out of the car and in an instant more was lost in the crowd which had thronged to reach the open doors.

Young Case nearly lost sight of her as he looked around for the well known stately figure of his father, and it was only when he stepped out on the pavement that he saw the old gentleman and Martha get into a cab, which immediately drove of at high speed. For a moment the young man stood motionless, as if thunderstruck by a thought which flashed through his mind, but only a moment. The next found him already in a second cab whose driver had orders to follow the vehicle which was just turning into

... aisle have been the ... day ever since, but the Blaine fellows are by no means satisfied with denials because they have in their possession a number of republican papers which printed Washington specials supposing them to be sent by "Lige" Halford's protege and therefore be not only true but to be strictly in accordance with the sentiment of the administration, or rather its head, and they refuse to believe that it is a mere coincidence that these papers are all anti-Blaine sheets. They don't think the excuse that "Lige's" protege was out of town and that these anti-Blaine specials were sent by a substitute a satisfactory one. The oddest part of this comedy of errors is that these super-serviceable ... rison men have offended the ... they were trying to help and have been sharply lectured, by proxy, by Mr. Harrison, who ... ever much he may fear Mr. ... doesn't approve of this method of disposing of him. The whole ... is furnishing no end of amusement for democrats.

It is now stated at the State Department that the arbitrators in the Behring sea controversy will be appointed, an agreement having been reached between the ... ment and Sir Julian Pauncefote, British Minister, and the pa... to Mr. Harrison.

A gentleman from Texas ... though prominent in that ... modest that he doesn't ... name mentioned, has, by ... words more or less ... ken, give those interested ... Speakership contest ... think a bout. He said: ... considerable pressure being ...

Will the next republican national convention dare to put the one cent letter postage plank, which was conspicious in its last platform, and which has been utterly disregarded by the present administration, into its platform?

It will certainly be queer if woman suffrage becomes one of the issues upon which the next parliament of Great Britian is elected, and yet recent remarks of Lord Salisbury in favor of the issue and of woman suffrage make it apparent that such an issue is probable.

The farmers of Ohio will have an excellent opportunity this fall to express their opinion of the high tariff legislation of the republican party, which taxes them for the benefit of a few "protected" manufacturers, and there is little doubt that the opinion will be most emphatically expressed at the ballot box.

most immediately.

The knight of the club ... from one to another.

"Tell the young lady if this is La Salle Avenue."

"LaSalle Avenue! Why, no. Who told you that, miss?"

"Excuse me," whispered the old gentleman to Martha. "I must speak a few words to the cabby about this." He shook off her arm, and before any one can prevent him he had jumped into the cab, which started off as fast as it came.

Mrs. Smith disappeared with equal alacrity.

"You did a good piece of work here," remarked the policeman. "You want to go La Salle Avenue? What number?"

Poor Martha was so utterly distracted that she was unable to answer.

"She want's to go to —— LaSalle Avenue," said the young man, "and I think it would be best to send her there at once in my cab."

"Here's the card," sobbed Martha, opening the satchel, but no card could be found. Perhaps it had followed the bunch of violets.

"Take this instead, Martha," said the young man with a pleasant smile.

"Charles Case," she read.

"That is my name, Miss Martha, but I am afraid you won't believe I'm your cousin Charley till Uncle Henry himself tells you so. Get into this cab," he added. "I'll take the cars, and shall be home soon after you."

Martha found her uncle's house without further difficulty.

TINSPOUTING.

A. W. Arbogast, of Monterey Va., will be in the County for several months spouting houses. Parties wishing work of this kind done can do no better than to get him to do it.

SUBSCRIBE

FOR THE

POCAHONTAS TIMES,

Every man in the County should take it, and patronize home industry It sustains your rights, and works for the advancement of your county, which no city paper will do. It gives you the news from all parts of the county, which you could not get otherwise. It furnishes matters of interst to the Merchant, Farmer and Mechanic. It keeps you posted and gives you information, on all general news, and its sections and Miscellany are fit for all ages.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION,

One year in advance,	$1.00
If not paid within 6 months	1.25
And at the end of th yaer	1.50

AND IF YOU NEED

Letter Heads, Note Heads, Bill Heads, Envelopes, Drug Envelopes Tags, Business Cards, Official Blanks, Blank Bonds. Posters Briefs for the Court of Appeals etc

GET THEM AT "THE TIMES"

JOB OFFICE.

POCAHONTAS TIMES.

Vol. 9. JOHN E. CAMPBELL, [illegible] ville, West Virginia, Thursday, August 6, 1891. Terms of Subscription: $1.00 PER YEAR, IN ADVANCE. No. 2

Official Directory of Pocahontas County

Judge of Circuit Court,	A. N. Campbe[ll]
Prosecuting Attorney,	L. M. McClint[ic]
Sheriff,	J. C. Arbog[ast]
Deputy Sheriff,	Geo. W. Callis[on]
Cl'k Co. Court,	S. L. Brow[n]
Cl'k Cir. Court,	J. H. Patters[on]
Assessor,	C. O. Arbog[ast]
Com'rs Co. Ct.	C E. Beard. S. B. Hannah. G. M. Kee.
Co. Surveyor,	Geo. Bax[ter]

THE COURTS.

Circuit Court convenes on the [illegible] Tuesday in April, 3rd Tuesday in J[une] and 3rd Tuesday in October.

County Court convenes on the 1st Tuesday in January, March, October and second Tuesday in July. July is levy term.

Transfers of Real Estate.

The following is a list of deeds entered to record for the month of June:

A deed from Wm. J. Sponaugle and wife to O. P., W. L. and G. L. Chew, for land, on east branch of Greenbrier River.

Thos. W. Hogsett and wife to J. B. Bradshaw for land near Traveler's Repose.

Salina Kertner to Robt. Barnes's trustee, for 33½ acres of land near Locust.

M. R. Malcomb and husband to Jno. T. McGraw, for land on Greenbrier river.

Hannah A. Waugh and husband to Levi Gay and Jacob Marshall for land on Greenbrier river.

Henry McNeel, to J. T. Hogsett for land in the Little Levels.

J. T. Hogsett and wife to H. [illegible] land near Hunte[rsville]

[illegible] nish?"

Her eyes were resting on the sewing machine when she replied:

"I want to varnish my machine; it is looking awful rusty."

"It is, for a fact," I assented looking closely at that piece of furniture trying in vain to see a scratch upon it; "it is looking horribly bad; I wonder you would allow it to stay in the house at all. It strikes me as singular you have not mentioned it before. Why that machine is a disgrace to the family! I hope none of the neighbors have seen it!"

"Oh, it is not so bad as all that, sir; besides, I never asked for an opinion from you," she said giving me a box on the left ear. "Will you send me the varnish?"

"Why certainly. What else can I do but send it—havent I got your orders?"

"Well now don't forget it."

Oh the short sightedness of man! Had I known of one-tenth the trouble that cup of varnish was to cost me, how gladly I would have forgotten to purchase it!

As I was leaving for the office my wife called out:

"Send it as early as possible, dear, and don't forget the brush!"

I did not know then that there were two kinds of varnish—a quick drying and a slow drying, so I simply ordered varnish and a brush. They would be sent imediately.

I went to the office.

I took dinner at a down town restaurant, and the varnish and brush had not entered my mind during the whole day.

Just as I entered the gate in the evening I thought of them.

It was "good dark" but the hall lamp had not been lighted.

And I think that was part of the plot.

I opened the door hurriedly and started in on a brisk walk down the hall.

I had hardly taken a step when I rammed my knee against a chair. Another step—another chair, both shins skinned and in the dark! I took another step, and my foot landed squarely upon baby's little rocker, which proceeded to turn bottom upwards causing me to lose my equilibrium, and I went sprawling to the floor, striking two or three more chairs in the meantime.

It made a terrible racket, and my wife inquired:

"What is the matter, dear?"

"Oh, nothing. Just swinging corners with chairs and things," I answered, as calmly as possible.

I scrambled to my feet and started again, when I struck that blasted machine, varnish and all, which landed me this time smack into the baby carriage, breaking the springs and very nearly breaking my neck.

"Did you hurt yourself dear?" came that voice again, which had the effect of making me feel like choking the life out of something or somebody.

"Did I hurt my self, you ask? Oh, no, not much," said I, "only broke a leg and arm, and punched one eye out—that's all."

"Why don't you come in?" she inquired in a tone of voice that was remarkable for its calmness, under the circumstances.

"Come in!" I screamed, "how in the name of sweet Solomon can I? Haven't I been trying for the last ten minutes to come in, and don't I run a great risk of losing my life every time I try it? Why in the name of all the saints didn't you tell me this morning you were going to move out in the hall, so I could have governed myself accordingly?"

Then she came to the door with a lamp, and I succeeded in getting myself untangled from that baby carriage, which presented the appearence of being kicked by a Georgia mule.

I stepped into my room with a weary bruised feeling, and laid my hand on the back of a big rocker.

"Don't touch that—it is varnished!"

"So I discover," said I as I pulled my finger from it.

I went to another chair and was preprring to sit down.

"Don't sit there—it is varnished!"

I made a dive for another chair, and was stopped—varnish!

The clock was ticking very lazily, and I knew it wanted winding. When I endeavered to take my hands from it, it came with them. My fingers had again stuck—varnish!

I was becomieg desperate.

My next move was to try a trunk. I dared not risk any more chairs. I took a seat before she could interfere, this time, and ruined a new pair of britches by the operation—the trunk was varnished!

This was two much.

"Now then," said I after pulling myself loose from the trunk, "will you please tell me, while I stand right still, where and what you have varnished? I should like to move inteligently after this. I see the baby has escaped, which is explained I suppose, from the fact that your stock of varnish was exhausted before it came her turn?"

She looked at me a moment with a pitiful smile, which smacked somewhat of contempt, and replied:

"Don't talk foolish, now. Go and sit on the front door stoop; every thing will be dry tomorrow morning."

"Sit on the front stoop, indeed! have you then in reality, smeared that stuff over everthing?"

"Don't my machine look better?" she said ignoring my question, and pointing with a satisfied air at the machine, which, by the way, was minus a leaf, jerked off in my last dignified fall into the baby carriage.

"Machine? Hang the machine! You did not stop with that; you've varnished everything in the house, including the house cat and window curtains!" I exclaimed with more vehemence than dignity.

At this outburst from me she laughed with a heartiness that was quite unusual with her, and replied:

"Well every thing needed it. I want you to send me another cup tomorrow, for the dining table and safe."

"You do? Well, I won't! I wouldn't trust you with another ounce of varnish in this house for four million dollars! Do you understand the amount—four million dollars! Now, that's a fact I wouldn't!"

It turned that I had purchased the slow drying kind, of course, and for the next month my fingers stuck to everything I touched, and some of the articles that fell prey to the brush of that amateur artist are not thoroughly dry yet—three months afterwards.

Alliance News.

Late Matters of Interest Pertaining to the Order.

FARMER'S ALLIANCE DEMANDS.

The following communicat on, we clip from the Monroe Watchman, which shows that the difference between the true Democratic principals and the Farmers Alliance with a single exception, could not be found with a fine toothed comb:

Editor Monroe Watchman.

You do not seem to be much in earnest in discussing the Alliance demands. As you yourself admit, you did not have my communication before you when you wrote an answer to it, and of course you missed the whole length of Europe, from Sweden to Switzerland. The truth is, you are two much of an Alliance man to seriously attack its demands. I am satisfied if you would follow your inclination, you would be in the ranks fighting the enemies of the people. Consider a moment. You are in favor of free coinage of silver, so is the Alliance. You are opposed to National banks, so is the Alliance. You are opposed to the political leaders, so is the Alliance. You have no faith in the machinery of either party, neither has the Alliance. You want more money so does the alliance. You are opposed to Aliens, Railroads and Corporations gobbling up the public lands, so is the Alliance. You are opposed to high tariff. The Alliance demands "a removal of the existing heavy tariff from the necessaries of life that the poor of our land must have." You are opposed to any iniquitous pension legislation. The Alliance demands "that the national revenue be limited to the necessary expense of the Government economically and honestly administered." Now you have swallowed the whole dose with the exception of the Sub-Treasury plan, and at that you do not scramble much. And when you study that (you have never done it) you will take it down too.

You say "the world is progressing." So it is. It has progressed so far as to know that gold and silver alone are no longer sufficient as a basis for the Nation's currency. Ninety seven per cent. of the business of this country is now done with credit paper, and hence the financial panics that visit us periodically. If it had not been for the silver certificates—it is now admitted by the bankers—we would have had a financial crash a year ago when Baring Bros. of London, failed. So the Alliance has determined to have a better basis for its money, one that England cannot steal from us, one that gold men cannot corner, one that will prevent usury, one that will prevent panics, one that will have more than a dollar's worth of product behind every legal tender dollar, one that will enable the man who has all his wealth in land and farm products to get the money of his Government without interest just as the man who has Government bonds can do now. Yes, one that will be a good basis until we all have become angels and need neither food nor clothing. This is the Sub-Treasury plan with its basis for a money issue found in the "raw materials" that go to make food and clothing for man.

Now as to the National banks not being agents of the Government, I would say: All banks of issue are now taxed ten per cent. upon their circulation. Why do not the National banks pay the tax? Simply because, as the agents of the Government, they are discharging a governmental function in issuing the "National Currency." The United States not only creates the bank but also the currency. Act they, in some places, are denominated "Financial agents of the Government."

As to the third party movement, I have said before the Alliance has not declared in favor of it. Until February, 1892, the Democratic party has a chance to put itself on the Alliance platform. If it fails to do this then the Alliance, as an independent organization, will support men who do stand on that platform. The Republican party, by its platform in the present Ohio campaign, declared against the Alliance. The Alliance has no leaders. It is a ground swell. The leaders are in the ranks.

But as to your condition, Mr. Editor, I am truly anxious. You are opposed to the Republican party, you want to destroy the leaders of the Democratic party, and are opposed to most of the legislation they by their votes held to enact. You are in a measure opposed to the Alliance, and finally opposed to the third party. I do not know where you will stand in 1892 unless you start a fourth party. But as you seem to stand with one foot and the toe of the other on the Allisnce platform, allow me to suggest that you come down flat footed with both feet on our platform, and turn your batteries loose upon the enemies of the people. We need all the help we can get. Every banker, every bond holder, every salaried office-holder, every millionair, every man, in short, who is making money out of the distress of the people is against the Alliance.—Fall into the ranks of the people. Put some "has seed" in your hair (alas! alas!) and if the terrible necessity shall come in 1892, be ready, as the one hundred thousand Republicans and Democrats did in Kansas last year, to sing "Good bye Old Party, Good bye."

S. A. HOUSTON.

THE OLD CRY.

It it a curious fact, according to the thick and thin party organs, that the farmers never know what they want. Is it out of order to ask the reason why? If the bankers of the United States assemble in convention and make a statement of their wants, no one doubts that they know what they want. So of the merchants; so of the lumberman; so of the manufacturers (those puny infants that have to be protected at everbody's else expense); so of everybody but the farmer, mechanic and laborer. If the farmers, mechanics and laborers conclude that they have certain wants and will make an effort to compass their wishes, all the big party organs begin to shout, "You dont know what you want!" Then all the little parties take up the chorus, "They don't know what they want." Well, will some body tell us why?

We want to say that if the new party formed at Cincinnati the other day shall sweep the country like a tornado there will come from such sweeping no harm to Democratic principals. There may come harm to democratic organizations, but there can come no harm to democratic principals. With one single unimportant exception, the principals laid down by the conference at Cincinnati are democratic to the core. We want this to be distinctly understood. Any real persons party is a Democratic party. Let this simple fact be kept in mind.—Progressive Farmer.

Pocahontas Times.

JOHN E. CAMPBELL,
EDITOR AND PROPRIETOR.

Entered at the Post-office at Huntersville, W. Va., as second class matter.

ADVERTISING RATES.

	1 m.	3 m.	6 m.	1 yr.
One inch	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]
Three in.	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]
Qr. column	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]
Half col'n.	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]
One col'n.	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]

Reading notices, not exceeding five lines, twenty-five cents for each insertion, and five cents a line for each additional line.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION.

One copy, 1 yr., $1.00 in advance; after 6 months, $1.25; after 12 months, $1.50.

These terms will be strictly complied with.

Huntersville, W. Va.

August 6, 1891.

Under a new law in Georgia, when a doctor is convicted of drunkenness he can no longer practice medicine in that State. The idea is rather to diminish the number of drunkards, or the number of doctors, or the death rate, or something of that sort.

Charles Leonard, a burglar, broke into a New York Saloon, and before opening the Safe sat down and smoked a couple of cigars from the case on the bar. Soon after a policeman found him sick and helpless on the floor. Any man who has smoked an ordinary saloon cigar will admire the burglar's courage while denouncing his indiscretion.

CONSUMPTION CURED.

An old physician, retired from practice, having had placed in his hands by an East India missionary the formula of a simple vegetable remedy for the speedy and permanent cure of Consumption, Bronchitis, Catarrh, Asthma and all throat and Lung Affections, also a positive and radical cure for Nervous Debility and all Nervous Complaints [illegible]

Words of The Alliance.

[illegible]

[illegible]

FINANCIAL STATEMENT.

For the year ending June 30, 1891.

M. J. McNeel, Late Sheriff, in account with Pocahontas County.

[illegible]

The following persons were paid amounts opposite their names respectively for services [illegible]

[illegible]

List of persons to whom County Drafts were issued which were paid and returned by the Sheriff for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1891.

[illegible]

[illegible]

$3000 [illegible]

—The H. T. [illegible] building is being enlarged in order to accommodate its own boarders for the coming session.

Faculty:

Miss G. M. Sheaver Prin. Miss [illegible] Sheaver Prim. Depart. Mrs. E. V. Le Grand, of Roanoke, assoc.

Miss Fannie Sheaver Domestic Department.

Charges:

Board $12 per mo.

Prim. Depart $1.50

1st Advanced $2.00

2nd Advanced $2.50

Music $2.50 for boarders in the institution. $3.00 for all others.

ORDER OF PUBLICATION.

At rules held in the Clerks office of the Circuit Court of Pocahontas County, West Virginia, on the first Monday in August 1891.

[illegible] Thompson Executrix of Wm. Thompson Deceased, Plaintiff

vs.

W. G. Gillespie, Defendant.

[illegible]

Teste: J. H. PATTERSON, Clerk.

Printers fee $7.00

HOME NEWS

—Attorney B. S. Turk, of Staunton, Va., is in the city.

—Farmers are about done cutting grass.

—Edwin Booth is reported dying from the effects of smoking.

—Call to see us when you come to the Institute next week.

—W. T. Slaven, Esq., of Mill Point called to see us today.

—A Randolph county firm is raising polecats for their pelts.

—Drummers are quite plentiful now.

—Mr. Price McComb, of this place has been sick for some time with rheumatism.

—Mr. J. H. Patterson Cl'k Cir. Ct., has returned from a few weeks visit to his home near Green Bank.

—Attorney L. M. McClintic returned last Saturday from a fishing expedition on William's river.

—The Farmers Alliance is hand in hand with the democrats in Ohio.

—Charleston voted $80,000 towards building a Railroad from that place to Sutton.

—Messrs. Uriah Bird and Mott Wallace, of Mill Point were in town Tuesday.

—Mr. D. J. Cochran, of Locust called to see us today.

—The St. Lawrence Lumber Camp two miles below this place has started up.

—Mr. H. W. Lockridge, of Buena Vista, Va., is spending a few weeks at his farm on Knapp's creek.

—There was a basket meeting at Buckeye last Sunday by Rev. Otto McKeever, of West Minister, Md.

—Attorney H. S. Rucher and family have returned from a six weeks visit to his parents at Lewisburg.

—Staunton, Va., will decide by its vote on the 22nd inst. whether the town will go dry or continue damp.

—B. F. McElwee passed through town last Saturday on his way home to Dunmore, from a trip to Ronceverte.

—Mr. Carlisle McKeever had the misfortune to get his leg broken at Mr. D. O'Connell's camp on Spice Run one day last week.

—Died, Mrs. Della Underwood, wife of Howard Underwood, Esq., at her home on Beaver Creek, of paralysis, aged about 25 years.

—Capt. E. A. Smith, of Dunmore had the misfortune to loose the fine iron grey stallion, with colic, he bought of G. W. Siple some time ago.

—Mess. G. W. Callison and J. C. Keaniser of Locust, called to see us last Thursday. They brought Sabina J. Kertner, lunatic to this place and placed her in jail to await removal to the Asylum.

—Remember the Farmers Alliance meets at this place Saturday. It is desired that all members be present, as there is important business to transact.

—Rev. W. T. Price, of Marlinton, contributed, to the State Historical society at Charleston a paper containing an account of the heroic services of Jacob Warwick, of Bath Co., Va., in the battle of Point Pleasant in 1774.

—One of the largest coal mines in this country is at Elk Garden W. Va., which has lately been opened. It has a capacity of 2,000 tons a day. A number of small veins are under the one just put in operation. The entire length of the main heading is at present 5,330 feet. It requires three shifts of men to do the work every twenty-four hours to keep the mine in running order. No horses of any consequence are used, as two 40-horse power engines are used instead of horses, mules, etc.—Ex.

Transfers of Real Estate.

The following is a list of deeds intered to record for the month of June:

A deed from Wm. J. Sponaugh and wife to O. P., W. L. and G. L. Chew, for land, on east branch of Greenbrier River.

Thos. W. Hogsett and wife to J. B. Bradshaw for land near Traveler's Repose.

Salina Kertner to Robt. Burns trustee, for 35½ acres of land near Locust.

M. R. Malcomb and husband to Jno. T. McGraw, for land on Greenbrier river.

Hannah A. Waugh and husband to Levi Gay and Jacob Marshall for land on Greenbrier river.

Henry McNeel, to J. T. Hogsett for land in the Little Levels.

J. T. Hogsett and wife to H. M. Lockridge for land near Huntersville.

Wm Skeen and wife to G. M. Whitescarver for land near Huntersville.

C. W. Callison to J. L. Rumbarger for Lumber Co., for land on Greenbrier river.

Peter Beverage to his son Jno. A. for land upon which the said Peter Beverage now resides.

A. J. Moore and wife to Wm. H. Collins for land on Back Allegheny.

J. H. Morris to J. W. Morris for land on Droop mountain.

C. P. Jones to C. T. Shewmaker for land near Frost.

Rachel L. McClure and husband to J. C. McClure for land on Briar Knob.

R. F. Adkinson to Hannah Cloonon for land on Swago creek.

C. W. Beard and wife to E. B. Beard and others, trustees for one acre of land in Little Levels.

M. C. Wooddell to B. C. Hill trustee for land in the Little Levels.

G. C. Clark and wife to W. W. Beard for one acre of land near Hillsboro.

Aaron Rydey and wife to Wilson Ryder for land near Frost.

Wm. S. Grimes and wife to R. S. Turk for land on Thorney creek.

Allen C. Barner and wife to McCurdy Hunter and others for her dower interest in certain lands on Alleghany mountain.

M. M. Barkett and wife and A. Barkett to R. S. Turk for land on Buffalo mountain.

Randolph Myers and wife to J. G. Myers for land on Big Spring branch of Elk.

J. W. Warwick to C. P. Dorr for land on Clover Lick and Greenbrier river.

J. F. Slaughter to A. C. Rucker for land on East side of Greenbrier river.

C. C. Rucker and wife to S. B. Moore and Wm. A. Rucker for land on west prong of Greenbrier river.

J. F. Moore and wife to A. S. Buzzard for land near Frost.

S. Harper and wife to Jno. T. Dixon for white pine timber in a certain tract of land on Alleghany mountain.

R. S. Turk, com'r to Uriah Bird for land on Thorney creek.

W. T. Gilkeson and wife to H. B. Hanger for land near Travelers Repose.

The Historical Society.

Rev. W. T. Price, of Pocahontas county has sent the State Historical society 15 copies of the Young Virginian, a monthly magazine published at Mt. Clinton, Va., in 1874, and 8 copies of The Faithful Word, also published at Mt. Clinton, together with the report of the Lexington historical committee of the Presbyterian church for the year 1844. It is a valuable contribution to the literature of Scotch Irish Presbyterianism in Virginia. Numerous visitors from a distance have been in the society's rooms to-day, all of whom expressed surprise at the collection and promised to lend the society all the assistance possible.—Charleston Star.

WASHINGTON LETTER.

From our regular correspondent.

WASHINGTON, D. C., July 31st—"Help me Cassius, or I sink" was the substance of a communication from Mr. McKinley, of Ohio, to the National Executive committee of the republican party, which met here this week. The story, as it is told here, is that Mr. McKinley sent a very urgent appeal to the committee for a large sum of money to be used in the Ohio campaign and that he sent along with a very broad intimation that unless it was forthcoming the jig was up with both himself and the legislature in that State. He is also said to have suggested that the committee might easily raise the money by putting the screws on the manufactures specially benefited by his tariff bill. And that was not the only appeal for money presented to the committee. Mr. Clarkson told his colleagues that unless a good sized barrel of cash was rolled into Iowa that State would take its place permanently in the democratic column, and Secetary Fassett presented bills for a considerable amount left unpaid from last years disastrous campaign. But these were minor things and excited but little interest compared with the resignation of Quay, not only as chairman of the two committees, but as a member of the National committee; and the resignation of Dudley as Treasurer of both committees. There was a good deal of pretended regret at being compelled to accept these resignations, and high flying resolutions were adopted referring to both of them, which will probably be regarded by the retired officials as "vindications".

Mr. Harrison tried to stem the Blaine tide which controls the republican committee by appointing one of its members—J. Sloat Fassett, of New York—to be Collector of the port of New York in place of Erhardt whose resignation has been accepted. Harmony of the monkey and parrot kind is prevalent in the Treasury department just now. At least three of Secretary Foster's most surbordinates would hail with pleasure the news that he had resigned, and they would resign themselves if it wasn't for the fact of their having to give up their salaries if they did. The surbordinates mentioned are Assistant Secretary Crounse, Treasure Nebeker and Immigration Commissioner Owens, all of whom are recent arrivals at the Government trough. The trouble with the first two is that Mr. Foster, with the warning of the Raum case fresh in his mind, refused to allow them to appoint their sons to be their paivate secretaries, and Mr. Owens is disgruntled because his opinion that Welch tin-plate workers could be brought to the United States under contract without violating the alien contract law has been repudiated by the Secretary who has written another letter to the party who made the enquiry stating that the department was not prepared at this time to answer hypothetical questions such as the one propounded. It is said that Mr. Foster also took occasion to give Mr. Owens a very sharp lecture on the duties of surbordinate officials.

Mr. Wanamaker has led a delegation of Alabamians, headed by Senators Morgan and Pugh to believe that he would favorably consider their request to make Mobile one of the ports from which a subsidized line of steamships will run to South America.

With a great flourish of trumpets the announcement is made that a reciprocity by treaty has been negotiated with the mighty republic of San Domingo, which will go into effect September 1.

Members of the administration have already begun to discuss the ways and means of raising the money [illegible] it will be absolutely necessary to have in the near future to meet pension payments under the present laws. Some sort of a new tax has got to be imposed, and the most of them seem inclined to put it upon whiskey by raising the revenue from 90 cents per gallon to something between $1.20 and $1.50 per gallon. However, all that the administration can do is to make suggestions; the democratic House of Representatives will determine what shall be done.

Senator Sherman's friends are trying hard to make it appear that they look lightly upon the opposition of the Farmer's Alliance to his re election, but in reality they regard it as such a serious matter that unless they can succeed in patching up some sort of a reconciliation before long one of them said that Sherman would be compelled to withdraw in order to save himself the ignomy of defeat.

Had Mr. Harrison been able to circulate incognitia among the prominent republican politicians who were here this week consequent upon the meeting of the National Executive committee he would certainly have arrived at the conclusion that he was no longer "in it", as far as a nomination is concerned. It was unquestionably a Blaine week in Washington, and if the National committee can bring it about Blaine is to be nominated, and one of their number—Col. Conger, of Ohio—is authority for the statement that he will accept the nomination if it is tendered him.

INSTITUTE NOTICE.

The Teachers Institute for Pocahontas County will convene in Huntersville, August 10th, at 10 o'clock a. m.

The law requires that all teachers attend some Institute. Those who hold four years certificates not exempt.

Teachers will be required to put in full time or no certificates granted. Examination at close of Institute.

All applicants for first grade certificates must attend this examination.

M. G. MATHEWS, Co. Supt.

SCHOOL HOUSE BUILDING.

Sealed and marked bids will be received at the office of the Secretary of the Board of Education of Huntersville District, until September the 1st, 1891, for the erection of a School house near Frost, to be completed by January 1st, 1892, according to the following plans and specifications: The house is to be 24x18 ft., 10 ft. high in the clear, 2 sills 24 ft. long and 10x10 in, 2 sills 18 ft. long and 16x10 in; to have under the sills 18 good stone pillars, each with a 12 in. face, to be 2ft. under ground and 18 in. above ground, no cobble or small stones to be used in filling centres of said pillars; to have 4 pillars under each side sill, 4 under centre sill and 3 under each end sill; sleepers to be 28 in number 9 ft. long and 10x3 in. to rest on side sill and centre sill 16 in. from centre to centre; floor to be laid lengthwise of good flooring lumber, 6 in. wide by 1¼ in. thick, broken joints; to be ceiled with ceiling 7¼ or 6¼ in. wide, leaving a scuttle hole in ceiling above 2 ft. x 18 in. 4 ft. wide across rear and must be ceiled out of lumber entirely free from knots, and this space shall be blacked by contractor for use as a black board; upper joists to be 10 ft. 6 in. long 5x2 in. and 16 in. from centre to centre; plates to be good and substantial, studding to be 11 ft. long 4x2 in. 16 in. apart; to be weatherboarded horizontally, with lumber 6¼ or 7¼ in. wide; to contain 16 desks 8 ft. long, made according to the plan of those in the house on Beaver creek near Huntersville and two benches 8 ft. long for recitation purposes. House to contain 6 windows of 12 lights each, each light to be 9x14 inches; to contain 1 4 panel door 7x3 ft.; boxing to be what is called rail road boxing; to be covered with good white pine shingles either shaved or sawed; to have a good flue to extend 2 ft. above roof and well secured against fire where pipe enters. [illegible] lumber for weatherboarding ceiling or other inside work shall be well seasoned and nicely dressed, and all work to be done in good and workmanlike manner.

The contractor must file [illegible] for school house and desks [illegible] separate bid for both. He must also file with said bid, bond with good security in double the amount of his bid. The Board obligates itself to pay [illegible] on completion of the work [illegible] if any, in one year from that date. It also reserves the right to reject any and all bids.

By order of the board.

C. B. Moore, Sec.

Pocahontas Times.

JOHN E. CAMPBELL,
EDITOR AND PROPRIETOR.

Entered at the Post-office at Huntersville, W. Va., as second class matter.

ADVERTISING RATES.

	1 m.	3 m.	6 m.	1 yr.
One inch	$1 00	$2 00	$3 00	$5 00
Three in.	2 00	4 00	8 00	10 00
Qr. column	3 00	6 00	10 00	17 00
Half col'n	6 00	12 00	20 00	30 00
One col'n	10 00	20 00	30 00	50 00

Reading notices, not exceeding five lines, twenty-five cents for each insertion, and five cents a line for each additional line.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION.

One copy, 1 yr., $1.00 in advance; after 6 months, $1.25; after 12 months, $1.50. These terms will be strictly complied with.

Huntersville, W. Va.
August 2, 1891.

IT WAS A SURE SIGN.

A very learned professor of astronomy—one who was skilled in the signs of the skies and the winds and the clouds—was once travelling. While on his journey he lost his way, and wandering about, came across a simple looking countryman, who was sitting under a tree tending a flock of sheep.

"Friend," said the professor, "can you inform me of the direction and distance to the nearest adjacent town?"

Now the countryman perceived that the professor was very wise, from the long words that he used; but he presently managed to understand him and replied:

"Yes, sir, it is all of five miles; but," he added "you will get a good wetting before you will get there."

This surprised the professor. He could not discover any signs of a storm, and he was so sure of his own knowledge in such matters that he laughed at the countryman and started his horse on the road pointed out to him.

But before he had gone two thirds of the distance a sudden black cloud covered the sky, the rain poured in torrents, and the wise man reached the inn soaked and disgusted.

The next morning, before he had proceeded on his journey, he determined to ride back and if possible find out by what hidden signs—of which he a great professor was ignorant—this foolish countryman had foretold the storm.

So he road back, and after spending a day in the search, found the countryman and explained what he wanted to know.

"I will not tell you my sign," said the countryman, "without a good sum of money."

They struck a bargain. The professor was so anxious to hear this valuable secret that he willingly paid the large amount demanded.

"Do you see, sir," asked the countryman, "that black sheep with a white face over there—the only black sheep in my flock?"

The professor said he did.

"Well sir," said the countryman, "when it is the fairest day in June, and when there is not a cloud in the sky, I surely know it going to rain if I chance to see that old sheep caper around with her tail held strait up in the air!"

"There's no flies on me," said the fly paper. "I wish I could say the same," answered the butter.

Mamma—"Don't you know what becomes of people who tell lies Mabel?"

Mabel—"Yes, m'a'm; they go to hell, and I know where hell is. It's in papa's library."

Mamma—"Why, daughter, how can you say such a thing?"

Mabel—"Well I went into there the other day and my music teacher was sitting in papa's lap."

Mamma (visibly moved)—"Well—?"

Mabel—"Papa said, 'Here's h—l!'"

... Earned Wealth.

... Rockefeller is worth $125,000,000 and Jay Gould $160,000,000. Now, let's see how much the sons of our great millionaires will be worth in, say, fifty years. George Gould will, in all probability, get the bulk of his father's wealth. Say Jay Gould don't die for five years more. He will then be worth fully $150,000,000 if his fortune rolls up as rapidly as it is doing now. If George Gould can manage to control and increase his father's millions, I have figured out that in forty years he will be worth a billion of dollars. John D. Rockefeller's heir, if his $127,000,000 goes to him in a lump, will be worth nearly two billion dollars in fifty years. The Rockefeller millions have accumulated very rapidly. Most of the great fortunes have rolled up in one generation, but the Rockefeller fortune has been made in less time. Allowing for an increase as rapid as in the past, and large rates of interest, I am pretty sure that the two billion dollars estimate will be correct. Well, William Waldorf Astor now has a fortune of $125,000,000. He will get at least seven per cent. on the estate, and will in all probability, live for twenty five years more. Now, the son, John Jacob Astor, will then be about forty five years old. Making computations at the rate of seven per cent. and compounding the interest semi-annually to allow for reinvestment the Astor millions in twenty-five years would roll up to $698,012,500. Then in twenty-five years John Jacob Astor could become a billionaire and have a few millions to spare. The chances are that nearly all the great fortunes will be augmented every year far beyond their natural increase. Investments by these men of millions are constantly being made that earn one hundred per cent. a year, and there are some no doubt that different percentages all the way up to five hundred or even one thousand.—N. Y. Telegram.

HE SMELLED FIRE.

The bobtailed blue car in Hoboken was prancing along at a gait not less than two miles an hour, when a long bodied man most of whom was hidden under a straw hat of the style of ten years ago, and who had a hoe handle standing up in the corner, suddenly sniffed the air to the right and left, and called out:

"Somebody's house along here is on fire!"

The seven or eight of her passengers pricked up there ears and looked around, but no one saw any signs of fire.

"Sumthins's a burnin', and I know it," continued he a moment later.

Everybody exhibited increased interest, and several heads were thrust out of the windows. One passenger finally observed:

"I guess everything is all right."

"Well I don't!" replied the owner of the hoe handle as he stood up. "I smell rags a-burnin', and don't you forgit it! My nose never goes back on me when rags begin to smoke! Hi! there—Its around you!"

The person addressed was a stylish looking young man, and there was a streak of blue smoke curling up behind him. He jumped up and grabbed his coat-tails, and willing hands helped him rub out the fire in the cloth, which had come from pipe or cigar.

"Didn't I tell ye!" said the long bodied man as he looked around the car. "I can smell burnin' rags half a mile off!"

The victim was working for the rear door, and two young ladies were "tittering," but before he could get out the fire smeller hit him again with:

"Smells like a piece of old horse blanket, and its a wonder you sat right there and never discovered anything. Phew! ... Worse than hog's bristles burnin' on the kitchen stove! Youngman you!"

But the young man wasn't there.

Teacher—Cease means to stop. Make sentence, please, with "cease" as the first word.

Pupil—Cease the clock.

Prison Warden—The dinner ordered from Delmonico's has come. Take it to the prisoner who killed a man.

Assistant—All right. Who is this bread and water for?

Warden—That's for the man who stole a ham.

"These monkeys," said Chappie, in the park, "remind me of my boyhood days."

"There's a faint resemblance yet," said Maud, gazing first at Chappie and then at the monkey.

The good die young. The others become oldest inhabitants and lie about the weather, their ages and everthing else.

"My daughter, did John propose last night?" "No mother but I thought I detected an engagement ring in his voice as he bade me good night."

A man in Kansas glories in the possession of a calf that weighs only six pounds and has to be placed on a box in order to reach the "maternal fountain."

Cleveland was the only President to deliver his inauguration address extempor. Fillmore made no inaugural. Garfield was the first President to make any political speeches in a foreign tongue. German was used.

Teacher—Why did Alexander weep?

Class—'Cos he couldn't find any more worlds to conquer.

Teacher—Why could he find no more?

Class—'Cos he dinn't advertise.

TINSPOUTING.

A. W. Arbogast, of Monterey Va., will be in the County for several months spouting houses. Parties wishing work of this kind done can do no better than to get him to do it.

SUBSCRIBE

FOR THE—

POCAHONTAS TIMES,

Every man in the County should take it, and patronize home industry. It sustains your rights, and works for the advancement of your county, which no city paper will do. It gives you the news from all parts of the county, which you could not get otherwise. It furnishes matters of interst to the Merchant, Farmer and Mechanic. It keeps you posted and gives you information, on all general news, and its sections and Miscellany are fit for all ages.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION.

One year in advance	$1.90
If not paid within 6 months	1.25
And at the end of th yaer	50

AND IF YOU NEED

Letter Heads, Note Heads, Bill Heads, Envelopes, Drug Envelopes, Tags, Business Cards, Official Blanks, Blank Bonds, Posters, Briefs for the Court of Appeals etc.

GET THEM AT "THE TIMES"

JOB OFFICE.

POCAHONTAS TIMES.

Vol. 9. JOHN E. CAMPBELL, EDITOR AND PROPRIETOR. Huntersville, West Virginia, Thursday, September 3, 1891. Terms of Subscription, $1.00 PER YEAR, IN ADVANCE. No. 6

Official Directory of Pocahontas County

Judge of Circuit Court, A. N. Campbell.
Prosecuting Attorney, L. M. McClintic.
Sheriff, J. C. Arbogast.
Deputy Sheriff, Geo. W. Callison.
Cl'k Co. Court, S. L. Brown.
Cl'k Cir. Court, J. H. Patterson.
Assessor, C. O. Arbogast.
Com'rs Co. Ct. {C. E. Beard. S. B. Hannah. G. M. Kee.}
Co. Surveyor, Geo. Baxter

THE COURTS.

Circuit Court convenes on the first Tuesday in April, 3rd Tuesday in June and 3rd Tuesday in October.

County Court convenes on the 1st Tuesday in January, March, October and second Tuesday in July. July is levy term.

AN EDGED TOOL.

"Miss Morrel wanted immediately in the show rooms!"

Shrill and sharp and clear the message came through the speaking tube into the great room where all of Mrs. Cavendish's young women were at work—the great, bare-floored echoing room, which was lighted only from a skylight of frosted glass from above. Valencia Morel rose at once her pale, olive cheeks suddenly suffused with scarlet, to obey the summons. She felt sure she was to be scolded for slighting the pipings on the skirt of old Mrs. Mickel's blue satin dress. But Mrs. Cavindish sitting at her desk, received her gracefully.

"Miss Morel," said she, "on second thoughts, you may trim Miss Vovassa's moire antique with lace instead of velvet. Miss Gay, the forewoman, will give the necessary instructions." After a moment she added: "My dear, you know that I seldom interfere in the private and personal affairs of my young women. But I am informed that you are escorted home every night by a gentleman who must certainly be above your station. Miss Morel, I am not your guardian, neither do I possess any authority over you. But I do know something of the world and bid you beware!"

Valencia Morel was quite silent. If Mrs. Cavendish had for an instant supposed that her favorite "trimmer" was going to confide in her, she was mistaken. Half an hour later, when the girls all swarmed out of Mrs. Cavendish's work room at the sound of the 6 o'clock bell, Valencia Morel contrived to be a little behind the rest, so that it was quite dark when she reached the corner of the street, and a quick, silent shadow, with the fiery end of a cigar burning in front of it, moved up to her side quite as a matter of course.

"Valencia!" softly spoke the phantom.

"Yes, it is I," said Valencia Morel, coquettishly pulling the blue veil a little father over her face. "And Mrs. Cavendish has somehow found out that you walk home with me evenings."

"Well what then?" demanded the owner of the fire-tipped cigar in a debonair and defiant sort of a way. "Is it a capital crime?"

"N-no, I suppose not," said Valencia, dubiously. "But Hector—"

"Well?"

"I do wish I knew what the end of all this was to be."

Captain Hector Maurice lifted his primrose kidded hands depreciatingly.

"So like a woman," said he. "Bless their dear little hearts, they never can be contented to let enough alone."

"No but Hector—"

"Well, if you must know," [...] the gallant Captain, "we [are] nearer 'the end of all this' than [you] have any idea of."

"What do you mean?" Vale[ncia] stood still with a face as white [as] marble.

"I mean simply that I am to [be] married in three months."

"Married!"

"Yes, married. Why not? [...] not as pretty as you are, Vale[ncia] with a sigh and a shrug. [...] she's as old and ugly as Med[usa] you know who that classical [...] [illegible] but she's rich, and I [...] was one of the kind that [...] on love and poetry. Now [...] crazy, Valencia," as she [...] ly drew back. "You kn[ow] desperately fond of you [...] sort of thing, but I m[ust have] money, or it is all up with me. And you must know that we could not go on philandering like this forever."

Valencia looked at him with eyes that shone dangerously.

"Hector Maurice," said she, "you have been playing with me all this time. Beware that I do not turn out an edged tool."

"My darling, only listen to me.

He took both her hands by main force and renewed his caressing protentations while he walked along at her side: Presently she turned with a short, harsh laugh.

"Don't mind me, Hector," said she; "I was a little out of temper. It came so suddenly, you know. And perhaps I was unreasonable. But I'm all over it now. Tell me about her—the bride."

Hector made a grimace.

"Excuse me," said he; I shall have quite enough of her in the future without rhapsodizing on the subject now."

"Is she pretty?"

"Was Medusa pretty?"

"Is she rich?"

"If she wasn't do you suppose I'd marry her?"

"Is she young?"

"Well, she's about the age of my mother."

"Oh, Hector! And what is her name?"

"Aurora, my dear. 'Fair goddess of the dawn.'"

"But her last name, I mean," urged Valencia

"That I shall not tell you." half in earnest. "Lest, to use your own words, you should turn out to be an edged tool."

Valencia made him no answer; she only compressed her lips until they were a mere scarlet thread. And when she came back to Mrs. Cavendish's work room the next day she was a little paler than usual.

"I don't understand it said Mrs. Cavendish, one day.

"Don't understand what?" asked Miss Gay, the forewoman.

"That Miss Morel is so feverishly anxious to attend personally to all the wedding orders. I used to send madamoiselle Florine, but Miss Morel has asked it as a favor, to be allowed to go; and she really has an excellent idea of style and trimmings, and gives great satisfaction. But what her fancy is I can't tell."

"Some girls have an absolute mania on the subject of weddings," said Miss Gay, elevating her brow.

But Valencia Morel's motive was deeper far than any of which Mrs Cavendish and her forewoman could dream. And one day her quest met with its reward. Mrs Dorrance was a widow, fat, fair and 40; and Mrs. Dorrance contemplated a second [matrimonial] alliance. And while she [...] fully old. He says she is about the age of his mother."

"Oh, dear me!" said Mrs. Dorrance; "that is dreadful."

But she was evidently interested, and sat with the samples of white reps and dove colored satin in her hand, looking at Miss Morel.

"And plain, too," added Valencia; "he calls her his Medusa."

"Hateful old thing," said Mrs. Dorrace, briskly. "What business has she to be angling for a husband at her time of life?"

"But she's rich."

"That accounts for it," said Mrs. Dorrance.

"Oh, yes that accounts for it," said Miss Morel."

"You—you never heard him mention her name, did you?" said Mrs. Dorrace a little uneasily.

"Oh, dear, no, ma'am," said Valencia. Did you say you would prefer the stone gray faille, or—"

"I don't know why I should feel and curiosity upon the subject," interupted the widow, laughing artistically; "but if your friend's name isn't a secret—"

"Oh, no secret at all," said Valencia.

"Would you be kind enough to tell me?"

"Yes, indeed, his name is Hector Maurice!"

"Good gracious," said the widow, dropping all her samples in a glistening shower.

"You don't mean to say you know him, ma'am?" said Miss Valencia Morel in well feigned astonishment.

"Know him?" said Mrs. Dorrance, fanning herself violently. "It's the very man that I'm engaged to! But I won't marry him, no that I never will!"

Valencia clasped her hands theatrically.

"Oh!" cried she, "what have I said? Please, please, dear madam, forget my foolish chatter. If I had known—"

"If I had known!" enterupted the widow. "Medusa, indeed! Old enough to be his mother, forsooth. But he shall never have the handling of my money."

And Mrs. Dorrance rang the bell for her maid, and went off into violent hysterics. No wedding outfit was made up for this occasion at Mrs. Cavendish's celebrated establishment—and Captain Maurice was at his wits' ends to know why his plighted bride had changed her mind so suddenly. He did entertain some vague idea of a "breach of promise" suit, but wisely abandoned it. But strange to say he never suspected Valencia Morel, who still walks on pale and silent, in the dreary rooms, and never sees him now.

Captain Maurice had played with edged tools, and he had not come off schratchless.

"Papa," said a West End boy, as he followed his father to the bath room.

"Well, my son?"

"Do you wash your eyes out every morning?"

"Why, certainly."

"Well, papa?"

"Yes."

"How do you get 'em in again?"

"Oh, go 'way, go 'way and don't bother me."

Alliance News.

Late Matters of Interest Pertaining to the Order.

THE PRESENT.

Rise up Thomas Jefferson, from the dead. Face the people whose fathers supported you, and for whose welfare the best days of your life were spent.

Ninety per cent. of the homes of the farmers of this country are under mortgage. Ninety per cent. of the laboring men are without homes, and never will be able to earn them, as their wages are so fixed as to always keep them homeless. The expounders of the democracy you founded say it is paternalism to protect them, and that all the remedies they provide for relief are unconstitutional. Is that so? The farm products of the country, by a combination of capitalists and speculators each year, are bought at cost of production from the producer and sold to the consumer at 100 per cent. advance. The exponents of the Democratic party you led, say that there is no constitutional remedy that can be provided. What do you say? England owns nearly all the manufactories in this country and controls the financial system of the government in her interest and against Americans; and, by virtue of that power, has established a system that will inevitably reduce the great mass of people to serfdom. The leaders of the party now called Jeffersonian democracy are the tools of these English people and doing all in their power to assist them in the consummation of this purpose. What say you about these things? When the people clamor for relief and demand pledges of those who would represent them, these self-same exponents of the democracy you founded, declare that to take off 20 per cent. of the tariff on pocket knives, and put ten per cent. more on crockery will afford a remedy, and that let silver miners coin all the products of their mines into new silver dollars will remedy all the trouble and correct all the evils which have already bankrupted and placing them beyond redemption. What do you say about it? The great statesman would open his eyes in amazement and with the fire of indignation and exasperation flashing from them, would say: These so-called are not of the party I founded. They are false in heart, false in utterance, and false in purpose. They are untrue to my teachings; false to my precepts and perfidious to the proud example I left them. The great masses should arise in their majesty and power and drive this gang of impostors and liars from the temple I assisted in erecting for the safty and protection of the people; for they profane the name I love so dear; they prostitute the purpose I labored so earnestly to consummate; they have made my temple the resort of liars, libelers and thieves, and I am ashamed of it. Oh, grave receive me, and let my oblivousness forever remain [un]disturbed, until I can see my [peo]ple and my country redeemed [from] vandals and disentralled from [the] curse of the perfidy and trea[chery] of false and perfidious leaders.—Alliance Herald.

TIN SPOUTING.

A. W. Arbogast, of [...] Va., will be in the County [...] months spouting [...] finishing work of this k[ind] [...] no better than to g[...]

Pocahontas Times.

JOHN E. CAMPBELL,
EDITOR AND PROPRIETOR.

Entered at the Post-office at Huntersville, W. Va., as second class matter.

Huntersville, W. Va.
September 3, 1891.

Lynchburg, Va., is flooded with counterfeit silver dollars and half dollars.

Jefferson and Berkley counties get the $27,328 of direct tax collected from individuals of those counties, due under the Direct Tax Refund bill. West Virginia will get the remainder due her, as a State, later on, when the now practically bankrupt treasury thinks it can pay it, or is forced by the courts to pay it.

A young Kentuckey girl named Agnes Rankin has been playing some amusing pranks on the other girls in Crockett county. Putting on male attire she secured work as a hired man on a farm, and began at once to court all the attractive young women of the neighborhood, escorting them to church and to places of amusement and acquiring a local reputation as a beau. When her sex was discovered it was found that she had become engaged to marry three farmers' daughters.

An exchange says: Every man should past this in his hat or put it where he will stumble over it about six times a day: Drink nothing without seeing it. Sign nothing without reading it, and make sure that it means nothing more than it says. Don't go to law unless you are forced to and have something to lose. In any business never wade in where you cannot see the bottom. Put no dependence in the labe of a bag, and count money before you receipt it. See the sack before you buy what is in it, for he who trades in the dark asks to be cheated.

Confederate Generals.

A list of Confederate generals supposed to be living, prepared by General W. L. Cabell, of Dallas, Texas, shows that the number of officers of all grades, appointed and commissioned, is 488, viz: Six generals, 1 general with temporary rank, 1 quartermaster general, 2 commissary generals, 2 surgeon generals, 1 chief of ordinance, 475 brigadier generals, of whom 102 arose to the rank of major general and 21 arose to the rank of lieutenant general. One general (Joseph E. Johnston) and 12 brigadier generals are reported dead since January 1, 1891, leaving 177 living of the original number. The survivors first in rank are: General Gustave T. Beauregard, New Orleans. General with temporary rank, Edmund Kirby Smith, of Sewanee, Tenn; Lieutenant generals, Stephen D. Lee, Starkville, Miss.; James Longstreet, Gainesville, Ga.; Jubal A. Early, Lynchburg, Va.; Simon B. Buckner, Frankfort, Ky.; Joseph Wheeler, Wheeler, Ala.; Ambrose P. Stewart, Washington, D. C.; Wade Hampton, Columbia, S. C.; John B. Gordon, Atlanta, Ga.

WASHINGTON LETTER.

From our regular correspondent.

WASHINGTON, D.C., Aug. 28th— Secretary Foster is in a fair way of earning the title of the "Colonel Sellers of the administration" from his propensity to see everything in its rosiest light. About the first of July he was telling everyone of the great benefits which would follow the extension of the $51,000,000 of per cent. bonds at 2 per cent. [illegible] the national banks [illegible] take all that might be [illegible] by private parties in [illegible] they might become their [illegible]. Now that the extension [illegible] has proven a fizzle, [illegible] of them having been [illegible] for extension, one would suppose that Mr. Foster would feel bad enough to at least keep quiet. Not he. He is, according to his own statement, not at all disappointed over the failure of his first large financial transaction, and he preaches from the text of what a good thing it is for the "dear people" that $25,000,000 or $50,000,000 is to be put in circulation by the redemption of these bonds and how much good this increase in the circulation will do business circles. He reminds one of the young physician who when asked how he was making out in a family where he was attending a woman in confinement, said: The mother is dead and the child is dead, but I hope to pull the father through."

Representative Mills has gone over to New York and it is probable that while there he will make a little investigation into a statement made here a few days ago that the New York delegation was divided in its choice for speaker, as follows: Crisp 16, McMillin 6, Mills 1. The statement was made by a member of Tammany Hall, but its accuracy was at once questioned by Mr. Mills friends, who claim to have the best of evidence to prove that it was wrong in every case. Mr. Mills will go to Ohio shortly to make speeches in the campaign.

The noble army of "ex's" is again marching upon Washington, each and every member of it anxious to get the place which is to be vacated by Secretary Proctor, who has been formally notified that he is to be appointed to serve out the unexpired term of Mr. Edmunds in the United States Senate, and those who fail will at least have the satisfaction of knowing that they have temporarily got out of the obscurity into which they had sunk, by having their names mentioned as possibilities for the vacant seat in the cabinet by the obliging newspapers. If you have curiosity to see these names get a copy of the last Congressional Directory and check off the names of all the men who retired from Congress with the Fifty first Congress, and you will have a correct list of them. It is said that the New England Senators have demanded of Mr. Harrison that he shall appoint a man from that section to the vacancy and that the republicans of the northwestern States have made a like demand. Mr. Harrison will place the appointment where it will fetch the most votes for Harrison in the next republican national convention, no matter who it may please or displease, and the belief here is that the place will go to ex-Governor Cheney, of New Hampshire, unless Gen. Alger can be persuaded to accept it.

Some queer stories are being told around here of how Prof. Dyrenforth is manipulating his dynamite and gun powder rain-forcer for the purpose of getting a big appropriation from the next Congress to pay all further experiments. It is said, he took advantage of climatic conditions, which made it certain that he could not fail when he made the recent experiment about which so much has been printed. It is also said that none of the party now in Texas with the Professor have any faith in the efficiency of the apparatus to produce rain in a really arid section, and that they regard the whole business as a sort of scientific humbug, which promises to furnish profitable employment for a long time, at least that is said to be the substance of letters that have been received in Washington.

There is clash of opinion between the Interior department and the Department of Justice. Secretary Noble holds that notwithstanding the recent judicial decision that the sale of lager beer in Indian Territory was legal, that he has the power, under a U. S. Statute, to prevent it, and has instructed the Indian agents to seize all liquid on [illegible] Territory. The Attorney General holds that the decision of Judge Bryant of the Eastern District of Texas is good law until it is reversed by a higher Court, and under that decision dealers have a right to sell beer and to demand pay for all the beer seized by the Indian agents.

An Echo of the Johnstown Flood

A day or two ago a well dressed, fine looking couple entered the clerk's office in the court house and asked for a permit for their union. At the time of the Johnstown flood the young man in crossing the bridge in his flight to the hills stopped to rescue a female form in the debris and succeeded in grasping the hair of the head, and lifting the body carried it with him. The body was that of a young girl, then unconscious, but efforts at restoration proved successful and the enamoured youth of first sight then and there commenced a courtship that has resulted in the union of himself and fair lady, though he was compelled to wait till she was of age, not having the guardian's consent. This bit of romance, accompanied by the opposition of authority, would weave a realistic story of great interest, and is in fact, a truthful incident of the great Johnstown disaster.—Cumberland News.

ORDER OF PUBLICATION.

At rules held in the Clerks office of the Circuit Court of Pocahontas County West, Virginia, on the first Monday in August 1891.

I. M. Thompson Executrix of Wm. Thompson Deceased, Plaintiff
vs.
W. G. Gilkeson Defendant.

The object of this suit is to attach the estate of the defendant W. G. Gilkeson, in the State sufficient to pay the sum of $4?8.87 with interest thereon at the rate of 6 per cent per annum from the 17th day of June 1889, till paid which is the amount of said Judgment obtained by plaintiff against said defendant in the Circuit Court of Augusta Co., Va. including $7.80 cost on said judgment, and the cost of this suit.

And it appearing by affidavit filed, that the defendant, W. G. Gilkeson, is a non-resident of this State, it is ordered that he do appear here at the next rule day, after the first publication of this Order and do what is necessary to protect his interest in this suit.

Teste:
J. H. PATTERSON, Clerk.

R. S. Turk, p. q.
Aug 13 4t
Printers fee $7.85

HOME NEWS.

—Quarterly meeting at this place last Sunday and Monday.

—Col Jno. T. McGraw, of Grafton, was in town Tuesday.

—C. B. Swecker Esq., of Dunmore called to see us Monday.

—C. P. Dorr, Esq., and wife, of Addison, Webster Co. was in our city Monday.

—Attorneys Capt. Stofer and L. M. McClintic were down at Marlinton, Tuesday.

—There was a show on the Apperson farm near Marlinton Tuesday, which was very good.

—Prof C. A. Brown, of Academy, called to see us Monday. He was on his way from attending District Conference at Dunmore.

—Mr. Isaac McNeel, and wife and little daughter, of Mill Point, were in the city Monday.

—Mr. Stuart Wooddell, of Pennsboro, Jackson Co., formerly of Geen Bank, this county, was in Hentersville Monday.

—Capts. Geo. M. Whitescarver, of Grafton, and J. W. Marshall, of Mingo Flats called to see us Monday, while they were in the city.

—Mrs. C. A. Damarou, of Alleghany Station Va., and children are visiting her parents Mr. J. C. Lourys', at this place.

—We are informed that about 800 people attended the Dedication of the Methodist Church at Dunmore last Sunday, Aug. 30th. Dr Young of Randolph Macon College, preached the dedicatory sermon.

—We are authorized to announce that Rev. J. F. A. Lautenschlager, will prech at this place next Sunday at 11 o'clock and at Dunmore next Sunday night.

—The following is the program of Huntersville circuit, M. E. church South: Fist Sunday, Huntersville, 10:30 a. m.; Mt. Pleasant 3:30 p. m.; second Sunday, Bethel, 10:30; Sunset, 3; third Sunday, Huntersville, 10:30 a. m.; Mt. Pleasant 3:30 p. m.; fourth Sunday, Sunset, 10:30; Bethel, 3. I G MICHAEL, P. C.

—We are requested to announce that the Sharon M. E. Church, South, located at Locust Creek, this county, will be dedicated on Sunday the 13th, inst. The dedicatory sermon will be preached by Rev. J. R. Van Horn, of Shepherdstown, this State, one of the former pastors of the Hillsboro charge.

—Mr. Jas. Barkley, Jr., an aged citizen living about two miles from this place is very seriously sick and it is thought that he cannot recover. His two sons Wm. and Edward, of Buna Vista, Va., are attending his bedside.

LATER—Mr. Barkley died Tuesday night. The sorrowing family have the sympathy of the entire community.

—On Millett's contract of the W. Va. and Pittsburg railroad extension, on Laurel Creek, Webster county, on Aug. 28th, a negro shot and killed another. He was arrested, and the impression prevails that there will be a hanging.

—The engineers who are surveying the route of the proposed extension of the railroad from Gauly through to Virginia, are now in this county, and the route as far as they have gone is reported to be a good one.

—The West Virginia and Pittsburg Railroad Company will immediately commence to erect a saw mill near the mouth of William's river, on Gauley. The mill will be one of the finest in the State and will have a capacity of over 100,000 feet per day. The Company have immense tracts of timber land on Williams's, Gauley and Cherry rivers more than 100,000 acres in all. It is, perhaps, the richest timber section in the State. The timber is mostly cherry and pine and it is [illegible] very abundant.—Braxton Democrat.

—Cards are out announcing the marriage of Mr. Chas. Hegsett, now of Roanoke, Va., to Miss Duffey Marshall, of Renick's Valley, Greenbrier county, in the Methodist church at Academy, on the 9th inst. Both are formerly of this county, and held in high esteem by their many friends, who will wish them all the happiness and prosperity this world can afford.

—The following persons were in Huntersville, on their way to attend and returning from District Conference at Dunmore: Revs. S. G. Ferguson, Lewisburg; W. J. Young, of Randolph Macon College; C. L. Dameron, Hinton; J. F. Baggs, Alderson; C. M. Bragg, Ronceverte; T. J. Lambert, and W. T. Gover, Union; C. M. Sarver, Centreville; W. H. Garing and Mr. A. E. Huddleston, White Sulphur; S. B. Williams, Richlands; Jno. McNeel and a Mr. Long, Green Sulphur Springs; and I. J. Michal, Marlinton.

Green Bank Items.

Rev. Jno. V. McCall, preached his last sermon, last Sunday at Liberty Church, and will leave soon for Hampden Sydney College. Our best wishes go with him.

A. M. Oliver is home on a visit.

Steven Lockridge and wife, of Jackson's River, passed through our villiage to attend District Conference at Dunmore on last Friday.

Dr. O. J. Campbell, of Monterey, Va., was in our villiage last week pulling, filling and putting in teeth.

G. C. Cooper has started a steam saw mill on Rosen run, and is getting some fine timber out.

The buzz of the thresher is heard in our neighborhood. Grain is only tolerable.

Our farmers are about done making hay. Owing to so much rain they are late this season.

Wallace Blair of Traveler's Repose, reports about 25,000 trout caught out of Greenbrier river at that point this season, by different parties, and the finest ever caught before.

James Patterson, while returning home from preaching last Saturday night was thrown from his horse and badly hurt, but not dangerously.

W. A. Gladwell, our enterprising merchant, has purchased the Bradshaw lot, and the Yeager lots adjoining, and is having a fine house erected, which will add much to our villiage.

Your correspondence had the pleasure of attending the Dedicatory service of the new Methodist Church South, at Dunmore on last Sunday. The service was conducted by Rev. R. W. Young, who preached a very fine sermon to a very large assembly. The collection taken amounted to $728.00—seventy-five dollars more than was asked for. It is the finest church in the county costing $2.000.

Success to your paper.

BIG FOOT

Valuable Kerr's Creek Farm.

On Saturday last Mr. William M. Dunlap, of Roanoke, sold to Capt. Jno. A. McNeel the valuable farm owned by him at Dunlap's store on Kerr's Creek in this county. It is the old home of Mr. Maddison Dunlap, long one of the leading farmers and citizens of Rockbridge, and contains 253 acres of his estate. Upon it is a large brick residence. The price paid was $6,000, practically cash. Capt. McNeel is a well known and prominent citizen of Pocahontas county, W. Va., who has recently sold his farm there. He has bought the Dunlap property for the purpose of making his home in Rockbridge.—Rockbridge County News.

SALISBURY, N. C., August 27, 1891.—The New York limited passenger train on the Western North Carolina railroad was wrecked at the bridge near this place. Forty passengers were instantly killed and twenty five others seriously injured.

To Teachers.

Since our last examination the State Superintendent has suggested to County Superintendents that they examine teachers only on the branches that they have been required to be examined on heretofore, and issue one year certificates.

We are sorry that we did not get this instruction sooner.

At our next examination we will issue Nos. One, Two and Three, teachers certificates, good for one year, and applicants will not be required to pass on the new branches.

This examination in no way effects the certificates issued at the first examination.

M. G. MATHEWS, Co Supt.

Death of Mrs. Agnes Livesay.

This morning at about 5 o'clock Mrs. Agnes Livesay died at her home in Lewisburg, of gastric fever. She was taken ill at the residence of her neice, Mrs. Wm. N. Correll, near Frankford, last week. Against the protest of her relatives she insisted upon coming home. She was brought here on Sunday last, and since that time until her death was delirious, with flitting periods of consciousness. Mrs. Livesay was well known to our readers, and possessed many excellent traits of character.—She was about 56 years of age. Funeral services to-morrow at 10 a m.—Independent.

STOCKHOLDERS MEETING of Bank of Pocahontas.

A meeting of the Stockholders of the "Bank of Pocahontas" will be held at the law office of John T. McGraw, in the town of Grafton, in the county of Taylor, in the State of West Virginia, on the 5th day of September, 1891, at ten o'clock A. M., for the purpose of electing a Board of Directors, making by-laws, and transacting such other business as may lawfully be done by said stockholders in general meeting.

Given under our hands this 11th day of August, 1891.

FRANCIS M. DURBIN,
GEO. M. WHITESCARVER,
C. R. DURBIN,
JNO. T. MCGRAW,
L. MALLONEE,
THOS. E. DAVIS.

ORDER OF PUBLICATION.

At rules held in the Clerks office of the Circuit Court of Pocahontas County, West Virginia, on the first Monday in August 1891.

GEO. W. TRIMBLE, Plaintiff
vs.
W. G. GILKESON, Defendant

The object is this suit is to attach the estate of the defendant, W. G. Gilkeson, in this State sufficient to pay the sum of $520.23 with interest thereon at the rate of 6 per cent. per annum from the first day of December 1890, till paid, which is the amount of a judgement obtained by the plaintiff against said defendant in the Circuit Court of Augusta County, Virginia, including $7.80 cost on said judgment, and the cost of this suit. And it appearing by affidavit filed, that the defendant W. G. Gilkeson, is a non-resident of this State, it is ordered that he do appear here at next rule day, after the date of the first publication of this Order and do what is necessary to protect his interest in the suit.

Teste:
J. H. PATTERSON Clerk.

R. S. Turk p. q.
Aug 6-4t.
Printers fee $7.90.

H. T. SCHOOL.

The 6th session of the Hillsboro Training School will open Sept. 2nd 1891. For further information address,—

Miss G. M. SHEARER, Principal.
Academy P. O. W. Va.

ESTRAY

I have on my form on Knapp's Creek, an estray, roan yearling steer, which has been there over two months, which the owner can get by paying for the keeping, and paying for this ad.

J. B. LOCKRIDGE.

Pocahontas Times.

JOHN E. CAMPBELL,
EDITOR AND PROPRIETOR.

Entered at the Post-office at Huntersville, W. Va., as second class matter.

ADVERTISING RATES.

	1 m.	3 m.	6 m.	1 yr.
One inch	$ 1 00	$ 2 00	$ 3 00	$ 5 00
Three in.	2 00	4 00	6 00	10 00
Qr. column	3 00	6 00	10 00	17 00
Half col'n	6 00	12 00	20 00	30 00
One col'n	10 00	20 00	30 00	50 00

Reading notices, not exceeding five lines, twenty-five cents for each insertion, and five cents a line for each additional line.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION.

One copy, 1 yr., $1.00 in advance; after 6 months, $1.25; after 12 months, $1.50

These terms will be strictly complied with.

Huntersville, W. Va.

September 3, 1891.

MR. AND MRS. BOWSER.

"They finally brought up that bedstead this afternoon," said Mrs. Bowser after dinner the other evening.

"Did, eh! Just a week since you picked it out, isn't it?"

"Only four days."

"Curious how everbody takes advantage of you. They wouldn't have have dared fool with me that way!"

"That—that carpet isn't down yet."

"There's another specimen of your style of running things! The infernal falsifiers agreed to be here two months ago!"

"O, no, dear. They said some time this week."

"And they'll fool arond till September! Mrs. Bowser I don't want to find fault with you, but I do wish you knew more about business. You let everybody walk on you as if you were a worm of the earth."

"But can I bring the men up here?" she protested.

"How is it that everything I order gets here on the minute! Because, Mrs. Bowser, I do busines in a business way. If I should let you have full swing here where do you suppose we'll land at the end of six months? However I will show those carpet men that they can't fool with Jonas J. Bowser, no matter what excuse they can palm off on his wife. I'll slip up and put that carpet down in seven minutes."

"[illegible] don't mean it!" she [illegible]

[illegible]

pet on the bare floor. There's the lining on the window sill! You'd have made a nice job of it now wouldn't you?"

He couldn't crawl out of it, and he contented himself with rising up and pointing sternly toward the door. She went out but listened and heard the rip! rip! rip! as he pulled up his work. It was a quarter of an hour before she dared enter again, and then it was in response to a yell which made the cook drop seven plates and the dog howl mournfully.

"W—what is it?' she gasped, as she rushed in to find Mr. Bowser standing on one leg against the wall.

"What is what?"

"Why, you whooped like an Indian. Your face is as red as fire, and somethings's happened."

"Mrs. Bowser, I am not in the habit of whooping," he sternly replied, "and nothing has happened. When I want your valuable services I'll call you. The exclamation you heard probably came from some one in a balloon passing over the house.'

He had hammered away for about ten minutes when she looked in on him again. He had three sides of the carpet down and was tacking the fourth. Just as she reached the head of the stairs he rolled backward out of the bedroom door with a yell and a great crash.

"What on earth are you trying to do, Mr Bowser?" she asked.

"You up here again?" he shouted in reply. "Didn't I tell you to go down stairs and stay there? Does it take forty million people to put down one confounded old carpet?'

"But can't I help?"

"No you can't help! I'll put the thing down alone or pull the side of the house down! No wonder the carpet men doesn't come up here to lay it. They cut it a foot tro short on this side and a foot too long on the other! Lemme catch 'em around the house and I'll— What's the matter now?"

"It's got to be turned around! You are trying to fit it the wrong way!"

"No I ain't!"

"Why of course you are! It's exactly the fit the other way! I told you not to do it. You knew you,d —"

"Mrs Bowser" he began, as he crossed his hands behind his back and gazed at her with a benign expression, "do I run this house or do you?"

"Well, I suppose you do."

"Very well. When man was created the idea was that he should run the house. That's how he came to know so much more than a woman. If I am not competent, however—if you have put down fifteen or twenty million carpets, and I never saw one in my life, why you'd better finish this job and ask the court to appoint a guardian over me!"

Hadn't you better wait till morning to finish it?"

"Not by a jugfull! I'll put 'er down if it kills me stone dead."

He banged the door after her as she went out and when he grabbed hold of the carpet and ripped it up it seemed as if the house lifted up a foot or more.

"Darn ye, I'll wallop ye to rags pay for this!" she heard him growl as she listened at the door.

He whirled the carpet around the right way, upset his saucer of tacks, [illegible]

[illegible]

"Your old carpet is down, Mrs. Bowser, down out of the window."

"Didn't I tell you before you begun, that—?"

"No! You wanted it down!"

"Didn't I say you would get mad and blame—?"

"Never! Mrs. Bowser this is the last time I ever lift my hand to do anything around this house! I've rubbed more'n a yard of hide off my knees, skinned both elbows, and driven 13,000 tacks into my feet, besides getting a crick in my back which will lay me up the rest of my life!"

"But I told you in the beginning that—"

"That you wanted the carpet down! It is down! I am down! That ends it! I'll nail the old room up with sidewalk spikes, and if you even ask me in the future to sharpen a lead pencil I won't be responsible for my actions. Mrs. Bowser good night!"

And as he limped upstairs and threw himself on the bed with a jar which shook the house and stopped the kitchen clock she heard him groan:

"And this comes from having a wife who doesn't know anything about managing a house."

SUBSCRIBE

FOR THE

POCAHONTAS TIMES,

Every man in the County should take it, and patronize home industry It sustains your rights, and works for the advancement of your county, which no city paper will do. It gives you the news from all parts of the county, which you could not get otherwise. It furnishes matters of interst to the Merchant, Farmer and Mechanic. It keeps you posted and gives you information, on all general news, and its sections and Miscellany are fit for all ages.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION,

One year in advance	$1.00
If not paid within 6 months	1.25
And at the end of th year	50

AND IF YOU NEED

Letter Heads, Note Heads, Bill Heads, Envelopes, Drug Envelopes Tags, Business Cards, Official Blanks, Blank Books, Posters Briefs for the Court of Appeals etc

GET THEM AT "THE TIMES"

JOB OFFICE.

[illegible]

POCAHONTAS TIMES.

Vol. 9. JOHN E. CAMPBELL, EDITOR AND PROPRIETOR. Huntersville, West Virginia, Thursday, September 10, 1891. Terms of Subscription. $1.00 PER YEAR. IN ADVANCE. No. 7

WHAT FRED SAW.

The day was very pleasant but I could not enjoy it.

Long, weary months I had been in the darkened room, and still they kept me there, allowing no breath of the pure, cool air to reach my feverish head.

I tried to open the window, but I was not strong enough, and I fell back in my chair, breathing the stifling air, which every moment became more impressive.

I thought I could not endure it, yet how could I avoid it? There was only one way without danger of discovery, a step into the hall, and those spiral stairs would take me to the house top—to the observatory.

Waiting until I was sure the way was clear, I stepped softly into the hall, and, ascending the stairs, through much dificulty, I was soon enjoying the forbidden pleasure of breathing the fee air, untainted with the fumes of the nauseous drugs that had been dealt out to me with an unspairing hand all through the long, cold winter.

How exhilerating! I wondered that I had been housed so long. I looked down upon the group of young ladies who were sporting on the lawn.

Jennie Magrair was there, the daughter of my host, the only woman I ever loved, but I was nothing to her. She knew not how I worshipped her, and I should keep my secret well, for she was the betrothed of Gerald Macburn.

How I envied him and perhaps hated him a little, for I knew that he had not won her love. She had pledged her hand to save her old father from poverty.

She had consented to the sacrifice and Macburn was satisfied.

Turning away I tried to banish the painful, hopeless thoughts that had been awakened.

Adjusting the telescope I took a survey of the farming and woodland that streched far away to the east for many miles.

I caught sight of two men whom I recognized as Gerald Macburn and John Layton.

They were evidently in search of game. The glass was small, yet a very superior instrument, and I could see them very plainly, notwithstanding the distance.

I presume I should have thought no more about them had I not known that but a few months before they were bitter enemies. I wondered how the reconciliation had been effected.

While puzzling my brain with these thoughts I had unconciously moved the glass to keep them within range. I saw them stop, and I knew by their motions that they were angry.

I became interested. I could see them so distinctly that I found myself listening to catch their words.

I could see their lips move, and I saw John Layton's clinched hands. He was evidently much excited, but he did not offer to strike; and if one can judge by sight alone he was inclined to avoid any altercation, while Macburn appeared to seek a quarrel.

For full five minutes they stood there, gesticulating vehemently. They were some distance apart, Layton all the while endeavoring to widen the space and Macburn following him up.

At last Layton goared beyond all endurance, wheeled about and shook his fist menacingly at his tormentor. Macburn was so exasperated at this that he raised his rifle and shot him.

I saw the poor fellow fall out of sight in the bushes, and I saw Macburn calmly reload his rifle and walk toward the spot where his victim was lying.

Then I staggered and fell to the floor, and all was blank.

When I awoke to concionsness I was in bed. Clothes were all about my head, and in the dim lamplight I saw a watcher sitting beside my bedside. It was my old chum, Harry Wilmot.

"How is this?" said I; when I realized the situation.

"Thank God, you are coming around again," said Harry; "but it has been a hard case, Fred; you have been crazy as a 'loon' for a whole week. I advise you not to try the observatory again till you are strong enough to crawl back."

At these words, what I had seen from the housetop flashed upon my mind and for the life of me I could not then have told that it was not a dream. To convince myself I inquired for John Layton.

"He is—no one knows where," replied Harry; "but you are too weak to either talk or listen."

"No, I'm not, Harry; tell me about it."

He yet hesitated, but I urged him, and he yielded.

"John Layton disappeared a week ago," said he. Absconded is the better word, for he took with him quite an amount of money belonging to his father. The old gentleman is very wroth, and has used every means to find him, but has not succeeded. Fannie Morton—they were to be married soon, you know—is almost crazy about it, and will not believe that John intended to do anything wrong. This is all that is known about it. But, speaking of marriage, did you know that Gerald Macburn and Jenny Magrair are to be married tomorrow?"

"John Layton is dead," said I, without answering his question, though it had sent a pain through my heart that was agony to me. "He is dear, Harry Wilmot."

Harry gazed at me pityingly.

"There, Fred. I wouldn't talk any more," said he. You are very weak yet. Try and sleep."

"You think I am still crazy, Harry?"

"Don't, Fred, don't! If you ever expect to get off this sick bed you must be more reasonable."

My question was answered. I turned my face to the wall and tried to determine in my own mind whether I was sane or not.

I went to sleep thinking of it, and when I woke the sun had gone down.

Harry, who had been out during my sleep, had just returned, and his entrance had probably waked me.

How do you feel now, Fred?" said he, drawing a chair to the bedside.

"Much better and stronger, Harry. I have had a most refreshing sleep."

We talked a while, and then I abruptly asked him if he would grant me one favor on the morrow.

"Certainly, Fred, if it isn't asking too much."

"It will be quite easy, though none the less important. Will you promise to carry out my directions faithfully?"

"If reasonable, yes. But could n't you postpone it for a day? You know the wedding comes off tomorrow."

"Not an hour, Harry, after sun rise in the morning, and it should be done tonight, if it were not too late."

"Well go on Fred, and let us hear what it is."

I did not tell him what I had seen from the housetop, for I did not consider myself competent to make an accusation against any one; but I discribed the spot where I firmly believed that I saw Gerald Macburn murder John Layton; and I requested him to take three or more companions with him—men that could be trusted—and explore the spot thoroughly.

"Will you promise, Harry? Now, don't say you will, and then forget it, thinking I do not know what I am talking about, for I tell you I am not insane now."

"Well, Fred, I promise."

I knew that Fred could be depended upon, and I felt much relieved, passing a very quiet night.

Gerald Macburn was to be married at 9 o'clock, and at 10 to start on their wedding tour.

This was why I was in such haste. If he was guilty as I firmly believed I wished to prevent the marriage, or at least to arrest him before he stepped aboard the train.

I hardly know how I passed the time till Harry's return, I was so impatient.

I heard the carriages of the guests drive up to the door, and I could faintly hear the busy hum of preparation below; and then the old town clock, striking the hour of 8, startled me.

Only one hour longer, and Harry had not returned. What if he had missed the spot?

I watched the hands of the little clock, and for once they went too fast. I could almost see them move. Twenty—twenty five—thirty minutes past 8, and would he never come? Yes, thank God! I heard the gallop of a horse on the graveled road, and in a moment Harry entered the room flushed with excitement.

"What did you find, Harry? Quick! Quick!"

"The body of John Layton!"

"I knew it, Harry! I saw the deed —I saw the murderer. But there is no time to lose. The wretch must be secured before it is too late. Bring a majestrate and an officer as quick as you can."

He was not long away, and he brought with him the old doctor, who was also a justice, while an officer entered by the back door and adroitly made his way to my room, unobserved.

I made my deposition, the warrant was issued and handed to the officer, and he went softly down the stairs to make the arrest.

He was not a moment too soon, nor too late, and he laid his hand on Gerald Macburn's shoulder just in time to prevent Jenny Magrair from becoming the wife of a murderer.

Macburn was tried, convicted and executed.

My testimony was sufficient, for the power of the telescope was tested, proving beyond doubt that I had been an eye witness to the murder, though miles away from the spot.

Jenny quickly recovered from the shock, and I from my sickness, and —we are married.

He was a handsome, rosy checked old broker.

She applied for a position as typewriter.

And she was plump as a partridge and pretty as a picture.

"Will you give me your name?" he inquired kindly, after a few preliminary questions.

She blushed.

He was[illegible].

"I'd rather take yours, sir," she said with a [illegible] smile.

And [illegible] a [illegible] if she didn't get it [illegible].

TRAGEDY ON THE GREAT RIVER.

A THRILLING EPISODE OF TRAVEL ON THE MISSISSIPPI.

Moonlight on the raging Mississippi!

The magnificent sidewheel steamer Lone Pelican, bound for New Orleans, sped swiftly down the Father of Waters, whose turbid waves, as if angry at the intrusion, lashed the crumbling shores with a fierceness that changed the geography of the country at every awash.

The great steamboat, with its precious cargo of human lives, mess pork, hides, furniture and agricultural implements, was full of life and gayety. High rose the spirit of the passengers. The supper tables had been cleared away, but the faint odors that still pervaded the long and elegant saloon of the Lone Pelican there lingered grateful reminiscences of the sumptious banquet.—Myriads of cut glass pendants reflected the light from the chandeliers and twinkled and danced merrily to the music of the paddle wheels that churned the water in obedience to the impulse of the great engines, whose ceaseless throb proclaimed the mighty steamer a thing af life, and the white and gilded interior, that streched away in georgious perspective, reflected the twinkling lights and mirrored as well the happy faces of the throng that lingered within, while along the wide promenade outside and on the hurricane deck overhead wandered the sentimental and the moonstruck.

Far in the distance astern trailed a dense, black cloud of smoke from the tall smoke-stacks. Far ahead pierced the vision of the keen-eyed pilot, whose trained judgment, memory and skill guided the floating palace through the wide waste of waters.

Silence reigned in the Lone Pelican. Naught but the monotonous chug chug of the engines and the tremulous beating of the paddle-wheels disturbed the reposeful stillness that brooded over all.

Suddenly arose a wild, unearthly, appalling clamor. Fierce, angry, demoniac yells and execrations roused from their slumbers the hundreds of sleeping passengers on board. Crash followed crash.—Sounds as of heavy falling bodies were heard in quick succession, and the din grew louder and louder.

Frantic men, women and children half clad came out of their staterooms, and with pallid lips and trembling voices tried to learn from each other what had happened.

Had the boat been boarded by river pirates?

Had she struck a snag?

Was the steamer on fire?

The captain had not yet retired.—With drawn revolver he approached the state-room from where the terrible uproar seemed to come.

He listened a moment, then burst open the door and disappeared on the inside.

There was a momentary lull.—Then voices were heard in fierce expostulation, the din broke loose again with tenfold violence, and the captain, with his hair standing on end, his eyes starting from their sockets and his face pale as a sheet, came tumbling out through the broken door.

"Save yourselves!" he gasped, as he hurried toward the rear. "The clerk has put two traveling men from different baking powder factories in the same berth!"

Pocahontas Times.

JOHN E. CAMPBELL,
EDITOR AND PROPRIETOR.

Huntersville, W. Va.

September 10, 1891.

The "Statemen out of a job" all have their eyes longingly cast upon the War portfolio.

Harrison and Blaine must greatly enjoy the pastime of playing shuttle-cock with the republican Presidential nomination.

In selecting a new Secretary of War Mr. Harrison should try to get a man, without large private business interests which requires his constant attention.

Henry Clews the New York broker has a $40,000 bath room. Many of those who contributed the money to pay for this luxury are doubtless obliged for want of a better or more expensive place, to take their baths in nature's bath room.

If there is ever any occasion for making a geneological tree for "reciprocity", the searchers will get stuck at the start, as there are al ready several men who claim to be the father of the bantling.

Senator Plumb is attempting the impossibility in trying to ride the republican horse and the Alliance filly at the same time. It would be difficult enough even if they were going the same way, but they are traveling in directly opposite directions and no man can keep a footing on both of them at once.

If it is true, as charged by the New York Times, that politics controls the assignment of Naval officers, then indeed is Secretary Tracy shutting off the spigot and leaving the bunghole open in all the alleged placing of the master mechanics in the navy yards under the merit system. The top is the proper place to begin reforms.

Mr Harrison informs the people at every oportunity that he favors a dollar worth a hundred cents everywhere but he doesn't say anything about the silver dollar issued by his administration, which lacks considerable of being a hundred cent dollar everywhere, or indeed anywhere. Honesty, like charity, should always begin at home.

It is said that Secretary Proctor has not spent one third of his time at the War department since he entered the Cabinet, and that the business of the war department has been almost entirely directed by the subordinates, one of the exceptions being when the Indian trouble of last fall was on, and then Mr. Harrison took personal control.

Republican newspapers are showing more interest in the election of the Speaker of the House, and, as their party has considerable less than one-third of the members of the House it is clear that the suddenly developed interest bodes no good to the democratic party. It is a noticeable fact that the newspapers which are the most industriously engaged in stirring up strife, or in trying to do so, among the friends of the several candidates, are in every case run by men who are either republicans, or in sympathy with that party. This of itself should be sufficient to prevent any unseemingly fighting among democrats for or against any candidate. Every democratic Representative should call to mind the saying of a bygone statesman: "In politics it is always good to find out what your opponents wish you to do, in order that you may avoid doing it." It is clear that the republicans wish to see the democrats quarrel over the Speakership. It is equally clear that it is the imperative duty of every democratic member of the House of Representatives to disappoint them by refusing to quarrel.

COUNTY SEAT REMOVAL.

The suggestion of the removal of the county seat from this place to Marlinton, is being agitated, and petitions to that effect are being circulated to get the required number of signers, asking the County Court to submit it to a vote of the people, which election, we suppose, will take place about January 1st '92.

Col. Jno. T. McGraw, Capt. Geo. W. Whitescarver and others of Grafton, and Capt J. W. Marshall of Randolph county, who own Marlinton, and are having it laid off into town lots, are the principal agitators.

Their proposition is, that when the election is submitted, to desposit with the sheriff $5,000 in cash and a deed for 2½ acres of land for public buildings &c., to be given to the County if the required three-fifths vote carries; which is of course a valuable consideration, if the county wants the court-house removed.

It is not our place, we think, in publishing a newspaper in the county and for the county, to make suggestions as to what is its best interests in regard to this mattter, but to give the facts, honestly, plain and simple as they stand. Therefore, at present, we will take and independent stand-point, only reporting matters of interest as they occur. These gentlemen who are agitating this movement, as they tell us, will only use fair and honerble means to accomplish their end, and we think we can say, so far as we know, that the opposition will meet them in the same way.

First, it is the voters of the county to say, whether or not the county can stand a tax, that will probable exceed $25,000.

Second, whether or not it will be more convenient to the people of the county.

Third, will it enhance the worth of your property, with this tax upon it.

And fourth, is it to the best interest of the county that this movement is agitated, or is it to enhance the value of property owned by a few individuals.

We would like to hear this question discussed by both sides, and we therefore throw our columns open alike to both.

A Philadelphia man is responsible for the statement that men in Boston are putting an imitation coffee, made of clay and flour, on the market, which is sold for six cents a pound and is mixed with genuine coffee at a ratio of about one pound to four. A man caught engaged in such business should be fed on bread and his fraudulent product for the rest of his life.

There is a growing suspicion that some of the members of the New York Grant monument committee have got places on the World's Fair building committee.

ORDER OF PUBLICATION.

At rules held in the the Clerk's office of the Circuit Court of Pocahontas County, on the first Monday in September, 1891.

T. J. Williams
vs.
H. B. Hanger.

The object of this suit is to attach the estate of the defendant H. B. Hanger and subject the same to the payment of a debt due from said Hanger to the plaintiff T. J. Williams on an open account for $92.41, with interest thereon from the 28th day of August, 1891, and it appearing by affidavit, filed, that the defendant H. B. Hanger is a non-resident of the State of West Virginia, It is ordered that he do appear here within one month after the first publication of this order and do what is necessary to protect his interests in this suit.

Witness, J. H. Patterson, Clerk of the said Court this 7th day of September, 1891.

J. H. PATTERSON, Clerk.

L. M. McClintic, p.q.
Sept. 10 4-t Printer's fee $7.65

ORDER OF PUBLICATION.

At rules held in the Clerk's office of the Circuit Court of Pocahontas County on the first Monday in September 1891.

Jacob Taylor
vs.
Margaret M Carpenter and Charles Carpenter.

IN CHANCERY.

The object of this suit is to assign Margaret M. Carpenter her dower in the lands of which her husband Hugh Carpenter, dec'd, seized and to partition the said lands among those entitled thereto, and it appearing by affidavit filed that the defendant Charles Carpenter is a non-resident of the State of West Virginia. It is ordered that he do appear here within one month after the first publication of this order and do what is necessary to protect his interest in this suit.

Witness, J. H. Patterson, Clerk of said Court this 7th day of September, 1891.

J. H. PATTERSON, Clerk.

Moore & McNeil, p. q.
Sept. 10 4t. Printer's fee $7.95

ORDER OF PUBLICATION.

State of West Virginia,
Pocahontas County, to-wit:

At rules held in the Clerk's office of the Circuit Court of Pocahontas County on the first Monday in September, 1891.

State of West Virginia
vs.
Paul McNeil's Heirs,

IN CHANCERY.

The object of this suit is to sell for the benefit of the School fund 611 acres of land forfeited in the name of Paul McNeel's Heirs, lying on Spruce Run, in this county, and it appearing by affidavit filed that Eliza L. Penick, John A. McNeel, Donald McNeel, Julia McNeel, Geo. McNeel, Russell McNeel, Lydia McNeel and Mrs. Kate McNeel, are non-residents of the State of West Virginia. It is ordered that they do appear here within one month after the first publication of this order and do what is necessary to protect their interest in this suit.

Witness, J. H. Patterson, Clerk of the said Court this 7th day of September, 1891.

J. H. PATTERSON, Clerk.

R. S. Turk, Attorney for Com'r of School Lands.
Sept. 10 4t Printer's fee $8.75

COMMISSIONERS NOTICE.

Wm. W. Sutton, Ex'or
vs.
Henry Sheets & others,

IN CHANCERY.

Notice is hereby given to all persons interested in the above styled suit, now pending in the Circuit Court of Pocahontas County, that on the 19th day of September, 1891, at my office in the town of Huntersville, West Virginia, the undersigned Commissioner of said Court will proceed, pursuant to a decree entered in this cause on the 8th day of April, 1891, to take, state and report the following matters of account, viz:

1st. An account showing the amount due the plaintiff from the defendants, and to whom payable.

2nd. Any other matter deemed pertinent by the commissioner or required to be specially stated by any party in interest.

L. M. McCLINTIC, Com'r.
Aug. 20 4t. Printer's fee $5.40

ORDER OF PUBLICATION.

At rules held in the Clerk's office of the Circuit Court of Pocahontas County on the first Monday in September, 1891.

R. P. G. Shafer, ... Plaintiff
vs.
H. S. Rucker, Lizzie C. Rucker, Uriah Devener and Isaac P. Dean .... Defendants.

IN CHANCERY.

The defendants having appeared and suggested that the plaintiff is not a resident of this State and that security is required of the said plaintiff according to law for the payment of the costs and damages which may be awarded to the defendants in this suit and the fees due or to become due in this suit to the officers of this Court and the defendant H. S. Rucker having filed an affidavit that the plaintiff R. P. G. Shafer is not a resident of this State and requiring publication of this order. It is ordered that he do appear here within one month after the first publication of this order and do what is necessary to protect his interest in this suit.

Witness, J. H. Patterson, Clerk of said Court this 7th day of September, 1891.

J. H. PATTERSON Clerk.

Sept. 10 4t. Printer's fee $8.16

HOME NEWS

—Jno McNeel Esq., of Academy was in Huntersville Monday.

—Attorney C. F. Moore, has returned to Clifton Forge.

—Mr. Jno. J. Beard attended the fair at Lewisburg last week.

—Mr. Henry Grose, of this place is in Covington, Va., this week on business.

—Messrs. Loury & Doyle have just received a fine line of fall and winter goods.

—Wm. Gladwell, Esq. and wife, of Green Bank, were in town Tuesday, on their way home from attending the fair at Lewisburg.

—Mr. J. C. Loury, Sr., is going to lay off a part of his farm into town lots soon. He has already had several applications for lots.

—Jacob Boner, Esq., merchant at this place is now in Baltimore buying his stock of fall and winter goods.

—Rev. J. A. Lautenschlager preached a very interesting sermon in the Presbyterian church at this place last Sunday.

—The funeral sermon of the late ~~Jno. Harkley~~, Sr., was preached in the Methodist church at this place by Rev. I. G. Michal, last Sunday.

—Mrs Sabina Kertner a lunatic of near Academy confined in the jail at this place, died this morning.

—Messrs Thomas Hogsett, of Mill Point, and son Chas. of Roanoke, Va., were in Hunteasville last Friday.

—I have for sale at my house on North Fork of Anthony's creek about 150 head of fine sheep, ewes, weathers and lambs.

W. H. BUZZARD.

—Several parties from near this place attended the auction sale of Mr. A. M. McGlaughlin, at Marlinton, Monday and say there was a big crowd in attendance and things went moderately cheap.

—Miss Anna Mary Patterson, of this place, started Monday, for Winchester, Va., where she will attend school the coming session. She was accompained by her sister Miss Maggie, who will return shortly.

—Mrs. A. N. Dameron, who has been visiting her parents at this place for a few weeks, started for her home at Alleghany Station Va., this morning, accompained by her brother, Mr. J. C. Loury, Jr.

—The Greenbrier Industrial Exposition held between Lewisburg and Ronceverte last week, far exceeded the expectations of the promoters, and persons from this community say it was a success in every particular. The Independent says that Mr. A. C. L. Gatewood, of Split Rock, this county had a fine Holstein bull there which was a beauty.

—Rev I. G. Michal, has left the the Huntersvill Circuit and gone to his home in Maryland, because he could not get a house to suit him. This leaves the Huntersville circuit, M. E. Church South without a preacher, all because of not having a parsonage. This speaks badly for this community, and steps should be taken at once to build one.

—We have received a pamphlet entitled "Information and Advice relating to Patents" from C. A. Snow & Co., well known patent attorneys of Washington D. C. It contains directions for procuring patents and the cost of the same in the United States and foreign countries, information about the registration of trademarks, copyrights, caveats, and designs; also abstracts of court decisions in patent cases, and much other matter of interest to inventors, patentees, manufacturers and others interested in patents. It will be mailed free to anyone addressing C. A. Snow & Co. Washington D. C.

—Go to Loury & Doyle's for nice fresh new goods.

DENTAL NOTICE.

Dr J. H. Weymoth will be at Edray on the 5th of Oct., and remain 4 days; Mill Point Oct. 10th, 3 days; Little Levels, (Frank Harpers) Oct. 14th 4 days; Huntersville, Oct. 20th 4 days; Frost, Oct. 26th. 3 days; and will be prepared to attend to all operations in Dentistry. Teeth extracted with but little pain, by use of Cocaine.

Sept. 10-3t

Examination Notice

I will hold my last examination for this year at Edray, Sept. 29th. and 30th, beginning at 8 a. m. Applicants must present a cirtificate of attendance of some Institute, or have a lawful excuse.

Examination conducted under the old law.

M. G. MATHEWS, Co. Supt.

Hillsboro Chips.

Several people from here attended the Fair at Lewisburg last week, all report a nice time.

Miss Lena Kennison left for her school Saturday morning.

Our popular merchat Wm. H. Overholt is making alterations and improvements in his store.

~~J. F. Sydenstricker, W. S. and C.~~ M. Anderson left for Hampden Sydney College this morning.

Allen & Co's. Show which showed at this place last week was enjoyed by old and young.

The Hillsboro Training School and F. & M. Academy opened with prospects for good schools. We wish them both much success.

Miss Bella Clark vis iting relatives and friends in Monroe Co.

Mrs. —— Creig of Ronceverte is visiting her brother Capt. A. M. Edgar.

PHILLIS.

Green Bank Items.

Mr. J. S. Wooddell of Jackson Co. has been visiting relatives and friends here for several weeks.

Mr. J. H. Ralston started to Highland Friday morning accompanied by his father, who had been visiting him for a few weeks.

Mr. and Mrs. Stephen Lockridge, of Highland are visiting relatives in this vicinity.

Mr. and Mrs. Peter Lightner and Mrs. Wallace, all of Highland Co., are visiting at Mr. Geo. W. Siple's.

Mr. David Cleek and daughter and Miss Emma McClintic of, Bath Co., are spending a few days at Mrs. Jno Warwick's.

Mr. G. B. Curry, while attending conference at Dunmore, called on his friends in and near Green Bank.

CONSTANCE.

List of Deeds.

The following is a list of deeds for July:

From A. M. Kee and wife and Samuel Kee to W. L. Kee for land near Marlinton.

W. L. Kee to Sarah M. Apperson for land near Marlinton.

Josiah Dilley and wife to Jno. T McGraw for land on Thorney Creek.

C. L. Austin to J. B. Bradshaw for land near Green Bank.

Daniel B. Friel and wife, of Missouri to Lillie M. Friel for their interest in lands of the estate of Daniel Friel, dec'd.

Benjamin B. Doyle and wife to Wm. Beverage for land on the head waters of Beaver Dam.

Dr. Spencer M. Free and wife to T. B. Williams, all of Pennsylvania, for land in Green Bank district.

Hester E. Poage and her husband to J. B. Apperson for their interests in the estate of J B Kee dec'd.

Hugh Adams and wife to the heirs of J. & M. Adams dec'd for land on Dry Fork of Elk.

B. A. Holt and wife and A. F. Mathews and wife all of Greenbrier Co., to the Cumberland Lumber Co., for timber on certain tracts of land situated in this and Greenbrier counties.

J. B. Bradshaw and wife to wallace G. and J. A. Burner for land near Traveler's Repose.

Jacob F. Cackley and wife of Illinois to Sallie M. Gray of Va. for their one half interest in land on the waters of Elk river.

Isaac P. Boggs and wife to the St. Lawrence Lumber Co., for thimber on land on Greenbrier river.

W. B. Scott and wife to T. S Riley for land on the head waters of Greenbrier river.

Wm. B. Sutton and wife to Eliza Ann Curry, for land on Deer Creek.

COMMISSIONER'S NOTICE,

At a Circuit Court continued and held for the county of Pocahontas, at the court house thereof on the 17th day of June, 1891.

F. H. Hull, Adm'r
vs.
F. H. Hull's heirs
and
Dudley et als.
vs.
Hull et als.

IN CHANCERY.

Huntersville, w. Va., Sept. 8, 1891.

Notice is hereby given that I will at the court house of Pocahontas county, West Virginia on the proceed to take, state and report the following account, and will continue the same from day to day until completed.

6TH DAY OF OCTOBER, 1891,

And is is further ordered and decreed that this cause be referred to C F. Moore who is appointed Special Commissioner for that purpose, with instructions, that after being first duly sworn, according to law, he shall take, state and report the following matters of accounts to-wit:

1. An account of all the leins upon the lands of which the late F. H. Hull dec'd, seized and possessed, separating general leins, from specific leins, and showing in the bases of specific leins the particular tracts to which said leins relate, and to whom due.

2. An account of all debts due from the estate of the decedent, and not barred by the statue of limitations.

3. An account bringing down to date the accounts of rents and improvements so as to show the present condition of said account, charging against the heirs of F. H. Hull, deceased, all sums of money paid to their mother, Mrs. E. M. Turk on her dower by virtue of any decree of court.

4. An account of the actings and doings of Samuel L. Gibson, late Sheriff of Pocahontas county, and as such Administrator of F. H. Hull, deceased, and also of J. C. Arbogast, Sheriff of Pocahontas County, and as such Adm'r de bonis non of F. H. Hull, dec'd.

5. An account showing what estate was left by said Mrs. E. M. Turk, deceased that did not pass into the hands of her Administrator, together with the character and value thereof, showing what portions thereof, if any, passed into the hands of her children, the heirs at law of F. H. Hull deceased, charging against the said heirs, such sums as their mother received improperly from the money of the several purchasers of lands sold under decree in the cause first named, provided the sum so charged against said heirs at law for money improperly paid to their mother as aforesaid shall not exceed the value of the property and money that they received from the estate of their said mother.

7. An account showing what sums of money were improperly paid to Mrs E. E. M. Turk, from funds arising from the sales of the lands as aforesaid, showing the name of the purchaser whose money was used to make improper payments to the said Mrs. E. M. Turk, and giving the amounts used from each purchaser's money, together with the debts thereof.

8. An account of all the purchase money paid by the several purchasers of land sold under a former decree in the first above mentioned case, giving the amounts paid by each purchaser, with the debts of their respective payments, and the person to whom they made their said payments respectively.

9. An account showing the persons to whom the purchase money arising from the sale of lands sold under a former decree in the first nome case, was paid, showing the amounts paid to each person with dates of all payments respectively, calculating interest to date in all cases.

10. An account of any other matters deemed pertinent by himself or required by any of the parties in interest to be stated.

C. F. MOORE, Commissioner.

Sept. 10 4t — Printer's fee $23.20

COMMISSIONTR'S NOTICE.

Augusta National Bank
vs.
Tardy, Urquehart and Tardy.

IN CHANCERY.

Notice hereby given to all persons interested in the above styled suit, now pending in the Circuit Court of Pocahontas County that on the 11th day of September, 1891 at my office in the town of Huntersville, West Virginia, the undersigned Commissioner of said Court acting under a degree rendered in said suit on the 17th day of June, 1891, will proceed to take and state for report to Court the following matters of account.

1st. A further statement of liens against the lands of the defendants in bill and proceedings mentioned.

2nd. A restatement of the former account in this suit.

3rd. Any other matter deemed pertident by the Commissioner or required to be specially stated by any party interest.

L. M. McCLINTIC, Com'r.

Aug. 20-4t — Printer's fee $7.60

ORDER OF PUBLICATION.

State of West Virginia,
Pocahontas County, to wit:

At rules held in the Clerk's office of the Circuit Court of Pocahontas County, on the first Monday in September, 1891.

Henry Grose
vs.
S. P. Patterson, et als.

IN CHANCERY.

The object of this suit is to have a partition of about 49 acres of land, situate in Pocahontas County, West Virginia, near Huntersville, or if said land is not susceptable of partition, to sell the same and divide the proceeds among those entitled thereto according to their respective rights and interests, and it appearing by affidavit filed, that Newton Campbell, Leonidas Campbell, Iella Wade, Amon Wade, Thomas Hickman, Peter Hickman, Jennie Hamilton, Emma Bulger, Matilda Hepler and Laura Hickman are non-residents of the State of West Virginia. It is ordered that they they do appear here within one month after the first publication of this order and do what is necessary to protect their interest in this suit.

Witness, J. H. Patterson, Clerk of the said Court this 7th day of September, 1891.

J. H. PATTERSON, Clerk.

L. M. McClintic, p. q.

Sept. 10 4t. — Printer's fee $ 9.85

TO R. P. G. SHAFER, Esq.

Take notice, that on Saturday, October 3rd, 1891 between the hours of 8 o'clock a. m. and 6 o'clock p. m. at the office of Dr. Sam'l B Scott, in the town of Reusens, Campbell Co. Virginia, we will proceed to take the depositions of Sam'l B. Scott, Jr., and others; and, on Friday, October 9th, 1891, between the hours of 6 o'clock a. m. and 6 o'clock p. m. at the office of H. S. Rucker, in the town of Huntersville, County of Pocahontas, State of west Virginia, we will proceed to take the depositions of Amos Barlow and others, and on Saturday, October 10th, 1891, at her residence in the town of Huntersville, in said County of Pocahontas, we will proceed to take the depositions of Lizzie C. Rucker and others all of which said depositions, when taken, we will offer as evidence in our behalf in a certain suit in chancery now pending in the Circuit Court of Pocahontas County west Virginia, in which you are plaintiff and ourselves and Isaac P. Dean are defendants.

If from any cause the taking of any of said depositions shall not be begun or completed on the days aforesaid, the taking of the same will be continued from day to day, and from time to time at the same places and between the same hours, until the several sets of depositions shall be begun and completed.

Respectfully,
H. S. RUCKER,
LIZZIE C. RUCKER,
URIAH HEVENER.
By Counsel.

H. S Rucker, sol.
Sept. 10 4t. — Printer's fee $10.08

Pocahontas Times.

JOHN E. CAMPBELL,
EDITOR AND PROPRIETOR.

Entered at the Post-office at Huntersville, W. Va., as second class matter.

ADVERTISING RATES.

	1 m.	3 m.	6 m.	1 yr.
One inch	$ 1 00	$ 2 00	$ 3 00	$ 5 00
Three in.	2 00	4 00	6 00	10 00
Qr. column	3 00	6 00	10 00	17 00
Half col'n	6 00	12 00	20 00	30 00
One col'n	10 00	20 00	30 00	50 00

Reading notices, not exceeding five lines, twenty-five cents for each insertion, and five cents a line for each additional line.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION.

One copy, 1 yr., $1.00 in advance; after 6 months, $1.25; after 12 months, $1.50

These terms will be strictly complied with.

Huntersville, W. Va.
September 10, 1891.

THE OLD LOVE.

Hester told Effie she was making a mistake, so did her mother, Mrs. Macgregor, in casting off such an honest fellow as Geo. Duff just because he did not shine in society and was a bad dancer.

But Effie was facinated by Capt. Verschoyle, and when his regiment was ordered away she wept bitterly. The only one in the family who approved of her choice was her aunt, Lady Macgregor, who highly approved of the captain because he was the son of an earl. But time passed and never a line come from the gay captain, and one day Effie heard from her sister's lips that he was married. The news also came that her lover, Geo. Duff, was about to marry his cousin. It was a double blow to the poor girl, and for some time her life was dispaired of.

Effie did not die. She struggled back—thanks to her youth—into health again; but the brightness of her life was dimmed. She was never the gay, happy, lighthearted Effie Macgregor that she had been of yore, and dark days came for the sisters. Mrs. Macgregor died suddenly and they were left almost penniless—pensioners on the bounty of Lady Macgregor, unless they chose to exert themselves personally to procure a living.

Hester would gladly have toiled to save Effie all anxiety and care, but adversity revealed in the latter a strength and character and purpose that no one ever supposed the pretty butterfly of old days possessed. She would do her share, she declared, and when Hester looked out for a governess post Effie did the same.

What a change it was to them, what a pang to say good bye to Inverardoch and to face the world alone—for together it could not be.

Lady Macgregor professed to be offended at her husbands nieces for disgracing their connections by going out as governesses; but she was honest to admit to her intimates that she would have considered it a great hardship to have had to support them; and she was kind enough to procure for Effie a post with a distant cousin of her own who was blessed with a goodly supply of olive branches.

Mrs. Elton was very kind to Effie. She took to her pale, delicate young governess at once, and treated her from the first with more than ordinary kindness.

One day about a year after Effie had come to Mrs. Elton, the latter [illegible] informed her that she expected a bride and bridegroom to dinner. There was to be a party of friends to meet them, and Effie was instructed to appear with her pupils in the evening.

No suspicions as to the bride and bridegroom crossed her mind, and she came face to face with her discarded love, George Duff, who, looking both handsome and happy, was leaning over a low chair, occupied by a pretty girl in bridal splendor.

A cold chill ran through Effie Macgregor's veins. The girl wife looked so bright, so happy, so contented while she, Effie, was miserable and alone, a governess, a dependent, with no one save far off Hester to care for her.

The blue eyes grew misty as she thought of her folly. Like a scene suddenly revealed, she realized exactly the part that Capt. Verschoyle had had in ruining her life. She saw clearly that she had thrown an honest heart, that she had indeed sacrificed the substance for the shadow. But what availed it to reverte mournfully to the past—she who must bravely try to face the lonely future?"

Mr. Duff came forward frankly to Effie. Her pale, sad face smote him to the heart; he guessed her story, and his whole desire was to utter one sentence in her ear; while the bright eyed Mrs. Duff gazed with some curiosity upon Mr. Duff's newly found friend.

He asked after Hester, and then referred lightly to herself. Was she well and happy?

Hester was in England, and she herself was well and—happy.

"And, Effie, have you not relented?" he asked.

Relented! Was he mad? She looked at him indignantly.

"I have never changed," said George Duff. "I loved you from the first day I saw you, Effie. I love you still. I made up mind, despite desertion, that, if I did not marry you, I would never marry any other woman."

"And your resolution broke down? said Effie.

"How?" he inquired. "What do you mean?"

"That you married some one else, after all."

Then Effie found out her mistake. The pretty bride was George's cousin; the lucky bridegroom was not Mr. Duff.

Six months later he and Effie were married, and Hester crowned her sister's happiness by taking up her abode with them until she changed it for one of her own.

Effie looks back now and blesses the day that she did not marry Capt. Verschoyle, though he is an earl at present, and his neglected countess does the honors over a far grander domain than the lovely, homelike Ardlock.

Every man who has a parrot is always telling what a wonderful bird is his. A lawyer in New York owns one of these "talking devils." A friend went home with him to dinner recently and when the two men were approaching the house the lawyer said: "My parrot can recognize my footsteps as soon as it falls in the hall. When I open my door he always cries out from a back room, 'Hallo, Will; come in here.' Now," added the lawyer as he slipped the key into the latch, "just listen." They listened and this is what they heard, "Hallo, Will, you old bald headed fool; come in here." The lawyer for one minute looked as if a house had fallen on him.—And it was all the fault of one of his brothers, who had heard the lawyer boast so often of his parrot that he taught the bird to insert the "bald-headed" part. Now he can't be broken of the habit.

A farmer and his wife who had been doing Central park stopped at the Fifth avenue entrance as they came out and turned for a last look.

"Nice, isn't it?" said the wife.

"Purty darned fine, and no mistake," he heartily replied.

"What's it worth?"

"Wal, that's hard to say, as I don't know what land fetches up the [illegible] round here, but I'll tell ye this. If we had this thing on our farm just as it stands I wouldn't take a cent less'n $1,000 for it, and I'd git $2,000 if I could!"

A NOBLE HEART.

The baby had lost his "dollar piece." Everybody was hunting but Willie. He sat on the stairs and did not move for a long time. Presently he walked into the nursery and said: "You needn't look any longer. I think an Indian has got it by this time." Everbody stared at Willie.

"You see the missionary in Sunday school made me feel very sorry for the poor little Indian papoose, and I thought I'd help him buy a 'spress wagon or something, so I sent him the baby's dollar." "But, Willie," said mamma, "why did you not send your own money?"

"Oh! I'm saving mine to buy a drum with."

SUBSCRIBE

FOR THE——

POCAHONTAS TIMES,

Every man in the County should take it, and patronize home industry. It sustains your rights, and works for the advancement of your county, which no city paper will do. It gives you the news from all parts of the county, which you could not get otherwise. It furnishes matters of interest to the Merchant, Farmer and Mechanic. It keeps you posted and gives you information, on all general news, and its sections and Miscellany are fit for all ages.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION.

One year in advance	$1.00
If not paid within 6 months	1.25
And at the end of th yaer	5 0

AND IF YOU NEED

Letter Heads, Note Heads, Bill Heads, Envelopes, Drug Envelopes Tags, Business Cards, Official Blanks, Blank Bonds, Posters Briefs for the Court of Appeals etc

GET THEM AT "THE TIMES"

JOB OFFICE.

[illegible]NTAS TIMES.

[illegible] West Virginia, Thursday, September 17, 1891. Terms of Subscription: $1.00 per year, in advance. No. 8

[illegible] Deputy Sheriff, Geo. W. Callison. Clk Co. Court, S. L. Brown. Clk Cir. Court, J. H. Patterson. [illegible] C. O. Arbogast. [illegible] Co. Surveyor, [illegible]

THE COURTS.

Circuit Court convenes on the first Tuesday in April, 3rd Tuesday in June and 3rd Tuesday in October.

County Court convenes on the 1st Tuesday in January, March, October and second Tuesday in July. July is levy term.

[illegible]

Dreary and chilly, a dying year! Behind the windows of Mrs. Ougspie's old brown farm house hung cold their "frosty" sighs behind the fringed cotton curtains, and when the kitchen-door opened you could see the blazing logs, the figures coming and going, like a miniature magic-lantern.

It was Dora Ougspie that opened it, and came flitting out to the well with a scarlet shawl over her head. As her light feet pattered over the carpet of autumn leaves in the pathway she sang a snatch of some good old fashioned hymn.

"My goodness alive! What's that?"

For, as the words trilled from her tongue, a tall, dark figure had risen from the low bench under the apple tree, whose boughs overhung the well.

"Don't be alarmed," said a deep, sweet contralto, with a scornful intonation in its sound, "It's only me, Dora."

"Joanna Elfeld?"

"Yes, Joanna Elfeld. What then? Have I fallen so low that I am no longer worthy to sit beneath the old apple tree? If so, tell me, and I'll quit!"

"You know I didn't mean that, Joanna."

"It's hard to tell what people mean or don't mean, now-a-days," said Joanna, picking at the fringe of her frayed rag of a shawl. "I was so tired. I wanted a drink of water. So I came to the old well."

"Joanna," said Dora, hesitating, "are you hungry?"

"Hungry? No. There's a sort of craving, though, in my stomach which is next to it, I suppose."

"Would you like something to eat?"

"I don't beg."

"Wait a minute, Joanna."

Like an arrow Dora Ougspie sped back into the house, where her mother was just setting the teapot on the table. Fresh baked waffles steamed on one side, but biscuits were piled in drifts of snow on the other.

For Mrs. Deacon Peabody and her daughter Comfort were to come to tea; and Mrs. Ougspie was a housekeeper in her especial line.

"Close, Dora, quick, with that water," said Mrs. Ougspie, "and shut the door."

"Mother," said Dora, speaking in a slightly embarrassed tone, "Joanna Elfeld is out by the well! She is cold and hungry and and—"

Mrs. Ougspie's face hardened into lines of stone. Miss Comfort Peabody drew her skirts tight around her, with an involuntary movement, and Mrs. Peabody looked hard into the bowl of the tea-cup.

"Then let her stay cold and hungry. Joanna Elfeld is no associate for either you or me, Dora! She ran away from home, and acted with [illegible] play-actors—she [illegible] her [illegible] instead of keeping that fine voice of hers for the praise of the Lord, and people do say [illegible] has taken to drink [illegible] and you expect me to open my doors to such as her?"

"But, mother," faltered Dora, half affrighted by her own boldness, "don't you remember that he came to call not the righteous, but sinners to repentance?"

"How dare you quote the Scriptures to me?" cried Mrs. Ougspie, her face flushing darkly. "Bring in that pail of water at once, and let us have no more nonsense."

Thus rebuffed Theodora Ougspie crept back again into the frosty twilight, dejected and empty-handed.

"Ah," said Joanna Elfeld, "I thought how it would be. Everybody's doors are shut against me."

"Is it true, Joanna?" whispered Dora, coming close up to her.

"Is what true?"

"That you drink?"

"Of course it's true. You would drink if you were as I am! There are times when you could sell your soul for a chance to forget!—And that chance is only to be found in drink."

"Oh Joanna, I am so sorry for you."

"Sorry! Say that again here! People have mostly left off being sorry for me."

"But listen, Joanna. Won't you try to do different?"

"I am not so bad as some folks think me, except for the craving for drink. I have been nothing worse than wild and wilful. Only when a girl once gets on the down hill, every man or woman thinks it a duty to give her another push!"

"Then will you try to retrieve your old self?"

"How can I? What is there left for me?"

"Your superb voice, Joanna."

"You would have me sing myself respectability, eh! And in the meantime should starve."

"You need not starve, Joanna. Here!"

Quick as lightning she drew a small gold chain, with a gold locket shaped like a heart dangling at its end, from her neck.

"Dear Joanna, take this. It is worth money. Sell it, and use the money for your needs."

"Are you in earnest, Dora?"

"Of course I am. Hush! mother is calling me. I must go."

"God bless you for this," said Joanna, huskily. "And, Dora—one word more; let me kiss you, just once——"

By way of an answer Theodora Ougspie threw her arms around the tall girl's neck and pressed her soft red lips to the other's cold mouth. —And as she did so something splashed on her cheek a hot tear.

The next minute Joanna Elfeld had disappeared into the world of shadows that were hovering over all the autumn landscape. And as she went she murmured to herself:

"Some one believes in me yet! It's a strange sensation, and yet—it gives me something to live for, after all!

* * * * * *

"Dora! Theodora! Why don't you answer? But no one thinks it worth while to pay any attention to me now-a-days."

It was Mrs. Ougspie's shrill, piping voice, as helpless from paralysis, she sat in her cushioned chair by the doorway.

"What is it, mamma?" Dora asked, coming to the door.

The Ougspie farm house had drifted sadly to decay. Fences had fallen; gates hung creaking; sunny pasture lands were neglected; green meadows had toppled over with their own weight of harvest.

"The carriage with those grand people that have bought Elmwood Place. A gentleman dressed like the Prince of Wales, and a lady whose diamonds flashed fit to blind one. Look! the carriage 's stopping! Bless'd I live, the lady's coming back, trailing her purple silk gown like it was Solomon's glory!"

She gave her apron a twist and tried to settle her scant shawls around her poor useless feet as the tall stately lady swept up to the door.

"This is the Ougspie place; and you are Joanna Elfeld?"

"Not Joanna Elfeld, now, but Joanna Avenel," she rejoined, smiling. "Here is my husband George, this is the friend I told you of, whose hand, ten years ago, lifted me out of darkness and set me in the right path."

"Dora," she added, "that night was the turning point in my life. See! I have your little gold chain with the heart yet. I knew then that one human creature had faith in me still, and it renewed the fountain of life within me. Dora, you were my guardian angel.—God bless you for it."

People wondered much that those rich Avenels had Dora Ougspie with them, to say nothing of that tiresome, [illegible] old [illegible], her mother. But Mrs. Avenel was a great lady, and could of course, be excused for having her whims—one of which was always to wear a thread like a chain of gold around her neck, with a heart shaped locket hanging from it.

And Dora Ougspie, although she had settled into a solitary, hardworking old maid, knew that her life had not been in vain.

THE HOMLIEST MAN.

"Ed" Corrigan, the horse-owner, says the Chicago Post, is not the model from which the artist fashioned the Apollo Belvedere, and his brother "Pat" would never be mistaken by even a blind man for the Venus de Milo in male attire. This means that "Ed" and "Pat" are homely. It's natural and they can't help it and so are not ashamed of it; but they dress a good deal better now than they did a few years ago. When "Ed" Corrigan first came up from Kansas City he looked like a section hand on a Colorado railway and "Pat" looked like another section hand on another railway in the same State.

Well, one day the two Corrigan brothers came up to Chicago to see the sights. They had been doing pretty well in Kansas City and had plenty of money; and so they went to the Grand Pacific, which at that time was the best hotel in town. As soon as they registered Ed said to Pat:

"Come on, now, Pat, and let's change our breath."

"All right, Ed," said Pat; "I want to wash my face, but you go ahead and get the bottle out on the bar and I'll be with you."

So "Ed" went ahead into the bar-room. When he got closer up to the bar he noticed a peculiar rigidity in the eyes of the barkeeper, but he was not therefore the less surprised when that individual, who was still staring at him, broke out into a loud and long-continued laugh.

"What in —— is the matter with you?" growled the man from Kansas City.

"Ha, ha! Ha, ha! Ha, ha! How, haw!" laughed the bartender, as the tears came out on his forehead one by one.

Corrigan didn't quite know whether to be offended or amused. So he asked again in darker tone.

"What's the matter with you?"

"Haw, haw!" gasped the bartender, the tears rolling down his cheeks. "Where did you come from?"

"Kansas City. What of it?"

"Kansas City, eh! Haw! haw! Well, I'll be eternally [illegible] and [illegible] if you ain't the [illegible] homeliest man I ever saw in my life!"

"Huh, is that all?" said Corrigan. "I ain't a beauty, that's sure; but I'll tell you there are homelier men than me right here in Chicago."

"I'll bet there ain't," said the barkeeper.

"Well," said Corrigan, "I'll tell you what I'll do. If a homelier man than me comes into this bar-room inside of five minutes you buy me a hat. If he don't, I buy you one; see?"

"Who's going to be the judge?"

"I'll leave it to you."

"All right," said the bartender, "I'll have to go you." He thought he had a cinch, you see.

The words were hardly out of his mouth when in walked "Pat" Corrigan.

The bartender threw up both hands.

"Good God!" he exclaimed. "I'll buy two hats."

A BIT OF TRUE POLITENESS.

Some time ago a friend of the writer gave a dinner to which a young man, his wife and their little child were invited. The child was a very precocious, bashful and intensely sensitive little one. During the dinner she upset a glass of water upon the table-cloth, and hastily noticing the looks in her direction, her little lip quivered and her eyes filled with tears. At that moment my friend who gave the dinner, knocked over his own glass with a crash that drew every eye in his direction. He laughed over the matter and said it made no difference, etc., and succeeded in withdrawing the attention from the child, who soon smiled again. That I consider to have been the perfection of politeness.

THE BIGGEST ENGINE IN THE WORLD.

It is not strange at all that the biggest engine in the world is exercising its ponderous strength in Pennsylvania. "The President," as it was called, is constantly at work pumping water from the zinc mines at Friedensville, Lehigh county. Its enormous power is that of [illegible] horses, or as is computed, of 35,000 men. In the same county there is still preserved at Hokendauqua the first engine ever used in Lehigh, and set up at Allentown by Eli Sager in 1828.

First Farmer—How's your wife, Farmer Poest?

Second Farmer—Oh, she's complainin' some.

First Farmer—I thought she'd be under the weather when I see her pitchin' hay in the field the other day.

Second Farmer—That didn't hurt her. She walked half a mile after a new bonnet yesterday, and I calc'late the walk was too much for her.

...tas Times.
... CAMPBELL,
...lle, W. Va.
...r 17, 1891.

...ERSVILLE.

...the world there are ... handsomer situa... promising and pleas... than greet the stranger who visits for ... the old historic ...ville.

...of the West Va. ...railroad, Mr. Axtell, ... of the C. & O. and ... prominent gentlemen ... here lately, say they ... a more beautiful ...thriving manufacturing ...

...dates back to the time ... the formation of the ... where it was the camp... the sturdy hunter, who ...

...county seat of Pocahon... and where the first ... County ... John Bradshaw, on ... of March, 1822.

[illegible]

...is one for which they should really be ashamed. They have simply taken advantage of the desire of a young and weak government to obtain the friendship of an older and stronger government to compel the acceptance of their proposition. Mr. Blaine with all his faults would hardly have been guilty of such a trick as that.

Representative Mills has gone to Ohio, where he makes his first speech next week. Representative McMillin and Bynum have gone to Chicago, where they are to meet the rest of the missionary party, which is to leave that city next week on its tour to the Pacific Coast.

Mr. Harrison will have a republican as well as a democrat to appoint to the Interstate Commerce Commission, as bad health has compelled Judge Cortey to resign.

Representative Catchings, of Mississippi, thinks the circular recently issued calling on the colored laborers of the South to increase their demand for picking this year's cotton crop, is the work of republican mischief-makers whose object is to make trouble between the planters and the laborers. He says the price proposed is excessive and unreasonable, being equal to about one sixth of the value of the cotton.

"The threat of a strike", said Mr. Catchings, "among the farm hands is not a matter to be lightly considered. Cotton is a perishable crop and when it is ripe for picking, the picking must be done promptly or their is a heavy loss."

Secretary Foster loses no opportunities to boast of there being plenty of money in the Treasury to meet all demands, but he doesn't tell how shrewdly he has played his cards to prevent a deficit. Every accounting officer of the Treasury was some weeks ago given to understand that the more they delayed accounts which involved the payment of money, the better they would stand with the Secretary, and the result is that very little money, aside from pensions and the redemption of the four-and-a-half per cent. bonds, is being paid out. Appropriations for public buildings are being held up on every possible excuse in order to let a little money accumulate in the Treasury for show purposes. The claim agents are wild over the situation, for they cannot get settlement on claims that have been passed as correct, on account of some quibble which has been raised by some Treasury official acting of course under orders from the Secretary. It ought not to be difficult for Mr. Foster to accumulate a considerable surplus if the policy of paying out nothing is to continue.

There is one democratic official connected with this administration who has been trying without success ever since the 4th of March, 1889, to retire from office. His name is Moore, and he is Third Assistant Secretary of the State, and a remarkably well posted man on international law. He was appointed by Mr. Cleveland, and as soon as Mr. Blaine took charge of the department he handed him his resignation ... [illegible]

[illegible]

Democrats here regard Fassett as an easy man to defeat for the governorship of New York. It will be sufficient for the people to know that he is Tom Platt's man.

West Virginia Business University.

LEWISBURG, W. VA.

Faculty:
THOMAS GILMORE, President,
SAMUEL J. COFFMAN, A. M.
HOWARD W. BARCLEY, A. B., B. L.
FRANK H. LAIRD.

One of the most complete commercial and Stenographic Schools in the South.

Open to Ladies and Gentlemen.

Sesion of 1891-92 opens Sept. 16, 1891.

Patronize Home Institutions.

Write for catalogue.

July 18 3-m

ORDER OF PUBLICATION.

At rules held in the the Clerk's office of the Circuit Court of Pocahontas County, on the first Monday in September, 1891.

T. J. Williams
vs.
H. B. Hanger.

The object of this suit is to attach the estate of the defendant H. B. Hanger and subject the same to the payment of a debt due from said Hanger to the plaintiff T. J. Williams on an open account for $92.41, with interest thereon from the 28th day of August, 1891, and it appearing by affidavit filed, that the defendant H. B. Hanger is a non-resident of the State of West Virginia. It is ordered that he do appear here within one month after the first publication of this order and do what is necessary to protect his interests in this suit.

Witness, J. H. Patterson, Clerk of the said Court this 7th day of September, 1891.

J. H. PATTERSON, Clerk.

L. M. McClintic, p. q.
Sept. 10 4-4 Printer's fee $7.65

ORDER OF PUBLICATION.

At rules held in the Clerk's office of the Circuit Court of Pocahontas County on the first Monday in September 1891.

Jacob Taylor
vs.
Margaret M Carpenter and Charles Carpenter.

IN CHANCERY.

The object of this suit is to assign Margaret M. Carpenter her dower in the lands of which her husband Hugh Carpenter, dec'd, seized and to partition the said lands among those entitled thereto, and it appearing by affidavit filed that the defendant Charles Carpenter is a non-resident of the State of West Virginia. It is ordered that he do appear here within one month after the first publication of this order and do what is necessary to protect his interest in this suit.

Witness, J. H. Patterson, Clerk of said Court this 7th day of September, 1891.

J. H. PATTERSON, Clerk.

Moore & McNeil, p. q.
Sept. 10 4t. Printer's fee $7.90

ORDER OF PUBLICATION.

State of West Virginia,
Pocahontas County, to-wit:
At rules held in the Clerk's office of the Circuit Court of Pocahontas County on the first Monday in September, 1891.

State of West Virginia
vs.
Paul McNeil's Heirs.

IN CHANCERY.

The object of this suit is to sell for the benefit of the School fund 411 acres of land forfeited in the name of Paul McNeil's Heirs, lying on Spruce Run, in this county, and it appearing by affidavit filed that Eliza L. Fenick, John A. McNeil, Donald McNeil, Julia McNeil, Geo. McNeil, Russell McNeil, Lydia McNeil and Mrs. Kate McNeil are non-residents of the State of West Virginia. It is ordered that they do appear here within one month after the first publication of this order and do what is necessary to protect their interest in this suit.

Witness, J. H. Patterson, Clerk of the said Court this 7th day of September, 1891.

J. H. PATTERSON, Clerk.

S. S. York, Attorney for Com'r of School Lands.
Sept. 10 4t Printer's fee $6.75

COMMISSIONER'S NOTICE.

Wm. M. Sutton, Ex'or
vs.
Henry Moore & others.
IN CHANCERY.

[illegible]

HOME NEWS

—Levi Gay, Esq., of Marlinton, [illegible]

—Wallace Ruckman, Esq., of Mill Point called on us Tuesday.

—[illegible], of Ronceverte, was in town one day last week.

—[illegible] C. M., of Mill Point, were in town one day last week.

—[illegible], Esq., of Lexington, Va., is out on a [illegible] trip.

—Our young and very highly esteemed friend Geo. L. Foutz, is very low with typhoid fever at Lexington, Va.

—Henry McNeel, of Academy, has a very fine trotting mare which won a premium of $[illegible] at the [illegible] fair.

—We learn from the Greenbrier Independent that Mrs. Christina [illegible], died at her home near [illegible], on [illegible] August 18, aged [illegible] years, [illegible] and 2[illegible] days.

—Capt. [illegible], of Va., is in Huntersville preparing to look after [illegible] for the St. Lawrence [illegible] Co.

—[illegible], Esq., of [illegible], was [illegible] last week, on his [illegible] from taking his sister to school at Lewisburg.

—[illegible], at his home near [illegible], last Friday, at 11 o'clock, of some intestinal disorder, aged about 60 years.

—The Pocahontas County Farmers Alliance will meet in the Court house at this place, Tuesday Oct. 6th instead of the first Friday in October, as previously understood.

—A gentleman of near Charleston, passed through here one day last week close on the track of a man who stole a horse near there. The thief was about 18 hours ahead of his pursuer.

—Among prominent gentlemen in our city last Saturday, we noticed [illegible], Isaac McNeel, M. J. McNeel and N. A. Brown, of Mill Point; H. F. Berold, of Frost; and I. B. Moore, of Sunset.

—Attorney James Woodell, of Addison, Webster Co., was in Huntersville a few days ago. Mr. Woodell, as we understand, was the first clerk of the courts in Webster county.

—[illegible], Esq., who attended the summer medical course at the University of Va., has returned to his home at this place, and we are sorry to say he is now on the sick list, but nothing serious we hope.

—Mr. [illegible], of Knapps creek, who [illegible] [illegible]

—Jacob Ruker, Esq., has returned from Baltimore, and informs us that he has bought a fine line of fall and winter goods. Watch for his advertisement next week.

—Cards are out announcing the marriage of Miss Mary Lou, daughter of Dr. John [illegible], of Clover Lick, to Mr. J. J. Coyner, we understand, from Augusta Co., Va., to take place [illegible] (Tuesday) at 3 o'clock, in Grace church, Clover Lick, by the Rev. Dr Lacy. The bride is a most beautiful, pleasant and highly accomplished lady, and while we are not acquainted with the groom, we can say from the high social standing of the bride, that he is a gentleman of rare personal appearance with no small bank account.

—[illegible] been forced to place a number of accounts in the hands of an officer for collection, and some of them [illegible] and attached [illegible] amount to. This is very [illegible] a newspaper account can be made when nothing else can be. So after this you had better pay the amount of the account before cost is attached. We are very sorry we have to [illegible] remind you that we have to have money to pay the expenses of the office and also [illegible] eternally live on the atmosphere. As a rule we have the best paying list of subscribers we have ever seen, but occasionally a few, it being a small amount, will neglect it.

—The [illegible] Boom & M'f'g Co's lumber railroad, which starts near the Buzzard place on Beaver creek and which passes near this place, making the terminus at [illegible] a few hundred yards below here, a distance of about three miles, under the management of Capt. T. A. Smith and his efficient foreman Mr. R. R. M[illegible], is about completed. They have been at work on this road something less than two months, with a force of about 35 men, and have built a most excellent lumber railroad, which undoubtedly, considering the [illegible] work it took [illegible] for both the employers [illegible]. Capt. Smith is one of our most highly esteemed and one of the best business men of our county, and believes in and always practices the principal, that if anything is worth doing it is worth doing right.

Miss [illegible] McCutcheon, of Dunmore has enrolled as a pupil of the H. T. School and Miss Ida White of Dris[illegible] at the [illegible] Academy.

Miss Nettie Campbell of Union who has been visiting her friend Miss Jennie [illegible] for some time past, returned home last week. Those who know Miss Nettie regret very much to see her leave.

Mr. N. C. McNeil of Huntersville spent a few days in [illegible] last week.

Mr. Mathew [illegible] of Washington is visiting his many relatives and friends at this place.

Miss Lena Wallis, of Lewisburg, enrolled as a pupil of [illegible] Academy last week.

[illegible]

DENTAL NOTICE.

Dr. J. H. Weymouth will be at [illegible] [illegible]

The Ed. put in an ad. for me last week in which he says I will sell goods low down for cash. THAT IS JUST WHAT I WILL DO. He says I am trying to collect old accounts &c., and that is so, and I now find that I will have to get the assistance of an officer to help collect for me.

Respectfully,
AMOS BARLOW,
Huntersville, W.Va.

Notice of Sale.

Of Valuable Land in Pocahontas County, W. Va.

Pursuant to a decree entered in the chancery cause of Paul McNeel's Executors vs. Samuel Auldridge and others on the 4th day of [illegible] and the 6th day of April, 1891, by the Circuit Court of Pocahontas County, West Virginia, the undersigned Special Commissioners will sell publicly to the highest bidder in front of the Court-house door of the said County on the

2[illegible]TH DAY OF OCTOBER, 1891,

the following lands of the defendant Samuel Auldridge, viz.: 285 acres of land lying in the said county of Pocahontas near Mill point, in what is known as Buckeye mountain and believed to adjoin the lands of Isaac McNeel and others, this tract will be sold separately also two tracts one 17 and one of 90 acres lying near or adjoining the last mentioned tract, these two tracts will be sold together, also a tract of 177 acres, a tract of [illegible] acres, 22 acres, 60 acres and 75 acres on the east side of Greenbrier river in said County near the mouth of Stamping creek, also a tract of about 45 acres of land lying in said County on the west side of Greenbrier river near the mouth of Stamping creek, it is believed that these last tracts [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] place of Samuel Auldridge on which he now resides and that there are valuable improvements on said lands and much of it is valuable for farming purposes. Also a tract of 474 acres of land lying on the mountain near Swago Knob adjoining the lands of Wm. L. McNeel, [illegible] and others said tract is [illegible] timber [illegible].

And there is now being made an accurate survey of these lands that will be exhibited on day of sale, showing the exact locality and amount of each tract.

TERMS:

Cash in hand sufficient to pay cost of suit and sale and for the residue bonds to be given by the purchaser with approved personal security bearing interest from date of sale, due in 9, 18 and 27 months from day of sale, a lien to be retained as ultimate security.

JOHN W[illegible], Spec'l Com'rs.
E. C. TURK,

I certify that bond has been given by the above named Special Commissioners as required by law and the above decree aforesaid.

J. H. PATTERSON, Cl'k.
Printer's fee $16.2[illegible]

Aug. 17 4-t

COMMISSIONER'S NOTICE.

At a Circuit Court continued and held for the county of Pocahontas, at the court house thereof on the 17th day of June, 1891.

F. H. Hull, Adm'r
vs.
F. H. Hull's heirs
and
Dudley et als.
vs.
Hull et als.
IN CHANCERY.

Huntersville, W. Va., Sept. 5, 1891.
Notice is hereby given that I will at the court house of Pocahontas county, West Virginia on the proceed to take, state and report the following account, and will continue the same from day to day until completed.

6TH DAY OF OCTOBER, 1891,

And is is further ordered and decreed that this cause be referred to C. F. Moore who is appointed Special Commissioner for that purpose, with instructions, that after being first duly sworn according to law, he shall take, state and report the following matters of accounts to-wit:

1. An account of all the liens upon the lands of which the late F. H. Hull dec'd, seized and possessed, separating general liens from specific liens, and showing in the cases of specific liens the particular tracts to which said liens relate, and to whom due.

2. An account of all debts due from the estate of the decedent, and not barred by the statue of limitations.

3. An account bringing down to date the accounts of rents and improvements so as to show the present condition of said account, charging against the heirs of F. H. Hull, deceased, all sums of money paid to their mother, Mrs. E. M. Turk on her dower by virtue of any decree of court.

4. An account of the actings and doings of Samuel L. Gibson, late Sheriff of Pocahontas county, and as such Administrator of F. H. Hull, deceased, and also of [illegible], Sheriff of Pocahontas county, and as such Adm'r de bonis non of F. H. Hull, dec'd.

5. An account showing what sums [illegible] Mrs. E. M. Turk, [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] the hands of her children, the heirs at law of F. H. Hull, deceased, charging against the said heirs, such [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] purchasers of lands sold under decree in the cause first named, provided the sum so charged against said heirs at law for money improperly paid to their mother as aforesaid shall not exceed the value of the property and money that they received from the estate of their said mother.

7. An account showing what sums of money were improperly paid to Mrs E. E. M. Turk, from funds arising from the sales of the lands as aforesaid, showing the name of the purchaser whose money was used to make improper payments to the said Mrs. E. M. Turk, and giving the amounts used from each purchaser's money, together with the debts thereof.

8. An account of all the purchase money paid by the several purchasers of land sold under a former decree in the first above mentioned case, giving the amounts paid by each purchaser, with the debts of their respective payments, and the person to whom they made their said payments respectively.

9. An account showing the persons to whom the purchase money arising from the sale of lands sold under a former decree in the first same case, was paid, showing the amounts paid to each person with dates of all payments respectively, calculating interest to date in all cases.

10. An account of any other matters deemed pertinent by himself or required by any of the parties in interest to be stated.

C. F. MOORE, Commissioner.

Sept. 10 4t. Printer's fee $28.90

COMMISSIONTR'S NOTICE.

Augusta National Bank
vs.
Tardy, Urquchart and Tardy.
IN CHANCERY.

Notice hereby given to all persons interested in the above styled suit, now pending in the Circuit Court of Pocahontas County that on the 11th day of September, 1891 at my office in the town of Huntersville, West Virginia, the undersigned Commissioner of said Court acting under a decree rendered in said suit on the 17th day of June, 1891, will proceed to take and state for report to Court the following matters of account.

1st. A further statement of liens against the lands of the defendants in bill and proceedings mentioned.

2nd. A restatement of the former account in this suit.

3rd. Any other matter deemed pertinent by the Commissioner or required to be specially stated by any party in interest.

L. M. MCCLINTIC, Com'r.

Aug. 20-4t Printer's fee $7.60

DENTAL NOTICE.

O. J. Campbell, dentist, will be at Academy on the 16th inst. and remain one week; Huntersville, 23rd and remain three days; Frost, 27th and remain three days.

ORDER OF PUBLICATION.

State of West Virginia,
Pocahontas County, to-wit:
At rules held in the Clerk's office of the Circuit Court of Pocahontas County, on the first Monday in September, 1891.

Henry Grose
vs.
S. P. Patterson, et als.
IN CHANCERY.

The object of this suit is to have a partition of about 49 acres of land, situate in Pocahontas County, West Virginia, near Huntersville, or if said land is not susceptible of partition, to sell the same and divide the proceeds among those entitled thereto according to their respective rights and interests, and it appearing by affidavit filed, that Newton Campbell, Leonidas Campbell, Della Wade, Anson Wade, Thomas Hickman, Peter Hickman, Jennie Hamilton, Emma Bolgeri Matilda Hepler and Laura Hickman are non-residents of the State of West Virginia. It is ordered that they they do appear here within one month after the first publication of this order and do what is necessary to protect their interest in this suit.

Witness, J. H. Patterson, Clerk of the said Court this 7th day of September, 1891.

J. H. PATTERSON, Clerk.

L. M. McClintic, p. q.
Sept. 10 4t. Printer's fee$ 9.85

TO R. P. G. SHAFER, Esq.

Take notice, that on Saturday, October 3rd, 1891 between the hours of 8 o'clock a. m. and 6 o'clock p. m. at the office of Dr. Sam'l B. Scott, in the town of Reusens, Campbell Co. Virginia, we will proceed to take the depositions of Sam'l B. Scott, Jr., and others; and, on Friday, October 9th, 1891, between the hours of 8 o'clock a. m. and 6 o'clock p. m. at the office of H. S. Rucker, in the town of Huntersville, County of Pocahontas, State of West Virginia, we will proceed to take the depositions of Amos Barlow and others, and on Saturday, October 10th, 1891, at her residence in the town of Huntersville, in said County of Pocahontas, we will proceed to take the depositions of Lizzie C. Rucker and others all of which said depositions, when taken, we will offer as evidence in our behalf in a certain suit in chancery now pending in the Circuit Court of Pocahontas County West Virginia, in which you are plaintiff and ourselves and Isaac P. Dean are defendants.

If from any cause the taking of any of said depositions shall not be begun or completed on the days aforesaid, the taking of the same will be continued from day to day, and from time to time at the same places and between the same hours, until the several sets of depositions shall be begun and completed.

Respectfully,
H. S. RUCKER,
LIZZIE C. RUCKER,
URIAH HEVENER,
By Counsel.

H. S Rucker, sol.
Sept. 10 4t. Printer's fee $10.08

Pocahontas Times.

JOHN E. CAMPBELL,
EDITOR AND PROPRIETOR.

Entered at the Post-office at Huntersville, W. Va., as second class matter.

ADVERTISING RATES.

	1 m.	3 m.	6 m.	1 yr.
One inch	$ 1 00	$ 2 00	$ 3 00	$ 5 00
Three in.	2 00	4 00	6 00	10 00
Qr. column	3 00	6 00	10 00	17 00
Half col'n	6 00	12 00	20 00	30 00
One col'n	10 00	20 00	30 00	50 00

Reading notices, not exceeding five lines, twenty-five cents for each insertion, and five cents a line for each additional line.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION.

One copy, 1 yr., $1.00 in advance; after 6 months, $1.25; after 12 months, $1.50

These terms will be strictly complied with.

Huntersville. W. Va.

September 17, 1891.

Mr. and Mrs. Bowser.

Mr. Bowser isn't the least bit particular about his shirts and collars and such things—no husband ever is. Every morning as regularly as clock work, when half past 7 o'clock comes, Mrs. Bowser, who has been up for half an hour, looks in to find him on the broad of his back, with his hands locked under his neck and the bedclothes wrapped around him like some giant mummy.

"Mr. Bowser!"

No answer.

"Mr. Bowser!"

"Um!"

"Mr. Bowser do you know what time it is?"

"E-m-m-m!"

"Come, breakfast will be ready before you are. You wanted to get away a little earlier this morning."

"What matter?"

"Come—wake right up!"

"Lemme 'lone!"

"Mr. Bowser!"

He opens his eyes, turns over with a grunt and a growl, and 10 minutes after she has gone down stairs he carefully sits up in bed. He is all there. Then he kicks the clothes down with his leg—then with his left—knocks his pillow off on the floor, and "sorter" falls out after it with a growl like some old sore backed bear trying to crawl through a rail fence. Ten minutes later Mrs. Bowser feels the house shake and hears a voice calling:

"Mrs. Bowser are you alive or dead?"

"What is it dear?"

"Don't 'what is it-dear me!'"

"Is this a dime museum, cider-mill or the home of a hardworking, respectable man?"

"What is it?" she asks as she arrives on the scene of the total disaster.

"Look—a—there, Mrs. Bowser—look—a—there!" he hoarsely whispers as he hold out a pair of suspenders in his hand.

"Yes—I see. You broke 'em about a month ago and mended them with a string. They've busted again. Go ahead and get on your collar and I'll fix 'em. There they are, and you'd better buy a new pair to-day."

"Some mighty queer things around this house!" he mutters as he buttons them on. "Them suspenders was all right when I went to bed last night. Next time you want to play circus take a piece of clothes line. Where's my front collar button?"

"You must have flirted it out when you drew on your shirt. Here it is."

"After this when you go prowling around at night I wish you would leave my things alone! If you want collar buttons just say so and I'll buy you a cart-load!"

"Here's your collar dear."

It is beautifully clean and white, but he has to fit at it and growls. It is one of a dozen he had made to order, and fits him to perfection, but it is no sooner buttoned than he gives it a hitch and a hunch and a yank and roars out:

"By the great horn spoon! but can I never get a collar to fit me! It's bad enough to have to wear an old rag of a shirt, let alone having my throat cut with such collars!"

"But they were made to measure you know."

"Measure! measure! Do you suppose there is a shirt-maker on earth who knows enough to measure a man's neck? The confounded cross-eyed idiot probably thought I wanted to button 'em onto my ears!"

Mrs. Bowser applies the soothing syrup and the third collar is allowed to remain. He growls over his necktie, but gets it on after awhile, and is then ready to inquire:

"I suppose the girl in the kitchen is using my tooth-brush for a poker, isn't she? I'd just like the public to know how this house is run! It's no wonder that so many husbands walk off and are never heard of again!"

"There's your tooth-brush right in front of your nose!" replied Mrs. Bowser.

"Oh! it is! Mighty funny how it go there all at once! Hair brush isn't down in the coal bin, is it?"

"It's right there in plain sight. No one ever disturbs your things, Mr. Bowser."

"They don't eh! Didn't nobody get up in the night and throw my shoes out into the yard, I suppose?"

"Of course not!"

"Then where are they? I took them off right here, but they are gone! Such a system of housekeeping! People wonder that strong men become insane, but there is a cause for, Mrs. Bowser—a cause for it. I sometimes"——

"You took your shoes off down stairs last night. Your feet ached and you sat in your stocking feet."

"And those shoes were not deliberately picked up this morning and carried down there?"

"Of course not. Are you ready?"

"I suppose so. If not, I'll have to go as I am. I can't expect any one to care whether I have any comfort or not. No wonder I'm taken for a man 75 years old!"

Three times a week, after Mr. Bowser is in bed, Mrs. Bowser removes the buttons from his shirt, places them in a clean one and hangs the shirt over the back of a chair. The other one is taken away to the hamper in the clothes-press, and she remarks:

"You'll find your clean shirt right here when you get up."

"Yes."

Morning comes and Mr. Bowser gets out of bed. He feels around with his feet; no shirt. He paws around under the bed; no shirt.

"Now, why on earth did that woman go and take my shirt down stairs?" he growls as he gets up and goes hunting.

By-and-by he finds the clothes-press; then he finds the hamper; then he fishes up the shirt and continues:

"It's either got to stop or I leave! Talk about system? Why, that woman knows no more about housekeeping than a bootjack! There it is again—not one single button in my shirt! Mrs. Bowser! Hello, down there!"

"Yes—yes! What's the matter Mr. Bowser?"

"Matter! Matter!" he hoarsely whispers, as she arrives at the top of the stairs—"look at me—at this shirt!"

"Mr. Bowser, do you see that clean shirt on that chair?" she sternly asks. "Didn't I fix it last night? Isn't every button in place? You are the queerest man I ever heard of!"

"I am, eh! Queer because I want shirt buttons in my shirt. Queer because I can't have patience with your lack of system. Queer because I put up with a million times more than any other husband in New York. Mrs. Bowser, if you had some men to live with you'd soon find out what's what! Perhaps I can stand it three or four weeks longer, but—

But she is gone, and he takes it out in kicking over a chair and knocking everything off the bureau before he is finally dressed and ready to go down to breakfast and inquire why in the name of common sense his knife and fork were put on the left hand side of his plate instead of the right.

CENTRAL W. VA. MARBLE WORKS

Manufacturers of

HEADSTONES ALL KINDS OF MONUMENTAL WORK,

Dealers in

[illegible]

Lewisburg, W. Va.

E. H. MOORE, Agent,
ACADEMY, W. Va.

SUBSCRIBE

FOR THE——

POCAHONTAS TIMES,

Every man in the County should take it, and patronize home industry. It sustains your rights, and works for the advancement of your county, which no city paper will do. It gives you the news from all parts of the county, which you could not get otherwise. It furnishes matters of interest to the Merchant, Farmer and Mechanic. It keeps you posted and gives you information, on all general news, and its sections and Miscellany are fit for all ages.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION,

One year in advance	$1.00
If not paid within 6 months	1.25
And at the end of the year	1.50

AND IF YOU NEED

Letter Heads, Note Heads, Bill Heads, Envelopes, Drug Envelopes, Tags, Business Cards, Official Blanks, Blank Bonds, Posters, Briefs for the Court of Appeals etc

GET THEM AT "THE TIMES"

JOB OFFICE.

POCAHONTAS TIMES.

9. JOHN E. CAMPBELL, EDITOR AND PROPRIETOR. Huntersville, West Virginia, Thursday, September 24, 1891. Terms of Subscription. $1.00 PER YEAR. IN ADVANCE. No. 9

THE TIMID PASSENGER.

Coaching was not all fun in the days when the Deadwood coach became famous on account of the many times it was held up and its passengers robbed. There was a time when, if the coach made a trip without any interference from the road, it was considered a red letter trip.

The stage pulled out from Deadwood one morning with six passengers and a guard on the box beside the driver. They were all men who looked as though they were used to life at the front, among the mining camps.

One was a tall, brawny, rough Scotchman, with red hair, and a tremendous growth of frowsy red whiskers that were heavy and bristled out in every direction, and only left a small clearing on his face around her nose and eyes; another one of the passengers was a small, wiry, nervous man, not near as large as the Scotchman, but like him had firy red hair and beard; the other four men were not specially noticeable.

As the coach started on its way each passenger fixed himself as comfortably as he possibly could, and no one seemed in a hurry to start conversation and get on familiar speaking terms as men will who are thrown together that way. Everybody seemed at ease and unconcerned, except the little man; he fussed about, changed his seat, stowed his carpet bag in a different place, put his head out of the window, and wiggled about generally like an uneasy small boy.

The Scotchman seemed put out by his uneasiness, and, after several sharp looks, asked crossly:

"What's the matter, mon, canna you keep quiet? Ye gie one the fidgets."

The little man made no reply to the rebuke, but asked the Scotchman:

"Do you think we're likely to be held up this trip?"

"How can I say? ye ken as much aboot it as I do. Keep still and dinna fret yer'sel'."

"Who's frettin', I'd like to know? I guess if you had all you've got about you you'd not enjoy being held up by a pack of cut throats, and have it taken from you."

"Tut, tut, mon! ye have na mair to keep than ithers. Rest yer'sel' and if we're stopped creep under the seat."

This discouraged the little man and dropped the conversation for a time, but he continued his nervous twitching. The other men filled their pipes and kept silent.

The coach rattled along over the trail at a good pace and drew near the dangerous territory. The other passengers, all but the Scotchman, began to show some signs of nervousness, and this did not soothe the little man's apprehension.

"You can say what you like, but I'm durned skeery about here," remarked the little man.

"Will ye no stop yer clatterin'? If we're stopped git yersel' behind me an' they'll na see ye."

"All right. I will if you—"

"Halt!"

"Oh, Lord! I knew it; there they are. It's all up with me now. Every durned cent gone, and just as like as not we'll get pumped full of lead. Durn such a country, anyway."

"Come gentlemen, step out lively, and all in a line, and keep your hands up!" came from beside the road, as the driver hauled up at the command to halt.

"If either of you on the box drop your hands you're gone," was said in a determined voice to the driver and guard.

The passengers turned pale and looked desperate, but there was nothing to do but obey. Few men will attempt to pull a weapon when they know that the least move will make them a target for a load of buckshot.

Slowly the men descended from the stage, standing in a line with their hands high above their heads.

The Scotchman and the little man were the last to alight. The little man was so frightened that he lost his head entirely. He did not seem to have a bit of what plainsmen call "sand." While the others were getting out of the stage he tried to crawl under the seat, but there was no room, then he tried to pull the cushions over him, but they were not large enough to conceal him.

"Come out, ye loon; ye'll na be harmed if ye behave," growled the Scotchman, as he in turn stepped out the stage door.

Just as the Scotchman was descending, with one foot on the steps and the other on the ground, his hands up, the little man in a paroxysm of helpless fear threw both arms about his neck.

The sudden and unexpected load upon the Scotchman's back threw him off his balance and both fell to the ground, the little man on top.

Up to this time the coach party had not seen any one, but had obeyed a voice that issued from the thicket. As the pair rolled on the ground a man with a double-barreled shotgun leveled at the driver and guard stepped out to view.

"Here, stop that monkey business, or you'll git hurt!" he shouted, still keeping the drop on the men on the box.

"I'll be killed! I'll be killed!" cried the little man as he pawed about on the back of the Scotchman, who was lying face down and vainly trying to get the fellow off his back.

Just how it happened none of the passengers could tell, though they were all standing looking on, smiling at the sight, even in the face of their predicament. There was a gleam in the little man's right hand a pistol cracked, and the man with the shotgun sank in the road with a red spot between his eyes, and the little man was sitting astride the Scotchman with a smoking pistol in his hand.

"Keep still, Reddy, or you'll git it next," was addressed to the struggling man under him.

He placed the muzzle of the revolver at the Scotchman's ear.

You feel that. Well, it's loaded. Not a quiver.

He reached back to his hip pocket with one hand, and brought out a pair of handcuffs. Snap, snap, and the Scotchman's hands were cuffed behind his back.

"Now you can get up, Reddy."

It all happened so quickly that the on lookers could scarcely comprehend it.

"You're all right now, gentlemen; you can pull your hands down. That chap out there is harmless now, and Reddy's claws are cut."

"Ye did that slick, didn ye?" hissed the manacled Scotchman, as he glared at the little man.

"Yes, I think so myself; and it will be a long time before you attempt to hold up another stage, and your pard there never will."

All hands crowded about the little man and shook his hand warmly, offering hearty thanks for their deliverance.

"That's nothing, gentlemen. It's what I am hired for. Put that dead man in on the floor and we'll take him and his partner on the the next stop.

The journey was resumed, and there was no further interruption. Reddy was handed over to the authorities, and the dead man buried at the next stop.

The next morning, on the outskirts of the town, a body hung from the limb of an oak tree, and swung to and fro in the breeze. It had fiery red hair and bushy red whiskers. On its breast was pinned a card bearing this legend:

"Reddy—Murderer, Horse thief, Highwayman."

[Signed] THE COMMITTEE.

—Edwin Ralph Collins in Texas Siftings.

WOOD FOR THE PRINTING PRESS.

The wood pulp business is generally regarded as in its infancy in this country, and yet the product is enormous. The Philadelphia Record, which makes its own paper has furnished a piece of special information, which gives an inkling of the magnitude of the general consumption of wood pulp. It states that a single edition of the Record—150,000 copies of a 12 page paper, required 17 tons of blank paper, to produce which 67 cords of poplar was used. In 22 hours from the time of felling the tree it had been turned into printed papers. The process is thus divided with respect to a test case: Chopping 1½ cords of woods, 3 hours, in manufacturing into pulp, 12 hours, transporting to the Record office, 1 hour and 20 minutes; wetting paper, previous to printing, 30 minutes, printing 10,000 copies, 10 minutes. This shows the rapidity with which raw material may be turned into a finished article, going through numerous processes. If the Record averaged 50 cords of poplar daily, it would amount to 18,250 cords annually. It must then be considered that it is only one paper in one city, and that about every newspaper is printed from material consisting largely, and often almost wholly of wood pulp, which is also used in the production of nearly all common and mediate grades of paper for almost all use. It is thus seen that the consumption of wood in pulp making is of great magnitude.

With enormous consumption of wood for railway ties and building and the added requirements of the printing press, it is not strange that our forests are rapidly disappearing. Every State should pass laws for the encouragement of tree planting. If steps are not soon taken to restore our woods, there will ere long be a tree famine.—Scientific American.

He—Ethelinda, be mine. I am young well born——"

She—"But, Mr. Sampson, I do not——"

He (Refusing to be interrupted)—"I would care for you tenderly—"

She (hesitating) —"But—but—"

He—"And I have unlimited credit at the principal dry goods stores."

She—"Oh, Henry! I am yours!"

A drummer in a Grand Rapids merchant's store was making some inquiries about his business.

"You run the establishment alone, I notice," he began.

"Yep."

"Anybody in with you?"

"Yep."

"His name doesn't appear on your sign?"

"Nope."

"Ah! A silent pardner?"

"Not much! It's my wife."

Loving Wife—Now that you are ruined, Henry, I will disclose my secret. For years I have been saving up, and now (pouring a shower of silver coins into his hat) this may tide you over.

Husband—Oh, my darling, how did you manage to get it

Wife—Easily enough. Every time you said an unkind word to me I put a shilling into a box.

"Your honor," said a prosecuting attorney in an Alabama backwoods Court, "the prisoner at the bar is charged with killing one of the most exemplary citizens of this country. Andrew D. Boyson, your honor, was in every respect a model man. He was a beloved member of the church, and was never found to be guilty of any unchristian act. Why, your honor, he was never known to bet on horses, play poker, drink whiskey or use tobacco." "Well, then," said the judge leaning back with a sigh, "I don't see what he wanted to live for. There wa'n't anything in life for him, and I don't see why he ain't about as well off dead as alive. Release the prisoner, Mr. Sheriff, and call the next case."

Pocahontas Times.

JOHN E. CAMPBELL,
EDITOR AND PROPRIETOR.

Entered at the Post-office at Huntersville, W. Va., as second class matter.

Huntersville, W. Va.
September 24, 1891.

The favorite game in Roumania is freezing out kings. Kings, especially if there be three or four of them are difficult to freeze out in this country.

Italy has once more declined, to take any official part in the World's Fair. This time in a letter to a committee of Americanized Italians which has tried its persuasive powers in a resolution of invitation to the Italian government asking that it co-operate with the committee in seeing that Italy was properly represented at the Fair.

Although the recent New York republican convention was controlled by Boss Platt it did not entirely neglect ex Senator Miller, Platt's one time rival, as it put a plank in its platform endorsing his Nicaragua canal scheme although it is a difficult matter to understand the connection between the Nicaragua canal scheme and New York politics.

Fred. Duglass having lost his office, and seeing no chance to get another one, announces his withdrawal from politics, just as his white brothers have done under similar circumstances. Who says the negro is not odqancing.

This administration believes in shouting for civil service reform while it winks at the open violation of the law in behalf of its friends by Federal officials.

The Russian bear seemes to be engaged in toning up his appetite preparatory to devouring Turkey, with or without the consent of the rest of Europe. Upon several occasions in the past when the conditions were much as they are now the British lion has steped between the bear and his proposed victim just in time. Will he do so again? is now the question of questions with those deeply interested in European affairs.

Willie Waldorf Astor, of New York, who since his failure to buy a seat in the House of Representatives has spent the greater part of his time regretting that he was born in America, and not in some country where his immense wealth would enable him to perchase a place in the ranks of the nobility, has, in an effort to remedy that defect, renounced America as a residence and gone to Europ to live. America can stand it if Europe can.

W. B. Tascott the alleged Chicago murderer has been found again. This time he was a tramp in South Carolina and was arrested upon information furnished by another tramp who claimed to be a detective. The two tramps will probably be well fed until the Chicago officers have visited them and pronounced them frauds, then the matter will quiet down until another Tascott is found. There is an average of about three months time between the findings, and no section of the country has been slighted.

The vacation season being about over the administration has returned to Washington to continue its hard work in behalf of the nomination and election of Mr. Benjamin Harrison for a second term. They are all at work except Mr. Blaine and he is expected soon, and Secretary Proctor who is taking his last opportunity of a pleasant jaunt at the expense of the people by going on an "inspection tour" of the Western Military posts, but he has spent so little time in Washington since he became a member of the cabinet that his absence doesn't count.

A CORRESPONDENT writes to us from Pocahontas county says: "Old Pocahontas has begun to come to the front. There are now being laid off a big town at Marlinton, the junction of the C. & O. and the Pittsburg and West Virginia railroads. The lots are being laid off by Capt. Oscar A. Veezy, civil engineer, assisted by two other competent engineers. The lots are now on the market. There will be a bank under headway soon, known as the bank of Pocahontas. A propostion is before the voters to move the Court house from Huntersville to Marlinton. Our old Court house has been condemned, and as we will have to build a new one, let us accept Col John T. McGraw's proposition, which is $5,000 in money and two and a half acres of ground for a site, provided the Court house be moved to Marlinton."—Greenbrier Independent.

We would judge from the above article that the Independent's correspondent has never been in Pocahontas county nor does he know anything about it whatever. He says Marlinton is the junction of the C. & O. and W. Va. & Pittsburg railroads. We are extremely sorry that when he says this he is quite largely mistaken. Not a mile of either of the roads he mentions nor any other railroad, except a few tram roads for lumber purposes, has ever been built in the county. Our nearest point to any railroad station is about 30 miles. Marlinton is the proposed junction of the two roads, when they are built, which we hope will not be far off, but we are also sorry to say that railroad corporations are very, very, very priviledged, only building their roads when it suits them and when it suits them.

Also he says the Court-house at this place has been condemned and that we will have to have a new one. We are pleased to correct the said correspondent here. It has never been condemned, and that we have a better Court-house than several of the larger counties of our own State and as good, as we know of in counties of 35,000 inhabitants, and an assessed valuation of property six or more times greater than our County.

We are always pleased to see newspaper articles of a complimentary character of our county but never any thing that is calculated to mislead any one.

A CITIZEN.

Examination Notice

I will hold my last examination for this year at Edray, Sept. 29th, and 30th, beginning at 8 a. m. Applicants must present a cirtificate of attendance of some Institute, or have a lawful excuse.

Examination conducted under the old law.

M. G. MATHEWS, Co. Supt.

ORDER OF PUBLICATION.

At rules held in the Clerk's office of the Circuit Court of Pocahontas County on the first Monday in September 1891.

Jacob Taylor
vs.
Margaret M Carpenter and Charles Carpenter.

IN CHANCERY.

The object of this suit is to assign Margaret M. Carpenter her dower in the lands of which her husband Hugh Carpenter, dec'd, seized and to partition the said lands among those entitled thereto, and it appearing by affidavit filed that the defendant Charles Carpenter is a non-resident of the State of West Virginia. It is ordered that he do appear here within one month after the first publication of this order and do what is necessary to protect his interest in this suit.

Witness, J. H. Patterson, Clerk of said Court this 7th day of September, 1891.

J. H. PATTERSON, Clerk.

Moore & McNeil, p. q.
Sept. 10 4t. Printer's fee $7.95

TRUSTEE'S SALE.

By virtue of a deed of trust executed to me by Sabina Kertner, on the 28th day of May, 1891, and recorded in Deed Book No. 29, page 42, I will offer for sale on the

20TH DAY OF OCTOBER, 1891,

at public auction in front of the Court house in the town of Huntersville, Pocahontas County, West Virginia, a certain tract of land, containg 35½ acres, lying on top of Droop Mountain, and adjoining the land of Geo. Callison and others.

The title to said land is thought to be perfect, but I will make such deed only as is vested in me as trustee.

TERMS OF SALE.

Cash sufficient to pay expenses of sale, and a bond of Thirty-Eight Dollars, ($38.00) with interest from 28th day of May, 1891. The residue in two equal payments, due in 6 and 12 months from day of sale, with interest from date. The purchaser to give bonds with good personal security, and no deed will be made until all the purchase money is paid.

E. K. BURNS, Trustee.

Sept. 24-4t Printer's fee $7.90

ORDER OF PUBLICATION.

State of West Virginia,
Pocahontas County, to-wit:

At rules held in the Clerk's office of the Circuit Court of Pocahontas County on the first Monday in September, 1891.

State of West Virginia
vs.
Paul McNeil's Heirs,

IN CHANCERY.

The object of this suit is to sell for the benefit of the School fund 61 acres of land forfeited in the name of Paul McNeil's Heirs, lying on Spruce Run, in this county, and it appearing by affidavit filed that Eliza C. Fenick, John A. McNeel, Donald McNeel, Julia McNeel, Geo. McNeel, Russell McNeel, Lydia McNeel and Mrs. Kate McNeel are nonresidents of the State of West Virginia. It is ordered that they do appear here within one month after the first publication of this order and do what is necessary to protect their interest in this suit.

Witness, J. H. Patterson, Clerk of the said Court this 7th day of September, 1891.

J. H. PATTERSON, Clerk.

E. S. Tuth, Attorney for Comr of School Lands.
Sept. 10 4t Printer's fee $6.75

ORDER OF PUBLICATION.

At rules held in the Clerk's office of the Circuit Court of Pocahontas County on the first Monday in September, 1891.

R. P. G. Shafer, ... Plaintiff
vs.
H. S. Rucker, Lizzie C. Rucker, Uriah Hevener and Isaac P. Bean .... Defendants.

IN CHANCERY.

The defendants having appeared and suggested that the plaintiff is not a resident of this State and that security is required of the said plaintiff according to law for the payment of the costs and damages which may be awarded to the defendants in this suit and the fees due or to become due in this suit to the officers of this Court and the defendant H. S. Rucker having filed an affidavit that the plaintiff R. P. G. Shafer is not a resident of this State and requiring publication of this order. It is ordered that he do appear here within one month after the first publication of this order and do what is necessary to protect his interest in this suit.

Witness, J. H. Patterson, Clerk of said Court this 7th day of September, 1891.

J. H. PATTERSON Clerk.

Sept. 10 4t. Printer's fee $8.16

HOME NEWS

—Equinox Monday.

—Advertising crowded out several communications this week.

—People generaly, are cutting corn and preparing for seeding.

—Jacob Boner, merchant at this place has received a nice line of fall and winter goods which he sells very low. Read his ad. in this issue.

—Dr. Mathew Edmunston and wife, of Westo[illegible], came from there to this place Tuesday and started this morning, (Wednesday) for the asylum at that place with Miss Wille Miller, lunatic.

—Mr. Page Gay and bride, who were married at Edray last Wednesday, took dinner in Huntersville the following Thursday on their way, as we understand, to visit friends in Highland Co., Va.

—Mr. M. W. Beard, of Pickaway, Monroe Co., was in the the city one day last week. Mitchel informed us that he had been, not long since, presented by his wife with the finest boy in W. Va.

—Mr. A. R. Coulter and wife, of Spice Run, were in town last Thursday. Mr. Coulter informed us that the day before, he killed a rattle snake 4 feet and 1 inch in length and over 3 inches in diameter.

—Messrs. Henry Barlow, of Edray; Amos Barlow and Rice Moore, of this city bought of Mr. H. M. Lockridge, his farm and entire lands on Knapp's creek, about four miles from this place, last Saturday. The price paid, we understand, was $12,000, the entire amount virtually cash.

—Mr. Mathew Edmunston, of Washington State, is in our city visiting friends and relatives. He is formally of the Little Levels, in this county, and has been away about 12 years. Mrs. Wm. Beard, of near Academy, accompained him to this city also on a visit to relatives.

—If you want Letter and Note heads, neatly printed and put up in tablet form, cheaper than you can get them anywhere else, call at THE TIMES office. We also do all kinds of nice job printing, and have on hands a nice line of Stationary, business cards, &c. &c.

—In this issue will be found an advertisement of Messrs Jos. L Barth & Co., Clothiers, Staunton, Va. We have had personal dealings with these gentlemen and it gives us pleasure to recomend them to our readers as gentlemen in every sense of the word, and if those who may need anything in their line, will favor them with an order or call and see them when in Staunton, we are sure they will be entirely satisfied with their goods and above all their prices.

Died—George I. Foutz.

Died at the residence of Mr. H. M. Lockridge, Sept. 16th, 1891, Mr. George Inboden Foutz, in the 23rd year of his age. Deceased was a son of Henry T. Foutz, formerly of Barterbrook, Augusta county where he was born, Oct. 23rd, 1867. The writer was personally acquainted with Mr. Foutz from early boyhood to the present time and knew him as a boy to be perfectly honest and upright, moral and manly in all of his dealings with others, of unspeakable character as to [illegible], positive in his convictions, yet always kind and attentive to all whom he came in contact, and from an intimate [illegible] with him [illegible], can say [illegible] possessed [illegible] those [illegible] of [illegible] than he, and one who had made many friends during his brief life in Buena Vista.

His many relatives have the sympathy of many sorrowing friends [illegible] his loss [illegible] with [illegible]. His remains were buried at Lexington Wednesday.—Buena Vista Advocate.

The deceased spent his boy-hood and early man hood in this community. About a year since he left for the then prosperous town of Buena Vista, Va., where, by his morality, industry and method, he gave fair promises of becoming one of the most prominent busines men of the community. George was with us but a few short weeks ago, full of life and vior; but on his return was soon cut down by the reaper death. He has left a community of sorrowing friends who lament his loss. Peace to his ashes.

DENTAL NOTICE.

Dr J. H. Weymoth will be at Edray on the 5th of Oct., and remain 4 days; Mill Point Oct. 10th, 3 days; Little Levels, (Frank Harpers) Oct. 14th 4 days; Huntersville, Oct. 20th 4 days; Frost, Oct. 26th, 3 days; Green bank, Oct. 30, 3 days; and will be prepared to attend to all operations in Dentistry. Teeth extracted with but little pain, by use of Cocaine.

Sept. 10-3t

TO R. P. G. SHAFER, Esq.

Take notice, that on Saturday, October 3rd, 1891 between the hours of 6 o'clock a. m. and 6 o'clock p. m. at the office of Dr. Sam'l B Scott, in the town of Reusens, Campbell Co. Virginia, we will proceed to take the depositions of Sam'l B. Scott, Jr., and others; and, on Friday, October 9th, 1891, between the hours of 6 o'clock a. m. and 6 o clock p. m. at the office of H. S. Rucker, in the town of Huntersville, County of Pocahontas, State of West Virginia, we will proceed to take the depositions of Amos Barlow and others, and on Saturday, October 10th, 1891, at her residence in the town of Huntersville, in said County of Pocahontas, we will proceed to take the depositions of Lizzie C. Rucker and others all of which said depositions, when taken, we will offer as evidence in our behalf in a certain suit in chancery now pending in the Circuit Court of Pocahontas County West Virginia, in which you are plaintiff and ourselves and Isaac P. Dean are defendants.

If from any cause the taking of any of said depositions shall not be begun or completed on the days aforesaid, the taking of the same will be continued from day to day, and from time to time at the same places and between the same hours, until the several sets of depositions shall be begun and completed.

Respectfully,
H. S. RUCKER,
LIZZIE C. RUCKER,
URIAH HEVENER,
By Counsel

H. S Rucker, sol.
Sept. 10 4t. Printer's fee $10.08

Notice of Sale.

Of Valuable Land in Pocahontas County, W. Va.

Pursuant to a decree entered in the chencery cause of Paul McNeel's Executors vs. Samuel Auldridge and others on the 4th day of April, 1888 and the 6th day of April, 1891, by the Circuit Court of Pocahontas County, West Virginia, the undersigned Special Commissioners will sell publicly to the highest bidder in front of the Court-house door of the said County on the

27TH DAY OF OCTOBER, 1891,

the following lands of the defendant Samuel Auldridge, viz: 285 acres of land lying in the said county of Pocahontas near Mill Point, in what is known as Buckeye mountain and believed to adjoin the lands of Isaac McNeel and others, this tract will be sold separately also two tracts one 17 and one of 90 acres lying near or adjoining the last mentioned tract, these two tracts will be sold together, also a tract of 177 acres, a tract of 100 acres, 52 acres, 6[illegible] acres and 787 acres on the east side of Greenbrier river in said County near the mouth of Stamping creek, also a tract of about 45 acres of land lying in said County on the west side of Greenbrier river near the mouth of Stamping creek. It is believed that these last tracts lie near to or adjoining each other and constitute the home place of Samuel Auldridge on which he now resides and that there are valuable improvements on said lands and much of it is valuable for farming purposes. Also a tract of [illegible] acres of land lying on the mountain near [illegible] adjoining the lands of Wm. L. McNeel, [illegible] and others, said tract is for[illegible] and well timbered.

And there is now being made an accurate survey of these lands that will be exhibited on day of sale, showing the [illegible] locality and amount of each tract.

TERMS.

[illegible]

JOHN W. ARBOGAST, }
E. S. TURK, } Spec'l Com'rs.

I certify that bond has been given by the above named Special Commissioners as required by law and the above decrees aforesaid.

J. H. PATTERSON, Cl'k.

Aug. 27 4t Printer's fee $15.[illegible]

DENTAL NOTICE.

O. J. Campbell, dentist, will be at Academy on the 16th inst. and remain one week; Huntersville, 23rd and remain three days; Frost, 27th and remain three days.

ORDER OF PUBLICATION.

State of West Virginia,
Pocahontas County, to-wit:

At rules held in the Clerk's office of the Circuit Court of Pocahontas County, on the first Monday in September, 1891.

Henry Grose
vs.
S. P. Patterson. et als.
IN CHANCERY.

The object of this suit is to have a partition of about 49 acres of land, situate in Pocahontas County, West Virginia, near Huntersville, or if said land is not susceptible of partition, to sell the same and divide the proceeds among those entitled thereto according to their respective rights and interests, and it appearing by affidavit filed, that Newton Campbell, Leonidas Campbell, Della Wade, Anson Wade, Thomas Hickman, Peter Hickman, Jennie Hamilton, Emma Bulger, Matilda Hepler and Laura Hickman are non-residents of the State of West Virginia. It is ordered that they they do appear here within one month after the first publication of this order and do what is necessary to protect their interest in this suit.

Witness, J. H. Patterson, Clerk of the said Court this 7th day of September, 1891.

J. H. PATTERSON, Clerk.

L. M. McClintic, p. q.
Sept. 10 4t. Printer's fee$ 9.85

COMMISSIONER'S NOTICE,

At a Circuit Court continued and held for the county of Pocahontas, at the court house thereof on the 17th day of June, 1891.

F. H. Hull, Adm'r
vs.
F. H. Hull's heirs
and
Dudley et als.
vs.
Hull et als.
IN CHANCERY.

Huntersville, w. Va., Sept. 8, 1891.

Notice is hereby given that I will at the court house of Pocahontas county, West Virginia on the proceed to take, state and report the following account, and will continue the same from day to day until completed.

6TH DAY OF OCTOBER, 1891,

And is is further ordered and decreed that this cause be referred to C F. Moore who is appointed Special Commissioner for that purpose, with instructions, that after being first duly sworn, according to law, he shall take, state and report the following matters of accounts to-wit:

1. An account of all the leins upon the lands of which the late F. H. Hull dec'd, seized and possessed, separating general leins, from specific leins, and showing in the bases of specific leins the particular tracts to which said leins relate, and to whom due.

2. An account of all debts due from the estate of the decedent, and not barred by the statue of limitations.

3. An account bringing down to date the accounts of rents and improvements so as to show the present condition of said account, charging against the heirs of F. H. Hull, deceased, all sums of money paid to their mother, Mrs. E. M. Turk on her dower by virtue of any decree of court.

4. An account of the actings and doings of Samuel L. Gibson, late Sheriff of Pocahontas county, and as such Administrator of F. H. Hull, deceased, and also of J. C. Arbogast, Sheriff of Pocahontas county, and as such Adm'r de bones non of F. H. Hull, dec'd.

6 An account showing what estate was left by said Mrs E. M. Turk, deceased, that did not pass into the hands of her Administrator, together with the character and value thereof, showing what portions thereof, if any, passed into the hands of her children, the heirs at law of F. H. Hull, deceased, charging against the said heirs, such sums as their mother received improperly from the money of the several purchasers of lands sold under decree in the cause first named, provided the sum so charged against said heirs at-law for money improperly paid to their mother as aforesaid shall not exceed the value of the property and money that they received from the estate of their said mother.

7 An account showing what sums of money were improperly paid to Mrs E. E. M. Turk, from funds arising from the sales of the lands as aforesaid, showing the name of the purchaser whose money was used to make improper payments to the said Mrs. E. M. Turk, and giving the amounts used from each purchaser's money, together with the dates thereof.

8. An account of all the purchase money paid by the several purchasers of land sold under a former decree in the first above mentioned case, giving the amounts paid by each purchaser, with the dates of their respective payments, and the person to whom they made their said payments respectively.

9. An account showing the persons to whom the purchase money arising from the sale of lands sold under a former decree in the first [illegible] case, was paid, showing the amounts paid to each person with dates of all payments respectively, calculating interest to date in all cases.

10 An account of any other matters deemed pertinent by himself or required by any of the parties in interest to be stated.

C F MOORE, Commissioner.

Sept. 10 4t Printer's fee $[illegible]

ORDER OF PUBLICATION.

At rules held in the the Clerk's office of the Circuit Court of Pocahontas County, on the first Monday in September, 1891.

T. J. Williams
vs.
H. B. Hanger.

The object of this suit is to attach the estate of the defendant H. B. Hanger and subject the same to the payment of a debt due from said Hanger to the plaintiff T. J. Williams on an open account for $[illegible], with interest thereon from the 28th day of August, 1891, and it appearing by affidavit filed, that the defendant H. B. Hanger is a non-resident of the State of West Virginia. It is ordered that he do appear here within one month after the first publication of this order and do what is necessary to protect his interest in this suit.

Witness, J. H. Patterson, Clerk of the said Court this 7th day of September, 1891.

J. H. PATTERSON, Clerk.

L. M. McClintic, p. q.
Sept. 17 4t Printer's fee $7.[illegible]

Pocahontas Times.

JOHN E. CAMPBELL,
EDITOR AND PROPRIETOR.

Entered at the Post-office at Huntersville, W. Va., as second class matter.

ADVERTISING RATES.

	1 m.	3 m.	6 m.	1 yr.
One inch	$ 1 00	$ 2 00	$ 3 00	$ 5 00
Three in.	2 00	4 00	6 00	10 00
Qr. column	2 00	6 00	10 00	17 00
Half col'n	6 00	12 00	20 00	30 00
One col'n	10 00	20 00	30 00	50 00

Reading notices, not exceeding five lines, twenty-five cents for each insertion, and five cents a line for each additional line.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION.

One copy, 1 yr., $1.00 in advance; after 6 months, $1.25; after 12 months, $1.50

These terms will be strictly complied with.

Huntersville, W. Va.
September 24, 1891.

MR. AND MRS. BOWSER.

"Do you pass a carpenter shop on your way down town?" asked Mrs. Bowser the other morning as Mr. Bowser was ready to leave the house.

"Why?" he inquired in reply.

"We ought to have a screen door to the kitchen. There is where all the flies come in. We can use one of those doors we brought with us, but we'll have to have a carpenter to hang it."

"We will, eh? I beg to differ. I don't propose to pay no carpenter three or four dollars for doing what I can do in half an hour. I'll fix it myself."

"But don't you remember, Mr. Bowser—don't you remember that you—"

"That I what?"

"You tried to hang a schrene door last summer in Detroit and you got so mad you nearly tore the house down."

"I did, eh? That's a pretty yarn for you to stand up there and spin! In the first place, I never tried to hang a screen door, and in the second I never got mad."

"But you—you—" she stammered.

"Nothing of the sort! I don't even remember that we had a screen door. I never tried to hang one. I never got mad. I never even saw a fly around our house in Detroit. Change of climate seems to have a very queer effect on you."

"But won't you send up a carpenter?"

"Not by a jugful! I shan't have anything to do at the office this afternoon, and if there's a bit of tinkering around the house it will be fun for me."

He returned at noon, having a heavy parcel with him, and when Mrs. Bowser asked about the contents he cut the string and replied: [illegible]

"If you had first measured the opening and then measured your doors, you wouldn't have had to lug up but this one."

"Wouldn't I? Perhaps you understand my object in bringing up the extra ones? Perhaps it is the duty of a husband to explain every little move he makes?"

The door had to be sawed off about an inch at the top. Mr. Bowser brought out a couple of kitchen chairs, made a scratch on the door with a nail, and was about to use the saw when she asked:

"Aren't you going to strike a line across there?"

"For what reason?"

"If you don't you can't saw straight."

"Can't I? Perhaps I am blind!"

When he finished sawing off the strip and held the frame up to the opening it was plain that he had run his saw at an angle.

"I told you so," she quietly observed.

"Told me what!" he replied, as he turned on her. "Do you suppose I don't know what I am about! Do you imagine I wanted a straight top on that door! If you know so much go ahead and finish the job!"

Mrs. Bowser went into the house, and Mr. Bowser held the frame up again to see that he would be obliged to tack on a strip or leave an opening for all the flies in New York state. He was sawing a piece off one of the other doors to make this strip when Mrs. Bowser appeared and said:

"You'll spoil that door too, Mr. Bowser. Why dont you take a piece from this box? If you had put a strait edge on the other and marked it you would have been all right."

"Mrs. Bowser," he began, as he laid down his saw, "am I a purblind child five or six years old, who must be brought in when it rains, or am I the man of the house, forty years of age and generally supposed to have sense enough to sit down under a pile driver to eat my dinner?"

"But you'll never make that door fit," she protested.

"If I don't no other man on earth need try!"

She went in again and he sawed off a strip and nailed it on the other door. Then he held it up to find the frame half an inch too long. Mrs. Bowser reappeared and was about to say something, but he glared at her so savagely that she went back without a word.

"The infernal old kitchen is either lifting up or settling down!" he growled as he held the door up. I've got to saw a piece off the bottom to make a fit, and she'll either fit or down comes the shanty!"

He sawed off a piece and got what he called a fit. He smiled and chuckled over his success, and had the hinges on when Mrs. Bowser came out to ask:

"What good is a door if you leave all those cracks?"

"Cracks! Cracks! You can't find one!"

"Look here—and here—and here! Mr. Bowser, even the humble bees of New York would have no trouble in flying in there! And how are you putting that spring on?"

Mr. Bowser laid down the hammer, the gimlet and the screwdriver, and after wiping off his flushed face he stood erect and pointed to the kitchen. Mrs. Bowser disappeared without a word. Then he inspected and found cracks.

"Confounded old doorway is out of plumb, and that's the matter!" he growled as he set to work to unhang it. When he got the door he racked it this way and that and tried it again. More cracks than before. He took it down and sprung on the top with all his might, and this time, as he held it up, there was a crevice through which a sparrow could have flown. He started to lay it flat on the ground, but fell backward, tumbled over himself and sprawled on his back.

"What's the matter?" asked Mrs. Bowser, from the back door.

Mr. Bowser slowly arose, looked all around for the ax, and not seeing it he jumped at the screen doors and kicked with both feet until they were reduced to strings and strips. Then he went up to Mrs. Bowser, panting and prespiring and pale faced, and hoarsely whispered:

"This is the last time—the very last! Next time you coax me into doing any such infernal puttering work around the house I'll go—go never to return!"

"When did I coax you?"

"Never you mind! It's all right!"

"But I say—"

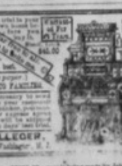
"Just—keep quiet! I am neither blind nor deaf. If we live together ten billion years longer don't you ask me to even bore a hole in a table leg for a caster! This is the limit. I'm dangerous from this on!"

[illegible] tools. Come handy [illegible]

This time he was a tramp in [illegible] Carolina and was arrested up[illegible] formation furnished by a[illegible] tramp who claimed to be a dete[illegible] The two tramps will probab[illegible] well fed until the Chicago o[illegible] have visited them and prono[illegible] them frauds, then the matte[illegible] quiet down until another Tasc[illegible] found. There is an average of three months time between th[illegible] ings, and no section of the co[illegible] has been slighted.

The vacation season being over the administration has [illegible] ed to Washington to contin[illegible] hard work in behalf of the [illegible] tion and election of Mr. Ben[illegible] Harrison for a second term. [illegible] are all at work except Mr. [illegible] and he is expected soon, and [illegible] tary Proctor who is taking [illegible] opportunity of a pleasant [illegible] the expense of the people [illegible] on an "inspection tour" of [illegible] tern Military posts, but [illegible] spent as little time in W[illegible] since he became a member [illegible] cabinet than his [illegible] [illegible]

"I think you'd orter raise my wages," ventured Mr. Haycede's hired man. "Don't see how I kin do it, Jim; don't see no way at all to do it. Tell you what I will do, though. When any of the summer boarders is around I'll allude to you as my private secretary. But as to givin' you any more money on the month, I just can't do it."



SUBSCRIBE

FOR THE

POCAHONTAS TIMES.

Every man in the County should take it, and patronize home industry. It sustains your rights, and works for the advancement of your county, which no city paper will do. It gives you the news from all parts of the county, which you could not get otherwise. It furnishes matters of interest to the Merchant, Farmer and Mechanic. It keeps you posted and gives you information, on all general news, and its sections and Miscellany are fit for all ages.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION,

One year in advance $1.00
If not paid within 6 months 1.25
And at the end of the year 1 50

AND IF YOU NEED

Letter Heads, Note Heads, Bill Heads, Envelopes, Drug Envelopes Tags, Business Cards, Official Blanks, Blank Bonds, Posters Briefs for the Court of Appeals etc.

GET THEM AT "THE TIMES"

JOB OFFICE.

[illegible]

POCAHONTAS TIMES.

Vol. 9. JOHN E. CAMPBELL, EDITOR AND PROPRIETOR. Huntersville, West Virginia, Thursday, October 1, 1891. Terms of Subscription. $1.00 PER YEAR. IN ADVANCE. No. 10

Official Directory of Pocahontas County

Judge of Circuit Court, A. N. Campbell.
Prosecuting Attorney, L. M. McClintic.
Sheriff, J. C. Arbogast.
Deputy Sheriff, Geo. W. Callison.
S. L. Brown.
Cl'k Co. Court, J. H. Patterson.
Cl'k Cir. Court, C. O. Arbogast.
Assessor,
Com'rs Co. Ct. {C E. Beard. S. B. Hannah. G. M. Kee.
Co. Surveyor, Geo. Baxter

THE COURTS.

Circuit Court convenes on the first Tuesday in April, 3rd Tuesday in June and 3rd Tuesday in October.

County Court convenes on the 1st Tuesday in January, March, October and second Tuesday in July. July is levy term.

HE WOULDN'T DO IT.

The following remarkable good story is from the Oskaloosa, Iowo, Herald. It illustrates the mulish obstinacy of some men, and also demonstrates a very important truth in current politics:

One of our farmer friends, whose only fault is that he is a Democrat—and he is not to blame for that, for his father before him was dyed in the wool, and he never reads the newspapers—came to town one day last week to buy some sugar. His good wife was putting up fruit, and she needed about fifteen pounds of sweetness. The dialogue in the grocery ran about as follows:

Farmer—"What are you doing, young man?"

Clerk—"Waiting on you. Weigh out your sugar."

Farmer—"How much are you giving me?"

Clerk—"A dollars worth,"

Farmer—"Yes, I know; but how many pounds?"

Clerk—"Twenty four."

Farmer—"Twenty-four! Why it used to be only fourteen."

Clerk—"Yes, but McKinley did it."

Farmer—"Well, run her back and give me only 14 pounds. If I took home 24 pounds of sugar for a dollar the old woman would make me vote the Republican ticket, and I'll be hanged if I do that."

In a New York newspaper office. A seedy looking man enters and thus addresses the managing editor:

"I have something here that I think would please your readers."

"Don't want it; full now."

"But it is very important."

"Don't want it, I tell you."

"It is not a murder or anything of that sort—it is more important than a fire."

"Will you get out!"

"It is a slam at Chicago."

Morning editor siezes the article, rushes to a tube, and shouts: "Leave out the news from Washington. Chicago matter of great importance."

Mistress—Bridget, I can't get into the parlor.

Bridget—Sure and it's meself knows that; an' ye won't for I have the kay in me pocket!

Mistress—Open the door immediately.

Bridget—Will ye go in if I do?

Mistress—Certainly I will!

Bridget—Then you don't get the kay.

Mistress—Open the door immediately! What do you mean?

Bridget—Sure it's by your orders! Ye said yesterday don't let me come down stairs in the mornin' an' see any dust on the parlor furniture. So I just puts the kay in my pocket, an' says I, then she won't!

Wooden—We are just pestered to death with tramps at our home.

Balfinch—Well, we used to be, but we never have one now.

Wooden—I suppose you got a dog.

Balfinch—No, my wife went to cooking school.

"Mr. Hayseed, we are agents of the Government, and would like to send up a few balloons from your farm."

"What fer?"

"Why to cause an explosion of hydrogen and oxygen gasses and there to produce an artificial fall of rain."

"For the lands sake!"

"Yes, sir, you have guessed it."

The following communications should have appeared last week:

Hillsboro Chips.

Farmers are busy sowing wheat and cutting corn, and their wives are making preserves and drying fruit.

Quite a number of pupils have enrolled at the M. & F. Academy the past week.

Mr. M. Corbin, of Green Mout, Va is in our town doing fine painting.

Miss Jessie Bright, of Lewisburg, is assisting Prof. C. A. Brown in his School.

Miss Lizzie McNeil is visiting relatives and friends at Staunton.

Mr. S. J Payne, of Frankford, spent Sunday in town. He had the misfortune to upset his cart with his best girl, Sunday night.

Mr. Harry McGlaughlin, of Elk, is in town. He is still suffering with a Payne in his heart.

Miss Jessie Renick, lef for Staunton this morning, to attend the Wesleyan Female Institute.

Dr. O. J. Campbell, of Monterey, Va., spent a few days in town fixing teeth. He is a fine dentist.

PHILLIS.

Dunmore Doings.

If thick corn husks is a sign, we will have a hard winter.

Mrs. C. B. Swecker and son are on a visit to Crab Bottom, Va.

Misses May Cackley and Mollie Smith were visiting friends at Driscol last week.

A Sunday school has been organized at Baxter church.

Preaching at Baxter church, by Rev. Lautenschlager, on Sunday night, Oct. 4th.

Some one set fire to Mr. G. N. Tacy's grain stacks and burned them up.

Miss Kittie Lakin has returned home.

The mail was carried last week by one of the fair sex. She makes good time, and lots of the boys are mashed.

Capt. C. B. Swecker will commence an auction sale of stock at Beverly, Oct. 10th.

Wanted, some one to open up a hotel and livery stable.

RATTLER.

A POLITICAN'S BIOGRAPHY.

Weight, 10 pounds.
Cootsey-Tootsey
Baby boy.
Mamma's darling.
Papa's little man.
Jimmy.
Jim.
James.
Jimmy the kid.
Young Mr. Brown.
James Brown.
Mr. James Brown.
Clerk of Election Brown.
Committeeman Brown.
Alderman Brown.
The Hon. J. M. Brown.
James Martin Brown.
Brown.
Jim Brown.
Jimmie Brown.
"Seventh Ward Jimmie.
Jimmie the bum.
Jim.
Whiskey Jim.
Old Soak.
Cell 99.
Coroner's office—"Unidentified."

"Now I tell you Minnie, I wouldn't go out buggy riding with Jack Whitbody for anything. Why, the last time I was out with him he hugged me till I screamed, the impudent puppy!"

"Well, there won't be any thing of that sort if I go out with him."

"There won't?"

"Not nearly. I'm [illegible] [illegible] him."

Pocahontas Times.

JOHN E. CAMPBELL,
EDITOR AND PROPRIETOR.

Entered at the Post-office at Huntersville, W. Va., as second class matter.

Huntersville, W. Va.
October 1, 1891.

Balmaceda, the would be dictator of Chili, is dead. To escape the certain death that awaited him at the hands of his enemies, he committed suicide.

It is probable that all the members of the World's Fair booming committee, which has just returned from a jaunt through the dining rooms of Europe will have to take a course of treatment for indigestion before returning to plain every day American fare.

It is difficult to see what Secretary Foster can gain by putting off, under any and all sorts of excuses, the payment of the various appropriations made by the billion dollar Congress. The revenues of the government are not increasing sufficiently rapid for him to even hope that the economy of the next Congress will allow the Treasury to catch up with the extravagances of the last. The aim of the administration is doubtless to so manipulate and jungle with the finances of the country as to starve off the actual deficit in the Treasury, which would now be of large dimensions if all the payments legally provided for were made, by "hanging up" appropriations untill after the Presidential Elections, then if their party is defeated, and defeat for them appears at this time to be as certain as any future political event can be, they will proceed to make the deficit as large as possible in order to embarrass the incoming democratic administration.

WASHINGTON LETTER.

From our regular correspondent.

WASHINGTON, D. C., Sept. 25th—Mr. Harrison has once more humbly bowed down to the will of the State boss, and what made it all the more humiliating was that he had virtually snubbed the same boss in the early days of his administration, by ignoring all of his suggestions in the making of important appointments, but that was before Mr. Harrison was attacked with the second term night mare, which has made him truckle to men, such as Senator Quay, for whom he most naturally feel the utmost contempt. The boss who has won the latest victory is Mr. M. H. DeYoung, of California who demanded a place in the Cabinet, for his friend, Mr. M. M. Estee, as the price of the California delegation to the republican National convention next year. His demand was granted and Mr. Estee was promised a place in the Cabinet when the grand shake-up, which is to put Secretary Proctor in the Senate and Attorney General Miller on the bench, takes place. It is believed that Mr. DeYoung also insisted upon naming the successor to the late Mr. Swift, who was appointed minister to Japan against the wishes of Mr. Estee and of boss DeYoung, but it is not certain that he succeeded.

Mr. Wanamaker summoned the the District Superintendents of the Railroad Mail Service to meet here this week in order that they might have a chance to answer the numerous complaints which have been made against their service and to devise some way of bettering the same and he will not forget to give each of them confidential instructions before they leave for their stations concerning the part that the clerks in the Railway Mail Service are expected to take in electing or helping to elect Harrison delegates to the nominating convention.

The friends of the wealthy republican ex-Representative, S. V. White, of New York, better known as "Deacon" White, has been much talked of here, where he is well known as a congressman and later as a lobbyist for Wall street interests. He was at the head of the lobby that defeated Ben. Butterworth's bill against dealing in options on agricultural products during the last days of the last session and as his last failure was brought abought by his attempting to corner the supply of September corn it will be seen that if the bill which he went to so much trouble, and spent so much money to defeat had become a law he would still be a millionaire. When he was in Congress he put a "stockticker" in the corridor of the House and of the Capitol building and for a few days he actually ran a branch of his New York brokers office in the Capitol building, but as soon as Senator Carlisle, who was then Speaker of the House heard about it he had the whole business cleaned out in short order.

Senator Ransom, of North Carolina, looking handsome as ever dropped into Washington this week, and as he was just from home he was eagerly questioned about the reported rise of a third party in his State. "There is not," the Senator said, "and, in my judgment there will not be a third party in North Carolina. The great body of the Farmer's Alliance are true, consistent and patriotic democrats, who will faithfully stand by their party. There are a few demagogues in the Alliance who would persuade the others to embrace a third party, or, failing in that, will try to get control of the democratic party for their own purposes, but be this as it may the democratic party of North Carolina is solid and will remain so." This does not tally with the reports of the speeches made by Col. Polk of the National Farmer's Alliance, but that will be so much the worse for Polk.

Secretary Foster is preparing to go to Ohio, where he proposes to take the stump for the Republican ticket and to assist in the political juggling with which he is so familiar, and by which he hopes to pull McKinley and a republican legislature through in spite of the Ohio voters. It is only under Civil Service Reform administrations that members of the Cabinet are allowed to leave their duties to go upon the stump in a State campaign.

The plumbs are dropping mighty slowly from the White House tree, and the impatience among those standing with uplifted faces and open mouths is getting worse and worse, and those of them who have no votes to offer in exchange are beginning to see that they are not "in it."

The Blaine republicans are, many of them, beginning to suspect that they are being duped in the interest of Mr. Harrison, and that there is some truth in the rumor that as soon as Mr. Harrison is certain that he has secured a sufficient number of votes to make his defeat by any one outside of Mr. Blaine impossible, Mr. Blaine will make a formal statement prohibiting the use of his own name and declaring in Mr. Harrison's favor. If he does there will be a big row in the party.

Examination Notice

I will hold my last examination for this year at Edray, Sept. 29th and 30th, beginning at 8 a. m. Applicants must present a certificate of attendance of some Institute, or have a lawful excuse.

Examination conducted under the old law.

M. G. MATHEWS, Co. Supt.

ORDER OF PUBLICATION.

At rules held in the Clerk's office of the Circuit Court of Pocahontas County on the first Monday in September 1891.

Jacob Taylor
vs.
Margaret M Carpenter and Charles Carpenter.

IN CHANCERY.

The object of this suit is to assign Margaret M. Carpenter her dower in the lands of which her husband Hugh Carpenter, dec'd, seized and to partition the said lands among those entitled thereto, and it appearing by affidavit filed that the defendant Charles Carpenter is a non-resident of the State of West Virginia. It is ordered that he do appear here within one month after the first publication of this order and do what is necessary to protect his interest in this suit.

Witness, J. H. Patterson, Clerk of said Court this 7th day of September, 1891.

J. H. PATTERSON, Clerk.

Moore & McNeil, p. q.
Sept. 10 4t. Printer's fee $7.95

TRUSTEE'S SALE.

By virtue of a deed of trust executed to me by Sabina Kertner, on the 28th day of May, 1891, and recorded in Deed Book No. 22, page 42, I will offer for sale on the

30TH DAY OF OCTOBER, 1891,

at public auction in front of the Court house in the town of Huntersville, Pocahontas County, West Virginia, a certain tract of land, containg 315 acres, lying on top of Droop Mountain, and adjoining the land of Geo. Callison and others.

The title to said land is thought to be perfect, but I will make such deed only as is vested in me as trustee.

TERMS OF SALE.

Cash sufficient to pay expenses of sale, and a bond of Thirty-Eight Dollars, ($38.00) with interest from 28th day of May, 1891. The residue in two equal payments, due in 6 and 12 months from day of sale, with interest from date. The purchaser to give bonds with good personal security, and no deed will be made until all the purchase money is paid.

E. K. BURNS, Trustee.

Sept. 24-4t Printer's fee $7.50

ORDER OF PUBLICATION.

State of West Virginia,
Pocahontas County, to-wit:

At rules held in the Clerk's office of the Circuit Court of Pocahontas County on the first Monday in September, 1891.

State of West Virginia
vs.
Paul McNeil's Heirs.

IN CHANCERY.

The object of this suit is to sell for the benefit of the School fund 611 acres of land forfeited in the name of Paul McNeil's Heirs, lying on Spruce Run, in this county, and it appearing by affidavit filed that Eliza [illegible], John A. McNeil, Donald McNeil, [illegible] McNeil, Geo. McNeil, Russell McNeil, Lydia McNeil and Mrs. Kate McNeil, are non-residents of the State of West Virginia. It is ordered that they do appear here within one month after the first publication of this order and do what is necessary to protect their interest in this suit.

Witness, J. H. Patterson, Clerk of the said Court this 7th day of September, 1891.

J. H. PATTERSON, Clerk.

R. S. Turk, attorney for [illegible] of School Lands.
Sept. 10-4t Printer's fee $8.75

ORDER OF PUBLICATION.

At rules held in the Clerk's office of the Circuit Court of Pocahontas County on the first Monday in September, 1891.

R. P. G. Shafer, ...Plaintiff
vs.
H. S. Rucker, Lizzie C. Rucker, Uriah Bevener and Isaac P. Dean......................Defendants.

IN CHANCERY.

The defendants having appeared and suggested that the plaintiff is not a resident of this State and that security is required of the said plaintiff according to law for the payment of the costs and damages which may be awarded to the defendants in this suit and the fees due or to become due in this suit to the officers of this Court and the defendant H. S. Rucker having filed an affidavit that the plaintiff R. P. G. Shafer is not a resident of this State and requiring publication of this order. It is ordered that he do appear here within one month after the first publication of this order and do what is necessary to protect his interest in this suit.

Witness, J. H. Patterson, Clerk of said Court this 7th day of September, 1891.

J. H. PATTERSON Clerk.

Sept. 10 4t. Printer's fee $8.18

HOME NEWS

—M. F. Rackman, Esq., of Mill Point, called to see us to-day.

—Thirteen murderers in the McDowell county jail.

—We understand that about 300 lots have been sold at Marlinton.

—Messrs. Isaac McNeel, of Mill Point and Wm. Gibson, of Elk were in our city Tuesday.

—W. Va. loses one of its most brilliant men in the death of Hon. Henry S. Walker.

—Jacob Boner, requests us to say that his store will be closed Saturday, as it is a Jewish holliday.

—Morgan Wakeman, Esq., of Dunmore, will sell out at public auction the 6th of Oct.

—Harry Beard, of this place started Monday morning to attend the University of Va., the present session. He was accompained by his father, as far as Millboro Depot.

—Miss Gertrode Overholt, of Academy, spent Saturday in Huntersville. She was accompained, by Mr. S. J. Payne, of Frankford.

—Attorney C. F. Moore, and wife left Tuesday morning to attend the wedding of their brother Mr. Harry Moore, to Miss Cora Jones, of Doe Hill, Va. The ceremony will take place in the Doe Hill church today, (Wednesday).

—Died, Mr. W. T. Curry, who moved from near Green Bank this County a few years ago to Mosouri, died there, on the 19th inst. of typhoid malerial fever. The Perry, Mo. Enterprise speaks very highly of deceased, which our limited space prevents us from publishing.

—There will be a meeting of the Huntersville Farmer's Alliance at this place in the Court House next Saturday afternoon. It is desired that all members be present, as deligates will be elected to the county Alliance, and other important business to be transacted.

—If you want Letter and Note heads, neatly printed and put up in tablet form, cheaper than you can get them anywhere else, call at THE TIMES office. We also do all kinds of nice job printing, and have on hands a nice line of Stationary, business cards, &c. &c.

—We received this week of Col. John T. McGraw, of Grafton, a hand book of Marlinton, which shows its resources natural advantages, railroad arrangements, locating, plan of lot drawing, term of sale, officers of the Development Co., directors, corporators &c., which is very creditably gathered up.

—A couple of colored convicts of the Va., penitentiary, who escaped with nine others from the work on the Hot Springs extension of the C. & O. railroad were lodged in jail at this place last Saturday, and given a hearing Monday for burglarising and stealing some clothing from Dan. McIntosh's house, about two miles from this place, last Thursday night. They were wearing the clothing when caught, which was proof enough to send them on to the grand jury. It is likely that the Governor of Va. will issue a requisition and have them taken back until their sentences are served out there.

—A charter was issued yesterday by Secretary of State Ohley to the Pocahontas Development Company, which will build the new town at Marlinton, the junction of the C. & O. and the Camden system of roads. The company is authorized to handle all kinds of timber and to manufacture and sell all kinds of products of lumber, to build and work saw mills, shops and houses, to manufacture, mine, [illegible] and ship coal, coke, iron ore, fire clay, limestone and other minerals, to own, and aid in the construction of works of internal improvement, lay out a town, improve the streets of the town, construct and operate street car lines, telephone lines, gas works, electric heat, light and power, etc. The principal office will be kept at Grafton. The capital is $100,000, all paid in, with the priviledge of increasing to $500,000. The incorporators are: John T. McGraw, of Grafton; Johnson N. Camden, of Parkersburg; Jacob W. Marshall, of Mingo Flats; S. M. Durbin and Geo. M. Whitescarver, of Grafton; Henry G. Davis, of Piedmont; Gov. A. B. Flemming, J. E. Sands, J. Ed Watson, Wm. A. Ohley, J. M. Hartley, of Fairmont; John Blackshere, of Mannington; and T. Moore Jackson, of Clarkesburg.—Charleston Gazette.

Hillsboro Chips.

Miss Maud Yeager, of Marlinton enrolled as a pupil of the H. T. School this morning.

The large and handsome school building of Miss G. M. Shearer is about completed. This school has a promising future. Miss G. M. Shearer, Principal, has secured the services of a comptent and experienced music teacher Miss Ellen Le Grand, of Roanoke, Va. She comes well recomended and persons who have daughters to educate would do well to send them here.

John Sydenstricker is teaching a good school at the Harper School house, he has an enrollment of twenty-eight scholars

Mr. Nixon Weiford and family, of Chariton, Iowa, who has been visiting relatives and friends for the past month has returned home.

PHILLIS.

ALMOST MURDER
And Burglary.

The most daring robbery and most heinous crime that was ever enacted in Pocahontas County occurred at Buckeye, about 10 miles from this place, last Friday morning, about 1 o'clock.

Robbery was the first intent and after caught, tried to comm t double murder, which he almost accomplished. One of the unfortunate to get shot was Wm. Underwood, a highly respected colored man, it is thought by the physicians, will die. The ground all around was bespattered with the blood of the victims.

The following is a true account, as related to us:

The store of R. E. Overholt & son at Buckeye was entered by a burglar two or three different nights previous to the night of the tragedy, and the said Thursday night, young Geo. Overholt and a Mr. Grose, laid in wait for the burglar, and about 1 o'clock in the morning he put in his appearance, unlocked the door and stepped inside, a few feet from where they were laying on the floor. He stood a few seconds inside and then stepped out, probably thinking there was something wrong, when young Overholt sprang to the door pulling it open, and at the point of a Winchester rifle ordered him to hold up his hands, which he did, and Mr. Grose went for a rope to tie him with, and returned with the rope and also a shot gun. They told him to put his hands down so that they could tie him and when he did so he grabbed the muzzle of both guns, and the struggle began.

They hollowed for Wm. Underwood, who was living close. He came, not knowing the cause of the disturbance, and when he got close enough to see what was going on the burglar drew a revolver and shot at him three times, two shots taking effect, one in the lower part of the abdomen and the other breaking his arm.

The next man to get shot was young Overholt, in the arm, just below the elbow, making a bad flesh wound. The [illegible] turned his attention to Grose and shot [illegible] at him, but none taking effect. He then left for parts unknown forgetting his hat and some burglars tools, which he dropped in the struggle and his boots which he took off before entering the store.

A search is being made for him and it is thought that he will be caught soon.

The nights he entered the store previous to being caught, he stole some money, but it is not known whether he took anything else or not.

While Lem Lake, of Simpson, W. Va., was plowing on his farm, the plowshare turned up an ancient-looking iron box, which upon being opened, was found to contain nearly two quarts of gold, silver and copper coins, in all amounting to about $400, none of the coins bearing a later date than 1835. How the box came to be burried and by whom is a mystery.

ORDER OF PUBLICATION.

At rules held in the Clerk's office of the Circuit Court of Pocahontas County, on the first Monday in September, 1891.

T. J. Williams
vs.
H. B. Hanger.

The object of this suit is to att[illegible] estate of the defendant H. B. [illegible] and subject the same to the pay[illegible] a debt due from said Hanger [illegible] plaintiff T. J. Williams on an [illegible] count for $92.41, with interest [illegible] from the 29th day of August, [illegible] it appearing by affidavit, file[illegible] defendant H. B. Hanger is [illegible] dent of the State of West V[illegible] is ordered that he do appea[illegible] in one month after the firs[illegible] of this order and do what [illegible] to protect his interests in [illegible]

Witness, J. [illegible] Patte[illegible] the said Court this 7th d[illegible] ber, 1891.

J. H. PATT[illegible]

L. M. McClintic, p.q.
Sept. 10 4t. F[illegible]

CONSUMPTION CURED.

An old physician, retired from practice, having had placed in his hands by an East India missionary the formula of a simple vegetable remedy for the speedy and permanent cure of Consumption, Bronchitis, Catarrh, Asthma and all Throat and Lung Affections, also a positive and radical cure for Nervous Debility and all Nervous Complaints, after having tested its wonderful curative powers in thousands of cases, has felt it his duty to make it known to his suffering fellows. [illegible]

LOST.

A large, dark, woolen shawl between Frost and the top of Alleghany mountain. The finder will kindly leave it at the post office at Frost, and oblige Mrs. G. F. Crummet, Marlinton, W. Va.

TO R. P. G. SHAFER, Esq.

Take notice, that on Saturday, October 3rd, 1891 between the hours of 6 o'clock a. m. and 6 o'clock p. m. at the office of Dr Sam'l B. Scott, in the town of Reusens, Campbell Co. Virginia, we will proceed to take the depositions of Sam'l B. Scott, Jr., and others; and, on Friday, October 9th, 1891, between the hours of 6 o'clock a. m. and 6 o'clock p. m. at the office of H. S. Rucker, in the town of Huntersville, County of Pocahontas, State of West Virginia, we will proceed to take the depositions of Amos Barlow and others, and on Saturday, October 10th, 1891, at her residence in the town of Huntersville, in said County of Pocahontas, we will proceed to take the depositions of Lizzie C. Rucker and others all of which said depositions, when taken, we will offer as evidence in our behalf in a certain suit in chancery now pending in the Circuit Court of Pocahontas County West Virginia, in which you are plaintiff and ourselves and Isaac P. Dean are defendants.

If from any cause the taking of any of said depositions shall not be begun or completed on the days aforesaid, the taking of the same will be continued from day to day, and from time to time at the same places and between the same hours, until the several sets of depositions shall be begun and completed.

Respectfully,

H. S. RUCKER,
LIZZIE C. RUCKER,
URIAH HEVENER.
By Counsel

H. S Rucker, sol.
Sept. 10 4t. Printer's fee $16.05

DENTAL NOTICE.

O. J. Campbell, dentist, will be at Academy on the 16th inst. and remain one week; Huntersville, 23rd and remain three days; Frost, 27th and remain three days.

ORDER OF PUBLICATION.

State of West Virginia,
Pocahontas County, to-wit:

At rules held in the Clerk's office of the Circuit Court of Pocahontas County, on the first Monday in September, 1891.

Henry Grose
vs.
S. P. Patterson et als.
IN CHANCERY.

The object of this suit is to have a partition of about 59 acres of land, situate in Pocahontas County, West Virginia, near Huntersville, or if said land is not susceptible of partition, to sell the same and divide the proceeds among those entitled thereto according to their respective rights and interests, and it appearing by affidavit filed, that Newton Campbell, Leonidas Campbell, Delia Wade, Anson Wade, Thomas Hickman, Peter Hickman, Jennie Hamilton, Emma Bulger, Matilda Hepler and Laura Hickman are non-residents of the State of West Virginia. It is ordered that they they do appear here within one month after the first publication of this order and do what is necessary to protect their interest in this suit.

Witness, J. H. Patterson, Clerk of the said Court this 7th day of September, 1891,

J. H. PATTERSON, Clerk.

L. M. McClintic, p. q.
Sept. 10 4t. Printer's fee $ 9.85

COMMISSIONER'S NOTICE.

At a Circuit Court continued and held for the county of Pocahontas, at the court house thereof on the 17th day of June, 1891.

F. H. Hull, Adm'r
vs.
F. H. Hull's heirs
and
Dudley et als.
vs.
Hull et als.
IN CHANCERY.

Huntersville, W. Va., Sept. 5, 1891.

Notice is hereby given that I will at the court house of Pocahontas county, West Virginia on the proceed to take, state and report the following account, and will continue the same from day to day until completed.

6TH DAY OF OCTOBER, 1891,

And is is further ordered and decreed that this cause be referred to C. F. Moore who is appointed Special Commissioner for that purpose, with instructions, that after being first duly sworn, according to law, he shall take, state and report the following matters of accounts to-wit:

1. An account of all the leins upon the lands of which the late F. H. Hull dec'd, seized and possessed, separating general leins, from specific leins, and showing in the bases of specific leins the particular tracts to which said leins relate, and to whom due.

2. An account of all debts due from the estate of the decedent, and not barred by the statue of limitations.

3. An account bringing down to date the accounts of rents and improvements so as to show the present condition of said account, charging against the heirs of F. H. Hull, deceased, all sums of money paid to their mother, Mrs. E. M. Turk on her dower by virtue of any decree of court.

4. An account of the actings and doings of Samuel L. Gibson, late Sheriff of Pocahontas county, and as such Administrator of F. H. Hull, deceased, and also of J. C. Arbogast, Sheriff of Pocahontas county, and as such Adm'r de bonis non of F. H. Hull, dec'd.

5. An account showing what estate was left by said Mrs. E. M. Turk, deceased, that did not pass into the hands of her Administrator, together with [illegible]

[illegible]

C. F. Moore, Commissioner.

Sept. 10 4t. Printer's fee [illegible]

Pocahontas Times.

JOHN E. CAMPBELL,
EDITOR AND PROPRIETOR.

Entered at the Post-office at Huntersville, W. Va., as second class matter.

ADVERTISING RATES.

	1 m.	3 m.	6 m.	1 yr.
One inch	$ 1 00	$ 2 00	$ 2 00	$ 5 00
Three in.	2 00	4 00	6 00	10 00
¼ column	3 00	6 00	10 00	17 00
Half col'n	6 00	12 00	20 00	30 00
One col'n	10 00	20 00	30 00	50 00

Reading notices, not exceeding five lines, twenty-five cents for each insertion, and five cents a line for each additional line.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION.

One copy, 1 yr., $1.00 in advance; after 6 months, $1.25; after 12 months, $1.50. These terms will be strictly complied with.

Huntersville, W. Va.
October 1, 1891.

DON'S ADVENT

BY JEANE PORTER RUDD.

The first thing he did in his life was to suck his thum. There he lay on Mamsey's bed, such a wee bit of a baby boy—only a little bundle of soft flannel, with nothing to be seen but the undefined tip of a tiny nose, and an infinitesimal thumb thrust into a small dewy mouth. All the family came to look at him; Granny with tears of remembrance over her first baby, who came—and went—so many years ago; Uncle Batchelor, who looked mistified and taller than ever; and, of course, Pappy, who squared his shoulders and threw back his head with a knowing air—why! it might have been the twelfth baby instead of the first—he knew so much about it.

Granny picked up the soft bundle and cuddled it in her arms, finding all the sweetest places to kiss, with true grandmother instinct.

"Open your eyes, Baby boy," she cried; "let me see if they are blue or black! They ought to be blue, all my babies had black eyes; [illegible] beautiful ones!"

But Baby boy was only conscio[us] of a delicious thump.

Then Granny asked Uncle B[atch] one of the crucial questions of life. Turning to her tall son [illegible] looking very far up at him over tiny new head, she said:

"Don't you long to take h[im?]"

Uncle Bach quivered appre[hen]sively, then laughed, then red[den]ed.

"I—I'm afraid of it!" he urge[d.]

"Nonsense!" cried granny, [illegible]ly. "Let me put him in your ar[ms.]"

Poor Uncle Bach stretched two very long, very stiff, very [illegible] arms, as though he [was] about to receive a cannon ba[ll or] perhaps something explosive, [and] the moment he felt the soft [illegible] thing against his breast, natur[e had] it all her own way. He, too, [found] sweet places to kiss, and, fro[m that] day to this, Don has always [been] "Uncle Bach's boy!"

"But, Pappy," said granny, [illegible] you don't know how to hold a [baby], you've had no experience; giv[e him] to me." And with the [illegible] born of love, he cradled the [illegible] creature in his arms, holding [illegible] lovingly, downy head in one [illegible] like any old nurse.

What a difference Baby[illegible] in that quiet orderly house. Mamsey herself had been the baby. Now, that she had [a] doll to play with, Mamsey [illegible] frightened every time he [illegible] held his breath, or rolled his [eyes] away, up out of sight.

Granny must come running [from] her easy chair with a [illegible] "all babies do so."

"But I thought my baby w[as] apart from all other babies," [said] all mammy, whimsically.

Over each slight ailment [illegible] Bach flounder a [illegible] paper and stand around in [illegible] [illegible] manner, as [illegible] helpless as a marble column suddenly endowed with life, while Pappy, who knew about babies, you remember, would ask with pallid lips:

"Do you think he will die?"

But Don went on his baby way in sweet serenity, making all kinds of funny little faces at all sorts of hours, as babies will; he yawned in the most facinating manner, stretched bewitchingly, as no baby ever stretched before, he grew and slept, or rather, did not sleep quite as he ought, and not at the convenient hours we should have chosen. Pappy began to make discoveries, and one morning at the breakfast table he said ruefully:

"I always supposed babies slept at night, just like other people!" The bobbley wobbly head never dropped off, though mamsey was sure it would; the little white hands fluttered their way into knowledge, the tiny feet kicked out lustily, the velvet limbs strengthened and Don grew in health and beauty day by day.

Pappy, who thought him simply the only absolute perfect child that ever was born in the world, was proud and pleased to show him, and was heartily vexed with the two or three very obtuse persons—quite devoid of taste—who did not rave over Baby boy's beauty.

A certain young bachelor friend, one of a family of seven, explained his indifference thus:

"Perhaps if I had not seen youngsters lying about in all stages of development, ever since I can remember, I might get up more enthusiasm."

But Pappy's ardour would heed no rebuff.

"Isn't he a magnificent baby," he demanded of a certain aunt of mine. She laughed.

"He is a very nice baby," she condescended. "But magnificent! How can a baby be magnificent!"

Pappy and Mamsey looked at each other, and agreed privately that one particular baby could not [illegible]

[illegible] ticket and to assist in the [illegible] juggling with which he is so familiar, and by which he hopes to pull McKinley and a republican legislature through in spite of the Ohio voters. It is only under Civil Service Reform administrations that members of the Cabinet are allowed to leave their duties to go upon the stump in a State campaign.

The plums are dropping mighty slowly from the White House tree, and the impatience among those standing with uplifted faces and open mouths is getting worse and worse, and those of them who have no votes to offer in exchange are beginning to see that they are not "in it."

The Blaine republicans are, many of them, beginning to suspect that they are being duped in the interest of Mr. Harrison, and that there is some truth in the rumor that as soon as Mr. Harrison is certain that he has secured a sufficient number of votes to make his defeat by any one outside of Mr. Blaine impossible, Mr. Blaine will make a formal statement prohibiting the use of his own name and declaring in Mr. Harrison's favor. If he does there will be a big row in the party.

[illegible] The title [illegible] perfect, but I will make such deed [on]ly as is vested in me as trustee.

TERMS OF SALE.

Cash sufficient to pay expenses of sale, and a bond of Thirty-Eight [Dol]lars, ($38.00) with interest from [the] day of May, 1891. The residue [in] equal payments, due in 6 and 12 mo[nths] from day of sale, with interest [from] date. The purchaser to give [bond] with good personal security, and [the] deed will be made until all the [pur]chase money is paid.

E. K. BURNS, Trustee.
Sept. 24-4t Printer's fee $[illegible]

ORDER OF PUBLICATION.

State of West Virginia,
Pocahontas County, to-wit:
At rules held in the Clerk's office of the Circuit Court of Pocahontas County, on the first Monday in September, 1891.
State of West Virginia
vs.
[illegible] McNeel's Heirs [illegible]

SUBSCRIBE
FOR THE
POCAHONTAS TIMES,

Every man in the County should take it, and patronise home industry. It sustains your rights, and works for the advancement of your county, which no city paper will do. It gives you the news from all parts of the county, which you could not get otherwise. It furnishes matters of interest to the Merchant, Farmer and Mechanic. It keeps you posted and gives you information, on all general news, and its sections and Miscellany are fit for all ages.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION.

One year in advance	$1.00
If not paid within 6 months	1.25
And at the end of the year	1 50

AND IF YOU NEED

Letter Heads, Note Heads, Bill Heads, Envelopes, Drug Envelopes, Tags, Business Cards, Official Blanks, Black Bonds, Posters, Briefs for the Court of Appeals etc

GET THEM AT "THE TIMES"
JOB OFFICE.

[illegible]

Pocahontas Times.

JOHN E. CAMPBELL,
EDITOR AND PROPRIETOR.

Entered at the Post-office at Huntersville, W. Va., as second class matter.

ADVERTISING RATES.

	1 m.	3 m.	6 m.	1 yr.
One inch	$ 1 00	$ 2 00	$ 3 00	$ 5 00
Three in.	2 00	4 00	6 00	10 00
Qr. column	3 00	6 00	10 00	17 00
Half col'n	6 00	12 00	20 00	30 00
One col'n	10 00	20 00	30 00	50 00

Reading notices, not exceeding five lines, twenty-five cents for each insertion, and five cents a line for each additional line.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION.

One copy, 1 yr., $1.00 in advance; after 6 months, $1.25; after 12 months, $1.50

These terms will be strictly complied with.

Huntersville. W. Va.

October 1, 1891.

DON'S ADVENT.

BY JEANE PORTER RUDD.

The first thing he did in his life was to suck his thum. There he lay on Mamsey's bed, such a wee bit of a baby boy—only a little bundle of soft flannel, with nothing to be seen but the undefined tip of a tiny nose, and an infinitesimal thumb thrust into a small dewy mouth. All the family came to look at him; Granny with tears of rememberance over her first baby, who came—and went—so many years ago; Uncle Batchelor, who looked mistified and taller than ever; and, of course, Pappy, who squared his shoulders and threw back his head with a knowing air—why! it might have been the twelfth baby instead of the first—he knew so much about it.

Granny picked up the soft bundle and cuddled it in her arms, finding all the sweetest places to kiss, with true grandmother instinct.

"Open your eyes, Baby-boy," she cried; "let me see if they are blue or black? They ought to be black; all my babies had black eyes; such beautiful ones!"

But Baby-boy was only conscious of a delicious thump.

Then Granny asked Uncle B[illegible] one of the crucial questions of life. Turning to her tall son and looking very far up at him over [illegible] tiny new head, she said:

"Don't you long to take him?"

Uncle Bach quivered apprehensively, then laughed, then redd[ened].

"I—I'm afraid of it!" he urged.

"Nonsense!" cried granny, [illegible]ly. "Let me put him in your arms."

Poor Uncle Bach stretched [out] two very long, very stiff, very [tre]mendious arms, as though he [were] about to receive a cannon-ball [or] perhaps something explosive, [but] the moment he felt the soft [warm] thing against his breast, nature [had] it all her own way. He, too, f[ound] sweet places to kiss, and, from [that] day to this, Don has always [been] "Uncle Bach's boy!"

"But, Pappy," said granny; [illegible] you don't know how to hold a [baby]; you've had no experience; give [him] to me." And with the de[illegible] born of love, he cradled the [little] creature in his arms, holding [the] bobbity, downy head in one [hand] like any old nurse.

What a difference Baby boy [made] in that quiet orderly house, [illegible] Mamsey herself had been the [illegible] baby. Now, that she had the [illegible] doll to play with, Mamsey [was] frightened every time he [illegible] held his breath, or rolled [his eyes] away, up out of sight.

Granny must come running [from] her easy chair with a reassur[ance]:

"All babies do so."

"But I thought my baby w[as dif]ferent from all other babies," [illegible] ed mamsey, whimsically.

Over each slight ailment [Uncle] Bach finished a denunciatio[n] [illegible] paper and stood around in [illegible] uncomfortable manner, as [illegible] helpless as a marble column suddenly endowed with life, while Pappy, who knew about babies, you remember, would ask with palid lips:

"Do you think he will die?"

But Don went on his baby way in sweet serenity, making all kinds of funny little faces at all sorts of hours, as babies will; he yawned in the most facinating manner, stretched bewitchingly, as no baby ever stretched before, he grew and slept, or rather, did not sleep quite as he ought, and not at the convenient hours we should have chosen. Pappy began to make discoveries, and one morning at the breakfast table he said ruefully:

"I always supposed babies slept at night, just like other people!"

The bobbley wobbly head never dropped off, though mamsey was sure it would; the little white hands fluttered their way into knowledge, the tiny feet kicked out lustily, the velvet limbs strengthened and Don grew in health and beauty day by day.

Pappy, who thought him simply the only absolute perfect child that ever was born in the world, was proud and pleased to show him, and was heartily vexed with the two or three very obtuse persons—quite devoid of taste—who did not rave over Baby-boy's beauty.

A certain young bachelor friend, one of a family of seven, explained his indifference thus:

"Perhaps if I had not seen youngsters lying about in all stages of development, ever since I can remember, I might get up more enthusiasm."

But Pappy's ardour would heed no rebuff.

"Isn't he a magnificent baby," he demanded of a certain aunt of mine. She laughed.

"He is a very nice baby," she condescended. "But magnificent? How can a baby be magnificent?"

Pappy and Mamsey looked at each other, and agreed privately that one particular baby could not [illegible]

[illegible] ticket and to assist in the [illegible] juggling with which he is so familiar, and by which he hopes to pull McKinley and a republican legislature through in spite of the Ohio voters. It is only under Civil Service Reform administrations that members of the Cabinet are allowed to leave their duties to go upon the stump in a State campaign.

The plumbs are dropping mighty slowly from the White House tree, and the impatience among those standing with uplifted faces and open mouths is getting worse and worse, and those of them who have no votes to offer in exchange are beginning to see that they are not "in it."

The Blaine republicans are, many of them, beginning to suspect that they are being duped in the interest of Mr. Harrison, and that there is some truth in the rumor that as soon as Mr. Harrison is certain that he has secured a sufficient number of votes to make his defeat by any one outside of Mr. Blaine impossible, Mr. Blaine will make a formal statement prohibiting the use of his own name and declaring in Mr. Harrison's favor. If he does there will be a big row in the party.

[illegible] The title [illegible] perfect, but I will make such deed [illegible]ly as is vested in me as trustee.

TERMS OF SALE.

Cash sufficient to pay expenses of sale, and a bond of Thirty-Eight Dollars, ($38.00) with interest from [the] day of May, 1891. The residue in equal payments, due in 6 and 12 months from day of sale, with interest from date. The purchaser to give bonds with good personal security, and no deed will be made until all the purchase money is paid.

R. K. BURNS, Trustee.

Sept. 24-41 Printer's fee [illegible]

ORDER OF PUBLICATION.

State of West Virginia,

Pocahontas County, to-wit:

At rules held in the Clerk's office of the Circuit Court of Pocahontas County on the first Monday in September, 1891.

State of West Virginia

vs.

Paul McNeil's Heirs

[illegible]

CENTRAL W. VA. MARBLE WORKS

Manufacturers of

HEADSTONES AND ALL KINDS OF

MONUMENTAL WORK,

Dealers in

[illegible]

Lewisburg, W. Va.

R. H. MOORE, Agent, ACADEMY, W. Va.

THE POLICE GAZETTE

Is the only illustrated paper in the world containing all the latest sensational and sporting news. No Saloon Keeper, Barber or Club Room can afford to be without it. It always makes friends wherever it goes.

Mailed to any address in the United States, securely wrapped, 13 weeks for $1.00.

Send Five Cents for sample copy.

RICHARD K. FOX.

Franklin Square, New York.

SUBSCRIBE

FOR THE

POCAHONTAS TIMES,

Every man in the County should take it, and patronise home industry. It sustains your rights, and works for the advancement of your county, which no city paper will do. It gives you the news from all parts of the county, which you could not get otherwise. It furnishes matters of interst to the Merchant, Farmer and Mechanic. It keeps you posted and gives you information, on all general news, and its sections and Miscellany are fit for all ages.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION.

One year in advance	$1.00
If not paid within 6 months	1.25
And at the end of the year	1.50

AND IF YOU NEED

Letter Heads, Note Heads, Bill Heads, Envelopes, Drug Envelopes Tags, Business Cards, Official Blanks, Blank Bonds, Posters Briefs for the Court of Appeals etc

GET THEM AT THE TIMES

JOB OFFICE.

Pocahontas Times.

Vol. 9. JOHN E. CAMPBELL, EDITOR AND PROPRIETOR. Huntersville, West Virginia, Thursday, October 8, 1891. Terms of Subscription, $1.00 PER YEAR. IN ADVANCE. No. 11

Official Directory of Pocahontas County

Judge of Circuit Court, A. N. Campbell.
Prosecuting Attorney, L. M. McClintic.
Sheriff, J. C. Arbogast.
Deputy Sheriff, Geo. W. Callison.
Cl'k Co. Court, S. L. Brown.
Cl'k Cir. Court, J. H. Patterson.
Assessor, C. O. Arbogast.
Com'rs Co. Ct. { C. E. Beard. S. B. Hannah. G. M. Kee.
Co. Surveyor, Geo. Baxter

THE COURTS.

Circuit Court convenes on the first Tuesday in April, 3rd Tuesday in June and 3rd Tuesday in October.

County Court convenes on the 1st Tuesday in January, March, October and second Tuesday in July. July is levy term.

JESUS LOVER OF MY SOUL.

This hymn is acknowledged to be the most generally accepted and beloved of all Christian hymns. It is said in the year 1740, Charles Wesley was sitting at his desk in his room when a little bird pursued by a hawk flew into the room and took refuge in his bosom. The poet took up his pen and wrote the immortal verses.

Henry Ward Beecher, when speaking of his father's love for this hymn, once said: "I would rather have written that hymn of Wesley's, 'Jesus lover of my soul,' than to have the fame of all the kings that ever ruled on the earth. It is more glorious. It has more power in it. I would rather be the author of that hymn than hold the wealth of the richest man in New York. He is dead, and does not know it. He will pass after a little while out of men's thoughts. What will there be to say of him? What will he have done that will stop trouble or encourage hope? His money will go to his heirs, and they will divide it. And they will die and it will go to their heirs. In thee or four more genearations everything comes to the ground again for redistribution. But that hymn will go on singing until the last trump brings forth from every land the children of God, and then it will mount up on some lip to the very presence of God."

One beautiful evening, in the summer of 1881, a party of Northern tourists formed a part of a large company gathered on the deck of an excursion steamer sailing down the historic Potomac. A gentleman who has since gained a national reputation as a singing evangelist, had been delighting the party with his happy rendering of familiar hymns, the last being that petition so dear to every Christian heart, "Jesus, lover of my soul." The singer gave the first two verses with such feeling and emphasis as thrilled every heart. A hush had fallen upon the listeners, which was not broken till a gentleman made his way from the outskirts of the crowd to the side of the singer and said:

"Beg your pardon, stranger, but were you actively engaged in the late war?"

"Yes, sir," the man of song answered, "I fought under General Grant.

"I did my fighting on the other side," continued the first speaker, "and am quite sure I was very near you one bright night, eighteen years ago this very month. It was much such a night as this. If I am not mistaken you were on guard duty. We of the South had business on hand, and you were of the enemy. I was selected by the commander, because I had the reputation as a 'sure shot,' to creep near your post of duty. The shadows hid me. My weapon was in my hand. As you paced back and forth you were humming the tune of the hymn you have just sung. I raised my gun and aimed it at your heart. Then out upon the air rang the words—

'Cover my defenceless head
With the shadow of thy wing.'

Your prayer was answered. I couldn't fire after that, and there was no attack made upon your camp that night. I felt sure when I heard you sing this evening that you were the man whose life I was spared from taking."

The singer grasped the hand of the Southerner, and said with much emotion:

"I remember the night very well, and remember distinctly the feeling of depression and loneliness with which I went forth to my duty. I knew my post was one of great danger, and I was more dejected than I remember to have been at any other time during the service. I paced my lonely beat, thinking of home and friends, and all that life holds dear. Then the thought of God's care for all He be had created came to me with peculiar force. If He so cares for the sparrow, how much more for man, created in His own image; and I sung the prayer of my heart and ceased to feel alone. How the prayer was answed I never knew until this evening. My Heavenly Father thought best to keep the knowledge from me for eighteen years. How much of His goodness to us we shall be ignorant of, until revealed by the light of eternity! 'Jesus lover of my soul' has been a favorite hymn—new it will be inexpressably dear."

This incident is a true one, and was told to the writer by a lady who was one of the party on the steamer.

DUEL TO DEATH.

William Weston, a ranchman living twenty miles north of here, brings a story of a most horible duel, which was fought with knives by two Indians near his ranch. There had been bad blood between the two men for some time, which had started over a horse race.

The indians were named Sewapi and Nunechi. They had been restrained from fighting several times by their friends, but on meeting at another horse race last week the quarrel was renewed, and it was finally arranged that they should end the matter by a duel with knives. A large crowd of Indians and half breeds were present and a ring was formed. Each man had his second, who was armed with a Winchester rifle ready to shoot down any one who might be tempted to interfere.

The contestants were stripped to the waist and each was armed with two sharp knives, the blades being about eight inches long. When the men entered the ring it was the understanding that it was a duel to the death. Both were magnificent specimens of manhood and they were equally adept in the use of the knife.

Amid breathless silence the combatants slowly approached the center of the ring. There they stood for a minute glaring at each other, while the silence was most painful. Not a sound could be heard except the occasional stamp of a horse on the outskirts of the crowd.

The spectators sat around perfectly motionless while the duelists began slowly to walk around each other, watching for a chance to catch the other off guard. It was probably two minutes before a change came, and then it was with the rapidity of a lightning stroke.

Sewapi suddenly made a leap through the air toward his enemy, and for an instant the air appeared to be full of Indians and knives, which latter flashed in the sunshine like streaks of light. As quickly as they came together did they separate, and notwithstanding the rapid play of the weapons it was seen that neither had a scratch. Still, during the whole exciting scene not a sound could be heard except the clashing steel as it came together. [illegible] the circling began again, and the glittering eyes [illegible] the walk meant death. [illegible] leap was repeated, this time by Sewapi, who seemed to fly through the air. The fight [illegible] and [illegible], and when they separated both were bleeding profusely.

Sewapi had a terrible cut across his breast, while Nuneghi had the muscles of his left forearm almost severed.

The intermission was very short, and both men sprang simutaneously toward each other. The struggle was fierce, and suddenly a trip was given and Sewapi fell on top of his antagonist. The lightning like rapidity of stroke and parry precluded the possibility of knowing who was getting the worst of it, until it was noticed that Nunechi threw up his arms, stiffened out his legs and was dead with a knife in his heart. Sewapi sprang to his feet, gave an ear-splitting yell, and then slowly sank to the ground, with blood gushing from a dozen wounds. Before a friend could reach him he, too was a corpse.—Tishomingo (I. T.) special to San Francisco Examiner.

THE FRECKLED-FACED GIRL.

How She Entertained a Visitor While Her "Ma" Was Dressing.

"Ma's upstairs changing her dress," said the freckle-faced little girl tying her doll's bonnet strings and casting her eyes about for a tidy large enough to serve as a shawl for that double jointed young person.

"Oh, your mother needn't dress up for me," replied the female agent of the missionary society, making a self-satisfied view of herself in the mirror. "Run up and tell her to come down just as she is, in her everyday clothes, and not to stand on ceremony."

"Oh, but she hasn't got on her everyday clothes. Ma was all dressed up in her new brown silk dress, 'cause she expected Miss Diamond to-day. Miss Diamond always comes over here to show off her nice things, and ma don't mean to get left. When ma saw you coming she said: 'The Dickens!' and I guess she was mad about something. Ma said if you saw her new dress she'd have to hear all about the poor heathen who don't have silk, and you'd ask her for more money to buy hymn books for 'em. Say, does the nigger ladies use hymn book leaves to do their hair upon to make it frizzy? Ma says she guesses that's all the good the books do 'em, if they ever get any books. I wish my doll was a heathen."

"Why, you wicked little girl, what do you want of a heathen doll?" inquired the missionary lady, making a mental inventory of the new things in the parlor, to get material for a homily on worldly extravagance.

"So folkes would send her lots of nice things to wear and feel so sorry to have her going about naked. Then she'd have hair so frizz, and I want a doll with truly hair and eyes that roll up like Deacon Sliderback's, when he says amen on Sunday. I ain't a wicked girl, either, 'cause Uncle Dick—you know Uncle Dick; he's been out West and swears awful and smokes all the house—he says I'm a holy terror, and he hopes I'll be an angel pretty soon. Ma'll be down in a minute, so you needn't take your coat off. She said she'd box my ears if I asked you to. Ma's putting on that old dress she had last year, 'cause she said she didn't want you to think she was able to give much this time, and she [illegible] a [illegible] than the [illegible] of the [illegible] islands [illegible]. Uncle Dick says you ought to go to the islands, 'cause you'd be [illegible] there, and the [illegible] be [illegible] they [illegible] likely need you [illegible] 'em. He never saw a heathen hungry enough to eat you, [illegible] more missionary. Uncle Dick's awful funny and makes pa and ma die laughing sometimes.

"That's a pretty cloak you've got, ain't it? Do you buy all your good clothes with missionary money? Ma says you do."

Just then the freckled-faced little girl's ma came into the parlor and kissed the missionary lady on the cheek and said she was delighted to see her and they proceeded to have a real sociable chat. The little girl's ma can't understand why a person who professes to be so charitable as the missionary lady does should go right over to Mrs. Dimmond's and say such ill-natued things as did did, and she thinks the missionary a double faced gossip.

A MODEL WITNESS

"Now, sir, I hope we shall have no difficulty in getting you to speak up," said the lawyer in a very loud, commanding voice.

"I hope not, sir," shouted the witness at the top of his lungs.

"How dare you to speak to me in that way?" angrily asked the lawyer.

"Because I can't speak no louder, sir," said the hostler.

"Have you been drinking?"

"Yes, sir."

"I should infer so much from your conduct. What have you been drinking?"

"Coffee," horsely vocifearted the knight of the stable.

"Something stronger than coffee, sir, you've been drinking! Don't look at me like that, sir!" furiously. "Look at the jury, sir! Did you have something in your coffee, sir?"

"Yes, sir."

"What was it?"

"Sugar"

"This man is no fool my lord—he is worse!" stormed the counsel.

"Now, sir," turning to the witness, "look at me. What beside sugar did you take in your coffee this morning?"

The hostler collected his forces, drew a deep breath and, in a voice that could have been heard half a mile away, bellowed out,

"A spune! A spune, an' nothing else!"

SHE "CAUGHT ON."

A nice young man got into a tram-car a few evenings ago, and saw to his delight the only vacant seat was by the side of a young lady acquaintance.

He made for that seat with joyous strides, and her eyes answer him with delighted looks. But just as he got there an elderly party walked up and dropped into the coveted seat. The young man approached more slowly and accosted the young lady.

"How is your brother?" he asked; "is he able to get out?"

"Oh, yes!" she answered.

"Will he be badly marked?" he continued, and the old gentleman grew suddenly interested.

"Oh, no!" she said, "with the exception of a few marks on his forehead."

"Were you not afraid of taking it?" the young man continued, while the old gentleman broke into a cold perspiration.

"Not at all," she replied; "I had been vaccinated, you know."

The seat was vacated instantly, [illegible]

Pocahontas Times.

JOHN E. CAMPBELL,
EDITOR AND PROPRIETOR.

Entered at the Post-office at Huntersville, W. Va., as second class matter.

Huntersville. W. Va.
October 8, 1891.

THE QHESTION OF TUE REMOVAL OF THE COUNTY SEAT SUBMITTED.

Our County Court on yesterday submitted to a vote of the citizens of this County the question of the relocation of the County Seat from this town to Marlinton.

This action of the Court was had on the petition of 697 voters of the County, and the issues presented are such as to command the thoughtful attention of all our people.

In presenting the petitions to the Court, Mr. McGraw, in a spirit which our citizens concede was eminently fair, for his Comyany, asked the Court to examine the petitions and if they found they were not signed by, or did not emanate from the responsible and substancial citizens of the county, or that the question of removal was either premature or unwise, would relieve the Court from all further embararrassment on the subject by withdrawing them.

After an adjournment for the purpose of examining the petitions, under the proposition of McGraw, the Court decided, that the petition represented so many of the leading citizens of the County, it thought it proper to submit the question to a vote and fixed Tuesday the 8th day of December, 1891, as the day of the election.

Messrs. McGraw and Whitescarver, representing the Pocahontas Developmen Company, filed with the Court a deed for 3 2-10 acres of land, as shown by the plot of the town, conveying to the County the land absolutely free and relieved from all liens, costs and charges, upon the sole contingency that the Court House be removed; and also filed the bond of that Company, under its corporate seal, with sureties to pay the sum $5,000, if the removal be made at the election ordered by the Court.

These are the propositions submitted and many of our citizens regard them as fair and generous.

A proposition was made by Messrs. McGraw and Whitescarver to pay the $5,000 in cash, but as there was no provision of law for the payment of the fund to the Sheriff of the County, and a special receiver would be necessary who would be e titled to 5 per cent. commission for holding the fund. The Court elected to accept the bond, which with the sureties thereto, it approved as sufficient.

This action of the Court now presents the question to the voters of the County and it is for them to say whether, under the conditions proposed, they want the County seat at Huntersville or at Marlinton. The Court further by an order entered of record also settled the question of the costs of the new County buildings, in the event of the removal, by declaring that it should not exceed the sum of $15,000, and that this sum should be extended through a period of several years, so as to make the future development of the County aid in its payment.

The voters of the County now have the question before them and it is for them to decide; and THE TIMES which is published for the benefit of the people of the whole County, and no particular faction, but having friends on both sides of this question, as we have said before, open its columns for any proper communications upon the subject.

There can be no question but that the gentlemen who compose the Marlinton Company are among the leading citizens of West Virginia and have the energy and means to develop the great resources of our county and thus bring prosperity and happiness to our people, and in their effort to do so, the should be encouraged and welcomed by us, rather than discouraged and treated with hostility.

In a later issue we will publish in full the orders entered by the Court so that the people of the County may be fully informed upon the question presented to them.

WASHINGTON LETTER.

From our regular correspondent.

WASHINGTON, D. C., Oct. 2nd—When Mr. Harrison determined upon doing the "jingo" act, in the hope of a favorable effect upon republican prospects in the State elections to be held this fall, he should have selected a country that was stronger than Chilli, which has just passed through six months of devastating civil war. The threats that have been made against the temporary government of that country by the administration this week must result in making the United State appear to the world in the role of the overgrown school boy "bully" among a lot of little boys. It will take a great deal more than the reports of Minister Egan, who has made himself obnoctious to the Chillians by meddling in their local affairs to convince sensible and unprejudiced people that the present government of Chili, which certainly has enough trouble at home, would deliberately and intentionally slight the United States in any way, notwithstandin its knowledge that Minister Egan should have so far forgotten his position as to openly take the sides in the civil war which recently ended there, and it is believed by those who are familiar with Chilian affairs that it will be fully shown upon an impartial investigation that Minister Egan has purposely exceeded his legal authority, with the intention of goading the Chilian authorities into taking some step that could be considered by the United States as an affront, and it is further believed that in this, Minister Egan has been acting in accordance with the wishes and instructions of the present administration. This is not a pleasant thing for a patriotic American to say, but appearances certainly indicate its truthfulness.

Senator Daniels, of Virginia, who has been making speeches in different sections of that State was in Washington this week. He says there is no opposition so far as he knows to his return to the Senate. His present term does not expire until March 4, 1893, but his successor will be named by the legislature which will be elected this fall.

It will not be the fault of the administration if the political machines known as "State associations" do not make the department pan out well in "voluntary" contributions for use in the important States this fall, also lest there might be some misunderstanding on the part of the poor clerks as to how the administration views the efforts of these associations to compel them to come down with there cash, officials just a grade below cabinet officers have been put in charge of the various State associations. Sixth Auditor Coutler is the grand mogul of the Ohio association; he prides himself on being known as a "practical politican." The New York Association has elected Gen. Cyrus Bussey, Assistant Secretary of the Interior, president, and on its campaign executive committee are A. J. Davidson, Deputy Commissioner of Pensions; A. X. Parker, Deputy Attorney General, and a number of minor departmental officials, care being taken that not more than one of them comes from the same department. Thus every department is covered and no "voluntary" contributor escapes.

Nepotism and republicans have long been synonymous terms in terms in Washington, but a sensation was nevertheless created this week when it came out that three employes of the Pension Office had made affidavits and submitted them to Secretary Noble charging that they had been approached by the same son of Commissioner Raum, who was some months ago allowed to resign his position as appointment clerk in the Pension Office when he should have been put in prison for having engaged in the selling of appointments and promotions under his father, with a proposition to have them promoted by his father if they would pay him a certain amount of cash. After these affidavits had been made and Commissioner Raum had been called upon for an explanation that official had the cheek to ask Secretary Noble to dismiss the clerks who made them on the ground that they were engaged in a conspiracy to injure him (Raum) and the Pension Office. It reminds one of the old saw: "Did ever criminal think well of the law."

A man who has practiced medicine for 40 years, ought to know salt from sugar: read what he says:

TOLEDO, O., Jan. 10, 1887.

Messrs. F. J. Cheney & Co. Gentlemen:—I have been in the general practice of medicine for most 40 years, and would say that in all my practice and experience have never seen a preparation that I could prescribe with as much confidence of success as I can Hall's Catarrh Cure, manufactured by you. Have prescribed it a great many times and its effect is wonderful, and would say in conclusion that I have yet to find a case of Catarrh that it would not cure, if they take it according to directions.

Yours Truly
L. L. GORSUCH, M. D.
Office, 215 Summit St.

We will give $100 for any case of Catarrh that can not be cured with Hall's Catarrh Cure. Taken internally.

F. J. CHENEY & CO., Props.,
Toledo, O.

Sold by Druggists, 75c.

$5.00 HAND SEWED
$4.00 HAND WELT
$3.50 POLICE
$2.50 $2.25 $2.00 FOR GENTLEMEN

$3.00 HAND SEWED
$2.50 $2.00 FOR LADIES
$2.00 & $1.75 FOR BOYS
$1.75 FOR MISSES.

W. L. DOUGLAS
$3 SHOE FOR GENTLEMEN

The BEST SHOE in the World for the Money.
GENTLEMEN and LADIES, save your dollars by wearing W. L. Douglas Shoes. They meet the wants of all classes, and are the most economical footwear ever offered for the money. Beware of dealers who offer other makes as being just as good, and be sure you have W. L. Douglas Shoes, with name and price stamped on bottom. W. L. Douglas, Brockton, Mass.

TAKE NO SUBSTITUTE. Insist on local advertised dealers supplying you.

For sale by
BARLOW & MOORE
Edray, W. Va.

CONSUMPTION CURED.

An old physician, retired from practice, having had placed in his hands by an East India missionary the formula of a simple vegetable remedy for the speedy and permanent cure of Consumption, Bronchitis, Catarrh, Asthma and all throat and Lung Affections, also a positive and radical cure for Nervous Debility and all Nervous Complaints, after having tested its wonderful curative powers in thousands of cases, has felt it his duty to make it known to his suffering fellows. Actuated by this motive and a desire to relieve human suffering, I will send free of charge, to all who desire it, this recipe, in German, French or English, with full directions for preparing and using. Sent by mail by addressing with stamp, naming this paper. W. A. NOYES, 820 Powers' Block, Rochester, N. Y.

TRUSTEE'S SALE.

By virtue of a deed of trust executed to me by Sabina Kertner, on the 25th day of May, 1[illegible], and recorded in Deed Book No. 32, page 43, I will offer for sale on the

[illegible] DAY OF OCTOBER, 1891,

at public auction in front of the Court house in the town of Huntersville, Pocahontas County, West Virginia, a certain tract of land, containing [illegible] acres, lying on top of [illegible] Mountain, and adjoining the land of Geo. Callison and others.

The title to said land is thought to be perfect, but I will make such deed only as is vested in me as trustee.

TERMS OF SALE.

Cash sufficient to pay expenses of sale, and a total of Thirty-Eight Dollars, [illegible] with interest from 25th day of May, [illegible]. The residue in two equal payments due in [illegible] months from day of sale, with interest from date. The purchaser to give bonds with good personal security, and the deed will be made until all the purchase money is paid.

[illegible], Trustee.

Sept. 24-4t. Printer's fee $7.50

An idea of the tremendous penetrative force of a projectile hurled from a powerful gun can be gained from the fact that a projectile recently fired from a 110 pounder in England passed successfully through a twenty inch steel plate, eight inches of iron, twenty feet of oak balks, five feet of granite and eleven feet of concrete, being finally stayed in its path of destruction by a mass of brick masonry, into which it made its way to a depth of three feet.

HOME NEWS

—Born to Geo. Bambrick Esq., and wife on the 5th inst., a girl.

—Read the ad. of distribution of lots at Bucknannon, W. Va., in this issue.

—A cold wave struck our county Monday and the smoke of a good fire is issuing from every chimney.

—Attorney Jno. W. Arbuckle, of Lewisburg, is in the city for a few days.

—Quite a number of prominent gentlemen' attended county court this week.

—Auctioneer Swecker will sell a fine lot of young and work horses at Huntersville at the circuit court.

—Miss Sallie Scott and brother Sam'l, of Reusens, Va., are visiting Mr. H. S. Rocker's at this place.

—The bridge across Knapp's creek at this place is at last completed ready for public travel The abutments and approaches were built by Jno. Grogg, Esq., of near Green Bank, and it is pronounced a good job by everybody.

—Circuit Court commences on the 20th inst. It will be the largest Cnort that has convened in this county for some time, as there is a considerable criminal as well as a large chancery docket on hand.

—Capt. Geo. M. Whitescarver, Hon. T. E. Davis and Mr. S. L. Allen, of Grafton; Capt. J. W. Marshall, of Mingo Flats; Levi Gay Esq., and another gentleman, whose name we did not learn were in Huntersville, admiring her beauty and surroundings last Friday.

—Our proposition a few weeks ago to give a present to our best and most regular correspondents does not seem to take well, and for this reason we caned that proposition, and will give a present to every regular correspondent, the first of next September according to their merits.

—Wm. Underwood, the colored man who was wounded in the attempt to arrest the burglar at Buckeye, died on the 1st inst., from the effects of his wounds, received at that time. Deceased was one of the best col. citizens in our county. He was a black smith by trade, was honest, sober, industrious, kind and courteous. He provided well for the temporal wants of a large family and took the greatest pains to rear his children properly; but his untimely death has cut off their only means of support and we are informed that in all probability there will be nothing of his earnings left after the payment of his doctor bills and funeral expenses. Subscription papers to raise money to assist the widow and mother to provide for the wants of her large family of little children during the storms of the coming winter have been sent to all the principal points in the county and we hope that those whom God has prospered and unto whom He has given hearts of charity will assist in this matter. While we lament the death of the husband and father let us not be unmindful of the wants of the widow and her orphan children.

Grand Jurors.

The following is a list of the Grand Jurors, drawn for the Circuit Court of Pocahontas County, for the October term: Green Bank dist.—Jacob Taylor, James Waugh, [illegible] and E. A. Smith. Edray dist.—Geo. W. [illegible], Jno. W. [illegible], [illegible] and Walter A. [illegible]. Huntersville dist.—J. J. [illegible], A. C. [illegible] and J. [illegible]. Little Levels dist.—[illegible], Richard [illegible] and [illegible].

[illegible]

Transfers of Real Estate.

The following is a list of the transfers of real estate for the month of August:

A deed from L. M. McClintic, special commissioner, to Henry Grose, for land near Huntersville, known as the Massey land.

Mary S. Yockum and H. S. Yockum to Reubin P. Blair for land lying on headwaters of Greenbrier river.

C. O. Arbogast and wife to addia E. Brown for land near Green Bank.

W. W. Slaven and wife to Samuel Hannah for land lying on Deer creek.

David W. Sharp and wife to Jno. T. McGraw for land lying on the waters of Beaver Dam creek.

Rebecca J. Hill, and others to R. W. Hill, for land lying on Hill's creek.

Wm. B. Rucker, of Va. to G. B. Gibson, trustee of Washington D. C. for land on West Fork of Greenbrier river.

Jacob S. Kellison and wife, to Jno. F. Brock and O. Ella Brock for land on Bruffey's creek.

Josiah Barlow and wife, to James Gibson, Jr., for land lying on east end of Red Lick mountain.

James Jordan and wife, to T. C. Wooddell for land adjoining the lands of T. B. Wooddell, in Little Levels.

Jane Ratcliff to J. M. Kinnison for land on Swago Creek.

A Sunrise Wedding.

A large company assembled in the Methodist church at Doe Hill at seven o'clock on Wednesday morning, Sept. 30, to witness the marriage of Mr. Harry M. Moore, of Pocahontas county, W. Va., to Miss Cora E. Jones, daughter of Dr. H. H. Jones of Doe Hill. The church was handsomely decorated with flowers and evergreens for the occasion. The bridal party stood beneath an evergreen arch directly in front of the chancel. The "Wedding March" was beautifully rendered by Mrs. Ada Armstrong as they advanced to the alter.

The front seats were occupied by the relatives of the contracting pair. Miss Elva Jones, sister of the bride, and Miss Lula Anderson were the bridesmaids, while Messrs. Will Pritchard and Arlie Jones acting as groomsmen. Mr. B. H. Hiner and J. H. Armstrong, the ushers, preceded the bridal party to the alter. The marriage ceremony was performed by Rev. J. M. Hawley, pastor of the church.

Immediately after the ceremony the young couple, accompained by a large party of friends, left by private conveyances for their home in Dunmore, W. Va. It is needless to say that they carry with them the esteem and best wishes of the entire community.—Highland Recorder.

The descendants of Colonel John Lewis, the founder of Staunton, Va., have sent a communication to the city counsel, asking the privilege of removing his remains and those of his wife, now at Fort Lewis, on the Bellefont farm, near Staunton, the City Park, where they propose to erect a monument to the memory of the "pioneer of Augusta, and the founder of Staunton."

NOTICE.

All my real estate is for sale on reasonable terms.

AMOS BARLOW.

NOTICE TO TAKE DEPOSITIONS.

To H. B. RANGER.

Take notice, that on the 16th day of October, A. D., 1891, between the hours of 6 o'clock, a. m. and 6 o'clock, p. m. at the Law office of L. M. McClintic, in the town of Huntersville, Pocahontas County, West Virginia, will take the deposition of Henry Wilfong and others to be read as evidence in my behalf, in a certain suit in equity now pending in the Circuit Court of the County of Pocahontas, and State of West Virginia, in which T. J. Williams is plaintiff and H. B. Ranger, is Defendant.

If from any cause the taking of said Deposition shall not be commenced or completed on the day aforesaid, the same shall be continued from day to day, or from time to time, at the same place and between the same hours, until the same shall be completed.

T. J. WILLIAMS,
By Counsel.

Sept. 24-4t — Printer's fee $7.24

Notice of Sale.

Of Valuable Land in Pocahontas County. W. Va.

Pursuant to a decree entered in the chancery cause of Paul McNeel's Executors vs. Samuel Auldridge and others on the 4th day of April, 1889 and the 6th day of April, 1891, by the Circuit Court of Pocahontas County, West Virginia, the undersigned Special Commissioners will sell publicly to the highest bidder in front of the Courthouse door of the said County on the

27TH DAY OF OCTOBER, 1891,

the following lands of the defendant Samuel Auldridge, viz: 200 acres, of land lying in the said county of Pocahontas near Mill point, in what is known as Buckeye mountain and be proved to adjoin the lands of Isaac McNeel and others, this tract will be sold separately also two tracts one 17 and one of 9 acres lying near or adjoining the last mentioned tract, those two tracts will be sold together, also a tract of 177 acres, a tract of 100 acres, 82 acres, 4 acres and 7½ acres on the east side of Greenbrier river in said County near the mouth of Stamping creek, also a tract of about 45 acres of land lying in said County on the west side of Greenbrier river near the mouth of Stamping creek. It is believed that these last tracts lie near to or adjoining each other and constitute the home place of Samuel Auldridge on which he now resides and that there are valuable improvements on said lands and much of it is valuable for farming purposes. Also a tract of 475 acres of land lying on the mountain near Swago Knob adjoining the lands of Wm. L. McNeel, [illegible] Barlow and others, said tract is fertile and well timbered.

And there is now being made an accurate survey of these lands that will be exhibited on day of sale, showing the exact locality and amount of each tract.

TERMS.

Cash in hand sufficient to pay costs of suit and sale and for the residue bonds to be given by the purchaser, with approved personal security bearing interest from date [illegible] due in 6, 12 and 18 months from day of sale, [illegible] to be secured as an [illegible].

[illegible], Spec'l Com'rs.

[illegible] bond has been given by the above named Special Commissioners as required by law and the above decree allowed.

J. H. PATTERSON, Clk.

Printer's fee $[illegible]

Sept. 17 [illegible]

Pocahontas Times.

JOHN E. CAMPBELL,
EDITOR AND PROPRIETOR.

Entered at the Post-office at Huntersville, W. Va., as second class matter.

Huntersville. W. Va.
October 8, 1891.

THE QUESTION OF THE REMOVAL OF THE COUNTY SEAT SUBMITTED.

Our County Court on yesterday submitted to a vote of the citizens of this County the question of the relocation of the County Seat from this town to Marlinton.

the leading citizens of ... ginia and have the ... means to develop the gr... ces of our county and ... prosperity and happine... people, and in their effor... the should be encou... welcomed by us, rather ... couraged and treated wit...

In a later issue we w... in full the orders enter... Court so that the peop... County may be fully info... the question presented to...

WASHINGTON LE...

From our regular correspond...

WASHINGTON, D.C., O...

When Mr. Harrison deter... on doing the "jingo" act, i... ...able effect upon...

Huntersville. W. Va.
October 8, 1891.

MODERN GEOGRAPHY.

In Which the Answers are Shaped to Accommodate Present Ideas.

Of what is the surface of the earth composed?

Of corner lots, mighty poor roads, railroad tracks, base ball grounds, cricket fields and skating rings.

What portion of the globe is water?

About three forths. Sometimes they add a little gin and nutmeg to it.

What is a town?

A town is a considerable collection of houses and inhabitants, with four or five men who "run the party" and lend money on 15 per cent interest.

What is a city?

A city is an incorporated town, with a mayor, who believes the whole world shakes when he happens to fall flat on a cross walk.

What is commerce?

Borrowing $5 for a day or two, and dodging the lender for a year or two.

Name the different races.

Horse race, boat race, Bicycle race and racing around to find a man to endorse your note.

Into how many classes is mankind divided?

Six—being enlightened, civilized, half civilized, savage, too utter, not worth a cent and Indian agents.

What nations are called enlightened?

Those which have the most wars and the worst laws and produce the most criminals.

How many motions has the earth?

That's according to how you mix your drinks and which way you go home

What is the earth's axis?

The lines passing between New York and San Francisco.

What causes day and night?

Day is caused by the night getting tired out. Night is caused by everybody taking the street cars and going home to supper.

What is a map?

A map is a drawing to show the jury where Smith stood when Jones gave him one under the eye.

What is a mariner's compass?

A jug holding four gallons.

AFTER THE BOOM.

"Ike," said Father Kaw to the hired man, "You'd better hoe the punkins on Capitol Hill the first thing in the morning."

Hired man—"I was just thinkin' av cultivatin' the corn a little up Broadway as far as the Opera House corner."

Farmer Kaw—"All right, you can hoe afterward. I'll put in the forenoon p'lanin' the prairie dogs in the Board of Trade Square, an' in the afternoon we'll tackle the wheat from Prospect avenue to College Green."

Teacher (in grammar class)—Tommy, correct this sentence, "I kissed Bessie once."

Tommy (promptly)—I kissed Bessie twice.

...harm... ...ly glitter in his eye and his brazen front. "Either you forgive me or I go to work. You shall have five minutes in which to decide."

In four minutes the hauty nobleman had found his mind and in thirty seconds more had made it up.

"You have won," said he. "But little did I dream of the depths of depravity in your nature that you have to day revealed."

A CHICAGO SOLOMON

A famous Chicago lawyer once had a singular case to settle. A physician came to him in great distress. Two sisters, living in the same house, had babies of equal age, who so resembled each other that their own mothers were unable to distinguish them when they were together.

Now it happened that by the carelessness of the nurses the children had become mixed, and now were the mothers to make sure that they received back their own infants?

"But perhaps," said the lawyer, "the children weren't changed at all."

"Oh, but there's no doubt that they were changed," said the physician.

"Are you sure of it?"

"Perfectly."

"Well, if that's the case, why don't you change them back again? I don't see any difficulty in the case."

He—We shall never be able to get back to the hotel before nightfall.

She—Dear me, how improper it will be!

He—There is only one way out to it, and that is for us to be engaged.

She—Well, I think I prefer to lose my reputation.

Nearly a hundred thousand human beings die every twenty four hours, and one-half of the people born die before reaching the age of sixteen.

Passer by—are those laborers weak backs?

Boss—Not at all, sor.

Then why do they move so slowly and cautiously when they stoop over?

They're afraid their stilettos will stick 'em.

SUBSCRIBE

FOR THE——

POCAHONTAS TIMES,

Every man in the County should take it, and patronize home industry It sustains your rights, and works for the advancement of your county, which no city paper will do. It gives you the news from all parts of the county, which you could not get otherwise. It furnishes matters of interst to the Merchant, Farmer and Mechanic. It keeps you posted and gives you information, on all general news, and its sections and Miscellany are fit for all ages.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION,

One year in advance	$1.00
If not paid within 6 months	1.25
And at the end of the year	1 50

AND IF YOU NEED

Letter Heads, Note Heads, Bill Heads, Envelopes, Drug Envelopes Tags, Business Cards, Official Blanks, Blank Bonds, Posters Briefs for the Court of Appeals etc

GET THEM AT "THE TIMES"

JOB OFFICE,

POCAHONTAS TIMES.

Vol. 9. JOHN E. CAMPBELL, EDITOR AND PROPRIETOR. Huntersville, West Virginia, Thursday, October 15, 1891. Terms of Subscription. $1.00 PER YEAR. IN ADVANCE. No. 12

CHLOE.

There was a great noise! Shouts—hoarse, shrid, sweet, harsh! The deep bass of young men; the feeble quavering of old ones, the silvery tones of women; the high falsetto of children; all mingling in delight and exultation, and whithout a shadow of pity for the miserable wretches whose lives were passing slowly out of their mangled bodies through a score of wounds. The late afternoon sun beat down hotly on thousands of heads, save where on one side friendly walls afforded a shelter from its rays. In the great open arena—the sky its only canopy—a haze of dust, with the heavy vapor always attendant upon a vast concourse of people, made the atmosphere so bad to breathe that the multitude gasped with effort between its shouts.

Fans waved in a thousand bejeweled hands, but the artificial current of air thus created was hardly perceptable. It was hot—steamily hot, and anything but a Mexican audience, which had just witnessed the slaughter of one of the fiercest and gamest bulls that ever put a matador in deadly peril, would long ago have left the building.

"That matador is a brave fellow. How neatly he found the heart with one plunge below the shoulder. He handles his sword like a master, eh, senor?" said a dark visaged, powerfully built Mexican, as he fanned himself with his large sombrero, and looked in the face of a quiet looking, well dressed man at his side.

"Yes. He is a skillful sword-man, undoubtedly," was the reply of the well dressed young man, in unmistakable northern accents.

* * * * * *

The well-dressed man, with the northern accent sat through the performance quietly and with the air of one who had nothing particular to do or he would not have been there. Sunday bullfights evidently interested him but slightly. His eyes were turned toward the arena, because from his seat it was easier to look in that direction than in any other, but any one could have seen that his thoughts were far away.

'Edward Payson,' he was saying to himself, as a scornful smile passed over his handsome features, 'what are you doing here with that letter in your pocket, showing you how foolish you are in putting off your happiness? Because you have been an exile for ten years is it necessary for you to stay away another ten years, when the one girl you ever loved beseeches you to return? If she did tell you then that what you hoped could never be, can you not believe that she was mistaken in her own heart, and that long absence has taught her that she does care for you? What other construction is to be put on the words in her letter?

Edward Payson drew a letter from his pocket and looked at it earnestly, just as the bull in the ring transfixed a horse with one of its long horns, and buried the other in the arm of the unlucky picador on his back. Through all the hubbub of shouting that followed this incident, Edward Payson seemed to witness a scene very different from that spread before him. The letter, with the superscription in a refined, lady like hand, had awakened a flood of memories that swept everything present away.

He saw a large, well kept lawn, fringed by sycamore, maple and oak, with the bright red of the [illegible] and the [illegible] white of the [illegible] [illegible] their [illegible] shadows. He saw the massive architecture of a stone mansion, half hidden by the Virginia creeper and ivy which clung lovingly to its rugged walls. He saw the home of a noble Virginia family, with the simplicity of a republic enriched by the lavish taste of a race still authorized by the College of heraldry to display a shield with sixteen quarterings. He saw in the distance the colored laborers working in the fertile fields. He saw the whole picture in a golden frame of still summer weather, and he could almost feel on his cheek the gentle breeze from the Rappahannock as it rolled slowly past on its way to the the sea.

The bull had broken away now and was dasing wildly around on the blood-stained sawdust, with its hot eyes fixed on a precador waiting for the attack while the multitude howled with excitement.

But Edward Payson paid no heed. He saw coming out of the front door of the mansion and surveying him with a saucy smile, as she stood on the veranda, a young girl in her teens, with a wealth of chestnut brown hair glistening in the morning sun. Her garden hat was swung carelessly by the ribbons from her hand, and the brown hair, just stirred by the breeze, seemed to ripple in harmony with the impulsive good nature expressed in her sweet face. The clear cut features, softened by an utterly unselfish disposition, were those of a natural aristocrat—the aristocracy which holds itself above paltry action and supercilious assumption, because it cannot help it.

He saw the girl run laughingly down the steps and accept his invitation for a stroll through the trees and shrubbery beyond the flower beds and lawn, and then—he saw her face as she told him that sisterly regard was all that she could ever feel for him, but that Chloe Payson would never cease to pray for his welfare as long as she lived.

'I was a fool,' he muttered impatiently, as the noise accompaining the slaughter of the bull in the arena awoke him from his reverie. 'If, instead of weekly despairing and leaving everybody and everything in old Virginia to come here among a strange people, I had staid and faced my fate like a man, who knows?'

He moved out of the great, hot amphitheator with the letter still in his hand. The streets were at their gayest, with all the action and bright color characteristic of a Mexican city on Sunday afternoon. Richly dressed ladies, with the lace mantilla thrown over their dark hair; gentlemen in American cut frock coats and broad sombreros, female beggars and flower sellers, each with the inevitable baby fastened to her back by a gay hued rebozo; policemen, workmen, dogs, horses, carriages and the great mass of idle population crowded the main avenue and rendered locomotion necessarily deliberate.

Edward Payson made his way to his room in a quiet street, and for the twentieth time read the letter he had received the day before.

GREENFILD, Va., June —, 188-.

MY DEAR—Why do you not come back? Why do you stay away so long from the old home? It is ten years that you have been away, and I only found out last week where you were. What made you go away so suddenly without saying goodby to anybody? I ought not to forgive you, but I do. You should have thought that perhaps the trouble which made you go might not have been so bad after all, and that people may not have meant all they said. No one knows that I am writing this letter, and perhaps I ought not to do it, but I am longing to see my boy again and I do not care what folks may say. Do not wait to write but come.

CHLOE PAYSON.

A week later Edward Pason stood in the grove of sycamores, oaks and maples, looking at the stone mansion of which he had been thinking so sadly amid the heat, dust and noise of the Mexican amphitheater. It was just such a morning of which he had dreamed. The sun was shining brightly, and the low hum of insects mingled with the shiver of the leaves over his head, as if trying to sooth him and quiet the fierce beating of his heart.

'How natural the old house looks. What a little change has been made here in ten years. It looks the same as it did yesterday. I wonder what my uncle will say to me. I wish Chloe had said something about him. We had rather a serious quarrel, I remember, the day before I left him. Perhaps he will tell me to go back again and resume the vagrant life that I know he thinks I have been leading. No, he would hardly say that to the son of his only brother, after his sacred promise to that brother to be as a father to me as long as we both lived.

Besides he was hot-headed, and, no doubt forgave me almost before I was out of the room. Ah, well, I shall soon know, and what do I care so that Chloe has a welcome for me? It was near this spot that she spoke to me so kindly, and yet, oh, so coldly, when she told me that we—cousins—could never be lovers. Ah! There she is surely?

His breath came short as he caught sight of a white dress at one of the open windows under the veranda roof. He could not see the face of the wearer because a tangled mass of creeper hung in the way, but he knew it could be no one else save the girl, as he loved still to think her, whom he had come thousands of miles to see. The white dress moved away, and he walked slowly across the lawn, noticing on every hand familiar objects that brought back his youth in a flood of fragrance.

How weak he felt as he ascended the steps to the veranda. Where was Chloe? Would she come to the door?

He pulled the bell handle and heard the clang that he remembered so well resounding through the house. He could see it in his mind's eye swinging near the rear of the long hall that ran straight through from the front door to that opening on the yard at the back, where the old cook's cabbages and tomatoes were carefully tended, and where it was as much as one of the kitchen girls' life would have been worth to trespass. He remembered how the old bell had, to his youthful imagination, possessed ghostly attributes, and how he used to fancy it moved of itself in the dusk of the evening, shaking its head in mockery and threatening to swallow him up into its rusty throat.

Listen! There is a step in the hall. Somebody is coming. The flutter of a white dress caught his eye. Impatiently he pushed the door wide open and put out his hand to take that of Chloe.

'Why, Mar's Ed'ard! Ef I didn't t'ink you'd come back to yo [illegible] [illegible],' and two black hands in white sleeves, were pinned on Ed Payson's shoulder, as a pair of horn rimmed spectacles fell with a [illegible] to the floor.

'Yes, auntie. I got a letter; and I came right back to the old place. How are you, and how is my uncle, and how is—is'——

His voice faultered, but the old woman did not appear to notice it as she answered:

'Dey is all well, honey. Dere have been few changes round here. Come in and let me give you something to eat. I've got some hot co'n cakes, like yer useter git when yo was a boy. Come along. Yo uncle's done gone away for all day.'

'Oh, Auntie, I want you to'—said a child's voice, and a little girl with sunny golden hair came running along the hall just as Ed. Payson used to run some thirty years before. She stopped when she saw him and clung close to the flustered old woman while she looked enquiringly at him.

"Yo know, Ed'ard, I did not know where you had gone, but a colored man what works for Mr. Sherwood, he was here and tol me he heard as yo was in Mexico. And I thought yo'd had a little quarrel with yo uncle, and perhaps you'd be too proud to come back if he wrote to you and so I got young Miss Mabel, over to Raleigh's place, who is just as good as an angel to col'ed folks and who writes splendid, to write to you, and"——

'And was the letter from you?' gasped Edward Payson as he looked down at the golden haired little girl while a terrible thought ran through his brain.

'Cose it was honey. Wa'nt it signed Chloe Payson and ain't that my name?"

'And—and—who is the little child?"

'That? Why, Miss Chloe's of cou'se. She was married five years ago to young Mr. Willard, who, dey say, will be a jedge next year. He is away to-day with yo'r uncle. But come up stairs and see Miss Chloe.

What a fool I is to keep yo here whith my chatterin, and you been away from ser ten years.'

But Edward Payson, with some excuse—he never knew what—managed to get away from the house and into the sycamore and mapel grove, where, with the stones of the old house just visible between the trees, and the fragrance of the syringa hovering like a half forgotten melody around his bowed head, he threw himself on the ground and nerved himself to bear such a heart wringing as fortunately comes to but a portion of poor humanity.

When, an hour later, he took her hand he felt sure she understood and pitied him, though not a word on the subject of his hopeless love has ever passed her lips—or his.

Pocahontas Times.

JOHN E. CAMPBELL,
EDITOR AND PROPRIETOR.

ADVERTISING RATES.

	1 m.	3 m.	6 m.	1 yr.
One inch	$ 1 00	$ 2 00	$ 3 00	$ 5 00
Three in.	2 00	4 00	6 00	10 00
Qr. column	3 00	6 00	10 00	17 00
Half col'n	6 00	12 00	20 00	30 00
One col'n	10 00	20 00	30 00	50 00

Reading notices, not exceeding five lines, twenty-five cents for each insertion, and five cents a line for each additional line.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION.

One copy, 1 yr., $1.00 in advance; after 6 months, $1.25; after 12 months, $1.50

These terms will be strictly complied with.

Entered at the Post-office at Huntersville, W. Va., as second class matter.

Huntersville, W. Va.

October 15, 1891.

On the 3rd inst. an attempt was made to rob the bank at Union.

An 8 pound blue eyed girl baby was born to ex-President Cleveland and wife on the 3rd inst.

The rush for lots in the new Oklahoma town of Chandler was frightful. A young lady newspaper correspondent was thrown from her horse and killed and a white man was murdered by an Indian.

In New York Mrs. Frank Leslie was married by the Rev. C. F. Deems to William C. Kingsbury Wilde, M. A., of London, eldest son of the late Sir. Wilde, M. D. of London.

In no other department of the World's Columbia Exposition, perhaps, will be seen a greater diversity of exhibits than in that of mines and mining. Not only will there be a dazzling array of diamonds, opals, emeralds and other gems, and of the precious medals, but a most extensive collection of iron copper, lead, other ores, and of their products; of coal, granite, marble, sand stone and other building stone; of soils, salts, petroleum, and, ineed, of almost every thing, useful or beautiful, belonging to the mineral kingdom. How extensive the mineral exhibit from other countries will be, it is yet too early to know, but the indications are that it will surpass any that has heretofore been made. However that may be there is no doubt that the mineral resources and products, not only of this country as a whole, but of each State and section; will be of the most complete and representative description. Chief Skiff, of the Department of Mines and Mining, is confident that this will be the result of the plans which he is pursuing.

WASHINGTON LETTER.

From our regular correspondent.

WASHINGTON, D. C., Oct. 9th—Mr. Harrison, who once snubbed Mr. J. S. Clarkson most unmercifully, according to republican authority, has suddenly discovered the greatness which that gentleman carries concealed somewhere about his person, and, presto change! Mr Clarkson is the sole companion of long presidential drives and has the honor of being dined at the White House. It is but a repetition of the old, old story, "circumstances alter cases." When Mr. Clarkson was a very sore-headed minor official, and because the newly elected President refused to have him in his cabinet, Mr. Harrison, who had not then began to think of a renomination, did not hesitate to let it be known how little he thought of Clarkson [illegible] but now things have changed. Mr. Clarkson is "Boss" of the National committee of his party, and even if some people do say that his "boss" is Quay, Mr. Harrison regards him as being sufficient important to be conciliated at the present stage of the game, and Mr. Clarkson seems in no way loth to being conciliated, and Senator Quay has left the Pennsylvania campaign long enough to come to Washington to see what there is "in it" for him.

The eyes of Methodists all over the world are now turned toward Washington. The Ecumenical conference of that church, with the delegates from every section of the world, began a two weeks session here Wednesday. The first of these conferences was held ten years ago in London.

The gossips now have it that California and New Hampshire are certain of the two cabinet appointments, and that Mr. Estee and ex-Gov. Cheney are men who have been selected. The first is backed by M. H. DeYoung, the California "boss" and the last by Senator Chandler, the once-was and would-be-again New Hampshire "boss"

The acting Govenor of Arizona Territory in his annual report to the Secretary of the Interior presents an array of facts and figures in favor of the assumption of Statehood by the Territory that ought to convince any unprejudiced person, but she will have to wait until the democrats get control of the Senate before she can be admitted to the Union. The republican Senators will not vote to admit any Territory unless absolute proof is presented to them that the new State will go g. o. p.

The republican national committee will meet in Washington November 20, for the purpose of formally electing "boss" Clarkston to succeed "boss" Quay as chairman of the committee, and to ratify "boss" Clarkston's choice of the time and place for holding the nominating convention next-year.

"Satan rebuking sin," or in more homely phraseology, "the kettle call the pot black," must have been thought of by the delegation of New York merchants to whom Secretary Foster was posing one day this week as the "nonpartisan, business Secretary of the Treasury." It was a sight that ought to have made the very stone pillars of the Treasury building fall down in amazement when Secretary Foster gravely informed these shrewd New Yorkers that there were more than fifty collection districts throughout the country that might be abolished without detriment to the service, and at an annual saving of several hundred thousand dollars, but that he was powerless in the matter, because the wicked politicans want the Government patronage increased instead of reduced. What Mr. Foster said is true enough as far as the Collectors of Custom go, but it would be difficult for him to convince those who know him that he really wishes to abolish them. But from the fact that he mentioned ten districts in Maine and eight in Massachusetts that ought to be abolished it looks to "a man up a tree" as if the "politicans" he wanted to frighten were the anti Harrison Senators and Representatives from Maine and Massachusetts. If they will promise to work for Harrison delegations to the National convention they will probably find it an easy matter to "convince" Mr. Foster that all those collection districts are as necessary to the country as they are to the aforesaid Senators and Representatives.

Mr. Harrison told a delegation of Philadelphia friends of Minister Egan that the administration would vigorously support Mr. Egan in the performance of his duties. This is rather ambiguous, inasmuch as all of the misunderstanding which has existed between Mr. Egan and the Chilian government appears to have been caused by his doing things outside of his duties, at least that is the substance of the charges which have been made against him, and which are expected to be proven by documents now on the way here. It may be shown that he has been guilty of things that the administration, much as it may sympathize with him, will not dare to support him in.

A veteran Confederate cavalry men's association is to be organized in Richmond, one object of which will be to erect a monument to the memory of General J. E. B. Stuart.

Subscribe for "THE TIMES.

HOME NEWS

—We want 100 subscribers next week.

—Every body call and see us when you come to court next week.

—There will be a tremendous attendance at the Circuit Court next week.

—Mr. Hugh Adams, of Rockbridge Baths, Va., passed through town Tuesday, on his way to Elk.

—Attorney R. S. Turk, of Staunton, Va., arrived in our city Monday night to prepare for Court, which is to convene next Tuesday.

—Every body should take THE TIMES and read the news of our county which is on the verge of a great developement.

—A marriage license was issued by our clerk, Tuesday, to Andrew K. Hughes and Mrs. Elizibeth Dinah. This couple walked a distance of over 20 miles to the Cleerk's office to get the license. Who will say this was not a love affair.

—At the County Court last week there was nothing done, of any interest to our readers, except an order of election for the removal of the county seat, to take place Dec. 8th, 1891. A few claims allowed and road overseers appointed.

Preaching Notices.

Preaching at Huntersville next Sunday Oct. 18th at 2:30 p. m., at Mt. Pleasant 7:30 p. m.

I. G. MICHAEL.

Rt. Rev. I. G. W. Peterkins will preach at Mingo Flats Nov. 6th, 11 a. m. Clover Lick, Sunday Nov. 8, 11 a. m. and at Huntersville at night at 8 p. m. Hillsboro Monday 9th at 11 a. m.

Rev. J. F. A. Lautenschlager will preach in the Presbyterian Church at this place Sunday the 25th, at 10:30 a. m.

Shingles for Sale.

I have for sale at my saw-mill on Knapp's Creek 15,000 first class pine, sawed shingles, $4.00 per 1,000 cash, when taken away.

S. P. MOORE.
Sunset, W. Va.

Suicide on the Street.

PITTSBURG, PA., October 5.—James H. Stone, a young man from Pocahontas county, West Virginia, committed suicide by shooting himself through the head on the street to-night. In a letter to his sister found in his pocket he promised to meet her in heaven.

Mrs. Jessie Henderson was at work in her kitchen near the Kentucky line, she heard her child scream and upon going out was confronted by a masked tramp, who demanded money. Pretending to get it, Mrs. Henderson suddenly turned and threw a pot of boiling water over the tramp's face and head. Then picking up her child she ran to a neighbors, followed by the half blinded villian flourishing a large knife. The man then disappeared in a thicket.

Long McClure, a notorious woman moonshiner, after a year's success in escaping the United States marshall, has at last been captured and is now in the Kanawha jail. She is 20 years old, of honest industrious parents, beautiful in form, bright, active and daring. Early in life she manifested a desire for outdoor sports and at the age of 15 was a good shot with both rifle and revolver. For the past three years she has been engaged in the illicit sale of whiskey. She has made a small fortune out of her trade, and she will lose it [illegible] to regain her liberty. Next November she will be tried if a grand jury can be found [illegible] enough to indict her.

Charles Stewart Parnell the [illegible] leader, died suddenly on the 6th inst.

Our Jury Law.

EDRAY, W. VA., Oct. 9th 1891.

ED. TIMES:

We desire to submit a few remarks on our late "Jury Law," and some rights which are withheld thereby.

A few days since we heard a gentleman of culture and experience remark, "one more Legislature like our last and we are undone indeed." This seems to be the opinion of the people generally, without regard to party, and why is it? You have only to glance at the laws passed last winter, to know the reason.

If there is an act passed which is an improvement on our former laws or a benefit to the people generally, we have been unable to notice it.

The most woeful calamity possible is forced upon us in the new "Jury Law." It will not be possible for us to have a legal jury until after June 1st, 1892. While the interests of the general public must suffer from this state of circumstances, the public is not in the pitiable situation of some individuals, who bear the full, over full, burden of the law.

There are now confined in our jail the Bright boys, on a charge of murder, and they have been there for about one year. The record shows that the State has had these cases continued all this time, and it is understood these boys have always been ready and anxious for a trial.

When we ask why justice is thus tardy in being measured out, we are referred to our new "Jury Law."

We do not desire to pass on the guilt or innocence of any individual, but we feel warranted in saying, if we have heard the evidence correctly from both sides, the Bright boys did no more than any other law abiding citizen who had any respect for himself, his family and his home would do. The origin of the trouble is said to have been Tracy's forcing his wife, (who is Bright's sister) to submit to the embraces of another man.

Bright notified Tracy not to come on his land after this brutal action, and for requesting Tracy to desist from trespassing, these boys were stoned by Tracy; and finally to preserve their own lives, it is said David Bright shot Tracy.

Did Bright not act properly, if these are facts, of which there can be no doubt? If Bright did not act in the right principle, then many of our brave boys who wore the gray, sleep their last sleep, and many of them carry bullets to-day, on account of a wrong principle. They fought more to repel the invader, than to preserve slavery. Were they right? If so, Bright was right, and if right, then innocent men have had their rights and liberty withheld, all because the legislature did not know how to frame that "Jury Law."

S. B. S.

Built in a Few Hours.

Guthrie, O. T., Oct. 5—Another great rush is over and and another city—Chandler—is born. Where a few days ago not a sign of human habitation existed there is now a city of 5,000 people. When the signal to "go" was given the horsemen dashed at break-neck speed for the best lot they could get. Jumping from their horses they would jam a stake into the ground and yell, "This is my lot," while horses ran loose everywhere. Many men were knocked from their horses by tree limbs, while many horses and men fell flat in the rush. There was but one serious accident. Miss Daisy Ecland, of Sturrsburg, was on a fast horse, and ascending a rocky cliff the horse fell and threw her against a bowlder, gashing her from head and fracturing her left leg.

When she regained consciousness she declared: "The lot where I fell is mine." By 3 o'clock lands were up everywhere, and the "business houses" which had been down on the school section planted on the town site as rapidly as possible. By 6 o'clock the city of tents was in good order, and the foundation laid for a splendid town.

The Game Law

Sec. 11 of chapter 62 of the code enacted so as to read as follows:

It shall be unlawful for any person in any place to catch, kill or injure, or to pursue with such intent, any quail or Virginia partridge, between the 20th day of December and the 1st day of November following; or any wild turkey between the 1st day of January and the 15th day of September; or any ruffled grouse, pheasant, primated grouse, prarare chicken, between the 1st day of January and the 1st day of November; or any blue winged teal, mallard or wood duck, or any other wild duck, wild grouse or brant, at any time between the 1st day of April and the first day of October; or any snipe except between the 1st day of March and the 1st day of July; or any woodcock, except between the 1st day July and the 15th day of September. And it shall be unlawful for any person at any time to catch by seine, net or trap, any Virginia partridge. And it shall be unlawful for any person by the use of any pivot or swivel gun, or any other than the common shoulder gun, or by the aid of any push boat, used for carrying such gun to catch, kill wound or destroy, or to pursue with such intent, upon the waters, bays, rivers, marshes, mud flats, or any cover where wild fowls resort, within this state, and any wild duck or brant.

Transfers of Real Estate.

The following is a list of deeds entered to record for the month of September:

A deed from S. L. Brown, Cl'k Co. ct. to Geo. M. Kee for land situated on the Randolph and Pocahontas counties line.

W. C. McClure and wife to James P. Ginger for land on Stamping creek.

Jas. P. Ginger and wife, to Henry A Ginger for land on Stamping creek.

H. A. Adams executor of J. M. Adam, dec'd to J. Hebden and H. P. Earnshaw for land near Split Rock.

H. M. Lockridge and wife to Amos and Heney Barlow for land on Knapp's Creek.

H. M. Lockridge and wife to J. B. Lockridge for land on Douthard's creek.

Frank Furgeson and wife to Charles Curtis for land on Back Alleghany.

Chales Curtis to W. B. Sutton for land on Back Alleghany.

Jno. G. Sutton and wife to W. K. Sutton for land on Sittlington's creek.

William Gibson and wife to James Gibson for land on head waters of Elk river.

William Gibson and wife to W. B. Gibson for land on Old Field Fork of Elk.

William Gibson and wife to Wm. A. Varner and wife for land on Old Field Fork of Elk.

Jacob L. Arbogast to Jno. T. McGraw for land near Traveler's Repose.

J. E. Howell to E. D. Tolbott, trustee for steam sawmill &c.

TRUSTEE'S SALE.

By virtue of a deed of trust executed to me by Sabina Kertner, on the 28th day of May, 1891, and recorded in Deed Book No. 29, page 42, I will offer for sale on the

20TH DAY OF OCTOBER, 1891,

at public auction in front of the Court house in the town of Huntersville, Pocahontas County, West Virginia, a certain tract of land, containg 35¼ acres, lying on top of Droop Mountain, and adjoining the land of Geo. Callison and others.

The title to said land is thought to be perfect, but I will make such deed only as is vested in me as trustee.

TERMS OF SALE.

Cash sufficient to pay expenses of sale, and a bond of Thirty-Eight Dollars, ($38.00) with interest from 28th day of May, 1891. The residue in two equal payments, due in 6 and 12 months from day of sale, with interest from date. The purchaser to give bonds with good personal security, and no deed will be made until all the purchase money is paid.

R. K. BURNS, Trustee.

Sept. 24-4t Printer's fee $7.98

POCAHO TIMES.

JOHN PBELL,
EDITOR A RIETOR.

ADVERTI RATES.

	1 m.	6 m.	1 yr.
One inch	$ 1 00	$ 3 00	$ 5 00
Three in.	2 00	6 00	10 00
Qr. column	3 00	10 00	17 00
Half col'n	6 00	20 00	30 00
One col'n	10 00	30 00	50 00

Reading notices ceeding five lines, twenty-five y each insertion, and five cent for each additional line.

TERMS OF S IPTION.

One copy, 1 yr., $1. vance; after 6 months, $1.25; af months, $1.50

These terms will lly complied with.

Entered at the Pos at Huntersville, W. Va., as sec matter.

Huntersville, Va.

October 15 1.

"Who is that?" h d nervously, as he heard a ep in the hall.

"Only papa," she pered.

He moved about ily.

"Don't be afraid," murmured, "you can surely trus n."

"I don't know," he doubtfully.

"Oh! Arthur," she throwing her arms about his n ppealingly, you certainly ought; nobody else in town will."

WHY ICE FL S.

Did you ever wonder w t is that ice, being formed of co led water, floats? And why, ome still lakes, it begins to form the bottom before it does on t surface? Scientists explain thes enigmas this wise: Ice is specifi lly lighter than water just about freeze, and therefore floats in it. This is one reason why the forma on of ice usually begins at the surfa.

Another is its peculiar la of expansion. The general law is that cold induces expansion; this law holds with water only to a certain point. When water has cooled down to within 7.4 de of freezing it ceases to contract as be re with increase of cold and begins ex pand till it freezes.

This expansion causes the colder portions of the water to rise to the surface. The formation of "ground ice" or "anchor ice" as it is sometimes called, is the only exception to the rule given above.

JUST LIKE A BOY.

"Papa!"

"Well, dear?"

"Will you please untie this string for me?"

"Yes, in a moment."

"I want the string now."

"Well, papa's busy and you must wait a few minutes."

"Can't you do it right away?"

"No, I can't."

"Why?"

"I told you I was busy."

"But I want the string to put on my little wagon."

"Well, I'll get it for you in a minute or two if you keep still."

"I can't draw the wagon without a string to it."

"Well, what if you can't?"

"But I want to draw it."

"I can't help it if you do, I,m busy now?"

"It's more than a minute since you first said you'd do it."

"It will be a good many minutes before I untie it if you don't stop teasing me."

"But I want the string."

"Well, wait until—"

"I've waited a long time now, papa."

"You'll wait longer if—"

"Can't you untie it now, papa?"

"No, I cannot."

"Why?"

"Don't you see papa is busy writing now—"

"It wouldn't take but a minute to untie the string, and—"

"Harold, I tell you—"

"There's the string, papa."

"Did you hear what I said?"

"I want the string to put on my little wagon."

"Go away and—"

"I can't draw the wagon without a string."

"Now you run right out of this room."

"What for?"

"Because you're bothering me so I can't write"

"If you'd untie the string I would'nt bother you any more."

"I tell you that—here, give me that string. I declare, you might as well try to dam Niagara as to stop a boy's tongue. There's your old string, you take it and get right out of here."

"Yes, papa—thank you for untying the string."

SUBSCRIBE

FOR THE

POCAHONTAS TIMES,

Every man in the county should take it, and patronize home industry. It sustains your rights, and works for the advancement of your county, which no city paper will do. It gives you the news from all parts of the county, which you could not get otherwise. It furnishes matters of interest to the Merchant, Farmer and Mechanic. It keeps you posted and gives you information, on all general news, and its sections and Miscellany are fit for all ages.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION,

One year in advance	$1.00
If not paid within 6 months	1.25
And at the end of the year	1 50

AND IF YOU NEED

Letter Heads, Note Heads, Bill Heads, Envelopes, Drug Envelopes, Tags, Business Cards, Official Blanks, Blank Bonds, Posters, Briefs for the Court of Appeals etc.

GET THEM AT "THE TIMES"

JOB OFFICE.

POCAHONTAS TIMES.

Vol. 9. [illegible] CAMPBELL, EDITOR AND PROPRIETOR. Huntersville, West Virginia, Thursday, October 22, 1891. Terms of Subscription: $1.00 per year in advance. No. 13.

Official Directory of Pocahontas County

Judge of Circuit Court, A. N. Campbell.
Prosecuting Attorney, L. M. McClintic.
Sheriff, J. C. Arbogast.
Deputy Sheriff, Geo. W. Callison.
Clk Co. Court, S. L. Brown.
Clk Cir. Court, J. H. Patterson.
Assessor, C. O. Arbogast.
Com'rs Co. Ct. [illegible]
Co. Surveyor, Geo. Baxter.

THE COURTS.

Circuit Court convenes on the first Tuesday in April, 3rd Tuesday in June and 3rd Tuesday in October.

County Court convenes on the 1st Tuesday in January, March, October and second Tuesday in July. July is levy term.

AN IDYL UPON CRUTCHES.

It is to be seen often enough in Central park.

He, pale, emaciated, one of those men who carry a ticket for Charon's ferry-boat in his pocket, and is only loitering a little by the way. She, as full of life as the lilacs near which they sit, grateful to the eye in her beauty as they to the sense in their fragrance. He the weakness, she the strength, of the partnership. She was upright as a tall lily stem, with health to pay. [illegible] through a long life, he stooped painfully over the two sticks that propped up his nerveless body. These are the crutches. Now for the idyl.

There was a feverishness of life in New York city. North and south had grappled by the throat. War was whipping the hope of commerce until they hummed again. The government cried, "Give! give!" and merchant, manufacturer and artisan toiled and moiled. Even man as had a value in the market; flesh and blood grew dear.

A youth and a girl met at a church door, and strolled away together. In the course of the service —for it was the Sabbath day—the minister had invoked the divine blessing upon the Federal arms, and made a passionate appeal to the congregation to aid with purse and person to keep intact the grand old flag, that not a single star should be torn from the union, not one swept from its field. And hearts had throbbed and eyes had swelled over with tears that morning. There were dollars for the wounded and volunteers for the war in that sermon.

"Is it true that you have bought a substitute, Edgar?"

It was the girl who spoke as the pair turned up Lexington avenue.

"Um!" and Edgar nodded his head affirmatively. "A German, who thought his body and bones worth $1,000."

She looked straight before her, kicking the petal of her parasol with her [illegible] lips as she walked.

"The last steamer brought 300 emigrants, Georgia. The price of substitutes will go down for a bit. It is a pity I did not wait a little."

"Yes it is."

She said this quite seriously, and stopped before the door of the house she lived in.

"Well, don't look so serious about it," he added cheerfully. "I have put $1,000 to a worse use before now Georgia."

"Never in your life, Edgar."

"Eh?"

"Never in your life, I say, Edgar." She jumped up two steps, and then turned to confront him. "All the substitutes will be gone after awhile, and then they'll have to call upon us girls to go to the war. If I were drafted I'd not buy a substitute; I'd go."

"I understand you," said he slowly, and leaned against the pilaster. "You love your country more than all besides—eh, Georgia?"

She looked down at him with a half perplexed expression in her [illegible] eyes, and just then some leaves from the creeper that clambered the front of the house came fluttering to the ground between them. Stooping, she picked a red one up and held it to him by way of diversion. "Is not that a beautiful color?"

"It is red—a very suggestive one just now, and quite apropos of our conversation, Georgia. Give it to me. That will be a brave badge, won't it?"

There was a tone of bitterness in his voice; it was not hard to see that he was angry.

"You understand me in part, Edgar. It is the worse part that you understand; the better escapes you."

"No, I think not, Georgia." He pushed his hat back from his face and gazed steadily at her. "You believe honestly that it is on my account, for my good name, that you are solicitous. Come, now, some of your girl friends have been twitting you with my inglorious proclivities for a whole skin, contrasting the patriotic nobleness of their sweethearts with the selfish pusillanimity of yours. The thought has grown up in your brain that by and by it will be said to you, 'Your husband bought a substitute when he was drafted; you married a man who, when old and young were going to the war, sheltered himself behind his dollars.' Well now, Georgia, listen to me."

"Stop a moment Edgar. Tell me, have you never felt any of this for yourself? No one has ever twitted me as you say, but I have thought, not in my brain but in my heart, where all my thoughts of you grow, Edgar"—her cheek flushed, but she spoke resolutely—"that hereafter men may twit you, and you in turn twit me, because when our country cried out loudly, and fathers and brothers, aye, even to the very school lads, took their lives in their hand and answered the cry, I perverted love to selfishness, and so stopped your ears that I left you to be one that men could point at and say, 'He stopped at home.'"

* * * * * *

"Edgar B——." The hospital aid read the name from a paper presented to him by a lady who applied to see a patient. "Edward B——, No. 2 ward, madam; sixth bed on the right."

The hospital was clean enough and tidy, considering its crowded state, but the smell of chloride of lime and carbolic acid could not all together quell the sickly odors that drives in waves through a military hospital.

"Not dead. Oh, no, madam; he's asleep. He was rather more favorably thought of this morning. Both legs amputated at the knee."

"'He is not dead, but sleepeth.'" Unconsciously she quoted holy words to her heart, that seemed one while to stand still, and then to throb until her breath failed. "That will be a heartaching, won't it?" The red leaf that had fluttered between them rose in her memory, and the words and the look that accompanied them.

He opened his eyes and another pair are looking into them. A pair of eyes? Ah, no; a soul is looking through them, a soul that measures every variation of intelligence in his—marks when the strangeness of surprise dissolves into the new shape of recognition, when the loneness of pain clears up into the distinctness of comfort.

Not a word is spoken. Only the form lie there breathing on the pillow, and only the eyes meet, searching every line of each face, saying in unspoken language, "We are together."

Together? Yes. There should be no more heartaching till the final one. So Georgia resolved, and while death stalked on every side around Edgar B——'s bed he lived. The surgeon said that Georgia saved him. His discharge came. The war went on, but his country could spare him now.

And as he got home at last to New York—all that his unfortunate country could spare of him as he expressed it, and then a low fever attacked him and the medical men assigned all that remained of him by anticipation to mother earth. There was no pain; life would have set gently, but there was no hope, and Georgia would not believe them. She pitched her tent against the shadowy foe, and drew out the spear and buckler to fight for her love. She conquered, too, and when she had saved him the doctors declared he had a constitution of cast steel, and condescended to take the credit of his recovery. It was not much of a recovery after all. Only a tottering from the couch to the window, a lifting from the carriage to a bench in the park, but that was a very great deal to her.

With a faint touch of irony all over-wrapped by a smile of good humor had said to her:

"Never mind, Georgia; you will have to get a substitute now."

And she, brave with a true woman's courage, wise with a true woman's tact, made reply:

"My wedding dress is ready, Edgar. When shall we be married."

She kneeled, and he propped himself upright upon his crutches before the altar. He will never kneel again; the patriot was consecrated —God knows where his knees are —and then they went away. The bride and her cripple! Not a bit of it—the wife and her hero.

He likes that seat by the lilacs on the north side of the lake. The sunlight glitters on the water fringe that trickles from under the feet of the angel of the fountain, and he says it is a figure of his own life, which is running away over the basin watched over by an angel.

The shadows of the lilac lengthen out across the path and touch the grass plot, as she lifts the softly padded crutches and smiles her meaning, "Time to go home, Edgar." Sweet serious face. Verily the martyr has his consolations.

That is the idyl.—Percy Robinson in Harper's Bazar.

FIGS AND THISTLES.

Can your religion be seen?

There are no graveyards in Heaven.

Every man is some kind of a coward.

God's sheep all know their shepherd.

No man is proud who knows himself.

Any work is hard work to a lazy man.

The cross can only be seen from a cross.

Every sin is a stab at the heart of Christ.

Keeping sin in the heart keeps Christ out.

"They that sow in tears shall reap in joy."

Every good man builds his own monuments.

How to make hard work easy: Do it for God.

All the suicides in the Bible were backsliders.

Heaven is a prepared place for a prepared people.

Anybody can succeed who will keep close to God.

The apple you mustn't have always looks the reddest.

The devil hates the man who minds his own business.

God will not come into the heart through the back door.

The greatest miracle of the present time is a holy life.

"Evil shall hunt the violent man to overthrow him."

There is nothing sadder on earth than an unhappy child.

Beware of people who do not love children and flowers.

The way Jesus reached the masses was by going to them.

The only thing that will make anybody good is love to God.

People do not grow in grace by looking at the faults of others.

The way to Heaven is certain and sure for those who will start now

The less religious people have more they insist upon others having.

The devil loves to hear the man who won't pay his debts talk in church.

No man has given up anything for Christ who has not given up his sins.

The praying don't mean much when the pocket-book won't say amen.

"The Lord is righteous; He hath cut asunder the cords of the wicked."

Babes in Christ sometimes die because they are fed with watered milk.

A woman can be more dangerous on a bicycle than when she throws at hens.

When the devil fishes for men he baits for their hearts not their heads.

No man can fully respect himself as long as his ways do not please God.

The Holy Ghost in the heart is the river of life flowing through the soul.

Good men are hated because their lives tell sinners that they are wrong.

Every time you say, "I can drink or let it alone," the devil will say "Amen."

You don't help God any by making home dismal for the children on Sunday.

One of God's ways of taking hold of us Himself is by giving us friends to love.

Angels probably never get tired of looking at people who are happy in God.

If you want to bring down the sinners outside of the church shoot at those in it.

When a man knows that God is with him it takes a good deal to discourage him.

The sun did a good deal of shining before there was anybody here to notice it.

People who expect to praise God in Heaven ought to begin to do it here on earth.

Nowhere in the Bible has God promised to protect anybody on the devil's ground.

Being a Christian in earnest means that you have become a brother to every man.

The Lord will never be half as hard on the faithful Christian as he is on himself.

The man who professes to be a Christian ought to work continually at the business.

College President—All the boys have attended prayers regularly this week.

Professor—Not one has missed for two weeks.

President—[illegible]! Some fellow is interested in [illegible].

"What kind of seed ought I to plant, Uncle Si, to get a good squash crop?"

"Squash, of course. What did ye suppose—[illegible]?"

"Why do you permit such [illegible]?" said the Pullman traveler to his companion after a quarrel with the porter.

"Can't help it. He's the porter; I'm only a director in the company."

Pocahontas Times.

JOHN E. CAMPBELL,
EDITOR AND PROPRIETOR.

Huntersville, W. Va.
October 22, 1891.

IF WE expect to carry this State in 1892, we should be preparing for it now. There are many things to be done before we can be certain of West Va. The leaders of the Democratic party have several duties to perform. In the first place the people must be consulted in the selection of candidates. It will not do for a few men, a lot of ringsters, to assume TO RUN the party. The time for such things are past. Of course we may expect to see the attempt. But the people must see to it that these men are not permitted to foist objectionable candidates upon the party. Our candidates must be men who can command the respect and confidence of the people. We must have no jack-snappers whose only merit is that they happen to have a little money, or who happen to be "in the ring," or the friends of this or that would be leader or party dictator. In the first place, our candidate should be a pure man, with experience and statesmanship. In fact, he must be a broad guage man—one whom the people know and can trust. One who when he takes his seat, will be the Govenor, and not subject to the dictation of any man, or set of men. He must be a man whose presence will suggest the idea of manhood. Our State has plenty such men, but they are unfortunately, as a rule not in the rings, and unless the masses go to work and run the party, they will not be nominated.—There is and always has been of late years, too much personal politics in this State. Too many of our would be leaders overlook the interest of the party in the endeavor to advance their own interest. Was it not for this, West Virginia is good for 10,000 Democratic majority. With these methods the Democrats can only carry the State "by the skin of their teeth."

As we said before it is time to b at work. Politicans who have an "axe to grind" are already at work. But they are not at work for the party. Oh, no; they are at work for themselves. We propose to support the nominees with all the strength we possess; but we do hope the party will not degenerate into a personal campaign. The conventions ought to be composed of inteligent men, who are not the slaves of any one; men who have the party at heart; men who consider politicans and office seekers as of secondary importance, when compared with the success of the party. The Democratic party has good men in it, whom the people will love to honor. If such men can be nominated, the battle will be half fought. —Independent Herald.

AT A COUNTY COURT HELD FOR the County of Pocahontas, at the Court house thereof on the 6th day of October, 1891.

This day Matt Wallace and 696 other citizens of said County, presented their nine several petitions in writing, with the affidavits made by Uriah Bird, John Ligon, H. N. Hannah, William Vandervort, Geo. C. Mann, B. M. Yeager, Henry A. Yeager and Uriah Bird and [illegible], credible citizens of this County before L. M. McClintic, George P. Moore, A. C. L. Gatewood and R. C. [illegible], notaries public of this County, and duly certified by them that said petitioners, are, as such affiants verily believe, legal voters of this County, which said petitions together with said affidavits and certificates thereof are now here filed at this regular session of this Court, and the said petitions being in the same language and figures are as follows:

"To the County Court of Pocahontas County, West Virginia: your petitioners, whose names are hereto signed, respectfully represent unto your Honorable body, that they are legal voters of Pocahontas county, in said state of West Virginia, and that they desire the re-location and removal of the county seat of said county from the town of Huntersville to a point on the east bank of the Greenbrier river in said county known as and commonly called Marlin's Bottom, on the lands formerly owned by Susan E. and Andrew M. McGlaughlin, which were conveyed by them and wife to John T. McGraw, by deed dated on the 13th day of February, 1891 and is now of record in the clerk's office of the county court of said county of Pocahontas in Deed Book 21, page 301 and 307. The specific place and location on said lands, to which your petitioners ask the re-location of said county seat, is indicated as Courthouse Square on a survey and plat of said Marlin's Bottom lands, now being made by Oscar A. Veasey, Civil Engineer, a copy of which plat and survey will be filed in the office of the clerk of the county court of said county of Pocahontas, for public inspection, on, or before the day of the presentation of this pitition.

Your petitioners therefore pray, that a vote may be taken upon the question of such re-location, at and to the place above indicated, at a special election to be held in the said county on such a day as your Honorable body may indicate, not less than sixty days, nor more than four months from the date of entering an order to this effect. And your petititioners will ever pray &c."

And it appearing to the court, from an inspection of the said petitions that they are signed by an aggregate of six hundred and ninety seven legal voters and citizens of this county, and that said petitioners ask the removal and relocation of the said county seat at and to the same place, and that said six hundred and ninety-seven legal voters and citizens of this county constitute more than two-fifths of all the legal voters of this county, which is estimated by allowing one vote for every six persons in this county as shown by the last census preceding the entry of this order. And there being no general election held in this county in and during the present year, said petitioners ask that a special election be ordered, had, and held on the question of the removal and re-location of said county seat to the place referred to in said petition, and hereinafter specially described, said election to be held according to the provisions of chapter 39 of the Code of West Virginia, as amended and re-enacted by chapter 87 of the acts of the legislature of West Virginia, entitled, "An Act to amend and re-enact Section 15 of Chapter 39 of the Code of West Virginia," passed on the 27th day of February, 1891?

And the said Matt Wallace, one of said petitioners, now in open court, for himself and all other voters signing said petition, tenders his bond in the penal sum of five thousand dollars, with Jno. T. McGraw, J. W. Marshall and Levi Gay as his sureties, conditioned according to law, which said bond having been acknowledged by the signers thereto before the court the same is accepted and approved as sufficient.

And it appearing to the court, that the petitioners in said petition, respectfully ask and desire that the county seat of this county be removed from Huntersville in said county, and be relocated and placed at a point on the east bank of the Greenbrier river in this county, known as and commonly called Marlin's Bottom, on the lands formerly owned by Andrew M. McGlaughlin, which were conveyed by him and wife to John T. McGraw by deed dated the 13th day of February, 1891, and now of record in the clerk's office of the county court of this county in Deed Book No. 21, page 301, and by Susan E. McGlaughlin by deed dated the 11th day of February, 1891, and recorded in said clerk's office in Deed Book 21, page 307. And that the specific place and location on said lands to which said petitioners ask the removal and re-location of said county seat is indicated as "Court House Square" on a survey and plat of said Marlin's Bottom's lands, made by Oscar A. Veasey, C. E., in surveying and laying out what is known as the Town of Marlinton on said lands, a copy of the said survey, map and plan of said town having been filed in the clerk's office of this county, and now here tendered in open court and filed with said petition, which said place as shown by the deed hereinafter referred to is specially described by metes and bound as follows, to-wit:

"Beginning at a stout locust post driven firmly into the ground at a point in a straight line drawn through the center of the west end of the Andrew M. McGlaughlin spring-house and the the stone chimney at the south end of the S. E. McGlaughlin house, and situated at five hundred and eleven and one-half feet from the centre of the west end of said spring house, and at one thousand and fifty-five feet from the center of said chimney, and at the south corner at the intersection of Judge street and Tenth avenue, as shown on the said Map of Marlinton hereto attached; thence with the south-east side of said avenue south forty degrees and forty-five minutes west two hundred and ninety feet to another locust post driven firmly into the ground at the east corner, at the intersection of Jury street and Tenth avenue; thence with the north-east side of Jury street, south forty-nine degrees and fifteen minutes east two hundred and sixty feet to another locust post driven firmly into the ground at the north corner, at the intersection of Jury street and and eleventh avenue; thence with the north-west side of Eleventh avenue north forty degrees and forty-five minutes east two hundred and ninety feet to another locust post driven firmly into the ground at the west corner, at the intersection of Eleventh avenue and Judge street; thence with the southwest side of Judge street north forty-nine degrees and fifteen minutes west two hundred and sixty feet to the place of beginning."

And it further appearing to the court that the lot, tract or parcel of ground hereinbefore referred to, is now owned by the Pocahontas Development Company, a corporation created by and operating under the laws of this state, the same having been conveyed to it by John T. McGraw and Jacob W. Marshall, by their deed dated the 30th day of September, 1891, and now of record in the clerk's office of this court in Deed Book No. 22, page 204; and that said company proposes to donate said lands to this county free and relieved from all liens, costs and charges thereon, provided and upon this condition, however that said county seat be removed and that the public buildings be located and built thereon under the vote to be taken under this order, and that said company by John T. McGraw, its president, and Geo. M. Whitescarver, its manager and secretary, now here, in open court, tenders, in escrow, a deed for said lot, piece or parcel of land conveying the same to The County court of Pocahontas County, for court house and county purposes, with covenants of general warranty, which deed, they ask, my be taken and held by the clerk of this court as an escrow to await the result of the election provided for by this order. If said election be favorable to the prayer of said petitioners and if said county seat be removed and the public buildings be located on the said land, then said conveyance is to be absolute, otherwise said deed is to be returned to the said company by the clerk of this court; and the title to the land conveyed is not to be deemed and held to have passed out of the said company and corporation, and said corporation in the event said removal and re-location are not made, is to be held relieved from any claim or title of this court or of this county to the land therein described.

And it appearing further by the proposition of said Pocahontas Development Company, by its president and manager, now here in open court made by them, that said company agrees, promises and binds itself to pay the sum of five thousand dollars in money to aid in defraying the cost and expense of a new court house and jail for said county, in the event, contingency, and upon the sole condition and consideration that the said county seat be removed to and located at the place above indicated, and its public buildings located thereon, at the said new town called Marlinton, and said company now tenders its bond for said sum of five thousand dollars, executed under the seal of said company with George M. Whitescarver, John T. McGraw, J. W. Marshall, B M. Yeager, Matt. Wallace and Levi Gay, as sureties therein, conditioned for the true and faithful payment of the said sum of five thousand dollars under the conditions therein stated, which bond being inspected by the court, and the sureties therein named being sufficient, is approved and accepted, upon the terms and conditions upon which the same is tendered.

On consideration whereof, it is ordered, That a special election be held in this county on the

SECOND TUESDAY IN DECEMBER, 1891, to-wit, on the

8TH DAY OF DECEMBER, 1891,

at the several legal voting places in this county, as heretofore fixed and established by the former order of this court, at said election a vote be taken on the question of the relocation of the county seat of Pocahontas county as prayed for in said petitions. And the clerk of this court is directed to make out immediately upon the adjournment of this court, and certify a copy of this order for each of the several voting places in this county as fixed, established, and existing by law, and to deliver them to the sheriff of this county, who is ordered to post one copy of this order at each of the said voting places at least forty days before the said 8th day of December, 1891 and make return thereof according to law. And a copy of this order shall be published in The POCAHONTAS TIMES, a weekly newspaper published at Huntersville in this county, or in some other newspaper of general circulation in this county, at least once a week for four successive weeks prior to said special election herein ordered.

And the ballots used, given, and voted at said election shall have written or printed thereon, "Re-location of County Seat" "For re-location at Marlinton." and "Against Relocation of County seat.

And the court doth appoint the following named persons, commissioners, to hold and conduct said election, for the respective voting places in this county, who, for their respective voting places, shall ascertain and certify the result of such election, as required by law, viz;

For Academy—W. W. Beard, John B. Kinnison and George S. McNeel.

For Split Rock—S. S. Varner, James Herold and. V. P. Vandervort.

For Traveler's Repose—O. W. S. Gum, A. M. V. Arbogast, and Jacob L. Arbogast.

For Green Bank—Adam Arbogast, Jacob, S. Wooddell and Charles A Lightner.

For Dunmore—Jacob K. Taylor, B. F. McElwee and George W. Arbogast.

For Frost—Andrew Herold, I. B. Moore and C. O. W. Sharp.

For Huntersville—Sheldon Moore, D. A. Fisher and Wm. L. Harper.

For Edray—A. T. Moore, Henry Barlow and Wm. M. Sharp.

For Buckeye—R. F. Overholt, H. H. McClintic and Wm. O. McNeel.

And the clerk of this court is directed to take and hold said deed upon the terms and conditions upon which it is tendered and said clerk is also directed to accept the bond of said Pocahontas Development Company, and to file the same in his office to await the further order of this court.

A Copy, Teste:

S. L. Brown, Clerk.

HOME NEWS

—Large attendance at the Circuit Court this week.

—There is a good deal of sickness in the county at this time.

—Judge F. A. Guthrie, of Charleston, held court here this week.

—A few new subscribers this week.

—Circuit Court lasted four and a half days this week.

—Venders of cider, apples and chestnuts made a good thing out of them this week.

—Mr. Dennis, editor Greenbrier Independent, was attending Court this week.

—We are late this week in order to give our readers as early as possible the Circuit Court proceedings.

—The aqua vitæ got the best of a few persons at this place this week.

—Harry [illegible], Esq., and bride, of [illegible], were visiting relatives in the city this week.

—The Times is getting in a good [illegible] week for the coming [illegible]. Call and see us friends.

—The next [illegible] association for this county will be held at Frost. In a later issue we will give particulars and dates.

—We hereby authorize all persons not to trespass by hunting or fishing [illegible]

Allen and Jno. C. Galford.
Green Bank, W. Va.

—Mr. S. P. Sieg, one of the editors of the Highland Recorder, made us a pleasant fraternal call Tuesday. He is also a young lawyer.

—The Times cash drawer was very liberally contributed to this week, for which we are exceedingly thankful.

—About 30 or more horses were sold here this week. Mr. J. S. Hawkins, of Millboro Springs sold about 25 old and young horses at an average of about $104 a piece.

—An 8 pound boy was born to our Ed. Jno. E. Campbell and wife last Sunday morning. It is needless to add that he is a Democratic boy all over, as his first utterance was "Hurrah for Cleveland."

—Mr. E. D. McClintic, of Seattle, Washington son of Mr. Wm. H. McClintic of Buckeye and brother of our commonwealth attorney, is now visiting relatives in this county.

—Read the order of the county Court in this issue, ordering an election to be taken December the 8th, 1891, to decide whether or not the court house shall be removed from [illegible] to Marlinton.

—William Beard, one of Pocahontas County's leading farmers and stock dealers, who has been at the Springs the past two weeks, has returned home very much improved in health.—Addison Echo.

—We learn from the Highland Recorder that Mr. Wm. Hevener, Jr., of [illegible], Va. is attending the Hillsboro Male & Female Academy. This is a most excellent school for ladies and gentlemen and a school which our county is proud of.

—Attorneys from a distance attending Court this week were from Warm Springs—J. T. and W. M. McAllister and Jno. W. Stephenson; Monterey—C. P. Jones, L. H. Stephenson and S. B. Seig; Covington—[illegible]; Lewisburg—Jno W. Arbuckle; Charleston—Geo. W. McBride and [illegible].

—Alex. Gum, [illegible] and Chas. [illegible] were arrested on [illegible] last Thursday charged with destroying honey bees and stealing [illegible] a hearing at [illegible]. The two former gave bail in the sum of $100 and the two latter were lodged in jail at this [illegible]. [illegible] was discharged as the offense was not committed [illegible].

—We understand the drawing and sale of lots at Buckhannon last week was a decided success. We are also pleased to learn that parties of our county who have lots there have been offered a handsome profit on their investments.

—The two colored convicts who escaped from the work on the Hot Spring extension of the C. & O. R. R. and who were lodged in jail at this place for burglary, upon a requisition were returned to the Va. penitentiary the first of this week.

Circuit Court Proceedings.

INDICTMENTS DISPOSED OF.

State of W. Va. vs. J. L. Slaven, A. & B. confessed judgment and fined $1.00 and costs.

Same vs. Gratz Slaven, same.

Same vs. J. R. Apperson, unlawful sale of liquor, acquitted, as witness did not appear.

Same vs. Jno. A. Geiger, A. & B. not guilty.

Same vs. [illegible] fined $1.00 and cost.

Same vs. [illegible] Collins, unlawful sale of liquor fined $10.00 and costs.

Same vs. Jno. Pritt, unlawful sale of liquor fined $10.00 and costs.

Same vs. David Bright, for murder found guilty in the second degree, and sentenced to five years in the penitentiary.

Same vs. Enos Sharp for forgery [illegible] was entered.

INDICTMENTS.

Same vs. Everet Lightner for disturbing religious worship, two cases.

Same vs. R. M. Beard, Joseph Hayes and Jno. H. Brown, same.

Same vs. J. R. Showalter for A. & B.

Same vs. Walter Cole for A. & B.

Same vs. [illegible] Hanna, carrying deadly weapons.

Same vs. Jno. Shinnaberry carrying deadly weapons.

Same vs. Ed. Jackson for A. & B.

Same vs. Jno. [illegible] A. & B.

Same vs. [illegible] Wagner carrying deadly weapons.

Same vs. [illegible] Carr, misdemeanor.

Same vs. Guden Cochran for disturbing religious worship.

Same vs. Geo. W. Sheeles, same.

Grand jury discharged.

Five Years in the Penitentiary.

The trial of David Bright for the murder of Preston G. Tracy [illegible] Nov., the circumstances of which our readers are acquainted with, came to an end this morning.

The trial and speeches of the attorneys occupied two days, when the jury went to their room and returned a verdict of guilty of murder in the second degree, in about two hours.

All through the trial the Court room was crowded to overflowing, and considerable interest manifested by all present.

The parents, brothers and sisters of the accused, stayed through the trial with almost breathless anticipation, scarcely leaving the Court room, the accused seeming to be the most unconcerned of the family, except when the jury after an absence of about two hours filed into the Court room, and announced that that a verdict had been agreed upon, then his face turned to an almost deathly pallor.

When the verdict was announced it seemed to give relief to the grief stricken parents, and the prisoner exhibited no emotion, all seeming to think, that their counsel had gotten out of it all there was in it.

The next morning (Friday) when Judge Guthrie asked the prisoner if he had anything to say why sentence should not be pronounced upon him, one of his attorneys Mr. S. Rucker replied for him that the prisoner had nothing to say, when the judge explained to him the [illegible] part of the law, gave him some advice, and passed the lowest possible sentence upon him the law allows, which is five years in the state penitentiary.

In the case of his younger brother J. A. Bright who was indicted as an accessory to the crime, the prosecuting attorney entered a nolle prosequi, and he was discharged.

No doubt the youthfulness of these two boys saved them a long term in the penitentiary and possibly one of their necks from the gallows.

The attorneys both for the defence and prosecution made able and eloquent speeches.

THREE NEGROES LYNCHED.
In Clifton Forge, Va.

All Hanged to one Tree and Riddled with Bullets.

On last Saturday afternoon a sad and frightful tragedy took place one and a half miles from Clifton Forge, Va., between officers and negroes, in which one white man and one negro lost their lives, and several others were wounded.

The negroes came to Clifton Forge from the Bell Hill mine 8 miles from there with the avowel of creating a disturbance. An officer arrested one of them, and was compelled to give him up at the point of pistols from the others.

The negroes then left, the officers and other citizens following them to drop state with the above result. Later in the day four of the gang were captured, and three of them were strung up to the same tree and riddled with bullets. The fourth's youthfulness saved his neck.

No farther trouble is anticipated.

WASHINGTON LETTER.

From our regular correspondent.

WASHINGTON, D. C., Oct. 16th.—Representatives Mills and Crisp, the two candidates for the speakership of the House who are by general acknowledgement the leaders in the race, and one of whom will, barring unexpected developements, be given the coveted honor of presiding over the next House of Representatives while the other will lead the party on the floor, both happened to be in town at the same time this week, and everybody was on the look out for news of their Speakership prospects, but both of the gentlemen are apparently more interested in the several State campaigns than in their own. The [illegible] campaign will really not begin in earnest until after the State elections, because no considerable number of Representatives will be in Washington until then.

The Italian Chamber of Commerce of New York City has for a long [illegible] ever since the passage by Congress of the meat inspection act, been at work trying to convince the Italian government of the wisdom of removing the restrictions which it had, in common with other continental nations of Europe, placed upon the importation of American pork. This week M. L. Contec[illegible], the President of the Chamber of Commerce, came to Washington [illegible] that the efforts had been successful, and that the Italian government would shortly appeal the restrictions. [illegible] away there [illegible] from the administration [illegible] about "the great diplomatic triumph achieved by the administration through Minister Porter." [illegible] strictly speaking, no diplomatic relations between Italy and this country. Italy has had no minister here since the New Orleans [illegible] "diplomatic" [illegible] and he [illegible] of New York [illegible] and the administration [illegible]. Here is [illegible] of the administration trying to [illegible] to which it is not entitled. [illegible] will of [illegible] since [illegible] plete failure this year and ours the largest for years. The German officials casting about for some method to cheapen American grain to German consumers, thought of removing the duty on American wheat, and it is now announced as another "great diplomatic triumph for the administration," which is to be credited to "reciprocity," the Germans allowing our wheat to come in free in return for our admitting their beet sugar free. Their beet sugar has been admitted free ever since the sugar schedule of the McKinley tariff bill went into effect.

Senator Sherman is said to have captured the vacancy on the bench of the Court of Claims for his man, ex-Representative Thompson, of Ohio.

Pocahontas Times.

JOHN E. CAMPBELL,
EDITOR AND PROPRIETOR.

ADVERTISING RATES.

	1 m.	3 m.	6 m.	1 yr.
One inch	$ 1 00	[illegible]	[illegible]	$ 5 00
Three in.	[illegible]	4 00	[illegible]	10 00
Qr. column	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]
Half col'n	[illegible]	12 00	[illegible]	[illegible]
One col'n	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]

Reading Notices, not exceeding [illegible] lines, twenty-five cents for each insertion, and five cents a line for each additional line.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION.

One copy, 1 yr., $1.00 in advance, after 6 months, $1.25; after 12 months, $1.50.

These terms will be strictly complied with.

Entered at the Post-office at Huntersville, W. Va., as second class matter.

Huntersville, W. Va.
October 22, 1891.

HE DREW HIM OUT.

It was in the parlor of a Boston boarding house.

"So you are from Cape Cod, are you?" said the wit of the house addressing the new comer and winking to his fellow boarders as if to say, "notice how I will draw him out."

"Yes."

"Cape Cod runs a long way into the sea, I believe?"

"Yes, a good bit."

"Pretty dampish climate, I think?"

"Not particularly so."

"Well, now, when I was down there I thought it was. The rain appeared to me to be damper than in the city and to wet one more. It made me pretty wet I know. Say don't you think the rain wetter there than here?"

"I don't know down there we go in when it rains."

Then the boarders laughed and the drawing out process was brought to an abrupt conclusion.

BY MARRIAGE.

A traveler says that he was riding along a cattle trail near the New Mexico line when he met a rather pompous looking native of the region who introduces himself as Colonel Higgins, of Devil's river.

"Were you a Colonel in the confederate army?" he asked.

"No, sah."

"On the Union side, then?"

"No, sah, nevah was in no wah."

"Belong to the Texas Rangers?"

"No, sah, I do not."

"Ah, I see. You command one of the state militia regiments."

"No, sah, I don't. Don't know nothing about soldiering."

"Where, then, did you get the rank of colonel?"

"I'se a kunnel by marriage, sah."

"By marriage! How's that?"

"I married the widow of a kunnel sah—Kunnel Thompson, of Waco."

FITTING THE FAULT.

A certain woman of fashion conspicuous in Washington society, whose infirmity of temper has given rise to very interesting gossip occasionally, figures in a quaint little story.

A short time ago she was entertaining at supper, a lady of her acquaintance, when it chanced that there was placed on the table a small pot of chocolate. The hostess of the occasion is very fond of the beverage in question, partaking of it at any evening of her life. Unfortunately, the servant had so, and of to make more than the one cup, which was just about sufficient for a single cup. Accordingly, when the guest was asked if she would have some, she hesitated a moment and said no. Whereupon her entertainer, flushed with anger at the contretemps, and rising from her seat, deliberately poured the contents of the chocolate pot out of the window.

This was embarrassing for the lady entertained, to say the least of it. Of course, however, she pretended to take no notice, merely glancing slyly at her host, who made the third person at the repast, to see if he evinced any consciousness respecting the proceeding. But he only smiled slightly beneath his mustache and made no remark.

Presently he asked her if she would have some chicken salad, of which a big dish-full made the principal feature among the viands.

"I thank you, no," she replied, merely because she had a preference for something else.

Immediately, as if it were a matter of course, the host picked up the chicken salad and threw it dish and all out of the window into the garden.

"It's a way we have here," he remarked calmly.

Nobody said anything for quite five minutes afterward, but the extreme amiability exhibited by the hostess for the rest of the evening the visitor to imagine that the lesson thus given was not without a certain domestic usefulness.

—If you want Letter and Note heads, neatly printed and put up in tablet form, cheaper than you can get them anywhere else, call at THE TIMES office. We also do all kinds of nice job printing, and have on hands a nice line of Stationary, business cards, &c. &c.

CONSUMPTION CURED.

An old physician, retired from practice, having had placed in his hands by an East India missionary the formula of a simple vegetable remedy for the speedy and permanent cure of Consumption, Bronchitis, Catarrh, Asthma and all throat and Lung Affections, also a positive and radical cure for Nervous Debility and all Nervous Complaints, after having tested its wonderful curative powers in thousands of cases, has felt it his duty to make it known to his suffering fellows. Actuated by this motive and a desire to relieve human suffering, I will send free of charge, to all who desire it, this recipe, in German, French or English, with full directions for preparing and using. Sent by mail by addressing with stamp, naming this paper. W. A. NOYES, 820 Powers' Block, Rochester, N. Y.

SUBSCRIBE

FOR THE—

POCAHONTAS TIMES,

Every man in the County should take it, and patronize home industry. It sustains your rights, and works for the advancement of your county, which no city paper will do. It gives you the news from all parts of the county, which you could not get otherwise. It furnishes matters of interest to the Merchant, Farmer and Mechanic. It keeps you posted and gives you information, on all general news, and its sections and Miscellany are fit for all ages.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION,

One year in advance	$1.00
If not paid within 6 months	1.25
And at the end of the year	1.50

AND IF YOU NEED

Letter Heads, Note Heads, Bill Heads, Envelopes, Drug Envelopes Tags, Business Cards, Official Blanks, Blank Bonds, Posters Briefs for the Court of Appeals etc

GET THEM AT "THE TIMES"

JOB OFFICE.

POCAHONTAS TIMES.

JOHN E. CAMPBELL, EDITOR AND PROPRIETOR. Huntersville, West Virginia, Thursday, October 29, 1891. Terms of Subscription, $1.00 PER YEAR, IN ADVANCE. No. 14

...rectory of Pocahontas County

...uit Court, A. N. Campbell.
... Attorney, L. M. McClintic.
... J. C. Arbogast.
...iff, Geo. W. Callison.
...rt, S. L. Brown.
...urt, J. H. Patterson.
... C. O. Arbogast.
... C. E. Beard. S. B. Hannah. G. M. Kee.
... Geo. Baxter

...HE COURTS.

...urt convenes on the first ... April, 2nd Tuesday in June ...day in October.
... convenes on the 1st ... January, March, October ... Tuesday in July. July is ...

...re. N. C. McNeil.
...oore & McNeil,
...TORNEYS-AT-LAW.
...ctice in the Courts of Poca... adjoining Counties, and in ... Appeals of the State of ...

...
Attorney-at-Law,
Huntersville, W. Va.
...ctice in the courts of Poca... adjoining counties and in ...e court of Appeals.

...STOFER.
Attorney-at-Law,
Huntersville, W. Va.
...ctice in the courts of Poca... Webster counties.

...UCKER.
...-Law & Notary Public,
Huntersville, W. Va.
...actice in the courts of Poca...unty and in the Supreme court ...

...RBUCKLE.
Attorney-at-Law,
Lewisburg, W. Va.
...ctice in the courts of Green... Pocahontas counties ... claims for ...

...CAMPBELL.
DENTIST,
...Monterey, Va.
... Pocahontas County, at least ... of his visits will ap...

... WEYMOUTH.
...DENT DENTIST,
... Beverly, W. Va.
...ict Pocahontas County ev... and Fall. The exact ... that will appear in ...

... CUNNINGHAM, M. D.
...YSICIAN & SURGEON,
... All calls ...

...l by G. W. Wagner,
...UNTERSVILLE, W. VA.
...

A YOUNG MAN SAVED.

WHAT STARTED JULIUS MAY ON A SUCCESSFUL CAREER.

Julius May was a lawyer—that is, he was going to be one—if spending more or less hours every day in Reed & Trappen's office could produce the arranged for result. At first the prospect had been pleasant enough to him, but a course winter amusements in New York must have some effect upon a young man, and the effect in Mr. May's case had not been, in a legal sense, satisfactory.

Music and the drama, libraries bound in Russia instead of calf; fine ladies and fancy balls. London tailors and Fifth avenue boarding houses—these, and many other splendid things had become very agreeable to the newly fledged exquisite. But his little fortune was rapidly disappearing, and his little salary was so extremely small that it was scarcely worth counting as a means toward these desired results.

What must he do? He has asked himself this question almost every hour lately, and had never got but one answer—'Marry!'

After a careful and honest review he was compelled to admit that among all the rich and splendid girls whom he had habitually spoken of as crazy about him, only two were crazy enough to entertain the thought of marrying him—pretty little Bessie Bell and the exceedingly clever Nora St. Clair.

Bessie was the only child of a rich widow, who lived in excellent style, and who was perfect mistress of her income. She was a sweet, dainty little blonde, always irreproachably stylish in dress, always ready to dimple into smiles, and never at a loss for just the most agreeable thing to say.

Nora was a close friend of Bessie, but in all a contrast. She was no tenderly nurtured heiress, but a poor brave girl, who had by the force of her intellect, study and hard work gained an enviable position in the literary world. Her income from her writings was very handsome; she visited in the most aristocratic circles; she was charming in person and manners, and dressed like the rest of the fashionable world. But then Julius felt that in every sense she would not only be the 'better half,' but probably the four fourths of the house; and that his personality would sink into 'Mrs. May's husband.

So Bessie was the decision, and he determined if his new suit came home the next day to offer Miss Bell the handsome person which it adorned. For, to tell the truth, he was a handsome fellow, and if this work-a-day world had only been a great drawing room, with theatrical alcoves and musical conservatories, why, then Mr. Julius May would have been no undesirable companion through it.

The new suit came home, and fitted perfectly; the tonsorial department was equally effective in its results; every precaution had been taken, and he felt an earnestness of success in the very prosperity of these preliminaries. He rang at Mrs. Bell's door; before the footman could open it, a gentleman came quickly out, threw himself into Mrs. Bell's carriage, and, in a voice of authority, ordered the coachman to drive to the wharf.

The incident scarcely attracted [illegible] upon entering the parlor, he saw pretty Bessie watching the disappearing vehicle with [illegible] eyes. She greeted him [illegible] usual beaming, pretty manner; and very soon Mrs. Bell came in, and asked him to remain to dinner.

After dinner Mrs. Bell's clergyman called about some of the church charities, and as the young people were singing, they went into the library to discuss them. Now was the golden moment, and Julius was not afraid to seize it. What do men say on such occasions?

Do they ever say what they intended? Do they remember what they say? I don't believe Julius did, for before he had done—right in the middle of a most eloquent sentence—Bessie laid her hand on his with a frightened little movement, saying:

'Mr. May, please, sir, please do stop! Surely you know that I have been engaged ever since I was eighteen to Prof. Mark Tyler. Everybody knows it—we had a betrothal party—he is just gone to Europe for six months, that is what I was crying for. why, all our set knew about it, though he has been away nearly two years in the Rocky mountains and California. Mamma said we were to wait until I was twenty-one, but I love him just the same—and I am quite sure that I never did anything to make you think I could care for you in this way, Mr. May,' and Bessie looked just a little bit indignant.

'I have had the honor, Miss Bell, of being your escort all winter.'

'Oh, dear! Did you think I was going to marry you for all that? In all our pleasant little dinners and drives and dances is there matrimonial speculation? That would, indeed, be dreadful.'

She loved her professor too truly, she had been simply pleasant and friendly to him as she had been to all other gentleman friends, who, however, had had too much sense and modesty to misconstrue her kindness. Then she walked to her pretty aviary and began cooing to her birds. Julius hardly remembered what passed afterward except that he received a cool, courteous; 'Good night sir,' in answer to his 'Farewell,' and that he found himself walking around Madison square in a very unenviable state of mind.

To this speedily succeeded the thought of Nora, he must see her to-night; to-morrow Bessie would give her own version of his conduct, and then—well, he would not acknowledge that that could make any difference in Nora's liking for him. 'And yet,' he murmured, 'women are such uncertain creatures.' Where his own interests were concerned, Julius was not wanting in a certain strength and decision of character, and in less than an hour after his rejection by Bessie Bell he had so far composed and encouraged himself as to determine upon a visit to Nora, though whether he should offer himself or not was a point he left to the development of circumstances.

He found Nora at home, and moreover, she seemed disposed to welcome him with extra cordiality. In a little while he managed to make the conversation drift toward Bessie.

Would she be married when the professor returned from Europe?

'Oh, dear, no, not till she's twenty-one.'

'Is it not a mesalliance?'

Nora's eyes grew dangerously bright.

'Certainly not. Prof. Mark Tyler is a wonderful chemist and geologist—a man of world wide fame. It is a great honor for Bessie to be loved by such a great man.'

'Will you be glad when she marries?'

'Very.'

'Yet you will lose your friend?'

'By no means. She will remain at home and the professor and I are very old friends; he knew me when I was a little girl.'

'Indeed! Perhaps you may marry before Miss Bell.'

'I may do so. I have no specific against doing such a thing eventually, but I am quite sure I shall not do so immediately.'

'Why not?'

'Because I cannot afford it. I am just one of those women who would be likely to make a mesalliance—in money matters—and I repeat, I can not afford it just yet. I have an other extravagance before me, a great deal nicer than a husband.'

'I should like to know what it is.'

'A long European tour, with perhaps a peep at the Pyramids and a ramble about old Jerusalem.'

'Oh dear!' said Julius, in a tone half serious and half mocking. 'I should have no chance, I suppose, against such a temptation?'

"None at all," she said positively, and though she kept up the bantering tone, it was quite evident to Julius that if he asked her in sober earnest she would answer just the same with slightly different accent.

But Nora, with a woman's ready tact, turned the conversation, and gradually led it into a very unusual and practical channel—the nobility and the necessity of labor. The glowing thoughts, the plain yet hopeful truths that fair young woman uttered, Julius heard for the first time in his life that night. Never before had he realized the profit and the deep delight which might spring—and only spring—from an honest career, no matter how humble or laborious, if it was steadily pursued until success crowned it. She hid none of her own early mistakes and struggles, and then, alluding to her assured position and comfort, asked Julius how he supposed she had won it?

'By your genius she said admiringly.

'Not so sir, but by simple persevering, conscientious labor in the path I had marked out for myself. Therefore,' she said, with a bright, imperative face, 'go home to-night, Mr. May, choose what particular form of law you will study, throw yourself with all your capacities into that one subject, and success is sure to come. Depend upon it, the world is not far wrong in making success the test of merit.'

'You have made a new man of me, Miss St. Clair," said Julius enthusiastically. 'When I have proved this, may I come in to see you again?"

He had risen to go and they stood with clasped hands—'Then you may come again.' Nothing more was said but they quite understood each other, and Julious went out into the clear star lit night, determined to make himself worthy of a good woman's acceptance before he offered himself again.

Next evening Bessie and Nora sat in the firelight, sipping their after dinner coffee; it was an hour for confidence, and Bessie said rather sadly:

"Poor Julius May—he asked me to marry him last night."

Nora turned quickly but said nothing.

'That is he wanted to marry my money, everybody knows that if he loves anybody really, it is you.'

'He called on me, too, last night,' said Nora, 'and I saw he was in trouble, so I gave him something to do. Nothing like that with [illegible] pel of work when you're in trouble. When he had done it, I told him he might come and see me again.'

"Surely you would never marry him! You will just have him to dress and take care of.

'All men need women to care for them, else why were women made? But I think Julius will do very well yet. These elegant carpet knights sometimes don armor and take the world by surprise.'

'Not muchly,' laughed Bessie.

'Remember how England's curled darlings' stormed the Malakoff and battered down Sebastopol. I am going to trust Julius May for a year or two, I think he'll do.'

"We shall see.'

'Yes, we shall see. Time proves all things.'

Time proved in this case what has often been asserted: 'That every woman influences every man she comes in contact with, either for good or bad.' Julius went steadily to work, used with economy the remains of his patrimony, became known among lawyers as a hard-reading, clear headed, steady young man, and in a little more than two years he ventured to call again on Nora St. Clair and ask her a certain question. to which she answered, with pride and confidence: Yes.'

Another evening Bessie and Nora sat sipping their coffee together in the gloaming of an early summer evening.

'Bessie,' said Nora, 'Julius May asked me last night to marry him.'

'Going to do so, Nora?"

'Yes, dear, I am going to take care of him, and he is going to take care of me.'

God grant that in the larger liberty to which woman aspires, she may considr how vast a power is her influence and use it only for gracious ends!

KNIGHTS OF LABOR.

There were five hard-looking men seated on a bench in City Hall park yesterday, and while four of them were asleep the fifth sat looking at his own toes. By and by along came a man who halted to ask:

"Do any of you men want work?"

"Whats the pay?" asked the fifth, after a long silence.

"Why, I'll give one dollar and fifty cents a day."

"What's the work?"

"Digging a cellar."

"I don't want it."

"Don't any of the rest want a job?"

"I think not; but if you'll make the pay two dollars a day and the work picking strawberries I'll take the chance of waking them up.

Times.

...PBELL,
...PRIETOR.

...N, Va.

...1891.

...LETTER

Sale of Real Estate for Taxes.

Notice is hereby given that the following described tracts or lots of land, in the County of Pocahontas, which are delinquent for the non-payment of taxes for the years 1889 and 1890, will be offered for sale by the undersigned sheriff, at public auction at the front door of the Court House of said County, between the hours of ten in the morning and four in the afternoon

on the 14th day of December, 1891,

that being the second Monday in the month. Each tract or lot, or so much thereof as shall be necessary, will be sold for so much cash, as is sufficient to satisfy the amount due thereon as set forth in the following table:

NAME OF PERSON CHARGED WITH TAXES.	QUANTITY OF LAND.	LOCAL DESCRIPTION.	Total amount of taxes, interest, cost of pub. and com., being am't necess'ry to red'm before sale	Total am't of taxes interest cost of pub. commission and fee for receipt.
GREEN BANK DISTRICT.	Acres.
Conrad Lewis C.	600	Hd w'trs Greeb'r rv.	4 49	4 74
Camden G. D. & Crouches heirs	1300	" Greenbrier rv.	6 13	6 38
Campbell J. B. Est.	60	West " "	1 34	1 59
Campbell Sam'l B.	271	Greenbrier rv.	38 14	38 38
Cunningham W. A.	71	" "	1 52	1 77
Davis Jas.O.& Isaac N.	262	Hd. Greenbrier rv.	3 30	3 55
same	150	same	2 21	2 36
Heavener's Jacob Est.	20	E. Branch Deer cr.	2 01	2 26
Hutton Alfred	298	l of 596 Greebrier rv	4 64	4 89
Hickman Mary A	1	In Green Bank	12 31	12 56
Kimble Jason & J. F. Ault.	140	Hd. Greenbrier rv.	2 00	2 25
Morrow Wm.N.	904	E. Branch Gr. rv.	10 24	10 49
same	915	same	10 42	10 67
McLaughlin Dan Est.	45	Deer creek	1 09	1 34
Seaton Mary A. wife of Jno.	391	Brush Run	3 34	3 59
Sharp John Sr. Est.	2308	Alleghany Mt	16 49	16 74
Stevens Geo O.	904	E. Branch Greb'r rv.	9 55	9 80
same	915	same	9 69	9 94
W[illegible] Jno. H.	383	Back Alleghany	[illegible]	[illegible]
Wilfong Michael	337	Alleghany Mt	9 84	10 09
EDRAY DISTRICT.
Armstrong Jno. H.	48¼	Swago	2 65	2 90
Adkinson Abel Est.	13 53 p	same	90	15
Armstrong B. F.	51¼	same	1 94	2 19
Auldridge Wm. & G. W. Hill's Est.	22¼	M. Lick	1 21	1 46
Cameron Geo. H.	29½	Dry Branch	4 38	4 63
Dilley Wm.	100	W. Gr. river	9 40	9 65
Friel Israel	68	Greenbrier river	1 15	1 40
Hannah David Est.	290	W. Gauly Mt.	2 44	2 69
Hogsett Sam'l Est	88¾	Old Field Fk.	14 03	14 28
same	138	same	8 64	8 89
Jackson Wm	100	Slaty Fork	5 59	5 84
Ker S. B	23¾	Swago Creek	3 49	3 74
McDowell, Martin & Jno. col.	121	Adj. John Gay	2 02	2 27
Moore Isaac B	1 72 p	Waters Elk Riv.	79	1 04
McDonald Geo. W	304	Thorney Flat	19 76	20 01
same	1633	Wat. Big Spring	103 94	104 19
same	167	same	2 63	2 88
Porter W. A. & Wm	285	Hd. Laurel Run	4 10	4 36
Skyles Jannie B	1	Marlin's Bottom	11 27	11 52
Wheeler Robt. (col)	43	Adj. Auldrige	73	98
Warwick Jno. W. & E. M. Hill's h'rs	361	Clover Crk	5 08	5 33
same	20	W. Greenbrier rv	73	98
same	265	same	3 89	4 14
Warwick Jno. W	510	Greenbrier River	2 15	2 40
HUNTERSVILLE DISTRICT.
Courtney Geo W Est	111	Buckley Mtn.	87	1 12
Cobb Amanda	100	same	84	1 09
Craig G. E. Est.	2¼	Adj. Huntersville	4 40	4 65
Campbell William	90	Alleghany Mtn	84	1 07
Green Sarah	Lot 24	Huntersville	2 02	2 27
Harris Randolph	4	Waters Knapp's cr	54	89
Holcomb Joseph	48	E. Cochran's crk	2 27	2 53
Hauck George F.M.	419	Little Back Creek	3 39	3 64
King Chas	29 15 p	Hills	4 83	5 08
Rose Andrew M. & wife	46	Buckley Mt	67	92
Seebert Jos. Est. & Herald	630	Waters Do'th'rd's cr	4 73	4 98
Shafer B. P. G.	15	Buckley Mtn.	58	83
Townsend W. F.	100	E. Greenbrier Riv	2 90	3 15
White Henry & Jos.Seeberts h'rs	800	Middle Mtn.	2 77	3 03
same	1200	Middle Mtn.	3 79	4 04
Young Chas.	189	Marlin's Mtn	1 94	2 19
LITTLE LEVELS.
Anderson Morgan	½	Brush Run
same	1½	Bruffey's creek	56	81
Bruffey Mary J	46	Bruffey's creek	1 64	1 89
same	43	same	1 61	1 86
Dean J. P.	87	Mill Run	1 24	1 49
Kinnison Rachel	304	Oldham Run	2 [illegible]	2 57
McNeel Rachael C. H'rs.	498	Cranberry	12 56	12 81
same	51	Greenbrier	2 86	3 11
McNeel Rachael C. Est. and Jos. Beard	38	E Droop Mountn.	95	1 20
Pennel Joseph	2	Stamping c'k	99	1 24
Rodgers Geo. M	125	Laurel creek	1 25	1 50
Rider George B	75	S. Br. Beaver Lick	1 45	1 70
Rider A. T. J. & Laura J.	138	Poplar Flats	2 22	2 52
Smith Emma E.	158	Stamping creek	2 22	2 52
Sideswhicker Margaret Est.	1 25 p	Hillsboro	82	1 07

Recapitulation—State tax, $133.69; County tax, $133.44; District tax, $154.86. Total $422.00.

Any of the aforesaid tracts or lots may be redeemed by the payment to the undersigned Sheriff, before sale, of the amount due thereon.

Given under my hand this 27th day of October, 1891.

J. C. ARBOGAST, Sheriff, P. C.

Subscribe for "THE TIMES"

HOME NEWS

—Read the delinquent list this week, it may interest you.

—Court adjourned last Friday night.

—Rev W. T. Price, of Marlinton called to see us Monday morning.

—J. H. Weymouth, dentist and little son of Beverly were here a few days last week.

—A marriage license was issued last Saturday to Mr. J. A. Gibson and Miss Lillie V. Varner.

—Mr. J. H. Poage, of Edray is visiting his daughter Mrs. Amos Barlow and family this week.

—Farmers are now husking corn, and a better crop was never known in this country, so they say.

—WANTED.—50 bushels of ears of corn, and one good two horse load of hay, at THE TIMES office.

—Attorney C. F. Moore, who has been home on a visit the past week returned to Clifton Forge Va. to day —On the 24th inst. Miss Annie V. Pritchard and Mr. Jno. R. Hevener, were married at the home of the bride's parents at Dunmore.

—Mr. E. P. Vandevort, of Split Rock has bought the store at that place, of Marshall & Moore. We print this week a nice lot of stationary for him.

—Mr. A. N. Barlow and Miss Frances Sharp, both of Edray were married on the 22nd inst. at the home of the brides parents, by Rev. G. P. Moore.

—Died, Mr. Stuart Rider, of Poplar Flats, at his home this morning at 4 o'clock, of fever. He was about 30 years of age, and leaves a wife and seven or eight children to mourn his loss.

—Miss M. M. Apperson, daughter of Capt. Jack Apperson of Marlinton and Mr. H. S. Galford, of Buckeye, were married the 13th inst. at the home of the bride's parents, by Rev. Joshua Buckley.

—If you always hear a man grumbling about and running down his county paper, you can set it down that he never pays for it. Unfortunately we have a few of the said kind, and who will hear something drop some of these days, that will not be pleasant to the ear.

—Born to Mr. J. B. Lockridge and wife last Monday night, a fine ten pound boy. The Doctor tells us that his first utterance was "Hurrah for Buena Vista, tariff reform, Cleveland, the next President of the U. S. and a good deal more before he stopped to catch his breath.

—The first of this week Mr. J. C. Loury, Sr., had laid off, west of Huntersville 51 of the most beautiful town lots we have ever seen. This certainly is a step in the right direction, and no doubt others will follow Mr. Loury's example, and ere another year Huntersville will more than double its population and bid fair to become by far, the leading town of this section. The prices are low, and within the reach of every working man, who for a month's wages or a little more, can buy a lot to build him a house upon, and pay for it for what it would cost to rent the same property for three years or less.

Circuit Court Proceedings.

(Continued from last week.)

Overholt & Paine vs. Gladwell and Arbogast, it is ordered that appellees recover against appellants $45.06, cost of suit and an attorney's fee $10.00.

State of W. Va. vs. E. E. Sharp, indicted for felony, nolle prosequi.

State vs. Peter Kerr, indicted for misdemeanor, confessed judgment for $[illegible] and costs.

State vs. Samuel Bright, for carrying deadly weapons, not guilty.

CHANCERY BUSINESS.

Chas. L. Addie vs. Wm. F. Arbogast, report of com'rs to deide land, confirmed.

Shinaberry vs. Lockridge suit dismissed.

State of W.Va. vs. Paul McNeel's forfeited land, referred to W. H. Grose com'r.

Amos Barlow vs. St. Lawrence Boom M'f'g Co. dismissed.

E. M. Thompson executrix of Wm. Thompson, dec'd. vs. W. G. Gilkeson, decree of sale.

L. W. Herold vs. J. B. Hannah's heirs decree for sale.

D. W. S. Alderman vs. Jas. Pyles heirs &c. decreé of partition.

Jno. Dilley's admr's. vs. Wm. Dilley & others, decree of sale.

Hull's adm'r. &c, vs. Hull's heirs &c., confirmation of comr's report, and recommitted for further report.

Henry Grose vs. S. P. Patterson & others decreed partition of land.

Uriah Hevener vs. Lafayette Burner et. als. confermation of sale.

Paul McNeel's Exor's. vs. Sam'l Auldridge & als. confirmation of sale.

E. H. Moore and wife vs. Wm. Burr adm'r. and others, referred to com'r.

Abraham Burkett vs. Geo. W. Kerr, set aside tax deed.

Augusta National Bank vs. Tardy, Urquhart & others continued.

Jno. Dilley's adm'r vs. Jno. Dilley's h'rs. order of reference to com'r.

Jacob Taylor &c. vs. Margaret &c order to allot her dower in said land.

Jno. Pickering & al. vs. H. S. Rucker & al. order that defendant have leave to file his answer.

McAlister vs. S. C. Tardy, & S. C. Tardy, Jr., order to file answer.

Nannie E. Beard guardian &c., vs. Grace V. and Rachael P. Beard her wards, petition for sale of land.

R. P. G. Shafer vs. Rucker & others continued.

R. S. Turk vs. St. Lawwrence Boom & M'f'g Co., conjunction desolved and case dismissed at plaintiff's costs.

Martha Ann Rider vs. A. W. Rider continued.

Wm. Gibson vs. C. A. Yeager & als. rule to show cause why the land should not be resold.

Wm D. Moore's adm'r. vs. Wm. D. Moore's heirs &c., order of reference to com'rs.

The Removal Question.

GREEN BANK, W.Va., Oct. 26th. —ED. TIMES: Much has been said by the agitators of our County seat removal matter, but they have never made it apparent why said removal should be made, and when I attempt to give but a few of many reasons why our County seat should not be removed I answer the wishes of ¾ to ⅞ of the citizens of this the Green Bank District.

First—We have one of the best jails in West Va., and at a cost of $5,000 to us—the contracters declaring they lost $3,000 on the job of constructing it, which virtually declares that our jail is worth $8,000.

Second—We have been to $8,000 cost to bridge Knapp's Cr. to accommodate the upper end of the county and an appropriation of about $1,000 to make a road around the mountain below Huntersville so as to give the people of the lower end of the county access to it, and now a few foreigners wish to boom Marlinton and to aid in it offer a lot and $5,000 (and such men do not buy pigs in pokes or offer $5,000, unless by it they intend to make many times that amount) and many who seem not to see their interests clearly, think that we should not fail to take in the $5,000 like a money bag gapping for a half pence.

Now I mean to utter the sentiment of many, many sturdy and far-seeing citizens when I say to you my fellow tax payers, come to this subject with sense and soberness. This is an important matter, and when men say that our Co. Court has declared that the proposed court house shall cost but $13,000, remember, that court commissioners do not hold office like supreme judges, and the Court that now knows us may soon know us no more. Who knows what life's uncertainty or political diversion may bring fourth.

When we vote to move the county seat we are forging the fetters that will bind us to stand to this matter through evil as well as through good report, and when the dye is once cast the yoke is upon us —we are in for all time let the cost be small or large.

Take the Counts estimate of the Court house cost—$10,000 falling to us, $3,000 to remove the jail would put us in $13,000, withthe $8,000 lost on the bridge which would make us realize a loss of $21,000—which is the lowest possible estimate and we must expect it to be very much more, and, why should we give $21,000 for the sake of a lot and $5,000 in cash? We feel feel grateful to foreigners who mean by railroads&c. to develope our Co., but for us to give $25,000 or $30,000 to aid in forlegn speculation it does seem strange.

To those in the lower end of the Co., we would say that you may suppose that getting our Court house 6 miles lower down from us is stimulatinguato fight this matte,r but upon our honor this 6 miles figures as a very insignificant or small item in this matter, but let us appeal to you to stand with us in trying to repel the faction that would put such a tax upon us as this removal would entail.

Some cry out railroad, railroad, and for the life of Court house-removal agitators they cannot show that this matter has anything to do with the railroad, or a railroad with this county seat removal. The whole matter is plain, and a "wayfaring man though a fool may not err, therein" if he will listen to plain practical reasoning. I do not mean by the above to say that the men who are favoring this removal are fools by any means—no, they are men who should know better.

Trusting that I have not been an intruder, I am yours,

E. W.

Pocahontas Times.

JOHN E. CAMPBELL,
EDITOR AND PROPRIETOR.

ADVERTISING RATES.

	1 m.	3 m.	6 m.	1 yr.
One inch	$ 1 00	$ 2 00	$ 3 00	$ 5 00
Three in.	2 00	4 00	6 00	10 00
Qr. column	3 00	6 00	10 00	17 00
Half col'n.	6 00	12 00	20 00	30 00
One col'n	10 00	20 00	30 00	50 00

Reading notices, not exceeding five lines, twenty-five cents for each insertion, and five cents a line for each additional line.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION.

One copy, 1 yr., $1.00 in advance; after 6 months, $1.25; after 12 months, $1.50

These terms will be strictly complied with.

Entered at the Post-office at Huntersville, W. Va., as second class matter.

Huntersville, W. Va.

October 29, 1891.

AT A COUNTY COURT HELD FOR the County of Pocahontas, at the Court house thereof on the 6th day of October, 1891.

This day Matt Wallace and 696 other citizens of said County, presented their nine several petitions in writing, with the affidavits made by Uriah Bird, John Ligon, H. N. Hannah, William Vandervort, Wm. C. Mann, B. M. Yeager, Henry A. Yeager and Uriah Bird and Ed. I. Holt, credible citizens of this County before L. M. McClintic, George P. Moore, C. L. Gatewood and B. C. Hill, notaries public of this County, and duly certified by them that said petitioners, are, as such affiants verily believe, legal voters of this County, which said petitions together with said affidavits and certificates thereof are now here filed at this regular session of this Court, and the said petitions being in the same language and figures are as follows:

"To the County Court of Pocahontas County, West Virginia: your petitioners, whose names are hereto signed, respectfully represent unto your Honorable body, that they are legal voters of Pocahontas county, in said state of West Virginia, and that they desire the re-location and removal of the county seat of said county from the town of Huntersville to a point on the east bank of the Greenbrier river in said county, known as and commonly called Marlin's Bottom, on the lands formerly owned by Susan E. and Andrew M. McGlaughlin, which were conveyed by them and wife to John T. McGraw, by deed dated on the 12th day of February, 1891 and is now of record in the clerk's office of the county court of said county of Pocahontas in Deed Book 21, page 201 and 207. The specific place and location on said lands, to which your petitioners ask the re-location of said county seat, is indicated as Courthouse Square on a survey and plat of said Marlin's Bottom lands, now being made by Oscar A. Veazey, Civil Engineer, a copy of which plat and survey will be filed in the office of the clerk of the county court of said county of Pocahontas, for public inspection, on, or before the day of the presentation of this petition.

Your petitioners therefore pray, that a vote may be taken upon the question of such re-location, at and to the place above indicated, at a special election to be held in the said county on such a day as your Honorable body may indicate, not less than sixty days, nor more than four months from the date of entering an order to this effect. And your petitioners will ever pray &c."

And it appearing to the court, from an inspection of the said petitions that they are signed by an aggregate of six hundred and ninety seven legal voters and citizens of this county, and that said petitioners ask the removal and relocation of the said county seat at and to the same place, and that said six [illegible]

[illegible]

... county, known as and commonly called Marlin's Bottom, on the lands formerly owned by Andrew M. McGlaughlin, which were conveyed by him and wife to John T. McGraw by deed dated the 12th day of February, 1891, and now of record in the clerk's office of the county court of this county in Deed Book No. 21, page 201, and by Susan E. McGlaughlin by deed dated the 11th day of February, 1891, and recorded in said clerk's office in Deed Book 21, page 207. And that the specific place and location on said lands to which said petitioners ask the removal and re-location of said county seat is indicated as "Court House Square" on a survey and plat of said Marlin's Bottom's lands, made by Oscar A. Veazey, C. E., in surveying and laying out what is known as the Town of Marlinton on said lands, a copy of the said survey, map and plan of said town having been filed in the clerk's office of this county, and now here tendered in open court and filed with said petition, which said place as shown by the deed hereinafter referred to is specially described by metes and bound as follows, to-wit:

"Beginning at a stout locust post driven firmly into the ground at a point in a straight line drawn through the center of the west end of the Andrew M. McGlaughlin spring-house and the stone chimney at the south end of the S. E. McGlaughlin house, and situated at five hundred and eleven and one-half feet from the centre of the west end of said spring-house, and at one thousand and fifty-five feet from the center of said chimney, and at the south corner at the intersection of Judge street and Tenth avenue, as shown on the said Map of Marlinton hereto attached; thence with the south-east side of said avenue south forty degrees and forty-five minutes west two hundred and ninety feet to another locust post driven firmly into the ground at the east corner, at the intersection of Jury street and Tenth avenue; thence with the north-east side of Jury street, south forty-nine degrees and fifteen minutes east two hundred and sixty feet to another locust post driven firmly into the ground at the north corner, at the intersection of Jury street and and eleventh avenue; thence with the north-west side of Eleventh avenue north forty degrees and forty-five minutes east two hundred and ninety feet to another locust post driven firmly into the ground at the west corner, at the intersection of Eleventh avenue and Judge street; thence with the south-west side of Judge street north forty-nine degrees and fifteen minutes west two hundred and sixty feet to the place of beginning."

And it further appearing to the court that the lot, tract or parcel of ground hereinbefore referred to, is now owned by the Pocahontas Development Company, a corporation created by and operating under the laws of this state, the same having been conveyed to it by John T. McGraw and Jacob W. Marshall by their deed dated the [illegible] day of September, 1891, and now of record in the clerk's office of this court in Deed Book No 22, page 204; and that said company proposes to donate said lands to this county free and relieved from all liens, costs and charges thereon, provided and upon this condition, however that said county seat be removed and that the public buildings be located and built thereon under the vote to be taken under this order, and that said company by John T. McGraw, its president, and Geo. M. Whitescarver, its manager and secretary, now here, in open court, tenders, in escrow, a deed for said lot, piece or parcel of land conveying the same to The County court of Pocahontas County, for court house and county purposes, with covenants of general warranty, which deed, they ask, may be taken and held by the clerk of this court as an escrow to await the result of the election provided for by this order. If said election be favorable to the prayer of said petitioners and if said county seat be removed and the public buildings be located on the said land, then said conveyance is to be absolute, otherwise said deed is to be returned to the said company by the clerk of this court; and the title to the land conveyed is not to be deemed and held to have passed out of the said company and corporation, and said corporation in the event said removal and re-location are not made, is to be held relieved from any claim or title of this court or of this county to the land therein described.

And it appearing further by the proposition of said Pocahontas Development Company, by its president and manager, now here in open court made [illegible]

[illegible]

... at the several legal voting places in this county, as heretofore fixed and established by the former order of this court, at said election a vote be taken on the question of the relocation of the county seat of Pocahontas county as prayed for in said petitions. And the clerk of this court is directed to make out immediately upon the adjournment of this court, and certify a copy of this order for each of the several voting places in this county as fixed, established, and existing by law, and to deliver them to the sheriff of this county, who is ordered to post one copy of this order at each of the said voting places at least forty days before the said 8th day of December, 1891 and make return thereof according to law. And a copy of this order shall be published in THE POCAHONTAS TIMES, a weekly newspaper published at Huntersville in this county, or in some other newspaper of general circulation in this county, at least once a week for four successive weeks prior to said special election herein ordered.

And the ballots used, given, and voted at said election shall have written or printed thereon, "Relocation of County Seat" "For re-location at Marlinton." and "Against Relocation of County seat."

And the court doth appoint the following named persons, commissioners, to hold and conduct said election, for the respective voting places in this county, who, for their respective voting places, shall ascertain and certify the result of such election, as required by law, viz:

For Academy—W. W. Beard, John B. Kinnison and George S. McNeel.

For Split Rock—S. S. Varner, James Herold and F. P. Vandervort.

For Traveler's Repose—O. W. S. Gum, A. M. V. Arbogast, and Jacob L. Arbogast.

For Green Bank—Adam Arbogast, Jacob S. Wooddell and Charles A Lightner.

For Dunmore—Jacob K. Taylor, B. F. McElwee and George W. Arbogast.

For Frost—Andrew Herold, I. B. Moore and C. O. W. Sharp.

For Huntersville—Sheldon Moore, D. A. Fisher and Wm. L. Harper.

For Edray—A. T. Moore, Henry Barlow and Wm. M. Sharp.

For Buckeye—R. E. Overholt, H. H. McClintic and Wm. O. McNeel.

And the clerk of this court is directed to take and hold said deed upon the terms and conditions upon which it is tendered and said clerk is also directed to accept the bond of said Pocahontas Development Company, and to file the same in his office to await the further order of this court.

A Copy, Teste:

S. L. Brown, Clerk.

—If you want Letter and Note heads, neatly printed and put up in tablet form, cheaper than you can get them anywhere else, call at THE TIMES office. We also do all kinds of nice job printing, and have on hands a nice line of Stationary, business cards, &c. &c.

POCAHONTAS TIMES.

Vol. 9. JOHN E. CAMPBELL, EDITOR AND PROPRIETOR. Huntersville, West Virginia, Thursday, November 5, 1891. Terms of Subscription, $1.00 PER YEAR. IN ADVANCE. No. 15

Official Directory of Pocahontas County

Judge of Circuit Court,	A. N. Campbell.
Prosecuting Attorney,	L. M. McClintic.
Sheriff,	J. C. Arbogast.
Deputy Sheriff,	Geo. W. Callison.
Cl'k Co. Court,	S. L. Brown.
Cl'k Cir. Court,	J. H. Patterson.
Assessor,	C. O. Arbogast.
Com'rs Co. Ct.	C E. Beard, S B. Hannah, G. M. Kee.
Co. Surveyor,	Geo. Baxter

THE COURTS.

Circuit Court convenes on the first Tuesday in April, 3rd Tuesday in June and 3rd Tuesday in October.

County Court convenes on the 1st Tuesday in January, March, October and second Tuesday in July. July is levy term.

ON A MERRY-GO-ROUND.

It Started in a Whirl and Ended in a Wedding

"There is no use talking, Beulah," Amy Anstruther said, as she buttoned up her ulster. "Anything like a matrimonial negotiation is so distasteful to me that I would not marry the king of Siam to please anybody."

"The king of Siam—well, no!" said Beulah, smiling. "But Robert Craig is not a Mongolian, my dear. He is rich and good looking and clever as can be."

"Bah!" said Amy, as she knotted her veil above the fluffy coil of blonde hair. "I almost hate him already."

"That is what he said about you!" Beulah observed, cooly.

"Then he has some sense," Amy replied. "Come, Beulah, let us alone! There is no use of trying to strike an Anstruther-Craig alliance just for the sake of raking up the family arms. What do we Americans care for the duke of Anstruther and the earl of Craig? My grandfather kept a shop, you know, and Henry Craig was a wholesale shoe manufacturer. You might as well let us go on being common. There! I'm all ready. Where's Dicky?"

An infant warwhoop in the hall was her reply.

With the small author of that yell she went to the merry-go-round pavilion; but the ring of flying animals had just started and Amy and Dicky sat down to wait. Near them was a little girl a perfect fairy, in white, with long floating hair and pleading eyes.

"Please, Uncle Bert, won't you let me go?" she coaxed a gentleman beside her. "I won't get hurt. See! There's Nellie Graham riding a camel all alone. Please let me go!"

"Charolette, you musn't ask me, dear. Your mother told me to take care of you, and I don't know what she thinks of merry-go-rounds. I couldn't think of letting you go alone."

"The child was silent; but Amy saw great tears rolling down her cheeks, and said, very quickly: "If you don't mind, your little girl can go with our Dicky. Dicky, you'll take care of her, won't you dear? Dicky's an old merry-go-rounder."

"Oh!" cried Charlotte. "May I, Uncle Bert?"

"Do you think it is all right?" the gentleman inquired, looking at Amy.

"Oh, yes; it is perperfectly safe. Let her go. She will enjoy it."

The going rung, and Dicky held out his hands. "The Little Fisher-maiden" was ground out gayly from the organ, and Charlotte mounted the camel.

Amy found her companion delightful. It was five o'clock when the children came back, with their tickets all gone.

"Come back to-morrow," said Dicky, hospitably. "We come here every afternoon, don't we, Aunt Amy?"

Amy blushed.

"I am certainly very much obliged to you, Master Dick," said the gentleman warmly.

Amy bowed rather nervously and hurried away.

The merry-go-round grew more and more attractive. Dicky spent a child's fortune on it, and Charlotte rode every animal in the caravan. Amy and "Uncle Bert," in the meanwhile, talked and—took care of the children.

"Suppose we try it this time?" he said, one afternoon, weeks later, when the children mounted their wooden steeds.

"Would you like to?" Amy said, smiling. "Do you prefer an ostrich or a lion?"

"Oh, I shall stand up, thank you!" he replied. "How shall you ride?"

"In a sleigh, if you please. I am not so rash as to mount one of those fiery animals."

The bell struck and the organ began to grind out "Rock-a-by, Baby."

Amy laughed in spite of herself. What would Beulah say if she knew?

Round and round they went.

"How do you like it?" Amy asked.

He shook his head.

"I feel like a singing top," he said, dubiously.

"Better sit down," she said, but he did not move.

Once more they spun around.

Amy's escort uttered a low exclamation and staggared against the feet of the horse.

"I am horribly giddy," he said, faintly.

"Take care!" she cried, reaching out her hand. "This way!"

He took a step toward her. His face was deadly pale.

"Good heavens!" he cried. "How horrible this is!"

The next moment there was a cry from the spectators in the pavilion. He had fallen at the feet of the horse and the flying wheel flung him off with terrible force upon the floor.

There was wild excitement in a moment.

Amy felt herself getting deathly sick when she saw him lying there motionless.

The organ stopped. Everybody rushed to the scene of the disaster.

"He is badly hurt, I'm afraid," Amy heard some one say. "Who is he? Where does he live?"

"He is my Uncle Bert," said little Charolotte, bursting into tears. "We live a long way from here, down at Ventnor."

"Take him to a hotel," some one suggested.

"This gentleman is a friend of mine," said Amy with a sudden resolution. "Will some one call a carriage from the beach? I will take him to my sister's house.

The poor fellow never spoke or moved till long after he had been undressed and put to bed in Mrs. Stuyvesant's spare bedroom.

Beulah was out when Amy arrived. When she heard what had happened she simply said:

"Well, upon my word, Amy! That is like you. Who is he?"

"I—I really don't know," Amy replied, with a vivid blush; "but I am sure he is a gentleman."

Beulah stared and went up to look at the poor man who was lying on the bed with concussion of the brain. The doctor was with him, and a nurse whom Amy had got somewhere.

Beulah looked at the pale face, with its regular features and close-cut, curly brown hair, and she uttered an exclamation of surprise.

Amy was coming upstair. She slipped out to meet her and caught her by the shoulders.

"See here!" she cried, whirling her around. "Do you know who that is you have got there? It is Robert Craig."

"Beulah Stuyvesant!"

"I am telling you the truth. That is his little niece downstairs. I thought I had seen the child before."

Amy turned red and pale again.

"We must send word to his sister," she said, demurely. "Beulah, I—I hope you will be very careful what you say about Mr. Craig."

Beulah smothered a laugh, at which Amy frowned sternly, and went into the room with a bowl of ice which she was carrying.

Robert Craig was exceedingly ill. He recovered slowly, though Amy nursed him, and it was something to make a man better to see her flitting softly about the room in her pretty blue chambrey morning gown, with its frills of snowy embroidery.

"Miss Amy," he said, one morning, when she brought in a pretty blue and white Saxony bowl, "you have never told me your last name."

"It is Anstruther," she said with a sly little smile.

"Good heavens!" he cried. "What a fool I have been!"

"There! there!" she said. "You are spilling your broth."

"Do you know," he went on, "I once refused to be introduced to you? My aunt, Mrs. Stewart Stuyvesant—"

"Yes, I know!"

"She wanted me to marry you."

"How absurd—wasn't it?"

"Do you think so?" he asked anxiously. "I don't."

Amy blushed furiously.

"You are to be quiet you know," she said.

"I won't be quiet,—I can't. I lie here every day, looking at you with a longing that is eating my heart out. I want to know what you are going to do with me when you get me well?"

"Take you to the merry-go-round," said Amy, flippantly.

"Never!" he said, pushing away his broth. "Are you going to marry me? Because, if you aren't I may as well lay down and die now when it will be easy for me.

"You are not going to die now," she said, softly. He reached for her hand and drew her down.

"I love you," he whispered, looking full into her fair face. "Will you marry me, Amy?"

Her answer must have pleased him for his face shone radiently, and when Charolette came in a little later with a bouquet for Uncle Bert, he said proudly:

"See here, Puss! Come and kiss your new auntie"

HE DIDN'T GET THE BETTER OF PAT.

"Some time ago I was trading in a village store," writes a correspondent, "when one of the clerks came to the junior partner, who chanced to be waiting on me, and said: 'Won't you please step to the desk a moment? Pat Flynn wants to settle his bill and insists on having a receipt.'

"The merchant was evidently annoyed. 'Why, what does he want of a receipt?' he said; 'we never give one. Simply cross his account on the book; that is receipt enough.'

"'So I told him,' answered the clerk, 'but he is not satisfied. You had better see him.'

"So the proprietor stepped to the desk, and after greeting Pat with a 'good morning' said, 'You wished to settle your bill, did you?' to which Pat replied in the affirmative.

"'Well,' said the merchant, 'there is no need of giving you a receipt—see! I will cross your account off the book,' and suiting the action to the word he drew his account. 'That is as good as a receipt.'

"'And do ye mane that that settles it?' asked Pat.

"'That settles it,' said the merchant.

"'And ye're shure ye'll never be afther askin' me for it again?'

"'We'll never ask you for it again,' said the merchat decidedly.

"'Faith, then,' said Pat, 'and I'll be afther kapin' me money in me pocket, for I havent paid it yet'

"The merchants face flushed angrily, as he replied, 'Oh, well, I can rub that out.'

"'Faith, now, and I thought that same,' said Pat.

"It is needless to add that Pat obtained his receipt."

DEHORNING.

ACADEMY, W. VA., Oct. 23rd.—

ED. TIMES: With your permission and necessary space, I will inflict your readers with a little more gush on the above subject.

I am prepared to say after three years experience, that horns on cattle, are a nuisance, and I will have none of them. In former articles on this subject I asserted that there was not one single good reason, for their retention, but every reason for being rid of them. I hold the same views yet, and it is steadily growing and being adopted by all considerate and reasonable stock handlers. The cruelty consists in retaining horns for the injury, suffering and damage they cause themselves, to say nothing of the injury they do other animals, as well as damage or loss to their owners, would, or ought to be sufficient reasons for their removal.

The opponents to dehorning, or more properly dishorning make a very weak argument such as this: That nature gave them and for a wise purpose, and we should not interfere or change the laws of nature. Then was a cruel operation &c. Any fair reasoner will at once see the nonsense of this argument—for, without the changing of the laws of nature by two other modes, very familiar to all cattle and stock raisers, we would be in a sorry condition to day, and they are cruel and longer recovering from the effects of said change, than cattle that have been dishorned.

In their wild state, horns were given them as a means of defense, which is entirely unnessary in a domestic state. Besides their control and management was put entirely in the hands of mankind.

As an evidence that horns must go, I find quite a number of the most prominent stockmen of this neighborhood, besides other places, are planning to have the horns removed this fall, and I have been solicited by many of them to operate on their cattle. So I have ordered one of Dr. W. H. Levitt's clippers, that has a capacity of taking off the horns at the rate of one per minute, or 600 per day.

This machine does away with a great deal of the cruelty that is produced by the saw, as it does the work in one fifth of the time, as one motion of the saw across the horn is as painful as the instantaneous severing of the horn with the clipper. I will also have his "Pat Perfection head Holder," which weighs 80 lbs., and can be carried in a buggy from place to place, and which facilitates the speed and operation.

Parties desiring work done in this line should correspond with me, and when they can furnish 50 cattle at one place, I will remove the horns for 10 cents a head. A less number an advanced rate will be charged.

It makes no difference about the age of cattle.

Respectfully,
F. A. RENICK,

Pocahontas Times.

JOHN E. CAMPBELL,
EDITOR AND PROPRIETOR.

Huntersville, W. Va.
November 5, 1891.

The Camden Road

Thomas P. Grasty, writing to the Manufacturer's Record from Parkersburg, where he has been stopping over after a trip over the route of Camden's new line, gives many particulars of interest to this section. A map is given with Pittsburg at one end of the line and Covington at the other. Following is the part of the letter referring particularly to this section:

"Apropos of new towns, one of the most inviting locations that I know of is the point on the Greenbrier river where the West Virginia and Pittsburg meets the Chesapeake and Ohio. To this point from the Gauley river, a distance of only 34 miles, the final surveys have been made and the road is ready to be let to contract. The sight of the new town is now known as Marlin's Bottom, and a vote has been ordered in Pocahontas county on the question of moving the county seat thither. I did not see the place, but am told it is a beautiful location.

Besides being on the outskirts of a great timber and coal field, it is adjacent to what is supposed to be good iron ore, in both the Oriskany and Clinton formations of the Alleghany mountains. I am informed moreover, that the Chesapeake and Ohio Company are now having a portion of this alleged ore region explored under the direction of Mr. Langdon, the geologist. But that is another story."

The junction at Marlinton is the result of an agreement between the manager of the West Virginia and Pittsburg Railroad and that of the Chesapeake and Ohio. The latter road has about 25 miles yet to build from its Warm Spring extension, and the West Virginia and Pittsburg as has been stated, 34 miles besides what is now ready for track laying in order to complete the connection from Pittsburg in Pennsylvania, through the centre of West Virginia to Covington. Much of this intervening country, now a wilderness, will so soon as the connection is made, become the scene of industrial developements on a scale so seldom witnessed in this country.

I asked Mr. Camden about the road up Potts Creek to open the 60,000 acres of strictly mineral land owned by a syndicate of which he is a member. "That," he replied will be an independent road with equal advantage to the Chesapeake and Ohio and the West Virginia and Pittsburg. It will be built in the near future, and will be about 30 miles long, from Covington on toward the divide between the Potts creek and Big Stony, which latter runs through Norfolk and Western territory. This area has been explored by experts who have explored and opened the ore body in more than 30 places, which show that the slopes on either side, as well as the valley itself, contain a persistent bed of Oriskany ore from 20 to 30 feet in thickness. Most of this ore will be made into pig iron by furnaces to be erected along the road on the syndicate's property, and some will be shipped to furnaces in Virginia. A large portion of the pig iron production on Potts creek will be shipped to Pittsburg. A perfectly satisfactory traffic arrangement has been made with the Chesapeake and Ohio people, which is to apply alike to West Virginia and Pittsburg and the proposed Potts Creek Railroad."

Summing up the result of my reconnoissance in the territory of the Camden system, I am convinced that the value of the traffic it will create is beyond computation. Unlike most new roads this one is thoroughly ballasted and in first class condition."

Sale of Real Estate for Taxes.

Notice is hereby given that the following described tracts or lots of land, in the County of Pocahontas, which are delinquent for the non-payment of taxes for the years 1889 and 1890, will be offered for sale by the undersigned sheriff, at public auction at the front door of the Court House of said County, between the hours of ten in the morning and four in the afternoon

on the 14th day of December, 1891,

that being the second Monday in the month. Each tract or lot, or so much thereof as shall be necessary, will be sold for so much cash, as is sufficient to satisfy the amount due thereon as set forth in the following table:

NAME OF PERSON CHARGED WITH TAXES.	QUANTITY OF LAND.	LOCAL DESCRIPTION.	Total amount of taxes, interest, cost of pub. and com. being am't necessary to paid in before sale	Total am't of taxes, interest, cost of pub. commission and fee for receipt.
GREEN BANK DISTRICT.	Acres.
Conrad Lewis C.	600	Hd w'trs Greeb'r rv.	4 45	4 74
Camden G. D. & Crouches heirs	1300	" Greenbrier rv.	6 13	6 28
Campbell J. B. Est.	60	West " "	1 24	1 30
Campbell Sam'l B.	271	Greenbrier rv.	38 14	38 38
Cunningham W. A.	71	" "	1 52	1 77
Davis Jas. O. & Isaac N.	292	Hd. Greenbrier rv.	3 30	3 55
same	150	same	2 21	2 36
Heavener's Jacob Est.	20	E. Branch Deer cr.	2 01	2 25
Hutton Alfred	298	[illegible] Greenbrier rv	4 64	4 89
Hickman Mary A.	1	In Green Bank	12 31	12 56
Kimble Jason & J. F. Ault.	140	Hd. Greenbrier rv.	2 00	2 25
Morrow Wm. N.	904	E. Branch Gr. rv.	10 24	10 49
same	915	same	10 42	10 67
McLaughlin Dan Est.	45	Deer creek	1 09	1 34
Seaton Mary A. wife of Jas.	391	Brush Run	3 34	3 59
Sharp John Sr. Est.	2308	Allegheny Mt	16 49	16 74
Stevens Geo O.	984	E. Branch Greeb'r rv.	9 55	9 80
same	915	same	9 69	9 94
Warmsley Jno. H.	293	Back Allegheny	8 41	8 66
Willong Michael	337	Allegheny Mt	9 84	10 09
EDRAY DISTRICT.
Armstrong Jno. H.	48½	Swago	2 65	2 90
Adkinson Abel Est.	13-53p	same	90	15
Armstrong B. F.	51¼	same	1 94	2 19
Ashbridge Wm. & G. W. Hill's Est.	22¾	M. Lick	1 21	1 46
Cameron Geo. H.	29	Dry Branch	4 38	4 63
Dilley Wm.	160	W. Gr. river	9 40	9 65
Fried Israel	68	Greenbrier river	1 15	1 40
Hannah David Est.	290	W. Gauly Mt.	2 44	2 69
Hogsett Sam'l Est	88½	Old Field Fk.	14 03	14 28
same	138	same	8 64	8 89
Jackson Wm	100	Slaty Fork	5 59	5 84
Kee S. R.	22½	Swago Creek	3 49	3 74
McDowell Martin & Jno. col.	121	Adj. John Gay	2 02	2 27
Moore Isaac B	1-72p	Waters Elk Riv.	79	1 94
McDonald Geo. W	304	Thorney Flat	19 76	20 01
same	1633	Wat. Big Spring	103 94	104 19
same	167	same	2 63	2 88
Porter W. A. & Wm.	265	Hd. Laurel Run	4 19	4 36
Skyles Jennie B.	1	Marlin's Bottom	11 27	11 52
Wheeler Robt. (col)	43	Adj. Ashbridge	73	98
Warwick Jno. W. & E. M. [illegible]	361	Clover Crk	5 08	5 33
same	20	W. Greenbrier rv	73	98
same	265	same	3 89	4 14
Warwick Jno. W	510	Greenbrier River	2 15	2 40
HUNTERSVILLE DISTRICT
Courtney Geo W Est	111	Buckley Mtn.	87	1 12
Cobb Amanda	100	same	84	1 09
Craig G. E. Est.	2¼	Adj. Huntersville	4 40	4 65
Campbell William	90	Alleghany Mtn	84	1 07
Green Sarah	Lot 24	Huntersville	2 02	2 27
Harris Randolph	4	Waters Knapp's cr	64	89
Holcomb Joseph	48	E. Cochran's crk	2 27	2 53
Hanck George F. W.	419	Little Back Creek	3 39	3 64
King Chas	29-15p	Hills	4 83	5 08
Rose Andrew M. & wife	48	Buckley Mt	67	92
Seebert Jos. Est. & Herald	600	Waters Dn'th'rd's cr	4 73	4 98
Shafer R. P. G.	15	Buckley Mtn.	58	83
Townsend W F.	100	E. Greenbrier Riv	2 90	3 15
White Henry & Jos. Seeberts h'rs	500	Middle Mtn.	2 77	3 02
same	1200	Middle Mtn.	3 79	4 04
Young Chas.	180	Marlin's Mtn	1 94	2 19
LITTLE LEVELS.
Anderson Morgan	¼	Brush Run
same	1¼	Braffey's creek	56	81
Braffey Mary J.	46	Braffey's creek	1 64	1 89
same	43	same	1 61	1 86
Dean J. P.	87	Mill Run	1 24	1 49
Kinnison Rachel	304	Oldham Run	2 32	2 57
McNeel Rachael C. H'rs	498	Cranberry	12 56	12 81
same	31	Greenbrier	2 86	3 11
McNeel Rachael C. Est. and Jos. Beard	38	E. Droop Mount'n.	95	1 20
Pennel Joseph	2	Stamping c'k	99	1 24
Rodgers Geo. M	125	Laurel creek	1 25	1 50
Rider George B	73	S. Br. Beaver Lick	1 45	1 70
Kider A. T. J. & Laura J.	138	Poplar Flats	2 22	2 52
Smith Erona E.	138	Stamping creek	2 22	2 52
Sidenstricker Margaret Est.	1 25p	Hillsboro	82	1 07

Recapitulation—State tax, $133.69; County tax, $133.44; District tax, $154.96. Total $422.09.

Any of the aforesaid tracts or lots may be redeemed by the payment to the undersigned Sheriff, before sale, of the amount due thereon.

Given under my hand this 27th day of October, 1891.

J. C. ARBOGAST, Sheriff, P. C.

Shingles for Sale

I have for sale at my saw-mill on Knapp's Creek 15,000 first class pine, sawed shingles, $4.00 per 1,000 cash, when taken away.

S. P. MOORE.
Sunset, W. Va

—We hereby authorize all persons not to trespass by hunting or fishing upon our land.

ALLEN and JNO. C. GALFORD.
Green Bank, W. Va.

Subscribe for "THE TIMES"

HOME NEWS

—The Presiding Elder Rev. Furgeson preached at this place Monday at 11 o'clock.

—Died, Mr. Davis Grimes, of near Frost, one day last week, of typhoid fever.

—Messrs. Albert and Gilbert Sharp and Geo. Buzzard have finished Mrs. Susan E. McGlaughlin's dwelling house on Elk.

—Dr. S. P. Patterson was on the sick list a few days the first of the week but we are pleased to say is out again.

—James Boylen, near Philippi while handling a gun supposed to be unloaded shot his sister, killing her instantly.

—Vol. 1 No. 1 of the Moundsville Echo is on our table. It is well gotten up, neat and newsy, and if it maintains its present standard there is no reason why it should not live long and prosper.

—We will commence in a week or two a very interesting story, to the readers of our county especially, entitled the "History of Pocahontas County for five years," commencing in 1822.

—Chas. Madison, had the misfortune to get his leg broken at Mr. E. A. Smith's Camp below town last Saturday. He was helping to saw a tree down, when it twisted around catching his leg, and breaking it just below the knee.

—Capt. Jack Apperson, of Marlinton and others, arrested Dick Rankin, week before last in Randolph county. Rankin was indicted at our last court for the murder of Wm. Underwood at Buckeye a few weeks ago. He proved an alibi, as we understand by the Co's books that he was working for, and was released.

—The Kingwood Argus tells a sad tale of a couple of young people of Preston county named Tom Clarkson and Ada McCabe. They skipped to Oakland, were married, and were on their way back to Rowlesburg where they intended to reside. At Terra Alta the bride eloped with a handsomer man and the desolate groom returned home alone, and nurses a bursted heart.

—A party of ladies, and ourself with the crowd, took a trip on Mr. E. A. Smith's R. R. to his camp last Saturday, and were shown a most enjoyable time, and an incident which we are pleased to note especially was the dinner set before us by Mr. Guay, the French cook. We have had dinner at least twice, at Mr. Guay's table and we hereby testify that we have never set down to one that would surpass it, and to only a few in our lifetime that would equal it. We are also pleased to say that Mr. Robt. Beals, the manager of the train is an obliging and courteous gentleman in every sense of the word.

—In our next issue we will give our readers the full return of the elections that took place Tuesday. Eleven States held elections on that day, in some of which the contest was warm, and both parties made a thorough canvass. In Ohio the contest was the warmest, where Governor Campbell fought almost single handed, and with every chance of winning. McKinley was backed by almost the entire republican party, with a speaker of National reputation in nearly every town in the state. In New York the gubernatorial contest was equally hot, where the democrats had a good show of electing their candidate, Hon. R. P. Flower. Massachusetts a republican state is claimed by the democrats, as is also Iowa and Pennsylvania. The People's party in Kansas and Nebraska made the result doubtful. In Maryland and Virginia the democrats had a sure thing.

—Bishop Peterkin, one of the ablest and most distinguished divines in the [illegible] will preach at this place [illegible]day night.

[illegible] Association.

The Pocahontas County Musical Association will convene at Frost, on Thursday, November the 12th at 7 o'clock p. m. Teachers leaders and friends of the Association please attend.

S. B. MOORE, President.

A Card of Thanks.

We desire through THE TIMES to return our heartfelt thanks to the people of Dunmore and surrounding neighborhood for the great effort put forth by them to save our property from the recent fire.

Respectfully

C. B. SWECKER and FAMILY.

Hillsboro Chips.

N. C. McNeil, of Huntersville spent a few days in town last week.

Mrs. L. Larue and Miss Cleek, of Bath, are visiting their sister Mrs. John Cleek.

Mr. Hively and family of Warm Springs, Va. were visiting at James Jordan's last week.

Mr. and Mrs. R. C. Shrader and two children, of Dilley's Mill. were visiting relatives and friends in the Levels last week.

Mrs. Dr. Ligon, of Clover Lick, spent a few days with her daughter Mrs. Dr. McClintic last week.

E. I. Holt has returned from Baltimore, where he has been buying his fall and winter goods.

Mrs. May Holt, of Marlinton is visiting her sister Mrs. E. I. Holt.

Mr. Hickman, of Highland Co., has enrolled as a pupil of the F. & M. Academy.

Mr. Wm. H. Overholt and son Edward left for a few days trip to Baltimore, last week.

Not long since Capt. A. M. Edgar had the misfortune to get about 250 or 300 bushels of wheat burned. The stacks caught fire from the engine.

Let us hear from other correspondents.

PHILLIS.

ESTRAY.

I have in my possession two estray yearling steers. One roan and one red. The owner can have same by paying for the keeping and this ad.

R. D. KIMEL,
Sunset, W. Va.

A Horrible Accident.

One day last week two sons of James White, who lives near Harman this county, were trying to remove an iron ram rod from a gun and when in the hands of the elder the gun was discharged, the rod passing through the body of the younger near the heart, killing him almost instantly.—Randolph Enterprise.

A Big Fire.

On last Saturday at Dunmore the store of R. L. Nottingham, Mr. C. B. Sweckers cabinet shop, and all of his tools, a quantity of lumber, furniture &c., were entirely consumed by fire. Mr. S's loss is about $1,000. We did not learn the loss of Mr. Nottingham but it was very heavy. No insurance. In such a case our citizens should respond with financial aid to help these gentleman on their feet again, for who knows when one of us will meet with the same accident, and no doubt those whom we have helped when in distress, will come to our aid in a like manner, with twice what we have given.

The new Company Hotel at Buchanan, Va., was destroyed by fire on Monday night last.—The fire was discovered at 11:30 p. m., and was of incendiary origin as no fire had been used in the building. The building contained 211 rooms and cost $125,000. A few weeks ago Buchanan lost the Franklin Brass Works by fire.

The striking miners of the Coal Creek district in Tennessee could not wait for the courts to decide their case, and so on the night of Oct. 25th they took the law into their own hands. They surrounded the stockades where the convicts were, burned them, and, giving the convicts citizen's clothes, set them free. The latter, of course, were nothing loth to take advantage of the opportunity to regain their liberty, and now hundreds of these criminals are loose upon the community.

FROM DEVIL'S GULCH.

About 4 o'clock this morning Rushbank, a Greek, living at 104 East Polk street, was aroused by a strange noise, and, thinking that burglars were in the house, he rushed over to the Central station and gave the alarm. Lieut. Shippen detailed a couple of officers to investigate the case. Upon arriving at the house they found a man divested of all his clothing calmly seated before the stove warming himself. His trowsers had been neatly folded and placed on a chair, and his shoes were carefully placed in the hallway. There was no signs of the rest of his clothing. The man looked up in surprise when the officers entered and one of them asked where he came from.

"From Rough creek," was the answer.

"Where's that?"

"Near Devil's gulch," replied the stranger.

"Where do you think you are?"

"Beverly, W. Va. Everybody knows W. L. Joyce."

It was seen that the man was very drunk, but a bucket of cold water had the effect of sobering him up sufficiently to enable him to give a more lucid account of himself. He said that he was stopping at the Atlantic hotel, corner of Sherman and Van Buren streets, and was on his way east from Aspen, Col. He had started out to see Chicago after dark, and becoming weary started for his hotel. He got as far as the doorway, where he sat down proceeded to disrobe, placing his hat and coat on the side walk. The weather being a trifle cold he braced up and made more effort to go in, but made a mistake and got into Banks' house instead.—Chicago Mail.

Pocahontas Times.

JOHN E. CAMPBELL,

ADVERTISING RATES.

	1 m.	3 m.	6 m.	1 yr.
One inch	$ 1 00	$ 2 00	$ 2 00	$ 5 00
Three in.	2 00	4 00	6 00	10 00
Qr. column	3 00	6 00	10 00	17 00
Half col'n	6 00	12 00	20 00	30 00
One col'n	10 00	20 00	30 00	50 00

Reading notices, not exceeding five lines, twenty-five cents for each insertion, and five cents a line for each additional line.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION.

One copy, 1 yr., $1.00 in advance: after 6 months, $1.25; after 12 months, $1.50

These terms will be strictly complied with.

Entered at the Post-office at Huntersville, W. Va., as second class matter.

Huntersville, W. Va.

November 5, 1891.

AT A COUNTY COURT HELD FOR the County of Pocahontas, at the Court house thereof on the 6th day of October, 1891.

This day Matt Wallace and 696 other citizens of said County, presented their nine several petitions in writing, with the affidavits made by Uriah Bird, John Ligon, H. N. Hannah, William Vandervort, Wm. C. Mann, B. M Yeager, Henry A. Yeager and Uriah Bird and Ed. I. Holt, credible citizens of this County before L. M. McClintic, George P. Moore, A. C. L. Gatewood and B. C. Hill, notaries public of this County, and duly certified by them that said petitioners, are, as such affiants verily believe, legal voters of this County, which said petitions together with said affidavits and certificates thereof are now here filed at this regular session of this Court, and the said petitions being in the same language and figures are as follows:

"To the County Court of Pocahontas County, West Virginia: your petitioners, whose names are hereto signed, respectfully represent unto your Honorable body, that they are legal voters of Pocahontas county, in said state of West Virginia, and that they desire the re-location and removal of the county seat of said county from the town of Huntersville to a point on the east bank of the Greenbrier river in said county, known as and commonly called Marlin's Bottom, on the lands formerly owned by Susan E. and Andrew B. McGlaughlin, which were conveyed by them and wife to John T. McGraw, by deed dated on the 12th day of February, 1891 and is now of record in the clerk's office of the county court of said county of Pocahontas in Deed Book 21, page 501 and 507. The specific place and location on said lands, to which your petitioners ask the re-location of said county seat, is indicated as Courthouse Square on a survey and plat of said Marlin's Bottom lands, now being made by Oscar A. Veney, Civil Engineer, a copy of which plat and survey will be filed in the office of the clerk of the county court of said county of Pocahontas, for public inspection, on, or before the day of the presentation of this petition.

Your petitioners therefore pray, that a vote may be taken upon the question of such re-location, at and to the place above indicated, at a special election to be held in the said county on such a day as your Honorable body may indicate, not less than sixty days, nor more than four months from the date of entering an order to this effect. And your petititioners will ever pray &c."

And it appearing to the court, from an inspection of the said petitions that they are signed by an aggregate of six hundred and ninety seven legal voters and citizens of this county, and that said petitioners ask the removal and relocation of the said county seat at and to the same place, and that said six hundred and ninety-seven legal voters and citizens of this county constitute more than two-fifths of all the legal voters of this county, which is estimated by allowing one vote for every six persons in this county as shown by the last census preceding the entry of this order. And there being no general election held in this county in and during the present year, said petitioners ask that a special election be ordered, had, and held on the question of the removal and re-location of said county seat to the place referred to in said petition, and hereinafter specially described, said election to be held according to the provisions of chapter 39 of the Code of West Virginia, as amended and re-enacted by chapter 27 of the acts of the legislature of West Virginia, entitled, "An Act to amend and re-enact Section 13 of Chapter 39 of the Code of West Virginia," passed on the 27th day of February, 1887.

And the said Matt Wallace, one of said petitioners, now in open court, for himself and all other voters signing said petition, tenders his bond in the penal sum of five thousand dollars, with Jno T. McGraw, J. W. Marshall and Levi Gay as his sureties, conditioned according to law, which said bond having been acknowledged by the signers thereto before the court the same is accepted and approved as sufficient.

And it appearing to the court, that the petitioners in said petition, respectfully ask and desire that the county seat of this county be removed from Huntersville in said county, and be relocated and placed at a point on the east bank of the Greenbrier river in this [illegible]

Sale of Real E[state]

Notice is hereby given that the f[ollowing] ... the County of Pocahontas, which ... [tax]es for the years 1889 and 1890, w[ill be sold by the she]riff, at public auction at the front ... between the hours of ten in the m[orning] ...

on the 14th day ...

... being the second Monday in th[e] ... [ther]eof as shall be necessary, will be ... [sati]sfy the amount due thereon as se[t] ...

NAME OF PERSON CHARGED WITH TAXES.	QUANTITY OF

GREEN BANK DISTRICT. | Ac[res]

[illegible] Lewis C.

[McG]laughlin spring-house and the [sto]ne stone chimney at the south end of [th]e S. E. McGlaughlin house, and situated at five hundren and eleven and one-half feet from the centre of the west end of said spring-house, and at one thousand and fifty-five feet from the center of said chimney, and at the south corner at the intersection of Judge street and Tenth avenue, as shown on the said Map of Marlinton hereto attached: thence with the south-east side of said avenue south forty degrees and forty-five minutes west two hundred and ninety feet to another locust post driven firmly into the ground at the east corner, at the intersection of Jury street and Tenth avenue; thence with the north-east side of Jury street, south forty-nine degrees and fifteen minutes east two hundred and sixty feet to another locust post driven firmly into the ground at the north corner, at the intersection of Jury street and and eleventh avenue: thence with the north-west side of Eleventh avenue north forty degrees and forty-five minutes east two hundred and ninety feet to another locust post driven firmly into the ground at the west corner, at the intersection of Eleventh avenue and Judge street: thence with the south-west side of Judge street north forty-nine degrees and fifteen minutes west two hundred and sixty feet to the place of beginning."

And it further appearing to the court that the lot, tract or parcel of ground hereinbefore referred to, is now owned by the Pocahontas Development Company, a corporation created by and operating under the laws of this state, the same having been conveyed to it by John T. McGraw and Jacob W. Marshall by their deed dated the 2 th day of September, 1891, and now of record in the clerk's office of this court in Deed Book No 22, page 204: and that said company proposes to donate said lands to this county free and relieved from all liens, costs and charges thereon provided and upon this condition however that said county seat be removed and that the public buildings be located and built thereon under the vote to be taken under this order, and that said company by John T. McGraw, its president, and Geo. M Whitescarver, its manager and secretary, now here, in open court, tenders, in escrow, a deed for said lot, piece or parcel of land conveying the same to The County court of Pocahontas County, for court house and county purposes, with covenants of general warranty, which deed, they ask, may be taken and held by the clerk of this court as an escrow to await the result of the election provided for in this order. If said election be favorable to the prayer of said petitioners and if said county seat be removed and the public buildings be located on said land, then said conveyance is to be absolute, otherwise said deed is to be returned to the said company by the clerk of this court: and the title to the land conveyed is not to be deemed as held to have passed out of the said company and corporation, and said corporation in the event said removal and re-location are not made, is to be held relieved from any claim or title of the court or of this county to the land therein described.

And it appearing further by the proposition of said Pocahontas Development Company, by its president and manager, now here in open court made by them, that said company agrees, promises and binds itself to pay the sum of five thousand dollars in money to aid in defraying the cost and expense of a new court house and jail for said county, in the event, contingency, and upon the sole condition and consideration that the said county seat be removed to and located at the place above indicated, and its public buildings located thereon, at the said new town called Marlinton, and said company now tenders its bond for said sum of five thousand dollars, executed under the seal of said company with Geo. M. Whitescarver, John T. McGraw, J. W. Marshall, B. M. Yeager, Matt [illegible] and Levi Gay, as sureties thereto, conditioned for the true and faithful payment of the said sum of five thousand dollars under the conditions therein stated, which bond being inspected by the court, and the sureties therein named being sufficient, is approved and accepted, upon the terms and conditions upon which the same is tendered.

On consideration whereof, it is ordered, That a special election be held in this county on the

SECOND TUESDAY IN DECEMBER, 1891, to-wit, on the

8TH DAY OF DECEMBER, 1891.

[a]t the several legal voting places in [t]his county, as heretofore fixed and established by the former order of this [c]ourt, at said election a vote be taken [o]n the question of the relocation of the [c]ounty seat of Pocahontas county as [p]rayed for in said petitions. And the [c]lerk of this court is directed to make out immediately upon the adjournment of this court, and certify a copy of this order for each of the several voting places in this county as fixed, established, and existing by law, and to deliver them to the sheriff of this county who is ordered to post one copy of this order at each of the said voting places at least forty days before the said 8th day of December, 1891 and make return thereof according to law. And a copy of this order shall be published in The POCAHONTAS TIMES, a weekly newspaper published at Huntersville in this county, or in some other newspaper of general circulation in this county, at least once a week for four successive weeks prior to said special election herein ordered.

And the ballots used, given and voted at said election shall have written or printed thereon, "Re-location of County Seat" "For re-location at Marlinton." and "Against Relocation of County seat.

And the court doth appoint the following named persons, commissioners, to hold and conduct said election, for the respective voting places in this county, who, for their respective voting places, shall ascertain and certify the result of such election, as required by law, viz:

For Academy—W. W. Beard, John B. Kinnison and George S. McNeel.

For Split Rock—S. S. Varner, James Herold and W. P. Vandervort.

For Traveler's Repose—O. W. S. Gum, A. M. V. Arbogast, and Jacob L. Arbogast.

For Green Bank—Adam Arbogast, Jacob S. Wooddell and Charles A Lightner.

For Dunmore—Jacob K. Taylor, B. F. McElwee and George W. Arbogast.

For Frost—Andrew Herold, I. B. Moore and C. O. W. Sharp.

For Huntersville—Sheldon Moore, D. A. Fisher and Wm. L. Harper.

For Edray—A. T. Moore, Henry Barlow and Wm. M. Sharp.

For Buckeye—R. E. Overholt, H. H. McClintic and Wm. O. McNeel.

And the clerk of this court is directed to take and hold said deed upon the terms and conditions upon which it is tendered and said clerk is also directed to accept the bond of said Pocahontas Development Company, and to file the same in his office to await the further order of this court.

A Copy, Teste:

S. L. BROWN, Clerk.

In the Dark!

They who shut their eyes and ears to advice and wots not the errors of their ways are liable to step in at the wrong place and get "sunk. [illegible]

[illegible]	[illegible]
90	Alleghany Mtn	84
24	Huntersville	2 02
4	Waters Knapp's cr	64
48	E. Cochran's crk	2 27
419	Little Back Creek	3 39
3-15 p	Hills	4 83
48	Buckley Mt	67
600	Waters Do'th'rd's cr	4 73
15	Buckley Mtn.	58
100	E. Greenbrier Riv	2 90
900	Middle Mtn.	2 77
1200	Middle Mtn.	3 79
189	Marlin's Mtn	1 94
½	Brush Run	56
1½	Bruffey's creek
46	Bruffey's creek	1 64
43	same	1 61
87	Mill Run	1 24
304	Oldham Run	2 32
498	Cranberry	12 56
51	Greenbrier	2 86
38	E Droop Mountn.	95
2	Stamping c'k	99
125	Laurel creek	1 25
75	S. Br. Beaver Lick	1 45
138	Poplar Flats	2 22
138	Stamping creek	2 22
1 25 p	Hillsboro	82

[illegible] 53.69; County tax, $135.44; D[i]stri[ct] ...

... lots may be redeemed by the pay[ment] ... [sa]le, of the amount due thereon.

... [th] day of October, 1891.

J. C. ARBOGAST, Sheriff.

Liver Oil and HYPOPHOSPHITES of Lime and Soda

[illegible]

Scott's Emulsion ... CONSUMPTION, Scrofula, Bronchitis, Wasting Diseases, Chronic Coughs and Colds. [illegible]

Good Morning! You Are Hoarse!

Lightning Cough Drops are something new in the way of a throat and lung balsam, are safe, certain and prompt in their action, and are a sure cure for CROUP. PRICE, 25 and 50 CENTS A BOTTLE.

Lightning Vegetable Liver Pills are a sure cure for sick Headache, Biliousness, Costiveness, Piles and Inactivity of the Liver. 25 CENTS A BOX. [illegible]

Lightning Hot Drops A panacea for external and internal use. For Rheumatism, Neuralgia, [illegible] Sore Throat, Sprains, Bruises, Lameness, [illegible] A sure cure for Diarrhoea, Summer Complaint and Flux. 25 and 50 CENTS PER BOTTLE.

Keep them in the House, they will often Save Doctor Bills.

If you feel no relief after using two-thirds the contents of a bottle of these medicines return the remaining contents to the dealer from whom you bought it and he will refund the price paid for the entire bottle.

For Sale by all Druggists and Dealers in Medicine. Prepared by HERB MEDICINE CO., - Weston, W. Va.

—If you want Letter and Note heads, neatly printed and put up in tablet form, cheaper than you can get them anywhere else, call at THE TIMES office. We also do all kinds of nice job printing, and have on hands a nice line of Stationary, business cards, &c. &c.

The Most Successful Remedy ever discovered, as it is certain in its effects and does not blister. Read proof below:

Kendall's Spavin Cure.

SHERWOOD, Md., May 2, '88.

DR. B. J. KENDALL CO.: Gents—About three years ago I wrote to you about a horse I owned who had a Spavin. I used six bottles of your Kendall's Spavin Cure, and it made a complete Cure. I have recommended it to others who have used it [illegible]

MRS. ANNIE E. [illegible]

Kendall's Spavin Cure.

LIBERTY, Warren Co., Va., June [illegible]

DR. B. J. KENDALL CO.: Dear Sirs—I must say that I once tried a bottle of your Kendall's Spavin Cure on a three-year-old colt, and it entirely removed a bone spavin [illegible] I did not use all the bottle in removing it. The horse is six or seven years old, very sound, and has done hard work all of the time.

Respectfully yours, E. KINGSTON SALISBURY.

Kendall's Spavin Cure.

COLUMBIA, Ala., July 24, 1888.

DR. B. J. KENDALL CO.: Gents—I have effectually removed one case of bone spavin with your Kendall's Spavin Cure. I cheerfully recommend it to all.

Respectfully, R. C. [illegible]

Price $1 per bottle, or six bottles for $5. All druggists have it or can get it for you, or it will be sent to any address on receipt of price by the proprietors.

DR. B. J. KENDALL CO., Enosburgh Falls, Vermont.

CONSUMPTION CURED.

An old physician, retired from practice, having had placed in his hands by an East India missionary the formula of a simple vegetable remedy for the speedy and permanent cure of Consumption, Bronchitis, Catarrh, Asthma and all throat and Lung Affections, also a positive and radical cure for Nervous Debility and all Nervous Complaints, after having tested its wonderful curative powers in thousands of cases, has felt it his duty to make it known to his suffering fellows. Actuated by this motive and a desire to relieve human suffering, I will send free of charge, to all who desire it, this recipe, in German, French or English, with full directions for preparing and using. Sent by mail by addressing with stamp, naming this paper. W. A. NOYES, 820 Powers' Block, Rochester, N. Y.

BETTON'S PILE SALVE

A POSITIVE CURE FOR PILES. 50c. PER BOX.

IN USE OVER 40 YEARS. SIMPLE. EFFECTIVE. WONDERFUL. Highest TESTIMONIALS. At Druggists or Mailed on Receipt of Price. WINKELMANN & BROWN Drug Co. Baltimore, Md.

KOPFALINE FOR HEADACHE [illegible]

$3000 A YEAR! [illegible]

CARTER'S LITTLE LIVER PILLS.

CURE

Sick Headache and relieve all the troubles incident to a bilious state of the system, such as Dizziness, Nausea, Drowsiness, Distress after eating, Pain in the Side, &c. While their most remarkable success has been shown in curing

SICK

Headache, yet Carter's Little Liver Pills are equally valuable in Constipation, curing and preventing this annoying complaint, while they also correct all disorders of the stomach, stimulate the liver and regulate the bowels. Even if they only cured

HEAD

Ache they would be almost priceless to those who suffer from this distressing complaint; but fortunately their goodness does not end here, and those who once try them will find these little pills valuable in so many ways that they will not be willing to do without them. But after all sick head

ACHE

Is the bane of so many lives that here is where we make our great boast. Our pills cure it while others do not.

Carter's Little Liver Pills are very small and very easy to take. One or two pills makes a dose. They are strictly vegetable and do not gripe or purge, but by their gentle action please all who use them. In vials at 25 cents; five for $1. Sold by druggists everywhere, or sent by mail.

CARTER MEDICINE CO., New York.

SMALL PILL. SMALL DOSE. SMALL PRICE

NEW HOME SEWING MACHINE CO. ORANGE, MASS. 28 UNION SQUARE, N.Y. [illegible] FOR SALE BY

[illegible]

H. W. ALLEGER, Washington, N. J.

[illegible]

CENTRAL W. VA. MARBLE WORKS

Manufacturers of

HEADSTONES AND ALL KINDS OF MONUMENTAL WORK. Dealers in ALL KINDS OF WIRE FENCING.

Lewisburg, W. Va.

E. H. MOORE, Agent, ACADEMY, W. Va.

THE POLICE GAZETTE

Is the only illustrated paper in the world containing all the latest sensational and sporting news. No Saloon Keeper, Barber or Club Room can afford to be without it. It always makes friends wherever it goes.

Mailed to any address in the United States, securely wrapped, 13 weeks for $1.00.

Send Five Cents for sample copy.

RICHARD K. FOX, Franklin Square, New York

POCAHONTAS TIMES.

Vol. 9. JOHN E. CAMPBELL, EDITOR AND PROPRIETOR. Huntersville, West Virginia, Thursday, November 12, 1891. Terms of Subscription. $1.00 PER YEAR. IN ADVANCE. No. 16

Official Directory of Pocahontas County

Judge of Circuit Court, A. N. Campbell.
Prosecuting Attorney, L. M. McClintic.
Sheriff, J. C. Arbogast.
Deputy Sheriff, Geo. W. Callison.
Cl'k Co. Court, S. L. Brown.
Cl'k Cir. Court, J. H. Patterson.
Assessor, C. O. Arbogast.
Com'rs Co. Ct. C E. Beard, S B. Hannah, G. M. Kee.
Co. Surveyor, Geo. Baxter

THE COURTS.

Circuit Court convenes on the first Tuesday in April, 3rd Tuesday in June and 3rd Tuesday in October.

County Court convenes on the 1st Tuesday in January, March, October and second Tuesday in July. July is levy term.

HISTORY OF POCAHONTAS.

Five Years History of Pocahontas County, as Recorded in the Order Book of the County Court.

The first County Court for Pocahontas was held on the 5th and 6th of March 1822 (69 years ago) by William Poage, James Tallman, Geo. Poage, Benjamin Tallman, John Baxter and George Burner, gentleman justices. Cyrus Cary and Johnson Reynolds qualified as attorneys to practice in the Court, and Mr. Reynolds was appointed attorney for the commonwealth. John Jordan qualified as sheriff and his son Jonathan as deputy. Josiah Beard was appointed Clerk, Robert Gay, commissioner of the Revenue, John Baxter, Colonel, Benjamin Tallman, Lieutenant Colonel and William Blair Major of the Militia; Boon Tallman, Captain of a company of cavalry, Andrew G. Mathews first and Benjamin Wallace second Lieutenant of said company. Wm. Arbogast, Henry Herold, Isaac Moore and Milburn Hughes were recomended to the Govenor to be appointed Captains of the Militia; Robt. Warwick, Wm. Moore, Wm Young and James Rhea as Lieutenants; Jacob Slaven, James Wanless, Sam'l Young and Jas Callison as Ensigns and Abraham McNeel as Coroner. Jacob W. Mathews, Thos. Hill, Jno. Slaven, Jas. Callison, Sr., Wm. Edmiston, Jno. Gililand, Wm. Cackley, Sam'l Commings, Jnô. Bradshaw, Patrick Bruffey, Jas. Waugh and Jas. Sharp were recomended to the Govenor as justices of the peace, and their appointments as such desired.

At the May term (7th of May) a grand jury was sworn in and indictments were found against David H. Smith for assault and battery, and against Josiah Beard for obstructing public road. Jno. Burner and Geo. Mays qualified to practice law in the Court, and Sampson L. Mathews qualified as surveyor.

Richard Hill, Geo. Poage, Jno. Bradshaw, Jas Tallman and Jno. Slaven, appointed overseers of the poor. Abraham McNeel and Robt. Rhea recomended to the Governor to be appointed sheriff (the first named was always appointed) David H. Smith bound to keep the peace for one year, in the penalty of $100. Henry Herold appointed constable, and a number of orders made appointing Com'rs to lay off and mark out public roads &c.

At the May term, F. W. Perkins was granted leave to keep an ordinary, Jno. Bradshaw private entertainment in Huntersville and Sam'l Commings near the town.

The Court fixed the rates to be charged by the ordinary as follows:

For diet 25 cts., lodging 8 cts., grain per gallon 12½ cts., horse 12 hours at hay 12½ cts., whiskey per gill 6¼ cents, brandy 6¼ jamaca spirits 12½, French brandy 12½ and rum 10 cents per gill. ☞ Oh! for the good times of long ago. Some of my old friends are singing while I write.

Thos. Hill, Sam'l M. Gay, Pat. Bruffey, Jas. Tallman and Jno. Gilliland were appointed school com'rs.

And it was ordered that the Clerk should keep his office at the house of John Bradshaw.

At the June term, Noah Legrand and Thos. B. Hamilton and Adam See were admitted to practice in the Court. Jas. Alderson to be qualified as deputy Clerk and an order for Johnson Reynolds to be summoned to the August Court to show cause why he should not be removed from the office of attorney for the Commonwealth.

The county levey was laid allowing the attorney for the commonwealth $50, clerk $50 and Sheriff $20 per year.

The whole levy for the year being $950.47, $655.50 of which was to be applied toward building court house, $30 to John Nickles for removing and building temporary court house $72 for 18 wolf scalps at $4 each, and the sheriff ordered to collect from 437 tithables $2.17½ cts. each to pay the levies so made.

A deed admitted to record from John Bradshaw at the July Court 1822 to the county, conveying the land to the county upon which the Court house and jail were erected.

Ladivius Robins a Presbyterian Minisetr authorized to celebrate the rites of matrimony, (as the good old coons of that day were determined to increase the Pocahantas multiplication table) and Thos. Bradshaw to keep private entertainment.

AT AUGUST COURT.

The only indictment found was against Josiah Beard, for obstructing the public road. Wm. Smith and Pere B. Wethered were permitted to qualify and practice as attorneys. Isaac Sanders bound over to keep the peace upon complaint of Josiah Beverage. Com'rs appointed to view and mark out the way for a road from Randolph line to Valley Mt., and another to mark out the way for road from the Randolph line to the head of Greenbrier settlement. David Smith fined $7.50 for assault and battery by the verdict of a jury.

SEPTEMBER COURT 1822.

A number of orders made appointing surveyors of road. An order made declaring Josiah Beard incompetant to act as clerk of the court, and that the same be certified to the general court, that a rule may be taken and he removed from office, with the protest of Jas. Tallman, Wm. Poage, Geo. Poage and Ben. Tallman against the order so mane, and Robt Gay appointed com'r of the Revenue for 1823.

OCTOBER TERM 1822.

All orders that were made in relation to roads. It seems that at that time every road dwindled into a squirrel path, ran up a tree and was lost.

NOVEMBER TERM, 1822.

John Hutchison permitted to practice law in the court.

Nicholas Simmons appointed Lieutenant in Captain Herold's company 127 Reg. 8 of Va., Peter Herald ensign in said Co., and Levi Moore and other Com'r appointed to enter into a contract with Peter McClair for building the court house.

Wm. Young appointed Captain of Militia. Thos. Cochran for Lieutenant and David Hanna ensign, Wm. Callison Lieutenant and Benj. Wallace ensign in another company.

MAY COURT, 1823.

John Jordan qualified as Sheriff, and license to Peter McClair to keep an ordinary. John Bradshaw and Francis W. Perkins to keep public entertainment.

JUNE COURT.

Sheriff returned delinquent list of taxes amounting to $34.20.

County levy laid for $1,433.12, $1,114.83 of which was for public buildings. $80 for 20 wolf scalps. $35 to sheriff and only $15 to clerk and same to Reynolds attorney for the Commonwealth. Levied on 478 titables at $3.04 each. Sam'l Hogsett appointed Coroner, and Wm Poage recommended for the office of Sheriff. Fixed the amount to be paid for keeping property levied upon —horse for 24 hours 6¼ cents, cow 3cts., sheep and hogs 1 cent each, gallons of grain 12½ cents.

JULY TERM.

Geo. May appointed attorney for the Commonwealth in the place of John Reynolds and to pay him the $10 heretofore paid Reynolds. Sam'l M. Gay appointed school com'r. Grand jury presented Francis W. Perkins.—Jas. Stratton indicted for assault and battery. Order increasing the size of the court house then building, from the 19 to 23 ft. and the jail from 15 to 19 feet.

SEPTEMBER TERM.

Wm. Cackley granted ordinary license and Lanty Lockridge private entertainment.—Robt Gay appointed com'r Revenue for 1824.

OCT. TERM.

Wm Hill indicted for assault and battery. Robert Corley recommended for Capt. of Militia. Delinquent list returned by sheriff amounting to $17.67.

MARCH TERM, 1844.

Ladwell Richard permitted to qualify as a lawyer and practice in the court. A deed of emancipation from John McNeel of his negro man Robt. Trout. Jonathan Jordan qualified as deputy of W Poage Sheriff. James Cooper appointed constable and Moses McClintic and Geo. H. Fry not permitteded to qualify as deputies of Poage, and Jas. Tallman, Geo. Poage, Ben Tallman, J. W. Mathews and Jacob Lightner entered their protest against the action of the court is refusing to permit them to qualify as deputies of Poage.

MAY COURT 1824.

W. H. Terrill permitted to qualify and practice in the court. Grand jury found four indictments. Order quashing warrant committing Nancy Hughes, Wm. Hughes and Geo. Hughes to jail, and then bound over to keep the peace for one year, and also warrant committing Sam'l McCoy quashed John Bradshaw licensed to keep an ordinary, and so was Wm. Cackley. Western Mills having treated a grand juror with contempt was imprisioned during the sitting of the court. Jas. Cochran, charged with felony acquitted.

(Continued next week.)

HOW A COWARD FEELS.

It is a humiliating confession to make, but, physically speaking, I am an arrant coward! And yet, so far as formation of body goes, I ought not to fear to cope with any ordinary being of danger.

I am young, tall, have a chest measurement of about thirty-nine inches, and am, I believe, thoroughly muscular.

How I have tried to overcome this feeling of cowardice, but in vain! At the first sign of my being involved in danger I turn deadly pale, my heart beats wildly, and I am seized with such a fit of trembling that my legs almost give way beneath me. I am almost rendered nearly speechless for my voice quavers to such an extent that I can scarcely articulate words.

And my friends actually want me to join the army!

"No," said I to myself, with a sickly smile. "'The pen is mightier than the sword,' so I'll stick to the pen."

What a noble soldier I should have made! I am sure that, in the event of being "ordered to the front," I should have deserted at the first opportunity.—"A Coward" in London Tit Bits.

A SINGULAR SALE.

When Shylock bargained for a "pound of flesh," it was not recorded what he intended to do with it. But a sale of a very similar commodity recently took place for humanitarian reasons. A young widow, nurse in a hospital for children in San Francisco, recently sold forty five square inches of her skin for one hundred dollars. A strip of skin nine by five inches was cut from her body by surgeons and was grafted on to the leg of a railway mail clerk who was injured in an accident. His right leg was badly burned and would not heal, and as a last resort skin grafting was proposed. A fellow-clerk of the sufferer first offered to supply the skin, but when he learned how much was needed he backed out. The nurse, having three children and needing money, offered to furnish the necessary amount of skin. She submitted bravely to the opperation, which was performed successfully, and was paid one hundred dollars for her sacrifice. Victor Hugo in Les Miserables appeals touchingly to our sympathies with the relation of poor Fantine who sold all her belongs, her beautiful hair, and finally her pearly teeth, which she had pulled, to support her unfortuneate little one, but this heorine in real life, who sells her living skin for her children's sake, merits a respectful admiration as well as deep sympathy.

Merchant—I wish to transport some goods to Jinksville and—

Railroad Official (irascibly)—Well why in thunder don't you go to the freight department?

Merchant—It's a large quantity of goods, and I wish to inquire about rates.

Official—Go to the freight department, I say. Whatever the rates are you'll pay 'em or keep your goods at home. No reductions to you or any one else. Hear that? Clear out now.

Merchant—The Jinksville I mean is not in this state, but the Jinksville over the line. There is a rival road running there, you know and I can easily——

Official—Sit down, my dear sir, sit down and let's talk it over. James, bring the gentleman a cigar. Henry, bring the gentleman a glass of champagne, George, tell the president one of our most valued patrons is here.

THREE OF A KIND.

Horrace Greely once refused an increase of salary upon the ground that he did not think his paper could not afford to pay it.

Mr. Bliss, president of the Boston and Albany Railroad, has just declined an increase of his salary from $12,000 to $20,000 with the singular explanation that "I do not believe my services are worth any more than I am now receiving."

Mr. Powderley succeeded lately, with difficulty, in persuading the Knights of Labor to reduce his salary from $5,000 to $3,500.

There are a great many peculiar men in this world.

Wayfarer—What are you doing with that long ladder, Rastus?

Rastus—Well, boss, day done tell me ebryt'ing gwine up sence dis Merkinlas bill done pass, an' of dat's de case wid ev'ry t'ing I jus' hatter have some instrument er dis sort fer perhaps [illegible] reach.

Winkle—Miss Teaser is taking a course in wood-carving.

Sodd—what is her idea?

Winkle—I understand that she intends opening a boarding house.

Pocahontas Times.

JOHN E. CAMPBELL,
EDITOR AND PROPRIETOR.

Huntersville, W. Va.

November 5, 1891.

Citizens of Pocahontas Co.

We are authorized to say that the people of this county, who oppose additional taxation that may be avoided, and consequently oppose moving the Court House from its present location to Marlinton, think that the voters should hear the matters involved publicly discussed before the day of voting. Those opposed to the movement have selected Mr. C. F. Moore as an exponent of their views and he will address the people of the county at the following times and places:

Lobelia, school house Friday Nov. 27th, 1 p. m.; Hillsboro, Saturday, Nov. 28th, 2 p. m.; Edray, Tuesday, Dec. 1st 1 p. m.; Frost, Wednesday, Dec. 2nd, 1 p. m.; Dunmore, Thursday, Dec. 3rd, 2 p. m.; Travelers Repose, Friday, Dec. 4th, 1 p. m.; Green Bank, Saturday, Dec. 5th, 1 p. m.; Huntersville, Monday, Dec. 7th, 2 p. m.

Any gentleman who desires to divide time with Mr. Moore at any of these places is cordially invited to do so. The voters are the parties interested and should not miss these discussions.

THE ELECTION.

Major McKinley Defeats Govenor Campbell in Ohio by 20,000 Votes.

Elections were held in 13 states.

In Iowa, Massachusetts, Maryland, New Yore and Ohio Govenors were elected. The Democrats elected four out of the five.

Ohio gave McKinley, republican for Govenor, 20,000 plurality. The Republicans claim from 40 to 50 on joint ballot in the Legislature.

Maryland elects a democratic Govenor by 20,000 plurality. The Legislature Democratic.

New York 40,000 for Democratic Govenor, and the Legislature about evenly divided.

Massachusetts and Iowa elected Democratic Govenors.

Pennsylvania goes republican by 40,000.

Virginia is all Democratic.

Kansas and Nebraska make small republican gains.

New Jersey democratic.

Illinois is still republican.

California is about evenly divided with a small republican majority.

Sale of Real Estate for Taxes.

Notice is hereby given that the following described tracts or lots of land, in the County of Pocahontas, which are delinquent for the non-payment of taxes for the years 1889 and 1890, will be offered for sale by the undersigned sheriff, at public auction at the front door of the Court House of said County, between the hours of ten in the morning and four in the afternoon

on the 14th day of December, 1891,

that being the second Monday in the month. Each tract or lot, or so much thereof as shall be necessary, will be sold for so much cash, as is sufficient to satisfy the amount due thereon as set forth in the following table:

NAME OF PERSON CHARGED WITH TAXES.	QUANTITY OF LAND.	LOCAL DESCRIPTION.	Total amount of taxes, interest, cost of pub. and com., being am't necess'ry to red'm before sale	Total am't of taxes interest cost of pub. commission and fee for receipt.
GREEN BANK DISTRICT.	Acres.
Conrad Lewis C.	600	Hd w'trs Grenb'r rv.	4 49	4 74
Camden G. D. & Crouches heirs	1300	" Greenbrier rv.	6 13	6 38
Campbell J. B. Est.	60	West " "	1 34	1 59
Campbell Sam'l B.	271	Greenbrier rv.	38 14	38 38
Cunningham W. A.	71	" "	1 52	1 77
Davis Jas. O. & Isaac N.	262	Hd. Greenbrier rv.	3 30	3 55
same	150	same	2 21	2 36
Heavenor's Jacob Est.	20	E. Branch Deer cr.	2 01	2 26
Hutton Alfred	298	½ of 596 Greebrier rv	4 64	4 89
Hickman Mary A.	1	In Green Bank	12 31	12 56
Kimble Jason & J. F. Ault.	140	Hd. Greenbrier rv.	2 00	2 25
Morrow Wm. N.	904	E. Branch Gr. rv.	10 24	10 49
same	915	same	10 42	10 67
McLaughlin Dan Est.	45	Deer creek	1 09	1 34
Seaton Mary A. wife of Jno.	391	Brush Run	3 34	3 59
Sharp John Sr. Est.	2308	Alleghany Mt	16 49	16 74
Stevens Geo O.	904	E. Branch Greb'r rv.	9 55	9 80
same	915	same	9 69	9 94
Warmsley Jno. H.	393	Back Alleghany	8 41	8 66
Wilfong Michael	337	Alleghany Mt	9 84	10 09
EDRAY DISTRICT.
Armstrong Jno. H.	48½	Swago	2 65	2 90
Adkinson Abel Est.	13-53 p	same	90	15
Armstrong B. F.	51½	same	1 94	2 19
Auldridge Wm. & G. W. Hill's Est.	22¼	M. Lick	1 21	1 46
Cameron Geo. H.	297	Dry Branch	4 38	4 63
Dilley Wm.	100	W. Gr. river	9 40	9 65
Friel Israel	68	Greenbrier river	1 15	1 40
Hannah David Est.	299	W. Ganly Mt.	2 44	2 69
Hogsett Sam'l Est	88¾	Old Field Fk.	14 03	14 28
same	138	same	8 64	8 89
Jackson Wm	100	Slaty Fork	5 59	5 84
Kee S. R	23¾	Swago Creek	3 49	3 74
McDowell, Martin & Jno. col.	121	Adj. John Gay	2 02	2 27
Moore Isaac B	1-72 p	Waters Elk Riv.	79	1 04
McDonald Geo. W	304	Thorney Flat	19 76	20 01
same	1633	Wat. Big Spring	103 94	104 19
same	167	same	2 63	2 88
Porter W. A. & Wm	285	Hd. Laurel Run	4 10	4 36
Skyles Jannie B.	1	Marlin's Bottom	11 27	11 52
Wheeler Robt. (col)	43	Adj. Auldrige	73	98
Warwick Jno. W. & E. M. Hills h'rs	361	Clover Crk	5 08	5 33
same	20	W. Greenbrier rv	73	98
same	265	same	3 89	4 14
Warwick Jno. W	510	Greenbrier River	2 15	2 40
HUNTERSVILLE DISTRICT
Courtney Geo W Est	111	Buckley Mtn.	87	1 12
Cobb Amanda	100	same	84	1 09
Craig G. E. Est.	2¼	Adj. Huntersville	4 40	4 65
Campbell William	90	Alleghany Mtn.	84	1 07
Green Sarah	Lot 24	Huntersville	2 02	2 27
Harris Randolph	4	Waters Knapp's cr	64	89
Holcomb Joseph	48	E. Cochran's crk	2 27	2 53
Hauck George F. M.	410	Little Back Creek	3 39	3 64
King Chas	29 15 p	Hills	4 83	5 08
Rose Andrew M. & wife	48	Buckley Mt.	67	92
Seebert Jos. Est. & Herald	600	Waters Do'th'rd's cr	4 73	4 98
Shafer R. P. G.	15	Buckley Mtn.	58	83
Tounsend W. F.	100	E. Greenbrier Riv	2 90	3 15
White Henry & Jos. Seeberts h'rs	800	Middle Mtn.	2 77	3 03
same	1200	Middle Mtn.	3 79	4 04
Young Chas.	189	Marlin's Mtn	1 94	2 19
LITTLE LEVELS.
Anderson Morgan	½ 1½	Brush Run Bruffey's creek	56	81
same	46	Bruffey's creek	1 64	1 89
Bruffey Mary J	43	same	1 61	1 86
same	87	Mill Run	1 24	1 49
Dean J. P.	304	Oldham Run	2 32	2 57
Kinnison Rachel	498	Cranberry	12 56	12 81
McNeel Rachael C. H'rs	51	Greenbrier	2 86	3 11
same	38	E Droop Mountn.	95	1 20
McNeel Rachael C. Est. and Jos. Beard	2	Stamping c'k	99	1 24
Pennel Joseph	125	Laurel creek	1 25	1 50
Rodgers Geo. M	75	S. Br. Beaver Lick	1 45	1 70
Rider George B	138	Poplar Flats	2 22	2 52
Rider A. T. J. & Laura J.	138	Stamping creek	2 22	2 52
Smith Erona E.	1 25 p	Hillsboro	82	1 07
Sidenstricker Margaret Est.

Recapitulation—State tax, $133.69; County tax, $133.44; District tax, $154.96. Total $422.09.

Any of the aforesaid tracts or lots may be redeemed by the payment to the undersigned Sheriff, before sale, of the amount due thereon.

Given under my hand this 27th day of October, 1891.

J. C. ARBOGAST, Sheriff, P. C.

—We hereby authorize all persons not to trespass by hunting or fishing upon our land.

ALLEN and JNO. C. GALFORD.
Green Bank, W. Va.

Subscribe for "THE TIMES."

HOME NEWS

—We had a fine rain Tuesday night, the first for several weeks.

—Messrs. Q. W. Poage and A. P. Gay, of Edray were in town to day.

—Mr. S. B. Hannah, of Green Bank, was in town Tuesday night.

—Alexander McChesney and Miss Malcinda Jordan, colored, of this place, were married to day.

—Rev. J. F. A. Lautenschlager will preach at Sunset, next Sunday at 3 o'clock.

—Bishop Peterkin, preached a very able sermon to a large audience, in the Presbyterian church Sunday night.

—Mr. E. D. McClintic, who has been visiting relatives in this County for several weeks, will start for his home in Seatle, Wash. next week.

—Misses Mollie and Gertie Smith and Jennie Bucher, of Dunmore, accompanied by Chas. E. Steinmeyer, Esq., called at our office one day last week.

Hillsboro Chips.

Fred Beard and N. C. McNeil, spent Sunday in town.

Rev. D. S. Sydenstricker, assisted by S. L. Wilson, are holding an interesting meeting at this place.

Mr. F. A. Renick, dehorned 290 cattle last week and will dehorn 108 more Tuesday.

Mrs. Preston Clark was called home by the serious illness of her father.

Mr. Tom Bartlett gave a cabbage pulling last Saturday night.

Norman Price, of Marlinton, enrolled as a pupil of the F. & M. Academy.

PHILLIS.

Dunmore Doings.

Rev. J. F. A. Lautenschlager will preach at Dunmore next Sunday morning at 10 o'clock.

John Hevener, Esq. and wife, have returned from a trip to Richmond, Va.

C. H. Hull and daughter are visiting here.

F. M. Dilley and brother have bought out R. L. Nottingham and will open up a store at Dilley's mill.

S. P. Sheets has moved his saw mill to Wise Herald's.

Capt. C. B. Swecker, is building a new shop, and will be in it in a week or two.

Mrs. A. B. Moore is on the sick list again.

William Taylor who has been in the far west for 2 years is home again.

T. S.

SUICIDE.

Mrs. Mary Wilson, widow of the late R. K. Wilson, a prominent farmer of Rockbridge county, Va., committed suicide at her residence in said county on Monday morning Nov. 2nd. No cause is assigned for the deed, but supposed to have been a fit of temporary insanity, as she had been complaining for a few days.

Mrs. Wilson was a daughter of John Varner, dec'd late of Split Rock, this county.

The news of the sad end of Mrs. Wilson has thrown a gloom over her friends in this County, by whom she was so much beloved.

Sheep for Sale.

I will offer for sale at public auction, on Friday Nov. 20th., at my place, 80 ewes 60 lambs and 30 wethers.

Terms made known on day of sale.

WM. H. BUZZARD.

NOTICE is hereby given that the line of road now controlled by Jno. Cleek in the Levels dist., will be let to contract at the January term of our County Court. The Court reserves the right to reject any and all bids. By order of the Court.

S. B. HANNAH, Pres.

Removal of County Seat.

CLOVER LICK, Nov. 5th, 1891—ED. TIMES: Considering the question of removal of the County seat to Marlinton, it is pertinent to ask

1st. Have we to build a new C. H. soon.

2nd. If so, should it be at Marlinton.

3rd. What the cost.

I think when we consider our present needs, and the development of which we seem to be on the eve, there can be but one answer to the question of building, and in favor of the site at Marlinton it can be said that it is nearer the present and prospective centre of the population, and is especially convenient to the two districts which pay tax (without individual distinction) on 125,000 dollars more property than the balance of the County, and in answer to E. W., I will say that it is the people of these two districts who are especially moving in this matter.

It will be remembered that several years ago a petition for removal was gotten up before there was any talk of R. R's., and would have been submitted but for a technical informality.

With regard to cost, I do not conceive there will be any great difference in the cost wherever built, and if it is conceded that we have to build soon, the money would have to be provided any way. But when we consider the offer of 5000 dollars the scales are at once turned in favor of Marlinton.

This County pays tax on 1,800,000 dollars, and with the new assessment it is expected that the wild lands, held especially by non residents (foreigners, if you will) will be increased in price. Making the aggregate property more, the excess falling on non-residents. It will be seen at once that a tax of about 70 cents on the hundred dollars will raise the amount specified by the commissioners, viz: 15,000 dollars, which the citizens will have to pay. And right here I will say that they can be prevented by legal means if thought best, from laying any greater tax. And this tax may not be all laid in any one year. So every voter can see at once, for how much he will be taxed to keep the county abreast of the progress that is going on around us.

E. W. reminds us to act with "sense and soberness," and straightway proceeds to appeal to passion and prejudice and bring matters which have no bearing on the question.

If to benefit ourselves we thereby benefit others (even "foreigners") what is it but prejudice would prevent. And in adding the cost of the bridge that was and the bridge that is, to our losses is he not begging the question, establishing a precedent for constructive damages that might return to plague. Are we to bind ourselves so to the acts or operations of the past as to be hindred in the race that is set before us, this would be to stop all progress.

It is not expected or desired that Huntersville should cease to exists, but that it should partake of the general prosperity, the bridge being of more importance than ever before.

The bridge cost about $3,000, the jail $4,000, the removal of which would cost say $1,000. This would leave $4,000 of the gift added to the $15,000 tax and ought to build a good C. H. besides, the C. H. and lot belongs to the County and not the heirs, and can be sold if desirable.

This is a dispassionate statement and is entitled to consideration and its defects made known. Brethren who should have the good of the whole County at heart should avoid in this discussion any personality or calling of names, but act conscientiously. Respectfully,

JOHN LOGAN.

WASHINGTON LETTER.

From our regular correspondent.

WASHINGTON, D. C., Nov. 6th—The jollification of jubilant democrats is giving this town almost as rosy a hue as it had a year ago, when the returns came in from the Congressional elections, and "Well, yes; three out of four will do very well," has become a sort of democratic countersign. It refers, of course, to the election of three democratic govenors out of the four states in which govenors were elected. Every train brings prominent democrats, and one and all they are of the same opinion,—that by this time next year a democratic President will have been elected. Representative Mills said: "In Massachucetts it was a square fight, a contest over a principle, and the doctrine of the democracy was endorsed by the people who believe that our party is the exponent of sound ideas and the correct theories of government. There is nothing in Ohio to cause discouragement, though I confess that I believed that Campbell would be re-elected. Still Ohio is a republican state. A democratic victory in a State like Iowa is something to be proud of. Flower's triumph in New York is a grand one, but it is best not to be too sanguine over carrying that state next year. It is always uncomfortably close, and doubtful in Presidential years. Yet on a square test I am confident that democracy is stronger in that State than republicanism. Yet we must overlook no precaution to insure victory in 1892. We must in the scriptural phrase, be as wise as serpents and harmless as doves. If we obey this injunction we ought to win not only in New York next year, but throughout the nation." Mr. Mills has opened headquarters in one of the uptown hotels for the Speakership campaign, and the other candidates will follow suit in a few days, as there is but little more than three weeks left for them to work.

It has leaked out through the gossip of those high up in official society, that Mr. and Mrs. Blaine are making no social engagements of any kind, more than four or five weeks ahead. The reason for this is that they will, in case of the Secretary's health shows the slightest sign of breaking down, immediately leave for a warmer climate, where they will spend the winter. Should Mr. Blaine's health or his inclination lead him to leave Washington again for an indefinite period, it is not believed that he would retain the State portfolio. Indeed this plea of bad health may be made his excuse for leaving the cabinet in order that he may become through his friends, an open condidate for the Presidential nomination of his party, as many believe he is certain to do inside of six months. The election of McKinley as govenor of Ohio has brought a disturbing element into the calculations of both Blaine and Harrison. They know that if McKinley is desposed to be a candidate, and there are good reasons for believing he is, that he will go into the convention with a strong following. Of course pressure will be brought to bear on McKinley to have him agree to wait, but he may think that he has waited long enough.

Secretary Proctor continues to draw the salary of Secretary of War, although he has gone to Vermont, and they say around the department that he is not expected to return until he comes to officially transfer the department to his successor, who has not been announced, although he has been selected.

Representative Bynum, of Indiana, is enthusiastic over the election returns. Said he: "Three out of four isn't bad. It's just about what I thought it would be. I never thought the democrats could carry Ohio, which is a republican state, so there is no reason for being down cast over the news from there. All in all the result of the elections is a great democratic victory which means success next year. It means that we shall have New York, New Jersey, Connecticut and Massachusetts in the east, and I should not be surprised if we carry Rhode Island and New Hampshire. Tariff reform is continually making democratic votes in the eastern republican strongholds. I see no cloud upon the democratic horizon. We could not have hoped for a brighter sky. It would have been almost a miracle had we carried Ohio, and the days of miracles are past."

The decision of the U. S. District Court of California that the shipment of arms on the Itata was a perfectly proper commercial transaction, and that this Government had no right to interfere was very unpalatable to the administration, and the Attorney General has directed that an appeal be taken.

Mr. Harrison is quite modest. He says that if the republicans in New York had stuck to national issues Fassett might have been elected. Secretary Tracy says he was defeated by the republicans who stayed at home, but it looks very much to most people, as if he was defeated by the democrats who voted against him.

Preaching Notice.

Sacramental meeting at Marlin's Bottom church, 3rd Sabbath of Nov. Preparatory services on Saturday before at 11 o'clock.

The assistance of Rev. Mr. Wilson the Synodical Evangelist, is expected to fulfil a promise of several months standing to Edray friends. Mr. Wilson will preach at Edray on Sunday night Nov. 15th and continue several evenings the week following.

ESTRAY.

I have in my possession two estray yearling steers. One roan and one red. The owner can have same by paying for the keeping and this ad.

R. D. RIMEL,
Sunset, W. Va.

Order of Publication.

At rules held in the Clerk's office of the Circuit Court of Pocahontas County, on the first Monday in November, 1891.

W. C. Stuart
vs.
C. C. Hansel & others.

The object of this suit is to subject to the payment of $576.73 with interest thereon from August 10th, 1891, due to the plaintiff W. C. Stuart, from the defendants, C. C. Hansel, H. M. Lockridge and Hugh Adams, the real estate belonging to said H. M. Lockridge and Hugh Adams severally, lying in Pocahontas County, in the State of West Virginia, which has been levied on under order of attachment issued in this suit, and it appearing by affidavit filed, that the defendants, C. C. Hansel, H. M. Lockridge and Hugh Adams are non residents of the State of West Virginia. It is ordered, that they do appear here within one month after the first publication of this order and do what is necessary to protect their interest in this suit.

Witness: J. H. Patterson, Clerk of the said Court this 2nd day of November, 1891.

J. H. PATTERSON, Clerk.

L. M. McClintic, p. q.
Nov. 5 4t. Printer's fee $7.85.

Order of Publication.

State of West Virginia,
Pocahontas County to wit:

At rules held in the Clerk's office of the Circuit Court of Pocahontas County, on the first Monday in November, 1891.

W. C. Sturt
vs.
Hugh Adams & al

The object of this suit is to subject to the payment of $716.67 with interest thereon from the 25th day of September, 1890, due to the plaintiff, W. C. Stuart, from the defendants Hugh Adams and H. M. Lockridge, the real estate belonging to said defendants severally, lying in Pocahontas County in the State of West Virginia, which has been levied on under order of attachment issued in this suit, and it appearing by affidavit filed that the defendants Hugh Adams and H. M. Lockridge are non residents of the State of West Virginia. It is ordered that they do appear here within one mouth after the first publication of this order and do what is necessary to protect their interest in this suit.

Witness: J. H. Patterson, Clerk of the said Court this 2nd day of November, 1891.

J. H. HATTERSON, Clerk.

L. M. McClintic p. q.
Nov. 5 4t Pinter's fee $8.15.

Pocahontas Times.

JOHN E. CAMPBELL,
EDITOR AND PROPRIETOR.

Entered at the Post-office at Huntersville, W. Va., as second class matter.

Huntersville, W. Va.

November 5, 1891.

AT A COUNTY COURT HELD FOR the County of Pocahontas, at the Court house thereof on the 6th day of October, 1891.

This day Matt Wallace and 696 other citizens of said County, presented their nine several petitions in writing, with the affidavits made by Uriah Bird, John Ligon, H. N. Hannah, William Vandervort, Wm. C. Mann, B. M. Yeager, Henry A. Yeager and Uriah Bird and Ed. I. Holt, credible citizens of this County before I. M. McClintic, George P. Moore, A. & L. Gatewood and B. C. Hill, notaries public of this County, and duly certified by them that said petitioners, are, as such affiants verily believe, legal voters of this County, which said petitions together with said affidavits and certificates thereof are now here filed at this regular session of this Court, and the said petitions being in the same language and figures are as follows:

"To the County Court of Pocahontas County, West Virginia: your petitioners, whose names are hereto signed, respectfully represent unto your Honorable body, that they are legal voters of Pocahontas county, in said state of West Virginia, and that they desire the re-location and removal of the county seat of said county from the town of Huntersville to a point on the east bank of the Greenbrier river in said county, known as and commonly called Marlin's Bottom, on the lands formerly owned by Susan E. and Andrew M. McGlaughlin, which were conveyed by them and wife to John T. McGraw, by deed dated on the 12th day of February, 1891 and is now of record in the clerk's office of the county court of said county of Pocahontas in Deed Book 21, page 201 and 207. The specific place and location on said lands, to which your petitioners ask the re-location of said county seat, is indicated as "Courthouse Square" on a survey and plat of said Marlin's Bottom lands, now being made by Oscar A. Veazey, Civil Engineer, a copy of which plat and survey will be filed in the office of the clerk of the county court of said county of Pocahontas, for public inspection, on, or before the day of the presentation of this petition.

Your petitioners therefore pray, that a vote may be taken upon the question of such re-location, at and to the place above indicated, at a special election to be held in the said county on such a day as your Honorable body may indicate, not less than sixty days, nor more than four months from the date of entering an order to this effect. And your petitioners will ever pray &c."

And it appearing to the court, from an inspection of the said petitions that they are signed by an aggregate of six hundred and ninety seven legal voters and citizens of this county, and that said petitioners ask the removal and re-location of the said county seat at and to the same place, and that said six hundred and ninety-seven legal voters and citizens of this county constitute more than two-fifths of all the legal voters of this county, which is estimated by allowing one vote for every six persons in this county as shown by the last census preceding the entry of this order. And there being no general election held in this county in and during the present year, said petitioners ask that a special election be ordered, had, and held on the question of the removal and re-location of said county seat to the place referred to in said petition [illegible]

[illegible]

county, known as and commonly called Marlin's Bottom, on the lands formerly owned by Andrew M. McGlaughlin, which were conveyed by him and wife to John T. McGraw by deed dated the 18th day of February, 1891, and now of record in the clerk's office of the county court of this county in Deed Book No. 21, page 201, and by Susan E. McGlaughlin by deed dated the 11th day of February, 1891, and recorded in said clerk's office in Deed Book 21, page 207. And that the specific place and location on said lands to which said petitioners ask the removal and re-location of said county seat is indicated as "Court House Square" on a survey and plat of said Marlin's Bottom's lands, made by Oscar A. Veazey, C. E., in surveying and laying out what is known as the Town of Marlinton on said lands, a copy of the said survey, map and plan of said town having been filed in the clerk's office of this county, and now here tendered in open court and filed with said petition, which said place as shown by the deed hereinafter referred to is specially described by metes and bound as follows, to-wit:

"Beginning at a stout locust post driven firmly into the ground at a point in a straight line drawn through the center of the west end of the Andrew M. McGlaughlin spring-house and the stone chimney at the south end of the S. E. McGlaughlin house, and situated at five hundred and eleven and one half feet from the centre of the west end of said spring-house, and at one thousand and fifty-five feet from the center of said chimney, and at the south corner at the intersection of Judge street and Tenth avenue, as shown on the said Map of Marlinton hereto attached; thence with the south-east side of said avenue south forty degrees and forty-five minutes west two hundred and ninety feet to another locust post driven firmly into the ground at the east corner, at the intersection of Jury street and Tenth avenue; thence with the north-east side of Jury street, south forty nine degrees and fifteen minutes east two hundred and sixty feet to another locust post driven firmly into the ground at the north corner, at the intersection of Jury street and and eleventh avenue; thence with the north-west side of Eleventh avenue north forty degrees and forty-five minutes east two hundred and ninety feet to another locust post driven firmly into the ground at the west corner, at the intersection of Eleventh avenue and Judge street; thence with the south-west side of Judge street north forty-nine degrees and fifteen minutes west two hundred and sixty feet to the place of beginning."

And it further appearing to the court that the lot, tract or parcel of ground hereinbefore referred to, is now owned by the Pocahontas Development Company, a corporation created by and operating under the laws of this state, the same having been conveyed to it by John T. McGraw and Jacob W. Marshall by their deed dated the 29th day of September, 1891, and now of record in the clerk's office of this court in Deed Book No. 22, page 104; and that said company proposes to convey said lands to this county free and relieved from all liens, costs and charges thereon provided and upon this condition, however that said county seat be removed and that the public buildings be located and built thereon under the vote to be taken under this order, and that said company by John T. McGraw, its president, and Geo. M. Whitescarver, its manager and secretary, now here, in open court, tenders, in escrow, a deed for said lot, piece or parcel of land conveying the same to The County court of Pocahontas County for court house and county purposes, with covenants of general warranty, which deed, they ask, may be taken and held by the clerk of this court as an escrow to await the result of the election provided for by this order. If said election be favorable to the prayer of said petitioners and if said county seat be removed and the public buildings be located on the said land, then said conveyance is to be absolute, otherwise said deed is to be returned to the said company by the clerk of this court, and the title to the land conveyed is not to be deemed and held to have passed out of the said company and corporation and said corporation in the event said removal and re-location are not made, is to be held relieved from any claim or title of this court or of this county to the land therein described.

And it appearing further by the proposition of said Pocahontas Development Company, by its president and manager, now here in open court made by them, that said company agrees, promises and binds itself to pay the sum of five thousand dollars in money to aid in defraying the cost and expense of a new court house and jail for said county, in the event, contingency, and [illegible]

[illegible]

at the several legal voting places in this county, as heretofore fixed and established by the former order of this court, at said election a vote be taken on the question of the relocation of the county seat of Pocahontas county as prayed for in said petitions. And the clerk of this court is directed to make out immediately upon the adjournment of this court, and certify a copy of this order for each of the several voting places in this county as fixed, established, and existing by law, and to deliver them to the sheriff of this county, who is ordered to post one copy of this order at each of the said voting places at least forty days before the said 8th day of December, 1891 and make return thereof according to law. And a copy of this order shall be published in The POCAHONTAS TIMES, a weekly newspaper published at Huntersville in this county, or in some other newspaper of general circulation in this county, at least once a week for four successive weeks prior to said special election herein ordered.

And the ballots used, given and voted at said election shall have written or printed thereon, "Re location of County Seat" "For re-location at Marlinton." and "Against Relocation of County seat."

And the court doth appoint the following named persons, commissioners, to hold and conduct said election, for the respective voting places in this county, who, for their respective voting places, shall ascertain and certify the result of such election, as required by law, viz:

For Academy—W. W. Beard, John B. Kinnison and George S. McNeel.

For Split Rock—S. S. Varner James Herold and P. P. Vandervort.

For Traveler's Repose—O. W. S. Gum, A. M. V. Arbogast, and Jacob L. Arbogast.

For Green Bank—Adam Arbogast, Jacob S. Wooddell and Charles A Lightner.

For Dunmore—Jacob K. Taylor, B. F. McElwee and George W. Arbogast.

For Frost—Andrew Herold, I. B. Moore and C. O. W. Sharp.

For Huntersville—Sheldon Moore, D. A. Fisher and Wm. L. Harper.

For Edray—A. T. Moore, Henry Barlow and Wm. M. Sharp.

For Buckeye—R. E. Overholt, H. H. McClintic and Wm. O. McNeel.

And the clerk of this court is directed to take and hold said deed upon the terms and conditions upon which it is tendered and said clerk is also directed to accept the bond of said Pocahontas Development Company, and to file the same in his office to await the further order of this court.

A Copy, Teste:

S. L. BROWN, Clerk.

POCAHONTAS TIMES.

JOHN E. CAMPBELL, EDITOR AND PROPRIETOR. Huntersville, West Virginia, Thursday, December 3, 1891. Terms of Subscription, $1.00 PER YEAR. IN ADVANCE. No. 19

THE PLEDGE PURSE.

BY EMMA GARRISON JONES.

"George, dear," said Mrs. Prescott, looking up from her basket of mending, as she and her husband sat by their fireside one winter night, "has it ever occurred to you that it is time our boys were signing the pledge?"

Mr. Prescott tossed aside his paper with a laugh.

"There you go, my dear, and really I expected it. The wonder is you haven't caught the fever sooner."

"What fever George?"

"Why, this temperance fever that seems to be crazing everybody just now. The town's full of it; every second man I meet wears a gray rosette in his button hole, and every church is converted into a temperance hall; but the thing won't last —such spasmodic movements never do."

His wife's bright eyes grew wistful and a cloud crossed her pretty, fresh face. She was a happy little woman, the mother of three promising boys, and always busy and full of plans for the comfort of her family.

"It is a good movement, George," she continued. "I trust it will be more lasting than you think, and it would," she added, with spirit, "if the known men of the town, the strong, reliable men like yourself, George, would take hold of it."

Much obliged for the compliment, my love," laughed her husband, "but I don't think I'm in any danger of becoming a drunkard."

"Nor do I, George, but you are not a temperance man, and there's always danger of having aught to do with sin."

"Why, Lizzie, how much in earnest you seem. You've caught the fever without a doubt. You always had a weakness for running after fashions. But, really, child, I'm in no danger. I'm not a total abstinence man, I'll admit; ever since I can remember I've had my drink or two a day, but I never was intoxicated in my life, and never expect to be."

"I trust not, George, but you have sons, and there's no telling into what errors your example may lead them."

"Why, Lizzie, do you mean to say I set my boys a bad example?"

"No, George, there never was a better husband and father than you are but you teach your boys to drink intoxicating liquors. We have wine on the table occasionally, and almost every morning the boys have their toddy."

"And you have always mixed the beverage my dear, and shared it round to us."

"That's not much, Lizzie."

"No, but it counts up. And how much does your private drinking amount to, do you suppose?"

"Bless my soul, Lizzie, what has come over you? Ten cents sometimes, never more than a quarter."

"Each day?"

"Yes! You don't grudge me that trifling amount, do you?"

"I grudge you nothing, George, that will make you and your boys happy," cried his wife, her eyes filling with tears, "but I wish you could see this matter as I do. The [illegible] boys were here an evening [illegible] as we are, and they wore their blue temperance badges on their jack[ets.]"

"Larry, why don't you fellows sign the pledge? It is so awfully jolly," said one of them.

"Our Lawrence laughed, just as [illegible] he laughed at me a minute ago, [illegible]

George. He is his father's own son, my handsome Larry, and it would breake my heart to see him do wrong.

"'It's jollier to drink your social glass, and have your hot toddy when you feel dull,' he replied. 'My father thinks the pledge a humbug, and so do I.'"

"Did Larry say that?" asked Mr. Prescott.

"Those are the words, George, and they cut me to the heart. Now, husband, you have never denied me any thing since the day you made me your happy wife—don't deny me this. Let us banish all sorts of intoxicating drinks from our house, and do take your boys by the hand and make them sign the pledge. As their father does they will do willingly." And the little woman put by her sewing, and crossed to her husband's chair took his head in both her hands and laid her cheek against his face. "Now, George, dear, surely you'll not say no to me for the first time will you?"

There was silence for a minute, and then the husband drew the pretty face down and kissed it.

"I couldn't say no, Lizzie, if I wanted," he said. "No man could withstand such a witch as you are."

On the following day Mr. Prescott and his three sons signed the pledge, and the boys took great pride in their gray badges.

Intoxicating drinks were banished from their home, and no one seemed to be one whit the worse for it. If the boys had a cold their mother administered hot mullein tea, and she found the remedy even more efficient than the toddies used to be. The boys seemed more speedily relieved, and had fewer attacks.

Three years went by. Times were hard and money scarce, and Mr. Prescott's business was dull. To make matters worse he had a long spell of sickness, and a heavy doctor's bill.

"I can't see my way out of it," he remarked sitting in his arm-chair one evening, paleface seamed with lines of care, "the building association stock will have to go, and I do hate that tremendously."

"What is it, George, dear? May be I can help you."

The sick man smiled at the little wife, ever so ready with her help.

"No, dear, you can't help me in this; I wish you could," he said. "It is a note, which must be paid before the tenth."

"And to day is the eighth. What is the amount, George?"

"Three hundred and fifty dollars, and I have not fifty to spare. If it hadn't been for this confounded fever.——"

"Hush, my love. Wait till I bring my pledge purse," and his wife darted from the room.

In two minutes she was back, a heavy purse in her hand.

"This is my pledge purse, George."

"Your pledge purse? What do you mean?"

"Why, you see," and the little woman's face fairly glowed as her boys left their lessons and crowded around her, eager to hear, "the day you and the boys signed the pledge, George, I made this purse, and I called it my pledge purse. Every day I have put in ten cents, and every week a dollar, because that much used to go for intoxicating drink, that did my boys and their father more harm than good. Sometimes when I had a little spare change I threw that in too. Larry, my boy, sit down by your father, and count [illegible] I hope there may be enough to pay that troublesome note.

Larry obeyed with alacrity, his father looking on, with eager eyes as he assorted the dollar notes and piled up the quarters and dimes. When all was told the amount was four hundred and sixty-five dollars.

Mr. Prescott looked at his wife, and his eyes filled with tears.

"Why, Lizzie—why, little wife, what can I say?" he began.

She caught his head to her bosom.

"Say nothing, George. I kept my purse for an hour of need, and that hour has come. Pay the note that troubles you, dear, and then get well and strong at your leisure."

Her husband was silent, but the three boys leaped to their feet, and shouted, "Hurrah for the pledge!" until the room rang.

DIRECTIONS NOT EXPLICIT ENOUGH.

"Well, my boy," said the old gentleman, "I understand you've been fighting."

"I was in something of a scrape," replied the youth.

"Well I suppose boys will fight, and there's no use trying to stop it. You don't look much the worse for it."

"Got off pretty light, sure," said the boy.

"Lick the other fellow?"

"Well hardly."

"Um, that's bad. Did you follow your old father's advice?"

"Yes, sir."

"You struck the first blow?"

"Yes, sir."

"And hit him hard?"

"As hard as I could."

"Knock him down?"

"Knocked him flat."

"And that didn't end the fight?"

"Well I should say not."

The old gentleman looked puzzled.

"That's funny," he said. "I never knew it to fail when I was a boy."

"Maybe, when you were a boy, the other fellow didn't fall on a brick pile and get up with a half brik in his hand and chase you a mile. That'll knock most any kind of a system silly."

TESTIMONY THAT PERPLEXED A LAWYER.

A case was being tried in a country court. A horse had been stolen from a pasture, and the evidence all pointed to a certain doubtful character of the neighborhood as the culprit. Though his guilt seemed clear, he had found a lawyer to undertake his defense.

At the trial the defendant's attorney expended his energy in trying to confuse and frighten the opposing witnesses, especially a certain farmer whose testimony was particularly damageing. The lawyer kept up a fire of questions, asking many foolish ones, and repeated himself again and again in the hope of decoying the witness into a contradiction.

"You say," the lawyer went on, "that you can swear to having seen this man drive a horse past your farm on the day in question?"

"I can," replied the witness, wearily, for he had already answered the question a dozen times.

"What time was this?"

"I told you it was about the middle of the afternoon."

"But I don't want any 'abouts' or any 'middles.' I want you to tell the jury exactly the time."

"Why," said the farmer, "I don't always carry a gold watch with me when I'm digging potatoes."

"But you have a clock in the house haven't you?"

"Yes."

"Well, what time was it by that?"

"Why, by that clock it was just nineteen minutes past 10."

"You were in the field all the morning?" went on the lawyer, smiling suggestively.

"I was."

"How far from the house is this field?"

"About half a mile."

"You swear, do you, that by the clock in your house it was exactly nineteen minutes past 10?"

"I do."

The lawyer paused and looked triumphantly at the jury at last he had entrapped the witness into a contradictory statement that would greatly weaken his testimony. "I think that will do," he said, with a wave of his hand, "I am quite through with you."

The farmer leisurely picked up his hat and started to leave the witness stand; then turning slowly about, he added:

"I ought perhaps to say that too much reliance should not be placed upon that clock, as it got out of gear about 6 months ago, and it's been nineteen minutes past 10 ever since."

A New Brunswick lady owns a parot. A new pastor has recently been established over the lady's church, and a few days ago he went to make his first pastoral visit. The front door was open, but the Venetian blind door was closed, and Poll was in the cage just behind it. As the pastor reached for the electric button Poll said in a remonstrant tone:

"Go away, please."

"But I wish to see the lady of the house."

"Go away, please. We havn't a cold bite in the house."

"You are mistaken. I am not a tramp. I wish to see the lady of the house on business."

"Go away!" screamed Poll wrathfully. "Go away, you dirty tramp! I'll call the police. Police! police!"

This was too much for the modest minister, and in considerable wonderment he abandoned his call.

First dude—I'm going to Washington to morrow.

Seco d Dude—What train are you going to take?

First Dude—I am going to take the early train that leaves at 7 o'clock in the morning, doncher know.

Second Du'e—I'd like to see you off, old chappie, but that's too early, yer know. All sensible people are in bed by 7 in the morning, yer see.

Mother—What in the world has become of the other half of that cake I cut for supper?

Little Dick—You gave it to me.

"Nonsense! You asked me if you could have a piece of cake and I said yes."

"Yes'm. I meant the piece that was left over."

Tommy—"Pa, may I ask you a question?"

Pa—"Certainly, my child."

Tommy—"Where is the wind when it doesn't blow?"

Pocahontas Times.

JOHN E. CAMPBELL,
EDITOR AND PROPRIETOR.

Entered at the Post-office at Huntersville, W. Va., as second class matter.

Huntersville, W. Va.

December 3, 1891.

Drunkeness is unknown in Rio Janeiro, Brazil, with its population of 500,000.

The number of workingwomen in Europe is about 20,500,000; in the United States about 1,800,000.

A new tannery just erected at Buchannon at a cost of $15,000, was blown down by Monday's storm, and will have to be built anew.

The striking miners in the Marmet Company's mines at Raymond City, will have to vacate the company's houses under a decision of the United States Court at Charleston. The places of the strikers have been filled by non union men, and the mines are running full time.

Representative Bynum, since his withdrawal, has been working hard for Mills, whose friends now claim 90 votes. Mr. Crisp's managers say he has 114 votes, but others say that he has not over 85. The other candidates give no figures. Only ten days left to settle it.

Wolves killed three children of Andrew Gulick last Tuesday at the iron rolling mills near New Brighton, Minn., ten miles north of St. Paul. During the great fires in Pine county in September great droves were driven south into Ramsey and Anoka counties. The Gulick children wandered from home into the woods at noon and were attacked and devoured by the beasts.

At Salem, Va., Charles Watkins, colored, was sentenced to be hung January 8 for the murder of his wife.

This murderourous rascal got a white wife in the west, and then he killed his colored wife. He removed to Roanoke county with his wife, and when his colored wife followed him there, he murdered her.

Peter Jackson, the well negro pugilist, has received a cablegram from London announcing that the National Club of that city had agreed to allow him $750 for expences if he would come to London and fight Frank Slavin for a purse of $10,000, which they offered. Slavin has agreed to the match, and, as Jackson's terms have all been agreed to, he has practically done so. The fight will take place in June.

WASHINGTON LETTER.

From our regular correspondent.

WASHINGTON, D. C., Nov. 27th—How much longer is the Blaine Harrison farce to be kept on the boards? Mr. Blaine's friends on the Republican National Committee as well as those who were here during the week with the delegations from various cities, are telling everybody that Mr. Blaine is to be the candidate of his party next year. Mr. Harrison is a cold-mannered, cold blooded sort of a man, but this committee and delegate business was a little more than he could stand, so when the committee, after finally adjourning, called at the White House in a body, its members met with a reception colder than Raum's patent refrigerator could ever produce. Mr. Harrison was offended, and he took special care to impress that fact upon the committee. But the committee did not seem to care much, for as its members left the White House on their way over to the State department one of them remarked loud enough to be heard by all, "who is that man, Harrison, anyway?" Mr. Blaine received the committee in his most cordial manner, and made himself so pleasant that they remained in his office nearly an hour and when they left they nearly paralized the staid and dignified employes of the State department by giving three cheers and a tiger for Blaine.

Maj. McKinley also has the Blaine fever. He took advantage of his stay in this city this week to call on Mr. Blaine and to let him understand that he was willing to take the second place on the ticket with him but with nobody else. Mr. Blaine is said to have been very demonstrative at this meeting with McKinley, in the way of placing his arm around his shoulder, etc., but he took particular care not to commit himself in favor of McKinley for an associate on the ticket. This sort of thing can have but one ending—Mr. Blaine must retire from the Cabinet, unless Mr. Harrison will withdraw his claims for a renomination. A bet was made last night in a prominent hotel that Mr. Blaine would resign before Jan. 10.

$100,000 is big money to pay for a political convention, but that is said to represent the price paid by Minneapolis for the advertising she will get out of the holding of the republican National Convention, there next June, and that amount, which is to be paid to Boss Clarkson's committee, does not include the price paid for the votes of two committeemen and the incidental expenses of the delegation here.

Much interest is already expressed in the meeting of the Democratic National Executive Committee, which will be held here December 8, to fix the time for the meeting of the full committee to select the time and place for holding the next National Convention. Washington, Cincinnatti, Baltimore, Minneapolis, New York and Detroit are already in the field.

The first applicant for a loan under the Farmers' Alliance sub treasury scheme made his appearance at the Treasury Department this week. He was from Hartford Co. Maryland, and was not very positive what he wanted, further than that he wanted as much money as the $18 cash, which he said he had, would pay the interest on, and he told the clerk in the Fourth Auditor's office, to whom the application was made, that his farm would be security for the principal of the loan. He was very much disappointed when told that Uncle Sam was at present himself a borrower instead of a lender.

If the statements made by California and New York republicans National Committee of that party be accepted, and there are good reasons for believing that they stated the situation just as it appeared to them, there is little chance for the electoral votes of either of those States being cast for the republican nominee next year. And according to the same sources of information it will require herculean efforts on the part of the party managers to the northwest in line, notwithstanding the holding of the convention at Minneapolis. These statements are but corroboratory of democratic information, with the single exception of California. Although it had long ago been determined by the democratic leaders to make a hard fight for that State, it was done more on general principles than because of any specified knowledge of a change in the sentiments of the people toward the republican high tariff. That the northwest, the great agricultural section, is slowly but surely adopting democratic ideas on the tariff, is as certain as that the sun rises in the east and sets in the west, and if there is no mistake made by the party leaders a majority of the States in that sections will become, in time, as reliably democratic as Texas.

Order of ublication.

At rules held in the Clerk's office of the Circuit Court of Pocahontas County, on the first Monday in November, 1891.

W. C. Stuart
vs.
C. C. Hansel & others.

The object of this suit is to subject to the payment of $576.73 with interest thereon from August 10th, 1891, due to the plaintiff W. C. Stuart, from the defendants, C. C. Hansel, H. M. Lockridge and Hugh Adams, the real estate belonging to said H. M. Lockridge and Hugh Adams severally, lying in Pocahontas County, in the State of West Virginia, which has been levied on under order of attachment issued in this suit, and it appearing by affidavit filed, that the defendants, C. C. Hansel, H. M. Lockridge and Hugh Adams are non residents of the State of West Virginia. It is ordered, that they do appear here within one month after the first publication of this order and do what is necessary to protect their interest in this suit.

Witness: J. H. Patterson, Clerk of the said Court this 2nd day of November, 1891.

J. H. PATTERSON, Clerk.

L. M. McClintic, p. q.
Nov. 5 4t. Printer's fee $7.85.

Order of Publication.

State of West Virginia,
Pocahontas County to wit:

At rules held in the Clerk's office of the Circuit Court of Pocahontas County, on the first Monday in November, 1891.

W. C. Stuart
vs.
Hugh Adams & al

The object of this suit is to subject to the payment of $716.67 with interest thereon from the 25th day of September, 1890, due to the plaintiff, W. C. Stuart, from the defendants Hugh Adams and H. M. Lockridge, the real estate belonging to said defendants severally, lying in Pocahontas County in the State of West Virginia, which has been levied on under order of attachment issued in this suit, and it appearing by affidavit filed that the defendants Hugh Adams and H. M. Lockridge are non residents of the State of West Virginia. It is ordered that they do appear here within one month after the first publication of this order and do what is necessary to protect their interest in this suit.

Witness: J. H. Patterson, Clerk of the said Court this 2nd day of November, 1891.

J. H. PATTERSON, Clerk.

L. M. McClintic p. q.
Nov. 5 4t Printer's fee $8.15

HOME NEWS.

—Mr. Hugh Dever, of Knapp's creek was in town to-day.

—R. V. Perkins, Esq., of Mill Point was in the city Sunday.

—A. S. Overholt, of Buckeye, was in town the first of the week.

—Elijah N. Grant, colored, died at his home near Academy, on Sunday the 22nd inst.

—Rev. J. F. A. Lautenschlager will preach at Dunmore next Sunday night.

—Messrs. Jno. T. McGraw and Geo. W. Whitescarver, of Marlinton, were in Huntersville Monday.

—Mess. Hugh Adams and John T. Wilson, of Rockbridge Baths, Va. were in Huntersville last Saturday.

—M. H. Corbett, Esq., and wife, of Pinkney, Va., are visiting friends and relatives near Huntersville.

—Next Tuesday is the day for the people to say whether or not the Court house shall remain where it is or be removed to Marlinton.

—C. F. Moore, Esq., will speak at this place next Monday, promptly at 1 o'clock instead of at 2, as previously announced.

—Dr. M. Wallace and daughter Miss Minnie, of Mill Point were guests at the Huntersville Hotel to-day.

—A license to marry was issued Monday to Lee Wilmoth and Ilma Spencer, both of the upper end of this County.

—Our mail from the east is now coming in at 12 o'clock instead of at night, as heretofore, which makes it 12 hours later.

—A Vermont editor has invented a new way for stirring up delinquent subscribers. He writes obituary notices of them, assuming that they must be dead, since he does not hear from them.—Ex.

—Several persons of this city went over at Edray Tuesday to hear the speeches of Mess. G. P. and C. F. Moore, on the C. H. removal question.

—Mr. M. W. Beard a few days ago sold his farm (the Campbell place) near Pickaway, this county, consisting of 56 acres, to his brother-in-law, Mr. Sam'l Weisiger, of Pa. who, we learn, takes possession at once. The price is not named. This farm was sold to Mr. Beard three months ago for $50 per acre. —Monroe Watchman.

—By request we republish the following interview we had with Hon. J. N. Camden, President of the W. Va. & Pittsburg R. R. which appeared in this paper August 13: We had the pleasure of meeting for the first time, Hon. J. N. Camden, while he was in our city, last week. We hardly feel it necessary to introduce the ex Senator to our readers of this County, as he is known by reputation to all of them, and no other gentleman is more heartily welcome than he—being promoter of the Pittsburg, W. Va. railroad which is now being constructed, and which will pass through our city. He talked freely of the building of his road, and said it would most certainly be completed by next fall a year. He also said that Huntersville, was a natural and most beautiful location for a thriving manufacturing town—though repeated the statement made in an interview with the Wheeling Register, published in THE TIMES a few weeks ago, that owing to previous arrangements and [illegible] of the Chesapeake & Ohio road, the junction would be made at Marlinton, six miles below here, which, with the machine shops of both roads, will make a little town within itself.

Andrew Jackson, city marshal of Buena Vista, Ga., shot and killed A. E. Bell, at that place, Saturday, while Bell was drunk and advancing on the officer with a knife.

OBITUARY.

William Davis Emery Fletcher Grimes was born June 5th, 1832 and died Oct. 30th, 1891, aged 59 years 4 months and 26 days. His wife was very ill with typhoid fever and while giving her every attention he was stricken down with the same disease.

His illness was brief, but borne with christian fortitude. He was an affectionate husband, indulgent father and a true friend.

He had been a faithful and a consistent member of the M E Church for some 34 years, the greater part of which time he was a class leader.

He leaves a wife, two children and a host of friends, but we trust that "they mourn not as those who have no hope," for we believe that "their loss is his eternal gain."

We extend our condolence to the stricken family and trust that the God of peace may pour into their bereaved hearts the oil of joy and gladness.

The sympathy of the community for the bereaved, and the esteem in which the dead was held was expressed by the large and weeping concourse that followed his remains to the grave where he was tenderly laid away to rest in the quiet grave yard to await the resurrection.

Our sympathy for the bereaved family is beyond expression. May they be ready when the change comes to meet the loved and departed on the other shore.

G. S. W.,
Pastor.

Transfers of Real Estate.

The following is a list of deeds entered to record in the month of October:

A deed from H. M. Lockridge and wife to Amos and Henry Barlow for land on Knapp's creek.

Jas. W. Warwick, Sr. and wife and others to W. F. and J. S. Marshall for land situate on the west side of the middle mountain.

T. S. Buzzard, of Iowa to W. H. Buzzard for land on Anthony's creek.

James E. Ashbridge and wife to Joseph Friend for land on Swago creek.

Charles Stewart and wife to Andrew Chanel for land on Stamping creek.

Charles C. Burner and wife to Dallas J. Sweet for land situate on the headwaters of Greenbrier river.

Jane G. Arbogast to Allie G. Arbogast and Wm. W. Arbogast for land on Deer creek.

J. W. McClure and wife to J. E. Barlow for land on Indian Draft.

Jno. McDowell and wife to Joseph S. Smith for land near Mill Point.

S. H. Barnett and wife and R. R. E. Barnett to Anna Laura Barnett for land on Elk Lick and Woods run.

Fannie S. Effinger and husband to E. F. Wayman for their interest in land in Green Bank district.

Samuel C. Higgins and wife to R. S. Turk for land on the waters of Clover creek.

Calvin S. May and wife to John V. May for land on Anthony's creek.

Jno G. Beard and wife and W. H. Overholt to M. A. Dunlap and Preston Dunlap for land on the waters of Cranberry creek.

Francis McCarty, an iron moulder, thirty eight years old, attempted to rival Steve Brodie by jumping off the Brooklyn Bridge and was drowned.

A novel company has been organized on Puget sound for the propagation of black cats. An island is to be purchased so that the cats cannot mingle with other cats of surrounding regions, and there the black cat breed is to be perpetuated. These cats will live on fish and thus the expense of raising the big cat ranch will be reduced to the minimum. The cats are to be raised for their fur.

Forger Jailed.

On Monday afternoon last a man named M. F. Odyse was brought to Covington on a warrant charging him with forging two checks. Mr. C. A. Kincaid, who cashed the checks at the White Sulpher Springs, found him hid in a box car at Alleghany Station and brought him to Covington. The checks bore a forged signature of Mr. F. Griffith, and were for $108 and $86 respectively. Odyse was lodged in jail the same evening and will be taken to Lewisburg for trial. He claims to have given value for the checks and that he did not know they were bogus, and charges two other men with having passed them on him.—Alleghany Sentinel.

Bear Killed with a Penknife.

On Friday night last a yearling bear was killed by two boys on Little mountain in Meadow Bluff district. John A. Hall, aged 17, son of Thos. A. Hall, and Mont Black, aged 12, were coon hunting when their dogs treed the bear. They induced the bear to come down by firing one shot at it from a gun loaded with No. 5 shot, which beyond putting out one eye, did no damage. The dogs then tackled it, and the boys rushed in with an axe, but could not use it effectively when young Hall had recourse to his pen knife. After several lucky passes he succeeded in dispatching it. Young Hall was slightly bitten on the fingers in the fight, but sustained no other damage.—Greenbrier Independent.

Virginia's Debt Settled.

It is announced that the Alcott Committee and the Virginia Debt Commission have finally agreed upon a basis of settlement which will doubtless be ratified and confirmed by the bond holders and the State Legislature. The basis of the settlement is that the Commonwealth shall issue in lieu of all outstanding claims, unfunded and in default, $19,000,000 in bonds having one hundred years to run and bearing interest at 2 per cent., per annum for ten years and 3 per cent., per annum for ninety years.

This does not effect the $6,000,000 in bonds funded under the Riddleberger act and in the hands of the people or the securities held by schools and colleges. All other securities, however, are brought into the $19,000,000 pool, and the start is to be made with a clean score.

This basis of settlement seems to be entirely favorable to the State and is received with great satisfaction by the people. Certificates will be issued to the bond holders for what is claimed to be West Virginia's share of Virginia's debt.

Is John Sherman better than Foraker? We do not believe that he is. He has done more mischief to the country and the democratic party than Foraker ever can do. He once aided and was conspicuous in one of the blackest political crimes in our history, the theft of the Presidency. If we were a democratic member of the Ohio Legislature and our vote was needed for Foraker, that he might defeat Sherman, Foraker would get it. Although he is the greatest political blatherskite of the age.—[illegible] Democrat.

The elections being over reductions of wages in the protected industries are again in order. Lately the great iron firm of Jones & Laughlin, of Pittsburgh, posted a notice reducing the pay of 300 men from $1.50 to $1.35 a day. Jones was chairman of the Republican National Committee during the Blaine campaign in 1884, and contributed to the McKinley campaign fund in Ohio this year.

From the vital statistics of the large cities in this country it appears that at least 15,000 children starve to death every year.

Citizens of Pocahontas Co.

We are authorized to say that the people of this county, who oppose additional taxation that may be avoided, and consequently oppose moving the Court House from its present location to Marlinton, think that, the voters should hear the matters involved publicly discussed before the day of voting. Those opposed to the movement have selected Mr. C. F. Moore as an exponent of their views and he will address the people of the county at the following times and places:

Lobelia, school house Friday Nov. 27th, 1 p. m.; Hillsboro, Saturday, Nov. 28th, 2 p. m.; Edray, Tuesday, Dec. 1st 1 p. m.; Frost, Wednesday, Dec. 2nd, 1 p. m.; Dunmore, Thursday, Dec. 3rd, 2 p. m.; Travelers Repose, Friday, Dec. 4th, 1 p. m.; Green Bank, Saturday, Dec. 5th, 1 p. m.; Huntersville, Monday, Dec. 7th, 2 p. m.

Any gentleman who desires to divide time with Mr. Moore at any of these places is cordially invited to do so. The voters are the parties interested and should not miss these discussions.

NOTICE is hereby given that the line of road now controlled by Jno. Cleek in the Levels dist., will be let to contract at the January term of our County Court. The Court reserves the right to reject any and all bids. By order of the Court.

S. D. HANNAH, Pres.

NOTICE OF TRUSTEE'S SALE.

By virtue of a Trust Deed made the 27th day of August 1886 by [illegible] Skiles and Jennie B. Skiles and James R. Apperson to R. W. Baldwin, Trustee, and in pursuance of an order of the Circuit Court of Pocahontas County (West Virginia), made on the 28th day of October 1891 "In the matter of R. W. Baldwin, Trustee," appointing the undersigned as Trustee to execute the provisions of said Deed of Trust instead of said R. W. Baldwin, former trustee who is dead, and Richard Baldwin the beneficiary in said Trust Deed, having so requested, I, the undersigned acting as trustee under authority above stated, shall, on

MONDAY, 28th DECEMBER 1891,

proceed to sell to the highest bidder at public auction in front of the Court House of Pocahontas County, at Huntersville, W. Va., for two adjoining parcels of land of [illegible] acre each, with the hotel building and other buildings thereon being the [illegible] of ground at [illegible]LINTON in said County formerly owned and used as a Hotel property by said James R. Apperson and later by said Jennie B. Skiles, and which is more fully described in said deed of Trust recorded in the Clerk's Office of the County Court of said Pocahontas County at page 465 and following pages of Deed Book No. 17.

CASH

URIAH HEVENER Trustee,
as successor of R. W. Baldwin, original Trustee.

Nov. 26-4t. Printers fee $6.00.

Town Lots for Sale in Huntersville.

Becoming tired of hearing of the grumbling about there being no land or lots for sale in Huntersville, I have had laid off 30 to 40 desirable building lots containing nearly one quarter acre each, which I offer for sale at prices from $50 to $75.

J. C. LOCKY, Sr.

Pocahontas Times.

JOHN E. CAMPBELL,
EDITOR AND PROPRIETOR.

Entered at the Post-office at Huntersville, W. Va., as second class matter.

Huntersville, W. Va.

December 3, 1891.

THE MAN WHO EXPLAINED.

Some one who was going somewhere with a parrot left the bird in his cage on a seat in the waiting room of the Erie depot for half an hour the other afternoon. The lonely situation of Polly was soon discovered by an oldish man who had his personal effects tied up in a bundle, and he took a seat beside the cage. Nothing attracts attention quicker than a parrot. The bird sat dozing on his perch, and his general appearance was nothing to brag of, but he soon began to draw. A mild looking middle-aged man approached with a smile of anticipation on his phiz and asked:

"Does your parrot speak many words?"

"Not very many," replied the other. "About all he can say is to call you a cheese faced idiot and inquire when you are going to hang yourself?"

"Yes—ahem—yes!" stammered the mild looking man, and that finished him.

The next to approach was a bustling, matronly woman, who had been to the information bureau.

'Ah! You have a parrot, I —" she exclaimed as she came to a halt. "He's not a very old bird?"

'No'm.'

'Talk much?"

'Not so very much. About all he can do is to ask you to pull down your vest, wipe off your chin and choose the rocker."

'Well, I'd wring his neck if I owned him she retorted, as she sailed away with her head up.

The third comer's cheeks were ornamented with Burnsides and he wore glasses. He was wandering about with his hands clasped behind him and it was in an abstracted way that he stopped and inquired:

'Is that a talking parrot?'

'Oh, yes.'

Isn't talking any just now?"

'Not just this minute, but he'll break out pretty soon and want to know why in Texas you make an ass of yourself by wearing mutton chop whiskers. He's always hated 'em.'

'Has, eh? I see. Curious bird,' mumbled the man as he headed for the other end of the room.

Three or four people now came up and stooped to look, and passed on without making any inquiries, but then an old man, limping with a sore foot and carrying an umbrella for a cane, stopped on his way to the water cooler and asked:

'Is that a regular parrot?'

'Of course.'

'What's he worth?'

'Fifty dollars.'

'Humph! Man must be a fool to pay fifty dollars for a rumpled up bird like that. That's the price of two yearlings.'

'Can't help that. He's the greatest talker in America.'

'Is, eh! Appears to be purty dumb just now.'

'He's sleepy. You just wait a few minutes and he'll call you an old bow legged, knock kneed, spindle shanked masher.'

'He will, eh. If he does I'll jab him with this umbrell.'

'Yes, he'll tell you to go and soak your head, pull in your teeth, belay your jaw, stop winking at the girls pay up your pew rent and let whiskey alone.'

'He will, will he? If he does I'll light on to you and lick you in two minutes. I don't allow nobody nor nothing to sass and insult me!'

The old man talked in such high pitched tones that a policeman came over and took him away. The other man also picked up his bundle and slid out, and the parrot aroused himself, indulged in a shake or two and cocked his eye at one of the half dozen women standing around and demanded:

'Who in blazes started this blooming old row anyhow?'

Blind Tom's Decline.

The greatest musical wonder of the negro race—"Blind Tom"—who for years delighted the public with his remarkable performance upon the piano, is passing the closing days of his life amid the pathetic scenes of an insane asylum.

Tom in the days of slavery was the property of Gen. James N. Bethune, a planter of Georgia, who, after the war, moved to Virginia, and took up his residence on an estate near the town of Warrenton, one of the prettiest villages in the old commonwealth, a classic spot in the history of the war, and noted then as now for its cultivated and pleasure loving people. Here it was, in the shadow of the beautiful Blue Ridge mountains, that "Blind Tom's" genius unfolded itself, found a vent in that atmosphere of refinement and culture, and finally astonished the world.

His masterpiece, "The Battle of Manassas," is a miracle of imaginative form. His conception of the event captivates the ear with its first chord, and in the execution that follows he intimates the march of the fife and drums, the charge of the cavalry, the thunder of the batteries, and the agony of the wounded and dying so faithfully that a great martial panorama seems to float through the fancy of the hearer.

When a mere lad Tom would conceal himself in his master's house, and after midnight creep into the parlor and play the same airs with which his young mistress had entertained her guests a few hours before, being cautious to suppress his notes by placing his foot on the "soft" pedal. He was soon detected, however in this innocent diversion and reprimanded. The children of the household, delighted with his marvelous powers, encouraged him to play on all occasions by stealth. But his genius soon became so manifest that his master found it to his interest to have it cultivated and turned to profit.

Tom has been a simpleton from his birth. As an evidence of his mental weakness he invariably applauded himself by clapping his hands and appeared as if in a fit of ecstacy after each performance.

Although nature fashioned him simple-minded she gracefully atoned for this short-coming, and attuned his gentle soul in a wondrous harmony.

Previous to his retirement he could reproduce the notes of the most extraordinary performers. Eminent musicians who have tested his powers for music agree that he has the finest notice ear for one who was born blind that has ever come under their notice.

NOTICE is hereby given that the line of road now controlled by Jno. Clark in the Levels dist., will be let [illegible] of the January term of our County Court. The Court reserves the right to reject any and all bids. By order of the Court.

S. B. HANNAH, Pres.

—If you want Letter and Note heads, neatly printed and put up in tablet form, cheaper than you can get them anywhere else, call at THE TIMES office. We also do all kinds of nice job printing, and have on hands a nice line of Stationery, business cards, &c. &c.

POCAHONTAS TIMES.

Vol. 9. JOHN E. CAMPBELL, EDITOR AND PROPRIETOR. Huntersville, West Virginia, Thursday, December 10, 1891. Terms of Subscription, $1.00 PER YEAR. IN ADVANCE. No. 20

Official Directory of Pocahontas County

Judge of Circuit Court, A. N. Campbell.
Prosecuting Attorney, L. M. McClintic.
Sheriff, J. C. Arbogast.
Deputy Sheriff, Geo. W. Callison.
Cl'k Co. Court, S. L. Brown.
Cl'k Cir. Court, J. H. Patterson.
Assessor, C. O. Arbogast.
Com'rs Co. Ct. C. E. Beard. S. B. Hannah. G. M. Kee.
Co. Surveyor, Geo. Baxter

THE COURTS.

Circuit Court convenes on the first Tuesday in April, 3rd Tuesday in June and 3rd Tuesday in October.

County Court convenes on the 1st Tuesday in January, March, October and second Tuesday in July. July is levy term.

ONE WOMAN'S WAY.

"It's no use, I've worn all the cast-off clothes I'm going to."

There was no sign of irritation or ill-nature in the girl's bright face as she made this assertion. She sat in the centre of a heap of discarded finery. There were frayed and spotted velvet skirts, satin and silk waists, strained out and and thread-bare in almost every seam, flounced and bedraggled gros grains and nun's veilings, crumpled ribbons and torn laces.

"What do you intend to wear?"

Florence Annable's only companion on this occasion was her married sister, Mrs. Paul Grenman, in whose pretty ear sparkled valuable solitaires, and whose fingers were crowded with costly jewels. Mrs. Grenman's tone was cold, and the smile on her faultless lips was almost a sneer.

"I don't mean anything unkind, Julia," Miss Annable replied, "but the truth is, I am not comfortable in second-hand clothing."

"Blanche would be edified at your remarks, Florence," said Mrs. Grenman; "it was no easy task to get these things together," she added with increased hauteur. "You know very well that my maid expects every garment I discard, and so does Blanche's."

Notwithstanding her protest, the young lady had selected the least injured of the velvet skirts, and had begun to rip off the braid. But she threw down her scissors now and stepped out of the debris.

"That settles it, Julia," she said with shining eyes, with no other indication of excitement. "I will sort those 'rags and jags, and velvet gowns' into bundles, and you and Blanche need not disappoint your maids."

"What stupidity, Florence!" Mrs. Grenman hastened to say. "You know that we want you to have our things. You have made lovely costumes many times out of the poorer material than that is there."

The lady's tone was a little more conciliatory. She evidently had some reason for not wishing her sister to carry out her threat.

"These things are much more suitable for your maid than for your sister, Julia," Miss Annable replied, as she set about her task.

"Perhaps you think that your sisters should keep you supplied with new clothes?" said Mrs. Grenman.

"No, I do not; but I will tell you what I do think," Miss Annable responded, with heightened color, but in cool tones. "I think that you and Blanche ought to be willing that I should earn my own wardrobe."

"Earn it!" said Mrs. Grenman, disdainfully. "What new and abominable crochet have you got into your head now? Something to disgrace us all, I suppose."

"If you and Blanche would pay me in hard cash, as you would be compelled to pay a professional, for playing the piano at your luncheon parties and your kettledrums, your receptions and your informal evening gatherings, I could buy my own clothes, and be much better satisfied."

Mrs. Grenman's astonishment and indignation were [illegible].

"Whoever thought that one of our family would be so coarse and mercenary! Pay one's own sister for playing a few sonatas and quadrilles once in a while! Why don't you ask us to to pay you for coming to attend our kettledrums and receptions? Indeed Florence, if I must say it, I think you have been generously compensated for anything you have ever done for either of us;" and Mrs. Grenman waved a jeweled hand toward the bundles in the centre of the room.

"Julia, I will find out what a professional pianoist will charge for playing the same number of hours that I do," Miss Annable began again, calmly. "Then, not being a professional, I will play for you and Blanche for just half that amount."

Mrs. Grenman rose, picked off a few bits of the thread from her handsome black silk dress—she had been darning a tiny bit of lace—and proceeded to array herself for the street.

The room in which this conversation took place was the fourth-story back of a socalled fashionable boarding-house, and this was Florence Annable's home. Her father and mother were both dead, the former having survived the wreck of a large fortune only a few weeks. When the estate was settled, it was found that there would be enough money to provide Florence, the only unmarried daughter, with the necessaries of life. In other words, it would pay her board. So, for two years more, she had been dependent upon her wealthy sisters for her wardrobe. It was a disagreeable position for a sensitive and high-minded girl, and it had come at last to be unendurable.

"Florence!"

Mrs. Grenman was ready to go.

"Well?" said her companion.

"I shall repeat this conversation to Paul. I tell you, that you may be prepared to meet the consequences."

"I am prepared for anything but 'rags and jags,' Julia," her sister replied; "and I beg you to believe that I should not have worn your cast-off garments so long if it had not been for keeping the peace. Let me tell you what else I am willing to do. You say that some of the costumes I have made from the dresses you have finished wearing have been very pretty and stylish. I will hold myself ready to make over the best of them for you to wear again, and I will do it in my best manner."

"And be paid for it?"

"Certainly, like any other dressmaker."

"And you wish me to understand that you will not play for one of my parties again unless you are paid for it?"

Mrs. Grenman's hand was on the knob of the door as she asked this question.

"I wish you to understand that I do not regard your old velvet and silk gowns as a fair equivalent for my services as chief musician," said Miss Annable. "And also, that I not only believe with the Bible that 'the laborer is worthy of his hire,' but that labor is eminently respectable."

The departing guest's twist of the door knob was nothing less than vicious. Florence, who knew her sister perfectly, understood that the breach between them now would be a hard one to bridge. Work was a degradation, in the opinion of her rich near relatives. But it was not so for her. There were two ways in which she knew she could earn a generous support. One by her musical talent, and the other by her taste and ability in designing costumes.

"It is wicked to keep you at the piano, Miss Annable, when we all know you are so fond of dancing, but no one plays as you do," her friends were constantly saying.

Now why, she asked herself, with this available talent in her possession, should she not earn some money, and in a business like and "open and above board" manner, as men termed it? Miss Annable was unable to see why she should be idle, and wear her sisters cast-off clothes, any more than the man who had a room across the corridor should be idle and wear his rich brother's "rags and jags." This question of the utilization of talent had been logically met and settled a good while before, but the hindrance in the way of putting her theories into practice had been hard to overcome. Her sisters had aimed high, and brought down their game. It was no more than fair that she should do the same, her relatives had frequently told her, instead of occupying the fourth-story back in a crowded boarding-house, and making them a world of trouble in explaining and excusing her anomalous position. Their frequent assertions that sister Florence was exceedingly peculiar, and could not be induced to make a home with either of her relatives, were in the main true. Miss Annable could have made herself useful in either of these establishments, but her liberty was far too precious to jeopardize by any such arrangement. Here in the sky parlor certain hours of each day were her own, her very own.

A few hours later Miss Annable was driving in the park with some friends. She passed both of her sisters, and their recognition, though calculated to deceive her companions, was understood by her. Julia had communicated with Blanche, and they had both shown their displeasure in as marked a manner as the circumstances would permit.

This recalcitrant member of their aristocratic family was to be brought to terms. Florence Annable smiled as she thought of it.

Clarke Durivage rode along by the side of the landau, and chatted with the young ladies. For the first time since Florence had decided not to wear any more "cast offs" her courage failed her. She felt it to be a humiliating truth that she cared more for this man's good opinion than for anything else in the world; to think that she was quite independent of remark or criticism from any other quarter, but not from him, filled her with confusion and alarm. Mr. Durivage had been the only man she had ever met in society who had talked to her as if she were possessed of an equal intelligence.

Miss Annable canvassed the subject very thoroughly in these few minutes. Her scorn of her own weakness, as shown by the presence of this man, acted like a spur to her conscience.

"The die is cast," she told herself, as Mr. Durivage bade her good evening. "I will not wear jags, and so must play jigs."

The young lady did not estimate her musical talent at its true value. It was almost a case of genius. She could play the work of the most favored composers, and with a power and expression which delighted the most critical. And so it came to pass that Miss Annable was engaged at regular professional prices to play for a party at the house of the wealthy and distinguished Mrs. Van Courtland. Her sisters were both present, but neither of them came near her during the evening, and in this way she would [illegible] that there had been a quarrel.

"Good evening, Miss Florence."

"Good evening, Mr. Durivage."

"It is rather singular that there is no one here to play but you," the gentleman remarked. "I have been waiting a half hour to ask you to dance."

"It is not the least singular, Mr. Durivage," said the musician smiling heroically, "for I am regularly employed to play for Mrs. Van Courtland's guests this evening."

The plunge was made, the worst was over, and Florence felt that she could look herself squarely in the face when the evening was over.

"And you—you have struck out in this way for yourself?"

There was a strange quality in the gentleman's voice that his companion did not understand.

"Struck out?" Miss Annable laughingly answered. "That is a good phrase. It requires muscle, I assure you."

"But your sister, Miss Florence?"

"They are here. You must have seen them. The next piece is a quadrille, Mr. Durivage. Please listen to it critically. It is my own composition."

The music was a success. The applause and excitement that followed its conclusion amounted to an ovation. Mr. Durivage drew near the piano and read the title.

"Ladies and gentlemen," he said, in loud, clear tones, "the name of the original quadrille which has so delighted us is 'Rags, and Jags, and Velvet Gowns.'"

There came a time when Florence Annable could tell her friend, Mr. Durivage, the whole story, and the following is the substance of his reply:

"I determined," he said, "to woo and win you that night at Mrs. Van Courtland's. I had cared for you from the first day of our acquaintance, but how could I help feeling that you might be like your sisters—ultra-fashionable, purse-proud, regardful only of appearances. What kind of helpmeets would your sisters make if misfortune should overtake their husbands? And then, Florence, I have always maintained that it was just and reprehensible for a woman to be idle and dependent as for a man. As my wife, there will be no need for you to continue your professional career, but your talent must never be neglected, and for two reasons: First, because it will always be our greatest source of enjoyment, and next, because every woman should always hold in her hands the means of support.

A Hannibal (Mo.) man bought two pills and put them in his vest pocket. He also bought a small pearl button and put it in the same pocket. When it came time to take the pill he opened his mouth, shut his eyes and gulped one down. He was relieved of his headache and went on his way rejoicing. Afterward, having use for the collar button, he felt in his pocket and found two pills, but no button.

DRY GOODS.

An old lady from way back regions came to the city to do some "trading." As she looked around the elegant store in vague wonder a dandy floor walker approached her.

"What can I do for you today, madam?"

"I want to see the place where you sell dry goods."

"It is right here, madam. What kind of dry goods do you want?"

"Dried apples, mister."

[illegible]

A [illegible]

Pocahontas Times.

JOHN E. CAMPBELL,
EDITOR AND PROPRIETOR.

ADVERTISING RATES.

	1 m.	3 m.	6 m.	1 yr.
One inch	$ 1 00	$ 2 00	$ 3 00	$ 5 00
Three in.	2 00	4 00	6 00	10 00
Qr. column	3 00	6 00	10 00	17 00
Half col'n	6 00	12 00	20 00	30 00
One col'n	10 00	20 00	30 00	50 00

Reading notices, not exceeding five lines, twenty-five cents for each insertion, and five cents a line for each additional line.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION.

One copy, 1 yr., $1.00 in advance; after 6 months, $1.25; after 12 months, $1.50

These terms will be strictly complied with.

Entered at the Post-office at Huntersville, W. Va., as second class matter.

Huntersville, W. Va.

December 10, 1891.

RE-LOCATION QUESTION AT LAST SETTLED.

The question as to where our Court House shall be located, is at last finally settled by the people.

As the result shows that the will o over three-fifths of our people is that Marlinton shall have the Court House, it becomes us as citizens of a republic to bow with deference before the will of the people thus emphatically expressed.

In discussing the issues, through our columns, we have endeavored to be conservative, but we admit that it was with regret that we realized that the County Seat must seek a more central and convenient location to conform to the wish of the large majority of the citizens of our County as the vote shows that the desire for a change of location was general throughout the County.

The returns show that the voters were about all at the polls. The result was not occasioned by local prejudice or factional bitterness. The election was a fair, open, honest expression of the will of the voters. Now, let us lay aside all feeling except good-will, and let each and every one do all he can, by word and deed, to make our county seat what has been so appropriately styled, "the peoples' town—the principal town of our County."

Our County Court will be convened on next Saturday, Dec. 12th, to declare the result, and we will thus have this question finally settled, and leaving old ruts we start on the highway to general prosperity.

As soon as we can make necessary arrangements, we will move our paper to the new city and enlarge it to an 8 col. folio or twice the size it is now, and we trust that the liberal aid of our people, which has heretofore been so generously extended to us, will still be ours, and not ours only, but will be extended to the home of our adoption.

High Tariff Does not Hurt the Rich.

There is one significant and instructive paragraph in the Associated Press synopsis of opinions cabled from Paris of the effect of the McKinley bill on our trade with France. A Mr Vanbergen, "who annually exports to the United States textile goods to the value of 35,000,000 francs," is quoted as saying: "The new tariff has not greatly injured our trade in high-class goods. Our business in cheaper goods has diminished considerably." In other words, as the Sun and tariff reformers generally have insisted, it is the people of moderate means, or the actually poor, neither of whom can afford to pay fancy prices, who are injuriously affected by an unduly high tariff. Being unable to pay, they go without or buy an inferior article produced at a lower price in this country. In either case, they are made to bear the whole weight of the tariff iniquity. The rich, on the other hand, are not affected. They can afford to buy and do buy "high-class" goods, whatever the tariff tax upon them. They may object to being robbed for the benefit of tariff monopolists, but they do not suffer as the poor. The whole tariff system in this country is aimed with fatal directness at the great mass of consumers, with the practical result of making the burdens of poverty, the privations of small incomes much greater than they need be.—Baltimore Sun.

Here is a list of names which have been mentioned as the nominees of the Democratic party for President and Vice President:—Cleveland and Boies, Russell and Boies, Boies and Russell, Hill and Boies, Cleveland and Campbell, Hill and Campbell, Gorman and Campbell, Gorman and Boies, Russell and Gray, Flower and Campbell, Flower and Gray, Hill and Gray, Cleveland and Gray, Flower and Vorhees.

WASHINGTON LETTER.

From our regular correspondent.

WASHINGTON, D. C., Dec. 4th—The very spirited contest for the Speakership of the House of Representatives will close with the selection of one of the candidates by the democratic caucus which will be held tomorrow, but it will be years before it is forgotten. There have been many things to cause it to be remembered, not the least of which is the large number of candidates that will remain in the field up to the last—this is of itself highly creditable to the democratic party as an organization, as it is a party that does not tolerate bossim, but gives every man in its ranks an equal right to aspire to any honor within its gift. Another thing about it that will not soon be forgotten is the action of the republicans in trying by misrepresenting innocent remarks made by democrats, and in many instances by the outright manufacture of statements to create a feeling of entagonism between the friends of the several candidates—they succeeded but too well in some instances.

Whoever is selected for Speaker, the attempt will be made in certain quarters to make it appear that the selection makes certain the nomination for President next year of some one of the gentleman who have been prominently named for that honor. That is another republican scheme. There is not the slightest thing to base such a conclusion upon, no matter which of the candidates for Speaker may win. There are, to your correspondent's certain knowledge, men in the ranks of the supporters of each of the candidates who favor Mr. Cleveland, Govenor Hill, Govenor Gray, Senator Gorman and Governor Boies, so you see what nonsense it is to say that the success of any one of the candidates for Speakership will have any direct effect upon the nomination for President next year. Just as members of Congress have differed in their opinions of the best man for speaker, so will they differ when it comes to selecting a candidate for President. The National democratic convention, and not the House of Representatives, will name the presidential nominee of the party, republican busybodies to the contrary notwithstanding.

Representative Cooper, of Indiana, who originated the Raum investigation in the last Congress says that if Mr. Harrison persists in keeping Raum at the head of the Pension office he will move for another investigation. Mr. Cooper has secured a large addition to the stock of ammunition which the packed committee of the last Congress refused to allow him to use, and if Raum does not vacate the Pension office he will see to it that the next investigation does not end with a coat of whitewash.

It is stated here, but denied, that Secretary Foster's health is in a precarious condition. While denying that he is seriously sick, his friends admit that he is going South for several weeks' rest before he again takes up his work as Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. Harrison's friends in the republican party have been anxiously expecting this week that often announced statement from Mr. Blaine that he would not be the candidate of his party, it having been stated here the other day by ex-Senator Saunders, of Nebraska, whose daughter is Russell's wife, that Mr. Blaine would shortly take the public into his confidence; but alas, for the Harrison crowd, it seems to be only another false alarm, as Mr. Blaine says not a word, but continues to smile when visiting republicans tell him that they propose nominating him next year.

Attorney General Miller is not an admirer of the newspapers, probably because they have refused to class him as high as his own conceit tells him he should go; therefore it caused no surprise when he tried to cast a slur upon the press, while the argument in the cases against the constitutionality of the McKinley tariff law was proceeding before the Supreme Court. It came about this way. Mr. Stephen G. Clark, of New York, while arguing that the omission of the tobacco rebate clause in the bill as signed by the President invalidated the whole bill, produced a book kept in the Clerk's office showing the record of bills passed by the House, to show that the clause was omitted. In reply to the Attorney General's question, Mr. Clark said he was not advised as to whether there was any law for the keeping of the book. "If there is no such law," said the Attorney General with a sneer, "the book has no more weight than a newspaper publication."

Commissioner Roosevelt is back. He declines to discuss the story that Mr. Wanamaker is after his scalp, further than to say that he stands by everything he has ever said, which is equivalent to repeating his charge against the truthfulness of Mr. W.

HOME NEWS

—The election at this place pass ed off moderately quiet.

—A special term of the County Court will convene next Saturday.

—Mr. Peter D. Yeager, of Traveler's Repose is in the city.

—Mr. J. W. Talbott, of Philippi was in Huntersville Tuesday.

—Mr. J. H. Patterson,has returned from a visit to his family at Green Bank.

—Mess. Henry Barlow and J. K. Gay, of Edray, were in Huntersville to-day.

—The largest vote that was ever cast at this place was cast Tuesday.

—C. A. Lightner, Esq., of Green Bank and Mr. J. K. Taylor, of Dunmore called in our office to day.

—Sina Taylor, an old colored lunatic hanged herself in the jail at this place last Thursday morning.

—Mess. E. H. Moore and W. W. Beard, of Academy were in town today.

—Capt. J. W. Marshall, of Marlinton has been in town for a couple of days.

—Col. Jno. T. McGraw, Mess. Levi Gay,and Charley Callison, of Marlinton were in town to-day.

—Monday evening a colored boy was lodged in jail at this place for stealing $5.00 from Jacob L. Arbogast at Green Bank.

—Mr. H. A. Yeager, called to see us to-night (Wednesday) and reports that the election in the Green Bank district passed off quietly.

—There were so many persons in town on election day, that it is impossible for us to mention them all so we will not be partial.

—Rev. J. A. Loutenschlager will preach at this place Sunday the 27th inst.

—A train load of convicts passed through Covington on Tuesday morning on their way to the Hot Springs to labor on the company's works between that place and the Warm Springs.—Alleghany Sentinel.

—Attorneys C. F. Moore against C. H. removal and H. S. Rucker for removal made very able speeches in the court house Monday, and considering the very rough day there was a good turn-out.

—In the Virginia penitentiary there are 240 white men, 726 colored men, 2 white women and and 55 colored women, and there were 167 male convicts working outside, making a total of 1,190. The convicts did $17,176.16 worth of work on railroads during the year.

—Hon. S. B. Elkins has donated ten acres of ground and $30,000 in money towards the founding of a Baptist seminary in the town which bears his name. He says that he can easily raise that much more if necessary to complete it.

—About a week ago we sent our agent Mr. J. H. Clark,our subscription accounts at the Academy post office, for collection, and Tuesday we received the respective amounts and a years subscription in advance with scarcely an exception, for which we return our sincere thanks, both to our patrons and Mr. Clark for his kind services. We hope ere long gentlemen to give you a newspaper worthy your support.

—ISAIAH CARPENTER, of Preston county, claims to be one hundred and fourty-nine years of age. His family record shows that he was born in Loudoun county, Virginia, in 1742. He was well acquainted with Washington, Boone, Kenton and other early settlers, and was a teamster in General Braddock's army. His eldest son, who died fifteen years since, was one hundred years old at the time of his death, and he has a daughter, now residing in Maine, eighty years old. Mr. Carpenter's memory is good, and he weighs about two hundred pounds.

—L. B. McClung,a mason employed by the Chesapeake and Ohio Railway, was killed about three miles from Millboro on Monday. He had started on a trip to Pocahontas county in a small phaeton.—A team with a carriage that was hitched at Millboro Springs, became frightened just after Mr. McClung passed. They broke loose and dashed down the road in the same direction, and came in contact with him, The pole of the carriage struck him in the head, killing him instantly. He leaves a wife and large family to mourn their loss.—Alleghany Sentinel.

A Trip to Edray.

The Hillsboro Cornet Band having received an invitation to attend the public speaking at Edray Dec. 1st, early that morning twelve of the boys were snugly packed in a new wagon behind four spirited steeds with the reins in the hands of an expert driver. So away we went at the rate of about eight miles an hour. The boys all seemed in good tune, and quite a jolly crowd we were. But alas, ere we had made 3 miles of the trip one of our boys realized to his sorrow that it disfigured a brass horn to come in contact with a wagon wheel. So the boy began to retrace his steps toward the parental roof, where no doubt he expected to find some comfort, and be able to repair damages, judging from the manner in which he spoke of the "old family rolling pin." But a sympathising friend gave him a word of cheer and comfort which changed his mind, and he resumed the trip with renewed energy and pleasant anticipations for us all.

Marlinton being the prominent point on the route,we reached there in good time, and found the people very enthusiastic over that booming city. The band was asked to play a piece, which they did. But we thought we could tell by the countenance of a very whorthy Divine in the crowd (who is a good judge of music) that there might have been a discordant sound made. Leaving Marlinton we arrived at Edray at 12 o'clock, where we were taken in hand by our much esteemed friend Rev. G. P. Moore who took us directly to his house, where we were all made to feel at home. In a few minutes we were invited to the dining room, where we beheld a table groaning under its load of substantials and delicacies, so pleasing to the appetites of all present.

After dinner we began to circulate among the people, and found them from all parts of the county.

The good people impressed us with that determination that they are going to keep abreast with this progressive age. And those Marlintonians are all men of push and enterprise, and men that Pocahontas County hould feel proud of.

We had the pleasure of meeting a goodly number from our present capitol. They have warm places in our hearts, and we certainly admire the spirit in which they cherish the good judgment of our forefathers, and the vigorous fight they are making to perpetuate it.

The time having arrived for us to return home, there was a collection taken for the benefit of the band. The public collection with private subscriptions amounted to no paltry sum to the band, and to assure you of that fact, we received as much as five and ten dollars, from single individuals. And now we return our most heartfelt thanks to every contributor to our relief, and also to the people generally for the kindness shown us in every way.

We close hoping to have the pleasure of meeting you all again, and be better prepared to entertain you with our music.

ONE OF THE BOYS.

Dom Pedro ex Emperor of Brazil, died in Paris on the 4th inst.

Falling walls in St. Paul, on the 4th inst. killed fifty men.

940 AGAINST 475

SAY THEY WANT THE

Court House Removed.

MARLINTON,

IS NOW THE COUNTY SEAT OF POCAHONTAS.

ONLY 4 VOTES AGAINST IT IN THE EDRAY DISTRICT.

91 OVER THE NECESSARY THREE-FIETHS.

OFFICIAL RETURNS.

Names of Precincts.	For relocation.	Against relocation.
HUNTERSVILL PECINCT,	60	118
FROST "	21	48
BUCKEYE "	76	3
EDRAY "	255	1
SPLIT ROCK "	88	0
ACADEMY "	380	25
TRAVELER'S REPOSE	30	34
GREEN BANK "	12	210
DUNMORE "	18	36
Total vote cast	940	475

—"I am compelled to announce, brethren," observed the minister, taking off his glasses and wiping them, "that our regular Wednesday night prayer meeting will not be held this week. I shall be on hand, of course, but the janitor will be unavoidably absent that evening, and it takes two to make a prayer meeting. We will sing the doxology and be dismissed.

—In a "Life of Lincoln," the biographer says that on a certain occasion an intimate friend of the President asked him the extent of his bank account. Mr. Lincoln replied: "I have exactly $10,000." "Ten Thousand dollars!" repeated the friend in amazement, "how on earth did you make it?" To which Lincoln answered: "I made $5,000 by minding my own business, and $5,000 more by letting other people's business alone." There is a piquant moral to this story, and as the average individual is not rocking in the wealth of Croesus,let him or her follow the example of the illustrious president, if for no other reason than improving their respective bank accounts."

A Novel Railroad Case.

W. A. Richerson, who keeps a grocery store at Buena Vista, and his clerk, L. J. Campbell,have been arrested on a somewhat novel charge. Some days ago the passenger train on the Norfolk and Western Railroad ran into and killed a bull belonging to Richerson near the Beuna Vista Junction. Richerson put in a claim for damages, but the Norfolk and Western authorities, thinking the case somewhat suspicious, sent Detective Early there to investigate it. Early claims to have obtained a confession from Campbell to the effect that acting under Richerson's directions, he had tied the bull on the track for the purpose of having it killed in order to get damages. At a preliminary hearing both men were sent to jail to await their trial.

There were 7,064,480 letters received at the dead letter office during the past fiscal year.

An insane man demanded $1,200,000 of Russel Sage on the 3rd inst. and when refused he blew up himself with a dynamite bomb, killing five persons. Mr. Sage was slightly injured.

NOTICE OF TRUSTEE'S SALE.

By virtue of a Trust Deed made the 20th day of August 1886 by [illegible] Skiles and Jennie B. Skiles and James R. Apperson to R. W. Baldwin, Trustee, and in pursuance of an order of the Circuit Court of Pocahontas County (West Virginia), made on the 20th day of October 1891 "In the matter of R. W. Baldwin, Trustee," appointing the undersigned as Trustee to execute the provisions of said Deed of Trust instead of said R. W. Baldwin, former trustee who is dead, and Richard Baldwin the beneficiary in said Trust Deed, having so requested, I, the undersigned acting as trustee under authority above stated, shall, on

MONDAY, 28th DECEMBER 1891,

proceed to sell to the highest bidder at public auction in front of the Court House of Pocahontas County, at Huntersville, W. Va., for two adjoining parcels of land of ¼ acre each, with the hotel building and other buildings thereon being the ONE ACRE of ground at MARLINTON in said County formerly owned and used as a Hotel property by said James R. Apperson and later by said Jennie B. Skiles, and which is more fully described in said deed of Trust recorded in the Clerk's Office of the County Court of said Pocahontas County at page 455 and following pages of Deed Book No. 17.

CASH

URIAH HEVENER Trustee,
as successor of R. W. Baldwin, original Trustee.

Nov. 26-4t Printers fee $9.00.

Pocahontas Times.

JOHN E. CAMPBELL,
EDITOR AND PROPRIETOR.

ADVERTISING RATES.

	1 m.	3 m.	6 m.	1 yr.
One inch	$ 1 00	$ 2 00	$ 3 00	$ 5 00
Three in.	2 00	4 00	6 00	10 00
Qr. column	3 00	8 00	10 00	17 00
Half col'n	8 00	12 00	20 00	30 00
One col'n	10 00	20 00	30 00	50 00

Reading notices, not exceeding five lines, twenty-five cents for each insertion, and five cents a line for each additional line.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION.

One copy, 1 yr., $1.00 in advance; after 6 months, $1.25; after 12 months, $1.50

These terms will be strictly complied with.

Entered at the Post-office at Huntersville, W. Va., as second class matter.

Huntersville, W. Va.
December 10, 1891.

MAN AND WOMAN.

Story of the First Thanksgiving

The November sun was sinking in the Western skies. Another day had gone and no news from the ship. With darkness a pall of gloom settled over the little band of settlers. There was so much need that the food had to be apportioned.

Burton Laird had married Edward Love's daughter a month previously. She was a beautiful young woman of 20; he a sedate Lieutenant in Her Majesty's army.

As the sun's last beams had faded beyond the Western horizon, prayerful people wended their way to the quiet little chapel on the hill side. Edward Love was too ill to go. At his bedside were Alice and Burton Laird.

"Go, dear children," said the old man, "and pray for relief, for it is well to do so."

And so it seemed to both. They bent and kissed him with that tender affection only born of poverty and parential ties, and then left him. They knelt near the quaint altar and watched the pale lips of the good man utter holy words—words faintly heard by the listeners.

The voice grew fainter and weaker, as that of starving men must.

B[illegible] tried to sing, but the melody of their murmurs died away under the roof.

Burton Laird thought his wife leaned more heavily on his shoulder.

Then her voice was silent. Her face whitened under the dim light from the pulpit. Her eyes put on a dying look. She sighed and ceased to speak.

With a gasp she fell forward on his breast. He lifted her in his arms as if she were a babe and carried her out into the open air.

There was a gust of sharp wind which quickly revived her

She opened her eyes.

Until now Burton Laird had been strong. As he noted the pallor of her face his anguish overwhelmed him. He called aloud to Heaven to spare the wife of his bosom.

She heard him.

"We have loved each other well," she murmured, "and if we must part here it will only be to meet in that happy, happy land, where there is neither grief nor suffering. The Heaven for which we have sacrificed earth will be ours for all eternity. Weep not dear that I go first."

Burton Laird felt as he never felt before. He saw the sun of the young life sinking faster than that which had an hour before bored low upon the horizon of the New World, and he would be left in darkness forever more.

"Pity us," he cried in anguish that seemed to tear his soul from within. Speak not of grief 'till you have seen the tears of warlike men.

At that instant, against the dark horizon of the sky, sweeping down from the bosom of the seething ocean, came the ship so long expected.

From the rock beyond, the look out had seen it. His shout arose in the distance.

"The ship!"

"The ship!"

"The ship is here!"

The glad tidings swept down the hill-side and along the valley.

Then from the church rushed all the worshipers.

Weak voices' utterings of thanks giving soon resounded.

Burton Laird lifted his wife that she might see the glad sight the ocean presented.

"Thank heaven!" she cried; "you will live. Many will be saved, but I must die."

"Die," cried her husband in awful anguish. "No, it must not be; aid is at hand."

"Too late for me," the voice was weaker "but mourn not at that. I will tell you how it is: Father's life is far more valuable than mine, and for four days I have given him my share of food instead of his. But for that he would now be gone, and they look to him for aid and comfort in their trials. He will be powerful in the future of this New World—I am but a woman, you know."

"And I, your husband, never dreamed of this sacrifice. How gladly——But, no, you shall not die."

She had fainted.

Throwing himself beside her on the ground he drew the silvery sword from the sheath which hung at his side.

He drew the blade across his arm and then placed the wound against the white lips that had fallen rigidly apart.

She received the hot gush of his life's blood as a child would the milk from it's mother's breast, and without that loathing which knowledge of the truth would have given her.

And he, binding up his wound, bore her into the church and laid her down, wrapped in a blanket some one had dropped on the way to view the blessed spectacle of the ship's arrival.

She was saved.

Burton Laird knew it.

On the outside, Her Majesty's governor was proclaiming the arrival of the ship with its supplies and requesting that the following day be made one of Thanksgiving.

And there was great rejoicing, too

It was the first Thanksgiving in the New World.

SHE HAD HEARD HIM BEFORE.

A little girl in one of the neighboring towns is the author of a number of bright remarks. One Sunday not long ago she was visiting a friend, and went with her to church. The pastor is addicted to very long prayers. Several days later the line of conversation at the breakfast table fell upon funerals. The little girl's mother said she wanted her funeral as simple a service as possible. She said she would like a certain clergerman make a few remarks, and Rev. Mr. —— to utter a prayer.

Rev. Mr. —— was the clergerman the young Miss heard the Sunday before. She promptly exclaimed: "I'm glad you are going to have him make the prayer."

"And why are you glad?"

"Because then we will be sure you were not burried in a trance," was the unexpected reply.

"Will you think of me when I'm gone, love?" asked the dying husband.

"Yes," sobbed his inconsolable wife, "every time I am compelled to light the morning fire."

She—Don't you feel a draught over there by the window?

He (taking the hint)—I don't know but I do. What would you advise me to do; pull the blind down or move over nearer to you?

She—Both.

The old man who marries the "dear little duck" usually gets henpecked" and acknowledges himself an "old goose."

When a politician starts out to fix his "fence" his opponents begin to "rail."

When a dude "goes to the dogs" he probably goes to the poodle variety.

They are never alone that are accompanied with noble thoughts.

—If you want Letter and Note heads, neatly printed and put up in tablet form, cheaper than you can get them anywhere else, call at THE TIMES office. We also do all kinds of nice job printing, and have on hands a nice line of Stationary, business cards, &c. &c.

POCAHONTAS TIMES.

Vol. 9. JOHN E. CAMPBELL, EDITOR AND PROPRIETOR. Huntersville, West Virginia, Thursday, December 17, 1891. Terms of Subscription, $1.00 PER YEAR IN ADVANCE. No. 21

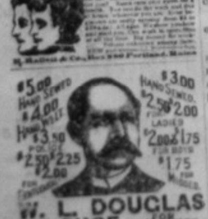
Official Directory of Pocahontas County

Judge of Circuit Court, A. N. Campbell.
Prosecuting Attorney, L. M. McClintic.
Sheriff, J. C. Arbogast.
Deputy Sheriff, Geo. W. Callison.
Cl'k Co. Court, S. L. Brown.
Cl'k Cir. Court, J. H. Patterson.
Assessor, C. O. Arbogast.
Com'rs Co. Ct. C. E. Beard, S. B. Hannah, G. M. Kee.
Co. Surveyor, Geo. Baxter

THE COURTS.

Circuit Court convenes on the first Tuesday in April, 3rd Tuesday in June and 3rd Tuesday in October.

County Court convenes on the 1st Tuesday in January, March, October and second Tuesday in July. July is levy term.



GREAT GRANDMOTHER'S STORY.

Many years ago a girl and her great-grandmother sat together—the girl in tears. Said Great-grandmamma Hudson, sitting very straight, not lolling, at her 88 years, as did her great-grandchild of 18.

"Young folks think old folks are fools, but old folks know what young folks are."

"That's because you're old, grandma," sobbed Linda.

"No; it is because I was once young," said the old lady.

"But he is the only one I shall ever love," said Linda. "Papa is cruel to me. Why does he think ill of Lewis? He knows nothing about him. I shall die if separated."

"I was going to die too," said great-grandmother, "but I didn't."

"Oh, tell me, please," cried Linda, "had you a lover? Did they separate you? I never knew you had a love story—that is, that kind of one."

"Yes," said the old lady. "I had a lover. You can have many lovers, but never more than one father and mother. Folks think of that when it's too late. When father said, Cecil was Lord knows who, and he should not come to see me, remember I almost hated him for it. When mother said she did 't like him either I almost hated her. Cruel creatures that stood between me and my young lover—that was what my parents seemed to me then; and I was worse than you, my dear, ever so much worse, for it seemed wicked to me that any one should take it for granted a man was not worthy of love because he was a stranger, and I made preparations to run away with Cecil and marry him at Gretna Green.

"Everything was ready; I had my jewelry in my bosom and my little bundle on my arm, and was creeping out of a side door that led into the garden when a hand came down on my shoulder and a voice cried out:

"'My girl, is this the way you use us? and there was my father.

"My father's face was white as a ghost and his hand shook as he held mine.

"'Oh, father, father! I cried, 'if you would only let me have my will in this one thing. You can't make a girl love or hate by saying so.'

"He stood holding me firm and fast.

"'It is Emeline who has betrayed me,' I said and though they would never admit it I knew the maid had proven false.

"Well, they locked me up in my room. How often I cried out 'I shall die if I am separated from Cecil.'

"I am very old, but when I think of it my old pain comes back again. His eyes were like black diamonds and he had an olive cheek and full red lips, and your men with padded shoulders and hollow chests would'nt look like men standing beside him.

"It was a dreary time and my health broke down under it. I had a fever, and when I was well again the doctor said I must have a change; so mother decided to take me to the seaside; but first we were to go by stage coach to London and visit an aunt I had there.

"It was the day of stage coaches and the day of highwaymen.

"Going over a certain common on our way coaches had more than once been stopped. The men were armed always and the women trembled when they saw horsemen riding towards them.

"'Your money or your life,' was their word, and they kept it.

"'If we should meet the highwaymen!' said my mother; but I was not afraid. I didn't care whom we met or what happened to me.

"We rode away from our home in the bright daylight and stopped for dinner and to change horses at an inn; then we rode on again. It would be nightlong before we reached London. I sat in the coach with my head on my mother's sholder, thinking of just one thing—Cecil. Should I never see him again—never, never, never? Would he not follow me and carry me off by force? Could I not somehow let him know and escape from my aunt's house in London and be married, so that no one could part us? Oh, I was so miserable—miserable. Nothing like making plans that can come to nothing and burst like bubbles when we have thought them out, for wretchedness.

"The afternoon faded out and the sun set. The moon rose.

"'See what a lovely moon!' said my mother. But I had not cared to look at the moon since I saw her over the garden wall that night I had tried to run away. Rumble went the coach, crack went the whip.

"Suddenly there was a tumult.

"'Gentlemen,' cried the guard—'gentlemen, I'm afraid we are to have some trouble here. See to your weapons, gentlemen!'

"Then the coach came to a stand.

"The shrieking women clung together. Four masked men rode to the door. The coachman and guards lay in a ditch. One of the gentlemen was bound; the other was old and lame. They were rifling his pockets while he was screaming. They took out a gold watch, a purse and his snuff box with diamonds on it. They had already the other's money.

"Then one—the largest, the handsomest figure—bent over us.

"'Don't fear, ladies,' he said in a soft voice. 'All we want is whatever valuables you may have about you.'

"Mamma began to scream.

"The lady who sat next to her fainted.

"We could not see the man's face, for he was masked, and we were in the shadow of the coach.

"'Something shines on your finger,' he said; 'let me see it.'

"He caught at the chain on which I wore a locket with a curl of Cecil's hair.

"'Don't take that!' I cried. 'Don't take that!'

"I clutched it. Our heads were close together. I saw his chin and mouth under his mask. At the same moment my face was thrust into the moonlight.

"Amy!" I heard him whisper to himself, and I knew Cecil.

"Mean while something had happened. Two gentlemen had ridden up—the one who had been bound was free. For once the tables had been turned upon the robbers.

"Then one had ridden away; two were bound and one lay bleeding. This last one was Cecil.

"I knew now that my father had not been wrong. Cecil was even worse thought him. He was a highwayman, a bad man and the companion of bad men—a creature who cut purses on the public road.

"They were not all ignorant men, these highwaymen, by any means.

"Many had good birth, education and manners. Yes, a bad man! But how could I hate him all at once! I understand that my father had been right in parting us; but those lips had kissed me—those hands held mine.

"'The ladies need fear no longer,' said one of the gentlemen. 'Those fellows are not in a condition to molest them.'

"Then he said (men didn't say such highflown things then): 'How merciful is the gentler sex! It is compassionate to the erring as well as the virtuous.'

"For I had torn my hand from my mother's and knelt beside Cecil.

"They thought I pitied a wounded robber—that was all; but this is what we whispered in the darkness;

"'Amy, you know what I am now; but I love you.'

"And I answered: 'Cecil, I hate your deeds without hating you.'

"Those were the last words we ever spoke to each other—the very last."

"Did you never see him again?" asked the girl. "Oh, Grandmamma! never again!"

The old woman looked into her eyes.

"He was a very bad man, my dear," she said, "very bad; and I never saw him again. I believe he died a shameful death one day at the hands of the executioner. But' you see, it was because I have been young, not because I am old, that I say you young folks are fools.

"It was a good while—yes, a good while—after that night in the stage-coach before I came to my senses sufficiently to thank dear papa for his watchfulness over me, and be really glad that I had never been Cecil's wife; but I did at last, my dear—I did at last; and I married my good husband, your great-grandfather—whom you never saw; and we were always happy. The heart of a woman is a mystery and has been since Eve my little girl."

BOURBON BROUGHT HIM.

A good story is related of the Hon. B. Lawless, a former member of Lewisville bar, and who came to this city from Glasgow, Ky., says the Chicago Press. He was a "long winded" talker, and when he arose to make an argument he didn't know when to stop. On one occasion he was making a speech before Judge Ballard, in the United States Court. He had spoken several hours and the Judge and every body else were thoroughly tired out, though they were helpless. At last Judge Ballard beckoned his brother, Jack Ballard, to him and implored him to stop Lawless if he could.

"Oh, that's easy enough," replied the brother. "I'll stop him inside of three minutes.

There was a great deal of curiosity to see how this could be accomplished, as the orator seemed to be nowhere near the end of his speech. Jack Ballard took a pencil and sheet of paper and wrote:

"MY DEAR COLONEL: As soon as you finish your magnificent argument, I would like you to join me in the clerk's office in a bumper of fine old bourbon."

The note was handed to the orator who paused at the end of a soaring period, drew his glasses from his pocket and said:

"And, now, if it please your Honor and you, gentlemen of the jury, I leave the case with you."

He picked up his hat and was in the clerk's office in about a minute.

Jake—"The boil on the back of my neck is getting awful painful."

Cora—"You ought to be proud of that."

Jake—"Why so?"

Cora—"It may supply a need—come to a head.

TWO SORTS OF BOYS.

First City Boy—I hope we won't take a country house again. I hate it.

Second City Boy—What! Hate the country?

"No the country is good enough, but there's always a garden; and ma and pa go 'bout crazy over it, plantin' things in the spring, and then, when the hot weather comes, they get tired and stop botherin' 'bout it, and then the weeds come up, and then they always want me to weed garden, 'cause it's good, healthful outdoor exercise for boys of my age. I hate it."

"Well you're a champ. We have a garden every summer, too, but I don't do any weeding; not much I don't."

"Have you a gardner?"

"No."

"Then how do you get out of it."

"Well you see, I can never learn the difference between weeds and other things, and by the time I've dug up a lot of flowers and veg'tables mother comes runnin' out and says I ain't big enough to weed garden. Then I go fishin."

A FINANCIER'S ADVICE.

Suggestions for Young Men who Wish to Succeed.

The boy who is wanted in the business world of to-day must be educated, says Russell Sage in an admirable article on "The Boy That is Wanted," in November Ladies' Home Journal. If his parents cannot afford to give him a high school or college education, he must learn to study without the aid of a teacher, in the early morning before business begins, and in the evenings after business hours. It can no longer be truthfully said that an education is out of anyone's reach. Our splendid school system, where one can study by day or in the evening, has put the priceless treasure of an education within the reach of all. The main thing, in the beginning, that I would impress upon boys is the one great commandments, "Honor thy father and thy mother, that thy days may be long in the land which the Lord thy God giveth thee." The boy who respects his father and mother, who treats his sisters and brothers with loving kindness, has laid the foundation for a successful career. You will do as your parents tell you, and that will certainly be to study. Don't be in a hurry to get away from your school books. The cares and responsibilities of business life will come soon enough. Go to school as long as you can, and, remember, every hour spent in study in your youth will be worth money to you in after life. Read good books—the Bible above all. Make yourself acquainted with history. Study the progress of nations and the careers of men who have made nations great. Study religion, science, statecraft and history. Learn to read inteligently, so that you may turn to practical use in after life the readings of your youth. Be sure you begin right. Do not waste time in reading trashy books.

"What's become of John?"

"What John?"

John Thompson."

"Why, haven't you heard?"

"No. The last time I saw him was early in the fall, when he said he was going to reform his life [illegible] business—in fact, he was going to forge ahead."

"He said that, did he?"

"Yes."

"Well, he made a little mistake somehow and forged a signature. He's doing six years.

Pocahontas Times.

JOHN E. CAMPBELL,
EDITOR AND PROPRIETOR.

ADVERTISING RATES.

	1 m.	3 m.	6 m.	1 yr.
One inch	$ 1 00	$ 2 00	$ 3 00	$ 5 00
Three in.	2 00	4 00	8 00	10 00
Qr. column	3 00	6 00	10 00	17 00
Half col'n	6 00	12 00	20 00	30 00
One col'n	10 00	20 00	30 00	50 00

Reading notices, not exceeding five lines, twenty-five cents for each insertion, and five cents a line for each additional line.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION.

One copy, 1 yr., $1.00 in advance; after 6 months, $1.25; after 12 months, $1.50

These terms will be strictly complied with.

Entered at the Post-office at Huntersville, W. Va., as second class matter.

Huntersville, W. Va.

December 17, 1891.

MARLINTON.

We had the pleasure of spending last Friday night and Saturday in Marlinton, the new city on the Greenbrier river.

The Pocahontas Development Company which is composed of men of wealth and influence propose, as they say, to make Marlinton a city, and we have every reason to believe they will, knowing as we do the vast surroundings of timber, coal, iron ore, limestone, building stone, fire clay, and in fact everything that is calculated to furnish for ages to come, industrial manufacturing plants of almost every description.

It is situated at an elevation of nearly 2000 feet above the Atlantic, and it is destined to become a great summer resort.

Ex-Senator Camden says that Marlinton will become at no distant day the largest manufacturing city in the interior of the State.

The Pittsburge & W. Va. and C. O. railroads are under contract to meet at Marlinton and form a junction there, and it is believed that these roads will be completed within one year.

The Company, we understand have secured one of the largest tanneries in the United States to come there, which will employ several hundred men, and are negociating for other plants, which no doubt satisfactory arrangements will be consummated with some of them.

Messrs. Levi Gay and John Peters are making arrangements and buying machinery for a large brick plant, which they will have in operation in the early spring.

The lot drawing comes of the 10th of March, and then the city will begin to assume shape. Manufacturing plants, business and dwelling houses will spring up in every direction. The contract for the new Court House and public buildings for the County will be let we presume within a few months and work commenced on them as soon as the winter is over. There are now under construction two large store houses, a bank building, livery stable, one or two dwelling houses, our printing office and we learn a drug store, doctor's office, saddler's shop &c. will be started in a few days.

Next year will be a great year for Marlinton, and no doubt all who invest these will realize handsome profits.

The President's message was read in both houses of Congress on the 8th inst. The salient features of it, are foreign affairs, the Tariff taking strong protective position, finance opposing the free coinage of silver, Postal affairs urging better facilities for rural communities and [illegible]. He opposes the admission of Utah until polygamy is wiped out. He believes the experiment of making soldiers of Indians successful. He [illegible] regrets that the force bill did not become a law.

Mrs. James K. Kines, living near Calverton, Fauquier county, Va., and her three children were brutally butchered on the 9th, and the building set fire to conceal the crime. A man named Heflin working in the neighborhood, was arrested, and under the influence of fear from lynchers, confessed to committing the crime, to an officer, who was hurrying him out of the reach of the lynchers—Another man named Dye, whose daughter Heflin was to marry, is under arrest, as well as the daughter and her mother. It is believed a conspiracy was formed to kill Mrs. Kines, rob the house of money, and then appropriate it to a weedding feast.

Desperate Fight Between Man and Bear.

A fight occurred on the 5th inst. between a man and a bear at the timber camp of Stetson & Co., on Dearborn creek, in Lincoln county. Arnold Moore was cook at the shanty where the workman boarded, and for some time had noticed pilfering in the pantry, but supposed the dogs were doing the mischief. Saturday evening he returned to the camp, after an absence of some hours, and was met at the threshold of the house by a huge black bear. A fight began at once and in earnest. Moore had nothing for defense but a long, keen bladed clasp knife, which he opened and began what proved to be a desperate fight, lasting for some minutes. First the man and then the bear was on top. After a fearful struggle Moore pierced the heart of the bear with his knife, and the bear fell dead at his feet. Moore was bloody and mangled, one finger gone and one ear missing, with wounds and scratches on all parts of the body. The bear weighed 400 pounds when dressad and had over fifty knife thrusts in his body.

Where The First American Flag was Made.

The House where Betsy Ross made the first American flag stands at 239 Arch street, Philadelphia. Betsy was consulted by Washington and George Morris about the flag and suggested a five cornered star, which was adopted. Then she made the flag, and afterward others for the fleet then in the Deleware river. The house in which she lived is now in a business part of the city. Betsy had the contract to make all the government flags for many years. She was married three times. Her first husband, John Clay Poie, being a lined descendant of Oliver Cromwell. The old house is owned by Mrs. Amelia Mudd.—Jackson Bugle.

WASHINGTON LETTER.

From our regular correspondent.

WASHINGTON, D. C., Dec. 4th—

Mr. Harrison's annual message to Congress is a strong bid for renomination at the hands of his party, and all that now remains to make his nomination certain is that Mr. Blaine shall write that letter which the public has for a year or more been periodically informed that he was just on the eve of writing, declaring that he will under no circumstances accept the nomination. He may or may not write such a letter; just now it is again positively stated that he will do so in a few days.

The only part of the message deserving of the slightest commendation is that dealing with the several foreign complications which have occurred during the past year. The rest of it with one or two exceptions is worthy only of the condemnation of those who believe only in democratic ideas of the administration of the Government. He strongly endorses the Government guarantee of the $100,000,000 of bonds which ex Senator Warner Miller estimates as necessary to build the Nicaragua canal; he wants to interfere with the sovereign rights of a State as lately exercised by the Michigan legislature, by the adoption of a constitutional amendment providing a method for the election of members of Congress and the electrial college—Constitutional amendments have always been a republican fad; he proves that Senator Gorman and the other democratic leaders have been right in asserting that the notorious Force bill was not dead, but only temporarily shelved by lamenting the failure to pass that bill and proposing that "8 to 7" commission be appointed by the Supreme Court for the purpose of considering the "evils connected with our election system." This is a willy attempt on the part of Mr Harrison to get a partisan commission appointment that would report in favor of the enactment of a law similar in all respects to the force bill, but the democratic party has been tricked by one "8 to 7" Commission and is not likely to be caught in the same trap a second time. The principal "evil" in our election system, in Mr. Harrison's mind, is that democrats are elected where he wishes republicans to be elected; if that could be reversed he would consider the system perfect.

Mr. Harrison naively informs an overtaxed country that the Commissioner of Pensions, after a careful examination of the subject, is of the opinion that the estimate of $144,956,000, which included in the annual report of the Secretary of the Interior, will be sufficient to pay the pensions for the year ending June 30, 1893.

The first bill introduced in the Senate was that prepared by Superintendent Porter, providing for a permanent census bureau. Mr. Harrison does not mention this subject in his message.

There has been a good deal of nonsense written about the election of Speaker shutting out a prominent candidate for the democratic Presidential nomination. The National convention only, has authority to settle that question.

If Jerry Simpson does not catch the Speaker's eye as often as he wishes, it will not be because of his location, as he has secured a seat in the very front row. Jerry has not recovered yet from his disappointment at the small vote his candidate for Speaker received. He thinks that instead of 8 the Alliance candidate should have had about 40 votes.

The meeting of the executive committee of the National Democratic Committee here early this week was an important event for the party and a very pleasant event for those who attended it. January 21, 1892, was the date set for the purpose of naming the time and place for holding the next National convention of the party. The time for holding the convention will probably be about the first week in July, but the place is as yet a matter of doubt, Representatives Mills characterises as absurd the rumor that he intended to resign. That he is disappointed he does not deny, but the idea of resigning has never occured to him. He is not that kind of a man; and unless the Govenor of Texas shall call a special session of the legislature of that State, which shall elect Mr. Mills Senator, to fill the unexpected term of Senator Reagan, there is every probability that Mr. Mills will serve out his term in the House, although it will not be surprising if he should decline to again assume the responsibilities and hard work of chairman of the Ways and Means Committee.

HOME NEWS

—Delinquent land sale last Monday.

Mr. G. M. Kee, of Marlinton, was a visitor to our city Monday.

—Several new subscribers this week.

—Deputy sheriff Geo. W. Callison, of Locust, was in town the first of the week.

—Messrs. Jas. Snyder, of Altoona, Pa. and J. C. Armontrout of Traveler's Repose, called to see us Monday.

—Capt. Wm. L. McNeel, Messrs. G. S. McNeel Edgar Beard and John Sydenstricker, of Academy were in the city Monday.

—Sheriff J. C. Arbogast, of Green Bank and C. B. Swecker, of Dunmore, were in town the first of the week.

—Willie Bester, of Baltimore, a little nephew of S. L. Brown, Esq., of this city, arrived Monday to make his home with him for a while.

—Rev. W. T. Price, of Marlinton, conducted a Sacramental meeting at this place, commencing Saturday night and continuing until Sunday night.

—Davis Barlow, Esq., of Edray, closed his school at this place last Saturday. Mr. Barlow while in Huntersville made many warm friends, and as a teacher he gave entire satisfaction.

—Col Jno. T. McGraw, president of the Pocahontas Development Company, who has been in this County for the past few weeks looking after the interest of the Company has returned to his home in Grafton.

—Mr. G. F. Crummit, the saddle and harness maker at Marlinton informs us that he is doing a good business, which we are glad to learn, as he is a splendid workman, and deserves a liberal patronage.

—We are requested to announce that there will be a Christmas Tree in the Methodist church at this place Christmas eve for the benefit of the children. All are invited to take part and put on presents for their friends.

—On the morning of the 16th of Dec. 1890, one year ago to-day, (Wednesday) the deepest snow ever seen in this county, commenced falling, continuing until the 17th, when it measured at this place about 40 inches deep.

—Capt. C. B. Swecker, the auctioneer, will lay off a town near Alexander West Va. at the forks of the railroad. That place is bound to make a business town for there is health, wealth and prosperity around this place. There is as much money paid out daily at that point as any where in the State. There is a fine opening for merchants, hotel keepers and manufactories. West Virginia is on a boom and Alexander will be "in it."—Buckhannon Bee.

—A nine pound boy was born to Rice Moore, Esq. and wife Monday morning. Thus it is, man that is born young is of many days and full of trouble. Colic attacketh the infant and he crieth aloud in the stillness of the night. Then his paternal dad uttereth language not found in holy writ, and growing desperate he flingeth back the drapery of his couch, leapeth out clothed in the spectral garments of the night and seeketh somewhat paregoric wherewith to sooth his infant posterity.

—Our new printing office at Marlinton will be 22 feet wide and 40 feet long, two stories high.

A CARD OF THANKS.

I desire to return my heatfelt thanks to the people of this County for their liberal financial help after I got burnt out.

I have rebuilt and have a new lot of tools and am now prepared to furnish coffins and furniture on short notice also I have on hands a fine line of coffin triming for sale.

Respectfully,
C. B. SWECKER.

COUNTY COURT.

The County Court convened at this place last Saturday for the purpose of declaring the County seat removal election. There were present Messrs. Edgar Beard, G. M. Kee and Samuel B. Hannah, gentlemen Commissioners.

After examining the several returns, the result was declared as previously announced in this paper. And it was ordered that S. L. Brown Clerk of the County advertise for plans and specifications for the new Court House and jail, together with convenient fire proof Circuit and County Clerks' offices, and also to advertise for the erection and construction of the same. Buildings to be built of brick and stone or stone or brick.

DOUBLE MURDER.

Charles Brumfield Shoots and Kills Two Men in Lincoln County.

CHARLESTON, W. VA., December 12.—News was received here to-night from Lincoln county giving the details of a double murder that took place down on Big Ugly Creek Thursday. Additional interest is given to the crime by the fact that the murderer is none other than Charles Brumfield, who, a few weeks ago, to save his mother's life, fired two bullets from his Winchester through his father, Paris Brumfield, of unenviable notoriety in the southern part of the State for many years.

A ruffian named Stone, has been runing a saloon at the mouth of Big Ugly Creek on Guyan river for a little more than a year. He has had the reputation of handling a quality of "Mountain Dew" that was guaranteed to bring about trouble whenever it was imbibed to more than a limited degree. There have been numerous shooting scrapes about Stone's place during the past few months, but no one has been killed till last Thursday.

On that day, there were a number of local lights and a party of lumbermen from up the Guyan loitering about the place, all drinking more or less. Along toward evening, Charles Brumfield drove up and hitching his horse, went into the tavern and joined the semi-intoxicated crowd.

More liquor was ordered, and soon the entire crowd was in a fighting humor. Brumfield and one of the up river lumberman had a few words about a trivial matter. Harsh words led to epithets, and in less time than it takes to tell it, the scene of conviviality was changed to a shooting match. Brumfield carried a Winchester and was extremely handy with it, and before his fellow disputant could get a bead, he had a bullet hole through his hat.

The first shot was the signal for the firing to begin, and for five minutes nothing but the sharp crack of rifles and revolvers could be heard, and a man employed by Stone said afterward that no fewer than a hundred shots were fired.

When the firing ceased it was found that George Smith had been shot through the heart, and that Willis Messenger had a bullet wound through his head, the ball having passed through diagonally from the front. Messenger was not dead, but cannot recover.

Several others were injured more or less seriously, but none fatally. The big lumberman who was in the way of Brumfield's first bullet escaped unhurt, barring a part in the hair where the ball grazed the scalp.

The names of the injured could not be learned, but several of them are pretty severely hurt.

After the affray Brumfield mounted his horse and rode away and up to this time is at large. He is blamed with firing both the fatal shots. None of the participants have been arrested, the lumbermen who were not hurt, having gone back to their camp and the others having dispersed into the mountains.

Brumfield bears about as bad a reputation as his father whom he killed a short time ago. His father had no less than a dozen murders laid at his door, and this makes five for his son. It was reported after the younger Brumfield had murdered his father that the grand jury had not found an indictment against him, because they considered the act justified. That was not true, however. An indictment was found but the officers kept it quiet, and circulated the false report, hoping to capture the junior desperado by strategy, knowing that he would not be taken alive without letting more blood, unless he was captured that way.

EMPEROR WILLIAM'S BAD BREAK.

Emperor William, of Germany, is an exceedingly young man for an Emperor, a fact which may account for the tone of his instructions to army recruits concerning the oath of allegiance to him, in which he said:

"You have, my children, sworn allegiance. That means that you have given yourselves to me body and soul. You have only one enemy, that is my enemy. In the present socialistic agitation I may order you, which God forbid, to shoot down your relatives—your brothers, even your parents—and you must obey without even a murmur."

When a soldier swears allegiance to his country, of course, his oath compels him to shoot, if occasion requires, even his brother, or father, if they are among his country's enemies against whom he is fighting, but whether soldiers or citizens a man's first duty is to God, not to any man be he ever so great an autocrat, and when Emperor William tells his recruits that their oath of allegiance to him "means that you have given yourselves to me body and soul," the young Kaiser is guilty of the worst sort of blasphemy. He places himself before God.

In our own late civil war many a brother fought against brother and son against father. Painful as it may have been, their patriotism and oathes of allegiance to their opposing causes compelled them to it, but, although better or truer soldiers or more patriotic men never fought in opposing armies, not a man who wore the blue or the gray considered that his leaders "owned" him; and, had any general dared to make such a speech to them as Emperor William has made to his recruits they would have laid down their arms.

The young Kaiser forgets that a soldier is also a man, and that he who is most truly a man is the best soldier. Emperor William would eliminate every spark of manhood from his soldiers, and reduce them to senseless and soulless automatons to be manœuvered and launched up on the enemy by him as he would any mechanism of war. He loses sight of the most important fact that the patriot is the best soldier, and that the true patriot must acknowledge that his duty is to his GOD first, and his country next, and firmly believe that his soul is his own and does not belong to the Emperor, or any one else. Germany never won a victory with such soldiers as he would make of his recruits, and it never will. It is evident that Emperor William does not know men as a general and a leader should. But he is very young and may yet learn how to address men of whom he desires to make loyal soldiers.—Wheeling Register.

NOTICE OF TRUSTEE'S SALE.

By virtue of a Trust Deed made the 25th day of August 1886 by J. B. Skiles and Jannie B. Skiles and James R. Apperson to R. W. Baldwin, Trustee, and in pursuance of an order of the Circuit Court of Pocahontas County (West Virginia), made on the 29th day of October 1891 "In the matter of R. W. Baldwin, Trustee," appointing the undersigned as Trustee to execute the provisions of said Deed of Trust instead of said R. W. Baldwin, former trustee who is dead, and Richard Baldwin the beneficiary in said Trust Deed, having so requested, I, the undersigned acting as trustee under authority above stated, shall, on MONDAY, 28th DECEMBER 1891.

procede to sell to the highest bidder at public auction in front of the Court House of Pocahontas County, at Huntersville, W. Va., for two adjoining parcels of land of ½ acre each, with the hotel building and other buildings thereon being the ONE ACRE of ground at MARLINTON in said County formerly owned and used as a Hotel property by said James R. Apperson and later by said Jannie B. Skiles, and which is more fully described in said deed of Trust recorded in the Clerk's Office of the County Court of said Pocahontas County at page 404 and following pages of Deed Book No. 17.

CASH

URIAH HEVENER Trustee,
as successor of R. W. Baldwin, original Trustee.
Nov. 26-4t Printers fee $9.60.

Pocahontas Times.

JOHN E. CAMPBELL,
EDITOR AND PROPRIETOR.

ADVERTISING RATES.

	1 m.	3 m.	6 m.	1 yr.
One inch	$ 1 00	$ 2 00	$ 3 00	$ 5 00
Three in.	2 00	4 00	6 00	10 00
Qr. column	2 00	6 00	10 00	17 00
Half col'n	6 00	12 00	20 00	30 00
One col'n	10 00	20 00	30 00	50 00

Reading notices, not exceeding five lines, twenty-five cents for each insertion, and five cents a line for each additional line.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION.

One copy, 1 yr., $1.00 in advance; after 6 months, $1.25; after 12 months, $1.50
These terms will be strictly complied with.

Entered at the Post-office at Huntersville, W. Va., as second class matter.

Huntersville, W. Va.

December 17, 1891.

THE RACY DAYS IN OILDOM.

GAMBLING WITH DICE FOR ENORMOUS STAKES.

An Oil City, Pa., correspondent, writing about the palmy days in the oil regions many years ago, when the greasy fluid poured fortunes into the operators' pockets, has the following interesting sketch of a noted oil man and dice gambler.

In 1868-69 the vicinity of Petroleum Centre was the richest in the oil region and one of the richest in the world. The lands all about the town were making their owners rich. Among these pieces of property was the Woods farm, lying up on the hill to the west of the place. Its big production at that time was selling at from $3 to $5 a barrel.

Samuel A. Woods was the owner of this rich deposit of oil, and his royalty from it yielded him a princely income. He was then about 35 years of age, and was full of fun as he was of business. He dressed well, wearing daily diamonds worth from $5,000 to $80,000, lived high, and was foremost in all the enterprises in oil developments. In 1868 he built the largest and first complete oil tank—40,000 barrel—then along Oil Creek, and into it his farm poured its liquid wealth.

Woods had a noted fondness for throwing dice and was usually lucky. He was ready at any time to throw for stakes ranging from $50 to $100 or $1000. It was seldom he would throw for less than the first named sum. One night in the winter of 1868-69 he was spending the evening with a party of friends in the Rochester house at Petroleum Center. Among the party was Col Brady, another rich producer, and a man who had earned his title on the battlefields of the rebellion. In the course of the evening Woods said to him:

"Colonel, I'll toss the dice with you for $50."

"All right," was the colonel's prompt reply.

The first throw Brady won, continuing to do so until he had won $650 of Wood's money. This trifle just whetted their appetites, and the chance contest then began in earnest. The amount of the stakes increased from time to time, and Wood's losses rapidly crept into thousands. Luck was against him, but as he was perfectly sober, and the friends present knew he would regard as little less than an insult any suggestion that it was time to quit, feeling abundantly able to pay any amount he lost, all they had to do was to watch the two men with increasing interest.

To pass on from the process to the result, when one of the morning hours was ushered in Woods had lost $32,000, and Brady held his check for that sum.

At this juncture Woods said to the Colonel: "Now, I am willing to double the amount and let each of us take but one throw, and the highest take the stakes. You already have my check for $32,000. If I loose I will write you another for the full amount here to-night and it will be cashed at the bank to-morrow."

"All right," again replied Colonel Brady; "I accept."

The interest of the bystanders was now worked up to the highest pitch. The dice were produced, and Woods had the first throw. Eleven spots turned up as his count. Col. Brady then threw, but nine black spots turned up to be counted. Woods therefore saved a good sized fortune on the throw, for had he lost $64,000 would have been paid with as much promptness as though it had been a part of a legitamate business transaction.

Woods then proposed that they start anew with $10 as the amount of the stakes. The colonel responded, and soon all the cash he had with him—about $200—was transferred to the pocket of Woods. Said Woods, "Here, Colonel, is $20. I can't see a man go away dead broke." And so the greatest game of dice on record in the oil regions came to a close.

Petroleum Center has gradually fallen to decay, untill but a few scattered buildings are all that is left of what was once a flourishing oil town of 5,000 inhabitants.

Samuel A. Woods, too is gone from this life, with a host of others who were his associates in the production of oil, and who with him, made many a night merry half a century ago.

HER UNFORTUNATE MISTAKE.

It was her first dinner party. She was naturally a little nervous, but everything went off well and she soon became more at ease and talked rather brilliantly to those around her. The desert was being served and the stately colored waiters were engaged in passing those funny little frosted cakes which seem indispensable to the propper service and deglutition of ices. They were cakes with pink frosting. The waiter came to where the bad sat and presented them. She looked them over and said: "I don't care for any." The waiter was about to pass on when she saw what she thought was an eclair on the side of the dish furtherest from her.

"Yes I will, too," she said, reaching over for the eclair. "There is one with chocolate on it." "Beg pardon, miss," said the waiter, as she tried to pick the chocolate covered cake up, "beg pardon but that's my thumb."

The readers of THE TIMES are refered to the following persons who have the ALLEGER ORGANS:

Annie Mollohan, Replete, W. Va.
S. W. Ott, Charlestown, W. Va.
Jacob Lively, Roseville, W. Va.
W. H. Swiger, Malta, W. Va.
J. W. Heavener, Petersburg, W. Va.
Tinta Craig, Glen Elk, W. Va.

—If you want Letter and Note heads, neatly printed and put up in tablet form, cheaper than you can get them anywhere else, call at THE TIMES office. We also do all kinds of nice job printing, and have on hands a nice line of Stationary, business cards, &c. &c.

CONSUMPTION CURED.

An old physician, retired from practice, having had placed in his hands by an East India missionary the formula of a simple vegetable remedy for the speedy and permanent cure of Consumption, Bronchitis, Catarrh, Asthma and all throat and Lung Affections, also a positive and radical cure for Nervous Debility and all Nervous Complaints, after having tested its wonderful curative powers in thousands of cases, has felt it his duty to make it known to his suffering fellows. Actuated by this motive and a desire to relieve human suffering, I will send free of charge, to all who desire it, this recipe, in German, French or English, with full directions for preparing and using. Sent by mail by addressing with stamp, naming this paper. W. A. Noyes, 820 Powers' Block, Rochester, N. Y.

CENTRAL W. VA. MARBLE WORKS

Manufacturers of

HEADSTONES ALL KINDS OF MONUMENTAL WORK.

Dealers in

IRON FENCING.

Lewisburg, W. Va.
E. H. MOORE, Agent,
ACADEMY, W. Va.

1892 - 1893

1892 – 1893

Pocahontas Times.

Vol. 9. JOHN E. CAMPBELL, EDITOR AND PROPRIETOR. Huntersville, West Virginia, Thursday, January 7, 1892. Terms of Subscription, $1.00 PER YEAR, IN ADVANCE. No. 23

Official Directory of Pocahontas County

Judge of Circuit Court,	A. N. Campbell.
Prosecuting Attorney,	L. M. McClintic.
Sheriff,	J. C. Arbogast.
Deputy Sheriff,	Geo. W. Callison.
Cl'k Co. Court,	S. L. Brown.
Cl'k Cir. Court,	J. H. Patterson.
Assessor,	C. O. Arbogast.
Com'rs Co. Ct.	C. E. Beard, S. B. Hannah, G. M. Kee.
Co. Surveyor,	Geo. Baxter

THE COURTS.

Circuit Court convenes on the first Tuesday in April, 3rd Tuesday in June and 3rd Tuesday in October.

County Court convenes on the 1st Tuesday in January, March, October and second Tuesday in July. July is levy term.

WHO MAKES THE PAPER.

Who is dot dot gets der news,
Don't have time to get der blues,
Und generally drinks, schmokes, und chews?
Dot's der Reporter.

Who is dot dot uses der "blue,"
Marks der copy through und through,
Und tells der boys, "Do as I do?"
Dot's der City Editor.

Who is dot dot curses der vires,
Likes good news, but hates der fires,
Und has no use for any liars?
Dot's der Telegraph Editor.

Who is dot dot knows id all;
Has every one at his beck und call;
Und doesn't feel der least bit small?
Dot's der Managing Editor.

Who is dot dot sets der type,
Has a nose dot's fully ripe,
Und schmokes a nasty, stinkin' pipe?
Dot's der Printer.

Who is dot dot make men schvear.
Und would do it if they did but dare
Climb his fraime and pull his hair?
Dot's der Proofreader.

Who is dot dot cashes "strings,"
Pays der bills und uder things;
Makes der boys all feel like kings?
Dot's der Cashier.—Journalist.

A MAINE BOY'S RECORD.

A TRUE STORY.

Where is John Lee?", some one suddenly shouted, and the answer: "Here!" rang sharply out, as a strapping young fellow of eighteen years sprang into the midst of the party and, taking in the situation at a glance, threw off his hat, coat and boots and dashing with a mighty leap into the seething bell of waters, swam with giant strokes to the rescue. Before him stretched, not the peaceful summer brook, which forty-eight hours previously had rippled like a thread of liquid silver through the lowland meadows, but a foaming, raging flood a full half mile in width, covering to a great depth and from hill to hill on either side, the lately smiling valley, and bearing on its bosom a gruesome procession of wrecked barns, houses, bridges and fences, all intermingled with uprooted trees, grain and hay stacks and great whirling logs—among which floated scores of cattle, sheep and swine, all either already drowned or struggling madly for their lives.

On the high bank stood a group of farm laborers with their wives, all of whom for the last five minutes had been ringing their hands and screaming, crying, praying in impotent anguish, as they saw little six-year old Charlie Vance sitting astride a piece of board already a hundred yards from shore and being rapidly carried farther out toward the turbulent midstream current where he could not have maintained his hold for a moment.

Not a man of the party could swim a stroke, and, indeed, it looked as if certain death must overtake even the strongest swimmer who should be fool-hardy enough to brave the debris encumbered torrent now sweeping along with resistless force toward Lake Erie.

It was while in this state of helpless terror that one of the women had called for John Lee, a hardy, young Maine fisherman, then busied farther down stream, whose verdancy in all farmland ways had heretofore exposed him to not a little ridicule—good natured enough on the part of all, except Mrs. Vance, the mother of the imperiled child, whose sharp tongue and pungent wit, inspired by some unaccountable dislike, had well-nigh rendered his life a burden.

But John, although he had often threatened to "get even" with his persecutor, thought of none of these things now, as he saw the deadly danger of her only son, who, it seems, had slipped unobserved from her side, gone some distance up-stream and, boylike, set himself afloat on a fragment of bridge plank.

The little fellow's fate was apparently sealed, and that of John seemed hardly less certain, sturdy swimmer though he was, for only by a miracle might he hope to escape being crushed or disabled by some one of the thousand grinding and ever clashing objects through which he must pick his perilous way. Meantime, adding an element of pathetic horror to the scene, little Charlie, quite unaware of his own jeopardy, laughed aloud and shouted with glee as his frail raft, borne high on the face of the warm June flood, danced merrily along as if it, too, enjoyed the sport.

The poor people on shore watched John's progress in agonizing suspense as the current fairly caught and hurried him two feet down-stream for every one he made across.

But the gallant youth knew too much to waste his strength in attempting to stem the water's wild rush which, of course, bore the boy downward equally fast, so that he was always abreast of his would be rescuer.

Although John, with singular coolness and address, pushed aside or avoided most of the impediments in his path, yet he was twice caught and overwhelmed by masses of tangled wreckage and given up for lost by the terrified spectators; but he reappeared each time on the farther side of the drift, still swimming strongly and well. At last, happily escaping all the dangers of his outward course, he reached the child, now on the very edge of the fearfully tossing center eddies, and resting one hand lightly on the plank he sought to guide it shoreward. This, however, proved a most difficult task, owing to the obstacles already mentioned, which covered now nearly every foot of space. Nevertheless, little by little he made way, and, although swept far down-stream, had arrived within thirty yards of land when a great submerged log rose directly under the piece of board to which Charlie clung, sent it high in air and threw the latter helplessly into the hissing vortex of angry waters. As the little form sank below the surface a great cry of "Oh! he's gone! he's gone!" arose from the almost frantic onlookers, and the poor mother dropped, half fainting, to the ground.

But John Lee, young as he was, had seen much service as one of a life saving crew on the rough Maine coast, and now no sea bird could have dived more swiftly than did he. For a full half minute, which seemed ten times as long to the spellbound crowd, he was lost to view, but when he rose again the boy was safe in his arms!

The little fellow, though gasping and spluttering like a young grampus, seemed to be all right, and quietly obeyed instructions as John shifted him round to his shoulders and told him to keep his arms loosely around his neck.

In a few minutes more the brave youth reached the shore, and, while the sobbing women and wildly cheering men closed in around him, handed his precious burden to the mother simply saying: "Mrs. Vance, here is your boy, and I was never so thankful for being able to swim."

The conscience stricken woman burst into a flood of repentant yet happy tears and would almost have knelt at the young man's feet in her boundless gratitude; but he, modest as brave, would not wait for thanks, and hurried shyly away—never again to be a mark for raillery, but a recognized hero through the countryside.

Mr. M——, the wealthy young farmer, whom John served, had not been long married, and, in the month of September following the rescue of the child, he was out one day sowing fall wheat in a distant field when his young wife, feeling lonely in the great farmhouse, took a notion to walk across lots to visit him. Instead of going around by the avenue, whence a gate opened into the fallow where her husband then was, she determined to take a short cut over an old pasture where a number of cattle were grazing.

At that time crimson shawls were much affected by ladies, and she happened to wear one of them.

Being city bred, she had, of course, no idea that domestic cattle have a deadly antipathy to this color.

She had reached the middle of the wide pasture before any of the feeding animals noticed her, but then one of them, a three-year old bull, catching sight of the obnoxious garment, rushed toward her bellowing with rage, and tearing up the earth with hoofs and horns. Upon seeing this furious monster bearing down upon her, the affrighted young woman, naturally, screamed at the top of her voice, and ran for the high fence, but would never have lived to reach it if John Lee, now an efficient farm hand and at that moment plowing in the next field, had not fortunately heard the cry and flown to her rescue.

Kicking off his thick-soled shoes and snatching up a heavy oak stake, he ran with all speed toward the point of danger, meantime shouting: "Oh, Mrs. M—— drop your shawl!" But she, poor girl, was too much frightened to comprehend the order, and, although she still kept up her pace, it was extremely doubtful whether John could arrive in time to save her from being impaled on the horns of the savage brute, which now, with lowered head and blood-shot eyes, was fast gaining on her.

However, it was not for nothing that John had trained himself into being the fastest runner in his native village, and never in his whole life had he run as now; for was not a precious life the prize of victory and a desolated home the penalty of defeat?

Scarce twenty feet of space separated the young wife from her maddened pursuer when John, with a fierce shout of challenge, sprang over the fence and stood between. Nimbly avoiding the instant thrust of the deadly horns, he brought down the ponderous club with tremendous force upon the bull's neck just behind the head.

Nothing made of flesh and blood might withstand such a blow, and the great beast reeled dizzily from side to side. Then, with lightning quickness, the stout young fellow dealt stroke upon stroke, until finally he felled his enemy, stunned and bleeding to the ground.

Meantime, Mrs. M—— had managed to get over the fence, and should now—out of deference to the recognized ethics of her sex—have fainted or gone into hysterics; but, not being a very modish young woman, she did neither. Instead she most warmly thanked John Lee in words, and a higher power, probably in her heart, and walked off to find her husband and tell him all about it. From that day the orphaned fisher boy was no longer a servant, but a friend; was given an education and a liberal start in life by the grateful Mr. M——, and is, at this writing, a well known cattle king and member of the state legislature in western Kansas. All of which is sober fact.

W. THOMSON.

WHAT PAUL FOUND.

A young reporter not long ago was sent out by the city editor to report a sermon by Rev. Joseph Twitchell, of the Asylum Avenue Congregational church. He came back and began heroically on his task of writing it. After a few minutes' labor he looked up and, addressing the city editor, said:

"This sermon was about Paul, but I've forgotten what he did after his conversion."

"Why, he went up to Damascus," observed the religious editor.

"Oh, yes," exclaimed the reporter. "That's it; and he found Damascus sitting outside of his tent."

HOW TO RIDE A HORSE IN WATER.

A military journal of Paris, The Revue du Cercle Militaire, gives this account of the way a horse should not be ridden, and of the way he should be ridden, in swimming a stream.

To begin with, it must not be supposed that a horse always swims naturally and with ease the moment he is off his feet in the water. The animal under such circumstances has but one notion, to keep his head out of the water and to lift his shoulders as high as possible.

In doing this his hindquarters sink and he finds himself almost standing upon his tail, or at least in a position three quarters erect.

In such a position, if the rider draws upon the reins or throws his body back in the least, the animal's hindquarters will sink more and more, his body will take a vertical position, and beating the water uselessly with his forefeet he will finally sink.

As soon as the horse gets off his feet in the water let the rider grasp a handful of the animal's mane, leaning at the same time well forward upon his shoulder, but without touching the horse's head. The rider's knees should be pressed tightly to the horse's sides, otherwise he is likely to be swept off by the water.

This is the only position which will enable a man to remain in the saddle and the horse to swim at the same time.

The reins must be held loosely and each well to one side. If the horse is to be guided in the water give the loose rein a little jerk in the direction desired. But it is in the highest degree important never to pull on the reins.

HANDLED IT CAREFULLY.

It was at a Richmond hotel, and he modestly called for a beefsteak. When it came he tinkered at it for ten minutes and then called the waiter.

"What's this?"

"Beefsteak, sah."

"Thank you. Do guests usually try to cut them?"

"Reckon dey do, sah, unless dey got right smart mouf's."

"Yes? Well, I haven't. I'm from New York. You take that steak back to the cook, waiter, and tell him I haven't hurt it any. I've only bent it a little—just a little."

POCAHONTAS TIMES.

Vol. 9. JOHN E. CAMPBELL, EDITOR AND PROPRIETOR. Huntersville, West Virginia, Thursday, January 7, 1892. Terms of Subscription, $1.00 PER YEAR IN ADVANCE. No. 23

Official Directory of Pocahontas County

Judge of Circuit Court,	A. N. Campbell.
Prosecuting Attorney,	L. M. McClintic.
Sheriff,	J. C. Arbogast.
Deputy Sheriff,	Geo. W. Callison.
Cl'k Co. Court,	S. L. Brown.
Cl'k Cir. Court,	J. H. Patterson.
Assessor,	C. O. Arbogast.
Com'rs Co. Ct.	C E. Beard. S B. Hannah. G. M. Kee.
Co. Surveyor,	Geo. Baxter

THE COURTS.

Circuit Court convenes on the first Tuesday in April, 3rd Tuesday in June and 3rd Tuesday in October.

County Court convenes on the 1st Tuesday in January, March, October and second Tuesday in July. July is levy term.

WHO MAKES THE PAPER.

Who is dot dot gets der news,
Don't have time to get der blues,
Und generally drinks, schmokes, und chews?
Dot's der Reporter.

Who is dot dot uses der "blue,"
Marks der copy through und through,
Und tells der boys, "How se I do?"
Dot's der City Editor.

Who is dot dot curses der vires,
Likes good news, but hates der fires,
Und has no use for any liars?
Dot's der Telegraph Editor.

Who is dot dot knows id all;
Has every one at his beck und call;
Und doesn't feel der least bit small?
Dot's der Managing Editor.

Who is dot dot sets der typo,
Has a nose dot's fully ripe,
Und schmokes a nasty, stinkin' pipe?
Dot's der Printer.

Who is dot dot make men schvear,
Und would do it if they did but dare
Climb his frame and pull his hair?
Dot's der Proofreader.

Who is dot dot cashes "strings,"
Pays der bills und uder things;
Makes der boys all feel like kings?
Dot's der Cashier.—Journalist.

A MAINE BOY'S RECORD.

A TRUE STORY.

"Where is John Lee?" some one suddenly shouted, and the answer: "Here!" rang sharply out, as a strapping young fellow of eighteen years sprang into the midst of the party and, taking in the situation at a glance, threw off his hat, coat and boots and dashing with a mighty leap into the seething hell of waters, swam with giant strokes to the rescue. Before him stretched, not the peaceful summer brook, which forty eight hours previously had rippled like a thread of liquid silver through the lowland meadows, but a foaming, raging flood a full half mile in width, covering to a great depth and from hill to hill on either side, the lately smiling valley, and bearing on its bosom a gruesome procession of wrecked barns, houses, bridges and fences, all intermingled with uprooted trees, grain and hay stacks and great whirling logs—among which floated scores of cattle, sheep and swine, all either already drowned or struggling madly for their lives.

On the high bank stood a group of farm laborers with their wives, all of whom for the last five minutes had been ringing their hands and screaming, crying, praying in impotent anguish, as they saw little six-year-old Charlie Vance sitting astride a piece of board already a hundred yards from shore and being rapidly carried farther out toward the turbulent midstream current where he could not have maintained his hold for a moment.

Not a man of the party could swim a stroke, and, indeed, it looked as if certain death must overtake even the strongest swimmer who should be fool-hardy enough to brave the debris encumbered torrent now sweeping along with resistless force toward Lake Erie.

It was while in this state of helpless terror that one of the women had called for John Lee, a hardy, young Maine fisherman, then busied further down stream, whose verdancy in all farmland ways had heretofore exposed him to not a little ridicule—good natured enough on the part of all, except Mrs. Vance, the mother of the imperiled child, whose sharp tongue and pungent wit, inspired by some unaccountable dislike, had well-nigh rendered his life a burden.

But John, although he had often threatened to "get even" with his persecutor, thought of none of these things now, as he saw the deadly danger of her only son, who, it seems, had slipped unobserved from her side, gone some distance up-stream and, boylike, set himself afloat on a fragment of bridge plank.

The little fellow's fate was apparently sealed, and that of John seemed hardly less certain, sturdy swimmer though he was, for only by a miracle might he hope to escape being crushed or disabled by some one of the thousand grinding and ever clashing objects through which he must pick his perilous way. Meantime, adding an element of pathetic horror to the scene, little Charlie, quite unaware of his own jeopardy, laughed aloud and shouted with glee as his frail raft, borne high on the face of the warm June flood, danced merrily along as if it, too, enjoyed the sport.

The poor people on shore watched John's progress in agonizing suspense as the current fairly caught and hurried him two feet down-stream for every one he made across.

But the gallant youth knew too much to waste his strength in attempting to stem the water's wild rush which, of course, bore the boy downward equally fast, so that he was always abreast of his would be rescuer.

Although John, with singular coolness and address, pushed aside or avoided most of the impediments in his path, yet he was twice caught and overwhelmed by masses of tangled wreckage and given up for lost by the terrified spectators; but he reappeared each time on the farther side of the drift, still swimming strongly and well. At last, happily escaping all the dangers of his outward course, he reached the child, now on the very edge of the fearfully tossing center eddies, and resting one hand lightly on the plank he sought to guide it shoreward. This, however, proved a most difficult task, owing to the obstacles already mentioned, which covered now nearly every foot of space. Nevertheless, little by little he made way, and, although swept far down-stream, had arrived within thirty yards of land when a great submerged log rose directly under the piece of board to which Charlie clung, sent it high in air and threw the latter helplessly into the hissing vortex of angry waters. As the little form sank below the surface a great cry of "Oh! he's gone! he's gone!" arose from the almost frantic onlookers, and the poor mother dropped, half fainting, to the ground.

But John Lee, young as he was, had seen much service as one of a life saving crew on the rough Maine coast, and now no sea bird could have dived more swiftly than did he. For a full half minute, which seemed ten times as long to the spellbound crowd, he was lost to view, but when he rose again the boy was safe in his arms!

The little fellow, though gasping and spluttering like a young grampus, seemed to be all right, and quietly obeyed instructions as John shifted him round to his shoulders and told him to keep his arms loosely around his neck.

In a few minutes more the brave youth reached the shore, and, while the sobbing women and wildly cheering men closed in around him, handed his precious burden to the mother simply saying: "Mrs. Vance, here is your boy, and I was never so thankful for being able to swim."

The conscience stricken woman burst into a flood of repentant yet happy tears and would almost have knelt at the young man's feet in her boundless gratitude; but he, modest as brave, would not wait for thanks, and hurried shyly away—never again to be a mark for raillery, but a recognized hero through the countryside.

Mr. M——, the wealthy young farmer, whom John served, had not been long married, and, in the month of September following the rescue of the child, he was out one day sowing fall wheat in a distant field when his young wife, feeling lonely in the great farmhouse, took a notion to walk across lots to visit him. Instead of going around by the avenue, whence a gate opened into the fallow where her husband then was, she determined to take a short cut over an old pasture where a number of cattle were grazing.

At that time crimson shawls were much affected by ladies, and she happened to wear one of them.

Being city bred, she had, of course, no idea that domestic cattle have a deadly antipathy to this color.

She had reached the middle of the wide pasture before any of the feeding animals noticed her, but then one of them, a three-year old bull, catching sight of the obnoxious garment, rushed toward her bellowing with rage, and tearing up the earth with hoofs and horns. Upon seeing this furious monster bearing down upon her, the affrighted young woman, naturally, screamed at the top of her voice, and ran for the high fence, but would never have lived to reach it if John Lee, now an efficient farm hand and at that moment plowing in the next field, had not fortunately heard the cry and flown to her rescue.

Kicking off his thick-soled shoes and snatching up a heavy oak stake, he ran with all speed toward the point of danger, meantime shouting: "Oh, Mrs. M—— drop your shawl!" But she, poor girl, was too much frightened to comprehend the order, and, although she still kept up her pace, it was extremely doubtful whether John could arrive in time to save her from being impaled on the horns of the savage brute, which now, with lowered head and blood shot eyes, was fast gaining on her.

However, it was not for nothing that John had trained himself into being the fastest runner in his native village, and never in his whole life had he run as now; for was not a precious life the prize of victory and a desolated home the penalty of defeat?

Scarce twenty feet of space separated the young wife from her maddened pursuer when John, with a fierce shout of challenge, sprang over the fence and stood between. Nimbly avoiding the instant thrust of the deadly horns, he brought down the ponderous club with tremendous force upon the bull's neck just behind the head.

Nothing made of flesh and blood might withstand such a blow, and the great beast reeled dizzily from side to side. Then, with lightning quickness, the stout young fellow dealt stroke upon stroke, until finally he felled his enemy, stunned and bleeding to the ground.

Meantime, Mrs. M—— had managed to get over the fence, and should now—out of deference to the recognized ethics of her sex—have fainted or gone into hysterics; but, not being a very modish young woman, she did neither. Instead she most warmly thanked John Lee in words, and a higher power, probably in her heart, and walked off to find her husband and tell him all about it. From that day the orphaned fisher boy was no longer a servant, but a friend; was given an education and a liberal start in life by the grateful Mr. M——, and is, at this writing, a well known cattle king and member of the state legislature in western Kansas. All of which is sober fact.

W. THOMSON.

WHAT PAUL FOUND.

A young reporter not long ago was sent out by the city editor to report a sermon by Rev. Joseph Twitchell, of the Asylum Avenue Congregational church. He came back and began heroically on his task of writing it. After a few minutes' labor he looked up and, addressing the city editor, said:

"This sermon was about Paul, but I've forgotten what he did after his conversion."

"Why, he went up to Damascus," observed the religious editor.

"Oh, yes," exclaimed the reporter. "That's it; and he found Damascus sitting outside of his tent."

HOW TO RIDE A HORSE IN WATER.

A military journal of Paris, The Revue du Cercle Militaire, gives this account of the way a horse should not be ridden, and of the way he should be ridden, in swimming a stream.

To begin with, it must not be supposed that a horse always swims naturally and with ease the moment he is off his feet in the water. The animal under such circumstances has but one notion, to keep his head out of the water and to lift his shoulders as high as possible.

In doing this his hindquarters sink and he finds himself almost standing upon his tail, or at least in a position three quarters erect.

In such a position, if the rider draws upon the reins or throws his body back in the least, the animal's hindquarters will sink more and more, his body will take a vertical position, and beating the water uselessly with his forefeet he will finally sink.

As soon as the horse gets off his feet in the water let the rider grasp a handful of the animal's mane, leaning at the same time well forward upon his shoulder, but without touching the horse's head. The rider's knees should be pressed tightly to the horse's sides, otherwise he is likely to be swept off by the water.

This is the only position which will enable a man to remain in the saddle and the horse to swim at the same time.

The reins must be held loosely and each well to one side. If the horse is to be guided in the water give the loose rein a little jerk in the direction desired. But it is in the highest degree important never to pull on the reins.

HANDLED IT CAREFULLY.

It was at a Richmond hotel, and he modestly called for a beefsteak. When it came he tinkered at it for ten minutes and then called the waiter.

"What's this?"

"Beefsteak, sah."

"Thank you. Do guests usually try to cut them?"

"Recken dey do, sah, unless dey got right smart moufs."

"Yes? Well, I haven't. I'm from New York. You take that steak back to the cook, waiter, and tell him I haven't hurt it any. I've only beat it a little—just a little."

Pocahontas Times.

JOHN E. CAMPBELL,
EDITOR AND PROPRIETOR.

Huntersville, W. Va.

January 7, 1892.

Buena Vista by a late census, contains over 5,000 people—a good showing for a town eighteen months old.

Cranks are still after Russell Sage.—One appeared at the door of his residence Monday night, and demanded $250,000. Mrs. Sage met him, told him to leave, and catching him by the throat pushed him out of the door. Mr Sage has received about 1200 letters from as many cranks, since the attempt on his life.

Fifty two times the shuttle has flown, in each flight weaving a week with a golden border of Sabbath. Three hundred and sixty five times the clock has struck twelve for the noon, and only one less time twelve for the night. In that time, how many marriage garlands have been twisted, how many graves dug, how many sorrows suffered, how many fortunes won, how many souls lost, how many mortals saved!—Talmage

After West Virginia.

Republicans Figuring to Capture Our Six Electorial Votes.

West Virginia might become the pivotal State in the next Presidential contest. There are several combinations that lead to this conclusion. A table of "sure Republican States" lies before us at the present writing. It includes Indiana, Massachusetts, Iowa, New Hampshire, New York, Wisconsin, and all the States, but gives West Virginia to the Democrats. It is but fair to remark that this table was made up before the late November elections, and that it claims the full fourteen votes of Michigan. It foots up 269 votes for the Republicans to 175 votes for the Democrats, but it will do as well as any other table for a basis to start from. This is the table refered to:

REPUBLICANS.		DEMOCRATIC.
California	9	Alabama	11
Colorado	4	Arkansas	8
Illinois	24	Connecticut	6
Indiana	15	Delaware	3
Iowa	13	Florida	4
Kansas	10	Georgia	13
Maine	6	Kentucky	13
Massachusetts	15	Louisiana	8
Michigan	14	Maryland	8
Minnesota	9	Mississippi	9
Nebraska	8	Missouri	17
Nevada	3	New Jersey	10
New Hampshire	4	North Carolina	11
New York	36	South Carolina	9
Ohio	23	Tennessee	12
Oregon	4	Texas	15
Pennsylvania	32	Virginia	12
Rhode Island	4	West Virginia	6
Vermont	4
Wisconsin	12
Idaho	3
Montana	3
North Dakota	3
South Dakota	4
Washington	4
Wyoming	3
Total	269	Total	175

Now, suppose that the Democrats carry Iowa, with her 13 votes, Massachusetts with 15, Indiana with 15, and 6 votes from Michigan—49 in all—then their total vote would be 224 to 220 for the Republicans. The vote necessary to choice is 223. Transfer West Virginia to the Republican column and the Democrats lose.

Again, suppose the Republicans lose New York, New Hampshire, the six Michigan votes, and either one of the four new States having three votes each their claim of 269 would fall to 220 What a fine thing it would be to have the six votes of West Virginia in this emergency.

Still again, suppose the Republicans lose New York and Iowa, 49 votes, and carry all of Michigan; they would have but 230 in the aggregate. How handy would West Virginia come in there!

Suppose still further that the Republicans, claiming 230 votes, lose New York, 36, Iowa, 13, and only 3 votes in Michigan. They would then have 217, and need exactly the West Virginia vote to help them out.

Or should it so happen in the turmoil of Louisiana politics that the Republicans should carry the State, losing New York, Iowa, New Hampshire and 6 votes in Michigan, they would have but 218 votes left, in which event half a dozen from West Virginia, raising these figures to 224, would be of victorious service.

And so on. Evidently the administration thinks West Virginia worth looking for.—Washington Post.

WASHINGTON LETTER.

From our regular correspondent.

WASHINGTON D. C., Jan. 1st—A prominent democatic member of the House committee on Appropriations, talked very interestingly of the situation to your correspondent. He said: "I am afraid that there is a disposition on the part of democrats to expect too much from the present House. Reforms under our form of government must necessarily be slow, even where both branches of Congress and the Executive are in accord. We have to contend against a hostile Senate and Executive, but we hope to come about some reforms in the tariff and in the expenditure of the government. There may be a slight difference of opinion in the party about whether it would be best for the House to prepare and pass an entire tariff bill, according to democratic ideas of what such a measure should be, or to pass a number of bills cerrecting the inequalities of the present tariff law; but there can be none as to which of these plans are the most likely to bring practical results. The first could, of course, be passed by the House, but it could not possibly get through the Senate, while there is reason for believing that several of the latter can be gotten through the Senate, thus throwing the responsibility for their defeat upon Mr. Harrison.

"Now as to appropriations. I do not know what will be the result of the effort to have all of the appropriation bills restored to the Appropriation committee, but personally I agree with Mr. Holman in believing that its accomplishment would materially aid in cutting down the total of appropriations. I cannot say just where we shall make reductions, but I will say that every democratic member of the House who has carefully studied the subject is of my opinion—that we can make a very large reduction in the total amount appropriated without interfering in the slightest with the workings of any useful branch of the Government service, and that is the task which we have set for ourselves, and it is by no means a light one, as we shall have to do battle with the republican Senate over the many extravagant amendments certain to be added to the appropriation bills by that body, which constantly grows more extravagant in its ideas."

Speaker Crisp has so far recovered from his attack of the grip as to be able to do a little talking on the new rules of the House with his democratic colleagues of the committee on Rules, Messrs. McMillin and Catchings; but it is not thought that that the new rules will be reported to the House for a couple of weeks, but that will not retard business much, as the House will work under the rules of the Fiftieth Congress until the new ones are ready.

Mr. Mills has almost entirely regained his health, and is daily seen on the streets, building himself up by taking long walkes.

There are no new developements in the Chilian situation. The administration having sufficiently stirred up the country is now waiting to make up its mind what to do next.

The republicans cannot hide the anxiety about Mr. Blaine's intentions; they want to know just what he intends doing, in order that they may trim their sails accordingly, and all sorts of devices have been resorted to in the hope of getting the wily Secretary of State to declare himself. At a dinner party this week, attended by a score of Senators and Representatives belonging to the republican party, it was decided to send an embassy to Mr. Blaine, in the person of Col. W. W. Dudley, who ever since his falling out with Mr. Harrison, has been an ardent Blaine man, with a request for a positive yes or no as to his becoming his party's candidate. Dudly called on Mr. Blaine and devoted almost an hour to the most persuasive arguments he knew how to make, and left as wise as when he came. Mr. Blaine declined to commit himself.

Representative Springer says he has received many letters from all sections of the country, commending his plan of attacking the McKinley tariff bill in sections, by means of separate bills providing for the amendment, or outright repeal of the worst sections of that law. Mr. Springer thinks that the committee on Ways and Means will report a number of these separate tariff bills early in the session, and that they will be put through the House without any unnecessary delay.

The republicans shouted too soon about wheat being put upon the free list by the reciprocity treaty with the British West India Islands. The official schedule of the treaty has been made public, and the best that wheat, corn, oats, salt or pickled pork and beef gets, is a reduction of 25 per cent in the existing duties.

DEATH OF SENATOR P. B. PLUMB.

On Dec. 20th, Hon. Preston B. Plumb, U. S. Senator from Kansas, died suddenly at his residence in Washington, aged 54 years. He had been complaining of pains in his head, at intervals, for some time, and went to Philadelphia to consult Dr. Pepper. The result was that he was positively commanded to cease mental work—that his complaint grew out of overwork, and that to continue to labor, as had been his habit, meant death. The Senator did not consider his case as serious as the Doctor pronounced it. Saturday evening he attended a dinner given by Gen. Mahone, at Chamberlain's. He did not return to his room until about 1 o'clock Sunday morning. Shortly afterward, he awoke the propriator of the house where he was stopping—said that his head was hurting very much—requesting the proprietor to set up with him. A Doctor was summoned, stimulents were administered, and the Senator rested for a short time. He all at once sprang from his bed, about 10 o'clock in the morning, exclaiming, "My God, my head, my head." He sank back and in a short time was dead.

PECIAL ANNOUNCEMENT.

We have made arrangements with Dr. B. J. Kendall Co., publishers of "A Treatise on the Horse and his Diseases," which will enable all subscribers to obtain a copy of that valuable work free by sending their address (enclosing a two-cent stamp for mailing same) to DR. B. J. KENDALL CO., ENOSBURGH FALLS, VT. This book is now recognized as standard authority upon all diseases of the horse, as its phenomenal sale attests, over four million copies having been sold in the past ten years, a sale never before reached by any publication in the same period of time. We feel confident that our patrons will appreciate the work, and be glad to avail themselves of this opportunity of obtaining a valuable book.

It is necessary that you mention this paper in sending for the "Treatise." This offer will remain open for only a short time.

HOME NEWS.

—Several cases of grip in town.

—Rice Moore, Esq., can tell you how the grippe serves a person.

—Mr. Amos Barlow is ill at this time.

—H. A. Yeager, of Marlinton was in town Tuesday.

—Several lumbermen are boarding at the hotels, in Huntersville.

—Several deaths in the county within the past week.

—B. F. McElwee, of Dunmore was in town Tuesday.

—We hope 1892 will be a happy and prosperous year to all our readers.

—Mr. Levi Gay, of Marlinton, was in town a day or two the first of the week.

—Messrs. Henry White and D. B. McElwee were in Huntersville Tuesday.

—Messrs. Wise, Mildred, and H. F. Herold, of Frost, were in town Tuesday.

—Mrs. J. C. Loury, has been suffering with grippe for several weeks.

—If you want a fine organ for less than half price, call at THE TIMES office.

—Mr. John J. Beard, of this place has the contract for carrying the Dunmore mail.

—Master Kirke Snyder is home from Clifton Forge, Va., where he has been working on the Virginian for the past five months.

—Attorney H. S. Rucker has just gotten over the grippe and says it handled him worse than anything ever handled him before.

—Joe McNeel, Esq., and wife of Academy, spent a couple of days during Christmas at Mrs. McNeel's parents, Mr. Wm. Curry's at this place.

—County Court convened Tuesday and is still in session. Commissioners Messrs. S. B. Hannah, of Green Bank, and G. M. Kee, of Marlinton are present.

—Clerk Circuit Court, Mr. J. H. Patterson, is in Huntersville again. He has for the past two weeks had quite a serious case of the grippe and is feeling very badly yet.

—We are sorry to note the illness of Dr. S. P. Patterson, at this time as his services are so badly needed, almost by every family in the vicinity.

—There is more sickness in this County now than has been in a good many years. The grippe and measles seem to have gotten a hold of every body.

—The Pocahontas county Farmers Alliance will meet in the Court House at this place Friday, January 8th. A full attendance is requested.

—Attorney C. F. Moore, who has been spending the Christmas with his family at this place has returned to Clifton Forge. He was accompanied by H. P. McGlaughlin, Esq.

—Since our last issue license to marry were issued to J. M. Crookshanks and Mary Wamsley; D. O. Morrison and Willis A. McClure, all of Droop Mountain; L. J. R. Dysard and Ella L. McGlaughlin, of Driftwood.

—The Christmas tree at the Beaver creek school house, a couple of miles below town, gotten up by Miss Alice McGlaughlin who just closed a term of school at that place, for the amusement and benefit of the children of her school, was a grand success.

—Week before last we failed to get out a paper, owing to the Ed. being down with the grippe, and last week—Christmas, as is our custom we did not get out a paper. But we'll promise to be on time hereafter, if the grippe does not get us down again.

—Geo. W. Siple, Esq., and Maj. Arbogast and son Early, of Green Bank, were in the city the first of the week.

—Christmas passed off very pleasantly in Huntersville. There was a Christmas tree in the Methodist church for the Sunday school which was enjoyed by all present—the children especially. There were also family trees at the residences of Messrs. C. F. Moore and H. S. Rucker, at which occasions the friends of the little ones were invited, all receiving presents and enjoying themselves immensely.

Hillsboro Male and Female Academy.

[The following should have appeared last week but as we did not get out a paper consequently it did not.—Ed.]

The second term of this school will begin the first Monday in January, and continue six months.

Those desiring to attend are requested to enter at the beginning, especially, not later than the beginning of the last five months, at which time the school will be re-organized and new classes commenced in the latest branches introduced into the Free School course.

Pupils wishing to compete for the scholarship medal must enter before or at the beginning of the last five months.

The present session has been one of the most successful in the history of the school.

Happy Nuptials.

A very interesting society event occurred in West Pocahontas the 31st of December. It was the auspicious marriage of Mr. Lawrence J. R. Dysard and Miss Ella Lee McGlaughlin at the residence of her brother Mr. Joseph McGlaughlin; Wm. T. Price, the officiating minister.

The Bridesmaids were Misses Claudia Dysard, Mary Brown, Emma Barner and Bessie Dysard, attended by Messrs. Robert Brown, Peter Arbogast, Samuel Sheets, and Charles Barner.

The appearance of the bridal party on the floor, and the display of the numerous gifts presented, elicited much admiration.

Seventy or more persons partook of the dinner, one of the best and abundant of its kind, as all will readily believe who are acquainted with Mrs. John Warwick of Green Bank and Mrs. Uriah Hevener, under whose direction it was served. In the evening Mr. and Mrs. Asbury Dysard gave a reception at their home, which was largely attended, and all passed off, in a charming manner.

W. T. P.

Transfers of Real Estate.

The following is a list of the transfers of real estate for the months of November and December:

Jno. Cassel and wife to James Galford for land on Back Alleghany.

J. B. Lockridge and wife to Earnest N. Moore for land on Knapp's creek.

Karen Farrell and wife to H. A. Holt and H. M. Lockridge for land on Alleghany mountain.

W. B. Rodgers and wife and others to Mathew Wallace for land on Swago creek.

Marshall & McGraw to J. C. Belsher for land on Beaver Lick Creek.

DECEMBER.

Henry Wilfong and wife to A. F. Philips for land on Alleghany mountain.

W. E. Hudson and wife to Wm. M. Hudson and others for land on Sitlington's creek.

Jno. McN. Wilfong and wife to Madora A. Spencer for land on Alleghany mountain.

Wm A. Parsons and wife to A. Combs for land near Edray.

Philip Kramer and wife to H. L. Kesler for land lying on Greenbrier river.

N. S. Alderman and wife to L. J. Pyles for land on Beaver creek.

Wm. L. Gum of Tucker Co., to F. O. Moore for his right, title and interest in land of his mother's estate on Back Creek.

Jno. Hannah and wife to J. W. Marshal and Jno. T. McGraw for land on Marlin's mountain.

Jno. Hannah and wife to Marshall and McGraw for land on Red Lick mountain.

Wm. A. McClure and wife to Emily C. Pritt for land on Droop mountain.

J. E. Auldridge and wife and mother to Joseph Pennell for land on Swago creek.

Rachel Sharp to Board of Education for land near Frost.

H. E. Moore to T. C. Malcomb for land on Laurel Run.

H. M. Lockridge and wife to Andrew Herold for land on Alleghany mountain.

Edward Webb and wife to Daniel Messer for land on Buckley mountain.

Uriah Hevener, trustee to Charles R. Durbin for Skiles property at Marlinton.

Robert Webster and wife to David P. Barnes for land near Buckeye.

LANDS SOLD FOR TAXES.

List of real estate sold in the County of Pocahontas, in the month of December, 1891, for the non-payment of the taxes charged thereon for the years 1889, and 1890, and purchased by individuals:

NAME OF PERSON CHARGED WITH TAXES.	LOCAL DESCRIPTION OF LANDS.	Quantity of land charged.	Quantity of land sold.	NAME OF PURCHASER.	Whole amount paid by the purchaser.
GREEN BANK DISTRICT.
Campbell Sam'l B.	Greenbrier r.	271	271	L. M. McClintic	[illegible] 28
Hutton Alfred	¼ of 596 Greenbrier r.	299	299	J C Armentrout	4 49
EDRAY DISTRICT.
Cameron Geo. H.	Dry Branch	297	297	Wm. McClintic	4 62
Jackson Wm.	Slaty Fork	100	100	Silas Sharp	3 54
McDowell Martin & J. col	Adj John Gay	121	121	L. M. McClintic	2 27
HUNTERSVILLE DISTRICT.
Cobb Amanda	Buckley Mtn	100	100	A. Barlow	1 69
King Chas	Hills	99 15p	99 15p	Marg. C Grimes	5 08
Shafer R. P G	Buckley Mtn	15	15	Wm. McClintic	83
LITTLE LEVELS.
Rodgers Geo. W.	Laurel creek	155	155	L. M. McClintic	1 30
Sidenstricker Mrgt. Est	Hillsboro	1-25p	1-25p	Jno Sidenstricker	1 07

The owner of any real estate above described and sold, his heirs or assigns, or any person having a right to charge such real estate for a debt, may redeem the same by paying to the purchaser, his heirs or assigns, within one year from the sale thereof, the amount specified in the last column of the above table, and such additional taxes thereon as may have been paid by the purchaser, his heirs or assigns, with interest on said purchase money and taxes at the rate of twelve per centum per annum, from the time the same may have been so paid.

Given under my hand this 15th day of December, 1891.

J. C. ARBOGAST, Sheriff.

Pocahontas Times.

JOHN E. CAMPBELL,

EDITOR AND PROPRIETOR.

ADVERTISING RATES.

	1 m.	3 m.	6 m.	1 yr.
One inch	$ 1 00	$ 2 00	$ 3 00	$ 5 00
Three in.	2 00	4 00	6 00	10 00
Qr. column	3 00	6 00	10 00	17 00
Half col'n	6 00	12 00	20 00	30 00
One col'n	10 00	20 00	30 00	50 00

Reading notices, not exceeding five lines, twenty-five cents for each insertion, and five cents a line for each additional line.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION.

One copy, 1 yr., $1.00 in advance; after 6 months, $1.25; after 12 months, $1.50

These terms will be strictly complied with.

Entered at the Post-office at Huntersville, W. Va., as second class matter.

Huntersville, W. Va.

January 7, 1892.

MILLIONAIRES IN SOCIETY.

Admitted to be the most astonishing feature of modern society in New York, I do not say modern noon, and only one less ... modern for the night. In that time, how many marriage garlands have been twisted, how many graves dug, how many sorrows suffered, how many fortunes won, how many souls lost, how many mortals saved!—Talmage.

After West Virginia.

Republicans Figuring to Capture Our Six Electorial Votes.

West Virginia might become the pivotal State in the next Presidential contest. There are several combinations that lead to this conclusion. A table of "sure Republican States" lies before us at the present writing. It includes Indiana, Massachusetts, Iowa, New Hampshire, New York, Wisconsin, and all the States, but gives West Virginia to the Democrats. It is but fair to remark that this table was made up before the late November elections, and that it claims the full fourteen votes of Michigan. It foots up 269 votes for the Republicans to 175 votes for the Democrats, but it will do as well as any other table for a basis to start from. This is the table referred to:

REPUBLICANS.		DEMOCRATIC.
California	9	Alabama	11
Colorado	4	Arkansas	8
Illinois	24	Connecticut	6
Indiana	15	Delaware	3
Iowa	13	Florida	4
Kansas	10	Georgia	13
Maine	6	Kentucky	13
Massachusetts	15	Louisiana	8
Michigan	14	Maryland	8
Minnesota	9	Mississippi	9
Nebraska	8	Missouri	17
Nevada	3	New Jersey	10
New Hampshire	4	North Carolina	11
New York	36	South Carolina	9
Ohio	23	Tennessee	12
Oregon	4	Texas	15
Pennsylvania	32	Virginia	12
Rhode Island	4	West Virginia	6
Vermont	4
Wisconsin	12
Idaho	3
Montana	3
North Dakota	3
South Dakota	4
Washington	4
Wyoming	3
Total	269	Total	175

Now, suppose that the Democrats carry Iowa, with her 13 votes, Massachusetts with 15, Indiana with 15, and 6 votes from Michigan—49 in all—then their total vote would be 224 to 220 for the Republicans. The vote necessary to choice is 223. Transfer West Virginia to the Republican column and the Democrats lose.

Again, suppose the Republicans lose New York, New Hampshire, the six Michigan votes, and either one of the four new States having three votes each their claim of 269 would fall to 229. What a fine thing it would be to have the six votes of West Virginia in this emergency.

Still again, suppose the Republicans lose New York and Iowa, 49 votes, and carry all of Michigan; they would have but 230 in the aggregate. How handy would West Virginia come in there!

Suppose still further that the Refor business. Since the gun was empty, flight was the sportsman's only recourse, and an instant later a wild-eyed man was seen tearing away, with a furious brute closely following.

Hunter number two, meanwhile, was watching the scene from a hill top too far off to be of the slightest assistance to his companion.

A tragic termination of the chase seemed inevitable, for the fleeing gentleman was a heavy weight, and already the space between pursuer and pursued began to diminish. Suddenly the fugitive was seen to strike off at an angle, and the breathless watcher heaved a sigh of relief when his friend's objective point was found to be a cave but a few rods away.

At the very entrance to this seeming place of safety, however, the fleeing man turned aside and dashed with such frantic speed across the plain that a marked gain was made upon his pursuer.

But this could not last long, and finally, the fugitive's strength utterly failing him, he fell completely ex-of democrats to expect much from the present House reforms under our form of government must necessarily be slow, even where both branches of Congress and the Executive are in accord. We have to contend against a hostile Senate and Executive, but hope to come about some reform in the tariff and in the expenditures of the government. There may be a slight difference of opinion in the party about whether it would be best for the House to prepare and pass an entire tariff bill, according to democratic ideas of what such measure should be, or to pass a number of bills correcting the inequalities of the present tariff law, but there can be none as to which of these plans are the most likely to bring practical results. The bills would, of course, be passed by the House, but it could not possibly get through the Senate, while there is reason for believing that several of the latter can be gotten through the Senate, thus throwing the responsibility for their defeat upon Mr. Harrison.

"Now as to appropriations, I do not know what will be the result of the effort to have all of the appropriation bills restored to the Appropriation committee, but personally I agree with Mr. Holman in believing that its accomplishment would materially aid in cutting down the total of appropriations. I cannot say just where we shall make reductions, but I will say that every democratic member of the House who has carefully studied the subject is of my opinion—that we can make a very large reduction in the total amount appropriated without interfering in the slightest with the workings of any useful branch of the Government service, and that is the task which we have set for ourselves, and it is by no means a light one, as we shall have to do battle with the republican Senate over the many extravagant amendments certain to be added to the appropriation bills by that body, which constantly grows more extravagant in its ideas."

Speaker Crisp has so far recovered from his attack of the grip as to be able to do a little talking on the new rules of the House with his democratic colleagues of the committee on Rules, Messrs. McMillin and Catchings; but it is not thought that that the new rules will be reported to the House for a couple of weeks, but that will not retard business much, as the House will work under the rules of the Fiftieth Congress until the new ones are ready.

Mr. Mills has almost entirely regained his health, and is daily seen on the streets, building himself up by taking long walkes.

There are no new developements in the Chilian situation. The administration having sufficiently whom her daughter had been staying he was a propper acquaintance. Only the awkwardness of the question kept them from inquiring his name.

Affairs ripened rapidly, as they always do under such circumstances, and Miss B—— was not surprised when the incognito told her that he loved her dearly and fain would make her his wife. "Call me George, dear," he said, after she had confessed that his feelings were reciprocated, and even then she had not the courage to ask him, "George what?"

"Mamm, it is too absurd," she said hysterically afterward in her mother's room. "You will have to find out; and, oh, if I should have to be Mrs.—something dreadful! I feel that is Brown or Jones"—and oddly enough it proved to be "Brown."

Plumb, U. S. Senator ... died suddenly at his residence ... Washington, aged 54 years. ... had been complaining of pain ... his head, at intervals, for some ... and went to Philadelphia ... consult Dr. Pepper. The ... was that he was positively ... manded to cease mental work ... his complaint grew out of ... work, and that to continue ... as had been his habit, meant ... The Senator did not consider ... case as serious as the Doctor ... nounced it. Saturday evening ... attended a dinner given by ... Mahone, at Chamberlain's ... did not return to his room ... about 1 o'clock Sunday morning. Shortly afterward, he awoke ... proprietor of the house where ... was stopping—said that his ... was hurting very much—r... ing the proprietor to set up ... him. A Doctor was summoned ... stimulents were administered ... the Senator rested for a short ... He all at once sprang from his ... about 10 o'clock in the morning ... claiming, "My God, my head ... head." He sank back and ... short time was dead.

SPECIAL ANNOUNCEMENT

We have made arrangements with Dr. B. J. Kendall Co., publishers of "A Treatise on the Horse and his Diseases" which will enable all subscribers to obtain a copy of that valuable work by sending their address (enclosing a two-cent stamp for mailing same) to Dr. B. J. Kendall Co., Enosburgh Falls, Vt. This book is now recognized as standard authority upon diseases of the horse, as its phenomenal sale attests, over four million having been sold in the past ten years, a sale never before reached by any publication in the same period of time. We feel confident that our patrons will appreciate the work, and be glad to avail themselves of this opportunity of obtaining a valuable book.

It is necessary that you mention this paper in sending for the "Treatise." This offer will remain open for only a short time.

—If you want Letter and Note heads, neatly printed and put up in tablet form, cheaper than you can get them anywhere else, call at THE TIMES office. We also do all kinds of nice job printing, and have on hands a nice line of Stationary, business cards, &c. &c.

CONSUMPTION CURED.

An old physician, retired from practice, having had placed in his hands by an East India missionary the formula of a simple vegetable remedy for the speedy and permanent cure of Consumption, Bronchitis, Catarrh, asthma and all throat and Lung Affections, also a positive and radical cure for Nervous Debility and all Nervous Complaints, after having tested its wonderful curative powers in thousands of cases, has felt it his duty to make it known to his suffering fellows. Actuated by this motive and a desire to relieve human suffering, I will send free of charge, to all who desire it, this receipe, in German, French or English, with full directions for preparing and using. Sent by mail by addressing with stamp, naming this paper. W. A. NOYES, 820 Powers' Block, Rochester, N. Y.

POCAHONTAS TIMES.

Vol. 9. JOHN E. CAMPBELL, EDITOR AND PROPRIETOR. Huntersville, West Virginia, Thursday, January 14, 1892. Terms of Subscription. $1.00 PER YEAR. IN ADVANCE. No. 24

Official Directory of Pocahontas County

Judge of Circuit Court, A. N. Campbell.
Prosecuting Attorney, L. M. McClintic.
Sheriff, J. C. Arbogast.
Deputy Sheriff, Geo. Callison.
Cl'k Co. Court, S. L. Brown.
Cl'k Cir. Court, J. H. Patterson.
Assessor, C. O. Arbogast.
Com'rs Co. Ct. { C. E. Beard. S. B. Hannah. G. M. Kee.
Co. Surveyor, Geo. Baxter

THE COURTS.

Circuit Court convenes on the first Tuesday in April, 3rd Tuesday in June and 3rd Tuesday in October.

County Court convenes on the 1st Tuesday in January, March, October and second Tuesday in July. July is levy term.

THE PITY OF IT.

While wandering up and down Front street one chilly November evening, visiting every haunt of the gang where he hoped to meet some of the pals who could lend him a few cents for a night's lodging, Bill Wyler ran across the little Front Street Mission. It was mainly to escape the chilly, drizzling rain and to warm himself beside the bright fire that glowed in the stove within that caused him to saunter into such an unfamilar place.

A gray-haired man with a weak voice led the singing, and a pleasant faced young woman, whom he afterward learned was Miss Mary McVay, played the accompaniment to the hymns on the organ. She, seeing that he was a stranger, handed him a hymn book and gave him the number of the next hymn. She did everything to make him feel at home, and presently he joined in the singing with a lusty voice.

After the services were over Miss McVay came over and took a seat beside him. She began talking to him about God. She exhorted and pleaded with him so fervently, so earnestly and so sweetly to be a Christain that he promised her that he would then and there.

Bill Wyler had not been a criminal from choice. Unfortunate circumstances and environments had made him one, and the barrier that separated him from the other walks of life seemed so strong and powerful that he never gave a thought to breaking it down. Miss McVay broke it for him and showed him the way by which he might rise to the level of other men and wash the black stigma of crime from his heart.

She was delighted beyond expression by her success in bringing him on the right road. Mr. Almer, who lead the singing at the mission, was old and weak, and after a few months Bill Wyler had made such progress that he was fully able to relieve him and take his place.

In the meantime, through the influence of the church people who had charge of the mission, he secured a good position as porter in a down town store and everything went well.

A year passed in this way, and a strong friendship sprang up between Bill Wyler and Miss McVay, which eventually ripened into love. It was simply the mutual sequence of the juxtaposition of two natures with the same sympathies, hopes and aspirations in their work. Both being orphans, their desire for a home was uppermost, and not many weeks passed before they were living as man and wife in modest little rooms on Gold street, not far from their field of mission work.

Soon after their marriage an old aunt, the only relative that Mary had, died, and being desirous of giving her decent burial, the young couple used all their spare funds. Soon after Bill Wyler lost his position in the store through dissolution of the firm, and he his wife were left in a sorry plight, and but for the church people they would have been unable to retain their apartments one month.

Misfortune never shows mercy. Not content with that, it struck Mary down with illness, and Bill nearly went mad in thinking how he could raise the money to pay the doctor's bills. He tried ever possible means to get some work, and though all the friends of his wife assisted him he met with no success.

On his way home from the mission late one night, Bill was accosted by Jim Colon, Mike Linn and George Banter, three of his old pals. "Say, Bill, yer hard up now ain't yer?" said Jim, gently tapping him on the shoulder.

"Well, what's that to you?" replied Bill, coldly. "A good deal, old boy," said George Banter, sympathetically. "We never forget our friends, and when they're in hard luck we never go back on them.

"And how can you help me?" said Bill, in a more friendly tone. "Easy, me boy," retorted Jim. "If you'll only let us talk to yer a few minutes we'll fix yer up straight."

"Yes, Bill come with us to Brett's on the corner, and we'll show yer," said Mike. "No, no," said bill. "I tell you I am done with saloons and all that."

"Oh, come, Bill, don't be foolish," said Mike. "A drink of something will do you good, and we can go in the back way and nobody will see yer. We mean well for yer.

Bill felt weak and worn out there was no one denying that, and he felt that a little drink of some kind would do much to reinvigorate his shattered nerves. Besides, the hour was late and no one would recognize him in that dark, little rear room behind the saloon. Several times he was on the point of turning back, and when they reached the old haunt in Water street the three men had to fairly drag Bill in.

The tough looking waiter brought whiskey for them, and the smell of it aroused Bill's old thirst. He gulped it down in one breath. Its effect was so soothing that he was tempted to take another, and his pals were only too glad to have him do so. Then after a few more drinks, Jim thought it time to tell Bill how they had determined to help him. 'We got a job on to night and we want yer help,' he said. "There's plenty of 'rocks' in it for yer."

The whiskey had already shown its effect in Bill's eyes and manner, but when he heard Jim's words he straightened up, as if with an effort, and stared at him. "Hold on now, Bill," cried George, "don't get excited. This thing is straight. If you don't care to help us all right; we're satisfied. If you want to let a $1,000 slip we kin find some other feller to take the chance."

It was a large amount of money, and Bill's ears tingled when he heard it. "See here," said Mike, "It's the safest job yer ever heard. We've got all things fixed, and all yer got to do is ter pry open the door, and yer the best one we ever knew for that."

"Well, boys, hang it all," he cried, "I'm with you for the last time. Let's have another drink and get to work."

About two o'clock that night four men might have been seen leaving the saloon and going in different directions. They were Bill and his pals. The place was soon reached, the three men took their positions and Bill went to work at the door with his old jimmy and saw. He experienced very little difficulty in prying it open, and after a few minutes he gave the signal.

Suddenly two men pounced upon him from behind and two more came running toward him from the other side of the street. He was too amazed to make any resistance, and before he could utter a word handcuffs were on his wrists. He had been caught in the act and when he came to realize his position he fell senseless in to the detective's arms.

Mary was much alarmed at Bill's non appearance that night, and when morning came she was nigh hysterical. She dressed herself in spite of the remonstrance of her kind neighbors and went down to the little Front Street Mission to see if he might be there. But that was closed. People in the neighborhood said that he had sung and preached there as usual the night before. Some one had seen him lock the doors, but subsequent to that time no one could say anything about him.

A week passed in this way with no tidings from him. One morning the postman handed Mary a note. She recognized the handwriting and tore it open nervously and read as follows:

"MY DEAR MARY—Don't be alarmed. I was suddenly called away and will be back in a few months. For God's sake keep your courage in the meantime; all will be well. Will explain all. BILL."

The note reassured her somewhat. She began to see it all now. He had become desperate at their poverty stricken condition and left for some other city where he was more sure of a position.

Nearly eight months after this there came one morning to the house in Gold street, where Mary lived, a tall broad shouldered man dressed in ragged clothes. His face was pale and thin, and his manner nervous and excited. He rushed into the rooms of Mrs. Arthur, the old housekeeper, without any ceremony.

"Where's my wife? Where is Mary?" he cried, throwing his arms wildly about. "Is she not here?"

"And what do you want with Mary? Who are you, any way?" said she, recovering her equanimity.

"Why, don't you know me, Mrs. Almer?" he cried. "Doesn't anybody know me any more?" "My God," cries she, "it's Mr. Wyler."

"Yes, I am Bill Wyler. But I want Mary. Where is she?" "Don't you know?" said Mrs. Almer sadly. "You went away and left her to die."

"To die," he cried desperately. "You don't mean that?"

"It is only too true. She and her child died in the hospital nearly a month ago, and they're buried now in Greenwood. Your name was the last she spoke." He rushed from the room and out of the house like a madman. People in the street stopped to look at the strange man rushing by and wondering at him. The next morning Bill Wyler was found dead on Mary's grave.—N. Y. Herald.

NATIONAL GREETINGS.

"How can you?" That's Swedish.

"How do you stand?" That's Italian.

"How do you fare?" That's Dutch.

"Go with God, senor." That's Spanish.

"How do you live on?" That's Russian.

"How do you perspire?" That's Egyptian.

"How do you have yourself?" That's Polish.

"How do you find yourself?" That's German.

"Thank God, how are you?" That's Arabian.

"May thy shadow never grow less." That's Persian.

"How do you carry yourself?" That's French.

"How do you feel?" That's English and American.

"Be under the guard of God."—That's the Ottoman's.

"How is your stomach? Have you eaten your rice?" That's Chinese.

HE WASN'T KICKING.

It was on an Erie train coming East the other day. A young man of about twenty four, who was evidently a farmer and had a seat in the smoking car, turned to the man behind him, who happened to be from Jersy City, and, holding out a silver dollar in his hand, he asked:

"Mister, is that dollar all right?"

"No, sir," replied the other, after a brief test, "this is a bogus dollar."

"And how's this?" continued the young man as he passed over a second.

"Bogus too."

"And this?"

"Off the same piece."

"Waal, here's two more."

"Those are all right, sir. You evidently changed a five dollar bill for some one?"

"Yes."

"Stranger, probably?"

"Never saw him before."

"And all you got out of it was two good dollars?"

"'Pears that way."

"Well, it's a shame to beat a man that way!" indignantly exclaimed the Jerseyite as he returned the coins.

"Oh, I ain't doin' no kickin'," serenely replied the young man.—"I'd been carryin' that old counterfeit over nine years lookin for a sucker, and I'm jest two good dollars ahead of the game!"

OLD DIGBY YIELDED.

Young Toddleby was a true-hearted and promising youth. He had graduated with honor at Yale, and was studying law with Mr. Lofter. It so happened that Toddleby became acquainted with a beautiful young lady, daughter of old Digby. He loved the fair maiden, and when he had reason to believe that his love was returned he asked Mr. Lofter to recommend him to the father Lofter being on terms of close intimacy with the family. The lawyer agreed and performed his mission, but old Digby, who loved money, asked what property the young man had. Lofter said he did not know, but he would inquire. The next time he saw his young student he asked him if he had any property at all, continues the New York Ledger.

"Only health, strength and a determination to work," replied the youth.

"Well said the lawyer, who sincerely believed the student was in every way worthy, "let us see. What will you take for your right leg? I will give you $20,000 for it."

Of course Toddleby refused.

The next time the lawyer saw the young lady's father he said:

"I have enquired about this young man's circumstances. He has no money in bank; but he owns a piece of property for which to my certain knowledge, he has been offered and has refused $20,000."

This led old Digby to consent to the marriage, which shortly afterward took place. In the end he had reason to be proud of his son-in law, though he was once heard to remark, touching that rare piece of property, upon the strength of which he had consented to the match:

"If it could not take wings, it was liable at any time to walk off!"

The bank at Waynesboro, one at Basic city, one at Gordonsville one at New Market and one at Warrenton, all in Va., and all private establishments have closed their doors and made assignments. It is thought that depositors will eventually be paid in full, and that business will not not be seriously effected.

Pocahontas Times.
JOHN E. CAMPBELL,
EDITOR AND PROPRIETOR.
Huntersville, W. Va.
January 14, 1892.

The great treasury vault at Washington covers more than a quarter of an acre and is twelve feet deep. Recently there was $90,00,000 in silver stored there, an amount that weighed 4,000 tons and would load 175 freight cars.

Four different mountain peaks in Idaho are from 13 to 23 feet lower, by actual measurement, than they were 15 years ago, and it is believed that this settling is going on with many others. The idea is that quick sands have undermined them.

While workman was repairing an outbuilding in Winchester, Ind., a few days ago, he found under one of the sills an old tin can containing about $1,600 in gold coin, mostly in $2 50 and five dollar pieces. No one knows to whom the treasure belonged.

A courier from the Cheyenne Arapahoe reservation states that the Messiah craze has broken out among the Indians. Left Hand, head chief of the Arapahoes, and Old Crow and Whirlwind, chiefs of Cheyennes, have gathered a thousand Indians about them among the interior hills, and for many days and nights have kept the dance up continually, delaring they will not stop until the Saviour arrives.

An interesting little war story has Governer Jones, of Alabama for its hero. At the time Gordon was resisting Sherman's advance, Jones, then a staff captain, was delivering a message from his chief when he saw a little child, clad only in night clothes, hiding in terror behind a frame house in the direct range of the bullets from each army. Jones rode forward, took the child on his horse and galloped back with her to the Confederate line. When the Union forces saw the act they ceased firing, and there was an impromptu cessation of hostilities until the child had been carried to a point of safety.—Charleston News and Courier.

In a freight train which passed through Hannibal on the St. Louis, Keokuk and Northwestern line from Burlington to St. Louis were the celebrated Walker twin steers. These cattle were registered at the Chicago exchange as the largest in the world. They were raised in Jasper county, Mo., by Mr. Walker. Mr. Walker values them very highly, and will not ship them over a railroad unless the railroad insures them. The railroad company had them insured for $10,000. They are 6 years of age, 12 feet 6 inches long, 14 feet around the chest or heart, 3 feet 2 inches across the hips. Their aggregate weight is 8,040 pounds.—Cor. St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

Old Memories Recalled.

After the adjournment of the United States court at Danville, Va., recently, there was a little scene which was not on the docket. A one armed old Confederate had been found guilty of illegal distilling and was sentenced to one months imprisonment and a fine of $100. Judge John Paul, who was also an old Confederate ordered the marshall to bring Garrett Morrison, the one armed veteran, into the courtroom. Presently the judge and prisoner stood face to face. As he touched the empty sleeve tears came into the eyes of the judge, who said: "Come back here tomorrow and I will consider your case. We old boys are getting scarce, and you must not go to jail.—Cor. Richmond Times.

NEWS FROM WASHINGTON.

LATE MATTERS OF INTEREST PARTAINING TO OUR GOVERNMENT.

[Reported for The Times by our regular correspondent.]

WASHINGTON, Jan. 8.—Speaker pro tempore McMillin, who was elected without opposition to preside over the House until Speaker Crisp who is still confined to his room by the grip, shall be able to resume his duties, presides like a veteran, and is complimented on all sides for the ease with which he has taken up the honerous duties of presiding over the House.

Notwithstanding the unprecedented appropriations of the billion dollar Congress, the cry for deficiency appropriations has already begun. The list is headed by Porter, of the census bureau, who, through the Treasury department has asked for a deficiency appropriation of $1,000,000, to complete the work of that bureau, and there are those who doubt whether that amount will be sufficient, if Porter is to be allowed to do it in his own way. He may get the money, but it is not certain; and in any event he will probably be asked some puzzling questions as to how he has spent some of the $6,400,000 previously appropriated for the Census.

The attacks on the McKinley tariff law in the House resemble the firing of sharp-shooters. Bills have been introduced placing the following articles on the free list: Jute, jute bagging, iron ties, binding twine, lumber, tin plate, salt, agricultural implements, wool, coal and iron ore; and bills have been introduced to repeal the sugar bounty clause of the law, and so of the reciprocity clause as gives the President authority to restore the duty upon certain products of countries which fail to make reciprocity treaties with the United States. These bills will all go to the ways and means committee, which will decide which of them shall be pressed Representative Mills, who has gone to Texas, has been granted an indefinite leave of absence by the House. The principal object of Mr Mills in going home at this time is to regain his health, but it is probable that while there he may do some talking about the Texas Senatorship.

A meeting of the Executive Committee of the National Association of Democratic Clubs has been called for Jan. 20, by Representa W. L. Wilson, of West Virginia, who is chairman of the commitee, and it is desired that every member shall be present or represented by proxy, as important matters will be considered.

The democratic vacancy on the Interstate Commerce Commission has been given to Judge W. M. Lindsey, of Kentucky, a gentleman of whom nothing but good is known and the republican vacancy to J. W. McDill, of Iowa, who has been Congressman, Senator, Judge and several other things with official salaries. Col. W R. Morrison, whose commission expired Dec. 31 has been re appointed.

The silver question has already shown a ready disposition to bob up serenely in Congress at any and all times. Several bills have been introduced in the Senate providing for free coinage, and although there has been only one "bill" day in the House, four bills of the same sort were introduced, besides several others having a more or less direct bearing on silver. One of them provides for the repeal of the purchasing clause of the present silver law. Senator Stewart maintains that there is a law already in existence authorizing the free coinage of silver, enacted in 1837 and never repealed, and he offered a resolution instructing the Judiciary committee to inquire into the matter and report whether he is right or wrong. Senator Morrill delivered a very able and conservative speech this week against the unlimited free coinage of silver, in answer to Senator Stewart's recent speech.

The Harrison men are shouting "I told you so," because of a slight attack of nausea that Mr. Blaine had this week, and the present indications are that a concerted attempt is to be made to drive Mr. Blaine from the Presidential field, using his health as the principal weapon. It may succeed too, as Mr. Blaine is a monomaniac on that subject, and has been ever since that notorious sunstroke, a way back in the seventies.

Andrew Jackson's birthday is being fitly celebrated to day by the local democrats.

A joint resolution authorizes the Secretary of the Navy to charter a vessel to carry the grain which has been contributed for the famine stricken Russians to that country, was adopted by the Senate, but defeated by the House. The constitutionality of the resolution was doubted by some of the ablest democrats in Congress.

Senator Morgan spoke yesterday in favor of his resolution directing the Committee on Foreign Affairs to procure additional information concerning the Nicaragua canal. He strongly favors the guarantee of bonds asked for by the company, but unless there is a change of sentiment there is no probability of the bill passing the House. As one prominent member of that body puts it: "I favor the building of the canal by this Goverment if necessary, but am opposed to any guarantee of bonds issued by a private corporation."

THE RICHEST MAN IN W. VA.

HOW EX-SENATOR CAMDEN OF WEST VIRGINIA BECAME RICH.

The richest man in the State of West Virginia, and one of the richest in the United States, is ex Senator Johnson N. Camden. His wealth is estimated at between $8,000,000 and $10,000,000.

It was in the year 1860 when oil was first discovered in West Virginia. Mr. Camden had a few acres of land in the Burning Springs district, about thirty miles north of Parkersburg. In this land Mr. Camden bored two wells. They were the second and third wells bored for oil, only one having been sunk a few weeks previous to them, and that one was only partially successful, so far as striking oil was concerned, and wholly so as regards profit, for its owner did not know what in the world to do with it. He was very much like the fellow with an elephant on his hands.

The question of saving the oil and storing it, instead of letting it ooze out and run off into the rivulets and streams, became one of grave concern. However, necessity was the mother of invention then as now, and Senator Camden determined that the product of his wells should not go to waste. His exchequer was mighty slim at the time, but, with the assistance of some good friends, he bought a big, old flat boat and moored it to a tree on the river bank. From his two wells he troughed the oil into the boat.

In the meantime Mr. Camden had made a contract with General Sam Carnes of Boston, who was the pioneer oil refiner, to deliver 2,000 barrels at Parkersburg in bulk at the rate of 25 cents a gallon. The capacity of Mr. Camden's flatboat was just about that amount, and the prospect of $20,000—all his own—was to him something prodigious.

When his boat was full he set out for Parkersburg, thirty miles away, with his precious cargo. He drifted with the stream, and, after many hardships, reached his destination. General Carnes was there with his empty barrels. They transferred the oil from the flatboat to the barrels with cups and pails and when the work was finished Mr. Camden received $20,000 in cold cash. Thus was laid the foundation of a colossal fortune of nearly $10,000,000. He continued in the oil business solely for many years, and was interested, either wholly or partly, in all the subsequent oil developments in West Virginia.—Baltimore American.

HOME NEWS

—This is the dulest of the year.

—A little ice has been gotten in town.

—Mrs. C. F. Moore has the measles.

—R. K. Burns, Esq., of Academy, called to see us Monday.

—Charleston had a $50,000 fire on the 8th inst.

—N. C. McNeel Esq., has returned after a two weeks absence.

—Mr. G. R. Curry and daughter Miss Mattie, of Academy were in our city last Friday.

—Our correspondents when writing will please write the news and the news only.

—Our thanks are due Walter A. Yeager of Cheyenne, Wyo., for late newspapers from that place.

—Mayor Woods, of Charlottesville, Va., was in our city over night last Friday.

—The Pocahontas County Farmers Alliance met at this place last Friday.

—Dr. Patterson of this city and wife who have the grip are convalescent.

—Present your claims against his estate to N. C. McNeil, adm'r of Wm. Auldridge Sr., dec'd.

—Rev. J. F. A. Lautenschlager will preach at Sunset, Sunday, at 10:30 o'clock.

—In the past two or three weeks 12 or 15 new subscribers have been added to THE TIMES list.

—S. L. Brown, Esq., has been down with the grip for several days but is improving.

—C. B. Swecker Esq., has received at his shop a load of large picture frames, rocking chairs &c.

—Knapp's creek is past fording to day, Wednesday and the mail from the east failed to get in.

—We are pained to announce the death of the little six month old son of Mr. D. B. McElwee on the morning of the 7th inst., of grip.

—We printed for Attorney F. S. Rucker, Christmas week a brief in the case of R. S. Turk vs. Jannie B. Skiles, and have one to print this week for same, in the case of Wm. Skeen &c. vs. Levi Gay & others.

—The Edray Farmer's Alliance and I. U. will meet at Edray school house Saturday, Feb. 6th. All members are earnestly requested to be present, as there is a great deal of business to be transacted. Those who have not paid up their dues will be dropped from the roll. By order of the Alliance.

BEVERLY WAUGH, Sec.

—Died—Mrs. Underwood wife of Mr. M. M. Underwood, and their son Jesse, within five minutes of each other in the same room, at their home about 8 miles from this place on Monday evening of grip. Mrs. Underwood was a very old lady and the son was about 45 years of age.

—Mess. Overholt & Payne's store at Frankford was destroyed by fire one night last week, with two other stores and one dwelling house. Mess. Overholt and Payne were insured in the Peabody Co., of Wheeling for $5,000, and their loss we understand will probably reach $10,000.

—The Academy correspondent of the Greenbrier Independent says: "We are pained to learn of the death of Mrs. Nancy Hill, wife of Mr. Geo. Hill, which occurred at her home at Falling Spring, Greenbrier county, on Thursday, the 31st ult. Mrs. Hill was well known to all of us, having been born and reared here. She was a most estimable lady, of unquestionable christian character and beloved by all who knew her. She leaves a large circle of sorrowing relatives and friends to mourn her death."

—The Huntersville Farmers Alliance will meet in the Court House at this place Saturday the 16th inst. at 2 o'clock. It is desired that all members be present.

—Mr. Wm. R. Lynch died of grip, at his home near Alvon, on Anthony's creek, in this county, on the 4th inst., aged 51 years. When we last saw him, a short time ago he was the picture of robust health. His death is a forcible reminder of the uncertainty of life.—He was well known in the county and delighted in attending all kinds of public gatherings where generally he made himself heard. He was twice a candidate for the Legislature but was unsuccessful. Bill had his faults.—Who of us hasn't? Let them be forgotten or remembered only to be avoided. He leaves a wife and several little children.—Independent. [Mr. Lynch was very well known in this county, and his many friends will regret to learn of his death.]

GREEN BANK NEWSLETS.

Deaths.—Warrenton McElwee, on the 2nd inst., age about 10 years; Mrs. Cassel, relict of Sam'l Cassel of Back Alleghany, of dropsy also on the 2nd inst, and Mr. J. W. Rock, of near this place of grip and pneumonia on the 9th inst. The funeral services of Mr. Rock was held in the Presbyterian church, by Revs. Ballengee and Hannah, after which a large concourse of relatives and friends followed the remains to the last resting place, near Mr. Adam Nottingham's. The bereaved family have the sympathy of the entire neighborhood.

There is hardly a family in this neighborhood, but one or more is down with measles or grip.

Blan Nottingham returned from a visit to Davis last week and reports a good deal of sickness in that vicinity.

C. H.

DUNMORE BRIEFS.

Three deaths in this district in the past two weeks, and still a good deal of sickness yet.

This is fine weather on our lumber jobbers. They are getting pretty near done.

Miss Claudie Dysard has commenced the Dunmore school.

Miss Jennie Bucher's select school at Sugar Grove is flourishing.

Mr. Gamon, the shoemaker is on the sick list.

The surprise party at Swecker's new shop headed by C. E. Steinmeyer was quite a success.

C. A. Yeager, Esq., has moved his family to the new town—Marlinton.

Capt. C. B. Swecker will commence an auction sale of about 1,800 yards of factory goods, about the 27th inst. Watch for the ad.

Geo. W. Callison dept. Sheriff was in our town Saturday.

Rev. J. F. A. Lautenschlager will preach at Dunmore next Sunday night.

TOM SAWYER.

To a statement that "Stonewall" Jackson would never travel or fight on Sunday, the Oxford, Maine, Advertiser replies: "We think the surviving members of the old Tenth Maine regiment can recall to memory Sunday, the 25th day of May, 1862, almost three decades, when old Stonewall traveled and fought on Sunday and had our fearless and stalwart band on the run from Winchester to Williamsport. How that Rebel battery got the drop on us when a few miles from Winchester, and what a terrifying sound those scorching shells gave us as they came whizzing through the air so near, and what a shower of knapsacks followed about that time, and with what sad hearts we parted with photographs, letters and clothing from home as we flung them away and pressed on! That forced march was a trying ordeal to the men and some of them carry the effects to this day."

PECIAL ANNOUNCEMENT.

We have made arrangements with Dr. B. J. Kendall Co., publishers of "A Treatise on the Horse and his Diseases;" which will enable all subscribers to obtain a copy of that valuable work free by sending their address (enclosing a two cent stamp for mailing same) to DR. B. J. KENDALL CO., ENOSBURGH FALLS, VT. This book is now recognized as standard authority upon all diseases of the horse, as its phenomenal sale attests, over four million copies having been sold in the past ten years, a sale never before reached by any publication in the same period of time. We feel confident that our patrons will appreciate the work, and be glad to avail themselves of this opportunity of obtaining a valuable book.

It is necessary that you mention this paper in sending for the "Treatise." This offer will remain open for only a short time.

ORDER OF PUBLICATION.

State of West Virginia,

Pocahontas County, to-wit:

At rules held in the Clerk's office of the Circuit Court of Pocahontas County on the 1st Monday in January, 1892:

W. C. Stuart, Pl'ff

vs.

Hugh Adams & als. Def'ts.

The object of this suit is to subject to the payment of $716.67 with interest thereon from the 25th day of September, 1890, due to the plaintiff, W. C. Stuart, from the defendants Hugh Adams and H. M. Lockridge, the real estate belonging to said defendants severally, lying in Pocahontas County in the State of West Virginia, which has been levied on under order of attachments issued in this suit, and it appearing by affidavit filed that the defendants Hugh Adams, H. M. Lockridge, Ellen M. Cameron and Thomas B. Hickman are non-residents of the State of West Virginia: It is ordered that they do appear here within one month after the first publication of this order and do what is necessary to protect their interest in this suit.

Witness: J. H. Patterson, Clerk of the said Court this 4th day of January, 1892.

J. H. PATTERSON, Clerk.

L. M. McClintic, p. q.

Jan 7-4t. Printer's fee $9.85.

ORDER OF PUBLICATION.

State of West Virginia,

Pocahontas County, to-wit:

At rules held in the Clerk's office of the Circuit Court of Pocahontas County, on the first Monday in January, 1892:

W. C. Stuart, Pl'ff

vs.

C. C. Hansel & others, Def'ts.

The object of this suit is to subject to the payment of $576.73 with interest thereon from August 14th 1891, due to the plaintiff W. C. Stuart, from the defendants C. C. Hansel, H. M. Lockridge and Hugh Adams, the real estate belonging to said H. M. Lockridge and Hugh Adams severally, lying in Pocahontas County, in the State of West Virginia, which has been levied on under order of attachment issued in this suit, and it appearing by affidavit filed, that the defendants, C. C. Hansel, H. M. Lockridge, Hugh Adams, Ellen M. Cameron and Thomas B. Hickman are non-residents of the State of West Virginia: It is ordered, that they do appear here within one month after the first publication of this order and do what is necessary to protect their interest in this suit.

Witness: J. H. Patterson, Clerk of the said Court this 4th day of January, 1892.

J. H. PATTERSON, Clerk.

L. M. McClintic, p. q.

Jan. 7, 4t. Printer's fee $9.85.

LANDS SOLD FOR TA[XES]

List of real estate sold in the County of Pocahontas, [illegible] December, 1891, for the non payment of the taxes charg[ed] [illegible] the years 1889, and 1890, and purchased by individuals [illegible]

NAME OF PERSON CHARGED WITH TAXES.	LOCAL DESCRIPTION OF LANDS.	Quantity of land charged.	Quantity of land sold.	NAME OF PURCHASER.	Whole amount paid by the purchaser.
GREEN BANK DISTRICT.
Campbell Sam'l B.	Greenbrier rv.	571	571	L. M. McClintic	$59 23
Hutton Alfred	½ of 596 Greenbr rv.	298	298	J. C. Armstrong	4 89
EDRAY DISTRICT.
Cameron Geo. H.	Dry Branch	297	297	With. McClintic	4 42
Jackson Wm.	Slaty Fork	100	100	Silas Sharp	[illegible] 54
McDowell Martin& J.ed	Adj John Gay	121	121	L. M. McClintic	2 77
HUNTERSVILLE DISTRICT.
Cobb Amanda	Buckley Mtn	100	100	A. Barlow	1 09
King Chas	Hills	29 13p	29 13p	Marg. C Grimes	8 08
Shafer R. P. G	Buckley Mtn	15	15	with. McClintic	82
LITTLE LEVELS.
Rodgers Geo. W.	Laurel creek	125	125	L. M. McClintic	1 56
Sidenstricker Mrgr' Est	Hillsboro	1 23p	1 23p	JnoSidenstrick'r	1 07

The owner of any real estate above described and sold, his heirs or assigns, or any person having a right to charge such real estate for a debt, may redeem the same by paying to the purchaser, his heirs or assigns, within one year from the sale thereof, the amount specified in the last column of the above table, and such additional taxes thereon as may have been paid by the purchaser, his heirs or assigns, with interest on said purchase money and taxes at the rate of twelve per centum per annum, from the time the same may have been so paid.

Given under my hand this 15th day of December, 1891.

J. C. ARBOGAST, Sheriff.

ORDER OF PUBLICATION.

State of West Virginia,

Pocahontas County, to-wit:

At Rules held in the Clerk's office of the Circuit Court of Pocahontas County on the first Monday in January, 1892.

Mathew Wallace, Pl'ff

vs.

Charles Stewart & al., Def'ts.

IN CHANCERY.

The object of this suit is to recover for the plaintiff, Mathew Wallace, from the defendant, Charles Stewart, the sum of $164.92 with interest thereon from 14th Oct. 1891 being judgment on bond of said Stewart to said Wallace dated and due 21st Aug. 1891, and to subject to payment thereof a tract of land lying in Pocahontas County in the State of West Virginia which said Charles Stewart and wife pretend to have conveyed to one Andrew Chanel by deed recorded in the Clerk's Office of the County Court of said Pocahontas County in Deed Book No. 22, page 214, being about 275 acres lying on the Waters of Stamping Creek in said Pocahontas County, the boundaries of which land are given in said pretended deed:

And it appearing by affidavit filed that Charles Stewart above named is not a resident of the State of West Virginia: It is ordered that he do appear here within one month after the first publication of this order and do what is necessary to protect his interest in this suit.

Witness: J. H. Patterson, Clerk of the said Court this 4th day of January 1892.

J. H. PATTERSON, Clerk.

L. M. McClintic, p. q.

Printers fee $11.4[illegible] Jan. 7, 4 w.

Pocahontas Times.

JOHN E. CAMPBELL,
EDITOR AND PROPRIETOR.

ADVERTISING RATES.

	1 m.	3 m.	6 m.	1 yr.
One inch	$ 1 00	$ 2 00	$ 3 00	$ 5 00
Three in.	3 00	4 00	8 00	10 00
Qr. column	3 00	6 00	15 00	17 00
Half col'n	6 00	12 00	20 00	30 00
One col'n	10 00	20 00	30 00	50 00

Reading notices, not exceeding five lines, twenty-five cents for each insertion, and five cents a line for each additional line.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION.

One copy, 1 yr., $1.00 in advance; after 6 months, $1.25; after 12 months, $1.50

These terms will be strictly complied with.

Entered at the Post-office at Huntersville, W. Va., as second class matter.

Huntersville, W. Va.

January 14, 1892.

GREAT YOUNG MEN.

THEY ROSE TO PROMINENCE IN THE HEYDAY OF YOUTH.

Charles James Fox was in Parliament at 19 [illegible]

of these, he is still master of a good trade—something that no one can take from him, no matter what exigencies may arise. The man who is master of a good trade is as independent as a millionaire. He need never want; he can find work in any corner of the world. I do not say one word against a profitable career. But I do say emphatically that the man who has a trade and a profession as well, need have no fear of the future. The boy who wants to can master a trade between the years of sixteen and twenty, and if he dislikes it, he still has time to study medicine, the law, or any other of the learned professions. But if he waits until he is twenty, or over, he may not have an opportunity or feel inclined to learn either.

"There is only one fault I can find with your city," said a traveler to a resident of a western city.

"And what is that?"

"It is dead."

"But it has one redeeming feature."

"And what is that?"

"It is well laid out."

"Think so?"

"Yes. It is better laid out than ——ville."

"No doubt."

"Yes; it has been dead longer."

He—Are you sure I am the only man you ever really and truly loved?

She—Perfectly sure. I went over the whole list only yesterday.

A SERIOUS CASE.

Customer—My watch won't go.

Jeweler (examining it)—My! my! Have you been in a railroad collision?

Customer (surprised)—Why, no.

Jeweler (solemnly)—When you undress you should not throw your vest on the floor when your watch is in your pocket.

Customer (thoughtfully)—I never do. I have been exceedingly careful with that watch. Don't know how it got hurt. How long will it take to fix it?

Jeweler (after another examination)—You'd better leave it here at least a week, but if you can get along without it, I would advise two weeks.

Customer—Very well. Do it up right. Good day.

Jeweler (to assistant)—Hans, [illegible]

The readers of THE TIMES are refered to the following persons who have the ALLEGER ORGANS:

Annie Mollohan, Replete, W. Va.

S. W. Ott, Charlestown, W. Va.

Jacob Lively, Roseville, W. Va,

W. H. Swiger, Malta, W. Va.

J. W. Heavener, Petersburg, W. Va,

Tinta Craig, Glen Elk, W. Va.

—If you want Letter and Note heads, neatly printed and put up in tablet form, cheaper than you can get them anywhere else, call at THE TIMES office. We also do all kinds of nice job printing, and have on hands a nice line of Stationary, business cards, &c. &c.

CONSUMPTION [illegible]

An old physician, retired from practice, having had placed in his hands by an East India missionary the formula of a simple vegetable remedy for the speedy and permanent cure of Consumption, Bronchitis, Catarrh, Asthma and all throat and Lung Affections, also a positive and radical cure for Nervous Debility and all Nervous Complaints, after having tested its wonderful curative powers in thousands of cases, has felt it his duty to make it known to his suffering fellows. Actuated by this motive and a desire to relieve human suffering, I will send free of charge, to all who desire it, this recipe, in German, French or English, with full directions for preparing and using. Sent by mail by addressing with stamp, naming this paper. W. A. Noyes, 820 Powers' Block, Rochester, N. Y.

CENTRAL W. VA. MARBLE WORKS

Manufacturers of

HEADSTONES and ALL KINDS OF MONUMENTAL WORK, [illegible]

Dealers in

ALL KINDS OF WIRE FENCING.

Lewisburg, W. Va.
E. H. MOORE, Agent,
ACADEMY, W. Va.

THE POLICE GAZETTE

Is the only illustrated paper in the world containing all the latest sensational and sporting news. No Saloon Keeper, Barber or Club Room can afford to be without it. It always makes friends wherever it goes.

Mailed to any address in the United States, securely wrapped, 13 weeks for $1.00.

Send Five Cents for sample copy.

RICHARD K. FOX,
Franklin Square, New York

POCAHONTAS TIMES.

Vol. 9. JOHN E. CAMPBELL, EDITOR AND PROPRIETOR. Huntersville, West Virginia, Thursday, January 21, 1892. Terms of Subscription. $1.00 PER YEAR. IN ADVANCE. No 25

Official Directory of Pocahontas County

Judge of Circuit Court,	A. N. Campbell.
Prosecuting Attorney,	L. M. McClintic.
Sheriff,	J. C. Arbogast.
Deputy Sheriff,	Geo. W. Callison.
Cl'k Co. Court,	S. L. Brown.
Cl'k Cir. Court,	J. H. Patterson.
Assessor,	C. O. Arbogast.
Com'rs Co. Ct.	C E. Beard. B. B. Hannah. G. M. Kee.
Co. Surveyor,	Geo. Baxter

THE COURTS.

Circuit Court convenes on the first Tuesday in April, 3rd Tuesday in June and 3rd Tuesday in October.

County Court convenes on the 1st Tuesday in January, March, October and second Tuesday in July. July is levy term.

PONETIX.

This intercepted letter from our little "Devil" to his "girl" Katharine Jay, in Utica, N. Y., is too good to be lost. We reproduce it verbatim et literatim, and challenge its [illegible].

AnSA now I mean 2 write
 2 you sweet KT J
The girl without a [illegible]
 The bL of UTK.

I [illegible] if U got that 1
 I wrote 2 U B4
I sailed in the RKDA
 And sent by Ln Moore.

My MT head will scarce contain
 A calm ID A bright
But AT miles from you I must
 M— this chance 2 write.

And 1st should NE NV U
 B EZE, mind it 0
Should NE friendship show B true
 They should 0 B forgot.

From virtU nevR DV8
 Her influence [illegible]
Alike induces [illegible]
 Or 40tude Dvine.

And if you cannot cut a—
 Or shout an !
I hope U'll put no .
 21 ?

R U 4 anXStion ?
 My cousN ? Healt & [illegible]
He offR's in a [illegible]
 A 1/2 of land.

He says he loves U 2 XS
 U R virtuous and YYY
In XLNC U XL
 All others in his III.

This SA until U I C
 I pray U 2 XQs
And do not burn in FIG
 My young and wayward mUU

Now fare U well dear KT J
 I trust that U R true
when this U C then U can sA
 AnSA I O U.
 The "Devil,"—he did.

ROBERT J. BURDETTE

Gives "his son" some Interesting Advice on Prophesying.

Some years ago I discovered that, like Saul, I was becoming mixed up somewhat with the prophets. Now, I have the profoundest respect for prophets who are to the manner born, and had I received my call to the inspired life at my birth or earlier I would be exalted above measure by the honor thus laid upon me and I would prophesy and cry aloud, and spare not, whenever there was anything to predict. But, young as I was, even at that time, when I was not old enough to be very young, I observed that the home made and, worse still, the hand made article of prophet was a snare at many times, a delusion the rest of the time, and in other instances a fraud.

I cured myself of the habit of predicting things by a very simple method. I procured a good strong box, not too large, and labelled it "The Tomb of the Prophets."

Thereafter whenever I felt a strong desire to predict something, instead of rushing into print with it I wrote it down in plain, fair script, dated it and put it into this box. Then some long, rainy day I would overhaul the "Tomb of the Prophets," and read my [illegible] of [illegible] in the light of events. [illegible] the parallel columns wo[illegible] funny—with hopelessly [illegible] humor—for anything. [illegible] they would make wh[illegible] Greely used to call "m[illegible] eating reading."

By degrees I got [illegible] other unregenerate pr[illegible] had not learned the se[illegible] ing the prophetic a[illegible] themselves in the cons[illegible] of my private cemeter[illegible] creased the scope of [illegible] reading, and while it [illegible] instructive it never fai[illegible] tertaining.

Among other thing[illegible] from this "Tomb of P[illegible] other day was the [illegible] in the most positive [illegible] ation that the Englis[illegible] be compelled to [illegible] be pretty positive w[illegible]

[illegible] back up—the Rev. Mr. Baxter, of England, issuing his final and revised bulletin of the everlasting smashup. He turns the Book of Daniel inside out, inside down, ether end to, adds, subtracts, multiplies and divides, extracts the square roof, counts the letters and misses every fifth one, works in a few acrostics after the manner of the prophet who finds the name of the Deity in the Book of Esther, and finally sets everything up straight and clean, all the same font, makes it justify, and fixes the exact date for the dissolution of the Standard Oil Company and the Gould system, which is about all there is left of the world, for the 11th of April, 1891. Now there is a great prophesy for you. And I suppose it was all brought to naught by the greedy, selfish carelessness of people. I suppose we forgot all about it and went right along buying and selling, marrying and giving in marriage—which are all the same things—on the 11th of April until the day was past and we were on our way home from an hour's improvement under the elevating teaching of the stage in "Brass Mondey," "Hole in the Ground" or "The Clemenceau Case" before we remembered that we should have wound things up that very afternoon. It must be encouraging to a prophet to prophesy until his lower jaw cleaves to the roof of his mouth and his back fairly aches and then have people go away and forget what it was all about.

Then I find another good prophesy by a local prophet, predicting a six weeks' drought. It is dated about two weeks before the Johnstown flood. The great European war is a favorite subject for old prophets. The time for the fulfillment of all, or almost all, war prophecies, whether they be written in January or December, is, "before the close of the present year." The war prophet has got that phase encysted in his system somehow and it can't be taken out without great danger; greater danger, indeed, than there is—and this is not a prophecy, but merely a comparison—of the great European war.

And the prophetic visions and dreams that are dreamed after the thing the prophet dreamed about has appeared in all the "boiler-plate" papers! It is astonishing how closely a dream, in the midnight visions of a good all round dreamer, can be made to parallel the accomplished fact. At least it is astonishing until the reader has gone into the dream business himself once or twice and manipulated a few syndicate presentiments for popular use. After you once get the combination you can outdream [illegible] one eye [illegible] credulous [illegible] places the [illegible] the inspired [illegible] prophet. But [illegible] hand at it. [illegible] phesied at a [illegible] the end of [illegible] than never [illegible] prophesy pub[illegible] within a thou[illegible] people will [illegible] I keep my [illegible] the events [illegible] prophesied [illegible] necessa[illegible] make fun [illegible] that they [illegible] attention to [illegible] See [illegible] Hon. John Raw, of Crudeville, Dough county, whom the chance of drawing has given the best seat in the house; see him standing on his feet until his legs ache bawling "Mr. Speaker!" until the ventilator rattles. The Speaker slowly raises his eyes, the Hon. Mr. Raw's patience and persistence is about to triumph, thrills his fainting heart and nerves his failing voice. With one last, despairing effort he bellows "Mr. Speaker!" as though all the loud sounding bulls on Bashan's hills were roaring the "Drinking Chorus from The Gazzlers," and in gentle tones the Speaker, glancing calmly far over the head of the howling dervish from Dough county, recognizes a quiet man away back in the shadowy obscurity of the last seat in the chamber, who hasn't said anything.

Consider Johnny Raw's ways and be wise, my son. The first thing for you to do is to catch the Speaker's eye. You can't make a record for a prophesy on a private track with invited witnesses of your own choosing. These private tracks are frequently a little fast and the private watcher a little slow. Many a horse has trotted in 2:09 1-5 on a private track that got shut clear out by a three minute colt when they trotted at the "county fair."

But you don't prophesy necessarily for the approbation of the public, my son. Never mind what people say. If you have something to prophesy lift up your voice and cry aloud. They'll listen to you by and by. That is if you prophesy concerning things that concern them. People don't care to hear about the end of the world.

That dont concern then very much; they all know when that is coming.

The end of the world will come to you and to every man who hears your voice sometime within the next hundred years. That much we all know. No man now living will see the year 1993, except a few old liars who are not yet yet born, but we intend by the assistance of the local editors of their town papers, to live to the old age of 118 years. So if you have anything to say it is time for you to begin. The longer you put it off the more trouble you will have catching the speaker's eye.

ROBERT J. BURDETTE.

EXCELLENT ADVICE.

A pretty story related of the lamented Florence is that of an episode with a stage struck young woman, says the New York Times. Coming out of the theater in Boston one evening after a performance, a young woman timidly approached him, saying as he paused to listen, "Mr. Florence, will you tell me where I can come and see you about going on the stage?"

Taking in the situation at a glance, the actor replied kindly, "Why, yes, at the —— hotel tomorrow morning at twelve o'clock."

Punctually at that hour the would-be actress was shown in. She was evidently a simply bred girl, fascinated with the glamour of the footlights. With entire ignorance of what was expected of her she announced her desire finishing naively,

"And I thought I'd come and ask you what I must do first."

"You are familiar with some plays I presume?" questioned Mr. Florence.

"Oh, yes," eagerly. "I go to the theater all I can. I've seen you every time you've been in Boston."

"But I mean you have studied some dramatic roles?" pursued the actor.

"I—think not," was the hesitating reply.

"You can read something, at least, to let me see what you can do?" he tried next.

"I can read poetry," answered the girl.

"Don't you know some poetry that you can recite?" urged Mr. Florence.

Yes, she knew Longfellow's "The Bridge," and she proceeded to give it in a way that it has probably never been given before nor since.

There was a moment's silence after she had finished, broken at length by Mr. Florence.

"You have a home?" he asked.

"Oh, yes."

"A mother and father?"

"No father, but a mother."

"And a lover, may be?" watching the girl's face keenly.

She blushed, and admitted that there was a lover.

"Well, now, my dear," said Mr. Florence, dismissing her, "I can spare you no more time this morning. Leave me your name and address, and you shall hear from me very soon."

The girl complied, before her footsteps had died away in the hall the actor was seated at a table writing. The next day, with a handsomely-framed picture of Mr. Florence, there was delivered to the aspirant for histrionic effort this note:

DEAR MISS:——Stay with your mother, marry your lover, and play leading lady on the home stage, where you are fitted to shine in all womanliness. Be assured, my dear young friend, on the other stage to which you aspire you would be as out of place as a mouse in a ballroom. Sincerely yours

WILLIAM J. FLORENCE.

CURIOSITIES ABOUT GOLD.

Gold is so very tenacious that a piece of it drawn into wire one-twentieth of an inch in diameter will sustain a weight of 500 pounds without breaking.

Its malleability is so great that a single grain may be divided into 2,000,000 parts and a cubic inch into 9,523,809,523 parts, each of which may be distinctly seen by the naked eye.

A grain and a half of gold may be beaten into leaves of one inch square, which if intersected by parallel lines drawn at right angles to each other and distance only one-hundredth part of an inch, will produce 25,000,000 little squares, each of which may be distinctly seen without the use of a glass.

The surface of any given quantity of gold, according to the best authorities, may be extended by the hammer 310,184 times. The thickness of the metal thus extended appears to be no more than the 368,020th of an inch. Eight ounces of this wonderful metal would gild a silver wire of sufficient length to extend entirely around the globe.

Little Johnnie—There's a man at the door with a bill.

Brown—Tell him I'm not at home.

"But it's a five dollar bill he says he owes you."

POCAHONTAS TIMES.

Vol. 9. JOHN E. CAMPBELL, EDITOR AND PROPRIETOR. Huntersville, West Virginia, Thursday, January 21, 1892. Terms of Subscription. $1.00 PER YEAR. IN ADVANCE. No. 25

Official Directory of Pocahontas County

Judge of Circuit Court, A. N. Campbell.
Prosecuting Attorney, L. M. McClintic.
Sheriff, J. C. Arbogast.
Deputy Sheriff, Geo. W. Callison.
Clk Co. Court, S. L. Brown.
Clk Cir. Court, J. H. Patterson.
Assessor, C. O. Arbogast.
Com'rs Co. Ct. C. E. Beard. S. B. Hannah. G. M. Kee.
Co. Surveyor, Geo. Baxter

THE COURTS.

Circuit Court convenes on the first Tuesday in April, 3rd Tuesday in June and 3rd Tuesday in October.

County Court convenes on the 1st Tuesday in January, March, October and second Tuesday in July. July is levy term.

FONETIX.

This intercepted letter from our little "Devil" to his "girl" Katharine Jay, in Utica, N. Y., is too good to be lost. We reproduce it verbatim et literatim, and challenge its ‖.

An S A now I mean 2 write
2 you sweet KT J
The girl without a ‖
The bL of UTK.

I der if U got that 1
I wrote 2 U B4
I sailed in the RKDA
And sent by LN Moore.

My MT head will scarce contain
A calm ID A bright
But AT miles from you I must
M— this chance 2 write.

And 1st should NE NV U
B EZE, mind it 0
Should NE friendship show B true
They should 0 B forgot.

From virtU nevR DV8
Her influence B9
Alike induces 10derns
Or 40tude Dvine.

And if you cannot cut a—
Or shout an !
I hope U'll put no .
21 ?

R U 4 an XStion ?
My cousN ? Healt & [illegible]
He offR's in a ¶
A ¼ 2 of land.

He says he loves U 2 XS
U R virtuous and YYY
In XLNC U XL
All others in his III.

This SA until U I C
I pray U 2 XQ's
And do not burn in FIG
My young and wayward mUU

Now fare U well dear KT J
I trust that U R true
when this U C then U can sA
An SA I O U.
The "Devil,"—he did.

ROBERT J. BURDETTE

Gives "his son" some interesting Advice on Prophesying.

Some years ago I discovered that, like Saul, I was becoming mixed up somewhat with the prophets. Now, I have the profoundest respect for prophets who are to the manner born, and had I received my call to the inspired life at my birth or earlier I would be exalted above measure by the honor thus laid upon me and I would prophesy and cry aloud, and spare not, whenever there was anything to predict. But, young as I was, even at that time, when I was not old enough to be very young, I observed that the home made and, worse still, the hand made article of prophet was a snare at many times, a delusion the rest of the time, and in other instances a fraud.

I cured myself of the habit of predicting things by a very simple method. I procured a good strong box, not too large, and labelled it "The Tomb of the Prophets."

Thereafter whenever I felt a strong desire to predict something, instead of rushing into print with it I wrote it down in plain, fair script, dated it and put it into this box. Then some long, rainy day I would overhaul the "Tomb of the Prophets," and read my [illegible] in the light of events. [illegible] the parallel columns [illegible] funny—with hopelessly [illegible] humor—for anything. [illegible] they would make [illegible] Greely used to call "[illegible] eating reading."

By degrees I got [illegible] other unregenerate pr[illegible] had not learned the se[illegible] ing the prophetic [illegible] themselves in the conse[illegible] of my private cemeter[illegible] creased the scope of [illegible] reading, and while it i[illegible] instructive it never fai[illegible] tertaining.

Among other thing[illegible] from this "Tomb of P[illegible] other day was the sta[illegible] in the most positive [illegible] ation that the Englis[illegible] be compelled to [illegible] be pretty positive w[illegible] back up—the Rev. Mr. Baxter, of England, issuing his final and revised bulletin of the everlasting smashup. He turns the Book of Daniel inside out, inside down, other end to, adds, subtracts, multiplies and divides, extracts the square roof, counts the letters and misses every fifth one, works in a few acrostics after the manner of the prophet who finds the name of the Deity in the Book of Esther, and finally sets everything up straight and clean, all the same font, makes it justify, and fixes the exact date for the dissolution of the Standard Oil Company and the Gould system, which is about all there is left of the world, for the 11th of April, 1891. Now there is a great prophesy for you. And I suppose it was all brought to naught by the greedy, selfish carelessness of people. I suppose we forgot all about it and went right along buying and selling, marrying and giving in marriage—which are all the same things—on the 11th of April until the day was past and we were on our way home from an hour's improvement under the elevating teaching of the stage in "Brass Mondey," "Hole in the Ground" or "The Clemenceau Case" before we remembered that we should have wound things up that very afternoon. It must be encouraging to a prophet to prophesy until his lower jaw cleaves to the roof of his mouth and his back fairly aches and then have people go away and forget what it was all about.

Then I find another good prophesy by a local prophet, predicting a six weeks' drought. It is dated about two weeks before the Johnstown flood. The great European war is a favorite subject for old prophets. The time for the fulfillment of all, or almost all, war prophecies, whether they be written in January or December, is, "before the close of the present year." The war prophet has got that phase encysted in his system somehow and it can't be taken out without great danger; greater danger, indeed, than there is—and this is not a prophecy, but merely a comparison—of the great European war.

And the prophetic visions and dreams that are dreamed after the thing the prophet dreamed about has appeared in all the "boiler-plate" papers! It is astonishing how closely a dream, in the midnight visions of a good all round dreamer, can be made to parallel the accomplished fact. At least it is astonishing until the reader has gone into the dream business himself once or twice and manipulated a few syndicate presentiments for popular use. After you once get the combination you can outdream [illegible] one eye [illegible] credulous [illegible] places the [illegible] the inspired [illegible] ophet. But [illegible] ur hand at it. [illegible] phesied at a [illegible] the end of [illegible] than never [illegible] ll.

[illegible] rophesy pub[illegible] ithin a thou[illegible] people will [illegible] I keep my [illegible] er the events [illegible] er prophsie[illegible] n't necessa[illegible] ill make fun [illegible] e that they [illegible] attention to [illegible] ington. See [illegible] Hor. John

Raw, of Crudeville, Dough county, whom the chance of drawing has given the best seat in the house; see him standing on his feet until his legs ache bawling "Mr. Speaker!" until the ventilator rattles. The Speaker slowly raises his eyes, the Hon. Mr. Raw's patience and persistence is about to triumph, thrills his fainting heart and nerves his failing voice. With one last, despairing effort he bellows "Mr. Speaker!" as though all the loud sounding bulls on Bashan's hills were roaring the "Drinking Chorus from The Gazzlers," and in gentle tones the Speaker, glancing calmly far over the head of the howling dervish from Dough county, recognizes a quiet man away back in the shadowy obscurity of the last seat in the chamber, who hasn't said anything.

Consider Johnny Raw's ways and be wise, my son. The first thing for you to do is to catch the Speaker's eye. You can't make a record for a prophesy on a private track with invited witnesses of your own choosing. These private tracks are frequently a little fast and the private watcher a little slow. Many a horse has trotted in 2:09 1-5 on a private track that got shut clear out by a three minute colt when they trotted at the "county fair."

But you don't prophesy necessarily for the approbation of the public, my son. Never mind what people say. If you have something to prophesy lift up your voice and cry aloud. They'll listen to you by and by. That is if you prophesy concerning things that concern them. People don't care to hear about the end of the world.

That dont concern them very much; they all know when that is coming.

The end of the world will come to you and to every man who hears your voice sometime within the next hundred years. That much we all know. No man now living will see the year 1993, except a few old liars who are not yet yet born, but we intend by the assistance of the local editors of their town papers, to live to the old age of 118 years. So if you have anything to say it is time for you to begin. The longer you put it off the more trouble you will have catching the speaker's eye.

ROBERT J. BURDETTE.

EXCELLENT ADVICE.

A pretty story related of the lamented Florence is that of an episode with a stage struck young woman, says the New York Times. Coming out of the theater in Boston one evening after a performance, a young woman timidly approached him, saying as he paused to listen, "Mr. Florence, will you tell me where I can come and see you about going on the stage?"

Taking in the situation at a glance, the actor replied kindly, "Why, yes, at the —— hotel tomorrow morning at twelve o'clock."

Punctually at that hour the would be actress was shown in. She was evidently a simply bred girl, fascinated with the glamour of the footlights. With entire ignorance of what was expected of her she announced her desire finishing naively,

"And I thought I'd come and ask you what I must do first."

"You are familiar with some plays I presume?" questioned Mr. Florence.

"Oh, yes," eagerly. "I go to the theater all I can. I've seen you every time you've been in Boston."

"But I mean you have studied some dramatic roles?" pursued the actor.

"I—think not," was the hesitating reply.

"You can read something, at least, to let me see what you can do?" he tried next.

"I can read poetry," answered the girl.

"Don't you know some poetry that you can recite?" urged Mr. Florence.

Yes, she knew Longfellow's "The Bridge," and she proceeded to give it in a way that it has probably never been given before nor since.

There was a moment's silence after she had finished, broken at length by Mr. Florence.

"You have a home?" he asked.

"Oh, yes."

"A mother and father?"

"No father, but a mother."

"And a lover, may be?" watching the girl's face keenly.

She blushed, and admitted that there was a lover.

"Well, now, my dear," said Mr. Florence, dismissing her, "I can spare you no more time this morning. Leave me your name and address, and you shall hear from me very soon."

The girl complied, before her footsteps had died away in the hall the actor was seated at a table writing. The next day, with a handsomely-framed picture of Mr. Florence, there was delivered to the aspirant for histrionic effort this note:

DEAR MISS:——Stay with your mother, marry your lover, and play leading lady on the home stage, where you are fitted to shine in all womanliness. Be assured, my dear young friend, on the other stage to which you aspire you would be as out of place as a mouse in a ballroom. Sincerely yours
WILLIAM J. FLORENCE.

CURIOSITIES ABOUT GOLD.

Gold is so very tenacious that a piece of it drawn into wire one-twentieth of an inch in diameter will sustain a weight of 500 pounds without breaking.

Its malleability is so great that a single grain may be divided into 2,000,000 parts and a cubic inch into 9,523,809,523 parts, each of which may be distinctly seen by the naked eye.

A grain and a half of gold may be beaten into leaves of one inch square, which if intersected by parallel lines drawn at right angles to each other and distance only one-hundredth part of an inch, will produce 25,000,000 little squares, each of which may be distinctly seen without the use of a glass.

The surface of any given quantity of gold, according to the best authorities, may be extended by the hammer 310,184 times. The thickness of the metal thus extended appears to be no more than the 368,020th of an inch. Eight ounces of this wonderful metal would gild a silver wire of sufficient length to extend entirely around the globe.

Little Johnnie—There's a man at the door with a bill.

Brown—Tell him I'm not at home.

"But it's a five dollar bill he says he owes you."

Pocahontas Times.

JOHN E. CAMPBELL,
EDITOR AND PROPRIETOR.

ADVERTISING RATES.

	1 m.	3 m.	6 m.	1 yr.
One inch	$ 1 00	$ 2 00	$ 3 00	$ 5 00
Three in.	2 00	4 00	6 00	10 00
Qr. column	3 00	6 00	10 00	17 00
Half col'n	6 00	12 00	20 00	30 00
One col'n	10 00	20 00	30 00	50 00

Reading notices not exceeding five lines, twenty-five cents for each insertion, and five cents a line for each additional line.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION.

One copy, 1 yr., $1.00 in advance; after 6 months, $1.25; after 12 months, $1.50

These terms will be strictly complied with.

Entered at the Post-office at Huntersville, W. Va., as second class matter.

Huntersville, W. Va.

January 21, 1892.

1892.

Time like a railroad train cannot be rushed, but time unlike a railroad train has never been known to fail to make connection. The aged figure grasping in his bony fingers his glass and rusty scythe, had scarce caused the exit of 91, till 92 with his smiling countenance appeared in the tracks of his predecessor. We hail with gladness the new year from which we expect so much, and at the beginning of which, we made such solemn promises to be better. The abundant developments of '91 have made ample room for the entrance of '92. We hope that soon the rapidly developed form of the new may fill the place of the old year, and that thus there will be left a good space of time for 92's development's beyond any thing reached in any of the past years. Confining ourselves to our own mountain county, we can see that the first bright rays of the day of our prosperity are falling upon us. In the North, East, South and West, capital has turned its lynx eyes this way. The steel tape, the forerunner of J. C. Calhoun's "great civilizer" has during the old year, measured the length of many of our fertile valleys; let us prophesy that when the new shall have become old, the iron horse shall be waking from their long sleep their echoes with his piercing neigh. A new city has been laid off in the heart of our County. Men of money are visiting us from all quarters and are going to the great financial centers of our country and are telling their friends of our iron, our coal and our timber. Let us lay aside our petty prejudices and the lethargy of our long isolation, look at the dawning sun of permanent development, now, for the first time in all our history shedding his fructifying rays upon us, and "get a hustle on us." With the right kind of work performed in the proper spirit, we can make our loved county of Pocahontas equal to any in our state. There must no longer be "wars and strivings among us,"—no more battling of sections, but strenuous and persevering efforts to promote the common good. Let us heed the advice of the Father of His Country, the soundness of which time has so conclusively proven, and pull together under all circumstances; remembering that communities are prosperous just so far as there is co-operation and harmony and no farther. Let us waste none of the golden days of '92, for soon he will be walking with tottering footsteps, his sun will be low in the west and "Death with frosty hand and cold will pluck the old man by the beard, surely, surely." Let us begin to hasten our prosperity now.

Much as we expect from '92, and large and permanent as we prophesy his developements will be, we hope that the boots which cover his wrinkled extremities in December will make tracks abundantly large for the free entrance of '93.

[illegible] WASHINGTON.

LATE [illegible] INTERESTING [illegible] PERTAINING TO OUR GOVERNMENT.

[Reported for The Times by our regular correspondent.]

WASHINGTON, Jan. 15th.—Mr. Harrison has, if high republican authority may be believed, relieved Mr. Blaine of the Chilian business and taken it entirely in his own hands. The same authority says that an ultimatum has been sent to Chili and that all of the correspondence and the President's accompanying proclamation which were ready ten days ago but were held back because of the Chilian minister having succeeded in bamboozling Mr. Blaine as to his country's intentions, will go to Congress just as soon as the evidence of all the sailors of the Baltimore has been taken. This evidence, as far as it has been telegraphed to the eastern papers, has created a very warlike feeling in Congress, and if Mr. Harrison does not hurry up and send the correspondence in, he will find it demanded by resolution.

The House has adopted a resolution offered by Representative Holman that has spread consternation among the promoters of schemes requiring "a little appropriation." It declares it to be the judgment of the House that the granting of subsidies or bounties by Congress in money, public credit, to promote special private industries or enterprises, independent of the constitutional power of Congress, is unjust and impolic and in manifest conflict with the spirit of republican institutions. And further resolves that in view of the present condition of the treasury, and because efficient and honest government can only be assured by the frugal expenditure of the public money, while unnecessary and lavish expenditure under any and all conditions leads inevitably to venal and corrupt methods in public affairs, no money ought to be appropriated by Congress, except such as is necessary to carry on the departments, frugally, efficiently and honestly administered.

The republican party has, by its national legislation, given protection to certain classes, always at the expense of the masses; but it has persistently denied protection to one class, to which it might have been given without expense or injury to any honest man. The class referred to is the inventors, to whom the country owes so much, who have vainly implored Congress to amend the patent laws by making it a criminal offense to knowingly infringe a patent. Representative Tillman, chairman of the House committee on Patents, is determined that the democratic House shall have the honor of passing a bill complying with the inventors wishes and breaking up the practice, now so common, of intentional infringement of successful patents by parties without financial responsibility.

The Senate Committee on Election this week heard the contested cases of Claggett vs Dubois, of Idaho, and Davidson vs Call, of Florida. The hearings in both cases were mere formalities, it having been certain beforehand that the committee, almost unanimously, favored the sitting members, Dubois and Call.

Owing to the fact that the articles which will be affected by the separate tariff bills likely to be reported by the House Ways and Means Committee are few in number, and that they have been so thoroughly discussed in the press, the committee has decided that it will be unnecessary to grant hearings to those interested in them, as it is not probable that a single new fact could be brought out.

Representative Harter, of Ohio, has introduced a bill to consolidate and reduce the number of Customs Collection districts in the country, which he thinks will improve the service and save $1[illegible] annually.

The democrats of the House have already reached the why and wherefore stage of the session. They want to know why Secretary Foster has withheld the payment of some $80,000,000 appropriated for the fiscal year ending June 30 last; also why some $35,000,000 less than should have been paid out of the appropriations for the current fiscal year, during its first half, ending Jan. 1, has been paid. These questions and others concerning Government finances, may give the Secretary more trouble than the grip, from which he has just recovered, did.

The democrats also wish to know just what effect the McKinley tariff law is having upon the country, and it is proposed, in order to obtain that information quickly that the House committee on Manufactures investigate its effect upon the general manufacturing interests, the Committees on Agriculture, Labor and Commerce to do the same for those several interests. A Senate Committee spent a part of last summer in making an investigation of this subject, but the House proposal would be much more thorough, consequently more satisfactory.

Speaker Crisp is expected to be well enough to preside over the House by next week.

Senator Faulkner is making strenuous efforts to obtain the $153,978 due W. Va. from the national government under the direct tax refunding act. When Congress first assembled one of the first measures offered was his joint resolution directing the Secretary of the Treasury to pay this money to the Governor of the State. When the resolution was submitted it was referred to the Committee on Claims who unanimously directed the Senator to report it favorably to the Senate. This is almost equivalent to its passage as this committee is one of the strongest in the Senate and when unanimous its conclusions are generally acquiescent in by the Senate.

Two attempts at Burglary were made in Hinton on the 14th inst., one on the store house of Mr. Hinton, the other one J. H. Millers law office, both of which were unsuccessful. We hope the officers will be diligent in investigating this matter and that they will speedily succeed in bringing the offenders to justice as nothing but decision measures and a prompt administration of Justice will deter such men from their lawless doings.

NOTICE! NOTICE!

All persons knowing themselves indebted to me by open account or note will please come forward and settle at once. I cannot indulge these accounts and notes any longer. They must be settled by the 1st of Mar. '92 or they will be put out for collection.

Resp't.
R. L. Nottingham.

Jan. 21-2-w.

HOME NEWS

—Dr. C. L. Austin was in town Tuesday.

—Mrs. Cass A. Cochran wife of Frank Cochran, of near Mill Point died Jan. 17th of "grippe"

—Messrs. S. P. Patterson and S. L. Brown are still confined to their rooms with La Grippe.

—Present your claims against his estate to N. C. McNeil, adm'r of Wm. Auldridge Sr., dec'd.

—Mr. John E. Campbell is off to Charlottesville on business and the editorial quill is now being wielded by N. C. McNeil.

—We see from the Athenaeum that Mr. Andrew Price who has been attending the State University has returned to his home at Marlinton.

—Atty. L. M. McClintic was down at [illegible] Saturday and Sunday visiting his father who is dangerously ill with La Grippe. Later Mr. McClintic is worse.

—Andrew Kertner of Droop Mountain was lodged in jail at this place on Monday the 18th inst., by Constable Burns for an assault committed upon Samuel Kellison.

—Mess. W. & L. Makowicz of the firm of Hodes, Whiting & Co., of Ronceverte W. Va. were in town Tuesday taking orders for their merchant tailoring department.

—The celebrated Dr. Keeley, of Dwight, Ill., says that asafoetida taken in four grain pills one pill four times a day will cure La Grippe. It is a simple remedy and certainly harmless. Try it.

—Mess. Andrew, L. W. and Millard Herold of Knapp's Creek, R. K. Burns of Academy, Q. W. Pouge of Edray, were in the city Monday and Ex Senator John W. Arbuckle of Lewisburg arrived Monday night.

—Several excellent specimens of that broad shouldered, calk booted and whole souled class of our citizens popularly denominated "log rollers" are boarding in the city waiting for "the drive" and their annual supply of rheumatism.

—The extensive lumbering enterprise, carried on since last fall, by Capt. E. A. Smith on Cummings Creek 2 miles above this place has closed for the season and now there are lying on the bank of Knapp's Creek just below town 3,000,000 ft. of white pine logs the result of "Little Jim's" four months work.

—The road leading from M. D. McGlaughlin's around the hill which cost the county $1,050.00 and which was made for the accommodation of such persons as might desire to come to Huntersville when Knapp's Creek is too high to cross should be kept in such a condition as that teams may be safely taken over it at such times.

GREEN BANK NEWSLETS.

Miss Leila Hull is teaching the Green Bank School.

Kenie Sutton returned from the West last week.

Rev. W. H. Ballengee and wife are off to Mill Point on a visit.

Died, on the 15th inst. of pneumonia, Jacob Sheets, Sr. on Back Allegheny.

J. L. Hudson is very bad with pneumonia at this writing also Mrs. J. R. Warwick.

Miss Jennie Clark had to close school a few days with an attack of Grippe but is convalescent.

Mrs G. W. Siple is down with inflammatory rheumatism but is some better.

One case before Justice Siple last Saturday.

Rev. W. H. Ballengee will hold a Sacramental meeting at Stony Bottom on the 31st ult.

The last quarterly meeting for the Green Bank Circuit will convene on the 6th and 7th of Feb.

C. H.

—Mr. Charles Sillington, an estimable citizen of Bath county, died at his home near Millboro Springs of the grip, aged 71 years.

CHILEAN SITUATION.

Congress Anxiously Awaits the Correspondence

WASHINGTON, D. C., January 19.—There can be little doubt that the developments of the last few days in the cause of the investigation now being conducted at San Francisco by Judge Advocate General Remy into the attack upon the Baltimore's crew; that the publication of the testimony in the Shields case and the ugly demonstration at Valparaiso against the Yorktown's gig have had the effect to create a very uneasy feeling at the Capitol.

Senators and Representatives who have long since derided the idea of any serious result following the Chilean correspondence and have had the greatest confidence that Chila would soon tender an apology and make reparation for the misdeeds of her citizens are now willing to admit privately that the situation is full of the gravest difficulties.

One ominous sign is the great inactivity of Congress in the matter. Heretofore it has been customary whenever a matter of the smallest public interest is the subject of diplomatic correspondence for one of the two Houses of Congress to call upon the President for all the information in the possession of the State Department in relation to the matter.

But no Senator or member has yet been venturesome enough to introduce a resolution calling for the Chilean correspondence, although it has been apparent to all of them that the relations of the United States with Chile have been strained nearly to the point of rupture within the last few weeks.

The very gravity of the situation appears to have had a repressible effect upon Congress. The Republicans are indisposed to embarrass the President by calling for the correspondence, having in view his significant promise to transmit it to Congress at an early day. The Democrats are fearful of interfering with the negotiations, and thereby precipitating trouble that may be chargeable to their action.

Of course the President might decline to accede to a request for the correspondence as he has done in other cases in the ground that it would not be expedient or against the public interest to publish it, but he would find it hard to do so after the strong expressions upon the subject contained in his annual message.

So the situation in Congress is one of anxious waiting in the hope that the President will soon relieve the general desire for information, by voluntarily, or by means of a prompted request, supply the correspondence

Secretary Morgan, who is the leading Democratic member of the Senate Committee of Foreign Relations is particularly indignant at the revalations in the case of Patrick Sheilds, the fireman of the American steamer Keweenaw, who was cruelly treated in a Chilean prison. He declared that Shields is undoubtedly entitled to the protection of the American Government, as he was serving on American vessel.

He predicts that the Chilean Government would never raise the question of Shields' citizenship as had been suggested, in view of the fact that he is an Irishman and has not been naturalized, as a plea for refusing reparation. In the House, the members of the Foreign Affairs Committee have discouraged all who spoke to them in favor of calling for the correspondence, but there has been no consultation among the members of the committee as a whole on the subject.

Drunkenness, or the Liquor Habit positively Cured by administering Dr. Haines' Golden Specific

It is manufactured as a powder, which can be given in a glass of beer, a cup of coffee or tea, or in food, without the knowledge of the patient. It is absolutely harmless, and will effect a permanent and speedy cure, whether the patient is a moderate drinker or an alcoholic wreck. It has been given in thousands of cases, and in every instance a perfect cure has followed. It never Fails. The system once impregnated with the Specific, it becomes an utter impossibility for the liquor appetite to exist. Cures guaranteed.

48 page book of particulars free. Address

GOLDEN SPECIFIC CO., 185 Race St., Cincinnati, O.

9 4

PECIAL ANNOUNCEMENT.

We have made arrangements with Dr. B. J. Kendall Co., publishers of "A Treatise on the Horse and his Diseases;" which will enable all subscribers to obtain a copy of that valuable work free by sending their address (enclosing a two-cent stamp for mailing same) to DR. B. J. KENDALL CO., ENOSBURGH FALLS, VT. This book is now recognized as standard authority upon all diseases of the horse, as its phenomenal sale attests, over four million copies having been sold in the past ten years, a sale never before reached by any publication in the same period of time. We feel confident that our patrons will appreciate the work, and be glad to avail themselves of this opportunity of obtaining a valuable book.

It is necessary that you mention this paper in sending for the "Treatise." This offer will remain open for only a short time.

BUILDERS & CONTRACTORS.

The undersigned will contract to build houses at Marlinton upon SHORT NOTICE and in workmanlike manner.

We employ first class Workmen, and when desired will furnish all Material. We will also furnish houses for rent, upon reasonable notice.

Respectfully,
C. A. YEAGER & CO.,
MARLINTON, W. VA.

ORDER OF PUBLICATION.

State of West Virginia.
Pocahontas County, to-wit:

At rules held in the Clerk's office of the Circuit Court of Pocahontas County on the 1st Monday in Janubry, 1892:

W. C. Stuart, Pl'ff
vs.
Hugh Adams & als. Def'ts.

The object of this suit is to subject to the payment of $716.67 with interest thereon from the 25th day of September, 1890, due to the plaintiff, W. C. Stuart, from the defendants Hugh Adams and H. M. Lockridge, the real estate belonging to said defendants severally, lying in Pocahontas County in the State of West Virginia, which has been levied on under order of attachments issued in this suit, and it appearing by affidavit filed that the defendants Hugh Adams, H. M. Lockridge, Ellen M. Cameron and Thomas B. Hickman are non-residents of the State of West Virginia: It is ordered that they do appear here within one month after the first publication of this order and do what is necessary to protect their interest in this suit.

Witness: J. H. Patterson, Clerk of the said Court this 4th day of January, 1892

J. H. PATTERSON, Clerk.

L. M. McClintic, p. q.
Jan 7-4t. Printer's fee $9.85.

ORDER OF PUBLICATION.

State of West Virginia.
Pocahontas County, to-wit:

At rules held in the Clerk's office of the Circuit Court of Pocahontas County on the first Monday in January, 1892:

W. C. Stuart, Pl'ff
vs.
C. C. Hansel & others, Def'ts.

The object of this suit is to subject to the payment of $576.72 with interest thereon from August 14th 1891, due to the plaintiff W. C. Stuart, from the defendants C. C. Hansel, H. M. Lockridge and Hugh Adams, the real estate belonging to said H. M. Lockridge and Hugh Adams severally, lying in Pocahontas County, in the State of West Virginia, which has been levied on under order of attachment issued in this suit, and it appearing by affidavit filed, that the defendants, C. C. Hansel, H. M. Lockridge, Hugh Adams, Ellen M. Cameron and Thomas B. Hickman are non-residents of the State of West Virginia: It is ordered, that they do appear here within one month after the first publication of this order and do what is necessary to protect their interest in this suit.

Witness: J. H. Patterson, Clerk of the said Court this 4th day of January, 1892.

J. H. PATTERSON, Clerk.

L. M. McClintic, p. q.
Jan. 7-4t. Printer's fee $9.85.

LANDS SOLD FOR TAXES.

List of real estate sold in the County of Pocahontas, in the month of December, 1891, for the non-payment of the taxes charged thereon for the years 1889, and 1890, and purchased by individuals:

NAME OF PERSON CHARGED WITH TAXES.	LOCAL DESCRIPTION OF LANDS.	Quantity of land charged.	Quantity of land sold.	NAME OF PURCHASER.	Whole amount paid by the purchaser.
GREEN BANK DISTRICT.
Campbell Sam'l B.	Greenbrier rv.	271	271	L. M. McClintic	238 28
Hutton Alfred	½ of 596 Greenbr rv.	298	298	J. C. Armontrout	4 89
EDRAY DISTRICT.
Cameron Geo. H.	Dry Branch	297	297	With. McClintic	4 63
Jackson Wm.	Sixty Fork	100	100	Silas Sharp	5 84
McDowell, Martin & Leo	Adj John Gay	121	121	L. M. McClintic	2 77
HUNTERSVILLE DISTRICT.
Cobb Amanda	Buckley Mtn	100	100	A. Barlow	1 09
King Chas	Hills	[illegible] 29	5¼	Marg. C. Grimes	5 08
Shafer R. P. G	Buckley Mtn	1	15	with. McClintic	88
LITTLE LEVELS.
Rodgers Geo. W.	Laurel creek	125	125	L. M. McClintic	7 50
Sidenstricker Mrgr. Est	Hillsboro	1-25p	1-25p	Jno Sidenstricker	1 07

The owner of any real estate above described and sold, his heirs or assigns, or any person having a right to charge such real estate for a debt, may redeem the same by paying to the purchaser, his heirs or assigns, within one year from the sale thereof, the amount specified in the last column of the above table, and such additional taxes thereon as may have been paid by the purchaser, his heirs or assigns, with interest on said purchase money and taxes at the rate of twelve per centum per annum, from the time the same may have been so paid.

Given under my hand this 15th day of December, 1891.

J. C. ARBOGAST, Sheriff.

ORDER OF PUBLICATION.

State of West Virginia.
Pocahontas County, to-wit:

At Rules held in the Clerk's office of the Circuit Court of Pocahontas County on the first Monday in January, 1892.

Mathew Wallace, Pl'ff
vs.
Charles Stewart & al., Def'ts.

IN CHANCERY.

The object of this suit is to recover for the plaintiff, Mathew Wallace, from the defendant, Charles Stewart, the sum of $164.92 with interest thereon from 14th Oct. 1891 being judgment on bond of said Stewart to said Wallace dated and due 21st Aug. 1891, and to subject to payment thereof a tract of land lying in Pocahontas County in the State of West Virginia which said Charles Stewart and wife pretend to have conveyed to one Andrew Chanel by deed recorded in the Clerk's Office of the County Court of said Pocahontas County in Deed Book No. 22, page 214, being about 275 acres lying on the waters of Stamping Creek in said Pocahontas County, the boundaries of which land are given in said pretended deed:

And it appearing by affidavit filed that Charles Stewart above named is not a resident of the State of West Virginia. It is ordered that he do appear here within one month after the first publication of this order and do what is necessary to protect his interest in this suit.

Witness: J. H. Patterson, Clerk of the said Court this 4th day of January 1892

J. H. PATTERSON, Clerk.

L. M. McClintic, p. q.
Printers fee $11.4[illegible] Jan. 7, 4 w.

ORDER OF PUBLICATION.

State of West Virginia.
Pocahontas County, to-wit:

At rules held in the Clerk's office of the Circuit Court of Pocahontas county on the first Monday in January, 1892.

Guggenheimer & Co., Pl'ffs.
vs
H. M. Lockridge, J. B. Lockridge, Ernest N. Moore, Mary J. Seebert, Mary R. Seebert, C. T. Seebert and Martha S. Seebert, Def'ts.

The object of this suit is to procure a decree against J. B. Lockridge and H. M. Lockridge, for $1196.32 the amount of three Negotiable Notes with the accumulated interest thereon, and $7.32 costs of protest together with the costs attending this suit and to set aside a conveyance executed by H. M. Lockridge to J. B. Lockridge on the 19th day of September 1891, for 324 acres of land lying on Douthards Creek in said county of Pocahontas, West Virginia being same lands conveyed to said H. M. Lockridge by Mary R. Seebert and others, also to set aside a deed executed by J. B. Lockridge and wife to Ernest N. Moore dated 21st November 1891, for the land upon which said J. B. Lockridge resides on Knapp's Creek in said county of Pocahontas, west Virginia being about one third in quantity of 1434 acres, and to subject both of said tracts of land to sale to pay the demands of plaintiffs, with interest and costs aforesaid, and it appearing by affidavit filed, that the defendants, H. M. Lockridge, Mary J. Seebert, Mary R. Seebert, C. T. Seebert and Martha S. Seebert are non residents of the State of west Virginia. It is ordered, that they do appear here within one month after the first publication of this order and do what is necessary to protect their interest in this suit.

witness, J. H. Patterson, Clerk of the said court, this 4th day of January 1892.

J. H. PATTERSON, Clerk.

H. S. Rucker, p. q.
Jan. 7-4t. Printers fee $14.85

Order of Publication.

State of West Virginia,
Pocahontas County to wit:

At rules held in the Clerk's office of the Circuit Court of Pocahontas on the first Monday in January 1892.

Weitz, Beidler & Co. Pl'ffs
vs.
H. M Lockridge, J. B. Lockridge, Ernest N. Moore, Mary J. Seebert, Mary R. Seebert, C. T. Seebert and Martha S. Seebert, Def'ts.

The object of this suit is to procure a decree against H. M. Lockridge and J. B. Lockridge for $871.26 the amount of two negotiable notes with the accumulated interest thereon and $4.61 costs of protest, together with the costs attending this suit, and to set aside a conveyance executed by H. M. Lockridge to J. B. Lockridge on the 19th day of September 1891 for 324 acres of land lying on Douthard's Creek in said county of Pocahontas West Virginia, being the same lands conveyed to said H. M. Lockridge by Mary R. Seebert and others, also to set aside a deed executed by J. B. Lockridge and wife to Ernest N. Moore dated 21st November 1891, for the land upon which said J. B. Lockridge resides on Knapp's Creek in said County of Pocahontas, West Virginia, being about one third in quantity of 1434 acres, and to subject both of said tracts of land to sale to pay the demands of plaintiffs with interest and costs aforesaid, and it appearing by affidavit filed, that the defendants H. M. Lockridge, Mary J. Seebert, Mary R. Seebert, C. T. Seebert and Martha S. Seebert are non residents of the State of West Virginia. It is ordered, that that they do appear here within one month after the first publication of this order and do what is necessary to protect their interest in this suit.

Witness, J. H. Patterson, Clerk of the said Court, this 4th day of January 1892.

J. H. PATTERSON, Clerk.

H. S. Rucker, p. q.
Jan. 7 4t. Printer's fee $15.38.

Commissioner's Notice.

Wm. D. Moore adm'r.
vs.
Wm. D. Moore Widow & H'rs.

IN CHANCERY.

Notice is hereby given all parties interested, that pursuant to decree of the Circuit Court of Pocahontas County rendered in the above styled cause on the 23rd day of October 1891, I shall as one of the Commissioners of said Court proceed at my office in the town of Huntersville West Virginia, on Saturday the 6th day of February 1892 to take, state and report the following accounts to wit:

1st A settlement of the administration accounts of Levi Gay as administrator of Wm. D. Moore dec'd.

2nd A settlement of the account of John A. McNeel, respecting the money's handled by him which he received in this cause as General Receiver of this Court.

3rd Any other matter deemed pertinent by the Commissioner or which any party in interested may require him to state.

L. M. McCLINTIC, Com'r.

Jan. 7 4t. Printer's fee 1.70

Pocahontas Times.

JOHN E. CAMPBELL,
EDITOR AND PROPRIETOR.

ADVERTISING RATES.

	1 m.	3 m.	6 m.	1 yr.
One inch	$ 1 00	$ 2 00	$ 3 00	$ 5 00
Three in.	2 00	4 00	6 00	10 00
Qr. column	3 00	8 00	10 00	17 00
Half col'n	6 00	12 00	20 00	30 00
One col'n	10 00	20 00	30 00	50 00

Reading notices, not exceeding five lines, twenty-five cents for each insertion, and five cents a line for each additional line.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION.

One copy, 1 yr., $1.00 in advance; after 6 months, $1.25; after 12 months, $1.50

These terms will be strictly complied with.

Entered at the Post-office at Huntersville, W. Va., as second class matter.

Huntersville, W. Va.

January 21, 1892.

The Boston Transcript prints an anecdote of a gentleman who was given to making friends with children wherever he met them, and who one day tried to scrape acquaintance with a little fellow passenger in a street car.

The child wore a crimson plush cloak and had long yellow curls, so the gentlemen began, with much confidence:

"How do you do, little girl?"

"I'm not a little girl," was the shy response.

"Oh! Aren't you? Well, then, how do you do, little boy?"

"I'm not a little boy," was the unexpected answer.

"Indeed! Who are you, then?"

"I'm my papa's little man," said the youngster, with perfect dignity.

A monster three legged steer was recently discovered on the head waters of the Cheyenne river, in Wyoming. It is 7 years old, and weighs close on 2,000 pounds, and has horns that will measure six feet from tip to tip. The hind legs are perfect, but in front there is only one leg, located in the center of the body on the part of the body between where the front limbs are on an ordinary steer and is about the size of two ordinary legs. The steer is wild and when discovered took the lead of a small herd of mavericks and skipped out for a hiding place.—Omaha Bee.

Deaths and Accidents.

RICHMOND, Ind., Jan. 13.—The sickness because of the grip is unprecedented. Deaths are numerous. There were twelve corpses awaiting burial here at one time this week. In addition the sleet has made the streets like glass, and numerous casualties are reported. With the lesser accidents two people have fallen and broken their limbs.

Converted Cowboy—Say, deacon, I hear that the Gory Ranch boys is comin' over here to clean us out tonight.

Deacon Goode (great revivalist) —What! Attack our revival meeting? "Jesso. I think we'd better light out fer some other field o' labor."

"Retreat before the legions o' Satan? Never! You forget we have the Lord on our side."

"Y-a-a-s, but they've got Fan the Hammer Jim an' Hair-Trigger Ike on their side."

Friend—How's your son getting on, Jenks? I hope he is growing up a credit to the family. J.—Yes, he has, the young rascal! He gets credit everywhere.

"What a lovely morning!" he said. "It is a perfect morning," she replied. "True," he said. "I haven't seen anything this morning that isn't perfect," and he looked her straight in the face. Then she blushed.

"This is a regular sugar 'loaf,'" said the candy-store clerk when business was dull.

Bank Director—I am surprised, sir, to learn that you drop into our bank and whisper tips to our cashier. Don't you know the information must be a great temptation to him to use the bank funds to speculate with?

Wealthy Broker—Yes.

"And yet you are a heavy stockholder in our bank."

"Just so."

"Then, in the name of common sense, what is your motive?"

"Well, the fact is, I dont know whether your cashier is honest or not; but if he isn't honest, and if he does use the bank funds to speculate with, I want him to keep on the right side of the market. See?

"I see that a young wife has been arrested in Woburn for putting Paris green into a pie which she had made for her husband."

"Yes, I noticed it. It was very foolish of a young wife to use Paris green if she wanted to get rid of her husband."

"Why?"

"The pie itself ought to have been sufficient."

Cholly—Did you heah about poor deah Cecil? The pooh boy is at the point of dweth.

Reginald—Why, no. Whateveh is the mattah?

Cholly—His beastly cad of a furnisher actually twied to sell him a weady-made tie.

"I wish I hadn't rejected him."

"Why?" "Because he didn't seem the least bit put out when I said no."

A promoter is pungently defined as a man who sells something he hasn't got to a man who doesn't know what he is getting.

Foreman—They say old Jones is dying by degrees. Editor—Just like him. He never will hustle when he strikes a good thing.

Striped goods are still fashionable in criminal circles.

Any man would much rather be a fool than look like one.

A man with an elastic step should be able to walk for a long stretch.

The next industry of the rain producer will be to make the rain dear.

Women are not inventive as a rule. They have no eagerness for new wrinkles.

If there is one thing more than another that a man is up to his neck in, it is his shirt.

Talking of the thieves of the present day, the greatest pirate of old was a mere Kidd to them.

Jack—Well, Jim, I proposed to Miss Summer last night. Jim—Did she give you her heart? No—but I got a piece of her mind.

When the young girl's father comes into the parlor and rudely turns off the gas, we suppose the young man can safely regard it as time to light out.

L—— had been trotting her little feet off waiting upon the elder members of the family, as little children can. At last, weary from slipping down from her chair so often, and out of patience at the demands made upon her, she exclaimed, "Well, I guess I get tired as anybody, if 'tis only a small tired!"

The readers of THE TIMES are refered to the following persons who have the ALLEGER ORGANS:

Annie Mollohan, Replete, W. Va.
S. W. Ott, Charlestown, W. Va.
Jacob Lively, Roseville, W. Va,
W. H. Swiger, Malta, W. Va.
J. W. Heavener, Petersburg, W. Va,
Tinta Craig, Glen Elk, W. Va.

—If you want Letter and Note heads, neatly printed and put up in tablet form, cheaper than you can get them anywhere else, call at THE TIMES office. We also do all kinds of nice job printing, and have on hands a nice line of Stationary, business cards, &c. &c.

CONSUMPTION CURED.

An old physician, retired from practice, having had placed in his hands by an East India missionary the formula of a simple vegetable remedy for the speedy and permanent cure of Consumption, Bronchitis, Catarrh, Asthma and all throat and Lung Affections, also a positive and radical cure for Nervous Debility and all Nervous Complaints, after having tested its wonderful curative powers in thousands of cases, has felt it his duty to make it known to his suffering fellows. Actuated by this motive and a desire to relieve human suffering, I will send free of charge, to all who desire it, this recipe, in German, French or English, with full directions for preparing and using. Sent by mail by addressing with stamp, naming this paper. W. A. NOYES, 820 Powers' Block, Rochester, N. Y.

POCAHONTAS TIMES.

Vol. 9. JOHN E. CAMPBELL, EDITOR AND PROPRIETOR. Huntersville, West Virginia, Thursday, January 28 1892. Terms of Subscription, $1.00 PER YEAR IN ADVANCE No. 28

Official Directory of Pocahontas County

Judge of Circuit Court, A. N. Campbell.
Prosecuting Attorney, L. M. McClintic.
Sheriff, J. C. Arbogast.
Deputy Sheriff, Geo. W. Callison.
Cl'k Co. Court, S. L. Brown.
Cl'k Cir. Court, J. H. Patterson.
Assessor, C. O. Arbogast.
Com'rs Co. Ct. (C E. Beard, B B. Hannah, G. M Kee.
Co. Surveyor, Geo. Baxter

THE COURTS.

Circuit Court convenes on the first Tuesday in April, 3rd Tuesday in June and 3rd Tuesday in October.

County Court convenes on the 1st Tuesday in January, March, October and second Tuesday in July. July is levy term.

THE RUN OF 67.

It was in Colorado, one of the wildest and roughest railroads I know of.

At the bottom the roadbed was forced in against the opposite mountain by a noisy little river that ran some thirty feet below. There were three tracks on the mountain side, and standing on one of the three the other could be seen.

The road was stocked with Baldwin engines, and to facilitate the climbing of the heavy grades they had small driving wheels.

I was fireman on 67, which was used in the passenger service. She had the largest drivers on the road, and they only measured forty eight inches in diameter.

Matt Irwin was the engineer.

Sixty seven had just been housed after a run. I was filling the oil cans, and Matt was hauling off his overalls, when Mr. Fox, the superintendent, climed into the cab.

After a few commonplace remarks he asked abrubtly:

"Matt, how soon can 67 go out?"

"Just as soon as I can pull on my overal s," was the reply. "Her steam hasn't been blown out yet, and her fire hasn't been drawn."

The superintendent looked at both of us very hard, as though he was sizing us up, and then he said, awful solemn:

"Matt, you've been with as a long time. You've been tried and not found wanting. Tonight we call upon you to perform the most dangerous piece of work yet. Will you do it?"

Matt's eyes looked as large as saucers in the dim light of the cab, I confess I was trembling myself.

"What is it?" he asked.

"There's been a big mistake made in the higher offices—but that is not for us to criticise—and there is but one way to rectify it."

Here the superintendent's voice dropped to a whisper. "One hundred and fifty thousand dollars in gold has got to be in B—— before midnight, to connect with the eastern express, and you're the man selected to take it through."

Old Matt showed his astonishment with his eyes, but never opened his mouth.

The superintendent merely glanced at me, and turning to Matt continued:

"A lone engine might create suspicion, so we'll make up a wild freight. The'll all be empties. Back down to the offices before you couple on, and we'll put the safe under the coal in the tender."

That was all. He jumped off and disappeared.

For some time Matt and I sat staring at each other, then he slid off his seat and said:

"This won't do! Supper, Harry—supper! We haven't much time to loose. It only lacks a few minutes of 6. Be back before the quarter."

The wind was whistling among the cars, whisking the dust and papers about, while in the south a big black cloud was coming up, resplendent with chain lightning. Altogether the night promised to be unusually bad.

I was back on time, but Matt was there before me. He had lighted the shaded steam gauge lamp and stood scanning a small piece of pasteboard.

"What do you make of this, Harry?" he asked, as I climbed up beside him. "I found it pined to my cushion."

On it was scrawled, with a lead pencil, the words:

Danger! Don't pull the wild freight to night if you value your lives.

A TRUE FRIEND.

"I make it that some one beside the superintendent and us knows of it," I replied, the cold shivers beginning to chase each other up my spinal column. "There's danger ahead!"

"Ah, there is danger ahead, my boy," and old Matt spoke softer than I had ever heard him before. "If you want to"——

"I'll go where you lead," I replied quickly knowing what he was going to say.

"Then we'll go through if it takes the wheels out from under! Ring up the wipers!"

And without waiting for the hostler to run the engine out, old Matt backed her on the turn table, where the wipers swung her around, and then we backed down to the offices, where four trusty men soon had the square safe under the coal.

A few minutes later we were coupled onto a half dozen empty freight cars and a caboose.

"There's your orders!" cried Jimmy O'Connor, the conductor, shoving up the yellow sheets of tissue paper.

Old Matt looked them over, and we began to move out of town,

"We've got a clear track," he said, looking across at me, and then he drew up the corners of his mouth, and I looked for a quick run.

Before we reached the outskirts of the town the rain began to come down in a perfect deluge.

Great drops mixed with hail, and in such quantity that the dry drains were soon transformed into raging creeks.

The wind howled and shrieked above the rumbling of the train and threatened to lift 67 off the rails. When the telegraph poles began to snap off Matt's face began to lengthen.

"Good night for washovers," he said, "and washovers are as bad as wasiouts!"

It was all down grade, and all the steam used was to run the air pump. I had only to keep the fire alive.

Eight miles down we ran past a small station where a freight train was side tracked. It had perhaps a dozen cars.

Just before we reached it I saw a man dart in between two of the cars to escape the headlight.

I thought her either a trainman or a tramp, but have since changed my mind.

We were half way down the Haversack grade, with a strait stretch of track and a long curve before us, when Matt looked across and said:

"I'm afraid the little pasteboard was only a scare. If"——

There was a flash of light behind, the rattle of coal, and Bob Duncan, the forward brakeman, stood in the cab.

His face was as white as a sheet.

Shut her down—shut her down, for heaven's sake!" he shouted. "A freight's broke loose, and is coming down the road two miles a minute!"

Before you could snap your fingers my face was as pale as Bob's.

Matt Irwin never lost his head, and with a coolness that comes to few men in time of danger, he asked, "How do you know?"

Seen her by a flash of lightning. O'Conner and Billy have jumped!

And then he swung out on the step and disappeared.

"Jump if you want to, Harry," called old Matt. "I'm going to stick to her."

I gave one look out at the Egyptian darkness and concluded that I would stay with old Matt.

"Keep your eye peeled for her," he cried and commenced to let 67 out.

"There she is!" I shouted.

And there it was, sure enough. It had just come out of a cut. One of the boxes was on fire, the flame streaming back half a car length, and cutting through the air like a meteor.

"She's four miles behind," said old Matt, "and coming four feet to our one. If we can get around the curve there's a show of her jumping."

And then began that terrible ride.

He hooked 67 up to the first notch and then opened the throttle.

With seven cars behind us we shot down the grade of 175 feet to the mile.

Sixty seven set low in her frame, but every low joint rung her bell for an eighth of a mile. She jumped and swayed and threatened to leave the rails. The wind shrieked around us like a thousand demons and the rain poured against the windows in a perfect stream.

"There's danger ahead and death behind," shouted the old engineer. "If the rain loosens a bowlder and drops it on the track"——

I shuddered. There was the blasted pine that marked the curve. The next second we reached it. For a moment I thought it was all over. Then 67 righted. There was a sharp jerk. We forged ahead faster, and our seven cars cleared the road bed and went down the bluff with a crash that was heard high above the storm, leaving a clean track for the runaway behind that was coming as swift and sure as death.

If the runaway got around the curve, the probabilities were that we would be knocked from the track into the river.

We were very near to the bottom now, where the roadbed followed the river, and the engineers were cautioned not to run over fifteen miles per hour.

But orders were not respected that night. We were making thirty miles per hour when a flash of lightning showed me that dark string of cars coming around the curve. The blazing box was on the opposite side and invisible.

Old Matt gave 67 the steam so suddenly she seemed to jump from under us, but the runaway was not more than half a mile behind and coming with the speed of a tornado.

There was no getting out of the way. In a moment it would be on us. I imagined I could see the black mass coming down on us in the darkness, when a heavy rumble was heard, followed by a tremendous crash.

The rain had loosened the rock and dirt overhanging the track, and it only needed the jar of 67 to set it in motion.

Something like 1,000 tons of debris rolled onto the track directly behind us, and into this those runaway cars plunged.

But we did not find this out till afterward. Matt kept 67 up to what was a tremendous speed on that track. She plunged and rolled and rang her bell continually. A dozen times I thought we were going into the river.

We pulled through all right, but that was my last trip. When I got off the engine my hair was streaked with gray, and now it is white as snow.

For some time it was thought that the runaway cars had broke loose but the company became suspicious and had the case looked into, with the result of running down some tough characters, who finally confessed to cutting them loose with the intention of ditching us between Haversack grade and the bottom, and securing the treasure.

Old Matt has retired from the road, but I do not think that either he or I shall ever forget the run of 67.—W. F. Bruns in Express Gazette.

MARRIED IN JAIL.

On Tuesday evening January the 5th, a remarkable marriage took place in our county jail, one of the contracting parties being [illegible] Roadcap, who at the last September court was convicted of shooting Lee Dorman and sentenced to serve a term of three years in the penitentiary. The other party was Miss Lucinda Lough, who, with the characteristic fidelity of her sex, was willing to marry the man she loved, even though he had been sentenced to a felon's doom. The Rev. L. B. Johnston, of the Presbyterian Church performed the ceremony.

Roadcap has taken an appeal to our State Supreme Court, and is now awaiting its determination, and in the meantime he and his fiancee determined to while away the tedium by indulging in matrimonial pleasures.

He and his fair bride are not expected to take a wedding trip. Whether he will take a trip to Moundsville without his bride will be determined by our Court of Appeals. The jailor inform me that the parties had their infair before the wedding.—Spirit of the Valley.

Teacher.—If your mother had 25 yards of stuff, and made a dress requiring but 18 yards, how much would she have left?

Little Girl.—Mamma can't make her own dresses. She has tried often, and they are always either too [illegible]

Teacher.—Suppose she sent it to a dressmaker, how much would the dressmaker send back.

Little Girl—It depends on which dressmaker she sent it to. Some wouldn't send any.

Teacher (impatiently)—Suppose she sent it to an honest one?

Little Girl.—Some of the honest ones cut things to waste so that there is never anything left, no matter how much you send 'em.

That truth is safe and mighty as well as beautiful is illustrated by the following incident of a boy twelve years old who, with only truth as a weapon, conquered a smart and shrewd lawyer who was fighting for a bad cause.

Walter was the important witness in a lawsuit. One of the lawyers, after cross questioning him severely, said:

"Your father has been talking to you and telling you how to testify, hasn't he?"

"Yes," said the boy.

"Now," said the lawyer, "just tell us how your father told you to testify."

"Well," said the boy modestly, "father told me that the lawyers would try to tangle me in my testimony, but if I would just be careful and tell the truth I could tell the same thing every time."

The Broker—Why is it that the stock market is so fearfully dull?

De Cutsh—Um—I believe most of the bank officials, city treasurers and confidential clerks who have been speculating in stocks are locked up.

Pocahontas Times.
JOHN E. CAMPBELL,
EDITOR AND PROPRIETOR.
Huntersville, W. Va.
January 28, 1892.

DEATH OF MR. WM. H. McCLINTIC.

The many friends of Mr. Wm. H. McClintic were shocked to learn of his death last Wednesday evening at 8 o'clock, at his home near Buckeye of grip and heart failure.

He had been complaining only about a week when the sad end came. He had been in good health previous to his last sickness, and his death was therefore a shock and surprise to the community.

He was about 67 years of age. His wife, who is now very ill, and five sons survive him. His sons are Geo. W., a young and prominent lawyer of Charleston; L. M., is prosecuting attorney of this County and the other three, two of whom Mess, Withrow and Hunter are prominent farmers and stock dealers of Buckye and Ed. is in some business in Seatle, Wash.

Mr. McClintic was born and reared in Bath Co., Va., and moved to this County with his family a number of years ago. He was a successful farmer, and had by honest upright dealings with his fellow man accumulated quite a handsome little fortune.

He will be greatly missed by the poor people of the community in which he lived as he was very generous to this class.

He was laid to rest in the burying ground near Mill Point last Friday evening.

May he rest in peace.

Death of Wm. Hevener, Esq.

Squire William Hevener died on Wednesday night at 11 o'clock in the 71st year of his age. Mr. Hevener has been a sufferer for many years from a complication of diseases but has only been confined to his bed for a few weeks. Last week his condition was somewhat improved and hopes were entertained that he might recover, but on Saturday he began to sink and good medical attention and nursing were of no avail.

Squire Hevener was a man of sterling qualities and one of the most successful cattle dealers in Highland county. Some time in the 60's he served a term in the Virginia Legislature and then returned to his old home in Crabbottom where he has since acquired a large fortune. He was a member of Highland Lodge of Masons and his interment will be attended with Masonic honors. His body was laid to rest to-day at 11 o'clock in the cemetery at Lower town, in Crabbottom Valley. We extend our sympathy to the bereaved family.—Highland Recorder.

Mr. Hevener had many warm friends in this county, who will be pained to learn of his timely death. He was a brother of Uriah Hevener, Esq., of Green Bank.

A Big Fire.

As we go to press we learn that the fine new residence belonging to Capt. Jack Apperson, near Marlinton was entirely consumed by fire this morning between 8 and 9 o'clock with the entire contents. Capt. Apperson's loss will reach several thousand dollars, which will fall heavily upon him.

We did not learn the particulars other than the fire caught in one of the rooms.

This was as fine a residence as there is in the county. We suppose there was no insurance.

Potts Valley Railroad.

In the State Senate on the 15th, Hon. J. W. Marshall, State Senator from Craig and Roanoke, introduced a bill to incorporate the Potts Valley Railroad and Iron Company. The company is empowered to construct and maintain a railroad from a point on the Chesapeake & Ohio Railroad at or near the town of Covington, and through the intervening counties to the State line. The road can connect with the Norfolk & Western at or near Big Stony Creek in Giles. The company is given the authority to construct and operate blast furnaces, smelt iron ore, etc. The capital stock is to be not less than a million and may be increased five millions.

This is one of the most important enterprises that has ever been inaugurated for this section of country. It will open up one of the richest iron ore districts in the world, and expose enough of hematite ore to supply all the furnaces in Virginia. It will cut through the western part of the property of the Rich Patch Iron Company, which is the most valuable of it, and enable that company to open mines and ship ores from both ends of their 9,000 acre tract. The mines now being worked are located on the eastern side, and furnished with a complete mining plant.

The Potts Valley Railroad will, according to the terms of the bill, open up the Flat Top coal-fields to this section, and give us the advantage of both the New River and Flat Top coal-fields. With the Warm Springs Railroad completed to Marlinton, Pocahontas county, W. Va., there to unite with the Camden system, the Pittsburg market would be accessible for the ores of this section, and thus additional outlet provided for the abundant minerals of that region.

We have been informed that the money has already been provided for the construction of the Potts Valley Railroad, and, that with the charter secured, operations will commence in the early spring for building it. A corps of engineers is now in Potts Valley and have been for a week or ten days.—Virginian.

NEWS FROM WASHINGTON.

LATE MATTERS OF INTEREST PARTAINING TO OUR GOVERNMENT.

[Reported for THE TIMES by our regular correspondent.]

WASHINGTON, Jan. 22nd.—The National Democratic Committee has, after mature deliberation and consideration of all the circumstances involved, decided upon the place for holding the democratic National convention. The decision does not meet with the approval of everybody, nor was it expected that it would, but the members of the committee have by virtue of the authority temporarily confided to them, done what they considered best for the interests of the party, and that fact is so fully recognized by the members of the disappointed delegations that all of them will return home fully determined to forget their personal disappointment in working for the election of the ticket which shall be nominated by that convention. Let all good democrats go and do likewise, and the result will be victory.

The meeting of the Executive committee of the National Association of Democratic Clubs held at the National headquarters here this week, was presided over by Representative Wilson, of West Virginia. All of the members were present in person or by proxy, and they were all enthusiastic over the condition of the association, which will this year make itself an important factor in the Presidential campaign. According to the report of the Secretary there are now between five and six thousand clubs in the assotion, representing every State and Territory. The committee decided that the full committee, which will decide upon the time and place for holding the National convention of the association to ratify the nominations for President and Vice President, should meet at the same time and place as the nominating convention. The club convention will be held sometime in August, and several cities are already in the field for the honor of entertaining it.

Senator Gorman's re-election has from the first been a certainty, but that did not prevent his colleagues from overwhelming him with congratulations as soon as it was an accomplished fact.

The drummers have secured a favorable report on their bill amending the Interstate Commerce law so as to allow the railroads to give them better terms than they get now from the Commerce committee of the House.

Those republicans who were so certain that Mr. Mills would take no part in the present session, are not saying much just now, as that gentleman has returned much improved in health and with usual grim has jumped right into hard work. He has declined the chairmanship of the Commerce committee.

Hon. Edward J. Phelps of Vermont, who was our minister to England during the Cleveland administration, will probably be one of the representatives of this country in the arbitration of the Behring Sea matter. Mr. Phelps was a guest at a state dinner at the White House this week.

Thoughtless people are predicting a short session of Congress, but men like Mr. Holman, who know that protracted controversies are certain to arise between the House and Senate over the appropriation bills, do not look for an adjournment earlier than August, and will not be surprised if it does not take place earlier than October.

Speaker Crisp has not yet ventured out of doors, but he assisted his democratic colleagues of the committee on Rules in the preparation of the code of rules which are to govern this House during this Congress. The new rules, now completed, are largely made up from those under which the House of the Fiftieth Congress worked, with several important additions to prevent filibustering beyond a reasonable time, and instead of giving the Speaker authority to cut off debate, as the Reed rules did, they give the majority of the House that authority.

Whether the rumored row between Secretary Blaine and Mr. Harrison, or some bit of shrewdness on the part of the Chilian minister is the cause of the delay in sending the Chilian correspondence and the Presidential message to Congress, is a question about which there is a wide difference of opinion; but it is certain that something has "hung up" the matter. The sensational newspaper men are making the most of the situation. Stories of promises made by the German and English ministers, and of abrupt demands by the same parties are being worked up into every form that can be suggested by lively imaginations. When the correspondence goes to Congress, if there is no change in the situation, it is probable that it will be considered by a democratic caucus, in order that the party may act upon it with unanimity.

Order of Publication.

State of West Virginia, }
County of Pocahontas, } ss.

To B. F. Armstrong, Benjamin Arbogast, Mrs. Jannie B. Skiles, May Bruffey, Thomas Hubbard and James Bidwell, the unknown heirs of Samuel Hogsett, John Files, the unknown heirs of Daniel McGlaughlin, the unknown heirs of John Sharp, Sr., Henry I. Smith, Michael Wilfong, the unknown heirs of Thomas Gammon and Geo. E. Craig, Jr.

You are hereby commanded in the name of the State of West Virginia to appear before C. F. Moore, a commissioner in chancery of the Circuit Court of the aforesaid county, at his office in the town of Huntersville in said county on the 20th day of February 1892, to whom the matters arising on a petition filed in the said court by John G. Warwick, the Commissioner of School Lands for the aforesaid county, have been referred by a decree of the said court entered on the petition at the April Term 1891, which petition prays a sale of the lands mentioned therein for the benefit of the School Fund, and show cause, if any they can, why the said land shall not be sold for the benefit of the School Fund.

Witness: J. H. Patterson, Clerk of said Court, this 18th day of January 1892.

J. H. PATTERSON, Clerk.

Jan. 21-4t. Printer's fee $5.14.

HOME NEWS

—Ronceverte and Alderson have again gone wet.

—Yeed, returned from a very pleasant trip in Va., last Friday.

—We noticed Attorney Wm. McAllister, of Warm Springs in our city today.

—Brown Yeager, county surveyor of Pocahontas Co., was in Beverly the 18th.—Enterprise.

—The most disagreeable night of the winter was Tuesday night. It was very cold and windy.

—We are pleased to see Dr. S.P. Patterson and S. L. Brown, Esq., of this city out again after a severe attact of the grip.

—J. R. Doyle, Esq., and Attorney N. C. McNeil, of this place were visiting friends and relatives at Academy the first of the week.

—We learn that the heavy winds Thursday, considerably racked Mr. E. I. Holt's new store house at Marlinton.

—Martin Dever, who was brought here last week, has been adjudged insane and will soon be taken to the W. L. Asylum, at Staunton.—Recorder.

—An unsuccessful attempt at burglary was made by three unknown persons at Hinton on last Wednesday night. This gang of thieves are working towns along the line of the C. & O. R. R.

—Married, on the 20th inst., at the residence of the bride's parents Jno. Osborne, Esq., to Miss Frederick Lewis, daughter of the late Col. Lewis of the Sweet Springs. All of Monroe County.

—The Surgical Institute burned in Indianapolis on the 21st inst. and 22 helpless crippled children inmates of the institution lost their lives and 20 other persons were injured, some of them badly but most of them slightly.

—Miss Belle Beverage, formerly of Pocahontas county, died at the residence of A. D. Barlow in this place on the 18th of grippe. She was about twenty years old. Her father Levi Beverage of Clover Lick, Pocahontas county, came Tuesday to attend the burial.—Enterprise.

—Harry M. Smoots a young man about 23 years old, shot and instantly killed Miss Susie Ferrells, a prominent society young lady, on the corner of one of the public squares in Shephardstown, ten miles north of Charleston on the 21st inst, because she would not marry him.

—S. G. Dodrill, of Webster county, lately cut a popular tree, from which he got seven 12 foot logs, the top end of the last log measuring 44 inches. S. B. Hanwick, in the same county, cut a poplar containing 7,848 feet of lumber, and L. A. Harris got six 12 foot and one 16 foot log from one tree.

—A bright clean and newsy sheet is the Twelve Pole Monitor, published at Wayne C. H., by Messrs. J. M. Ferguson & Son, the first issue of which we have just received. It is Democratic, and if it is kept up to its present standard its success is assured. We are pleased to place it on our exchange list.

—The Boe correspondent of the Greenbrier Independent says: "We had considerable excitement at our place the other evening. The Nimrod of our section, Solomon Perry, got two bear into a tree, and with two companions, E. C. Ramsey and B. M. Parkins, proceeded to cut the tree in order to dispatch the animals. When the bears came out of their retreat Perry's gun failed to fire, Ramsey fired but missed the mark, leaving Parkins, armed with a Winchester rifle, to do all the killing which he did in good style, firing five shots—four of which took effect, killing both bears, an old one and a yearling. He ended the [illegible]

—Robt. Burns, Esq., of Academy, was in town Tuesday night.

—A terrific explosion occurred in the powder mills at Central City, about half way between Huntington and Catlettsburg, on Monday morning, killing five or six persons and injuring quite a number. This is the third explosion in the mill. A dispatch says that the explosion was terrific and could be heard twenty five miles away.

—The Academy correspondent of the Grenbrier Independent says: "On last Saturday Mr. Henry Gum died at his home near here, of grippe, in the 81st year of his age. In the death of Mr. Gum the community has lost a good man. He lived a useful life, and his death has elicted man expressions of grief from everybody who knew him.

—There is a sneakthief in or near this city who has been annoying some of our people lately by petty thieving. One night last week S. L. Brown Esq., lost some pork, and Messrs. Loury & Doyle some butter besides others we have heard of have been complaining of having things stolen. There is no occasion for any one to steal in this county, as there is always work and at fair wages. The person or persons who are too lazy to earn an honest living, and are stealing it from those who do, will be surprised some of these nights to get the contents of a shot gun into their worthless anatomy, or caught and made to earn a living inside the walls of our penitentiary.

—One of the most cold-blooded assassinations ever known in McDowell county happened at the home of Mrs. E. Cook, who resides near Welch, last week. It appears that Mrs. C. T. McLare was spending the evening with Mrs. Cook, and while engaged at the supper table in conversation, two unknown parties, one with a shotgun and the other with a Winchester rifle went to one of the windows of the residence and fired the contents of both guns into the body of Mrs. Cook, killing her instantly. Mrs. McLare made her escape through the back door and saved her life by hiding in the woods. Great excitement prevails.

—One night during the recent snow a certain young lady, who shall be nameless, was out sleighing seated between two gentlemen. She had her hands comfortably encased in a warm muff, and by a subtle coincidence both gentleman slipped a hand in on each side at the same time, while the young lady gently withdrew hers, and there her admirers sat squeezing each others hand, with the girl so full of laughter that she could hardly contain herself. After awhile she quietly remarked: "Now, if you gentlemen are done squeezing each others hand, I would like to have my muff." It was too good a joke to keep and a little bird told us all about it.—Kingwood Argus.

GREEN BANK BREVITIES.

J. B. Bradshaw, of McDowell, Highland County, Va., was in our village last week.

Mrs. W. Hull is down with the grip.

Jas. Curry has recovered his speech again, but has taken a relapse of grip.

Born to Otho Ruckman and wife—a fine large boy.

People generally who have been on the sick list are some better.

C. H.

NOTICE! NOTICE!

All persons knowing themselves indebted to me by open account or note will please come forward and settle at once. I cannot indulge these accounts and notes any longer. They must be settled by the 1st of Mar. '92 or they will be put out for collection.

Resp'd.
B. L. Nottingham.

Jan 21-2 w.

DUNMORE DOINGS.

Dunmore is on a boom.

We are glad to see Capt. J. C. Lakin and wife, S. C. Pritchard and H. M. McGlaughlin out again after their sickness.

We believe all the sick are improving.

Capt. C. B. Swecker has a patent saw gummer in his shop with which he can gum a saw in 30 minutes.

E. H. Jackson, who has been on an extended visit to friends in Va., has returned.

The Baxter Sunday school is in a flourishing condition.

Dogs played havoc with Joe Siple's sheep last week. T. S.

POCAHONTAS DEVELOPMENT COMPANY.

Mr. Brown M. Yeager has been appointed general agent for the Pocahontas Developement Co., at Marlinton to make sale of lots, and for the transaction of the business of the company at that point.

There are several odd lots, not included in those reserved for the drawing, which the company will sell on reasonable terms to such parties as will obligate themselves to immediately begin the construction of houses.

For further information and particulars, call on or address,

BROWN M. YEAGER,
Marlinton W. Va.

BUILDERS & CONTRACTORS.

The undersigned will contract to build houses at Marlinton upon SHORT NOTICE and in workmanlike manner.

We employ first class Workmen, and when desired will furnish all Material. We will also furnish houses for rent, upon reasonable notice.

Respectfully,
C. A. YEAGER & CO.,
MARLINTON, W. VA.

ORDER OF PUBLICATION.

State of West Virginia.
Pocahontas County, to-wit:

At rules held in the Clerk's office of the Circuit Court of Pocahontas County on the 1st Monday in January, 1892:

W. C. Stuart, Pl'ff
vs.
Hugh Adams & als. Def'ts.

The object of this suit is to subject to the payment of $716.67 with interest thereon from the 25th day of September, 1890, due to the plaintiff, W. C. Stuart, from the defendants Hugh Adams and H. M. Lockridge, the real estate belonging to said defendants severally, lying in Pocahontas County in the State of West Virginia, which has been levied on under order of attachments issued in this suit, and it appearing by affidavit filed that the defendants Hugh Adams, H. M. Lockridge, Ellen M. Cameron and Thomas B. Hickman are non-residents of the State of West Virginia: It is ordered that they do appear here within one month after the first publication of this order and do what is necessary to protect their interest in this suit.

Witness: J. H. Patterson, Clerk of the said Court this 4th day of January, 1892

J. H. PATTERSON, Clerk.

L. M. McClintic, p. q.
Jan 7-4t. Printer's fee $9.85.

ORDER OF PUBLICATION.

State of West Virginia,
Pocahontas County, to-wit:

At rules held in the Clerk's office of the Circuit Court of Pocahontas County, on the first Monday in January, 1892:

W. C. Stuart, Pl'ff
vs.
C. C. Hansel & others, Def'ts.

The object of this suit is to subject to the payment of $576.72 with interest thereon from August 10th 1891, due to the plaintiff W. C. Stuart, from the defendants C. C. Hansel, H. M. Lockridge and Hugh Adams, the real estate belonging to said H. M. Lockridge and Hugh Adams severally, lying in Pocahontas County, in the State of West Virginia, which has been levied on under order of attachment issued in this suit, and it appearing by affidavit filed, that the defendants, C. C. Hansel, H. M. Lockridge, Hugh Adams, Ellen M. Cameron and Thomas B. Hickman are non-residents of the State of West Virginia: It is ordered, that they do appear here within one month after the first publication of this order and do what is necessary to protect their interest in this suit.

Witness: J. H. Patterson, Clerk of the said Court this 4th day of January, 1892.

J. H. PATTERSON, Clerk.

L. M. McClintic, p. q.
Jan. 7-4t. Printer's fee $9.65.

LANDS SOLD FOR TAXES.

List of real estate sold in the County of Pocahontas, in the month of December, 1891, for the non-payment of the taxes charged thereon for the years 1889, and 1890, and purchased by individuals:

NAME OF PERSON CHARGED WITH TAXES.	LOCAL DESCRIPTION OF LANDS.	Quantity of land charged.	Quantity of land sold.	NAME OF PURCHASER.	Whole amount paid by the purchaser.
GREEN BANK DISTRICT.
Campbell Sam'l B.	Greenbrier rv.	271	271	L. M. McClintic	[illegible]
Hutton Alfred	½ of 596 Greenbr rv.	298	298	J. C. Armontrout	4 [illegible]
EDRAY DISTRICT.
Cameron Geo. H.	Dry Branch	297	297	With. McClintic	4 [illegible]
Jackson Wm.	Slaty Fork	100	100	Sillas Sharp	5 [illegible]
McDowell, Martin & J. col	Adj John Gay	121	121	L. M. McClintic	3 [illegible]
HUNTERSVILLE DISTRICT.
Cobb Amanda	Buckley Mt	100	100	A. Barlow	1 09
King Chas	Hills	29 15p	29 15p	Marg. C. Grimes	5 [illegible]
Shafer R. P G	Buckley Mtn	15	15	With. McClintic	[illegible]
LITTLE LEVELS.
Rodgers Geo. W.	Laurel creek	125	125	L. M. McClintic	1 [illegible]
Sidenstricker Mrgr't. Est	Hillsboro	1-25p	1-25p	JnoSidenstricker	1 97

The owner of any real estate above described and sold, his heirs or assigns, or any person having a right to charge such real estate for a debt, may redeem the same by paying to the purchaser, his heirs or assigns, within one year from the sale thereof, the amount specified in the last column of the above table, and such additional taxes thereon as may have been paid by the purchaser, his heirs or assigns, with interest on said purchase money and taxes at the rate of twelve per centum per annum, from the time the same may have been so paid.

Given under my hand this 15th day of December, 1891.

J. C. ARBOGAST, Sheriff.

ORDER OF PUBLICATION.

State of West Virginia.
Pocahontas County, to-wit:

At Rules held in the Clerk's office of the Circuit Court of Pocahontas County on the first Monday in January, 1892.

Mathew Wallace, Pl'ff
vs.
Charles Stewart & al., Def'ts.
IN CHANCERY.

The object of this suit is to recover for the plaintiff, Mathew Wallace, from the defendant, Charles Stewart, the sum of $164.92 with interest thereon from 14th Oct. 1891 being judgment on bond of said Stewart to said Wallace dated and due 21st Aug. 1891, and to subject to payment thereof a tract of land lying in Pocahontas County in the State of West Virginia which said Charles Stewart and wife pretend to have conveyed to one Andrew Chanel by deed recorded in the Clerk's Office of the County Court of said Pocahontas County in Deed Book No. 22, page 214, being about 275 acres lying on the waters of Stamping Creek in said Pocahontas County, the boundaries of which land are given in said pretended deed:

And it appearing by affidavit filed that Charles Stewart above named is not a resident of the State of West Virginia: It is ordered that he do appear here within one month after the first publication of this order and do what is necessary to protect his interest in this suit.

Witness: J. H. Patterson, Clerk of the said Court this 4th day of January 1892.

J. H. PATTERSON, Clerk.

L. M. McClintic, p. q.
Printers fee $11.49 Jan. 7, 4 w.

ORDER OF PUBLICATION.

State of West Virginia,
Pocahontas County, to-wit:

At rules held in the Clerk's office of the Circuit Court of Pocahontas county on the first Monday in January, 1892.

Guggenheimer & Co., Pl'ffs.
vs
H. M. Lockridge, J. B. Lockridge, Ernest N. Moore, Mary J. Seebert, Mary R. Seebert, C. T. Seebert and Martha S. Seebert, Def'ts.

The object of this suit is to procure a decree against J. B. Lockridge and H. M. Lockridge, for $1196.32 the amount of three Negotiable Notes with the accumulated interest thereon, and $7.32 costs of protest together with the costs attending this suit and to set aside a conveyance executed by H. M. Lockridge to J. B. Lockridge on the 19th day of September 1891, for 324 acres of land lying on Douthards Creek in said county of Pocahontas, West Virginia being same lands conveyed to said H. M. Lockridge by Mary R. Seebert and others, also to set aside a deed executed by J. B. Lockridge and wife to Ernest N. Moore dated 21st November 1891, for the land upon which said J. B. Lockridge resides on Knapp's Creek in said county of Pocahontas, west Virginia being about one third in quantity of 1434 acres, and to subject both of said tracts of land to sale to pay the demands of plaintiffs, with interest and costs aforesaid, and it appearing by affidavit filed, that the defendants, H. M. Lockridge, Mary J. Seebert, Mary R. Seebert, C. T. Seebert and Martha S. Seebert are non residents of the State of west Virginia. It is ordered, that they do appear here within one month after the first publication of this order and do what is necessary to protect their interest in this suit:

witness, J. H. Patterson, Clerk of the said court, this 4th day of January 1892.

J. H. PATTERSON, Clerk.

H. S. Rucker, p. q.
Jan. 7-4t. Printers fee $14.95

Order of Publication.

State of West Virginia,
Pocahontas County to wit:

At rules held in the Clerk's office of the Circuit Court of Pocahontas on the first Monday in January 1892.

Weitz, Beidler & Co. Pl'ffs
vs.
H. M Lockridge, J. B. Lockridge, Ernest N. Moore, Mary J. Seebert, Mary R. Seebert, C. T. Seebert and Martha S. Seebert, Def'ts.

The object of this suit is to procure a decree against H. M. Lockridge and J. B. Lockridge for $871.26 the amount of two negotiable notes with the accumulated interest thereon and $4.61 costs of protest, together with the costs attending this suit, and to set aside a conveyance executed by H. M. Lockridge to J. B. Lockridge on the 19th day of September 1891 for 324 acres of land lying on Douthard's Creek in said county of Pocahontas West Virginia, being the same lands conveyed to said H. M. Lockridge by Mary R. Seebert and others, also to set aside a deed executed by J. B. Lockridge and wife to Ernest N. Moore dated 21st November 1891, for the land upon which said J. B. Lockridge resides on Knapp's Creek in said County of Pocahontas, West Virginia, being about one third in quantity of 1434 acres, and to subject both of said tracts of land to sale to pay the demands of plaintiffs with interest and costs aforesaid, and it appearing by affidavit filed, that the defendants H. M. Lockridge, Mary J. Seebert, Mary R. Seebert, C. T. Seebert and Martha S. Seebert are non-residents of the State of West Virginia. It is ordered, that that they do appear here within one month after the first publication of this order and do what is necessary to protect their interest in this suit.

Witness, J. H. Patterson, Clerk of the said Court, this 4th day of January 1892.

J. H. PATTERSON, Clerk.

H. S. Rucker, p. q.
Jan. 7 4t. Printer's fee $15.98.

Commissioner's Notice.

Wm. D. Moore adm'r.
vs.
Wm. D. Moore Widow & H'rs.
IN CHANCERY.

Notice is hereby given all parties interested, that pursuant to decree of the Circuit Court of Pocahontas County rendered in the above styled cause on the 23rd day of October 1891, I shall as one of the Commissioners of said Court proceed at my office in the town of Huntersville West Virginia, on Saturday the 6th day of February 1892 to take, state and report the following accounts to wit:

1st A settlement of the administration accounts of Levi Gay as administrator of Wm. D. Moore dec'd.

2nd A settlement of the account of John A. McNeel, respecting the money's handled by him which he received in this cause as General Receiver of this Court.

3rd Any other matter deemed pertinent by the Commissioner or which any party in interested may require him to state.

L. M. McCLINTIC, Com'r.

Jan. 7-4t. Printer's fee [illegible]

Pocahontas Times.

JOHN E. CAMPBELL,
EDITOR AND PROPRIETOR.

ADVERTISING RATES.

	1 m.	3 m.	6 m.	1 yr.
One inch	$ 1 00	$ 2 00	$ 3 00	$ 5 00
Three in.	2 00	4 00	6 00	10 00
Qr. column	3 00	6 00	10 00	17 00
Half col'n	6 00	12 00	20 00	30 00
One col'n	10 00	20 00	30 00	50 00

Reading notices, not exceeding five lines, twenty-five cents for each insertion, and five cents a line for each additional line.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION.

One copy, 1 yr., $1.00 in advance; after 6 months, $1.25; after 12 months, $1.50

These terms will be strictly complied with.

Entered at the Post-office at Huntersville, W. Va., as second class matter.

Huntersville, W. Va.

January 28, 1892.

A WIFE'S DEVOTION, or
OUT OF BONDAGE.

I had often observed in idling through the public gardens a very beautiful girl seated on one of the benches reading. She was invariably accompained by an old servant, who watched over her mistress with tender solicitude. But the young lady never smiled and her face never lost for a moment its melancholy.

In time I made the acquaintance of the old servant maid, and she consented to tell me one day the story of her little mistress.

"You may have heard," she began, "of the Count de La Valette, who was such a devoted adherent of Napoleon. This young lady was his daughter. After the Emperor was sent to the Island of Elba the Count was imprisoned by Louis XVIII., and condemned to death.

"His wife formed a plan of rescuing him from prison. She was to wear on her next visit two dresses, and he could put one on in his cell, and, as they were of much the same heighth, the plan seemed feasible. As she explained—

"'He will, moreover, shorten himself by leaning on your shoulder. Thus, with the large bonnet, no one will suspect who he is. For me, I shal cover myself up in bed and hide there as long as I can. The sedan chair will be met by a cabriolet, and the good Englishman, Sir Robert Wilson, will escort him out of France.

"'Some day we shall be re united, and together, even in exile and poverty, shall be happy. Meanwhile, dear and faithful friend, care for my daughter, return her to the convent, and let the good nuns know when I shall send you word to join us.'

"So my mistress spoke to me, and having also instructed Mademoiselle, she got into the sedan chair, which we followed on foot, and at 5 o'clock we stood at the gates of the prison of the Conciergerie Prison.

"They admitted us. The pockets of our dresses were examined, as usual. My lady was even already overwhelmed with grief and apparently very ill. And the doors of the cell opened and closed on us.

"There was pity in the face of the man who admitted us, and he permitted the husband and wife a few more moments than usual for their farewells and lamentations.

"We made good use of those moments. We dressed my master in his wife's costume, and, indeed, he resembled her closely when they were assumed.

"She protested to him that friends had promised to protect her, and that she was in no danger. If he died she protested she would kill herself. Therefore refusal was equivalent to her murder. In a moment more she threw herself on the bed, and covered herself with the clothes.

"'Adieu,' said my master, in his deep voice.

We all sobbed together.

"'Ready?' asked the jailor, turning his head aside.

"We proceeded on our way. I led my master through the halls of the Palais de Justice, past the posts of the gendarmerie. At the gate, a delay occured. The porters were away. I trembled with terror.

"'Madame will die here,' I said, in explanation of my unusual excitement.

Then we placed our fainting figure in the sedan chair. Its bearers walked away. We lingered a little. We feared to hear an alarm from within. There came none. I led Mademoiselle to her convent. There she sits, pale, in her black dress by the window. Occasionally I think a tear threatens to drop upon her embroidery. She is here with her father in a foreign land. He will not die. His head is safe. But he has lost more than life.

"Oh, my poor lady! it is for you your child weeps, and well may she do so.

"When they discovered my dear lady in her husband's prison they were furious. They threatened her, and her friends were of little avail. They kept her long in prison, and refused to permit me to see her for some time, alone, among those who felt themselves wronged by her brave deed, what did they not do to terrify her! Among other things one lied to her and declared that the Count de La Valette had been captured and beheaded; and hearing this falsehood, she sank to the floor of her cell insensible. So she remained for a long while, and then they let me go to her.

"Alas! it was too late; her reason had flown. She did not know me. She thought her husband dead, and other wild fancies filled her brain, too terrible to be recounted. So she still lives, nor will she ever be aught else than mad until heaven mercifully takes her to itself.

"As for Mademoiselle, the nuns dared not keep her in their school, for so cruel were those who hated the friends of Bonaparte that they refused to allow their children to attend the same school with this poor child.

"One day I took her to her father. It is a tragedy which I have watched with these poor old eyes of mine. Its end is not yet, but nothing can ever restore the happiness of my poor master and mistress and the poor child who weeps yonder."

Jeweler—This clock will go twelve months without winding.

Oldboy—Well, how long would it go if it were wound?

"Maria," said Mr. Jones, looking tenderly at his wife, "there is a mous"——

"Oh, mercy goodness, where? Oh, save me, Jeptha, save me—save your Maria!" and the frightened woman jumped on the sofa and screamed hysterically.

"Good heavens, Maria, what is the matter? I don't see anything! Where is it?"

"You said there was a mouse!"

"I didn't say anything of the kind. I said, or tried to say, there was a mousselin delaine dress in Brown's window which was exactly like one you had when we were married. I wish you wouldn't interrupt me like that."

Some chickens are so fretful that even after death they will get into a stew.

A Blacksmith near Laurel pasted the following on his shop: "Notis.—The co-partnership heretofore resisting betwixt me and Mose Skinner is hereby resolved. Them what owes the firm will settle with me, and them what the firm owes will settle with Mose."

William Innes died and was buried at Corunna, Ind., in 1888. At the time of his death Mr. Innes weighed 180 pounds. In May, 1891, when the remains were disinterred, they were found to be petrified, to look like marble and to weigh exactly 695 pounds.

—If you want Letter and Note heads, neatly printed and put up in tablet form, cheaper than you can get them anywhere else, call at THE TIMES office. We also do all kinds of nice job printing, and have on hands a nice line of Stationary, business cards, &c. &c.

POCAHONTAS TIMES.

Vol. 9. JOHN E. CAMPBELL, EDITOR AND PROPRIETOR. Huntersville, West Virginia, Thursday, February 4, 1892. Terms of Subscription. $1.00 PER YEAR. IN ADVANCE. No. 29

Official Directory of Pocahontas County

Judge of Circuit Court,	A. N. Campbell.
Prosecuting Attorney,	L. M. McClintic.
Sheriff,	J. C. Arbogast.
Deputy Sheriff,	Geo. W. Callison.
Cl'k Co. Court,	S. L. Brown.
Cl'k Cir. Court,	J. H. Patterson.
Assessor,	C. O. Arbogast.
Com'rs Co. Ct.	C E. Beard. S B. Hannah. G. M. Kee.
Co. Surveyor,	Geo. Baxter

THE COURTS.

Circuit Court convenes on the first Tuesday in April, 3rd Tuesday in June and 3rd Tuesday in October.

County Court convenes on the 1st Tuesday in January, March, October and second Tuesday in July. July is levy term.

C. F. Moore. N. C. McNeil.

Moore & McNeil,

ATTORNEYS-AT-LAW.

Will practice in the Courts of Pocahontas and adjoining Counties, and in the Court of Appeals of the State of West Virginia.

L. M. McCLINTIC,

Attorney-at-Law,

Huntersville, W. Va.

Will practice in the courts of Pocahontas and adjoining counties and in the Supreme court of Appeals.

H. S. RUCKER,

Atty.-at-Law & Notary Public,

Huntersville, W. Va.

Will practice in the courts of Pocahontas county and in the Supreme court of Appeals.

J. W. ARBUCKLE,

Attorney-at-Law,

Lewisburg, W. Va.

Will practice in the courts of Greenbrier and Pocahontas counties.

Prompt attention given to claims for collection in Pocahontas county.

DR. O. J. CAMPBELL.

DENTIST,

Monterey, Va.

Will visit Pocahontas County, at least, twice a year.

The exact date of his visits will appear in this paper.

DR. J. H. WEYMOUTH,

RESIDENT DENTIST,

Beverly, W. Va.

Will visit Pocahontas County every Spring and Fall. The exact date of each visit will appear in THE TIMES.

J. M. CUNNINGHAM, M. D.,

PHYSICIAN & SURGEON,

Has located at Marlinton. All calls promptly ly answered.

☞ Office in the Skiles house.

Hotel by G. W. Wagner,

HUNTERSVILLE, W. VA.

Our Hotel is new, large and comfortable, and no paines will be spared to keep a first class house in every respect.

Horses well provided for.

Charges reasonable.

G. W. WAGNER, Proprietor,

H. Hallett & Co., Box 880 Portland, Maine

For sale by

BARLOW & ...

... W. Va.

A PREACHER PARALIZED AND PETRIFIED IN THE PULPIT.

NEKOMA, KANSAS, December 21 —This villiage was thrown into a state of excitement yesterday by an occurence which has not parallel in point of mystification and sensation. Yesterday morning's service in the Methodist church was largely attended and the pulpit was occupied by the Rev. John Ward who is a great admirer of the Rev. Sam Jones, the evangelist. During the course of his sermon Rev Ward took occasion to extol Mr. Jones in such terms as to cause alarm to his members as he wrought himself into a frenzy of excitement. He declared that it would give him the profoundest pleasure to see those who had ridiculed the methods of Sam Jones consigned to a literal hell, where their bodies would sizzle and burn throughout eternity and that he would rather believe that God is a lie than to believe that Sam Jones had not accomplished even more for the good of mankind than Jesus Christ. He carried on in this blasphemous manner for some time when he brought the the thing to a sudden climax by standing on his tiptoes, stretching his right hand toward heaven, with index finger pointing into space and with a demonical laugh said vehemently:

"I declare from this pulpit to this people and to all the world that Rev. Sam Jones stands preeminent when compared to Jesus Christ and in evidence of this belief I call upon God to paralyze me here and now if it is not so."

Scarcely had the words died on his lips when he became perfectly rigid and a gastly palor overspread his countenance, his hand remaining pointed to the ceiling. Strong men tremblingly approached him and when they laid hold on him they found it impossible to move him.

He has been standing in the same posture since 11 o'clock yesterday (Sunday) morning until the present writing, 2:30 this (Monday) afternoon. The villagers are in great fear and prayermeetings are being held in the churches and residences and those who were never known to have been on the inside of a church are to-day upon their knees in earnest supplication that God will withdraw his avenging hand and restore the unfortuneate creature to his former condition.

Several ladies are prostrate from the awful shock to their nervous system and the children are wondering what has so suddenly changed the people. It is considered as a terrible warning to those who trifle with Jehovah's name and no man can be found in town hardy enough to take God's name derisive on his lips.—Argue.

A STUDENT OF HUMAN NATURE.

Mrs. Slimpurse—Why in the world did you tell Mrs. De Fashion we had summered in Europe?

Mr. Slimpurse—You don't suppose I'd confess to her that we'd been economizing in Frogtown, do you? Not much.

Mrs. Slimpurse—But, dear me, she'll tell others, and before long all sorts of people will be asking about Europe, and we haven't either of us ever been east of Sandy Hook.

Mr. Slimpurse—Don't you fear. Tell people you've just got back from Europe and they'll change the subject quicker than a wink, for fear you'll start to talking about it.

Leap Year Proposal.—Odd Origin of a Curious Courtship Custom.

Colin Shackleford said, "Some one asked me the other day what was the origin of women proposing marriage during a leap year. I looked it up, and, while it may not be new to all, I daresay it will interest many. In the year 1288 a statute was published by the Scotch Parliment, of which the following is a copy, and is to my mind, the origin of the custom or idea. I do not know that it is a custom, or ever was:

"'It is ordaint that during the reign of Her Maist Blessit Majestie Margaret, like maiden, ladee of baith hige and low estate, shall hae liberty to speak to the man she likes. Gif he refuses to take her to be his wyf, she shall be mult in the sum of one hundredity poundis or less, as his estait may bee, except and always gif he can make it appear that he is betrotht to another woman, then he shall be free.'

"After dear old Margaret had passed away the women became clamerous for their privileges and to appease them another act of Parliment allowed them the priviledge every fourth year."

HOW THE PRESIDENTS DIED.

George Washington—His death was the result of a severe cold contracted while riding around his farm in a rain and sleet storm on Decem 10th 1799. The cold increased and was followed by a chill, which brought on acute laryngitis. His death occurred on December 14th, 1799. He was sixty-eight years of age.

John Adams—He died from old age, having reached his ninety-first milestone. Though active mentally he was nearly blind and unable to hold a pen steadily enough to write. He passed away without pain on July 4th, 1826.

Thomas Jefferson—He died at the age of eighty three, a few hours before Adams on July 4th, 1826. His disease was chronic diarrhœa, superinduced by old age and, his physician said, the too free use of the waters of the White Sulphur Springs.

James Madison—He, too, died of old age, and peacfully, on June 28th, 1836. His faculties were undimmed to the last. He was eighty five.

James Monroe—At the time of his death, which occurred in the seventy third year of his age, on July 4th 1831, it was assigned to no other cause than enfeebled health.

John Quincy Adams—He was stricken with paralysis on Febuary 21st, 1848, while addressing the the Speaker of the House of Representatives, being at the time a member of Congress. He died in the rotunda of the Capitol. He was eighty-one years of age.

Andrew Jackson—He died on June 8th, 1854, aged seventy eight years. He suffered from consumption, and finally dropsy, which made its appearance about six month's before his death.

Martin Van Buren—He died on July 4th, 1862, from a violent attack of asthma, followed by catarrhal effections of the throat and lungs. He was eighty years of age.

William Henry Harrison—The cause of his death was pleurisy, the result of a cold which he caught on the day of his inauguration. This was accompanied with severe diarrhœa, which would not yield to medical treatment. His death occured on April 4th, 1841, a month after his inauguration. He was sixty-eight years of age.

John Tyler.—He died on January 17, 1862, age of seventy-two. I have been unable to ascertain the cause of his death.

James K. Polk—In the Spring of 1849 he was stricken with a sligt attack of cholera while on a boat going up the Mississippi river. Though temporarily relieved, he had a relapse on his return home, and died on June 15th, 1849, aged fifty-four years.

Zachary Taylor—He was the second president to die in office. He is said to have partaken immoderately of ice water and iced milk, and then later of a large quantity of cherries. The result was an attack of cholera morbus. Another authority attributes his death to a severe cold. The former seems more likely. He was sixty-six years old.

Millard Fillmore—He died from a stroke of paralysis on March 8th, 1874, in his seventy-fourth year.

Franklin Pierce—His death was due to abdominal dropsy, and occurred on October 8th, 1869, in the sixty fifth year of his life.

James Buchanan—His death occurred on June 1st, 1868, and was caused by rheumatic gout. He was seventy-seven years of age.

Abraham Lincoln—He was shot by J. Wilkes Booth at Ford's Theater, Washington, on April 14th, 1865, and died the following day aged fifty six.

Andrew Johnson—He died from a stroke of paralysis, July 31st, 1875, aged sixty-seven.

The deaths of Grant, Garfield and Arthur are recent enough to be remembered by all.—American Notes and Queries.

A WOULD BE SWINDLER BEATEN.

He Was Only Trying to Learn the Shell Trick but his Scholar Knew it.

After awhile the young man with the white hat and red necktie observed that a friend of his had posted him on a new trick, and he took from his pocket the shell of an English walnut which had been cut in two to make two small cups. He also took from his vest pocket a common field pea and explained:

"I don't say that I can do the trick successfully, but after a little more practice I hope to catch on."

Half a dozen of us exchanged winks and spotted him at once for a sharper, but there was a middle aged man from Indianapolis who appeared innocently interested. He was not a green looking man by any means, but he had a confiding, childish look which would have authorized any stranger to ask him for a match or the time of day.

"What is the trick?" he asked as he laid aside his paper.

"Why, it's to manipulate this pea in this way—so and so—and this way, until you can't tell which cup it's under," explained the other.

"That's a new idea."

"Yes, perfectly new."

"Say!" I'd like to learn that myself," continued the Hoosier. "The boys down our way are full of tricks, and I'd like to astonish 'em. It all depends on the twist of the wrist, does it?"

"Partly that, and partly optical illusion. As I told you before I can't work it yet, because I haven't practiced sufficiently, but do you think you could tell which cup the pea is under now?"

"I think I could," replied the Hoosier.

"And could you now?" asked the young man after further manipulations.

"I'm sure of it."

"How sure?"

"Well, as I want to learn the trick, and as I am always willing to back my own eyes, I'll bet ten dollars I can."

We winked and shook our heads at him, but his smile only grew more childlike.

"Don't want to make it twenty dollars do you?" asked the sharper.

"I'd just as soon say thirty dollars."

"Thirty it is. Just hold the cups firmly down on my knees while I get out my sugar."

It took his last dollar, and when it was up he asked:

"Which cup is it under?"

"This one."

The cup was raised, and there, sure enough, was the pea, it having failed to stick to the substance inside and be lifted with the shell. The look which came into that young man's face was something queer to see, and he kept swallowing as if he had tacks in his throat. He gave up the stakes without a word, but sat for a long time like one in a dream. I thought he needed smypathy, and after awhile I found opportunity to inquire:

"How did it happen that way?"

"That's what I want to find out," he absently replied. "S-y, you childlike Hoosier, take these things and let's see what you can do with 'em.

"Certainly, to oblige."

He took the cups and the pea, and the manner in which he performed was enough to show every body in ten seconds that he was an old professional.

"Anybody wish to bet?" he smilingly asked, as the pea went hopping about.

Nobody did—not even the young man. He sat and stared, and watched and watched, and when the outfit was returned to him all he could say was:

"Well, by gum!"

Saloon Keepers Responsible for Acts of Drunkards.

A wholesome law bearing upon the liquor traffic, which makes saloon keepers liable for damages when intoxicated persons to whom they have sold liquor become injured while drunk, has been upheld by supreme court decision. Robert Davies died of pneumonia contracted by exposure while drunk and his widow sued a barkeeper who had supplied him with liquor for damages for loss of her husband. A jury gave a verdict in her favor, which the supreme court upholds. The jury determined the matter of fact as to the cause of the man's death, and the court affirms the responsibility of the barkeeper under the act. In response to the plea that the man was guilty of contributory negligence in voluntarily taking the liquor, the court says: "Every drunkard not only takes liquor voluntarily, but whenever he can get it, and because of his weakness law makes the saloon keeper responsible for selling to such persons. He has not the will power to resist the temptation, and for this reason the sale to him is forbidden."—Philadelphia Ledger, January 6.

Hardly a week passes but we are constantly surrounded by paris seen and kerosene.

A lawyer generally feels himself competent to break any will except his wife's.

Pocahontas Times.

JOHN E. CAMPBELL,
EDITOR AND PROPRIETOR.

Huntersville. W. Va.

February 4, 1892.

NEWS FROM WASHINGTON.

LATE MATTERS OF INTEREST PARTAINING TO OUR GOVERNMENT.

[Reported for THE TIMES by our regular correspondent.]

WASHINGTON, Jan. 29th.—Chili apology has deprived Mr. Harrison of the glory he had anticipated from the conducting of a victorious foreign war, glory which would in his his mind, at any rate, have resulted in his certain nomination and in adding largely to his chances of re election, and it is said, precipitated a domestic war between him and Secretary Blaine that they destroy all of his fondest hopes. The story as it is told here says that Mr. Harrison knew that Mr. Blaine had received verbal assurances from the Chilian minister that the apology would in due time be forth coming from his government, before he sent the ultimatum, but he feared that the credit of obtaining the apology through the ordinary diplomatic channels would all go to Mr. Blaine, so he sent the ultimatum to Chili and the correspondence and his message to Congress, in order that he might claim the credit for having frightened Chili into apologizing. Mr. Blaine resents this stealing of his thunder, and is credited with having said that it would cost Mr. H. the Presidential nomination of his party.

Whether this story be true or not, it is highly creditable to the democrats in Congress that they accepted the President's message in perfect good faith and were prepared to support the demands of the administration, even to the extent of a declaration of war, when the situation was cleared by Chili's apology. They recognized the demands of this Government as just, and that was enough for them as good citizens and patriotic Americans.

Senator Quay has returned from his "vindication" hunt, but he does not seem proud of what he accomplished. He told one gentleman that he hoped never to hear of another libel suit.

The House Committe on Appropriations has favorably reported the resolution directing that committee to enquire and report to the House whether the appropriations already made for the World's Fair have been judiciously expended. This resolution will certainly be adopted by the House, and it is not probable that the bill appropriating $5,000,000 for the World's Fair will be acted upon until the committee makes its report.

The action of the sub committee of the House Judiciary Committee, in deciding to conduct an investigation to ascertain whether articles of impeachment should be presented against Judge Boarman, of Louisiana, for misconduct in office, reopens that case, upon which considerable evidence was taken by the same committee of the last House.

Senator George's resolution for the appointment of a committee of five to inquire into the cause of the existing agricultural depression in the cotton growing States, is being considered by the Committee on Agriculture to which it was referred.

Oklahoma, New Mexico, Arizona and Utah are all knocking at the doors of Congress for admission to the Union and as far as the democrats are concerned they might all be admitted at this session of Congress, but the republican Senators believe that the majority of votes in all of them are democratic, and for that reason they have determined to let none of them in.

Representative Mills made his first speech of the session in defense of the new rules. When he arose he was greeted with applause from the democrats and from the galleries. He is not bothering his head about the silly reports connecting his name with the leadership of a democratic revolt in the House.

The Senate adopted a resolution introduced by Senator, Morgan, calling on the President for copies of all the correspondence with China concerning the refusal of that country to receive ex Senator Blair as U. S. Minister. It is believed that if there is anyway to get at the true inwardness of this matter a big scandal will be uncovered with which the saintly bloody shirt New York editor, Col. Elliot F. Shepard, will be found mixed up. It relates to the Chinese concessions to certain Americans to conduct banks, build railroads, etc., which occupied considerable space in American newspapers several years ago.

The Senate unanimously adopted the report of the Election committee confirming Senator Chilcot's right to his seat. The question was raised when he presented his credentials of there being some irregularity in his appointment by the Governor of Texas to serve out the unexpired term of Senator Reagan, who resigned.

Speaker Crisp has been presiding over the House this week, although he is still somewhat weak from his recent illness, The weakness isn't in his head, however.

Miss Stella Hoyle, of Troy, N. Y. promptly arose in a crowded street car recently and gave her seat to a crippled old gentleman who had entered. He asked her name and address, and she has just received from the greteful recipient of her kindness a diamond necklace.

Chili's population is 3,115,000 or less than that of Ohio. The combined population of its two cities, Santiago and Valparaiso, is not much larger than that of Pittsburg. Lots of glory in licking a country like that.—Post.

—George A. Lyon, a Baltimore and Ohio brakeman, turned a card party into a prayer meeting at Newburg a few evenings since. Lyons, who was recovering from his injuries received in a wreck, happened to call at the residence of one of the prominent citizens during a party. During the evening he was invited to play cards. He declined, saying he would read awhile, taking out a Bible at the time. Some one jocularly proposed that Lyons lead in prayer, and, taking them at the word, he did so, praying strong and fervently and bringing tears to the eyes of most of the company. It is said that Lyons' courage has had the effect of inducing several of the parties present to join the church.

List of Deeds.

A deed from A. Combs and wife to Jno. T. McGraw for land on Stony creek and Laurel run.

T. H. Childers and wife to Jno. T. McGraw, for land on Big Laurel creek, a branch of Wm's river.

I. B. Moore to Wm. Curry for land on Knapp's creek.

Enos Tallman and wife to E. O. Moore for land in Green Bank district.

J. B. Hannah and wife deed of September 1887 to Rev. Geo. Spencer for ¼ acre in the town of Frost.

L. W. Herold and wife to Jno. W. Baxter for land on Knapp's creek.

E. N. Moore and wife to J. B. Lockridge for land on Knapp's creek.

Andrew Herold to M. F. and J. L. Herold for land on Knapp's creek.

H. S. Rucker, com'r to E. A. Smith for land in Green Bank district.

B. McClung and wife to Q. W. Pouge for land in Green Bank district.

W. T. Via and wife to Andrew C. Wooddell for land on Stony creek.

Andrew C. Wooddell and wife to Samuel B. Moore for land on Stony creek.

Samuel M. Curry to Adda M. Reid for land on Michael's mountain.

Jno. L. Carpenter and wife to C. O. W. Sharp for land between Thorney and Knapp's creek.

Sam'l B. Woods and wife to H. H. Craig E. M. Upton for land on head Greenbrier river.

Wm. A. Rucker and wife to same for land on head Greenbrier river.

Wm. B. Rucker to same for land on head Greenbrier river.

Sam'l B. Woods trustee and E. A. to A. B. Watson to same for land on head Greenbrier river.

PECIAL ANNOUNCEMENT.

We have made arrangements with Dr. B J. Kendall Co., publishers of "A Treatise on the Horse and his Diseases;" which will enable all subscribers to obtain a copy of that valuable work free by sending their address (enclosing a two-cent stamp for mailing same) to DR. B. J. KENDALL CO., ENOSBURGH FALLS, VT. This book is now recognized as standard authority upon all diseases of the horse, as its phenomenal sale attests, over four million copies having been sold in the past ten years, a sale never before reached by any publication in the same period of time. We feel confident that our patrons will appreciate the work, and be glad to avail themselves of this opportunity of obtaining a valuable book.

It is necessary that you mention this paper in sending for the "Treatise." This offer will remain open for only a short time.

Order of Publication.

State of West Virginia, County of Pocahontas, ss.

To B. F. Armstrong, Benjamin Arbogast, Mrs. Jannie B. Skiles, May Bruffey, Thomas Hubbard and James Bidwell, the unknown heirs of Samuel Hogsett, John Piles, the unknown heirs of Daniel McGlaughlin, the unknown heirs of John Sharp, Sr., Henry E. Smith, Michael Wilfong, the unknown heirs of Thomas Gammon and Geo. E. Craig, Jr.

You are hereby commanded in the name of the State of West Virginia to appear before C. F. Moore, a commissioner in Chancery of the Circuit Court of the aforesaid county, at his office in the town of Huntersville in said county on the 29th day of February 1892, to whom the matters arising on a petition filed in the said court by John W. Warwick, the Commissioner of School Lands for the aforesaid county, have been referred by a decree of the said court entered on the petition at its April Term 1891, which petition prays a sale of the lands mentioned therein for the benefit of the School Fund, and show cause, if any they can, why the said land shall not be sold for the benefit of the School Fund.

Witness: J. H. Patterson, Clerk of said Court, this 19th day of January 1892.

J. H. PATTERSON, Clerk.

Jan. 21-4t Printer's fee $8.14.

HOME NEWS

—Several persons in town have measles.

—The trouble with Chili is at last settled.

—Charley Mitchell has challenged Jno. L. Sullivan to a finished fight for $5,000 a side.

—Lookout for six weeks more of hard winter weather, all on account of the sun shining last Tuesday.

—W. L. Wilson, of Rockbridge County, Va. was in town the first of the week.

—There are 15 or 20 lumbermen stopping at the hotels in this place waiting for the drive.

—We were down at Marlinton last Thursday, and are very glad to see that there is a good deal of building going on there now, notwithstanding, the winter.

—Auditor P. F. Duffy's father died a few days ago, at his home in Webster county, at an advanced age. He was one of the oldest and most respected citizens of his county.

—A Point Pleasant girl, who was repeating the Lord's Prayer at her bedside, was annoyed by her three year old brother's teasings. When she got as far as "give us this day our daily bread," the boy made an extra bad break, and the girl said: "Pardon me a moment, Lord, till I spank my brother," and arising from her knees, she gave the boy a sound thrashing. Then, kneeling, "forgive us our trespasses as we forgive those who trespass against us."

—James Brown who lives near Belington, Barbour county, W. Va., has probably the largest beard in this country. He is six feet in heighth, and has neither shaved nor trimmed his beard or mustach for thirty years. The ends of his mustache extends beyond his finger's ends when his arms are outstretched. He carries his beard and mustache braided and tucked inside of his shirt, but does not hesitate to show it to any one who may desire to see it.—Chicago Ledger.

—The principal part of Beverly, in our sister county of Randolph was burned on January 24th. Loss from $10,000 to $15,000. The Court House as was reported in dispatches to the daily papers as burned, was saved. The principal losses are Mrs. M. E. Buckey, hotel, $4,000; J. M. Ball, $1,500; Lammie Crawford, $2,500; Greynolds & Co., $200; L. D. Greynolds, $2,500; C. J. Fitzwater, $1,000; L. W. Talbott, drugs, &c., $500; G. W. Leonard, $100; K. B. Crawford & Co., $100; Mrs. A. F. Butcher, house and millinery stock, $250; Sam Stewart, groceries, $100. Besides there are several minor losses which cannot be estimated. There was scarcely no insurance.

—The Tyler Democrat says: "Mr. Willoughby, who purchased the old Eagle hotel, has torn the whole inside of the building down. He purchased it for $460, and was said to have paid a good round price for it. But in tearing the inside away, in one corner of the building, away in behind the ceiling, an old essence of coffee tin box was found, and on opening, it was found to be jammed full of paper money, which, when straightened out, was counted and amounted to the snug sum of fourteen hundred and seventy dollars. This was a pretty rich find, sure. Now the question is how and when and by whom was it hid there in the old tin box? Some think it was Abe Cox that did it, when he lived there many years ago, but this is only a surmise. However the money was in good order and condition, and is quite a nice pile to find. We might add, however, in this connection, that the bills were all old Confederate money, which does not make the find near so interesting as it was at first."

—Mr. S. E. Weir, chief Engineer of the C. & O. R. R. and H. C. Vaughan, Esq., of Covington, Va. were guests at Huntersville Hotel over Sunday.

—A corpse of C. & O. engineers were in town over night Tuesday. We did not learn their business, but suppose they are going to complete some unfinished survey or something of the kind, somewhere between here and William's river.

—It looks as though we were going to get a railroad, to see engineers and railroad men around at this time of year, and this kind of weather, certainly it is not the grip that they are after for nothing.

—The Fourth Quarterly Meeting for Huntersville Circuit will be held at Huntersville Feb. 13, 14. Preaching on the 13th at 11 a. m., followed by Quarterly Conference. Preaching on Sunday morning at 11 a. m.

S. O. FERGUSON, P. E.

—Mr. Parsons, Deputy Sheriff of Randolph Co., arrested in Davis, Tucker Co., last Saturday and lodged in jail at this place Monday, one Dick Rankin who was indicted at the Oct. Court for the murder of Wm. Underwood at Buckeye the 25 of last September, a full account of which appeared in THE TIMES at that time. There was a reward of $200 offered by the County Court for his arrest.

—We received last week copy of the Evening Telegram, published at Portland Oregon, by Geo. H. Moffet, Esq., who a few years ago was a resident of our city and is a brother in-law of our very worthy townsman Mess. Rice and C. F. Moore. It is newsy, well edited and a better allround daily a person would not wish to see.

—We were mistaken last week when we said that Mr. John Osborne and Miss Frederick Lewis of Monroe Co., were married last week—not mistaken in the marriage, however, but mistaken in the name of the bride, which was Miss L. P. F. Frederick, instead of Miss Frederick Lewis. The way we got the name mixed was that she is a descendant of the Lewis family of Virginia. The Watchman speaks of the bride of Mr. Osborne as a lovely and accomplished lady, with a high literary talent.

POCAHONTAS DEVELOPMENT COMPANY.

Mr. Brown M. Yeager has been appointed general agent for the Pocahontas Developement Co., at Marlinton to make sale of lots, and for the transaction of the business of the company at that point.

There are several odd lots, not included in those reserved for the drawing, which the company will sell on reasonable terms to such parties as will obligate themselves to immediately begin the construction of houses.

For further information and particulars, call on or address,

BROWN M. YEAGER,
Marlinton W. Va

—If you want Letter and Note heads, neatly printed and put up in tablet form, cheaper than you can get them anywhere else, call at THE TIMES office. We also do all kinds of nice job printing, and have on hands a nice line of Stationary, business cards, &c. &c.

CONSUMPTION CURED.

An old physician, retired from practice, having had placed in his hands by an East India missionary the formula of a simple vegetable remedy for the speedy and permanent cure of Consumption, Bronchitis, Catarrh, Asthma and all throat and Lung Affections, also a positive and radical cure for Nervous Debility and all Nervous Complaints, after having tested its wonderful curative powers in thousands of cases, has felt it his duty to make it known to his suffering fellows. Actuated by this motive and a desire to relieve human suffering, I will send free of charge, to all who desire it, this recipe, in German, French or English, with full directions for preparing and ...

THE POLICE GAZETTE

POCAHONTAS TIMES.

Vol. 9. JOHN E. CAMPBELL, EDITOR AND PROPRIETOR. Huntersville, West Virginia, Thursday, February 11, 1892. Terms of Subscription. $1.00 PER YEAR. IN ADVANCE. No. 30

Official Directory of Pocahontas County

Judge of Circuit Court, A. N. Campbell.
Prosecuting Attorney, L. M. McClintic.
Sheriff, J. C. Arbogast.
Deputy Sheriff, Geo. W. Callison.
Cl'k Co. Court, S. L. Brown.
Cl'k Cir. Court, J. H. Patterson.
Assessor, C. O. Arbogast.
Com'rs Co. Ct. C. E. Beard, S. B. Hannah, G. M. Kee.
Co. Surveyor, Geo. Baxter

THE COURTS.

Circuit Court convenes on the first Tuesday in April, 3rd Tuesday in June and 3rd Tuesday in October.

County Court convenes on the 1st Tuesday in January, March, October and second Tuesday in July. July is levy term.

TIM'S STRATEGY.

Mapes was chivalrous by nature; he believed in seeking the bubble reputation, ever in the cannon's mouth." Tims, on the contrary, believed there was policy in war, and that the end justified the means, particularly if the end was attained. Companions from infancy had been spent in competition for scholastic and such other honors as the locality afforded, without even a momentary break in their friendship. But now, in early manhood, they struggled for a prize of incalculable value, with an ardor that threatened a complete rupture of friendly relations.

The heart and hand of Eliza Reed, the neighborhood belle, were to be won, and to these none others might aspire, in the face of such formidable competition as that of Mapes and Timms.

Coquetry is delicious to a woman, and Eliza would not have been feminine had she been in haste to have made an election. Nevertheless, she did not intend to miss her opportunity. She knew well the war could not always last, and feared that when one of the aspirants for her favor withdrew from the contest, the love of the other, wanting the stimulus of competition, would grow cold; hence she had made her mind up that upon the most favorable opportunity she would signify to Mapes that his suit so often pressed was at last accepted. The opportunity, it seemed, was not to be long wanting, for invitations were given out for an apple bee in the neighborhood, and Eliza found means to convey an intimation to Mapes that she expected to meet him there, and counted on his escort home at the conclusion of the frolic.

The appointed evening looked for with such nervous anticipation by Mapes came at length. He felt that it was the most important of his life and arrayed himself as only a rustic can. His way lay a meadow, through which ran—or rather loitered—a deep, but narrow stream spanned by a single log. It was so dark when he reached this primitive bridge that he was compelled to feel his way slowly across. As he progressed it began to swing lightly—something very unusual—until he reached the center, when to his utter confusion, it gave way, and [illegible] was launched into the water. [illegible] scrambled out, and was forced [illegible] bid adieu for the night to all hope of plighting his troth to the lov[illegible] Eliza.

In the rural districts down east [illegible] early times the good people h[illegible] such habits of industry and rig[illegible] economy that they seldom gave [illegible] attended parties, unless such w[illegible] cloaked under the name of raisin[illegible] huskings or apple bees; thus, [illegible] apple bee fraught with moment[illegible] consequences to Mapes and Tim[illegible] was but a social party in disgui[illegible] a few apples being pared, qu[illegible] tered, cored and strung in the ea[illegible] evening for appearance sake.

As usual, Eliza Reed was [illegible] belle of the occasion. Good loo[illegible] entire self possessed, and a ke[illegible] satirical wit always assured her th[illegible] position; and this night she sho[illegible] with unusual brilliancy, until as [illegible] hours wore away and Mapes ca[illegible] not, she began to lose herself in pondering why, and at length asked Timms:

"Is your friend Mapes ailing?"

"I guess not," replied Timms, "saw him today. He was not complaining."

"He denies himself much pleas-ure," said Eliza, "in not coming here to-night, for this is the place where we always have a good time. Aunt Judy knows how to give an apple bee."

"You let Mapes alone," answered Timms; "he knows what he's about."

"What do you mean?" asked Eliza.

"Oh, I mean," replied Timms, "that Mapes is the prince of good fellows and gets invitations where the rest of us don't."

"Where is Mapes to-night?" asked Eliza now fully aroused.

"I don't know for sure," answered Timms. He told me to-day there were special reasons for his coming here, but that he had an invitation to the rich and aristocratic 'Squire Humeston's, who is celebrating his daughters birthday, and that he didn' know which way he would go." And Timms turned away to talk to the next prettiest girl in the room.

Petted young women are seldom logical or patient. When the party broke up Eliza accepted Timms escort to her home and before they arrived there she had consented to become, with the least possible delay, Mrs. Timms. The next day the engagement was announced, and preparations for the wedding commenced. Timms was exultant—happy Timms.

For a few days Timms was not much seen in public—perhaps for want of courage to wear his blushing honors openly; perhaps for want of courage to meet some other contingencies—who knows? But a man can not make arrangements for his own wedding from a fixed stand point, and he was compelled to venture out. In a quiet and secluded byway he met Mapes. The meeting to him was a surprise; he smiled feebly and extended his hand. But Mapes, intent on business, strode up to Timms and planted a vigorous blow on one of his eyes which caused that gentleman to measure his length in the dust. Timms sprung to his feet and showed fight, but another blow on the other eye sent again to grass, where he continued to lie.

"Get up," said Mapes.

"You'll knock me down again," said Timms.

"Yes," returned Mapes, "I will."

"Then I won't get up," said [illegible]

[illegible] the defendant George O. Stevens, is a non-resident of the State of West Virginia: It is ordered that he do appear here within One month after the first publication of this Order and do what is necessary to protect his interest in this suit.

Witness, J. H. Patterson, Clerk of the said Court, this 1st day of February, 1892.

J. H. PATTERSON, Clerk.

L. M. McClintic, p. q.
Feb. 4-4t. Printer's fee $13 75

Order of Publication.

State of West Virginia,
Pocahontas County, to wit:

At rules held in the Clerk's Office of the Circuit Court of Pocahontas County on the first Monday in February, 1892.

Witz, Beidler & Co. Pl'ffs
vs. } On amended and Supplemental Bill.
H. M. Lockridge, J. B. Lockridge, Ernest N. Moore, Mary J. Seebert, Mary R. Seebert, C. T. Seebert, Martha S. Seebert, Amos Barlow, Henry Barlow, Levi Gay, O. P. Sydenstricker, Emma N. Warwick, First National Bank of Buena Vista, The Bank of Ronceverte, J. C. Loury, Sr., J. C. Loury, Jr., and James H. Doyle, partners, doing

"Now repeat after me: "I, Silas Timms, solemnly swear that I will never bring to knowledge of any human being that I sawed the log whereby Daniel Mapes fell into the creek and lost a wife; and, further, that I will, she consenting, marry Eliza Reed, and always treat her kindly, so help me God."

Timms repeated the oath verbatim.

"Now get up and go home," said Mapes. I don't think you'll be married until your eyes get out of mourning, and by that time I will be far enough away. But don't think I'll lose sight of you, and if you don't keep your oath you'll see me."

Timms arose from the ground, shook off the dust, and walked away; when he had reached a safe distance he shouted back exultingly:

"Mapes, she's an angel."

* * * * *

In 25 years Daniel Mapes had learned many things, and among them this: Life is very much as we make it.

The effect of this lesson was to make it appear that the lines to him had fallen in pleasant places. His rotund form and firm muscle bespoke a good digestion, while a cheerful countenance told of mental peace. A fair woman named him husband and children called him father. A beautiful home in the Santa Clara valley was theirs; besides which Mapes had many broad acres of land, as well as many head of stock running nearly wild in the counties of Monterey and San Luis Obispo.

Once in each year the cattle that graze on California's thousand hills are gathered in bands at convenient places, to be claimed and branded by the owner—such assemblages being called rodeos. Mapes had been down across the Salinas plains in attendance upon a rodeo, and being on his return, jogging slowly on his mustang, he saw far in the distance, but nearing him, an equally lone traveler.

Slowly the distance between them decreased; and as they approached, Mapes—with California prudence—slipped his revolver upon the belt which sustained it from his back round to his left side, bringing the hilt under the shadow of his bridle arm, and within easy reach of his right hand. A near look assured Mapes that he had no occasion for weapons; the coming man was of middle age, but his look was worn, weary, dejected and hopeless—in local phrase, his manners was that of one who "has lost his grip;" and those who have met that terrible misfortune are never highway robbers, "grip" being the very quality wanted to that hazardous pursuit.

The travelers met with a long, inquiring gaze, when from their lips simultaneously burst the words, "Mapes"—"Timms." After a moment of surprise Mapes, spurring his mustang, drew near Timms.

"So—we meet at last. I have been waiting to see you this many a year."

The movement seemed ominous to Timms, and he cried out:

"Don't—don't shoot. I have no weapons. Besides, I have kept my oath—at least as well as I could. I never told the reason why you did not attend the apple bee, nor ever breathed a syllable about the sawed log to a living soul—upon my solemn oath."

"I wasn't thinking of the ducking," remarked Mapes.

"Don't come any nearer," returned Timms. "I have always tried to use that woman well; but she would not be used well. I have done my best to treat her kindly, but she won't be treated kindly."

"It is no use to go over the grounds to me, Timms."

"But," replied Timms, "you have no idea what that woman is; you wouldn't blame me if you only knew. She's brow beat me till I ain't half a man."

"So I see," said Mapes.

"No, you don't see," replied Timms. "You don't see half. Look at this scar"—taking off his hat and showing a long seam on his scalp—"that was done with a skillet."

"Suffered!" returned Timms. "You ought to have sworn her, too. If you only knew how I have thought of you, and of my oath to you, and how I have borne blows and been quiet—how I have been called a brute and a fool, and kept silent—how I have endured taunts and sneer, hunger and discomforts, without ever a word of reproach—you would forgive me; you wouldn't harbor thoughts of revenge."

"Thoughts of revenge," replied Mapes. "Let us dismount and have a settlement, for I see my chance has come at last."

"Mapes, would you take the life of an unarmed man?"

"Timms, you're crazy. Let me explain. I have no wrongs to avenge. It is not for vengeance that I have wanted to see you. I have heard about you often—know all your life and experiences, and I have only wanted to see you to offer you a home and friendship, employment, and opportunities for prosperity here in California. I owe you no debt but one of gratitude for the inestimable service you did me by that little job of carpenter work and that I mean to pay. Come with me."

He took Timm's horse by the bridle, turned him about without remonstrance and they traveled on in silence.

After awhile Timms raised his eyes timidly from the ground and said:

"Mapes, she's a demon."

"He is a very little man isn't he?"

"There is good reason for it."

"How?"

"His wife cuts him short every time he attempts to say anything.

Conductor.—We have missed the connection, and you will have to wait at this station six hours.

Old Lady—(who is a little nervous on the railroad)—Well I'm safe for six hours anyway.

Not long ago in London a preacher indulged in a little bit of sarcasm over a small collection and he did it very neatly. "When I look at the congregation," said he, I ask: Where are the poor? and when I look at the collection I ask: Where are the rich?"

Mrs Suburb—Oh, my dear, that magnificent watchdog you brought home yesterday is gone.

Mr. Suburb—Eh! Did he break the chain?

"No, but an ugly looking tramp came around and acted so terribly that I let the dog loose; but instead of tearing the tramp to pieces he went off with him."

"Great snakes! It must have been the same tramp I bought him of."

How dear to the heart is the yellow backed pumpkin, when orchards are barren of stuffin' for pies; when peaches and apples have both been a failure, and berries of no kind have greeted the eyes. How kindly we turn to the fruit that our children are taught to despise—the old yellow pumpkin, the dear old [illegible] pumpkin, the big bellied pumpkin that makes such good pies.

In the past year more than 2,000,000 barrels of beer were brewed in Milwaukee.

Pocahontas Times.

JOHN E. CAMPBELL,
EDITOR AND PROPRIETOR.

ADVERTISING RATES.

	1 m.	3 m.	6 m.	1 yr.
One inch	$ 1 00	$ 2 00	$ 3 00	$ 5 00
Three in.	2 00	4 00	6 00	10 00
Qr. column	2 00	8 00	10 00	17 00
Half col'n.	6 00	12 00	20 00	30 00
One col'n	10 00	20 00	30 00	50 00

Reading notices, not exceeding five lines, twenty-five cents for each insertion, and five cents a line for each additional line.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION.

One copy, 1 yr., $1.00 in advance; after 6 months, $1.25; after 12 months, $1.50.

These terms will be strictly complied with.

Entered at the Post-office at Huntersville, W. Va., as second class matter.

Huntersville, W. Va.

February 11, 1892.

BLAINE WILL NOT RUN.

He Sends Chairman Clarkson a Very Positive Declination.

"WASHINGTON, D. C., Feb. 6, 1892.

"Hon. J. S. Clarkson, Chairman of the Republican National Committee.

"MY DEAR SIR:

"I am not a candidate for the presidency and my name will not go before the Republican National Convention for the nomination. I make this announcement in due season.

"To those who have tendered me their support I owe sincere thanks, and am most grateful for their confidence. They will, I am sure, make earnest effort in the approaching contest, which is rendered especially important by reason of the industrial and financial policies of the government being at stake. The popular decision on these issues is of great moment and will be of far reaching consequence.

"Very sincerely yours,

"JAMES G. BLAINE."

It is estimated that 700,000 immigrants will be landed in this country during 1892. How many of them will become safe and self-supporting citizens of the Great Republic! If Uncle Sam does not have a severe indigestion in trying to assimilate such a large mass of foreign stuff it will be strange.

NEWS FROM WASHINGTON.

LATE MATTERS OF INTEREST PERTAINING TO OUR GOVERNMENT.

[Reported for THE TIMES by our regular correspondent.]

WASHINGTON, Feb. 5th.—Secretary Blaine and Mr. Harrison have, according to current gossip, patched up their recent very serious differences and renewed the compact concerning the republican nomination, i. e., that the name of only one one them should be presented to the Minneapolis convention. Mr. Harrison took the first step towards making friends when he learned from a mutual friend that Mr. Blaine had said that whatever his personal preferences might be, he was perfectly satisfied that it would kill him to go through another campaign as a Presidential candidate; he knew that believing this Mr. Blaine would not be a candidate, and he wished to make friends, even if it was necessary to swallow a little of his dignity to do so, before the wily man from Maine should take up some other candidate.

The manly denial of Senator Voorhees, corroborated by the republican Senators from Pennsylvania, was not needed to convince anyone of the untruthfulness of the silly statement alleging that a bargain had been made between the Indiana and Pennsylvania Senators to exchange votes against the confirmation of Judge Dallas of Pennsylvania, for votes against the confirmation of Judge Woods of Indiana. The Indiana Senators opposed the confirmation of Woods because the believed him unfit for a judicial position, and not because he was a republican, and all of them favored the confirmation of Judge Dallas, not because he is a democrat, but because of his fitness for the position.

Ex President Cleveland passed through Washington this week, en route to New York. His train only stopped for a few minutes, and he did not leave his car.

In answer to a resolution of the House asking for information Mr. Wanamaker has submitted his estimate of the probable deficit in the postal revenues for the fiscal year beginning the first of next July, should letter postage be reduced to one cent and postal cards to one half cent each. He says the deficit would be $25,000,000; but admits that the probable increase in the number of letters would reduce that amount considerably. Not a few of the longest-headed democrats in the House are of the opinion that it would be good politics as well as an act of justice to grant the people this boon, which was promised by the last republican National convention, but refused by the republican Congress, which spent all of its time legislating for the favored classes.

Representative McCreary, of Kentucky, is entitled to the thanks of the people for introducing the amendment to the House rules, which was promptly adopted by the House, which compels the several committees having them in charge to report all of the general appropriation bills to the House within eighty days after the committees are announced at the long session, and forty days after the beginning of the short session. This makes it certain that the appropriation bills will all be reported by the middle of March, which will give the House plenty of time to carefully consider each and every item in every one of them.

The House Committe on Ways and Means, in pursuance of its adopted policy of reporting a number of separate tariff bills, referred the subjects of binding twine, cotton ties, salt lumber, wool and tin plate to sub-committees, with instructions to prepare and report to the full committee bills dealing with each of the articles mentioned at as early a date as possible. As soon as the bills are approved by the democrats of the full committee, they will be, one at a time, reported to the House.

Representative Enloe's bill to r[illegible] peal the ocean mail subsidy act [illegible] the last Congress, will be favora[illegible] reported to the House in a f[illegible] days, the democratic members [illegible] the Postoffice Committee havi[illegible] a unanimous vote so decided.

The House Judiciary committ[illegible] has decided to favorably report [illegible] very important bill, that provid[illegible] that a corporation shall be held [illegible] be a citizen for all judicial purpos[illegible] of the State in which it may car[illegible] on its business. The big corpor[illegible]tions will oppose this measure.

Now that the House has adopte[illegible] its rules some of those who ha[illegible] had so much to say about its doi[illegible] entirely too much. As a matter [illegible] fact, the members of the Hou[illegible] have done a great deal of ha[illegible] work, necessarily of a prelimina[illegible] nature, studying up the various a[illegible]propriation bills, etc. No actu[illegible] legislation of importance could ta[illegible] place until the rules were adopted.

The democratic caucus called for to-night to consider the silver question will not be held, it being deemed best not to hold it at present.

ORDER OF PUBLICATION.

State of West Virginia,
Pocahontas County, to-wit:

At rules held in the Clerk's office of the Circuit Court of Pocahontas County on the first Monday in February, 1892.

The Bank of Ronceverte .... Pl'ff
vs.
I. B. Moore, William Curry, J. B. Lockridge and H. M. Lockridge...... Def'ts.

The object of this suit is to recover of the defendants H. M. Lockridge, J. B. Lockridge and I. B. Moore in favor of the plaintiff the amount of the sum of $627.13 due on Negotiable note made by said H. M. Lockridge and endorsed by said J. B. Lockridge and I. B. Moore and of the sum of $1.16 costs of protest of said note, with interest on said amount from 19th day of November, 1891, together with costs of this suit; and to subject to payment thereof certain lands lying in Pocahontas County in the State of West Virginia, conveyed by said I. B. Moore to the defendant William Curry, by deed dated 9th day of January, 1892 and recorded on said day in the Clerk's office of the County Court of said Pocahontas County, and it appearing by affidavit filed, that H. M. Lockridge is a non-resident of the State of West Virginia. It is ordered that he do appear here within one month after the first publication of this order and do what is necessary to protect his interest in this suit.

Witness, J. H. Patterson, Clerk of the said Court, this 1st day of February, 1892.

J. H. PATTERSON, Clerk.

J. W. Harris, ;
L. M. McClintic, ; sols.
J. W. Arbuckle ;
Feb. 4-4t. Printer's fee $11.94

HOME NEWS

—Messrs. Wise and M. F. Herold, of Frost were in town Tuesday.

—About 8 inches of snow last Saturday.

—The grip abateth, but measles are still coming out.

—We learn from the Charleston Gazette that the C. & O. R. R. is surveying a road up Gauley river.

—M. D. McGlaughlin Esq., of near this city was on a business trip to Greenbrier county last week.

—G. W. Wagner, Esq., shot at a man breaking into his stable Tuesday night.

—The lumbermen who are waiting for the drive at this place amuse themselves with the boxing gloves.

—The Brown's creek school, being taught by Miss Dosia Sharp closes Saturday.

—Messrs. M. J. and Isaac McNeel, of Mill Point, were in town Monday.

—Justice Grose was over at Buena Vista, Va., last week, attending a meeting of the Greenbrier and Pocahontas Development Company.

—Mr. Jas. B. Canfield's Gordonsville, Va. Gazette is for sale, at a great bargain, as he wishes to change his location and business.

—On last Tuesday morning a fire in Charlottesville, Va., consumed the stables, four cars, and six mules of the Charlottesville street rail way.

—Miss Lillie Davis, daughter of Hon. John J. Davis, of Clarksburg, was married on the 4th inst. to Mr. John A. Preston, Prosecuting Attorney of Greenbrier Co.

—Capt. A. F. Mathews, of Lewisburg, W. Va., and N. J. Brown, Esq., of Pocahontas, W. Va., are in town, attending a meeting of Greenbrier Investment Company. —Buena Vista Advocate.

—Mrs. H. M. Lockridge has purchased from her husband the dry goods and notion store on Magnolia Avenue, where she will be pleased to see her friends.—Buena Vista Advocate.

—A Hindoo baby is named when it is twelve days old, and usually by the mother. The names the father calls it then, especially nights wouldn't usually look well on a visiting card.

—Oliver Ervine, who was sent to the penitentiary from this county about two years ago has served his sentence and is on the outside again, as we learn from a note from his father.

—Died, Mr. Wm. J. Moore, of Augusta Co., formerly a few months ago of Mingo Flats, Randolph Co., died at the latter place last week. We did not learn the cause of his death, but suppose it was la grippe. Mr. Moore while a resident of Randolph Co., was a highly respected and influential stock dealer, and was very well known in this county as a gentleman in every sense of the word.

—Died, Mrs. Margaret Dilley, wife of J. W. Dilley, Esq., a few miles from this place last Friday morning, aged, we suppose, about 60 years. She had been an invalid for several years, though we did not learn the immediate cause of her death. She leaves a husband and several children to mourn her loss. "Say not 'Good night,' but in some brighter clime bid me good morning."

—The National Religious Liberty Association, Battle Creek, Mich., will accept our grateful thanks for a 368 page book, beautifully bound in cloth, entitled "American State Papers," bearing on Sunday Legislation, compiled and annotated by William Addison Blakely, counsel or at law. This is a very valuable and interesting book, and should be read by every one.

—Quarterly meeting commences here next Saturday.

—A terrible mine explosion is reported from Peach Run. Six bodies, mutilated and blackened have been recovered. The explosion was not in the mine, but at a point where the men were at work making a double track to the mine. Three settlings of dynamite had been placed. One failed to explode, and the men all returned to the blast, when it exploded.

—A correspondent to the Register writes as follows from Marlinton: "The boom at this place is still coming on. Several new buildings nearing completion, two stores, printing office, drug store, dwellings and a livery stable. The stable is owned by two Yorkshire Englishmen, and one of them is a son of a rector, and their passion is for horses. They own several of their own, and they also care for a number of blooded horses, the property of Col. McGraw, one of the chief promoters of the new city. On pleasant evenings one may see a six thousand dollar racer going through the regulation paces—getting ready for his work next spring near New York and elsewhere."

—Mr. Spurgeon, the great London preacher, died at Mentone, Italy, Jan. 31st, at 11 o'clock P. M. aged fifty eight years. He suffered for many years from gout, which finally went to his head. He had been unconscious since that morning. He did not recognize his wife and daughter. He refused all food, and milk that was forced down his throat was not retained. A host of telegrams of sympathy were received by members of the dying pastor's family. In his illness, which began seven months ago and passed through many vicissitudes, he has had world-wide sympathy, and his devoted congregation in London have been untiring in their petitions to the Lord for his recovery.

GREEN BANK BREVITIES.

There was a very small attendance at the quarterly meeting at this place, owing to the rain. Rev. S. G. Ferguson preached some very interesting sermons.

We had a 10 inch snow last week, and the thermometer registered 10 degrees below zero last Friday night.

The grip is disappearing from our vicinity. All are improving and no new cases.

Green Bank has a good show for a railroad.

There is talk of a tannery starting up in Green Bank in the near future.

H. A. Yeager, Esq., of Marlinton passed through our village last Sunday.

Joseph Kerr and Miss Lula Rock, are off to Greenbrier Co., to see Mrs. Scruggs, who is dangerously ill.

C. H.

Engaged to her Victim.

Alice Mitchell who cut the throat of her girl friend, Freda Ward, at Memphis, Tenn., is now in jail in that city. All efforts to interview Miss Mitchell have failed, but a reporter learned from good authority what passed between her and her counsel. On other subjects she seemed to be perfectly rational, but she did not realize the enormity of the deed.

"I killed Freda," said she, "because I loved her and she refused to marry me. I asked her to marry me three times, and at last she consented. We were going to marry here and go to St. Louis."

"What did you intend to do in St. Louis?" asked one of her attorneys.

"Oh, I do not know, but when Freda promised to marry me I was so happy. I sent her an engagement ring, and she wore it for a time, but it was returned to me, and I was miserable. I could not bear to be separated from her, and I resolved to kill her. I would rather she were dead than away from me."

The girl then asked one of the lawyers where Freda was. She was told that the body was at Steinly and Hintons.

"Oh, Mamma," she said: "If I could only see her. Please let me go and see her. If I could only lie down by her side I would be so happy."

The letters that she wrote to Freda are full of most endearing terms, and go to show that the girl eagerly looked forward to the time when she could make Freda her wife. Strange to say from what can be learned, Freda herself seemed to be infatuated with Alice, and willingly assented to the proposed marriage. The time had been arranged and the affair was to have been in the nature of an elopement.

POCAHONTAS DEVELOPMENT COMPANY.

Mr. Brown M. Yeager has been appointed general agent for the Pocahontas Developement Co., at Marlinton to make sale of lots, and for the transaction of the business of the company at that point.

There are several odd lots, not included in those reserved for the drawing, which the company will sell on reasonable terms to such parties as will obligate themselves to immediately begin the construction of houses.

For further information and particulars, call on or address,

BROWN M. YEAGER,
Marlinton W. Va

ORDER OF PUBLICATION.

State of West virginia,
Pocahontas County, to-wit:

At rules held in the Clerk's office of the Circuit Court of Pocahontas County on the first Monday in February, 1892.

Samuel s Hannah .... Pl'ff
vs
Thomas D. vanata, William N Morrow, George O Stephens and Uriah Hevener, ... Def'ts.

The object of this suit is to recover of the defendant Thomas D Vanata, the amount of three promissary notes made by him for the sum of $384 50 each, with interest on each sum from December, 6th, 1887, payable to the defendant Uriah Hevener, who has assigned said notes to the plaintiff Samuel s. Hannah; and to subject to sale, for payment of said amount and costs of this suit, a tract of land containing 904 acres, more or less, lying on Rich Mountain in Pocahontas County, State of West Virginia, conveyed by said Uriah Hevener to said Thomas D. Vanata by deed dated the 12th day of December, 1887, retaining a vendor's lein on said land to secure payment of the amount of said several sums, which is part the purchase money agreed to be paid by said Vanata to said Hevener for said land: the said tract of land having been afterwards conveyed by said Vanata to the defendant Wm N. Morrow, and by said Morrow conveyed yet later to the defendant George O. Stevens—and it appearing by affidavit filed, that the defendant George O. Stevens, is a non-resident of the State of west virginia: It is ordered that he do appear here within One month after the first publication of this Order and do what is necessary to protect his interest in this suit.

Witness, J. H Patterson, Clerk of the said Court, this 1st day of February, 1892.

J. H. PATTERSON, Clerk.

L. M. McClintic, p. q.
Feb. 4-4t. Printer's fee $13 75

Order of Publication.

State of West Virginia,
Pocahontas County, to wit:

At rules held in the Clerk's Office of the Circuit Court of Pocahontas County on the first Monday in February, 1892.

Witz, Beidler & Co. .... Pl'ffs
vs. On amended and Supplemental Bill.

H. M. Lockridge, J. B. Lockridge, Ernest N. Moore, Mary J. Seebert, Mary R. Seebert, C. T. Seebert, Martha S. Seebert, Amos Barlow, Henry Barlow, Levi Gay, O. P. Sydenstricker, Emma N. Warwick, First National Bank of Buena Vista, The Bank of Ronceverte, J. C. Loury, Sr., J. C. Loury, Jr., and James H. Doyle, partners, doing business under firm name of Loury & Doyle, Wm. Gibson, John Wurtz, James Price, J. P. Hawkins, John Andrew Cleek, Bank of Lewisburg, Hugh Dever, J. M. Hardy and —— Hardy, partners, trading under firm name of J. M. Hardy and Son, First National Bank of Buena Vista Virginia, John Adam McNeil and Hugh Adams, Def'ts.

Object of Amended or Supplemental bill is to convene all the judgment lienors of J. B. and H. M. Lockridge, to subject the land of said J. B. and H. M. Lockridge to sale to pay the liens thereon, after first paying the claim of plaintiffs for $871 26 with accumulated interest thereon and $4.61 cost of protest and cost of this suit, to have a decree declaring the preference shown by the defendant J. B. Lockridge, to all creditors in confessed judgments, illegal to have all creditors of said J. B. Lockridge (except the plaintiffs) paid pro rata on their debts, the amount realized from a sale of said H. M and J. B. Lockridge's land, after first paying the debts due the plaintiffs in full, and the debts of other creditors of said J. B. and H. M. Lockridge who came in and attacked the fraudulent conveyances of said J. B. and H. M. Lockridge, to have the priority of the debts due the attacking creditors, declared to exist from the date of the filing of their bills, to have a certain judgment which was confessed before the Clerk of the Circuit Court of Pocahontas county, West Virginia, on the 16th day of January 1892, in favor of The First National Bank of Buena Vista, vs J. B. Lockridge for $1502.40 with interest from the 16th day of January 1892, declared void to require each defendant named to answer fully the plaintiffs Bill, to set aside a deed from E. N. Moore to J. B. Lockridge, dated the 3rd day of December 1891 as fraudulent and for general relief, and it appearing by affidavit filed, that H. M. Lockridge, Mary J. Seebert, Mary R. Seebert, C. T. Seebert, Martha S. Seebert, The First National Bank of Buena Vista, J. P. Hawkins, J. M. Hardy and —— Hardy composing the firm of J. M. Hardy and Son, First National Bank of Buena Vista Virginia, John A. McNeil and Hugh Adams are non residents of the State of West Virginia. It is ordered they do appear here within one month after the first publication of this order and do what is necessary to protect their interest in this suit.

Witness: J. H. Patterson, Clerk of the said court, this 1st day of February, 1892.

J. H. PATTERSON, Clerk.

H. S. Rucker, p. q
Feb. 4-4w printer's fee $20.46

Notice to take Depositions.

To H. M. Lockridge, Mary R. Seebert, C. T. Seebert, Martha S. Seebert, Mary J. Seebert, The First National Bank of Buena Vista, J. P. Hawkins, J. M. Hardy and —— Hardy, composing the firm of J. M. Hardy & Son, First National Bank of Buena Vista Virginia, John A. McNeil and Hugh Adams:

Take notice, that on the 27th day of February, 1892, between the hours of 6 o'clock a. m. and 6 o'clock p. m. at the law office of Dr. Wm. P. Rucker in the town of Lewisburg Greenbrier county, West Virginia, we will proceed to take the depositions of Andrew M. McGlaughlin and others, and on the 4 day of March 1892, between the hours of 6 o'clock a. m. and 6 o'clock p. m. at the office of D. H. Rucker & Co., First National Bank building, in the town of Buena Vista, county of Rockbridge, State of Virgina we will proceed to take the depositions of George H. Rucker and others, and on the 12th day of March, 1892 between the hours of 6 o'clock a m. and 6 o'clock p. m., at the office of W. H. H. Raleigh, Corner Hopkins Place German and Liberty Streets, in the city of Baltimore, State of Maryland we will proceed to take the depositions of I Witz and others and on the 21st day of March 1892, between the hours of 6 o'clock a. m. and 6 o'clock p. m. at the law office of H. S. Rucker in the town of Huntersville, County of Pocahontas, State of West Virginia we will proceed to take the depositions of H. S. Rucker and others, all of which said depositions when taken will be offered as evidence in our behalf, in a certain suit in chancery now pending in the Circuit Court of Pocahontas County, State of West Virginia, in which we are plaintiffs and you and others are defendants.

If from any cause the taking of said Depositions or any of them shall not be commenced or completed on the day or days aforesaid, the same will be continued from day to day or from time to time, at the same places and between the same hours herein specified respectively until the same shall be begun and completed.

WITZ, BIEDLER & CO.,
By counsel.

H. S. Rucker, Sol.
Feb. 4-4 t. Printers fee $12.00.

ORDER OF PUBLICATION.

State of West Virginia,
Pocahontas County, to-wit:

Guggenheimer & Co., ... Plaintiffs,
vs. On amended and Supplemented Bill.

H. M. Lockridge, J. B. Lockridge, Ernest N. Moore Mary J Seebert, Mary R Seebert, C. T. Seebert, Martha S. Seebert, Amos Barlow, Henry Barlow, Levi Gay, O. P. Sydenstricker, Emma N. Warwick, First National Bank of Buena Vista, The Bank of Ronceverte, J. C. Loury, sr., J. C. Loury, jr., and James H. Doyle partners, doing business under firm name of Loury & Doyle, Wm. Gibson, John Wurtz, James Price, J. P. Hawkins, John Andrew Cleek, Bank of Lewisburg, Hugh Dever, J. M. Hardy and —— Hardy, partners trading under firm name of J. M. Hardy & son, First National Bank of Buena Vista Virginia, John Adam McNeil and Hugh Adams .... Defendants.

Object of amended or Supplemental bill is to convene all the judgment lienors of J. B. and H. M. Lockridge, to subject the land of said J. B. and H. M. Lockridge to sale to pay the leins thereon after first paying the claim of plaintiffs for $1196.52 with accumulated interest thereon and $7 32 costs of protest and cost of this suit—to have a decree declaring the preference shown by the defendant J. B. Lockridge, to all creditors in confessed judgments illegal; to have all creditors of said J. B. Lockridge (except the plaintiffs) paid pro rata on their debts, the amount realized from a sale of said H. M. and J. B. Lockridge's land, after first paying the debts due the plaintiffs in full and the debts of other creditors of said J. B. and H. M. Lockridge who came in and attacked the fraudulent conveyances of said J. B. and H. M. Lockridge to have the priority of the debts due the attacking creditors, declared to exist from the date of the filing of their bills, to have a certain judgment which was confessed before the Clerk of the Circuit Court of Pocahontas County, West Virginia, on the 16th day of January, 1892, in favor of The First National Bank of Buena Vista vs. J. B. Lockridge for $1502.40 with interest from the 16th day of January, 1892, declared void; to require each defendant named to answer fully the plaintiffs bill, to set aside a deed from E. N. Moore to J. B. Lockridge, dated the 3rd day of December 1891 as fraudulent and for general relief and it appearing by affidavit filed, that H. M. Lockridge, Mary J. Sebert, Mary R. Seebert, C. T. Seebert, Martha S. Seebert, The First National Bank of Buena Vista, J. P. Hawkins, J. M. Hardy and —— Hardy composing the firm of J. M. Hardy & son, First National Bank of Buena Virginia, John A. McNeil and Hugh Adams are non-residents of the State of West Virginia. It is ordered they do appear here within One month after the first publication of this order and do what is necessary to protect their interest in this suit.

Witness: J. H. Patterson, Clerk of the said Court this 1st day of February, 1892.

J. H. PATTERSON, Clerk.

H. S. Rucker p. q.
Feb. 11, 4t. Printer's fee $20.46

NOTICE TO TAKE DEPOSITIONS.

To H. M. Lockridge, Mary R. Seebert, C. T. Seebert, Martha S. Seebert, Mary J. Seebert, The First National Bank of Buena Vista, J. P. Hawkins, J. M. Hardy and —— Hardy composing the firm of J. M. Hardy and son First National Bank of Buena Vista Virginia, John A. McNeil and Hugh Adams:

Take notice that on the 27th day of February, 1892, between the hours of 6 o clock a. m. and 6 o clock p. m. at the law office of Dr. Wm. P. Rucker in the town of Lewisburg, Greenbrier County, West Virginia we will proceed to take the depositions of Andrew M. McGlaughlin and others, and on the 4th day of March, 1892, between the hours of 6 o'clock a. m. and 6 o clock p. m. at the office of D. H. Rucker & Co., First National Bank building, in the town of Buena Vista, County of Rockbridge, State of Virginia we will proceed to take the depositions of George H. Rucker and others, and on the 21st day of March, 1892, between the hours of 6 o clock a. m. and 6 o clock p. m., at the law office of H. S. Rucker in the town Huntersville, County of Pocahontas, State of West virginia, we will proceed to take the depositions of H. S. Rucker and others, all of which said depositions when taken will be offered as evidence in our behalf, in a certain suit in chancery now pending in the Circuit Court of Pocahontas County, State of West Virginia, in which we are plaintiffs and you and others are defendants.

If from any cause the taking of said Depositions or any of them shall not be commenced or completed on the day or days aforesaid, the same will be continued from day to day or from time to time, at the same places and between the same hours herein specified respectively until the same shall be begun and completed.

GUGGENHEIMER & CO.,
By counsel.

H. S. Rucker, sol.
Feb. 4 4t. Printer's fee $13.00

Pocahontas Times.

JOHN E. CAMPBELL,
EDITOR AND PROPRIETOR.

ADVERTISING RATES.

	1 m.	3 m.	6 m.	1 yr.
One inch	$ 1 00	$ 2 00	$ 3 00	$ 5 00
Three in.	2 00	4 00	6 00	10 00
Qr. column	2 00	8 00	10 00	12 00
Half col'n	5 00	12 00	20 00	30 00
One col'n	10 00	20 00	70 00	50 00

Reading notices, not exceeding five lines, twenty-five cents for each insertion, and five cents a line for each additional line.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION.

One copy, 1 yr., $1.00 in advance; after 6 months, $1.25; after 12 months, $1.50

These terms will be strictly complied with.

Entered at the Post-office at Huntersville, W. Va., as second class matter.

Huntersville, W. Va.

February 11, 1892.

BITS OF INFORMATION.

Opium smoking is absolutly prohibited in Japan.

Last year 40,000,000 artificial teeth were made in this country.

Coal is mined in thirty one out of the forty four States in the Union.

The Bellamy colony in Evaston has proved to be a complete failure.

Physicians head the list of suicides in this country for the past ten years.

Ash Wednesday this year falls on March 2 and Easter Sunday on April 17.

During the last war the Government had 800 ships of war, such as they were.

A judge in Maine has ruled that Hebrew children can play baseball on Sunday.

Some vandal has painted whiskers on the face of a marble angel in the cemetary at Albion.

To extinguish an oil fire, bran of any kind or mill feed, thrown upon it will be found to be effective.

The dolphin is the fastest swimmer in the sea, and can make more than twenty two miles an hour.

The time to try on shoes is in the latter part of the day, when the feet are at their maximum size.

A newspaper in Kansas has shown how a man "can be a gentleman" in that State on $16 a month.

There are 1,100 men employed in the Bank of England and their united salaries amount to about $1,500,000 a year.

A labor union in Haverhill Mass., has made the very unpleasant discovery that its most trusted leader is a detective.

Many persons will be surprised to learn that the United States has since its existence formally declared war but once.

Colors passing through a prism can be made to produce a sound, as might be anticipated red and green make the loudest noises.

There are said to be 18,000 newspaper women in London, who have among them twenty two press clubs and authors societies.

A bill has been introduced in the Legislator of Maryland to release Archer's sureties from the obligation they incurred by going on his bond.

A Congressman from California has introduced a bill to prohibit Chinese from entering the United States under any circumstance whatever.

During the last year 1,713 persons applied for civil service examination in Massachusetts, and of whole number only twenty-nine had ever been to college.

Perfect mutton will be firm and juicy, a darker red in color, and with a good deal of hard, clear white fat, much more in proportion to the lean than in beef.

In a recent libel suit in Detroit there was a diversity of opinion as to the verdict, ranging from six cents to $50,000.—A compromise was finally reached on $11,000.

The Indianapolis Sentinel says that the surgical institute which was burned there the other day was known to be a death trap by those who had taken pains to examine it.

Some idea of the severity of the recent drought in Maine may be obtained when it is related that a farmer in Machias was obliged to give his cattle cider to drink.

A Swiss savant is said to have made a discovery by which he reduces milk to a dry powder in such a manner that by the addition of water it at once assumes all of its natural properties.

There are now twenty-one law firms in the United States composed of husbands and wives, and there are about two hundred American women who practice law or control legal publications.

The secetary of the National Divorce Reform League reports that six States, containing more than one-fourth the population of the country, have created commissions to promote uniform legislation upon marriage and divorce.

Before and After Marriage

He settled back in his easy chair, put his feet on a foot rest, lit a cigar, and for five minutes let the smoke curl up around his head. He was a picture of comfort.

Then his wife interupted his meditations.

"George, you're getting lazy," she said.

He shook his head.

"But when we were engaged," she persisted," you were as active as any man I ever saw. Why, you were always getting up excursions, and you were the life of every party."

He puffed a little whirl of smoke and nodded his acquiesence.

"What's the matter?" she asked.

He took another puff at his cigar, and then said:

"Ever see a man try to catch a train?"

"Why, yes," she replied in surprise.

"Ever see one rush on to the station platform just as the train seemed almost gone?"

"Certainly, I have."

"Got a pretty lively move on him, didn't he?"

"Why, yes: he ran the entire length of the platform as fast as he could! But George——"

"Caught the train, did he?" asked George——"

"Yes, he just barely caught it. He——"

"But he caught it?"

"Of course, he did! But, George, you're straying——"

"Did he keep right on running?" interupted George.

"Certainly not. He settled down in a seat and made himself as comfortable as possible; got a palm leaf fan, and five minutes later seemed perfectly contented and happy."

"Well?"

"Well, what of it?"

"Do you expect me to keep on running?"

SPECIAL ANNOUNCEMENT.

We have made arrangements with Dr. B J. Kendall Co., publishers of "A Treatise on the Horse and his Diseases," which will enable all subscribers to obtain a copy of that valuable work free by sending their address (enclosing a two-cent stamp for mailing same) to the B. J. KENDALL CO., ENOSBURGH FALLS, VT. This book is now recognized as standard authority upon all diseases of the horse, as its phenomenal sale attests, over four million copies having been sold in the past ten years, a sale never before reached by any publication in the same period of time. We feel confident that our patrons will appreciate the work, and be glad to avail themselves of this opportunity of obtaining a valuable book.

It is necessary that you mention this paper in sending for the "Treatise." This offer will remain open for only a short time.

The readers of THE TIMES are referred to the following persons who have the ALLEGER ORGANS:

Annie Mollohan, Replete, W. Va.

S. W. Ott, Charlestown, W. Va.

Jacob Lively, Roseville, W. Va,

W. H. Swiger, Malta, W. Va.

J. W. Heavener, Petersburg, W. Va,

Tinta Craig, Glen Elk, W. Va.

—If you want Letter and Note heads, neatly printed and put up in tablet form, cheaper than you can get them anywhere else, call at THE TIMES office. We also do all kinds of nice job printing, and have on hands a nice line of Stationary, business cards, &c. &c.

POCAHONTAS TIMES.

Vol. 9. JOHN E. CAMPBELL, EDITOR AND PROPRIETOR. Huntersville, West Virginia, Thursday, February 18, 1892. Terms of Subscription, $1.00 PER YEAR, IN ADVANCE. No. 31

Official Directory of Pocahontas County

Judge of Circuit Court,	A. N. Campbell.
Prosecuting Attorney,	L. M. McClintic.
Sheriff,	J. C. Arbogast.
Deputy Sheriff,	Geo. W. Callison.
Clk Co. Court,	S. L. Brown.
Clk Cir. Court,	J. H. Patterson.
Assessor,	C. O. Arbogast.
Com'rs Co. Ct.	C. E. Beard. S. B. Hannah. G. M. Kee.
Co. Surveyor,	Geo. Baxter

THE COURTS.

Circuit Court convenes on the first Tuesday in April, 3rd Tuesday in June and 3rd Tuesday in October.

County Court convenes on the 1st Tuesday in January, March, October and second Tuesday in July. July is levy term.

THE ARIZONA KICKER.

The exchange editor of the New York World has extracted a number of very interesting paragraphs from a late issue of the Arizona Kicker, and of these we give the following:

WE MEAN BUSINESS.—Our contemporary came out last week week and laid claim to a bona fide circulation of 3,6000 copies. We are willing that he shall do a reasonable amount of lying, but such stupendous falsifying must cease.

"We'll bet $100 to $50 he hasn't got 1,000 circulation.

We'll bet $100 to $25 that he hasn't got 500.

We'll bet $100 to a cent that his actual circulation, counting in all deadheads, is not over 350.

Further, we'll give him our check for $100 if he dares to take advantage of any of the above opportunities to make more money than he has seen for twenty years before.

OF COURSE.—A Massachusetts subscriber to the Kicker writes to ask if there are any churches in this locality. Does he imagine us to belong to the Cannibal Islands? Of course there are! That is, there is one around somewhere, and we've heard talk of another. If the writer had read his copy of the Kicker as closely as he ought he would have remembered the case where Shorty Pete sat on the church steps and put a bullet through Hank Jackson's nose thirty yards away. Churches! We should smile! Services have not been held very regularly since the old man Davis got drunk and spent one whole night breaking out the windows, but the boys are liable to catch a preacher most any day and put him at work.

A CANARD.—The story afloat on the streets yesterdap to the effect that we had finally killed Mr. Wanamaker's postmaster in this town must have been started to affect prices on the mule market. There was not the least bit of truth in it. There isn't the slightest excuse for his living, but we suppose he will continue to do so in order to spite the 60,000,000 inhabitants of the United States. We can't see any other object.

While on this subject it may be well for us to remark that we shall visit the postmaster to-morrow to inquire why in Texas it takes four days for a copy of the Kicker to get down the road twelve miles. He'll fly mad, as usual, and will quite likely attempt to draw his gun on us. If he does we shall very likely decide to kill him and have done with it. Everybody says we have delayed the matter altogether too long for the good of the Postoffice Department.

NO STOP.—We understand that Col. Smiley who has been down on the Kicker ever since we showed that the capital and assets of "The Great Arizona Land Company" consisted solely of two acres of sand and a pair of long-legged boots, spent more than two hours the other day trying to get Jim Taylor to stop his subscription to this paper. The object was to make us feel bad, but it didn't work. Jim not only dotes on the Kicker, but can't hardly wait for publication day to come around. Besides, he tried it on us last summer, and how did he come out? It took us half a day to find him, but after he was found it didn't take him two minutes to subscribe again. We don't compel a man to subscribe, but after he's become a subscriber he has got to have mighty good reasons for throwing up his hand. Indeed, he's got to own a mule which can out run ours.

RETRACTION.—The policy of the Kicker since the first issue has been to state things fairly and truthfully, and whenever we have discovered that a published item has done any one injustice we have not been slow to follow it with an explanation perfectly satisfactory to the party aggrieved. Last week we had a local item to the effect that some miserable wretch had robbed Maj. Smith's clothes line of four shirts, and we indulged in the hope that he would speedily be caught and given a dance on the head of a barrel.

It seems that we were mistaken, and the Major feels that he has been placed in a false position to the public. The fact is as he wishes us to state, he does not own four shirts, but only two, and neither of these is a white one. They are old blue flannel shirts, much the worse for wear. What was really stolen wos a Navajo blanket, and we are glad to make this retraction and set the Major right before this community.

OUR CHRISTMAS ISSUE.—No newspaper published within 300 miles of this town has ever attempted the feat of getting out a special Christmas issue. The Kicker has produced something worthy of its large and respectable clientage. It was a sixteen-page paper profusely illustrated, and among the good things it contained we may enumerate.

A sketch giving particulars of the last twelve murders in Arizona. Very blooded article.

An article describing how Indians scalp their victims. It will make your hair stand on end to read it.

A two-column sketch entitled "Men I Have Shot." Gives names of a score of men and relates full particulars of the death of each. The reader will instinctively reach around for his gun as he purses this truthful sketch.

A very racy and entertaining sketch, entitled, "Fourteen Cases of Lynch Law." This is by a man who always furnished the barrels for the victim to stand on, and he knows whereof he writes. You can feel the barrel wobble as you read.

Another special feature was an illustrated sketch entitled, "The Stages I Have Held Up." This by a genuine road agent, who experienced religion, quit the buisness and is now sticking type in this office. We hadn't read the article half through when we handed the author our watch and wallet and held up our hands.

"What!" exclaimed a Texas justice to a colored culprit, "have you the audacity to say you do not recognize this pocketbook?"

"Yes, sah."

"But it was found in your possession."

"In my what did yer say, jedge?"

"In your posession. This pocketbook was found in your pocket, sir."

"Jedge, you has done tole two stories about dat ar'. Fust, yer said hit was foun' in my posession, and den yer 'lowed hit was foun' in my pocket. Bofe dem yarns can't be true. Ef de jedges on de bench can't tell de troof' hit's no wonder dat a poor miserable niggah like me am led astay."

The justice drew a long breath, and once more producing the pocketbook said:

"You denied just now that you had ever seen this pocketbook. I now ask you again if you ever seen this pocketbook before?"

"Why, of course. Hit am de same one you showed me a minute ago. Yer must be losin' yer mind, jedge."

Remanded to jail without bail!

MARRYING AN OLDER WOMAN

Whenever a young man marries a woman older than himself all the gossips in the community begin to cackle. Worshipers crane their necks when he comes into church, and he is stared out of countenance in the theater. His friends congratulate him in the usual way, but look at him as though he were a freak. Were it not for such ordeals as these the thing would happen oftener than it does.

A Morgantown young man wants to know what the chief objections are to a man marrying a woman older than himself.

Aside from the notoriety it gives a man there are some rather forcible objections. A woman matures earlier than a man reaches the prime of life earlier and becomes old earlier. The difference is from five to ten years although some fix it at from three to seven. However it depends very largely on the individual.

There would be no sense of fitness in a man of twenty marrying a woman of twenty five nor would it be proper for a man of twenty to marry a girl of fifteen. The average marrying age of men is from twenty five to thirty and of women from twenty to twenty five. These are generally regarded as about the best ages at which to take such an important step.

Some men are to all intents and purposes, older at thirty than others are at forty. Such men may therefore marry women of their own age or even older without being outclassed. Prematurety old or apparently old men may marry really old women, and young looking or young blooded men may marry really young women with comparative safety. It is better however, to allow the woman a few years margin, because she will probably age faster than the man.

A CHANGE TO GADS.

The old man had gone out to feed my mule, and as I sat talking to the wife two or three of the children came hanging around her. The youngest, a boy of three was trying to climb up on her lap when she reached out for a book on the stand and used it to give him a resounding box on the ear. He ran away bowling, and she began telling how troublesome children were I replied:

"Haven't you ever heard, ma'am that boxing on the eats may cause deafness?"

"La! no! she replied. "Does, any one really say so?"

"All surgeons say so, and there is no doubt of it."

"Is it possible! Excuse me a minute."

She went to the back door and called "Henry—oh, Henry!" to her husband, and ween he came in she said:

"I've found out all about it from the stranger.

"What?"

"Why, the reason that every one of our seven young 'uns are gittin deaf as adders."

"What's the cause?"

"It's our beatin 'em on the ears with that pesky hymn book so often! We've got to quit it, and do you go over in the lot the first thing and cut me a big bundle of gads to use on 'em the rest of the week!"

MR CLEVELAND TO THE RESCUE.

A lawyer in this city relates a pleasant incident, in which the most conspicuous figure is the eminent gentleman whom President Harrison succeeded. The lawyer was the attorney for a well known periodical, which counted among its subscribers a little New Jersey girl who allowed her subscription to remain so long unpaid that the legal gentleman was compelled to send her a "reminder."

With an assurance worthy of a person five times her age, the child sat down and wrote a pleading letter to Mr. Cleveland. She commenced by saying that she was in such great trouble that she needed the President's assistance. She had heard, she continued, that the President was very kind and very rich. Would he be so good as to help a poor little girl who wanted his help very much? As an explanation of her misfortune, she enclosed the statement of her account that had been sent to her.

The lawyer was greatly surprised not very many days after, to find awaiting him in his office a letter postmarked "Washington," and bearing the stamp of the White House. It was written in Mr. Cleveland's own hand, and contained a check more than sufficient to relieve the necessity of the "trembling little debtor," as the distinguished writer characterized her. The balance Mr. Cleveland suggested, might be applied to her future subscription or be given directly to her.—Boston Herald.

DIDN'T KNOW KITTY WAS MARRIED.

Ethel is seven years of age, and lives in an aristocratic Boston suburb. Betty is the family cat, and when she becomes the proud mother of four or five little puff balls, they usually first see the light in the stable.

The last litter appeared not long ago and Betty found a very comfortable place for them in the family sleigh. They made such a pretty sight that Ethel was taken out by her aunt to look at them.

"Oh, the pretty kittens," she cried. "Whose are they?"

"Why," remarked Aunt Emma, "those are Betty's new babies."

"Oh, auntie, that can't be," said the seven-year-old, with wondering surprise in her bright blue eyes. "Don't you know that Betty isn't married?"—Boston Herald.

Little Nell—I caught sister Maud engaging herself to another young man last night, an' she hasn't sent the first one off yet.

Little Kittie—Ain't that nice! Did you tell on her?

"No; she buyed me off."

"What did she do?"

"She said if I'd keep quiet she'd give me one of 'em as soon as I got a little bigger.

Pocahontas Times.

JOHN E. CAMPBELL,
EDITOR AND PROPRIETOR.

ADVERTISING RATES.

	1 m.	3 m.	6 m.	1 yr.
One inch	$ 1 00	$ 2 50	$ 3 00	$ 5 00
Three in.	2 50	4 00	6 00	10 00
Qr. column	3 00	6 00	10 00	17 00
Half col'n	6 00	12 00	20 00	30 00
One col'n	10 00	20 00	30 00	50 00

Reading notices, not exceeding five lines, twenty-five cents for each insertion, and five cents a line for each additional line.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION.

One copy, 1 yr., $1.00 in advance; after 6 months, $1.25; after 12 months, $1.50

These terms will be strictly complied with.

Entered at the Post-office at Huntersville, W. Va., as second class matter.

Huntersville, W. Va.

February 18, 1892.

NEWS FROM WASHINGTON.

LATE MATTERS OF INTEREST PERTAINING TO OUR GOVERNMENT.

[Reported for THE TIMES by our regular correspondent.]

WASHINGTON, Feb. 12th.—Mr. Harrison is far from being as happy as he expected to be after Mr. Blaine's letter was published, if those who profess to be his friends know the state of his mind. He expected that Mr. Blaine would take occasion in that letter to advocate the nomination of Benj. H., or at least to say a good word for him in some way, and he has got it into his head that Mr. Blaine by ignoring him intended to slight him—he is very touchy about the dignity he appears to think surrounds his person like a halo. Another thing that he doesn't like is the freedom with which Senators, Representatives, and other prominent men of his party have announced their preference for some other candidate than himself. He fears that Mr. Blaine intends to throw his influence to that mysterious "some other candidate," and he is mighty sorry that there was no truth in the rumor prevalent a day or two ago that Mr. Blaine intended resigning and going to Bermuda to remain until after the meeting of the republican convention. Nothing would suit him better just now than for Mr. Blaine to leave the country for a few months but he does not dare to ask for his resignation.

The democrats of the House have taken the first step toward turning the light on in the dark places by the adoption of resolutions authorizing investigations of the World's Fair, the crooked National bank failures at Philadelphia, and most important of all, the Pension office. The resolution under which the last investigation is to be made was reported by the Committee on Rules as a substitute for those offered by Representatives Enloe and Cooper. It provides for the appointment of a select committee of five to investigate the methods of business, whether use has been made by the Commissioner of his official position to promote his private affairs or for partisan political purposes, whether there has been discrimination made between applicants for pensions or practicing attorneys, whether any of the clerks have taken advantage of their positions to make profits, and whether the civil service law has been violated by the Commissioner. On motion of Mr. Enloe the resolution was amended to include the methods of the board of pension appeals. This is a big job, but many are wondering why the resolution did not include the charges which have been repeatedly made by responsible parties of fraudulent pensioners whose names are carried upon the rolls. Perhaps, however, the committee may be able to reach that under the "methods of business" authorization.

Vice President Morton appears to be learning the ropes. A nephew of his, W. M. Grinnell, has been nominated for the vacant Third Assistant Secretaryship of State.

The House Committee on Rivers and Harbors having given a number of hearings to interested parties, has now buckled down to hard work of preparing a river and harbor appropriation bill that shall be just without being extravagant. The bill will not probably appropriate more than half, if so much, as the one passed at the last Congress, but it is the aim of the committee to provide all the money for necessary improvements that can be advantageously expended during the next fiscal year.

The House committee on Immigration does not agree with the Senate committee on Foreign Affairs, that a continuation of the present anti-Chinese laws, which expire by limitation this Spring, for another period of ten years, is the best thing to be done, so it has favorably reported a bill to the House which absolutely prohibit Chinese immigration.

The much talked of free coinage bill has been favorably reported to the House from the Coinage committee. Opinion differs as to whether it will be acted upon at this session. There is no doubt a very large majority of the House being in favor of the free coinage of silver, but there are many prominent democrats, like Mr. Mills, who do not think it expedient to pass it when nothing can be gained as is certain, even if it could get through the Senate, the finance committee of which has this week reported adversely on a free coinage bill, that it would be vetoed. There are other democrats, like Mr. Bland, who think it the duty of the House to pass the bill.

There are lots of rumors of a rumpus between Mr. Harrison and Secretary Tracy over the enormous financial obligations incurred by the latter in preparing for the war "that never came". Wanamaker is also said to be in hot water although he denies it.

The Canadian Commissioners are going through the farce of holding conferences at the State department, knowing that there is no reciprocity for them.

This Gong for Business.

In the office of the captain of the watch at the Treasury Department is a large gong connected with a series of wires.

That bell has never been rung save when it is tested to see if it in working order, and the offials trust that it never will be sounded.

When it does, business of the most serious kind is meant.

At some time or other some crank or cranks might get into the cash room or banking office of the treasury and by the bold use of arms attempt to make a raid.

The gong is connected with the cash-room by a number of wires, and the presure of a botton at convenient places will sound the alarm.

The watchmen have orders when that rings to drop all other work and come to to the cash room thoroughly armed and ready to deal with whatever may present itself. —[Washington Post.

Fiduciary Notice.

The accounts of the following fiduciaries are before the undersigned Commissioner of accounts for settlement, viz:

D. J. Cochran, executor of Elizabeth James, deceased.

Geo. Hill, adm'r with the will annexed of Martha Jordan dec'd.

W. H. Cackley, adm'r of L. L. Slaven dec'd.

Dr. John Ligon, executor of R. D. McCutcheon, dec'd.

M. J. McNeel, adm'r of Susan Burr, deceased.

M. J. McNeel, adm'r with the will annexed of Sarah Gum, deceased.

Given under my hand this 15th day of February 1892

J. H. PATTERSON, Com'r acc'ts.

FOR SALE.

I have for sale six full blooded Scotch Shepherd pups $2.50 and $5.00 each.

J. B. LOCKRIDGE,
Driscol, W. Va.

Fiduciary Notices.

The following fiduciary accounts are before me for settlement;

Levi Gay, ex'or of John Gay, dec'd

Levi Gay Ex'or of Margaret M. Gay.

William & Sherman Gibson, adm'rs of Samuel L. Gibson, dec'd.

L. M. McCLINTIC, Com'r acc'ts.

ORDER OF PUBLICATION.

State of West Virginia,
Pocahontas County, to-wit:

At rules held in the Clerk's office of the Circuit Court of Pocahontas County on the first Monday in February, 1892.

The Bank of Ronceverte .... Pl'ff

vs.

I. B. Moore, William Curry, J. B. Lockridge and H. M. Lockridge......Def.ts.

The object of this suit is to recover of the defendants H. M. Lockridge, J. B. Lockridge and I. B. Moore in favor of the plaintiff the amount of the sum of $687.18 due on Negotiable note made by said H. M. Lockridge and endorsed by said J. B. Lockridge and I. B. Moore and of the sum of $1.16 costs of protest of said note, with interest on said amount from 19th day of November, 1891, together with costs of this suit: and to subject to payment thereof certain lands lying in Pocahontas County in the State of West Virginia, conveyed by said I. B. Moore to the defendant William Curry, by deed dated 9th day of January, 1892 and recorded on said day in the Clerk's office of the County Court of said Pocahontas County, and it appearing by affidavit filed, that H. M. Lockridge is a non-resident of the State of West Virginia. It is ordered that he do appear here within one month after the first publication of this order and do what is necessary to protect his interest in this suit.

Witness, J. H. Patterson, Clerk of the said Court, this 1st day of February, 1892.

J. H. PATTERSON, Clerk.

J. W. Harris,
L. M. McClintic, } sols.
J. W. Arbuckle.

Feb. 4-4t. Printer's fee $11.94

Order of Publication.

State of West Virginia, } ss.
County of Pocahontas. }

To B. F. Armstrong, Benjamin Arbogast, Mrs. Jannie B. Skiles, May Bruffey, Thomas Hubbard and James Bidwell, the unknown heirs of Samuel Hogsett, John Piles, the unknown heirs of Daniel McGlaughlin, the unknown heirs of John Sharp Sr., Henry F. Smith, Michael Wilfong, the unknown heirs of Thomas Gammon and Geo. E. Craig, Jr.

You are hereby commanded in the name of the State of West Virginia to appear before C. F. Moore, a commissioner in chancery of the Circuit Court of the aforesaid county, at his office in the town of Huntersville in said county on the 20th day of Febuary 1892, to whom the matters arising on a petition filed in the said court by John W. Warwick, the Commissioner of School Lands for the aforesaid county, have been refered by a decree of the said court entered on the petition at its April Term 1891, which petition prays a sale of the lands mentioned therein for the benefit of the School Fund, and show cause, if any they can, why the said land shall not be sold for the benefit of the School Fund,

Witness: J. H. Patterson, Clerk of said Court, this 18th, day of January 1892.

J. H. PATTERSON' Clerk.

Jan. 21-4t Printer's fee $8. 14.

HOME NEWS

—Mr. Uriah Hevener, of Green Bank, was in town Tuesday.

—Mr. Thos. J. Harmon, of Staunton, Va. is in our city.

—Capt. E. A. Smith, of Dunmore, was in town Monday.

—Geo. Overholt, Esq., of Buckeye, was in our city last Saturday.

—Mr. Wilson Watts, postmaster at Union, died on the 7th inst.

—A. B. McComb, and Olgar and Herbert Fisher have the measles.

—Mr. Zane Moore, of Frost, was in town one day last week.

—Attorney C. F. Moore, of Clifton Forge, Va., is visiting his family at this place.

—The C. & O. engineers are now working between this place and Marlinton.

—The Independent says that Mr. R. M. Beard, of Locust, Pocahontas county, called to see us Tuesday.

—Harry Moore, Esq. and wife, of Dunmore, are visiting relatives in this city.

—The lumbermen are getting tired waiting for a rise in the streams, and several of them are leaving.

—Messrs. A. W. Arbogast, and Harry Johnson, of Monterey, Va., are putting tin roofs on several houses at Marlinton.

—The Louisiana State Lottery has given up the fight, and will retire from the field of cheatery when its present charter expires which is in 1894.

—B. M. Yeager, Esq., of Traveler's Repose, who has been at Marlinton for several days past, was in the city Tuesday, as was also Mr. H. A. Yeager, of Marlinton.

—Hon. Joseph S. Duckwall, Judge of the Circuit Court for the Thirteenth Circuit of West Virginia, residing at Berkley Springs, Morgan county, died suddenly on the 13th inst. at the Coster House, in Charles Town.

—We are reliably informed that Mr. B. M. Yeager, agent for the Pocahontas Development Co., has sold in the last two weeks forty one hundred dollars worth of lots at Marlinton.

—The quarterly meeting at this place last Saturday and Sunday conducted by the Presiding Elder Rev. Ferguson was a success, not withstanding the very bad weather. He preached some very excellent sermons.

—Aurore Borealis—a gorgeous illumination of the northern heavens appeared shortly after sunset on the 13th inst. It was the most wonderful exhibition of Aurora, or northern lights possibly ever seen from the American soil. It stretched over a great scope of territory, from Iowa to the Atlantic coast. It was a magnificent spectacle.

—Died—Mr. Jas. T. McNeel, son of Jonathan McNeel, Esq., at his home at Buckeye, last Wednesday, evening, and Friday following his little 2 year old daughter died, both of measles. Mr. McNeel was a young man of good standing and the picture of robust health. He leaves a wife and several small children to mourn his untimely end.

—Rochester (N. Y.) capitalists have purchased 3,000 acres of timber land in Pocahontas county, W. Va., for $34,[illegible]. The land is well timbered with cherry, birch, ash, oak, hemlock and spruce.—Staunton Spectator.

The above large body of land was bought by Mr. Sam'l B. Woods, of Charlottesville, Va., last June, at something like $5.00 per acre. Though Mr. Woods informed us himself not long since that he had sold only 2,000 acres of it, and that at $28,000 instead of $34,000 for the whole of it. They have an offer of $10,000 for the other 1,000 acres.

—Mr. Wm. A. Stuart, proprietor of the White Sulphur Springs died in Philadelphia on the 6th inst.

—The contract for the West Virginia World's fair buildings was let to Thos. J. Miller, of Parkersburg, on the 13th inst. His bid was $20,000.

—Miss Alice Mitchell, the slayor of Freda Ward, had a "gentleman correspondent" in Pittsburg, whom she had obtained by answering an advertisement for a correspondent in a matrimonial paper. She had corresponded with this unknown gentleman over Fredaa Ward's name, and had invited him to visit her. She may have deemed it important to get rid of Freda before the arrival of the Pittsburg correspondent in order to avoid a comedy of errors.

—Mr. William Lockridge, more familiary known as "Uncle Billy" Lockridge, died at his residence on the Cowpasture river, in Highland county, on the 27th of January, in the 81st year of his age. Mr. Lockridge was an estimable citizen, and was particularly noted for his great hospitality; and his death will be regretted by every one who ever enjoyed the welcome which was always tendered to those who found lodgment with him, whether friend or stranger. He was the embodiment of the sentiment expressed by the familiar phrase, "Old Virginia Hospitality," and a truer exponent of it could not be found in years of travel.

GREEN BANK BREVITIES.

W. W. Galford is dangerously ill with pneumonia.

F. K. Moore of Back Alleghany received a very bad cut on the check by E. O. Moore with an ax, last Thursday.

We are sorry to learn that C. P. Kerr had the misfortune to get his leg broken by falling off a log truck, in Davis city, some days ago.

W. A. Gladwell and E. F. Arbogast made a flying trip to McDowel, Va., last week.

Attorney F. J. Snyder was in our city last Saturday attending court before Justice Siple.

C. H.

DIED—MR. FRANCIS DEVER.

The remains of Mr. F. Dever, who died in the Insane Asylum at Weston, last Thursday, were brought to his home on Knapp's creek last Sunday, accompanied by his son, of Duluth, Min., and the last sad rites performed Monday evening.

Sometime last summer Mr. Dever showed serious symtims of insanity and was taken to the Aylum for treatment. He had almost recovered his mental faculties when not long since he was taken down with grip with the above result.

He was before he became insane a, very prominent farmer, known and highly esteemed by nearly or quite all of the people of our county.

He leaves several grown children who are handsomely provided for in a financial way, to mourn his death.

TO AID RUSSIANS.

Governor Fleming Issued a Proclamation on That Subject.

CHARLESTON, W. VA., Feb. 10.—Governor Fleming to-day issued the following proclamation to the people of the State of West Virginia.

STATE OF WEST VIRGINIA,
"EXEC. CHAMBER, CHARLESTON.

"The Russian Famine Relief Committee of the United States has brought to the attention of the Executive of this State the destitute condition of more than twenty millions of the peasants of Russia, with the information that multitudes must perish for want of food unless speedily relieved.

"The people of this State have been signally blessed with abundant harvests and general prosperity, and I recommend that they promptly respond to this appeal for aid with generous contributions.

"I further recommend that relief committees be organized in each city, and as for as possible, in every county in the State, and that such committees communicate with the Russia Famine Relief Committee of the United Staes, at No. 732 Fourteenth street, Washington, D. C.

"Done at the Capitol, in the City of Charleston, this 10th day of February, [SEAL] in the year of our Lord, one thousand eight hundred and ninety two.

A. B. FLEMING.

"By the Governor,
"WM. A. OHLEY,
"Secretary of State."

POCAHONTAS DEVELOPMENT COMPANY.

Mr. Brown M. Yeager has been appointed general agent for the Pocahontas Developement Co., at Marlinton to make sale of lots, and for the transaction of the business of the company at that point.

There are several odd lots, not included in those reserved for the drawing, which the company will sell on reasonable terms to such parties as will obligate themselves to immediately begin the construction of houses.

For further information and particulars, call on or address,

BROWN M. YEAGER,
Marlinton W. Va

ORDER OF PUBLICATION.

State of West virginia.
Pocahontas County, to-wit:

At rules held in the Clerk's office of the Circuit Court of Pocahontas County on the first Monday in February, 1892.

Samuel B Hannah .... Pl'ff
vs
Thomas D. Vanata, William N. Morrow, George O Stephens and Uriah Hevener, ... Def'ts.

The object of this suit is to recover of the defendant Thomas D Vanata, the amount of three promissary notes made by him for the sum of $384 50 each, with interest on each sum from December, 8th, 1887, payable to the defendant Uriah Heverer, who has assigned said notes to the plaintiff Samuel B. Hannah; and to subject to sale, for payment of said amount and costs of this suit, a tract of land containing 904 acres, more or less, lying on Rich Mountain in Pocahontas County, State of West Virginia, conveyed by said Uriah Hevener to said Thomas D. Vanata by deed dated the 12th day of December, 1887, retaining a vendor's lein on said land to secure payment of the amount of said several sums, which is part the purchase money agreed to be paid by said Vanata to said Hevener for said land: the said tract of land having been afterwards conveyed by said Vanata to the defendant Wm N. Morrow, and by said Morrow conveyed yet later to the defendant George O. Stevens—and it appearing by affidavit filed, that the defendant George O. Stevens, is a non-resident of the State of west Virginia; It is ordered that he do appear here within One month after the first publication of this Order and do what is necessary to protect his interest in this suit.

Witness, J. H. Patterson, Clerk of the said Court, this 1st day of February, 1892

J. H. PATTERSON, Clerk.

L. M. McClintic, p. q.
Feb. 4-4t. Printer's fee $18 75

Order of Publication.

State of West Virginia,
Pocahontas County, to-wit:

At rules held in the Clerk's Office of the Circuit Court of Pocahontas County on the first Monday in February, 1892.

Witz, Beibler & Co. Pl'ffs
vs. { On amended and Supplemental Bill.

H. M. Lockridge, J. B. Lockridge, Ernest N. Moore, Mary J. Seebert, Mary R. Seebert, C. T. Seebert, Martha S. Seebert, Amos Barlow, Henry Barlow, Levi Gay, O. P. Sydenstriker, Emma N. Warwick, First National Bank of Buena Vista, The Bank of Ronceverte, J. C. Loury, Sr., J. C. Loury, Jr., and James H. Doyle, partners, doing business under firm name of Loury & Doyle, Wm. Gibson, John Wurts, James Price, J. P. Hawkins, John Andrew Cleek, Bank of Lewisburg, Hugh Dever, J. M. Hardy and — Hardy, partners, trading under firm name of J. M. Hardy and Son, First National Bank of Buena Vista Virginia, John Adam McNeil and Hugh Adams, Def'ts.

Object of Amended or Supplemental bill is to convene all the judgment leinors of J. B. and H. M. Lockridge, to subject the land of said J. B. and H. M. Lockridge to sale to pay the leins thereon, after first paying the claim of plaintiffs for $871 26 with accumulated interest thereon and $4.61 cost of protest and cost of this suit, to have a decree declaring the preference shown by the defendant J. B. Lockridge, to all creditors in confessed judgments, illegal to have all creditors of said J. B. Lockridge (except the plaintiffs) paid pro rata on their debts, the amount realized from a sale of said H. M and J. B. Lockridge's land, after first paying the debts due the plaintiffs in full, and the debts of other creditors of said J. B. and H. M. Lockridge who came in and attacked the fraudulent conveyances of said J. B. and H. M. Lockridge, to have the priority of the debts due the attacking creditors, declared to exist from the date of the filing of their bills, to have a certain judgment which was confessed before the Clerk of the Circuit Court of Pocahontas county, West Virginia, on the 16th day of January 1892, in favor of The First National Bank of Buena Vista, vs J. B. Lockridge for $1502.40 with interest from the 16th day of January 1892, declared void to require each defendant named to answer fully the plaintiffs Bill, to set aside a deed from E. N. Moore to J. B. Lockridge, dated the 3rd day of December 1891 as fraudulent and for general relief, and it appearing by affidavit filed, that H. M. Lockridge, Mary J. Seebert, Mary R. Seebert, C. T. Seebert, Martha S. Seebert, The First National Bank of Buena Vista, J. P. Hawkins, J. M. Hardy and — Hardy composing the firm of J. M. Hardy and Son, First National Bank of Buena Vista Virginia, John A. McNeil and Hugh Adams are non-residents of the State of West Virginia. It is ordered they do appear here within one month after the first publication of this order and do what is necessary to protect their interest in this suit.

Witness: J. H. Patterson, Clerk of the said court, this 1st day of February, 1892.

J. H. PATTERSON, Clerk.

H. S. Rucker, p. q
Feb. 4-4 w printers fee $20.46

Notice to take Depositions.

To H. M. Lockridge, Mary R. Seebert, C. T. Seebert, Martha S. Seebert, Mary J. Seebert, The First National Bank of Buena Vista, J. P. Hawkins, J. M. Hardy and — Hardy, composing the firm of J. M. Hardy & Son, First National Bank of Buena Vista Virginia, John A. McNeil and Hugh Adams:

Take notice, that on the 27th day of February, 1892, between the hours of [illegible] m. and 6 o'clock p. m. at the [illegible] of Dr. Wm. P. Rucker, in [illegible] of Lewisburg Greenbrier county, West Virginia, we will proceed to take the depositions of Andrew M. McGlaughlin and others, and on the 4 day of March 1892, between the hours of 6 o'clock a. m. and 6 o'clock p. m. at the office of D. H. Rucker & Co., First National Bank building, in the town of Buena Vista, county of Rockbridge, State of Virginia we will proceed to take the depositions of George H. Rucker and others, and on the 12th day of March, 1892 between the hours of 6 o'clock a. m. and 6 o'clock p. m., at the office of W. H. H. Raleigh, Corner Hopkins Place German and Liberty Streets, in the city of Baltimore, State of Maryland we will proceed to take the depositions of I Witz and others and on the 21st day of March 1892, between the hours of 6 o'clock a. m. and 6 o'clock p. m. at the law office of H. S. Rucker in the town of Huntersville, County of Pocahontas, State of West Virginia we will proceed to take the depositions of H. S. Rucker and others, all of which said depositions when taken will be offered as evidence in our behalf, in a certain suit in chancery now pending in the Circuit Court of Pocahontas County, State of West Virginia, in which we are plaintiffs and you and others are defendants.

If from any cause the taking of said Depositions or any of them shall not be commenced or completed on the day or days aforesaid, the same will be continued from day to day or from time to time, at the same places and between the same hours herein specified respectively until the same shall be begun and completed.

WITZ, BIEBLER & CO.
By counsel.

H. S. Rucker, Sol.
Feb. 4-4 t. Printers fee $12.40.

PATENTS.

Caveats, and Trade-Marks obtained and all Patent business conducted for Moderate Fees.

Our office is Opposite U. S. Patent Office and we can secure patent in less time than those remote from Washington.

Send model, drawing or photo., with description. We advise if patentable or not, free of charge. Our fee not due till patent is secured.

A Pamphlet, "How to Obtain patents," with names of actual clients in your State, county, or town,

Address,
C. A. [illegible]W, & Co.
Washingston, D. C.

ORDER OF PUBLICATION.

State of West Virginia,
Pocahontas County, to-wit:

Guggenheimer & Co., ... Plaintiffs,
vs. { On amended and Supplemented Bill.

H. M. Lockridge, J. B. Lockridge, Ernest N. Moore, Mary J Seebert, Mary R. Seebert, C. T. Seebert, Martha S. Seebert, Amos Barlow, Henry Barlow, Levi Gay, O. P. Sydenstricker, Emma N. Warwick, First National Bank of Buena Vista, The Bank of Ronceverte, J. C. Loury, sr., J. C. Loury, jr., and James H. Doyle partners, doing business under firm name of Loury & Doyle, Wm. Gibson, John Wurts, James Price J. P. Hawkins, John Andrew Cleek, Bank of Lewisburg, Hugh Dever, J. M. Hardy and — Hardy, partners trading under firm name of J. M. Hardy & son, First National Bank of Buena Vista Virginia, John Adam McNeil and Hugh Adams .... Defendants,

Object of amended or Supplemental bill is to convene all the judgment lienors of J. B. and H. M. Lockridge, to subject the land of said J. B. and H. M. Lockridge to sale to pay the leins thereon after first paying the claim of plaintiffs for $1196.32 with accumulated interest thereon and $7 32 costs of protest and cost of this suit—to have a decree declaring the preference shown by the defendant J. B. Lockridge, to all creditors in confessed judgments illegal; to have all creditors of said J. B. Lockridge (except the plaintiff s) paid pro rata on their debts, the amount realized from a sale of said H. M. and J. B. Lockridge's land, after first paying the debts due the plaintiff s in full and the debts of other creditors of said J. B. and H. M. Lockridge who came in and attacked the fraudulent conveyances of said J. B. and H. M. Lockridge to have the priority of the debts due the attacking creditors, declared to exist from the date of the filing of their bills, to have a certain judgment which was confessed before the Clerk of the Circuit Court of Pocahontas County, West Virginia, on the 16th day of January, 1892, in favor of The First National bank of Buena Vista vs. J. B. Lockridge for $1502.40 with interest from the 10th day of January, 1892, declared void; to require each defendant named to answer fully the plaintiffs bill, to set aside a deed from E. N. Moore to J. B. Lockridge, dated the 3rd day of December 1891 as fraudulent and for general relief and it appearing by affidavit filed, that H. M. Lockridge, Mary J. Sebert, Mary R. Seebert, C. T. Seebert, Martha S. Seebert, The First National bank of Buena Vista, J. P. Hawkins, J. M. Hardy and — Hardy composing the firm of J. M. Hardy & son, First National bank of Buena Virginia, John A. McNeil and Hugh Adams are nonresidents of the State of West Virginia. It is ordered they do appear here within One month after the first publication of this order and do what is necessary to protect their interest in this suit.

Witness: J. H. Patterson, Clerk of the said Court this 1st day of February, 1892.

J. H. PATTERSON, Clerk.

H. S. Rucker p. q.
Feb. 11, 4t. Printer's fee $20.46

NOTICE TO TAKE DEPOSITIONS.

To H. M Lockridge, Mary R. Seebert, C. T. Seebert, Martha S. Seebert, Mary J. Seebert, The First National Bank of Buena Vista, J. P. Hawkins, J. M. Hardy and — Hardy composing the firm of J. M. Hardy and son First National Bank of Buena Vista Virginia, John A. McNeil and Hugh Adams:

Take notice that on the 27th day of February, 1892, between the hours of 6 o'clock a. m. and 6 o'clock p. m. at the law office of Dr. Wm. P. Rucker in the town of Lewisburg, Greenbrier County, West Virginia we will proceed to take the depositions of Andrew M. McGlaughlin and others, and on the [illegible] day of March, 1892, between the hours of 6 o'clock a. m. and 6 o'clock p. m. at the office of D. H. Rucker & Co., First National Bank building, in the town of Buena Vista, County of Rockbridge, State of Virginia we will proceed to take the depositions of George H. Rucker and others, and on the 21st day of March, 1892, between the hours of 6 o'clock a. m. and 6 o'clock p. m., at the law office of H. S. Rucker in the town Huntersville, County of Pocahontas, State of West Virginia, we will proceed to take the depositions of H. S. Rucker and others, all of which said depositions when taken will be offered as evidence in our behalf, in a certain suit in chancery now pending in the Circuit Court of Pocahontas County, State of West Virginia, in which we are plaintiffs and you and others are defendants.

If from any cause the taking [illegible] Depositions or any of them [illegible] commenced or complet[illegible] days aforesaid, the [illegible] from day [illegible] time, at the [illegible] [illegible] complete[illegible]

H. S. Ruc[illegible]
Feb. 4 4t

Pocahontas Times.

JOHN E. CAMPBELL,
EDITOR AND PROPRIETOR.

ADVERTISING RATES.

	1 m.	3 m.	6 m.	1 yr.
One inch	$ 1 00	$ 2 00	$ 3 00	$ 5 00
Three in.	2 00	4 00	6 00	10 00
Qr. column	3 00	6 00	10 00	17 00
Half col'n	6 00	12 00	20 00	30 00
One col'n	10 00	20 00	30 00	50 00

Reading notices, not exceeding five lines, twenty-five cents for each insertion, and five cents a line for each additional line.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION.

One copy, 1 yr., $1.00 in advance; after 6 months, $1.25; after 12 months, $1.50.

These terms will be strictly complied with.

Entered at the Post-office at Huntersville, W. Va., as second class matter.

Huntersville, W. Va.

February 18, 1892.

DIDN'T KNOW THE "IDIOMS."

After an hour's talk the editor said that he would board me and give me $5 in cash for the week, and if I suited and seemed to fill the place we would make some arrangement for the future. The first thing I brought in and wrote up was an article headed: "A Close Call—Attempt to Shoot the Postmaster." I handed the copy to the editor, and he read about half a page and threw it into the waste-basket.

"I was afraid of that," he observed, as he turned to me. "You see, a stranger cannot know the idioms of a town."

"I fail to see any idiom about that," I replied. "It's a clear case of attempted murder."

"Great mistake my boy, great mistake. The man who did the shooting is my brother-in-law, who owns half this office. Considerable idiom about that, I should say! Besides, any citizen is liable to shoot at the postmaster any day. It's a sort of privilege we enjoy."

I went out and skirmished around again, and had the good luck to drop into a saloon just as a row started. One man was stabbed and two more had their heads broken. I made about a quarter of a column of this affair and handed in my copy.

"Um! Row down at the Bald Eagle saloon, eh?" muttered the editor. "Sam Andrews stabs a man?"

"Yes, sir."

"And Tom Keni and Joe Sharp are badly hurt?"

"Yes, sir."

"It's no good," he said, as he tossed the copy aside. "I owe Sam $100 borrowed money, and Tom and Joe are regular subscribers. Besides that, haven't we got a half column ad of the Bald Eagle on the second page? That's another idiom, my boy. I was afraid you would make a failure of it."

I was down at the heel, and I wanted that place bad. I went out and wandered around again, and was on the hotel steps when the stage came in bringing the dead body of a man named Pete Burbank. He had tried to hold up the outfit and had been shot by one of the passengers. I was writing this up under three display heads when the editor came in and asked:

"Well, what have you got hold of now?"

"Big thing. Road agent tries to hold up the Roseville stage and is shot dead. Body just been brought in."

"Get his name?"

"Yes: it's Pete Burbank."

"Can't touch that item," he said, as he shook his head in a solemn manner. "Pete's a brother of our Mayor, and the Mayor has a mortgage on this office. He'd foreclose on me quicker'n wink. As I told you before, every town has its own individual idioms, and a stranger is quite apt to walk on somebody's feelings. How are you on politics?"

"Pretty fair."

"Well, you might write me something on the Mexican question."

That evening I handed him in half a column on "the situation." There was just then a bitter feeling along the border, owing to the raids of Mexican cattle thieves, and I flattered myself that I had touched things up in good style.

"Sorry, my boy—very sorry," said the old man, as he looked over the copy. "You say here that these raids must cease or Texas will rise in arms?"

"Yes."

"And war may ensue?"

"Yes."

"And you advise Texans to demand satisfaction at the point of the bayonet?"

"Of course."

"It won't do," he said, as he dropped the copy into the waste-basket. "The only bank we have in town is owned by a Mexican, and I've got to borrow $10 of him to get the next bundle of paper. If I printed this article he'd shut down on me and bust the concern. You see every town has its idioms."

"Is there anything in the town which hasn't an idiom attached?"

"Well, yes; but being a stranger you probably couldn't find it. Sorry for you, and I'd like to give you a 'sit' for a week or two, but you see how it is. I expect Col. Joe King in to-morrow with his mule train, and if you'd like me to speak a good word for you——"

"But I'd probably find another idiom in that," I interrupted.

"That's so, you might. Come to think of it, Col. Joe King has killed five men, and he lives with four squaw wives; and you'd probably be just durned idiot enough to ask him why he didn't git religion and change his ways.—Chicago Journal.

What shall it profit a man if he gain the whole world and lose his appetite?

SPECIAL ANNOUNCEMENT.

We have made arrangements with Dr. B. J. Kendall Co., publishers of "A Treatise on the Horse and his Diseases," which will enable all subscribers to obtain a copy of that valuable work free by sending their address (enclosing a two-cent stamp for mailing same) to Dr. B. J. Kendall Co., Enosburgh Falls, Vt. This book is now recognized as standard authority upon all diseases of the horse, as its phenomenal sale attests, over four million copies having been sold in the past ten years, a sale never before reached by any publication in the same period of time. We feel confident that our patrons will appreciate the work, and be glad to avail themselves of this opportunity of obtaining a valuable book.

It is necessary that you mention this paper in sending for the "Treatise." This offer will remain open for only a short time.

The readers of THE TIMES are refered to the following persons who have the ALLEGER ORGANS:

Annie Mollohan, Replete, W. Va.

S. W. Ott, Charlestown, W. Va.

Jacob Lively, Roseville, W. Va.

W. H. Swiger, Malta, W. Va.

J. W. Heavener, Petersburg, W. Va.

Tinta Craig, Glen Elk, W. Va.

—If you want Letter and Note heads, neatly printed and put up in tablet form, cheaper than you can get them anywhere else, call at THE TIMES office. We also do all kinds of nice job printing, and have on hands a nice line of Stationary, business cards, &c. &c.

CONSUMPTION CURED.

An old physician, retired from practice, having had placed in his hands by an East India missionary the formula of a simple vegetable remedy for the speedy and permanent cure of Consumption, Bronchitis, Catarrh, Asthma and all throat and Lung Affections, also a positive and radical cure for Nervous Debility and all Nervous Complaints, after having tested its wonderful curative powers in thousands of cases, has felt it his duty to make it known to his suffering fellows. Actuated by this motive and a desire to relieve human suffering, I will send free of charge, to all who desire it, this recipe, in German, French or English, with full directions for preparing and using. Sent by mail by addressing with stamp, naming this paper. W. A. NOYES, 820 Powers' Block, Rochester, N. Y.

POCAHONTAS TIMES.

Vol. 9. JOHN E. CAMPBELL, EDITOR AND PROPRIETOR. Huntersville, West Virginia, Thursday, February 25, 1892. Terms of Subscription. $1.00 PER YEAR IN ADVANCE. No. 32

Official Directory of Pocahontas County

Judge of Circuit Court,	A. N. Campbell.
Prosecuting Attorney,	L. M. McClintic.
Sheriff,	J. C. Arbogast.
Deputy Sheriff,	Geo. W. Callison.
Cl'k Co. Court,	S. L. Brown.
Cl'k Cir. Court,	J. H. Patterson.
Assessor,	C. O. Arbogast.
Com'rs Co. Ct.	C. E. Beard. S. B. Hannah. G. M. Kee.
Co. Surveyor,	Geo. Baxter

THE COURTS.

Circuit Court convenes on the first Tuesday in April, 3rd Tuesday in June and 3rd Tuesday in October.

County Court convenes on the 1st Tuesday in January, March, October and second Tuesday in July. July is levy term.

Her Test of Love.

[Translated from French.]

The salon was lighted by a single lamp which shed a soft radiance throughout the room. It was simply furnished, but was adorned with a profusion of flowers and plants. Three persons were in the salon—Mme. de Balny, Gisele, her daughter and the latter's betrothed, Robert de Gillis, who was soon to be her husband.

Gisele, who was in her eighteenth year, was very beautiful. She was a natural blonde. Her smile had the double advantage of showing pretty teeth and two charming little dimples in her rosy cheeks. Her eyes were very handsome, but their glance was somewhat imperious. She was dressed in a robe of soft, white, clinging material, that set off to advantage her girlish beauty.

Gisele was an only daughter. She had been reared by an indulgent mother, her father having died during her infancy. Although Mme. de Balny's income was barely sufficient to support herself and her daughter, she managed to gratify Gisele's every whim, and her whims were many, for she was a child of caprice.

Many admirers paid suit to Gisele, but she smiled on none until Robert de Gillis threw himself and his fortune at her feet.

In Robert, Gisele found her supreme triumph, for his unselfish devotion he gave her the greatest satisfaction a woman can have—to be loved for her beauty, which was Gisele's only dower. Robert had every qualification to be desired in a lover. He was twenty-five years old, handsome, manly and very wealthy.

While Mme. de Balny was working at her embroidery and Robert and Gisele were holding a tender conversation, the door of the salon was opened and George Langle was announced.

"Good evening, my dear madame," said the new comer, as he entered, bowing to the mistress of the house.

"Ah, good evening, my dear Langle," said Mmme. de Balny, welcoming the guest. "This is, indeed, an agreeable surprise."

When the others had welcomed him, turning to Robert, Langle said:

"I knew that I would find you here, and that is why I called so late, wishing to have you present to second a proposition which I desire to make to these ladies."

"Ah! tell us. What is it?" exclaimed Gisele.

"My mother's cottage at St. Cloud has just been put in order for the summer," replied Langle. "We are going to drive there to morrow morning, and she desires that you will accompany us. We shall leave Paris in good season so as to avoid the heat of the day. Breakfast will await us on our arrival. We will spend the warm part of the day swinging in our hammocks and gossipping under the elms.

"We will dine at Fresco, and then, if Mlle. Gisele approves of the plan, we will attend the fete of St. Cloud, at which, among other attractions, will be the great lion tamer, the illustrious Bidel, with his menagerie. That is the proposition I have to offer."

"Bravo!" cried Gisele. "Your plan is charming, charming! Is it not Robert?" she added, turning to her lover.

Robert agreed with Gisele that their friend's plan was faultless, and it was adopted with enthusiasm.

Accordingly, the following day found Mme. de Balny, her daughter, and Robert at St. Cloud, as the guests of M. Langle and his mother. The day was spent in those delightful ways which people escaping from the city in the early summer finds for passing the time in the country.

Gisele, however, was all anticipation in regard to the approaching of fete, and especially in regard to the lion-tamer, Bidel, whose exploits she had heard a deal. Immediately after dinner, therefore, Gisele, Robert and Langle went to the fete, the elder ladies preferring to remain at the cottage.

They first attended Bidel's performance with his lions, which Gisele watched with the liveliest interest. As the performance grew to a close Gisele became so enthusiastic in regard to Bidel's bravery that Langle said, jokingly, that she ought to marry a liontamer.

"Such is my intention," replied Gisele, "for I am sure that Robert will will not deny the first request I have ever made of him. Will you, Robert?" she added, turning to him.

"What?" exclaimed Robert. "Do you wish me to enter the lion's cage?"

"Yes. Does that surprise you?"

"A little, I confess."

"You ought to have as much courage as a vulgar tamer of animals," said Gisele, who seemed to be put out by her lover's backwardness in bearding the lines to please her whim.

"But to do what you ask me to do would by no means be proof of courage," answered Robert. "It would be exposing myself for no purpose."

"You speak lightly of the prospect of being devoured," said Langle laughing.

Langle wished to laugh Gisele out of her caprice. Gisele, did not really, wish her lover to enter the lion's cage, but she wanted him to seem ready to do even that for her.

"Then you refuse?" she asked Robert, with an air of disdain.

Langle without giving Robert an opportunity to reply, said:

"Certainly he refuses, for the conditions, are not [illegible] for him as for Bidel, who has been long accustomed to being among wild animals and has made a careful study of their character."

"You seem to take great interest in a matter which does not concern you," said Gisele, who was vexed by Langle's opposition.

"But," replied Langle gravely, "what you ask Robert to do is very dangerous. Besides, you forget that his mother adores him and that she will never forgive you if you make him expose himself in this perilous manner."

But Gisele insisted.

"Very well," said Robert, coldly. "I will enter the cage, if Bidel will allow me to do so, as soon as the spectators have departed. I do not wish to give a public exhibition of my courage," he added, with a tinge of sarcasm in his tone.

"Ah! I knew you would consent!" exclaimed Gisele with apparent delight.

"I will arrange the matter at once," said Robert.

He went to Bidel, with whom he held a short conversation, then returned, saying:

"The lions will be fed in a few minutes, I will enter the cage then with Bidel."

By this time the spectators had departed. Robert, Langle and Gisele approached the cage. Presently the lion-tamer joined them. He told Robert that he was ready to feed the lions, and invited him into the cage.

"No, Robert, do not go," said Gisele. "I do not wish you to enter the cage, I asked you to do so only because I wanted you to seem ready to expose yourself to any danger for my sake."

"Pardon me, Gisele, for not acceding to this new caprice of yours. As to the first," replied Robert, "I have resolved to enter the cage, and I shall do so."

Robert turned away from Gisele, and a moment afterward he and the liontamer entered the cage. The lions, eight in number, moved hither and thither, obedient to the command of their master, but their large golden eyes showed their astonishment at the presence of this intruder who accompanied him.

Gisele and Langle looked on in silence and in agony. Gisele, who was very pale, was only prevented from giving voice to her anguish by the fear of aggravating her lover's peril. Her eyes, which were big with fright, were fixed on Robert. He, on the other hand was quite calm, at least, in appearance. Like Bidel, he was armed with a bar of iron and a raw-hide. He was thus doubly prepared to repel the lions if they came too near him.

Robert was in the cage about five minutes. Then he left it and regained Gisele, who, radiant with joy, her hands extended, exclaimed:

"Oh, Robert, how I admire you! how I"——

Robert took one of Gisele's hands in his, and interrupting her, said, in a calm voice:

"Do not praise my exploit so much, for the act which you applaud was performed for my own sake rather than yours. If I am brave, as now you evidently think me, I confess that I am not without fear that I shall not always be able to accede to your desires, and as it would pain me to cross so charming a woman, I renounce the honor of being your husband."

As soon as they returned to the cottage the party started for Paris. When they reached Gisele's home Robert bade her good-by with a [illegible] bow. On entering the house Gisele found the superb bouquet which she was accustomed to receive each day from Robert; it was the last. Gisele has never married.

STARVED SOULS.

Starved souls! What a long array of earth's children this thought brings up.

How many lives are never lived, but dragged out, or endured.

Some from lack of early advantages; some because heavy, deauties common drugeries, demand their time, while every fibre in their beings is strung for finer things.

Some seem to feel the fires of genius burning within.

At times these slumbering embers glow with a heat that is almost mind consuming; and still the earthen body holds the yearning soul so tight that the flames may not break through.

Some have been touched by poetic genius, some with that of music, but the poet soul cannot express itself except in tame prose, and the musical spirit must lie dormant.

What shall we say of those who have talent and could use it, if the grosser things of life did not claim their minds and strength! What an agony of soul some of these endure! The plodding one, who has never had a thought or wish for anything beyond this work, can never realize what agony!

What sorrow, uninterrupted hard working, struggling for a bare existence, brings to the man or woman, who has an artist's soul! Whose love for everything of beauty is deep, whose every heart chord vibrates to the sound of fine music; to the burning of sunset's fire to every hue, and every trembling light and shade, that they perceive in nature's fairest scenes; to the leaping of ocean waves, to everything that speaks to the artistic sense!

And sorrowful again is the one who yearns for music and its cathedral tones, who must wait for heaven and its raptures of sound to gratify the yearning! When they would delight in cultivating the art of music; when they long, with a deep longing, for a concord of sweet sounds, and must listen to the clanking of life's coarsest machinery; when they must ever let ear and voice go untrained, must be denied the exquisite bound of the heart, the deep soul-thrilling, as the well trained fingers press the yielding keys of the sympathetic piano, or the grand, swelling deep-toned organ, and bring forth sweet sounds that seem to come from and draw one near to heaven.

And still to be pitied, are those who long for knowledge; those to whom books are more than all the treasures of earth, almost more than those of the other world.

How starved is the soul that so longs to delve into books; to glean from the musty tome the secrets of past ages; to search for traces of ancient kingdoms, races and arts; to explore the wily paths of scientific research; to walk all ways that the field of books point out! And yet they must forego it all; must live on, leaving all they pine for, and devote their lives to other work.

It seems unfair; it is sad, but the stern fact remains that we must do what is at hand. Duty first always.

Is there no compensation? Not here.

But let us hope that, in the future existence, there may come to them what they have missed here.—Imogene E. Johnson in Woman's Work.

Pocahontas Times.
JOHN E. CAMPBELL,
EDITOR AND PROPRIETOR.
Huntersville. W. Va.
February 25, 1892.

At Charleston, W. Va., Friday evening, while the family of Mont Barton were at Supper, an infant child choked to death by having food lodged in its throat. The mother became wild with grief and ran to the river, where she jumped in, but, fortunately, she was rescued by a man who had followed her.

A terrible accident occurred at Cameron in which two beautiful young girls, daughters of William Criswell, a wealthy citizen, lost their lives, one of them while heroically trying to save the other. Essie and Georgia Criswell, aged respectively 14 and 16, were walking along the Baltimore & Ohio railroad tracks, and while attempting to cross in front of a westbound train, Essie fell when the engine was almost upon her. Georgia, seeing her sister's danger, rushed to her rescue, and was struck by the locomotive and killed. Essie was cut in two by the wheels.

The following is from yesterday's Cincinnati Commercial Gazette: "Major Joe Gaul yesterday forwarded to Charleston W. Va., a remarkable little fellow named Charles Cannon.

The boy was found on the streets Wednesday night and had not a cent of money. He gave his age as thirteen, and told the following story: Five years ago he lived happily with his father, mother and brother in New Orleans, but his mother died and his father grew restless and moved to Arazona with his little family, and there he died about a year ago. The two brothers managed to subsist for some months, but not long ago the elder died, leaving Charles to make his own way through the world. Now in Charleston lives an aunt of the boy, and he knew if once there he would have a good home, so there he proposed to go. About two months past he started on foot to make the entire distance, but when in Missouri he fell sick and was compelled to live for several weeks with some farmers. These sent him to St. Louis, where he secured transportation to this city.—Charleston Gazette.

NEWS FROM WASHINGTON.

LATE MATTERS OF INTEREST PERTAINING TO OUR GOVERNMENT.

[Reported for THE TIMES by our regular correspondent.]

WASHINGTON, Feb. 19th.—Representative Springer, chairman of the Ways and Means committee, and Representative Bland, chairman of the Coinage committee, both assured your correspondent that there was not the slightest foundation for the stories that have been recently told about these committees antagonizing each other on the floor of the House. Mr. Bland says that himself and all the rest of the free coinage democrats are just as anxious to see the bills passed putting wool, cotton ties and binding twine on the free list, which have been prepared by the Ways and Means committee, as they are to pass the free coinage bill, and that they have never had any intention of antagonizing any of them. They only ask that a time be set for the consideration of the free coinage bill, and they will at ber as complaint if the Committee on Rules decide that their bill be taken up after tariff bills are passed.

The story that Mr. Mills intended offering an entire tariff bill as a substitute for the first one of the tariff bills taken up by the House, had just as little foundation. Mr. Mills has no idea of doing anything of the kind. He favors each of the bills prepared by the Ways and Means Committee, the only difference of opinion between himself and the majority of the committee being that he would like to see the entire tariff reformed at one time, instead of going at it by piecemeals. He will heartily support each of the bills, as steps in the right direction.

Congress, or as many of its members as can spare the time from important committee work, will leave here for Chicago tonight, as guests of the World's Fair committee of that city, returning next Wednesday morning.

Representative Rayner, of Maryland, this week delivered one of the strongest speeches against trusts ever heard on the floor of the House. He reminded the republicans that neither the Interstate Commerce law nor the Sherman act passed at the last session of Congress, had prevented the continued formation of the trusts and combinations which it was their alleged purpose to eradicate; that trusts still blossomed and flourished as they accumulate in every commercial centre; that they still defied the law and the jurisdiction and mandates of the courts, and that they still, with arrogant front and bold pretensions, executed their purposes without the slightest fear of inflicted punishment or the slightest concern about any encroachment upon their prerogative. They are so powerful and influential that the legislatures of the States seem to tremble at their presence, and the Congress of the United States had stood by with folded hands and permitted them, with an iron heel, to trample upon the rights of the people.

The committee to investigate the Pension Office has had a room assigned it in the capitol building, and it will hold daily sittings of several hours until its work is completed. Representative Cooper, of Indianna, and Enloe, of Tennessee, will assume the positions of prosecutors, they being thoroughly familiar with most of the charges brought against the bureau. Chairman Wheeler, of the investigation committee, says he enters upon the investigation without prejudice, and that he will be governed entirely by the evidence presented to the committee.

The House committee on Manufactures has designated Messrs. J. D. Warner, M. D. Egan, Sherman Hoar and Ezra B. Taylor a sub committee to conduct the investigation of the "sweating system" authorized by resolution of the House. Mr. Sherman Hoar will act as secretary to the sub-committee, and he will be glad to hear from any persons desiring to aid in finding out about this business. It is expected that the first hearing before the committee will take place the latter part of next week.

The House adopted a resolution calling upon the Post Master General for information relating to contracts made under the ocean mail subsidy act. Representative Enloe is the author of the resolution, and he wishes to use the information asked for in preparing an argument in favor of his bill for the repeal of the subsidy act, which he is confident will be passed by the House.

Democratic absentees are giving the leaders of the House a great deal of trouble, and now that the serious business of the session is getting before the House the continuation of this practice will prove very embarrassing, as it enables the republicans to tie the House up at any time by refusing to vote, thus breaking up a quorum, as was done several times this week.

The Indian appropriation bill, which is $10,415,850 less than the one passed last year, which carried $9,614,850 to pay for lands purchased from various tribes, is now being considered by the House. No time has been set to close debate upon it.

ORDER OF PUBLICATION.

State of West virginia,
Pocahontas County, to-wit:
At rules held in the Clerk's office of the Circuit Court of Pocahontas County on the first Monday in February, 1892.

Samuel B Hannah .... Pl'ff
vs
Thomas D. Vanata, William N Morrow, George O Stephens and Uriah Hevener, ... Def'ts.

The object of this suit is to recover of the defendant Thomas D Vanata, the amount of three promissary notes made by him for the sum of $384 50 each, with interest on each sum from December, 8th, 1887, payable to the defendant Uriah Hevener, who has assigned said notes to the plaintiff Samuel B. Hannah; and to subject to sale, for payment of said amount and costs of this suit, a tract of land containing 904 acres, more or less, lying on Rich Mountain in Pocahontas County, State of West virginia, conveyed by said Uriah Hevener to said Thomas D. Vanata by deed dated the 12th day of December, 1887, retaining a vendor's lein on said land to secure payment of the amount of said several sums, which is part the purchase money agreed to be paid by said Vanata to said Hevener for said land: the said tract of land having been afterwards conveyed by said Vanata to the defendant Wm. N. Morrow, and by said Morrow conveyed yet later to the defendant George O. Stevens—and it appearing by affidavit filed, that the defendant George O. Stevens, is a non-resident of the State of West virginia: It is ordered that he do appear here within One month after the first publication of this Order and do what is necessary to protect his interest in this suit.

Witness, J. H Patterson, Clerk of the said Court, this 1st day of February, 1892

J. H. PATTERSON, Clerk.

L. M. McClintic, p. q
Feb. 4-4t. Printer's fee $13

Fiduciary Notices.

The accounts of the following fiduciaries are before the undersigned Commissioner of accounts for settlement, viz:

D. J. Cochran, executor of Elizabeth James, deceased.

Geo. Hill, adm'r with the will annexed of Martha Jordan dec'd.

W. H. Cackley, adm'r of L. E. Slaven dec'd.

Dr. John Ligon, executor of R. D McCutchron, dec'd.

M J. McNeel, adm'r of Susan Bugr, deceased.

M J McNeel, adm'r with the will annexed of Sarah Gum, deceased.

Given under my hand this 15th day of February 1892

J H PATTERSON, Com'r acc'ts

Fiduciary Notices.

The following fiduciary accounts are before me for settlement;

Levi Gay, ex'or of John Gay, dec'd

Levi Gay Ex'or of Margaret B. Gay.

William & Sherman Gibson, adm'rs of Samuel L. Gibson; dec'd.

L. M. McCLINTIC, Com'r acc'ts.

ORDER OF PUBLICATION.

State of West Virginia,
Pocahontas County, to-wit:
At rules held in the Clerk's office of the Circuit Court of Pocahontas County on the first Monday in February, 1892.

The Bank of Ronceverte .... Pl'ff
vs.
I. B. Moore, William Curry, J. B. Lockridge and H. M. Lockridge ...... Def'ts.

The object of this suit is to recover of the defendants H. M. Lockridge, J. B. Lockridge and I. B Moore in favor of the plaintiff the amount of the sum of $627.12 due on Negotiable note made by said H. M Lockridge and endorsed by said J. B. Lockridge and I. B. Moore and of the sum of $1.18 costs of protest of said note, with interest on said amount from 18th day of November, 1891, together with costs of this suit; and to subject to payment thereof certain lands lying in Pocahontas County in the State of West Virginia, conveyed by said I. B. Moore to the defendant William Curry, by deed dated 9th day of January, 1892 and recorded on said day in the Clerk's office of the County Court of said Pocahontas County, and it appearing by affidavit filed, that H. M. Lockridge is a non-resident of the State of West Virginia. It is ordered that he do appear here within one month after the first publication of this order and do what is necessary to protect his interest in this suit.

Witness, J. H. Patterson, Clerk of the said Court, this 1st day of February, 1892.

J. H. PATTERSON, Clerk.

J. W. Harris,
L. M. McClintic, } sols.
J. W. Arbuckle,
Feb. 4-4t. Printer's fee $11.86

HOME NEWS

—Bring us a cake of sugar.

—Mr. J. C. Price, of Clover Lick, was in to see us Monday.

—County Court convenes next Tuesday.

—Measles are fast disappearing in this place.

—J. H. Patterson, Esq., Cl'k Co. Ct. is visiting at his home at Green Bank a few days.

—Sheldon Moore, Esq., who has been on the sick list for some time is able to be out again.

—Attorney H. S. Rucker and family have gone to Lewisburg on a visit.

—Thos. Kirkpatrick, Esq., of Lewisburg, was in town over night Tuesday.

—Mr. C. L. Burner, of Green Bank was in our city the first of the week.

—J. T. Hogsett, Esq. and son Wm., of Mill Point were in town over night last Thursday.

—Mr. Joe Gay, and a young [illegible] Courtney, of near Edray, came to see us last Thursday, while on their way to Va., on business.

—Mr. M. W. Beard has located in Iowa Park, Texas, and likes the country very much, as he says in a letter of recent date we received from him.

—The Literary Societies of Hillsboro Male & Female Academy will give an Entertainment on Friday evening, the 26th inst., beginning at 7:30 o'clock, p. m. A cordial invitation is extended to the Public. Admittance Fee 15c.

—We have just received a large supply of all kinds of stationary, such as letter, bill and note heads, envelopes, [illegible] shipping tags, business and visiting cards, and a lot of fine stationary, suitable for billetdoux.

—Mrs. James G. Blaine, Jr., has been granted absolute divorce from her husband, with the custody of her child and $1,000 to pay expenses of suit, and $100 a month as permanent alimony. Jim will have to get a hustle on, more so than he has ever shown himself capable of doing in the past.

—We understand that M. D. McGlaughlin, Esq., of near this city who sold his farm last year to Mess. McGraw & Marshall contemplates purchasing a farm near Lewisburg, Greenbrier County. Mr. McGlaughlin is a good citizen, and should he decide to leave our county he will be greatly missed.

—Revs. W. H. Ballengee of Green Bank and J. A. Taylor of Dunmore, preached very interesting sermons in the Methodist church at this place Sunday, Monday and Tuesday nights. They were also calling on friends before leaving for conference, which convenes in Harrisonburg, Va., March 23rd. Rev. Mr. Ballengee has been on the Green Bank circuit for four years, and we understand that he is very much liked both as a preacher and christian gentleman. Mr Taylor is a young man having only been in the ministry about one year. He is the assistant of Mr. Ballengee.

—H. P. McGlaughlin, Esq., was riding around the hillside road below town last Thursday, when his horse fell and in attempting to get up the bank gave way, throwing him over. Fortunately he lodged against a tree, from where he was let down with ropes, a distance of about 140 feet. If he hadn't lodged against the tree he would undoubtedly have been killed. Mr. Mc. jumped off when the horse fell or it is likely that he would have been seriously hurt. The horse came out all right, with the exception of a few scratches. This has been a dangerous piece of road ever since it was made. The banks giving away and falling in make it now impassable with a wagon.

—We have been having beautiful weather the past few days.

DUNMORE DOINGS.

Tap your sugar trees and see them run.

Miss Minnie McElwee, of Driscol, who was visiting friends and relatives here for several days returned home Tuesday, accompanied by Miss Otie Cackley and Ed. Jackson, Esq.

Mr. Geo. Baxter, of Edray is surveying near here this week.

Mr. Lamon, the [illegible] maker left this week for the valley of Va.

Swecker's auction sale last week at Clover Creek was largely attended.

Solomon Herald, of Split Rock has been delivering [illegible] books in this vicinity.

Rev. John A. Taylor, preached a very fine sermon here last Saturday.

Rev. Lautenschlager will preach at Dunmore next Sunday night.

Died, Henry Friel at his home on Greenbrier river Friday night the 12th inst.

BY THE WAY.

HILLSBORO HAPPENINGS.

Plenty of measles and mud.

Miss Ada Doyle is visiting her sister, Mrs. C. J. Stulting.

Messrs Robt. and John Shrader, of Dilley's Mill, were in town Monday.

Miss Alice Clark left last Thursday to fill the position of governess in the family of Mr. Peter Cleek near Huntersville W. Va.

Miss Margaret Moore has enrolled as a pupil of the H. T. School and Miss Sola Burner of the M. & F. Academy.

Mrs. J. C. Thrasher, of Ingleside, Md. arrived here on Sunday last to see her father Capt. W. L. McNeel who has been quite ill. He is better at this writing.

Oak Grove school (Jacox, W. Va.) taught by Miss Bella Clark closed Thursday the 18th inst. This is one of the best school in the Hillsboro district, 30 pupils enrolled, average percentage of attendance for the whole term 98.

The following officers were elected for the next quarter of Sons of Temperance:

Worthy Patriarch, G. R. Curry; Worthy Associate Miss G. M. Shearer; Recording Scribe Gus Eskridge; Assistant R. S. Miss Grace Harper; Financial Scribe, R. K. Burnes; Conductor, Walter Clark; Assistant Conductor, Miss Maud Taylor; Treasurer, W. R. Wylie; Chapelain Rev. C. Sydenstricker; Past Worthy Patriarch, A. R. Smith; Inside Sentinel, Miss Carrie Burgess; Outside Sentinel, M. C. Corbin.

VIXEN.

The car stables of the Norfolk City Railroad were burned, with ninety horses. Loss about $40,000; partly insured.

A Fiend's Work.

PARKERSBURG, W. VA., February 20—Jeff Watkins, who resides near Kanawha Station was brought here this morning and jailed. Last night Watkins attempted to kill a little 4 year-old boy, a child of Watkins' second wife and her first husband.

When the neighbors found the child one eye was knocked out, the front teeth broken and its face terribly cut and bruised.

The little one's toenails had been burned off, and its toes and feet were also terribly burned. Its condition is reported [illegible].

Timber, Mineral and Coal Lands Wanted.

Messrs. Harman & Harman, of Staunton, Va., representing syndicates, desire to purchase timber, mineral and coal lands in Pocahontas [illegible] counties. [illegible] having any property of this kind for sale will call on or address them at Huntersville, W. Va., where they will remain for a short time.

Assignment of the Rarig Works at Buena Vista.

On Wednesday last the Rarig Boiler Works Co., of Buena Vista, perhaps the largest plant of its kind in the South made an assignment for the benefit of its creditors, and acknowledges the company's insolvency and its inability to longer continue business or raise money to pay its debts. The property is a very valuable one, its works occupying four block in the city of Buena Vista. Mr. J. E. Mullen, the secretary of the company, is made the assignee, and at a period not more than six months distant is to advertise and sell all the property for cash. The debts amount to $82,581.44, principally owed to parties outside of Rockbridge county. The concern went into operation about a year ago with a capitol stock of $300,000, of which the Buena Vista Company subscribed $50,000. It has had large orders, and at one time worked 160 men, but has always been in need of working capital, and to this want its present assignment is to be traced, in part and partly to the depression of business, and the failure of many of the subscribers to its stock to pay up their assessments, either of which would be sufficient to cause an assignment.

FOR SALE.

I have for sale six full blooded Scotch Shepherd pups $2.50 and $5.00 each.

J. B. LOCKRIDGE,
Driscol, W. Va.

POCAHONTAS DEVELOPMENT COMPANY.

Mr. Brown M. Yeager has been appointed general agent for the Pocahontas Developement Co., at Marlinton to make sale of lots, and for the transaction of the business of the company at that point.

There are several odd [illegible] not included in those reserved [illegible] the drawing, which the company [illegible] sell on reasonable terms to such parties as will obligate them[illegible] to immediately begin the [illegible] tion of houses. [illegible]

For further information [illegible] ticulars, call [illegible]

BRO[illegible]
Marlinton, W. Va

Order [illegible] Publication.

State of West Virginia,
Pocahontas County, to wit:

At rules held in the Clerk's office of the Circuit Court of Pocahontas County on the first Monday in February, 1892.

Witz, Beidler & Co. Pl'ffs
vs. } On amended and Supplemental Bill.

H. M. Lockridge, J. B. Lockridge, Ernest N. Moore, Mary J. Seebert, Mary R. Seebert, C. T. Seebert, Martha S. Seebert. Amos Barlow, Henry Barlow, Levi Gay. O. P. Sydenstricker, Emma N. Warwick, First National Bank of Buena Vista, The Bank of Ronceverte. J. C. Loury, Sr., J. C. Loury, Jr., and James H. Doyle, partners, doing business under firm name of Loury & Doyle, Wm. Gibson, John Wurts, James Erics, J. P. Hawkins, John Andrew Cleek, Bank of Lewisburg, Hugh Dever, J. M. Hardy and — Hardy, partners, trading under firm name of J. M. Hardy and Son, First National Bank of Buena Vista Virginia, John Adam McNeil and Hugh Adams, Def'ts.

Object of Amended or Supplemental bill is to convene all the judgment leinors of J. B. and H. M. Lockridge, to subject the land of said J. B. and H. M. Lockridge to sale to pay the leins thereon, after first paying the claim of plaintiffs for $871 26 with accumulated interest thereon and $4.61 cost of protest and cost of this suit, to have a decree declaring the preference shown by the defendant J. B. Lockridge, to all creditors in confessed judgments, illegal to have all creditors of said J. B. Lockridge (except the plaintiffs) paid pro rata on their debts, the amount realized from a sale of said H. M and J. B. Lockridge's land, after first paying the debts due the plaintiffs in full, and the debts of other creditors of said J. B. and H. M. Lockridge who came in and attacked the fraudulent conveyances of said J. B. and H. M. Lockridge, to have the priority of the debts due the attacking creditors, declared to exist from the date of the filing of their bills, to have a certain judgment which was confessed before the Clerk of the Circuit Court of Pocahontas county, West Virginia, on the 16th day of January 1892, in favor of The First National Bank of Buena Vista, vs J. B. Lockridge for $1502.40 with interest from the 16th day of January 1892, declared void to require each defendant named to answer fully the plaintiffs Bill, to set aside a deed from E. N. Moore to J. B. Lockridge, dated the 3rd day of December 1891 as fraudulent and for general relief, and it appearing by affidavit filed, that H. M. Lockridge, Mary J. Seebert, Mary R. Seebert, C. T. Seebert, Martha S. Seebert, The First National Bank of Buena Vista, J. P. Hawkins, J. M. Hardy and — Hardy composing the firm of J. M. Hardy and Son, First National Bank of Buena Vista Virginia, John A. McNeil and Hugh Adams are non-residents of the State of West Virginia. It is ordered they do appear here within one month after the first publication of this order and do what is necessary to protect their interest in this suit.

Witness: J. H. Patterson, Clerk of the said court, this 1st day of February, 1892.

J. H. PATTERSON, Clerk.

H. S. Rucker, p. q
Feb. 4-4 w printers fee $20.46

Notice to take Depositions.

To H. M. Lockridge, Mary R. Seebert, C. T. Seebert, Martha S. Seebert, Mary J. Seebert, The First National Bank of Buena Vista, J. P. Hawkins, J. M. Hardy and — Hardy, composing the firm of J. M. Hardy & Son, First National Bank of Buena Vista Virginia, John A. McNeil and Hugh Adams:

Take notice, that on the 27th day of February, 1892, between the hours of 6 o'clock a. m. and 6 o'clock p. m. at the law office of Dr. Wm. P. Rucker in the town of Lewisburg Greenbrier County, West Virginia, we will proceed to take the deposition of [illegible] M. McGlaughlin [illegible] and on the 4 day of [illegible] 1892, between the hours of [illegible] a. m. and 6 o'clock p. m. at the office of D. H. Rucker & Co., First National Bank building, in the town of Buena Vista, county of Rockbridge, State of Virgina we will proceed to take the depositions of George H. Rucker and others, and on the 12th day of March, 1892 between the hours of 6 o'clock a. m. and 6 o'clock p. m., at the office of W. [illegible] H. Bal[illegible], Corner Hopkins Place [illegible] and Liberty Streets, in the [illegible] Baltimore, State of Maryland [illegible] will proceed to take the depositions of I. Witz and others [illegible] the 21st day of March 1892, between the hours of 6 o'clock a. m. and 6 o'clock p. m. at the law office of H. S. Rucker in the town of Huntersville, County of Pocahontas, State of West Virginia we will proceed to take the depositions of H. S. Rucker and others, all of which said depositions when taken will be offered as evidence in our behalf, in a certain suit in chancery now pending in the Circuit Court of Pocahontas County, State of West Virginia, in which we are plaintiffs and you and others are defendants.

If from any cause the taking of said Depositions or any of them shall not be commenced or completed on the day or days aforesaid, the same will be continued from day to day or from time to time, at the same places and between the same hours herein specified respectively until the same shall be begun and completed.

WITZ, BIEDLER & CO.
By counsel.

H. S. Rucker, Sol.
Feb. 4-4 t Printers fee $12.00.

ORDER OF PUBLICATION.

State of West Virginia.
Pocahontas County, to-wit:

Guggenheimer & Co., ... Plaintiffs,
vs. } On amended and Supplemental Bill.

H. M. Lockridge, J. B. Lockridge, Ernest N. Moore Mary J. Seebert, Mary R. Seebert, C. T. Seebert, Martha S. Seebert, Amos Barlow, Henry Barlow, Levi Gay, O. P. Sydenstricker, Emma N. Warwick, First National Bank of Buena Vista, The Bank of Ronceverte, J. C. Loury, sr., J. C. Loury, jr., and James H. Doyle partners, doing business under firm name of Loury & Doyle, Wm. Gibson, John Wurts, James Price J. P. Hawkins, John Andrew Cleek, Bank of Lewisburg, Hugh Dever, J. M. Hardy and —— Hardy, partners trading under firm name of J. M. Hardy & son, First National Bank of Buena Vista Virginia. John Adam McNeil and Hugh Adams................Defendants.

Object of amended or Supplemental bill is to convene all the judgment lienors of J. B. and H. M. Lockridge, to subject the land of said J. B. and H. M. Lockridge to sale to pay the leins thereon after first paying the claim of plaintiffs for $1196.52 with accumulated interest thereon and $7 32 costs of protest and cost of this suit—to have a decree declaring the preference shown by the defendant J. B. Lockridge, to all creditors in confessed judgments illegal; to have all creditors of said J. B. Lockridge (except the plaintiff's) paid pro rata on their debts, the amount realized from a sale of said H. M. and J. B. Lockridge's land, after first paying the debts due the plaintiff's in full and the debts of other creditors of said J. B. and H. M. Lockridge who came in and attacked the fraudulent conveyances of said J. B. and H. M. Lockridge to have the priority of the debts due the attacking creditors, declared to exist from the date of the filing of their bills, to have a certain judgment which was confessed before the Clerk of the Circuit Court of Pocahontas County, West Virginia, on the 16th day of January, 1892, in favor of The First National bank of Buena Vista vs. J. B. Lockridge for $1502.40 with interest from the 16th day of January, 1892, declared void; to require each defendant named to answer fully the plaintiffs bill, to set aside a deed from E. N. Moore to J. B. Lockridge, dated the 3rd day of December 1891 as fraudulent and for general relief and it appearing by affidavit filed, that H. M. Lockridge, Mary J. Sebert, Mary R. Seebert, C. T. Seebert, Martha S. Seebert, The First National bank of Buena Vista, J. P. Hawkins, J. M. Hardy and —— Hardy composing the firm of J. M. Hardy & son, First National bank of Buena Virginia, John A. McNeil and Hugh Adams are nonresidents of the State of West Virginia. It is ordered they do appear here within One month after the first publication of this order and do what is necessary to protect their interest in this suit.

Witness: J. H. Patterson, Clerk of the said Court this 1st day of February, 1892.

J. H. PATTERSON, Clerk.

H. S. Rucker p. q.
Feb. 11, 4t. Printer's fee $20.40

NOTICE TO TAKE DEPOSITIONS.

To H. M. Lockridge, Mary R. Seebert, C. T. Seebert, Martha S. Seebert, Mary J. Seebert, The First National Bank of Buena Vista, J. P. Hawkins, J. M. Hardy and —— Hardy composing the firm of J. M. Hardy and son First National bank of Buena Vista Virginia, John A. McNeil and Hugh Adams:

[illegible]

GUGGENHEIMER & CO.
By counsel.

H. S. Rucker, sol.
Feb. 4 4t Printer's fee [illegible]

Pocahontas Times.

JOHN E. CAMPBELL,
EDITOR AND PROPRIETOR.

ADVERTISING RATES.

	1 m.	3 m.	6 m.	1 yr.
One inch	$ 1 00	$ 2 00	$ 3 00	$ 5 00
Three in.	2 00	4 00	6 00	10 00
Qr. column	3 00	6 00	10 00	17 00
Half col'n	6 00	12 00	20 00	30 00
One col'n	10 00	20 00	30 00	50 00

Reading notices, not exceeding five lines, twenty-five cents for each insertion, and five cents a line for each additional line.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION.

One copy, 1 yr., $1.00 in advance; after 6 months, $1.25; after 12 months, $1.50. These terms will be strictly complied with.

Entered at the Post-office at Huntersville, W. Va., as second class matter.

Huntersville, W. Va.

February 25, 1892.

BRER GARDNER ON WOMAN.

"Dis ar' letter," said Brother Gardner, as the regular meeting of the Cotton Blossom Club opened in due form, and he held out a corn colored envelope in his hand, "dis ar' letter am from de Sorosis-Society of Chicago, an' it axes dis Club to report its observashuns on de infloocence of de female sex on liberty, pollyticks, art, progress an' bizness.

Brudder Beebe, I will ax you fur your opinion as to de infloocence of de sex on de matter of liberty."

Brother Beebe had just slipped off both shoes to scratch his chill blains, but he stood up in his stockings and replied that he had of late years observed a disposition on the part of the female sex to act as they pleased, go where they pleased and carry a bundle of liberty under each arm day and night. One hundred years ago no one but a statesman weighing 180 pounds dared mention the name of "Liberty" except in a low, sweet voice. To day even the homeliest woman in the community spoke of the goddess with as much indifference as she would refer to ginger or salaratus. It was his opinion, based somewhat on the conduct of his own wife, that woman was running the liberty business into the ground, and that special laws must soon be enacted for the protection of the male sex in their inalienable rights.

"Brudder Trustee Pullback, what do you know of de infloocence of de female sex on pollyticks?" asked the president.

Broteer Pullback replied that he knew of at least a dozen wives who bossed their husband's votes, and a good many more who wanted to, and an aunt of his down in Tennessee had stabbed a tin pedler with a butcher knife because they differed on how to spell Blaine's name. Women went into politics with an excuse that they were after a few small privileges, but had almost succeeded in grabbing everything in the basket. Should he live ten years longer he would expect to see about every male office holder in this country turned out in the cold.

Brudder Penstock, has you noticed any particular infloocence of de female sex on de matter of art?" querried Brudder Gardner.

Rev. Penstock had. Such a thing as making an old brown four-gallon jug a thing of beauty and a parlor ornament would never have been thought of but for the gentler sex. A man would pass an old tomato can in the back yard a dozen times a day without a second glance. A woman would seize upon it fourthwith and transform it into a Grecian vase of exquisite beauty at a cost of only ten cents. Art had become a part of our everyday lives, and woman was responsible for it and entitled to our thanks. A decade ago a landscape painted on the headboard of a bedstead was considered something wonderful, but the influence of woman on art had been so strong that he himself, poor as he was, landscaped in seven different places, besides having the legs painted a beautiful red.

He also fully realized that art had made woman more beautiful unto derself. Give a woman homly enough to stop a clock $25 in cash and she could blossom out inside of a week something fit for the Queen's drawing-room. The Reverend closed his remarks with a peroration which drew tears to the eyes of Samuel Shin, and doubled Elder Toots' right leg back under him untill he was upset off the bench.

"Brudder Judge Chewso, has you observed any pertickler infloocence of woman on de matter of progress?" asked the President, as order was restored.

The Judge had just borrowed Colonel Kyann Johnson's plug tobacco and bitten off seven cents worth, and therefore hesitated to respond. He finally passed the quid from his mouth to his vest pocket and said he thought he had observed considerable influence. He understood on good authorrty that women had discoverd all the comets worth discovering, planned all the great bridges and tunnels, and wrested the greatest secrets from science. Her influence had been felt everywhere and in everything, from introducing the buzz saw into the mills of Maine to the cutting off the legs of farmers with the mowing machine in California. If it hadn't been for the progressive ideas of women, we should be riding on the Erie Canal when we wanted to go to Buffalo, and mutton tallow would still be in the lead as a hair oil and restorer.

In his own case, he continued after a halt to feel if the quid had worked out of his pocket, he would have been perfectly satisfied to sit around all day and pl n how to become a millionaire, but his progressive wife had driven him out to work all day long and then made him weave corn husk mats in the evening. He closed without any peroration and with his fingers in his vest pocket.

Judge Cadaver was then asked what influence woman seemed to exercise on business. [illegible] Judge is rather slow [illegible] h s [illegible] movements and speech and it took [illegible] just two minutes to clear his voice and plant his feet and get ready to say that he lay awake at least four nights out of a week considering this very question. If it wasn't for the fema[illegible] t[illegible] business of the world w[illegible] one half. One dry goods [illegible] city could supply all [illegible] but it took twenty or th[illegible] the women. Women not only [illegible] ported old establishments, [illegible] forced new ones to enter th[illegible] For instance, the decora[illegible] hosiery gave employment [illegible] persons the year round. It [illegible] out of sight and utterly useless, [illegible] it circulated million[illegible] dollars. Pads, bust[illegible] cor[illegible] cosmetics, false hair [illegible] in that line were de[illegible] and [illegible] t be furnished, circu[illegible] millions more. One hundred y[illegible] woman made one bonnet [illegible] twenty two years, and it was [illegible] top to bottom for her sister. One millinery store was then sufficient to supply the whole State of New Jersey. Now-a-days no woman who pretended to put on any style would wear a bonnet over three years at the longest, and he counted five millinery stores in Jersey city alone when over there the other day buying up bottles. Woman not only influenced business, but was business herself. In the cabin next to his was a man earning $12 per week and his wife had saved enough out of his wages for a year past to buy herself a pair of bracelets costing $100. The Judge closed with a graceful tribute to women and her influence, but in so doing he ripped [illegible] up the back and then sat down on Deacon Spooner's hat and ruined it [illegible].

"It seems to be de opinyun of dis Club," said Brother Gardner, as he slowly rose and put on his spectacles to enable him to see that Samuel Shin had half his body out of one the alley window and to motion to Give[illegible] Jones to plant a kick where it would do the most good, "I repeat dat it seem to be de opinyun of dis Club dat woman am a good thing, and dat it was lucky for us dat she was thought of soon arter de creashun. She's got infloocence, of co'se and in nearly ebery thing its infloocence kin be publicly seen an' in odders it am only felt in de home circle; as whar' de husband cums home to find no fish in de stove an' no supper ready, bekase he forgot to split any wood in de mawhin'. If it wasn't fur woman's infloocence dis would be a world in which not one man a thousand would change his shirt, comb his hear, grease [illegible] boots or keer two cents wheddah his pants bagged at de knees or not. De Secretary will reply to de Sorosis Society dat dis Club am perfeckly satisfied wid woman as fur as she has panned out an' dat de [illegible] her look full of de biggest kind o' sweet potaters an' de fattest sort o' possum. We will new disembark de meetin' an' go home.

[illegible] of THE TIMES are refered to the following persons who have the ALLEGER ORGANS:

[illegible]nie Mollohan, Re[illegible], W. Va.

[illegible] Ott, Charleston, W. Va.

Jacob [illegible]ely, Roseville, W. Va.

W. H. Swiger, Malta, [illegible] Va.

[illegible] Heavener, Pe[illegible], W. Va.

Tinta Craig, [illegible] Elk, W. Va.

—If you w[illegible] Letter and Note heads, neatly printed and put up in tablet form, cheaper than y[illegible] can get them anywhere else, call at THE TIMES office. We also do all kinds of nice job printing and have on hands a nice line of stationary business cards, &c. &c.

POCAHONTAS TIMES.

Vol. 9. JOHN E. CAMPBELL, EDITOR AND PROPRIETOR. Huntersville, West Virginia, Thursday, March 3, 1892. Terms of Subscription. $1.00 per year. In advance. No. 33

Official Directory of Pocahontas County

Judge of Circuit Court, A. N. Campbell.
Prosecuting Attorney, L. M. McClintic.
Sheriff, J. C. Arbogast.
Deputy Sheriff, Geo. W. Callison.
Cl'k Co. Court, S. L. Brown.
Cl'k Cir. Court, J. H. Patterson.
Assessor, C. O. Arbogast.
Com'rs Co. Ct. { C. E. Beard, S. B. Hannah, G. M. Kee.
Co. Surveyor, Geo. Baxter

THE COURTS.

Circuit Court convenes on the first Tuesday in April, 3rd Tuesday in June and 3rd Tuesday in October.

County Court convenes on the 1st Tuesday in January, March, October and second Tuesday in July. July is levy term.

A CONDUCTOR'S STORY.

TRAGEDIES IN EVERY DAY LIFE THAT ARE SELDOM SEEN.

As I sprang on the rear platform of my regular evening car a few evenings ago and took my station against the tail board, for all possibility of getting a seat was out of the question, the conductor greeted me with a cheery 'good evening, sir.'

'Good evening,' I replied, for he was a good fellow whom I had met so often only on my daily trips that we always indulge in a little friendly conversation. After collecting the fares he took up his position beside me.

'Missed you for a few evenings, hope you haven't been sick,' he said, with kindly interest.

"No," I replied, laughing, 'nothing so serious as that, only a new baby.'

'Is that so, sir? Well I'm glad to hear it. I was afraid it might be the grip. Terrible thing that grip. Boy, sir?"

'Yes, a little boy. I now have a gentleman's wish, a boy and girl.'

Here we reached the railroad crossing and he jumpt down to pilot us sofely across. When he again returned he rather startled me by saying abruptly:

'A man never appreciates a home until he loses it.'

'That's so,' I replied, rather astonished at his earnestness.

'You'll excuse me, won't you, if I first tell you about what came under my notice and makes me feel as if I must preach it right out as a warning like. Us conductors see a sight of human life in one way or another, and if it ain't the passengers, why then it is the peeps we get into people's homes when the shades is up and them new fangled lamps show off everything in the room. I've been on this route going on two years, and I could tell you many a thing that's happened to the families living along my line, but life's too short, and I'm just going to tell you one, and that beats the whole lot. It broke me up for a week, it did for a fact. You see, I was a married man once myself, and I had as good a woman as ever lived for my wife. Yes, she is dead,' as he noted the question in my eyes.

'Be careful, madam; that step is very slippery. Yes, B— street is one square west, and he turns from his duties to pick up the thread of his story, which as the car gradually thinned out, he could tell without so many interruptions.

'My girl's name was Jane, and she was one of those rosy cheeked, sleek-haired girls that know just how to twine themselves all around a man's heart strings. We were only sparking three months when I brought her home, and if she and me didn't just kneel right down and thank God for our happiness. I warn't much of a prayin' man, but when she looked up at me with her dear face all a shining with joy I just knelt right by her and my heart echoed every word she said.

'We hadn't much money, but she made every burden light with her cheering ways and when the baby came we wouldn't have exchanged places with the present of the road.

'You remember sir, that terrible [illegible] summer five years ago. Little Joe was teethin' and worryin' like from the heat, we thought, but one night when I thought I'd take Jane and him out to the Park for an airin' I found him stretched out cold in death in his mother's arms. She never said a word when I come in, but looked so still and white for a minute I thought she had gone too.

'That was a terrible time, sir, and after the funeral I noticed Jane looked so thin and pale. You see we both had been so taken up with baby that we'd never thought of ourselves. I felt pretty peaked myself, but I could see that pining for Joey and that the heat was killing my girl. We went back to her father's for a spel'; but she did nothing but sit in the churchyard and cry, and finally she just gave out entirely and I burried her alongside the baby.

'If I'd ever been unkind to her I could never look a man in the face, but, thank God, she and me and little Joey will meet some day, and she will look right into my heart with her smiling eyes and she won't find no deception there. You see, once haveing a baby of my own, it kinder made me take an interest in 'em all for his sake, and one day about a year ago, I noticedthat on this trip there would always be a young woman and a baby in the parlor window of that house over there. We are just coming to it now. Every day there they'd be, the woman very girlish looking, and somehow reminding me of Jane about the eyes.

'The baby was a chubby little chap and he used to clap his hands when he'd hear the bells, and jump almost out out of his mother's arms when the horses came in sight. After a while I kinder thought he grew to know me, and his mother would give me a nice little smile when I waved to the baby. They were waiting for the baby's father, and somehow without knowing him I took a dislike to him and when I saw him I felt like cowhiding him.

'He was one of them handsome fellows, the kind woman spoil with waitin' on and makin' 'em think they're the lords of creation. Sometimes he'd come up on this trip, but not the little as on the last one. How glad so often woman would be when he came at 5 o'clock, but I noticed the baby sorter acted as if he were a stranger like, and kept right on looking at the horses, and I thought of little Joe how he'd squeal and jump with delight when I come home and I didn't envy that young fellow his patent leather shoes or his diamond stud or nothin' he had except his wife's love.

'Many times I've helped him out of this car so full he couldn't see, and I never looked up at the parlor window, for I knew even though it were midnight she was waiting. She never seemed to have no company, and my heart used to ache when I'd see that lonely figger, and he down town carousing.

'Well, the climax come last month. We were coming up along here on our last trip, and it was awful still and quiet like. The stars looked very cold and far away, and I was thinkin' of how different it used to be, coming home to the neat, pretty room and my lovin' wife to what it was now when I turned in all alone, the things all covered with dust and and my clothes lying just where I'd left 'em. Kinder as if I couldn't help it, I just looked up at the baby's house expecting it to be all dark.

'You can imagine how I was took by surprise when I saw a great sheet of flame burst out of the second story window and a moment later a woman's cry for help rang out on the quiet street. Well, sir, I just bundled off that car, and before you could say Jack Robinson I was up there pulling down lace curtains and the catchy things hanging on the mantel. The poor little creature was half dead with fright, and between her sobs and thanks she told me how her husband had been on a spree for a week and when she remonstrated with him he had locked her out of the room and said he'd do as he pleased in his own house.

'He must have done that to the Queen's taste, for there were empty bottles, broken glass and cigar stumps enough in that room to start a first-class saloon. Probably he tried to smoke in bed; but was too drunk to care what became of his lighted cigar, for that was the cause of all the mischief. It would have been a blessed good thing if he had burnt himself up instead of frightening his poor wife nearly to death. That man sir, is as much a murderer as if he'd stuck a knife into her heart. She died from fright. The next day the doctors carriage was there when I went down and it was there still when I come up.

'For a week the baby watched the doctor's horse from a stranger's arms, and then one day there was another wagon before the door, and later the crape fluttered from the knob, the shades were drawn down and the baby boy was motherless. My heart used to ache for him, sir, when I'd see the way the nurse would slap him and pull him about, and I can't say I'm sorry when a little white streamer told of another soul gone home.

'I miss his little face, but sometimes I like to fancy that he and Joey are playing together. The widower didn't stay long in the house after the baby died, and there's a new family there now, and no baby watches for the car by the parlor window; but I often wonder if that man doesn't feel guilty every he hears a baby's cry or sees a time womans face. Is this your street, sir? How time does fly when one gets to talking. Good night.'

And as I stepped out into the gathering darkness I wandered more and more at the tragedies in every day life.

SURE PROFITS FOR THE BANKER.

"You ought to come up into our part of the state," said a tall countryman over the bank counter the other day to the cashier.

"Where's that?" inquired the cashier.

"Up in the upper peninsula of Michigan."

"What have you got that's interesting?"

"Got people that'll make more money in ten minutes doing banking their way than you'll make your way in ten years."

"How do they do it?"

"Discountin'."

"We make something in that line ourselves."

"Yes, I s'pose so, but not like them. By criminy," he went on, emphatically. "I had a note for $150 the other day I wanted discounted and I took it to one of them shavers and after he had figgered about ten minutes I owed him $1.37."

"How did he make that out?" inquired the puzzled cashier.

"That's what I said to him and he told me that according to his way of calculating the discount on a note like that, the whole thing amounted to $151.37 and he was willing to take the note if I'd pay the balance in cash. You ain't got any bankin' like that here, have you?" and the cashier hastened to assure him that city bankers didn't do business that way."

A man was on trial in a southwestern State for a very grave offence. The jury were slow in coming to an agreement and many people were waiting about to know the verdict. At this state of affairs a colored bailiff come out of the jury room and hastened down one of the corridors.

"Hold on! hold on!" called out a man who was waiting. "Have the jury agreed?"

"Yis, dey done 'greed," said the bailiff grinning.

"What's the verdict?"

"Well, boss," said the bailiff, "ye see 'twas dis erway: Dey was some on 'em wanted sandwiches an' some on 'em wanted pie: an' bum by dey done 'greed dey'd hab some crackers 'n' cheese, an' dey sen' me out fer to fotch 'em!"

"Will you please hold this baby a moment while I go and buy a ticket to Albany?" asked a sharp featured woman with a parrot nose, of a spare little man at the Central depot last night. "I'd like to accommodate you, ma'am," he replied, "but once in St. Louis a woman gave me a baby to hold while she went for a drink, and I've got that baby yet. It keeps me in poverty to pay that kid's fines nowadays. Your child may have a bright moral future before him, but I wouldn't hold him if you were to post forfeiture bonds for his good behavior."

Young Mother (in ecstacy)—Yes, my little niece, this is your teeny weeny ittie baby cousin. Isn't he a darling? Bless his itty tootsy wootsies! He can talk too. Sit up, baby and talk to your ittie cousin.

Baby—Goo, goo, goo, woo, mawow, wow, wow, goo, goo.

Little Niece (in disgust)—I've dot a new doll at home 'at talks better zan either of you.

Pocahontas Times.

JOHN E. CAMPBELL,
EDITOR AND PROPRIETOR.

ADVERTISING RATES.

	1 m.	3 m.	6 m.	1 yr.
One inch	$ 1 00	$ 2 00	$ 3 00	$ 5 00
Three in.	2 00	4 00	6 00	10 00
Qr. column	3 00	6 00	10 00	17 00
Half col'n	6 00	12 00	20 00	30 00
One col'n	10 00	20 00	30 00	50 00

Reading notices, not exceeding five lines, twenty-five cents for each insertion, and five cents a line for each additional line.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION.

One copy, 1 yr., $1.00 in advance; after 6 months, $1.25; after 12 months, $1.50

These terms will be strictly complied with.

Entered at the Post-office at Huntersville, W. Va., as second class matter.

Huntersville, W. Va.

March 3, 1892.

It would be well for the Democratic local committes in every county in the state to get to work at once and leave nothing undone for the approaching political campaign. This campaign promises to be the liveliest that has been in a long time. The Republicans are already at work, and will strain every nerve, honestly and by a long shot otherwise to carry our state this fall.

Hon. J. M. Sydenstricker, of our sister county Greenbrier who is a candidate for the nomination for Govenor of West Virginia, declares imphatically that he is not in favor of a third party, or proper Farmers' Alliance party, and submits his claims to the Democratic Convention, and will abide by the result. Undoubtedly Mr. Sydenstricker is right, as a larger majority of the membership of the Farmers' Alliance are opposed to a third party, and it would be as useless as absurd to fight in that line.

While we are not personally acquainted with Mr. Sydenstricker we can safely predict, from complimentary notices we see of him, a good show for the nomination.

NEWS FROM WASHINGTON.

LATE MATTERS OF INTEREST PERTAINING TO OUR GOVERNMENT.

[Reported for THE TIMES by our regular correspondent.]

WASHINGTON, Feb. 26th.—The good sense of the democrats of the House has about put an end to all danger of a clash in the party over the free coinage bill. A caucus was held last night, not for the purpose of binding anyone against his will, but to allow a free exchange of opinion as to what ought to be done, and the prediction is made by those high in the party councils that a special rule will be reported from the committee on Rules fixing a date for the consideration of the free coinage bill. The free binding twine bill is to be called up next week and a final vote will be taken on it, if the present programme is adhered to, on the first Monday in April. It is expected that the date for the concideration of the free coinage bill will be set for the same week in which the binding twine bill is passed, and that it will be disposed of before the other two bills, which have the right of way at all times, are called up.

Senator Sherman has had no love for Mr. Blaine since the national republican convention of 1888, as he has always believed that Mr. Blaine knocked him out of being nominated for Presidency, by that convention, and his resolution which was adopted calling upon the President to inform the Senate of the proceedings recently had with the representatives of the Dominion of Canada and of the British government as to arrangements for reciprocal trade with Canada, [illegible] from Maine. It is believed that Senator Sherman, who is credited with having said that Mr. Blaine was still in the field for the republican nomination, thinks that the publication of the proceedings of the recent conference will bring out some of the facts not altogether creditable to the Secretary of State.

Mr. Harrison and his family have gone to Virginia Beach for a week's holiday. His extraordinary exertions in getting that letter from Mr. Blaine tired him out.

Senator Bate made a short but strong speech agaunt the Paddock pure food bill, this week, which he said was a measure that would turn the Agricultural department into a huge partisan political machine, as under it there would be commissioned a multitude of employes, who might be stationed along the railroads of the country and of course, at places convenint to voting precincts, where they could help carry out the political orders received from headquarters. Another reason why Mr. Bate opposes the bill is that he thinks it a matter belonging exclusively to the several States, with which the general government has nothing to do. Senator Coke is also opposed to the bill, which he says attempts an utterly impracticable thing in trying to regulate and take care of the food, drink and medicine of 65,000,000,000 people, which never has been done and never can be done. If it becomes a law, he thinks the country would be overrun with spies and informers, without accomplishing anything, because the people would never accept the dictum of a bureau at Washington on what they should eat, or drink, or what medicine they should take.

A bill amending the naturalization laws has been favorable reported to the House from the Judiciary committee. It provides that no alien who has ever been convicted of a felony or other infamous crime or misdemeanor involving moral torpitude, or who is an anarchist or polygamist, or who immigrated to this in violation of any of its laws, or who cannot read the constitution of the United States, shall be naturalized. It requires five years continuous residence in the United States and one year in the State in which application is made to become a citizen.

The big monopolists received $1,711,071 in drawbacks on tin cans manufactured to carry their products abroad, from Oct. 1, 1890, when the McKinley tariff went into effect, up to Dec.31, 1891, according to a report sent to the House by the treasury department, in answer to a resolution calling for information on the subject; but in realty that large amount was paid between July 1, 1891 and Dec. 31 of the same year,—just six months—for the tin schedule of the McKinley law did not go into effect until the first of last July.

Congress is just beginning to pull itself together after its Chicago picnic.

Mr. Harrison this week sent a special World's Fair message to Congress, in which he treats the question of a $5,000,000 appropriation in a very diplomatic manner, throwing the responsibility of determining the matter upon the Congressional committee, and adding some taffy for the exposition.

Representative Hatch says his anti-option bill will not interfere with legitimate transactions, but is aimed at the fictitious speculations, which he thinks are on a par with any other form of gambling. He is confident that it will be supported by at least two-thirds of the House. The hearings have been completed, but the committee will take time to thoroughly digest them before reporting the bill.

There must be a particularly hot spot in the earth under Wheeling, W. Va. It is hoped to sink the well now being driven there at least a mile. The well is a little less than five inches in diameter. Its peculiarity is that no vein of water has been tapped, and being perfectly dry, scientific men have had an unexampled opportunity to conduct their investigations. The temperature is being taken [illegible] depths. At a depth of 1,350 feet the temperature is 68 degrees; at 2,375 feet, 79 degrees; at 3,375 feet, 92 degrees; at 4,375 feet, 108 degrees; at 4,462 feet, 111 degrees. Thus the temperature is increasing faster and faster the deeper the boring. For instance, the increase in the 1,000 feet from 2,375 to 3,375 is about 13 degrees, while the increase in the next 1,000 feet is more than 16 degrees. If the heat goes on increasing in similar progression, a depth will be reached before long where every solid substance will be melted. That, however, will be no indication that the same state of things exists everywhere under the earth's crust, for wells driven in other parts of the world have shown very different rates in the increase of heat.

HOME NEWS

—An 8 inch snow fell here Sunday night.

—County Court convened here Tuesday.

—Prominent gentlemen, too numerous to mention attended Court at this place Tuesday.

—Attorney L. M. McClintic returned Monday night from a business trip to Grafton.

—Messrs. Isaac McNeel, of Mill Point and Wm. Gibson, of Elk, jury commissioners, drew the jury for April Court, Tuesday.

—Mr. Jno. Cleek's youngest child of Mill Point, a little boy about 2 years old died last Sunday night of diptheria.

—Messrs. Dewing & Son's large barn at their Cheat Bridge lumber camp, was burned last Thursday with 16 head of fine horses, harness, hay, &c. Loss about $4,500. Supposed to be of incindiary origin.

—Mr. M. E. Barrett, architect and building contractor is here this week submitting to the County Court plans and specifications for the new court house.

—Mr. and Mrs. A. B. McComb of this place had the sad misfortune last Sunday morning to have a child born dead. Mrs. McComb is getting along as well as could be expected.

—Mr. George I. Garrison, of Wheeling, who shot and killed Dr. George Baird in that city about a year ago, has been granted a new trial.

—ONE WHO KNOWS, or at least, he says he does, writing to the Greenbrier Independent says that Hon. Jno. W. Arbuckle, of Lewisburg is a candidate for the re-election to the State Senate.

—A chimney burning out in the Wagner hotel Tuesday night about 10 o'clock, caused a right smart excitement, as every body that seen it thought the hotel was afire and hollowed, fire! fire! fire!

—Died—Mrs. Darias Alderman, at her home on Douthard's creek this morning. Child birth was the cause of her death, though three doctors were with her. She had been in delicate health for some time. She leaves a husband and several small children to mourn her loss.

—Dick Rankin, alias two or three other names, who is confined in jail at this place and who stands indicted for the murder of Wm. Underwood, col, at Buckeye last September, is very much afraid he will have to stretch hemp. He is as badly scared as a pup with a tin can tied to his tail, and is making preparations almost day and night to meet the Great Creator, who, he is afraid, will be also somewhat rough on his miserable soul. His cell mate, is very much annoyed, as he says, at his persistent praying, and consequently loses some very valuable snoozes, that would otherwise help to while away the time.

GREEN BANK BREVITIES.

We are sorry to say that grip is raging again in our vicinity also pheumonia and chicken pox.

W. W. Galford and T. S. Patterson of Glade Hill, we are glad to say are getting better.

Mrs. W. H. Hull is improving very slow.

James Curry has had another severe attack of the grip and is but little improved.

G. C. Cooper and family are down with grip.

We are sorry to learn of Robt. Brown getting killed by a tree falling on him near Davis city some time ago.

C. P. Kerr, who got his leg broke some time ago has an attack of Pneumonia at this writing.

Some of our wide-awake farmers are making sugar while the trees run.

The snow is a foot deep and still snowing.

Rev. J. A. Taylor preached a very good sermon here last Sunday, we will be sorry to see him leave.

Rev. W. H. Ballenger will preach his last sermon for the year in the Green Bank Church on the 13th of March two weeks from yesterday. We are sorry it is the last.

There has been more sickness in this this vicinity this winter than has been for many years, with grip in the lead.

Reports from Alexander Lumber Camp say that Sherman Darnell was killed near that place from a knife wound some time ago. We hope is not so.

C. H.

DIED—MRS. D. A. FISHER.

Mrs. Fisher wife of D. A. Fisher, Esq., died this morning (Wednesday) about 9 o'clock at her home at this place, of a complication of diseases, aged about 45 years. She leaves a husband, three grown children, two sisters and a host of friends to mourn her loss. Mrs. Fisher has for several years been in delicate health. She was a kind christian lady, and her end was as peaceful as if she was going to sleep. The sorrowing relatives have the sympathy of the entire community.

Transfers of Real Estate.

The following is a list of deeds for February:

A. deed from H. A. Yeager and wife to E. A. Smith for land near Green Bank.

Mathias L. Moore and wife to L. M. McClintic for land on Marlin's Mountain.

H. M. Lockridge and wife to Andrew Herold for land on Alleghany mountain.

Hugh Adams and wife to H. P. and B. B. Earnshaw, for land on Elk.

J. T. Beale and wife to G. C. C. Beale for land on Dry Branch.

Harmon H. Seebert and wife to B. M. Yeager for land on East prong Greenbrier and Little rivers.

Catherine Seybert to B. M. Yeager for land on east prong of Greenbrier and Little rivers.

Andrew C. and Benjamin Seybert and Joseph Ellington and wife to B. M. Yeager for all of their rights title and interests in land on east prong of Greenbrier and Little rivers.

H. H. Slaven and wife to B. M. Yeager for land on the waters of Greenbrier river.

Harris C. Fleisher and wife to B. M. Yeager for land on little river.

Jno. W. Hull to B. M. Yeager for land on little river.

Elizabeth Hiner and Samuel Hiner to B. M. Yeager for land on Greenbrier river.

W. G. Gilkeson and wife to B. M. Yeager for land on south east fork of Greenbrier river.

Henry Seebert to B. M. Yeager for land on Little river

O. P. Chew and wife and others to B. M. Yeager for land on east branch of Greenbrier river.

H. C. Queen and wife and others, to W. H. Collins for land on left hand fork of the West Fork in Upshur county.

M. W. Underwood and wife to M. M. Underwood for thier interests as heirs in the estate of Elizabeth Underwood.

H. M. Lockridge and wife to H. A. Holt and A. F. Mathews for land on Dry Branch.

G. C. C. Beale to J. G. Hamrick, trustee for Nannie Hamrick, for land on Dry Branch of Elk river.

Timber, Mineral and Coal Lands Want.

Messrs. Harmon & Harmon, of Staunton, Va., representing syndicates, desire to purchase timber, mineral and coal lands in Pocahontas and adjoining counties.

Persons having any property of this kind for sale will call on or address them at Huntersville, W. Va., where they will remain for a short time.

ROBBERY.

Mr. N. J. Brown, of Mill Point Robbed of Over $545.00 and Almost Killed.

Probable the coolest and most daring robbery ever committed in the County took place at Mill Point last Friday night about eight o'clock.

As Mr. N. J. Brown was sitting in his store enjoying a cigar, some friends and customers having just left, two men with faces blacked entered and demanded his money at the point of a pistol. Mr. Brown thinking it was some friends trying to scare him, reached the stub of his cigar to them, when one of them whacked him over the head with a club that they also carried. Mr. Brown was still sitting in his chair when the villian struck him, and in a second after when he recovered from the shock he raised and grappeled with the assailant, when the other one struck him on the wrist and repeatedly over the head with a short club until Mr. Brown was too weak to further defend himself, and not having anything th defend himself with, had to sit down. The robbers then demanded of him to unlock the safe, and the safe being unlocked, not having been yet locked for the night Mr. Brown told them so. They then took all the money in it, rifled the cash drawer of the store and his pockets, getting in all $545.00—about $345.00 of which was Mr. Brown's and the remainder belonged to some one else, who had left it there for safe keeping.

One of them rifled the tills while the other guarded Mr. Brown, and attended his necessary wants, such as giving him water several times, &c., and enquiring of him how much money his pal was getting from each till, probably thinking it would be valuable information to him when he called for a devide of the spoils.

After advising Mr. Brown that if he left the store within 50 minutes he would be a dead man, and telling him that they did not suppose he would need any more money they left.

Mr. Brown then being very weak from the loss of blood, after a short time he made his way up to Mr. Isaac McNeel's, a short distance from the store, and informed him of what had taken place. Mr. Brown then with the assistance of Mr. McNeel went to Dr. Wallace's also only a short distance away and had him dress his wounds, which were several severe cuts and bruises on the head and a fractured wrist. He was then taken to his room.

It being very dark nothing could be done toward tracking or hunting for the robbers, and the next morning it was found that they had stolen two horses from Mr. Thomas Smith who lives about a mile and a half below Academy. Mr. Smith finding his horses gone followed their tracts, and found them near Lewisburg, where the robbers abandoned them and left them in the road.

It is supposed that they took the train at Ronceverte.

The day of the robbery and the day before, two suspecious characters were seen lurking in the brush in that vicinity, allowing no one to get close to them, except when one of them called at Mr. James Jordan's house and asked for a "hand out" for four men. Mr. Jordan insisted on him to have his friends come to the house and have their dinners, when he told him that the other fellows were drunk and would not come. Mr. Jordan then gave him the dinner asked for, and sent a man along to bring the bucket back, and when they went to where he said they were waiting, instead of three, there was only one, and he would not let the man who had gone to bring the bucket back see him. It is supposed that these fellows are the robbers, and that they were wanting to get enough to eat for for two meals.

AUCTION SALE

PERSONAL PROPERTY AND REAL ESTATE.

I will sell at public auction at my residence on Back Alleghany.

TUESDAY, MARCH THE 29TH, 1892, the following personal property:

3 horses, 8 cows, 2 yoake of oxen, 30 sheep, 6 hogs, one wagon, and farming implements and household and kitchen furniture.

TERMS OF SALE: All sums under five dollars cash in hand and all over that amount a credit of 6 months will be given with bond and approved personal security bearing interest from day of sale.

I will also sell the farm on which I now reside, containing 280 acres, 125 of which is improved and under good fence, and 30 acres of meadow, all well watered.

TERMS OF SALE: A credit of 1, 2, and 3 years will be allowed, purchaser to execute bonds with approved personal security, with interest from day of sale, a lien to be retained until all the purchase money is paid.

DAVID HEVENER.

AUCTION.

I will sell at Public Auction on Saturday the 5th day of March 1892, at Edray, W. Va., a large stock of Factory Woolen Goods, such as Casimers, Flannels, Blankets, &c. of Greenbrier Valley Woolen Mills Co. These goods will be sold. Come and secure bargains. This is a grand opportunity for Merchrnts.

Respct.,

C. B. Swecker.

COMMISSIONER'S SALE.

The undersigned special commissioner pursuant to decrees rendered by the Circuit Court of Pocahontas County, W. Va. on the 20 day of October, 1891, in the chancery cause of Geo. W. Trimble vs. W. G. Gilkeson, and Wm Thompson Exr. vs same, which said suits were consolidated, will by virtue of said decrees, proceed in front of the court house door of Pocahontas County, West Virginia, on the 5th day of April 1892 to sell publicly to the highest bidder, the following real estate belonging the defendant W. G. Gilkeson, lying in the said county, to-wit: 40 acres and 84 acres lying on Buffalo Mountain, and 181 acres and 14 acres lying on Alleghany Mountain. These lands lie about nine miles north of Green Bank not far from the point where the public road leading from Green Bank to the church on top of Alleghany mountain intersects the Staunton and Parkersburg Turnpike. Some of the land is finely improved, and the residue is well timbered.

TERMS:

A credit of six, twelve, and eighteen months will be given except as to so much as will pay cost of suit and sale, the purchaser to execute bonds with approved personal security for the deferred payments bearing interest from date, a lien to be retained until all the purchase money is paid.

R. S. TURK, Special Commissioner.

I, J. H. Patterson, clerk of the Circuit Court of the County of Pocahontas, do certify that bond has been given by the above named special commissioner, as required by law. Given under my hand this 1st day of March, 1892.

J. H. PATTERSON, Clerk.

March 3rd 4t. Printer's fee $12 45.

MILBURN SADDLE.

Any one wishing to purchase one of these excellent saddles can do no better than buy it from L. W. Beard, Lewisburg, W. Va. March 3-6m

[illegible]

COMMISSIONER'S SALE.

The undersigned Special Commissioner pursuant to decree of the Circuit Court of Pocahontas County, West Virginia, on the 20th day of October, 1891 in the chancery cause of John Dilley's adm'r and others vs. Wm Dilley and others will proceed in front of the Court house door of Pocahontas County W. Va., on the 5TH DAY OF APRIL, 1892.

to sell publicly to the highest bidder the following tract of land belonging to the defendant William Dilley situate in Pocahontas county, W. Va., on Greenbrier river about five miles above Marlinton, and contains 100 acres. Part of this land is improved and the residue is timber land.

TERMS OF SALE:

Enough cash in hand to pay the costs of suit and sale, on the residue a credit of 6, 12 and 18 months will be given, the purchaser to execute bonds with approved personal security for the deferred payments, bearing interest from date, a lien to be retained until all the purchase money is paid.

L. M. MCCLINTIC, Special Com'r.

I, J. H. Patterson, Clerk of the Circuit Court of Pocahontas County, do certify that the above named Special Commissioner has given bond as required by law. Given under my hand this 1st day of March, 1892.

J. H. PATTERSON, Clerk.

March 3rd 4t Printer's fee $10.60

VALUABLE LANDS FOR RENT.

I shall offer for rent for the term of one year, at the front door of the Court House of Pocahontas County,

ON THE 5TH DAY OF APRIL, 1892.

the lands belonging to Allie McGlaughlin, recently assigned her out of her father's estate, situate on Elk, about 5 miles from Edray. This is a valuable tract of grazing and meadow land. The renter, however shall be required to keep no sheep on said land while in his possession.

For further particulars apply to the undersigned, or to W. D. McGlaughlin at Huntersville.

Terms made known on day of renting.

SUSAN MCGLAUGHLIN,

Guardian of ALLIE MCGLAUGHLIN.

March 3rd 4t.

ORDER OF PUBLICATION.

State of West Virginia,

Pocahontas County, to-wit:

Guggenheimer & Co., ... Plaintiffs,

vs. On amended and Supplemented bill.

H. M. Lockridge, J. B. Lockridge, Ernest N. Moore Mary J Seebert, Mary R. Seebert, C. T. Seebert, Martha S. Seebert, Amos Barlow, Henry Barlow, Levi Gay, O. P. Sydenstricker, Emma N. Warwick, First National Bank of Buena Vista, The Bank of Ronceverte, J. C. Loury, sr., J. C. Loury, jr., and James H. Doyle partners, doing business under firm name of Loury & Doyle, Wm. Gibson, John Wurts, James Price J. P. Hawkins, John Andrew Cleek, Bank of Lewisburg, Hugh Dever, J. M. Hardy and —— Hardy, partners trading under firm name of J. M. Hardy & son, First National Bank of Buena Vista Virginia, John Adam McNeil and Hugh Adams..............Defendants.

Object of amended or Supplemental bill is to convene all the judgment lienors of J. B. and H. M. Lockridge, to subject the land of said J. B. and H. M. Lockridge to sale to pay the liens thereon after first paying the claim of plaintiffs for $1196.32 with accumulated interest thereon and $7.32 costs of protest and cost of this suit—to have a decree declaring the preference shown by the defendant J. B. Lockridge, to all creditors in confessed judgments illegal; to have all creditors of said J. B. Lockridge (except the plaintiff's) paid pro rata on their debts, the amount realized from a sale of said H. M. and J. B. Lockridge's land, after first paying the debts due the plaintiffs in full and the debts of other creditors of said J. B. and H. M. Lockridge who came in and attacked the fraudulent conveyances of said J. B. and H. M. Lockridge to have the priority of the debts due the attacking creditors, declared to exist from the date of the filing of their bills, to have a certain judgment which was confessed before the Clerk of the Circuit Court of Pocahontas County, West Virginia, on the 18th day of January, 1892, in favor of The First National bank of Buena Vista vs. J. B. Lockridge for $1502.43 with interest from the 19th day of January, 1892, declared void; to require each defendant named to answer fully the plaintiffs bill, to set aside a deed from E. N. Moore to J. B. Lockridge, dated the 3rd day of December 1891 as fraudulent and for general relief; and it appearing by affidavit filed, that H. M. Lockridge, Mary J. Sebert, Mary R. Seebert, C. T. Seebert, Martha S. Seebert, The First National bank of Buena Vista, J. P. Hawkins, J. M. Hardy and —— Hardy composing the firm of J. M. Hardy & son, First National bank of Buena Virginia, John A. McNeil and Hugh Adams are non-residents of the State of West Virginia. It is ordered they do appear here within One month after the first publication of this order and do what is necessary to protect their interest in this suit.

Witness: J. H. Patterson, Clerk of the said Court this 1st day of February, 1892.

J. H. PATTERSON, Clerk.

R. S. Rucker p. q.

Feb. 11, 4t. Printer's fee $10.[illegible]

Pocahontas Times.

JOHN E. CAMPBELL,
EDITOR AND PROPRIETOR.

ADVERTISING RATES.

	1 m.	3 m.	6 m.	1 yr.
One inch	$ 1 00	$ 2 00	$ 3 00	$ 5 00
Three in.	2 00	4 00	6 00	10 00
Qr. column	3 00	8 00	10 00	17 00
Half col'n	6 00	12 00	20 00	30 00
One col'n	10 00	20 00	30 00	50 00

Reading notices, not exceeding five lines, twenty-five cents for each insertion, and five cents a line for each additional line.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION.

One copy, 1 yr., $1.00 in advance; after 6 months, $1.25; after 12 months, $1.50

These terms will be strictly complied with.

Entered at the Post-office at Huntersville, W. Va., as second class matter.

Huntersville, W. Va.

March 3, 1892.

HER UNOPENED LETTER.

"I'll never see him again as long as I live, the despicable fellow!"

It was with these vehement words that pretty Rose Williamson crushed and tore into bits a letter she had just received at the hands of one of those nineteenth century leaden footed Mercuries known as A. D. T. messenger boys. To emphasize her anger Miss Rose stamped on the unoffending bits of paper as if each one were the object of her wrath.

For Rose Williamson was angry—there could be no doubt of that. In truth, she was so out of temper that the hot, angry tears coursed down her fair cheeks like the brooklets down the mountain sides that the poets like to write about.

Not that she really meant the terrible things she said about her affianced—though undoubtedly she thought she did. Miss Rose was one of those impulsive, hasty creatures, who make many utterances for which they are soon afterward very sorry. But just at that moment it would have been very hard to convince the young lady that her love for Mr. Henry Winterheath was not crushed, and crushed for ever, by this missive she had just received.

And really it was very exasperating. She had been planning for it, this two days' yaching cruise around Lake Minnetonka. The Langleys had invited her and her affianced to become members of the party to celebrate the launching of their new yacht and the subsequent trip around the lake that was to occupy forty-eight happy hours.

Rose had never enjoyed anything like this before and it was only after the most urgent, apparently unanswerable arguments that she was able to convince her parents that it was safe for her to make the excursion. But they had finally given their assent and Rose had made every preparation for the great event, even to the ordering of a new yachting costume, which had arrived only a few moments before the letter which had been so ignominiously treated.

So piece together the fragments scattered upon the floor and read their contents:

DEAR ROSE—I know you will be bitterly disappointed by what I have to say, but the truth is, I have just received a telegram to come up to Winnipeg on a matter connected with that Rawson lawsuit I told you of last night. It was a very sudden but urgent call and I do not see how I can neglect it, because, as I explained to you I think, if I win this suit it will be the turning point in my career as a lawyer. The case comes up tomorrow and I shall leave at once, having barely time to catch my train. I know you will forgive me for the disappointment I have caused you. In haste, but affectionately, HARRY.

But Miss Rose did not forgive so easily, although in her calmer moments she would readily have seen the justice of Harry's course. [illegible] at this particular instant she was too completely out of temper to reason or to be reasoned with.

"I'll go anyway," thought this exasperated young woman. "I'll show Harry Winterheath that I am not dependent upon him for my entertainment, and that he cannot, by a few words scribbled on white paper, break an engagement he made a month ago."

Rose Williamson was not fully convinced, as before intimated, that there dwelt at that moment in her soul a consuming, withering hate, which had destroyed the last vestige of her affection for Harry Winterheath. So strong was this feeling that this hasty, impulsive maiden sat down and wrote a letter to her lover in which she formally announced that "all was over" between them.

The trival circumstance that she had no postage stamps at hand stayed the blighted course of the letter, and it was tossed upon her escritoire to await mailing on her return, and then Rose hastened over to the Langleys and with them went to the beach.

* * * *

"Where is Harry, Rose?" asked Florence Bently, one of the party, after the new yacht had been fairly launched and was dancing its way across the beautiful green waves.

"Mr. Winterheath was suddenly called to Winnipeg on important law business and could not come, said Rose, with dignity. She was very calm, but within a storm was raging. She marked the tone of half spite in Miss Bently's voice and the malicious twinkle in that young lady's eyes as the query was put, and she grew angrier than ever at the poor young lawyer.

She became more determined to make him suffer for having so cruelly disappointed her. Then she took to a desperate flirtation with young Mather who had been one of her most devoted admirers before she had accepted his rival, Winterheath, but who since that event had mournfully contemplated the happiness of the allianced pair at a respectful distance.

Mr. Mather was not a gentleman of acute perception, and it puzzled him, did this sudden bestowal of flattering attention upon him. He came to the conclusion that Miss Williamson had discovered in him some new charms and fascinations which she had before overlooked. And Mather was immensley pleased. It never occurred to him to connect with this sudden accession of attention the fact of Mr. Winterheath's absence. Not at all.

* * * * *

Every one—at least every fashionable frequenter of Minnetonka resorts—remember the terrible storm that swept the lake on that ever-memorable afternoon of August 7, 188—, when the placid water under the influence of a tempest of cyclone force and fury was lashed into billows almost mountain high, and when so many pleasure crafts were swamped before they could reach the shore. It came up almost in an instant. No one had noticed the gathering of the black clouds that now all but covered the sky.

The breeze too had shifted into a hard northwester before any one anticipated the change. Then the tempest set in; the yachting party, gay and light-hearted a few moments before, became panic stricken. Snap! The mast was torn from its socket and the same cyclone force wrenched and disabled the rudder. The yacht pitched and tossed as helpless as a cockle shell.

A moment later it capsized. Rose remembered little after her plunge in the angry, seething waves. She was faintly conscious that Mather—poor, young fellow—was trying to hold her up. But presently she succumbed to the sensation of exhaustion, gave up the struggle and felt that she was dying.

* * * * *

It was a bright, sunny afternoon when Rose opened her eyes. It seemed to her that she had been through some terrible dream. As she saw the anxious faces of her father and mother bending over her she remembered.

"How did I come here? Who saved me?" she asked.

And then her gaze fell upon a stalwart form, which up to this had modestly kept in the dim back ground.

"You, Harry?" she murmured, guessing the truth. "Tell me."

"Not now, dear," he replied. "Some other time; you are not strong enough now. But here I find on your escritoire a letter addressed to me. May I open it?"

"Not now, my dear," Rose replied, in roguish mockery. "Some other time."

When she grew better, of course, Rose learned the whole story—how Harry, receiving a telegram notifying him that the legal battle in which he was to parcipitate had been postponed, had hurried out to the beach just as the storm broke out. The Langley yacht was within 500 yards of the shore, and with the aid of a spy glass its peril was easily discernible.

To press into service a steam launch, to man it with a few brave spirits who were within call, and to ride through the tossing waters to the sinking craft—all this was the work of a very short time. "It was a rather close call," said Harry in closing his modest narrative, "but we saved you all. And perhaps it was just as well that I broke that engagement," he added, rather mischievously. "And now for your forgiveness and your permission to open that letter was never delivered."

"I'll grant the first but not the last," Rose replied, with a blush, "though some day I shall probably tell you all about it."

But it was some weeks after the wedding before Mr Harry Winterheath knew what a narrow escape from figuring, for a few hours at least, as a rejected lover had been his.

—If you want Letter and Note heads, neatly printed and put up in tablet form, cheaper than you can get them anywhere else, call at THE TIMES office. We also do all kinds of nice job printing, and have on hands a nice line of Stationary business cards, &c. &c.

CONSUMPTION CURED.

An old physician, retired from practice, having had placed in his hands by an East India missionary the formula of a simple vegetable remedy for the speedy and permanent cure of Consumption, Bronchitis, Catarrh, Asthma and all throat and Lung Affections, also a positive and radical cure for Nervous Debility and all Nervous Complaints, after having tested its wonderful curative powers in thousands of cases, has felt it his duty to make it known to his suffering fellows. Actuated by this motive and a desire to relieve human suffering, I will send free of charge, to all who desire it, this recipe, in German, French or English, with full directions for preparing and using. Sent by mail by addressing with stamp, naming this paper. W. A. NOYES, 820 Powers' Block, Rochester, N. Y.